IF YOU HAVEN'T HERD

FROM AN EARLY AGE

A multi-sport athlete as a kid, young Kyle ditched baseball in the eighth grade to focus on football. He popped up on the radar of Tony Tabor, then the head coach at Desert Mountain High School.

"He was kind of one of those kids that you pinch yourself when you meet him," Tabor says. "Like, 'What's wrong here?' He worked hard in the weight room, he was a leader, his parents didn't bother us to play him."

Kyle would go on to throw for more than 8,000 yards and 86 touchdowns at Desert Mountain High School, where one of his favorite targets was current Baltimore Ravens tight end Mark Andrews. Even early on, he showed flashes of the fire that would carry him to the NFL.

"We were playing Mesa Mountain View in the first game of the season," Tabor recalls. "Kyle threw an interception. Most kids who throw an interception make an effort to kind of get in the way [of the defender], but not really tackle. Kyle was so mad he just went and blasted that kid. I remember pulling him aside and saying, 'Son, that's a great play. Don't ever do it again.' "
