THE 2022 NFL DRAFT

The Los Angeles Chargers made eight selections in the 2022 NFL Draft. All of the picks came from Power 5 conference schools — three from the SEC, two from the ACC, one from the Big Ten, one from the Big XII and one from the Pac-12.

On Day 1, the Bolts took Boston College guard Zion Johnson at 17th overall, the team's first-ever first-round pick from Boston College. He's the fourth Boston College Eagle to be drafted by the Bolts in history. Johnson joins two-time Pro Bowl safety Derwin James Jr., as the only picks by the Chargers with the No. 17 overall pick.

Los Angeles made one pick on Day 2, taking Baylor safety JT Woods in the third round with the No. 79 overall selection. He's the fourth Baylor Bear in history to be taken by the Bolts and the first ever to be selected higher than the seventh round.

The Bolts began Day 3 by trading a pair of seventh-round compensatory picks (254 and 255 overall) to Chicago. In return, Los Angeles received a 2023 sixth-round selection from the Bears that was initially sent by the Chargers to Chicago as part of the trade for six-time Pro Bowl outside linebacker Khalil Mack. It marked the first trade by the team on Day 3 of the NFL Draft since 2010.

In the fourth round, the Chargers took Texas A&M running back Isaiah Spiller (123rd overall). Born August 9, 2001, Spiller was the youngest drafted player of the 2022 NFL Draft. A round later, the Bolts selected UCLA defensive lineman Otito Ogbornia (160th overall), the first Bruins defender to be drafted by the Chargers in over 15 years.

Los Angeles made a pair of picks in round six — Georgia offensive lineman Jamaree Salyer (195th overall) and Wake Forest defensive back Ja'Sir Taylor (214th overall). Salyer is the third Bulldog selected by the Bolts in two drafts, joining 2021 selections Tre' McKitty and Mark Webb Jr. Meanwhile, Taylor is the second Demon Deacon ever chosen by the Chargers in a draft.

The team also took two players in round seven — Mississippi defensive back Deane Leonard (236th overall) and Purdue fullback Zander Horvath (260th overall). Leonard is the first Ole Miss player selected by the Bolts in the common draft era (since 1967), while Horvath is the first Boilermaker drafted by the Chargers since Nick Hardwick in 2004.

2022 DRAFT NOTES

DRAFTED PRO BOWLERS

Since the Pro Bowl was instituted in 1970, the Chargers have drafted 41 players that went on to be selected to 108 all-star games while with the team.

Hall of Fame LB Junior Seau's 12 Pro Bowl selections are tied for the fourth-most in history by a defensive player. Eight Chargers draft classes ('75, '83, '85, '01, '04, '05, '06, '10) have produced multiple Pro Bowl players for the Bolts, including the 1975, 1983 and 2004 draft classes each producing three Pro Bowlers.

CHARGERS COMPENSATORY PICK HISTORY

The Chargers were awarded four compensatory selections for the 2022 NFL Draft. Last season, the team picked Georgia TE Tre' McKitty with the 97th overall selection — the first Bulldog picked by the Bolts in over 40 years.

The first compensatory selection by General Manager Tom Telesco was LB Jatavis Brown, who went on to be named to an All-Rookie selection by the Professional Football Writers of America. Brown went on to appear in 56 games with 23 starts over four seasons with the Bolts, ranking second on the team with a career-best 97 tackles in 2018.

The Chargers have made 21 compensatory selections since they began in 1994. Below is a look at all of the compensatory selections in team history:

Chargers Select Zion Johnson in First Round of 2022 NFL Draft

The Los Angeles Chargers selected Boston College guard Zion Johnson with the No. 17 overall pick in the 2022 NFL Draft.

Johnson started 49-of-58 career college games at Boston College (2019-21) and Davidson (2017-18), earning conference recognition in his final four seasons. He was a first-team All-America selection from The Associated Press and USA Today on top of his first-team All-Atlantic Conference recognition. Johnson was a leader on an Eagles line that allowed the third-fewest sacks in the ACC in 2021 and helped block for four 1,000-yard rushers throughout his college career.

The Bowie, Md., native earned third-team All-ACC honors in 2020 and garnered second-team recognition in his first season at Boston College in 2019. In his first career start at left guard for the Eagles in 2019, he helped Boston College total 429 rushing yards against North Carolina State en route to earning ACC Offensive Lineman of the Week. He was a first-team All-Pioneer Football League recipient in his final season at Davidson.

Los Angeles Chargers Select JT Woods on Day 2 of NFL Draft

The Los Angeles Chargers continued the 2022 NFL Draft on Friday with the selection of Baylor safety JT Woods at No. 79 overall.

Woods played in all 50 games over his four seasons at Baylor, starting 28 of them at safety. He earned honorable mention All-Big 12 recognition as a junior and senior, with his nine interceptions ranking tied for most interceptions among all FBS players over those two seasons. Woods led the Big 12 with six interceptions in 2021, including a 20-yard pick-six in the season opener to score Baylor's first touchdown of the season. One week later, he scored his second defensive touchdown of the year on a school-record 97-yard fumble return against Texas Southern, earning Big 12 Co-Defensive Player of the Week for his efforts.

The San Antonio, Texas, native added 157 tackles (113 solo), an 11-yard sack, 14 passes defensed and three fumble recoveries. He ended his Baylor career ranked No. 5 in program history with 201 interception return yards. One of the fastest players in college football, Woods ran the 110-meter hurdles for the Bears track team in 2019. As a prep athlete at Steele High, he recorded personal-best times of 10.64 seconds in the 100-meter dash and 21.87 seconds in the 200-meter dash.

Chargers Finish 2022 NFL Draft with Six Picks on Day 3

The Los Angeles Chargers made six selections on Saturday to wrap up the 2022 NFL Draft. The Bolts rounded out the draft by taking Texas A&M running back Isaiah Spiller (123rd overall), UCLA defensive lineman Otito Ogbornia (160th overall), Georgia offensive lineman Jamaree Salyer (195th overall), Wake Forest defensive back Ja'Sir Taylor (214th overall), Mississippi defensive back Deane Leonard (236th overall) and Purdue fullback Zander Horvath (260th overall).

The Chargers traded a pair of seventh-round compensatory picks (254 and 255 overall) to Chicago. In return, Los Angeles received a 2023 sixth-round selection from the Bears that was initially sent by the Bolts to Chicago as part of the trade for six-time Pro Bowl outside linebacker Khalil Mack.

In three seasons at Texas A&M, Spiller finished his career as one of the most productive running backs in program history, ranking seventh all-time with 2,993 rushing yards to go along with 25 rushing touchdowns and 16 100-yard rushing games. He recorded back-to-back 1,000-yard seasons, earning All-Southeastern Conference honors as a junior in 2021 (second team) and as a sophomore in 2020 (first team). The Spring, Texas, native averaged 103.6 rushing yards per game as a sophomore and was a semifinalist for the Earl Campbell Tyler Rose Award and Doak Walker Award.

Spiller burst onto the scene as a freshman in 2019, starting nine-of-13 games played and earning SEC All-Freshman Team honors from the league's head coaches. He posted a career-best 10 rushing scores and 946 yards on the ground in his first season in College Station, Texas. Spiller was an Under Armour All-American at Klein Collins High in Spring, Texas. His father, Fred, played tight end for Texas A&M, lettering in 2000 for the Aggies.

Ogbornia (pronounced oh-TEET-oh oh-BONE-yuh) stays in the City of Angels after a four-year career at UCLA, where he appeared in 43 career games and totaled 79 tackles, 4.5 sacks and 8.5 tackles for loss. He started all 12 games for the Bruins in 2021 along the defensive line, earning second-team All-Pacific-12 honors from Pro Football Focus and an invite to the Reese's Senior Bowl. Ogbornia earned a spot on the Athletic Director's Honor Roll seven times and also competed for the Bruins track and field team in the shot put and discus throw in the 2018-19 season, competing in the NCAA Championships and the 2019 Pan American U20 Championships.

As a senior at Georgia in 2021, Salyer earned second-team Walter Camp All-America honors and second-team All-Southeastern Conference from The Associated Press and the conference coaches. He started at left tackle in 11 games and also saw action at right guard for the Bulldogs, helping the line allow just 16 sacks on the season en route to a College Football Playoff National Championship victory over Alabama. A team captain, Salyer was awarded the 2021 Dick Copas Leadership Award by the UGA Student-Athlete Advisory Committee. Throughout his career, Salyer saw action along the offensive line, appearing in 47 games and helping block for three 1,000-yard rushers. Over his four-year career, Georgia's 71 sacks allowed were the third-fewest among Power 5 programs.

Taylor, a two-year captain, ended his Wake Forest career as the program's all-time record holder with 62 games played over five seasons, starting the final 23 games of his career. He earned honorable mention All-Atlantic Coast Conference recognition the last two seasons and participated in the East-West Shrine Bowl in 2021 after setting career bests with 60 tackles (47 solo), four tackles for loss and three fumble recoveries. The Asbury, N.J., native earned ACC Specialist of the Week against Old Dominion after posting a 99-yard touchdown on his first career kickoff return. He added an interception in the contest, becoming the first-ever Demon Deacon to have a pick and a kickoff return for a touchdown in the same game.

In two seasons at Mississippi, Leonard played in 19 games for the Rebels, totaling 64 tackles (38 solo), 11 passes defensed, a tackle for loss and a fumble recovery. He transferred to Oxford, Miss., after three seasons at the University of Calgary (Canada). In 23 games for the Dinos, Leonard recorded 47 tackles (44 solo), two forced fumbles and six interceptions, including two returned for touchdowns. He also averaged 10.3 yards per punt return and scored a touchdown on a 60-yard return as a freshman. Leonard is the sixth current Charger from Canada (Tevaughn Campbell, Christian Covington, Ryan Hunter, Amen Ogbongbemiga and Joshua Palmer).

Horvath (pronounced HOR-voth) appeared in 35 career games at Purdue, earning Academic All-Big Ten honors three times. In 2020, he was named third-team All-Big Ten after posting three 100-yard rushing games and becoming the first Purdue running back to have a 100-yard receiving game in over 20 years. Over his career, Horvath totaled 1,081 rushing yards and seven scores while also catching 62 passes for 533 yards and a touchdown.

Chargers General Manager Tom Telesco Pre-Draft Media Availability

Monday, April 25, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On 'how close the roster is to being a complete football team':

"You never really know. You just don't ever really know. We're just trying to use every avenue we can use right now to get there, whether through trades, free agency, the draft, or post-draft. How close are we? I don't know."

On 'if there have been more calls this year' regarding trading draft selections:

"It seems like every year people say the same thing. I don't know. It seems about the same as every other year. There's never really a consensus in the draft. There really shouldn't be; they're just opinions. It's such a subjective process that we go through to rank the players. I don't know. I think the fact that there may not be as many quarterbacks [selected] as usual, maybe that couple play into it. It's just hard to tell. A lot of the trade stuff, you may make a couple of calls this week just to set things up, but it really doesn't get going until when the draft starts, even when you're on the clock sometimes — a player may get a little bit further down than you thought and a team makes a move. It's hard to tell."

On if he 'gets antsy' due to selecting near the middle of the first round:

"You try not to get antsy about it. Sometimes, you just have to sit, wait and be patient. Sometimes. I feel good about where we are. With the amount of players that we have in that area, we should be in pretty good shape."

On if the amount of selections on Day 3 of the draft gives the club 'enough capital' to 'get back' a second- or third-round selection:

"More than likely, probably not. Those seventh-round picks don't carry a lot of capital. We have two sixes. It doesn't get you real far, those picks. It's always a possibility, but I don't know if it's realistic."

On the potential of trading back in the first round to acquire a second-round selection:

"We're always open to it. You'd have to go back pretty far to get a two. But, it's certainly something that you have to look at. We're going into the draft with a first-round pick, and then a big gap until you get to the third [round]. I spend a lot of time going through scenarios and preparations, as far as what could happen, going up or down. Going up this year, without having a second-round pick, I don't know if that's really realistic. I don't think we'll have to, anyways. But, going back, certainly — it's an option every year, and it would certainly be an option this year. A lot of it comes down to who is on the board at that point, how far back do you want to go, how many players do you have left at that spot? There are a lot of benefits of moving down; you can pick up an extra pick, you may pick up an upgrade at the pick. You have to kind of weigh that versus who is there, and kind of remind yourself that we are not infallible, as far as talent evaluators — as many as we get right, we get wrong. Even in the first round, probably less than half of these guys will sign a second contract with their own team. That's not great odds. You have to remember that we put all of this work into these guys, but we're not going to be 100 percent right. Sometimes moving back is helpful; at least you get a little something back for that process, but we'll see. A lot of it plays out during the draft. I don't know exactly who is going where. I put a lot of work into trying to figure that out. I'm like you guys, I don't really know. I don't think anybody really knows. We play it out, do a lot of different scenarios, and let it ride from there."

On if this year's draft 'feels wide open':

"It'd be nice if like four quarterbacks went in the top 15 [picks]. I don't know where those guys fall. I really don't. But the rest of it is about the same to me, it just really is. It doesn't really feel any different than any other year."

On how this year's in-prospect visits compare to conducting visits virtually over the last two years:

"It's nice to have it back, but we've also done more Zoom interviews this year than we did three or four years ago. It's been very efficient. Is it exactly like a face-to-face interview? Obviously not, but we can talk to more people that way. We have brought players in for visits like we used to. Just having the scouts back in the building for meetings, it's kind of important, too. The process is a little bit back to normal. We also learned a lot of things during the pandemic, of how we work, how efficient we can be and how we can make some changes to that, and we've kind of implemented that, as well."

On 'if we're getting back to a little bit more normalcy' with pre-draft visits and preparations:

"There are certainly a lot more numbers this year than last year, and that's really due to the pandemic — players getting an extra year of eligibility to play. Our numbers are really heavy, just the amount of players that the scouts have looked at. Our pool is much bigger. Some players, have like five years of playing, starting experience, which you never used to see. I've never seen so many 24-year-old prospects in the draft in my life. Usually, that's a negative. It may not be so much of a negative now just because there are reasons why they stayed in school. The numbers are high. There's always a lot of tape to watch and players. There are some players that we've seen for five years and have done like three years of work on them, thinking that they were going to come out three years ago, two years ago, then now. But, there should be a pretty strong effort across the league after the draft."

On if there's a 'need' to address the offensive line in the draft:

"We'll just kind of see how it plays out. You never know how it's going to go. A little bit like free agency, you can only bring in what's going to be available — same thing with the draft, you can only draft what's available. We certainly aren't going to force anything. We have different plans in-house, different plans looking forward if it wasn't from in-house. We'll see how it plays out."

On using an offensive line prospect's traits, tape and measurables for a projection of how they will be as an NFL player:

"That's why it's just so subjective, how we do this. There are a lot of opinions involved. You never have anybody with the exact same opinion of players. It's more art than science, when it comes down to it. We use a lot of data to try and cross-check our eyes, but in the end, it's kind of an art as you put this together. You have to weigh that, but even with [T] [Rashawn] [Slater], it wasn't like he was a slam dunk guy. There are no slam dunk players in the draft; there hasn't been. There are certain players that may be, fundamentally, a little farther along than others, but when they get here, we have coaches here that that is what they do. A big part of us getting better for next year is not just adding new players, it's developing what we have. That's coaching. That's coaching in the offseason. Coaches aren't just doing scheme, X's and O's, all day long, it's developing the players we have. If you do see a player that you feel like has all of the traits you need to project at this level, and you feel like he has the work ethic, the mentality, that drive and desire to be great, then you can work with that and you can develop them. We do have to be careful. We want to draft good college players, but those college players have to project to pro players, and sometimes there's a difference there. That's why we have coaches that go out there and work with these guys — put together all of the traits, see if the work ethic is there, then you roll the dice and see if it works."

On projecting if a college left tackle can make the transition to right tackle in the NFL:

“It’s a good question because I know that, as scouts, it’s really easy for me to say, ‘Just flip the left tackle to right tackle,’ or, ‘Hey, he’s a tackle, let’s just put him at guard.’ But, as a coach, there’s some work there. It’s not just a given that a guy can flip from one side to the other. Yes, there are projections involved. I know, for me, the way that we play the game nowadays, both tackles are really left tackles to me, they both have to be really good pass protectors because there are so many good rushers in this league. All of the good teams have multiple rushers — they can line up wherever they want, they can line up inside and line up outside, left or right — and we have to be like protect that. There are discussions about that. If there’s a player that as only played one position in college, can he make that transition that he may play for us? Those are discussions. That’s where it’s really helpful when the coach is getting involved really heavily, if they think that a guy can make that move. Most guys can, but it’s certainly something that we just don’t gloss over and say, ‘We’ll just flip this guy from left to right,’ and let it roll. We do have a lot of discussions on that.”

On working with the scouting staff to develop the draft board from the beginning of the process through the selection:

“For the scouts, it’s a 12-month process. It’s almost 13 months because I know that our guys, in the month of April, are working on next year’s draft, as well. They kind of dual-role it. That draft board, that starts going up in September, and that board is being worked the whole year until we get through February. Then, in this process, we do a lot of draft management to move some guys around. It’s a full-year process with the scouts. We also add in the coaches’ opinions, which is a really big part of the process, as far as how they’ll fit our scheme, whether we’re offense or defense, talking about projections from one position to another. These guys are really good at that, as far as being able to give us information there. Then, you add in all of the medical, the character and the psychological testing that we do. It all rolls into one.”

On what ‘exercising patience’ looks like in the draft room:

“Poker face. You do so much preparation that once draft day comes, really nothing should surprise you. Now, something could surprise us if a player goes before us that we didn’t anticipate, but as far as how it would affect us, it shouldn’t because we should have already talked out not that specific player, but where our numbers would be coming down to our pick. The last two, three weeks, a lot of it’s just draft preparation of what could happen and how you would attack it. So, if you’ve gone through those scenarios — it’s just like a game day, if you’ve practiced and prepared well enough, you shouldn’t have any pressure on game day, just go out and execute it.”

On ‘incorporating positional value’ when vertically aligning the draft board:

“That’s usually on the back end of it. We’ll get the board up from the scouts kind of — I wouldn’t say vanilla, but without any positional value — more our roster is completely empty, we have no players, let’s just put the board up. As we get towards the back end of it, we start moving some guys around based on some of those factors. Then, I always explain to the guys why I’ve moved some of the guys around. That’s kind of part two of the draft board.”

On if the ‘F them picks era’ has caused him to ‘move at all in’ in how he values draft picks:

“I haven’t changed, no. I think what people forget about the Rams — I mean, everyone is focused on those first-round picks — but they’ve drafted and developed players really well, middle and late [rounds]. It kind of gets glossed over. I guess it’s not as sexy, but they’ve done a great job with that, both [Rams General Manager] Les [Snead] and [Rams Head Coach] Sean [McVay]. No, I don’t think so. You can go back to the draft 20 or 30 years, teams have been trading first-round picks for players for a long time. Sometimes it works, sometimes it doesn’t. If there was only one way to build a Super Bowl team, we would all take that exact same path. Obviously, the Rams did their path and it worked great, they won the Super Bowl. It hasn’t really changed the value of that first-round pick, at least for me. They’re not the first team to do it, they just did it really, really well.”

On if the model of trading early-round picks is sustainable:

“Yeah, it’s hard to tell. I guess we’ll find out over time how things work. Like I said, there’s just so many different ways to build a team. They’re doing it the right way right now.”

On the defensive improvements:

"I would hope [that the improvements make a difference]. I would hope so. All of those guys that we added, plus the players that we had with another year in this system, I'm hoping we take a big jump on that side of the ball this year."

On the running backs:

"It's two-pronged. We have some running backs here that kind of need to take that next step. It's part of player development and coaching. Then, see where the draft takes us, see where after the draft takes us. Just trying to attack it different ways. Running backs have value in this league. You need them and you need good ones. You need guys that can do a lot of different things. It's a difficult position to play, but just the way college football is, there are a lot of running backs that come out every year. As we're seeing, a lot of receivers are coming out every year. They still have value to us, but it's just a matter of where we're going to place them. You only get so many picks to try and attack things through different avenues. Without forgetting the players that we have here and some development and improvement that can be made."

On the team's draft history over the last decade:

"Yeah, I don't really grade drafts. I'll leave that up to you."

On having one player from the 2018 NFL Draft class left on the roster:

"If you take that one year, I'd think it would be [lower than other teams in the league], yeah. I think you hopefully would look at it from a little bit of a more broad base than that, but you're right. I mean, you're right. It just seems like the players that we hit on, we don't really think about. The players we miss on — I'm talking about us — we try and figure out where did we miss? It's a pretty big process that we go through of what went wrong. Sometimes, it's something that we maybe didn't see. Sometimes, it was something uncontrollable. In the end, it's an in-exact science. We try to make the best decision that we can with the information that we have. We try to make it probability-based, just trying to increase our odds of hitting on the player. It doesn't mean that we're going to hit it on every player, we understand that. We'd like to hit on more than that draft class, certainly. It's just the way that it is. It's not easy drafting players. We've been good some years. It's just hard to tell, it really is. I like our process. I like the people that are involved with it. It's a lot of information on a lot of players from a lot of people in this building — not just the scouts. You're talking about it before, it's the medical, the doctors, the psychological testing, the security background checks and all of the sources that we talk to across colleges. You do the best that you can with that."

On if medical, background checks and speaking with sources is able to be done virtually more often now:

"Yeah, it's like picking up the phone. Sometimes you wouldn't need to Zoom, but certainly that's all part of the process."

On the defensive line:

"It's good. We got some guys in there, some big bodies, that play hard, that fit what we want to do. I'm excited about it."

On LB Kenneth Murray Jr.:

"I don't know [his timetable]. I assume he'll probably miss most of OTAs and kind of go from there. He had ankle surgery. It's something that you'd prefer to not have surgery. That's always your first approach if you can. I think, in his case, it just got to the point where it seemed like the best course of action was to go in and have surgery. He's handled it really well."

On if Murray will be ready for the start of training camp:

"I don't really know yet right now."

On the fifth-year option for DL Jerry Tillery:

"No updates there. Jerry had a really nice role for us last year. I expect an even bigger role this year. We'll figure that contract stuff out after the draft."

On if the team could bring in a second punter:

“I’ve told [P] JK [Scott] that we’ll probably have two punters in camp. We’re excited about him. Once you guys see him, he’s a really big, athletic punter. He gets the ball off quickly. Really good leg. I know he wasn’t with a team this past year until the very end, but he kicked well in Green Bay. [Special Teams Coordinator] Ryan Ficken was a real advocate for him. I think you guys will be pleasantly surprised when you see him punt. He has some real NFL talent. We’ll probably have another punter in as well and kind of see where it goes.”

On if the process focuses more on special teams ability for late-round selections:

“I don’t know if we would focus more on it. In my career, I can’t remember ever having this many picks in the sixth and seventh rounds. I have no idea how it’s going to roll. When you get down toward that seventh round, the way we do our board, there’s not a lot of players left down there. We’ll kind of see how it shakes out. It’s going to be kind of fun, I guess, to have that many picks in the seventh, but we’ll see. It wouldn’t be a straight focus on just special teams. We’ll kind of see where it goes.”

On if OLB Chris Rumph II is ready for the third edge rusher role:

“I think so. We’ll see once we get to training camp, but he would fit that category of a drafted player from last year and get in a whole offseason program. He’s very coachable to take that jump. We signed a linebacker/edge player from the CFL. He was a good player up there, we’ll see how he does.”

On a potential extension with S Derwin James Jr.:

“Same answer as Jerry [Tillery].”

On a potential extension with QB Justin Herbert:

“I guess [Browns QB Deshaun Watson’s contract] could [influence future quarterback contracts], but I’m kind of draft-focused right now. We’ll worry about that one down the road. It’s a legitimate question, sure.”

On if the 2023 NFL Draft can influence how teams approach the 2022 NFL Draft:

“It sounds really good, I just don’t think it’s realistic. I don’t really subscribe to that theory. There have been too many players that we have thought would be real guys the following year and then they don’t turn out to be that. I think it’s just way too early to try and dictate where next year’s draft is, even position-wise. I just wouldn’t subscribe to that, but it always sounds pretty good. Maybe people can do that. I’m not good enough to be able to project out that far. I’m not smart enough to do that.”

On what this time of year is like for him:

“Most of our work is done. Now, it’s just really thinking through different scenarios. Yeah, I have a lot of things that go through my head for the two weeks leading up to the draft. Our scouts, our coaches, they do a great job with preparation. We’re really organized. It doesn’t mean that we’re going to get every pick right, but we’re really organized with the information. That really kind of makes you sleep relatively well at night. Again, a lot of the draft, I can’t control what’s going to happen. I don’t know exactly who will go in front of us. I don’t know, if we trade back, exactly who will go and who we would miss on. You just make educated decisions and try not to overthink it. At least, that’s been my philosophy on that. [The Associated Press’] Joe [Reedy] was trying to make me think really hard about next year’s draft already, 2023. I don’t have enough brain power for that. We’re just trying not to overthink it. We’re trying to evaluate football players. We realize it’s just not an exact science. We can spend hours trying to rank players, but there’s no official ranking of players, there just isn’t. That’s why when I hear that this player was a reach or this player was a great value, it doesn’t make sense to me. That’s just your opinion of where you thought that player should be drafted and he was either drafted lower or higher. I don’t know, that doesn’t make sense. If you go back and look at drafts — take any draft — and look how they were drafted and then look how their pro careers were, it certainly didn’t go from one to whatever. It just doesn’t. We put a lot of work into this. We kind of get players in groups and different areas. Yeah, we’ll talk about ranking them, but I don’t get too concerned about an exact ranking because who knows? Who really knows? Now, we do add in a lot of medical and character stuff that kind of affects those rankings, but as far as talent and evaluating the player, it’s difficult to have a true ranking. You get things up there and you get prepared. You watch the draft kind of unfold and let it ride from there.”

On the draft room moving to SoFi Stadium for the first round of the draft:

“If we hadn’t had the pandemic draft, it would be really, really strange. I would have been, probably, fighting back a little bit on it. Again, I was worried about the pandemic draft and doing it from home. I didn’t think that was going to work and it worked awesome. It worked great. If I can draft from my dining room table, I can draft from anywhere. The stadium, we have a huge locker room, plenty of space. It won’t be an issue at all. Again, if we didn’t have that pandemic draft, I’d probably be worried about it, which isn’t a good thing to have when you’re trying to go and make decisions. That worked just fine, this will work just fine. It will be kind of fun. It’s like a field trip. You go down to the stadium, make our pick and come back home for it. It’s something different to do. The draft is fun. It’s supposed to be fun. I know it’s our job, but for the fans and everybody involved, it’s something fun to do. It will work just fine at SoFi [Stadium].”

On making sure the draft board stays intact:

“I have a really good plan for that right now.”

On if the surfboard will make its way to SoFi Stadium:

“You know, it hasn’t yet. That’s probably something that I may have to work on this week.”

On if he’s excited for DraftFest Special Guest Snoop Dogg:

“Sure. I mean, Snoop is a coach, so we may have to lean on him a little bit and see who he likes in the first round.”

Chargers Guard Zion Johnson Introductory Media Availability

Thursday, April 28, 2022 ⚡ SoFi Stadium ⚡ Inglewood, Calif.

On the feeling when he found out he was going to be selected the Los Angeles Chargers:

"It was awesome. It was so unexpected. I was mid-conversation when I got the call. I'm just so excited to be in L.A. for the first time and to see all the coaches and meet all of my teammates. It's awesome."

On if he got a chance to speak to the Chargers before the draft:

"I met with them at the Combine. They had a formal interview at the Combine and after that, I really didn't have an opportunity to talk with them or speak with them after that. I'm glad to be a Charger now."

On if he spoke to the coaches about where he will fit into the offensive line:

"Not particularly, but I'm willing to play wherever they want me to."

On his journey going from golfing to football:

"It's been awesome. A lot of guys, you ask them, 'When you were in high school, did you see yourself here now?' For me, honestly, no. I went to Davidson and really, it was just having to overcome a lot of things on my way to Boston College. I think when I got there, I got a perspective where I thought the NFL was an achievable goal. I'm just glad to be here now and thankful to all of the people who helped me along the way."

On his golf handicap:

"So, I'm super rusty. I haven't golfed since last summer and I shot a 92."

On if he'd feel comfortable playing either left or right guard:

"I did some individual work and pass-rush at some right guard and I'm willing to play wherever [Head] Coach [Brandon Staley] wants me to, whether that's left or right."

On how he would describe his game on the offensive line:

"I would say the No. 1 thing that I pride myself on is the mental part of the game. Just seeing the defense while knowing your assignment on every play and being able to help out the offensive linemen around you. The secondary thing I would say is my physicality. I sort of pride myself on being able to absorb those rushes. So, I'll give you those two."

On when he realized in college he had a shot to play in the NFL:

"I would say, for me, after my junior year, when I came in, a lot of the coaches didn't really expect me to play and I had the opportunity to get on the field after only being there for not very long. I got to learn the playbook really quickly. Things started to click for me mentally, in terms of just understanding the game. I think after that, it was really a thing for me where it was like let's see how high I can go, let's see the heights I can achieve."

On if he thought about entering the draft last year:

"There definitely was some thought. I thought about it because before COVID emerged, there were no super seniors, so I was expecting it to be my final year. But how the season ended for us at Boston College, I wanted to run it back. I think we left some games out there on the field and I don't regret my decision at all."

On how much the extra season helped him prepare for the NFL:

"I think it helped me a lot. I learned a lot. My body developed a lot; I put on 12 to 15 pounds. It was really my first year being in an offense for two years consecutively, so I started to become a master of our scheme and I started to understand everything and that really helped me in terms of processing."

On how much the Senior Bowl and playing center helped his value go up for positions on the offensive line:

"I think it definitely did help. Center was something I worked at for a while and getting to showcase that ability, I think, really opened teams to the possibility of that happening. So, I think it definitely did help. But also, it helped me personally because I had the opportunity to go against good competition, which just makes you better as a player."

On if he played tackle instead of guard because Boston College was lacking depth:

"I think the main thing was [Boston College Head] Coach [Jeff Hafley] was going to play me where he felt that was the best fit that year. That year, we had injuries at tackle, so that's where he put me. He thought I would excel there and then the next year, our tackles were healthy, he thought I would fit best at left guard. It really just goes back to playing wherever coach feels like is the best spot for me."

On if he thinks guard is his most natural position:

"I mean, I've played guard the most. So I think, yes, there is definitely a level of comfortability there, but I think I can excel at any of the positions on the offensive line."

On how golf has helped him become a better football player and offensive lineman:

"The one thing is golf can be a very frustrating game. It's something where one day you might be on, one day you're off and it takes a lot of consistency in order to become better. I think it's the same thing for offensive linemen. You have to work consistently on your technique and become a better player. Some days aren't going to be the best. Some days you're going to be at the high and sometimes you're going to have a low. But, honestly, it's just working through that and just continuing to become the best player you can be."

On his recruiting process coming out of high school:

"I think, from high school, I wanted to prove people wrong. That wasn't the main reason I played the game, but it definitely played a factor. When I started playing in high school, my teammates and a lot of my coaches didn't think I would be able to play. I was undersized and I struggled a lot, but it was something for me to overcome. Just throughout my process, whether it is at Davidson or B.C., similar things have happened where I've had to overcome adversity. I think that just has really helped me today to understand that, if you want to achieve something, it's not always going to be easy, but as long as you work and you put in the necessary work, it can be an achievable goal."

On what he has improved at the most with his extra season at Boston College:

"I would say the main thing, for me, was pass protection. So, after being at tackle for a year, you get to go against all of these [Atlantic Coast Conference] D-Ends that got drafted, guys that play well in space and you get a different bag from guys than guys that play inside. So, after experiencing that, when I moved back inside, I felt a lot more comfortable, a lot better about my pass-protective skills because a big thing about that is your confidence, your willingness to set out your angle, get to your spot and not overreact to little moves that the defensive line gives you. I think after experiencing that year at tackle, I felt more comfortable."

On his message to the fans:

"I think the main message is I'm happy to be a Charger. I can't wait to work and earn my right to be one."

On the Chargers chain around his neck:

"Yeah, so after I got drafted, we went out and took a selfie with the fans and one of the fans put [the Chargers chain] on my neck and I've been wearing it since then."

Chargers General Manager Tom Telesco Day 1 Draft Availability

Thursday, April 28, 2022 ⚡ SoFi Stadium ⚡ Inglewood, Calif.

Opening statement:

“Just real quick because I wish I would’ve mentioned this at the pre-draft press conference and I kind of thought about it today. I do want to recognize, some of you guys may know about him, but John Clayton. I know John was part of the media, but he was kind of a big part of our football community in the NFL and I know he loved the draft. I thought about this week, we used to talk to each other, for probably nine years, the week before the draft and kind of go through all the teams and what they may do. I’d get feedback from him and I’d give him a little bit. I always looked forward to it. He used to always help me kind of prepare for the draft. I know how much he loved the draft, so I just wanted to recognize him. Even though he was [a member of the media], he was a big part of our NFL community. That being said, let’s segway over to Zion and you can ask whatever you want.”

On selecting G Zion Johnson:

“Guards are people too, right? I know it’s not the sexiest pick in the world, but he’s tough, he’s durable, he’s smart. We have some excellent skill players, both at receiver, tight end, also at running back and with [QB] Justin Herbert, obviously, these guys cannot do their jobs without a rock-solid offensive line. So, as much as this pick is to protect our quarterback, which is a big part of it, this is also to facilitate everybody else. It’s pass-protection, it’s run game. We’re in the second half of the game and we have a lead and we’ve got to run the ball, they know we’re going to run the ball, he’s going to help there. So, if he does what we think he can do, he’s going to play 900 to 1,000 snaps for us in his rookie year, but he’s a really well-rounded football player, so we’re excited to get him in here.”

On how the scenario played out:

“As I did all of my work, I was pretty confident he should be there when we pick. I know we love to say, “We never thought he’d be there.” I thought he’d be there, so that was a target of ours, felt good. There wasn’t a whole lot of action when we were picking, as far as moving down, I knew we weren’t going to move up, so we’re really thrilled to get him.”

On recognizing Johnson’s difference from his junior year to senior year:

“He’s played a lot of spots. His story is incredible. What’s great is he’s earned everything he’s had to get to this level. We’re talking about a kid, two years of high school football, so a late bloomer, he goes to a non-scholarship Davidson, plays really well there, but it’s non-scholarship competition, obviously, and he’s paying his own way to college. You guys can all ask these questions to him when he comes in tomorrow. College gets expensive, so he put his name in a transfer portal and one of his coaches who had gone to Boston College, they liked him obviously, they brought him and he just really took off at Boston College. He played multiple positions there. He’s really, really strong, like powerfully strong lower body, so he can anchor on big people inside in pass protection, but he’s also a very good athlete and he’s really smart. Those are the qualities you really need in an offensive lineman. He’s versatile. We see him as a guard, he could be a center down the road, I don’t think tackle, but really solid interior offensive lineman with some versatility down the road.”

On his resiliency playing into the decision making:

“It does. I mean, you like to see prospects that have had to handle tough situations. He wasn’t a big recruit out of high school. One year starter in high school, so a late bloomer, so he had to try and find somewhere to play football. Davidson recruited him, but that’s not particularly high level, no offense to Davidson, but it is not Boston College. Then he goes to Boston College and you’ve got to earn it all over again against better people and he did it there. Then he went to the Senior Bowl and he had to earn it all over there again and he did it there. He will have to come to this level and same thing, he’s going to have to earn it all over again. I mean, the competition and the players get better and better and better. They get bigger and faster and more powerful, so we think he has all of the makeup you need for that position along with the ability.”

On Johnson setting himself apart compared to other prospects:

“Everything I just kind of mentioned, he’s just a really well-rounded player — run-game, pass-game. We will see in training camp, but I don’t think it should be a big learning curve for him, but I guess we’ll see. Just really well-rounded in both phases of the game.”

On where Johnson fits on the offensive line:

“We see Zion as a right guard right now. Nothing has changed with [G] Matt Feiler. It’s always an option, it’s just not something we’re pursuing right now.”

On how the Senior Bowl helped Johnson’s value:

“It certainly didn’t hurt it. He already had a really great season this past year at Boston College. We wanted to make sure to see something similar to the Senior Bowl, in which he showed that against good people. There were some pretty good defensive linemen there, so it was a big help.”

On the comparison from left guard to right guard and Johnson’s transition:

“I mean I don’t want to make it sound like it’s easy. He’ll have to make a little transition there, but I’m not worried about it.”

On if Johnson was one of the guys that he talked to at the Senior Bowl and at the Combine:

“Yes, I talked to a lot of guys, but yes, Senior Bowl, Combine, probably even Pro Day.”

On Johnson’s personality fit with the organization:

“Yeah, I mean all of the work we did on Zion, he’s a great teammate and that’s a big part of playing here. He walks in here and he was a great college player — one of the best players on his college team. He walks through our locker room and he is the youngest player here and he has got to earn his role again, but we think he got some great ability to be a good teammate, to learn from the guys that are older than him, do what he is supposed to do and gradually, he will kind of grow into that leadership role some time way down the road, like they all do. We think he is going to fit in really well with the group and the offensive line and that’s a tight-knit group, those five-plus, three or four backup offensive linemen. It’s a really tight-knit group and fitting in and being a part of that is a big part of it.”

On T Storm Norton or T Trey Pipkins III at right tackle:

“If we are playing tomorrow, yeah, we’re okay with it.”

On if he was surprised with the number of trades that took place before their pick:

“Yes, it was really quiet to start off. I think it was five defensive players who went first and then kind of picked up from there and it sounds like it’s going nuts right now in there. I lost track of who’s going where.”

On how different the preparation was for this draft with the 17th overall pick in comparison to in 2018 when they had the 17th overall pick:

“It’s the same preparation in this draft, just thought there was a lower chance that he would make it to our pick. So, if we wanted [S Derwin James Jr.], we’d have to trade up. This one seemed, process and preparation, I just felt there was a much better chance that he could be there to pick.”

On if he felt like he could still have a chance to draft Johnson if he traded down:

“Yeah, depending where. You make educated decisions on where a guy could go. In the end, no, I don’t really know, but I try to make educated decisions on that, but it was pretty quiet.”

On if he has ever been involved in a draft with about eight trades in the first round:

“I’d have to look. I don’t know if that’s a lot or not. It just seems like since we picked, every time we looked up, someone was making a trade, which, obviously, it takes two teams. Some teams are coming up because they’re being aggressive because they want to get a player and other teams feel like that we can move back and we’ve got plenty of guys to choose from. That’s what makes the draft great. We all look at it a little bit differently. We all have different lists of players. There are 32 teams and we don’t all rank [the players] the same way. Just like when you look at all of the mock drafts that are done, they’re not all the same, right? Because we all look at players differently. It’s just opinions. So, everybody values players a little bit differently.”

On the Houston Texans taking a guard as the 15th overall pick:

“I had it on their list. I didn’t know it was going to be that high.”

On if the phone rang in the draft room:

“Pretty quiet. If you prepare the right way and have a good plan, there really shouldn’t be any fumbling in the draft room. So, it was pretty smooth.”

On if any teams called:

“It was relatively quiet.”

On if they had a lot of first-round graded players available when the team went on the clock:

“No. A small handful, which is normal. We’re picking at 17, so it’s not like we’re going to have 28 first-round players up there.”

On how he measures success:

“It’s just wins and losses. That’s what it comes down to and that’s what you get judged on.”

Chargers Head Coach Brandon Staley Day 1 Draft Availability

Thursday, April 28, 2022 ⚡ SoFi Stadium ⚡ Inglewood, Calif.

On the selection of G Zion Johnson:

“He’s really, really impressive. He’s smart, tough, really physical, versatile. He played in a pro-style offense. From a physical standpoint, he has big hands, long arms and really good feet. He can really anchor in pass protection against the biggest, strongest, best interior players in the league. We just really felt like this guy was a really complete player in both the run game and in the pass game. His intangibles really fit what we’re looking for.”

On where along the offensive line Johnson played in college:

“He played all three positions. He played tackle, guard and center. We see him as an inside player. He’s going to play guard for us. He’s just a really good football player and brings a real toughness that we’re looking for on offense. He was a really impressive guy in this process,”

On what ‘stood out’ about Johnson in the evaluation process:

“We were looking for the best player available at that pick, and I feel like he was the best O-lineman on our board, for sure. He’s just a really well-rounded player. I think when you take a look at his college film, his Senior Bowl film, Combine, Pro Day, he really aced all of those phases of the evaluation process. In the interview process with him, this guy had real presence. We really felt like solidifying the interior of our line for years to come was really, really important, both from the run game and from a pass protection standpoint. I think that from a culture standpoint, this guy, he’s the real thing, from toughness and a character standpoint.”

On Johnson being a ‘late bloomer’:

“If you take a look at where he started, at Davidson, that progression of being a guy that was 255 pounds his freshman year, to end up almost 320 pounds, and you take a look at his arm length, his hand size — 32 reps on the bench press — this is a really strong player. We were really looking for power players on offense, particularly inside. Now, we feel like we have that. You have [G] Matt [Feiler], [C] Corey [Linsley] and Zion. That’s a really impressive trio in there. Then, this guy’s got all the smarts that you’re looking forward. We really felt like this was a well-rounded, complete football player. We’re really excited to have him.”

On when Johnson ‘hit their radar’:

“Early in the process. Obviously, he had an incredible senior year there at Boston College. I’ve got a lot of respect for [Boston College Head Coach] Jeff Hafley. I’ve known Jeff for several years, he coached in the NFL. He’s done a heck of a job there. Zion played in a pro-style offense for [former Boston College Offensive Coordinator Frank] Cignetti [Jr.] there. His line coach is now the line coach for the Miami Dolphins, so he’s very well-trained. You could tell in the interview process that this guy was really sharp, that he had full command of the fundamentals, the scheme. Just a very smart guy, a tough guy and a complete player. We felt like, athletically, physical. I think coming back to that word, ‘complete player,’ that’s what made him really attractive for us.”

On if G Matt Feiler will transition to RT:

“I think for right now, we’re definitely going to keep Matt on the left side, knowing that he’s played right tackle and you could always do that in a pinch. But I think, for us, it was making sure that the left side stayed strong. That was the strength of our O-line unit last year, we really believe in that chemistry. The plan is to start out that way; put Zion on the right side, and then we’ll see what happens here in the next few days in the draft, and then after the draft. [T] Trey [Pipkins III] and [T] Storm [Norton], those two guys, we have those guys on our team that have played winning football for us, and then we have Matt [Feiler], who’s a tackle that’s played on the right side that has played winning football. So, we feel like we have depth, and we still have two more days that the draft, and then after the draft, to keep working on the O-line because that was a big part of what we were trying to do this offseason, to really increase our depth on the O-line overall.”

On comparing tonight to the opening night of last year’s draft:

“A year ago today, we were drafting with [T] Rashawn Slater. If you took take a look at how this draft unfolded, I think that if we hadn’t taken Zion Johnson, it was going to happen shortly after us — he was that highly regarded of an interior player. I think it’s very rare that you have an interior player that is that highly thought of. That’s really what we were trying to get, the best player at that pick, but certainly the best O-lineman. What you don’t want to do is reach for a tackle and then you have an issue somewhere else. We just really felt like this guy is a really complete player and this guy is a first-round level guard. I think it was really about building that interior for the future and knowing that that group is going to be able to play together for a lot of years.”

On Johnson’s character:

“When you meet this guy, you’re going to be very impressed. This guy has real presence. When I went to his first interview at the combine — I just kind of watched him a little bit, you’re kind of preparing for the guys that you’re going to interview formally — when he came into the room, this guy had a real calm presence, real confidence, real poise. You see that presence when you’re with him. Then, when he starts to talk, this guy’s had a really unique path to being a first-round draft pick. He started at Davidson — you know, a lot of people know [Warriors G] Steph Curry coming from there, and that’s kind of where this guy started, then he ends up at Boston College as a first-team All-American, and now the 17th pick in the draft. It’s one of those great stories of a guy that really worked at it, really developed his game. He worked at it, and here he is today. I think when you guys meet him, you’ll see all that because he has all the smarts and the toughness that we’re looking for. Then, from a physical standpoint, he has real power. This guy is a really good athlete. He’s a powerful inside player. That’s what we’re looking for.”

On where Johnson was on the team’s board upon selection:

“He was the top player on our board at the time that we picked, at 17. It was a unanimous feeling from our scouts to our coaching staff. In all the evaluation components for this guy, he really excelled. When he went to the Senior Bowl, he was one of the top players there. He played a bunch of different positions there. You take a look at his college career, what he did at Boston College in a pro-style system; you’re seeing him really do things that translate to the NFL. Sometimes in the offensive line position, that’s what holds offensive linemen back is that they don’t really perform in a pro-style system. But, from a protection standpoint, from a run game standpoint — wide zone, tight zone, gap, duo, screen game — you’re really able to see this guy operate. Then, at the Senior Bowl, when it’s good on good — I mean, he played in the ACC, which is a great league, but then at the Senior Bowl, you’re able to see him against the best in college football, and he was outstanding. Then, in the interview process, he certainly aced that part of it, too. This is a very, very good football player.”

On if QB Justin Herbert understands the value of drafting an offensive lineman in the first round in back-to-back drafts:

“He and our skill players. It’s Justin, for sure, but it’s also [WR]Mike [Williams], [WR] Keenan [Allen], [RB] Austin, [WR] Josh [Palmer], our tight end group, who we’re really excited about — [TE] Gerald Everett, [TE] Tre’ [McKitty], D.P. [TE Donald Parham Jr.]. It’s really about beat becoming a complete offensive football team. I think that that’s what we’re after. This was just about value. This was the best player that we had on our board at the time, and he happens to you really fit a position — much like last year with Rashawn. It’s a different position, certainly for an inside player, but really a component in our offense that can really help us become a complete offense.”

On if Herbert was in the draft room when the selection was made:

“No, he wasn’t. He got out of here. He was in here, did his thing, and then after we picked, I was able to call him on his way back. It was great to have the guys here tonight. I think that was one of my favorite parts of today, just our players being here. It really makes it feel like it’s a team. To be in front of our fans and in our locker room making this pick, it was a special, special day. I know that Justin was excited about the pick.”

On if ‘any part of him was tempted’ to select a defensive player at No. 17 overall:

“I really believe, in the NFL Draft, about value. I really believe in trust in the board. I really think that that’s important. You put in all this work, and I think that that’s something that [General Manager] Tom [Telesco], myself, the Spanos Family, [Director of Player Personnel] JoJo Wooden, [Director of College Scouting] Kevin Kelly, our area scouts and our coaching staff, that’s something that we’re really committed to. I think that a lot of people talk about our defense and our kicking game, which we made big investments in, but we also invested in our offense with [WR] Mike Williams and [TE] Gerald Everett. Like I said, it’s about building a team, and we felt like Zion Johnson was a big addition in making that complete team come to fruition.”

On trades made before the club’s selection:

“Yeah, it started to go with the trades. I think people were kind of anticipating that type of movement. I think that people maybe anticipated it happening sooner, but then when it happened, it didn’t really stop there for a while they’re in the middle. Then, you saw a couple of player trades, which is kind of uncommon. I think what you’re seeing in the NFL is you’re seeing that innovation, that different way of thinking, maybe, than the way it’s always been done. I think people are trying to get creative with their strategic process. I think that’s a good thing for the league. I think it’s really, really good for the league because people are trying to be at the forefront of building their teams. There are a lot of different ways to do it and I think that tonight was a really good example of it.”

On developing as a ‘line of scrimmage team’:

“I love what you brought up there because that’s what stands the test of time in the league. In the game of football, what stands the test of time is what happens up front. Specifically, on both sides of the ball, none of your scheme comes to life if you’re not good up front. It’s the one place I feel like on the field that it’s really hard to make up for. If you’re not good up front, it’s really hard, as a play-caller, to make up for that. If you do, you have to overcompensate in such a way that it really inhibits your ability to make plays on both sides of the ball. Then, I think from a cultural standpoint, what you’re trying to do is build a rugged, tough football team because that’s what it takes in this league. That’s what I want to be known for here; I want to be known as a rugged, tough football team that can beat you any way imaginable — offense, defense, kicking game. I think that we’re a lot closer to that, and we still have two more days, and then post-draft, and then going all the way to our first game. I think that that’s what we’re committed to, exploring all of those avenues. But I think, up front, we’re a lot closer, on both sides of the ball, to being where I expect to be.”

On if Johnson ‘addresses the run game situation’:

“The run game is an 11-man operation, including quarterback. I think what we did by getting Zion here, it really balances our run game. I think, last year, we were predominantly a left-side running team. In got-to-have-it situations, that’s where we were trending, running the football. What Zion does is he gives you a two-way go. I think the other thing that he does at a high level, which is the most important thing, is he can pass protect inside. You can help tackles in this league a lot more than you can help inside players. It’s a lot easier to neutralize an edge rusher than an interior rusher. So, when you have to go block the [Rams DL] Aaron Donalds of the world, the [Chiefs DT] Chris Jones of the world, the [Colts DT] DeForest Buckners of the world, when you have to go block those types of players inside, with the money on the line, you have to have an inside three they can get it done, and we feel like Zion can do that at a really high level.”

On when he became aware that the Chargers were facing the Chiefs on the first Thursday Night Football game exclusively on Amazon Prime (Week 2):

“I think I found out a couple of days ago. Then, there was that way of how it was going to all express itself and all of that. But, it’s exciting. I think it’s a good sign for our team. Obviously, we had two incredible games with those guys last year. If I were an NFL fan, that’s what I would want to open up with — I would want to see these two teams go at it. It’s exciting for our team, exciting for their team, but at the same time, you have one game before that. You have an opener long before you play on Thursday. But, it’s awesome to be a part of it. Al Michaels was able to announce it — a legend. He’s going to be calling that game, so it’s really special for our team and our fans.”

On if it is ‘advantageous’ to play the Thursday night game early in the season:

“I’ll tell you on Friday after the game whether it was or not [laughter].”

Chargers Guard Zion Johnson Introductory Media Availability Friday, April 29, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

Opening statement:

“Hello, everyone. I’m glad to be here. First time in L.A., ever.”

On joining the Chargers:

“It feels great. The weather is great, but just the people I’ve met — some of the players, some of the coaches, [Head] Coach [Brandon] Staley — they’re just really good people. I could tell that they’re building a culture here that’s excellent on the field, but also has excellent people, as well.”

On if he had any prior familiarity with anyone from the Chargers

“Not particularly. Kind of a coincidence, though; I met with [Offensive Line] Coach [Brendan] Nugent at the Senior Bowl when he was with the Saints, then I met with him again when he was with the Chargers — that’s kind of a funny coincidence. Other than that, there’s no one that I had known from prior.”

On if he played against OLB Chris Rumph III in college when Rumph was at Duke:

“Yes, I did. I did play against Chris Rumph. When I was left tackle, he was one of the ends — him and [Cardinals OLB Victor] Dimukeje. And I did play against [CB] Asante Samuel Jr. in 2019. So, yeah, you have that.”

On which Chargers players he met today at the facility:

“It’s all been in passing, so there haven’t really been formal introductions. A few guys just came by and said, ‘Hi,’ to me — didn’t actually say their names, which is weird [laughter]. They said, ‘Hello,’ to me, and that was cool. I look forward to meeting everyone formally. That will be awesome. I got to see Coach Nugent, who I’ve met before, but just to see him here is a good thing. Then, Coach Staley, who I met at the Combine, to see him again was cool. I talked to Mr. [Owner and Chairman of the Board Dean] Spanos, that was awesome. It’s a nice facility here and it’s great to be in L.A. for the first time ever for me.”

On his draft experience since being selected by the Chargers:

“Honestly, after I got drafted — I did some media stuff, but after that I went to the draft party for the Chargers. It was great to see all of the fans. They were pumped. It was cool to see how excited they were. I took some pictures with them. That was really cool. Afterward, I went back to the hotel to see my family. We hung out for about 30 minutes or so in the lobby, but we were all spent, so I went back to the room thinking that I was going to crash, but I ended up not sleeping at all because I was so excited. It’s been so exciting, not just for me but for my whole family, my head coach and everyone who was involved.”

On how many congratulatory phone calls and text messages he has received since being selected:

“A lot of text messages — I put the over/under at 100, but there were a lot of text messages. It’s been good, just people who have helped me throughout the way, people who may not be family, but are family, pretty much. It’s been good to talk to everyone. It’s just awesome knowing that people that were a part of your journey are so proud of you.”

On if he replies ‘right away’ when receiving a message:

“I’m a reply right away guy, but I’ll send the reaction thing, where you can click and love the post or like the post, and then I’ll go back later and do a formal response. If someone sees that you just saw it, and then you forget later on, that’s pretty bad.”

On a bus driver ‘getting him into football’:

“That was definitely part of it — it was really him and my mom. He was the one who mentioned it first. I would ride the bus home after golf practice and he said, ‘Why don’t you try out football?’ I was on the fence about it. I kind of went back-and-forth for a while because I hadn’t played, I was undersized and I didn’t really know a lot about the ins and outs of being a football player. But it was really my mom who pushed me to play. She always taught me that you should try things so that you don’t have regrets later on in life. I’m glad that I tried football because that would’ve definitely been a regret that I would have had. I love the game. There isn’t another sport that I would have wanted to play.”

On being high school teammates with Vikings T Christian Darrisaw:

“Yeah. We actually had quite a few guys that have had the opportunity to get drafted. Me and Christian were pretty close in high school because our O-line coach would have us over to the house. He liked to have a family between our offensive linemen, where we would go and eat and have cookouts at his house, that sort of thing. With him going to Virginia Tech, we weren’t able to stay as close because it’s like, ‘I want to beat you.’ He’s definitely someone who has pushed me, especially in high school and throughout my career, because with his level of play, I’ve always wanted to out-do him as a rival sort of thing.”

On the most influential person on his journey to getting to the NFL:

“My mother. Kind of what I said about her pushing me to play football, but just the model that she led for me growing up. She was always someone who worked hard, whether it being in her career — she was a student-athlete, so her doing that. A lot of the qualities that she taught me have made me the person that I am today.”

On his mother playing collegiate basketball:

“She did. She played power forward and center for Virginia Tech. She had a lot of rebounds. At one point, she had records for rebounding, but I think they get a lot more rebounds now — the girls are almost seven-feet tall. Her records might be down the chart a little bit, but she had quite a career.”

On the amount of his athletic ability he attributes to her:

“I think most of it definitely comes from her. She was definitely a force in the post.”

On playing golf before football:

“I would spend the summers with my grandparents in Virginia. My grandmother is the principal of a school in Norfolk, Virginia. I would go and spend time with the school and they had little camps; tennis, golf, all of these different camps. I did the golf one and kind of enjoyed it as a kid. I kept playing, made the high school team when I was in middle school, and then it kept going from there.”

On which players he ‘patterns his game after’:

“So I’ll split this into two. The guy that I watch the most — I didn’t really pattern my game after him because we’re not similar in dimensions — is [Cowboys T] Tyron Smith. That’s the reason why I wear 77. He’s a great player. I used to spend time watching — I think it was 2014 or 2015 — the Cowboys’ camp practices, and they were joint practices between them and the Rams and I don’t think that he got beat once. It was amazing. That really gave me a goal to strive for. The guys I really watched, and pattern my game after, are [Bills G] Rodger Saffold and [Jets G] Laken Tomlinson. They’re two guys that are in slightly different offenses, and I like them for different reasons. Laken, a lot of what he does in the wide, we did that a lot recently at Boston College. Just seeing the little things that he does in the wide zone is something that I like to watch. Then, Rodger Saffold, just his overall physicality, how he gets up to linebackers and just the power he plays with, the physicality is something I respected.”

On if his game ‘has gotten closer to Saffold’:

“I think so. When I talk with some of my coaches at Boston College, some of them disagree. Some of them think it’s a little more like Laken [Tomlinson], but either one would be an honor. They’re both great players.”

On his master's degree in cybersecurity:

“So I graduated in 2020 from Boston College, my undergrad in computer science. When I decided to go back, a part of that was seeing what program I wanted to get into. In the Woods College [of Advancing Studies], the one program that made sense for me was cybersecurity. It kind of meshed well with computer science to where I could kind of go into more of the hacking routes and take some classes that others weren't able to because of my background. It ended up being a really fun topic and something that I'm glad I ended up majoring in.”

On 'seeing the explosion in the field' of cybersecurity:

“It's definitely crazy. When I first started taking the class, it's so interesting because the terms are so new. What you consider like espionage or cyber terrorism, those are very loaded terms where a lot goes into that. Where one person might think it's espionage, which may be allowed in certain circumstances, another person may see it as terrorism. As much of a technical subject as it is, it's also very intertwined in law because international law plays a big part in what we consider cyber terrorism, cyber espionage, hacking, and what's allowed and what is not.”

On if he has continued to study cybersecurity beyond his master's course load:

“I didn't take classes in the spring. Really, for me, I wanted to do the best throughout the [draft] process — I wanted to do the best at the Senior Bowl and the Combine — but I keep up with the subjects. I still [computer] program, it's something that I do in my spare time. Really, football is my love, so that's the main thing that I focus on right now.”

On languages he codes in:

“I've used a lot of different languages — Java, Javascript, you know, Python, HTML, CSS, I've used webpack before to make websites. There are just tons of different things that I've done. Honestly, when you learn one language, it's not that hard to learn a new one because there are a lot of similarities and things you can pick up after you learn your first one.”

On if knowing different coding languages will help him with football:

“Absolutely. Similarly, I've been in four different offenses. I think, for me, the more I learn about those different offenses, the easier it was for me each year to pick up on something new just because a lot of times, you're doing something similar with slight tweaks, but someone might call it something different. Just being able to pick up on those little differences can go a long way.”

On his mindset during the process of transferring from Davidson:

“So, honestly, Davidson was an awesome experience. I like the people there, but I wasn't on a full scholarship and there was a level of financial strain to my family that I didn't want that to happen anymore, so I decided to go in the [transfer] portal. This was like the first year the portal was really a thing and it was only, really, a line of communication between you and the coaches. So, I went in the portal, got interest from a few schools, but Boston College was really the clear choice for me. The level of school, my connection with [former Offensive Line] Coach [Phil] Trautwein and their history with offensive linemen. That just sold it to me.”

On if he was surprised when the Chargers drafted him:

“So, first of all, let me explain this, there's a prospect chair that you're supposed to sit in, so they can get the camera angles and everything. I was glued to that chair for the first hour or so and then someone came up to me and was like, 'You don't have to sit here this whole time.' So, I got up and walked around a little bit, sat on the couch, talked with my head coach, Coach [Jeff] Hafley and my agent and we're just talking about some of the things going on. I think a trade just happened or something. Next thing I know, I get a call and the caller ID says Chargers Football and I'm like, 'Hold on, hold on,' and I answer the phone and it's the call and everyone's quiet. They have no idea who I'm talking to and then all I say is, 'Thank you, Mr. Spanos' and they were all like, 'It's the Chargers!' Everyone started going crazy. It was really a crazy moment and it was a surprise because it was like whiplash for my mind because I'm talking about what just happened in the draft and I'm talking about hopefully I go soon and then — boom, it happens right there.”

On what he knew about the Chargers:

“I’m a fan of football, so I know some of the past teams. Philip Rivers at quarterback and those sort of things and, of course, I know the high-powered offense now. The great running back in Austin Ekeler, receivers in Keenan Allen and Mike Williams, and then [OT] Rashawn Slater and a great center in Corey Linsley — an older guy who is a vet who, hopefully, I can learn from and then can’t not mention [QB] Justin Herbert, the guy is electric. Of course, I knew all of that, saw that last year, saw the shootouts that the Chargers had been in and I’m excited to, hopefully, be a piece of that offense and work hard to earn my right to be a Charger, like I said.”

On what came to mind when he thought of Los Angeles:

“Basically, what I’ve seen on TV [laughter]. When I was driving from LAX, I was like, it kind of does look like LA on TV with the palm trees and there’s this certain lighting that’s in LA. It’s like this vibe. I don’t know how to explain it, but it looks like LA on TV, like one of the cop shows, like an NCIS in LA or something like that, like from one of those shows, basically.”

On how much he worked with Offensive Line Coach Brendan Nugent at the Senior Bowl and how much he thinks it’ll help him:

“So, I met with him at the Senior Bowl. We had an interview and I got to talk with him while he was at the Saints and go over some of the things he believes in. I met with him, again, at the Combine, like I said, when he was a Charger at that point. Just talking with him and hearing some of the things he likes in terms of technique and what he believes in as a room. It feels like, for me, what better room would I want to be in? Clearly, building something that’s special.”

On his first year in high school playing football:

“Undersized is an understatement. I was 225 pounds and I played right tackle and our team played Chase Young, so it wasn’t like we were playing scrubs or anything. Really, for me at that point, I wanted to play football, I wanted to prove that I could be a good football player. So, being undersized, I just kind of had to strain on every play and just try not to give up a sack or strain to get my guy out of the way just a little bit. But, once I got to college and really had the resources to develop my body and gain weight, that really helped me and the academics is really what got me there. I had a pretty good GPA in high school and that opened the door for me to be able to go to Davidson.”

On him trying to play tight end:

“So, our offensive coordinator mentioned to me that he wanted to see how I could do at tight end and that was something I kind of explored for a little bit. But, really, the team wanted me to play right tackle, so I played right tackle and things turned out good I’d say.”

Chargers Safety JT Woods Introductory Media Availability Friday, April 29, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On his emotions upon being selected by the Chargers:

“It was just an amazing moment for me. I was actually in the kitchen just kind of chilling, watching the draft, when I got the call, so I was already around a lot of my family. My best friend was sitting right next to me, so I showed him the phone. He just looked at me and said, ‘We’re going to California.’ It was just an amazing moment.”

On if he was surprised at all by the selection:

“Not necessarily shocked. I had talked to quite a few teams, honestly, throughout the entire process. I kind of know how the draft works. A lot of trading happens, so there’s not really a particular team that you can think you’re going to go to. I had that mindset going in, so it wasn’t shocked at all.”

On how he would describe his game:

“I would say that it’s very unique. I do have you know the size and the speed, but I really use my intellect to drive a lot of the plays that I make, so my intellect and my instincts are what help me use my speed and my size to make the plays that I make.”

On the ‘Heartbreak Kid’ nickname:

“It was kind of something that built up through a fall camp that we had going into the 2019 season. Me and another DB, [Texans S] Grayland Arnold [Jr.], who is currently on the Houston Texans, had a bunch of interceptions in camp. It was just kind of a joke that I’m breaking the hearts of the quarterbacks, so the name, ‘HBK,’ kind of came about when [former Baylor Associate Head Coach - Outside Linebackers] Coach Joey McGuire first started calling me that name, then is just kind of grew into something a lot bigger than what it was at the time.”

On if the name ‘grew’ due to interceptions he gathered in games:

“Yes, sir. I started breaking hearts of quarterbacks across the country, not just the ones in the practice facility [laughter].”

On his ‘fit’ within the secondary during his time at Baylor:

“I predominantly played in the deep end of the field as the free safety in our defense, but I did have a lot of box work, as well — I would drop down and be a flat player. I was able to do a lot of things. A lot of the times I was guarding tight ends, and also guarding slot receivers, so like you said, pretty versatile. But for the most part, I was on the back end of things.”

On if the Chargers ‘gave any indication’ of where he would play in the secondary:

“No, sir. Nothing specific, but I’m sure that we’ll get into all of that stuff really soon here. Just excited to even have the opportunity to be on the team. A great team in itself, and in a great division, as well, so I’m really excited to get out there.”

On if his intellect entails scheme knowledge or instincts as a play develops:

“I would say both. They kind of go hand-in-hand. Just having a general concept of the schemes and the things that you’re going to go against, and then being able to just pick apart different stuff that’s happening as the play is developing, or even pre-snap, just kind of helps you communicate the play. I was able to do that with my teammates before, and I know that I’ll be able to do that with my teammates that I’m about to have real soon. They go hand-in-hand together.”

On his ball skills:

“I’d say I have pretty good ball skills. I led the nation in interceptions, so I’d say they’re not too bad. They’re OK.”

On if he had any connections to the Chargers’ roster or coaching staff prior to being selected:

“No, sir. Not anybody specifically.”

On his familiarity with the Chargers:

“I haven’t gone strictly in-depth with just them. I’m kind of new to the NFL. Growing up, I always watched college football, so as I got a little older, that’s when I started to get more into the NFL aspect of things. As I’ve been getting older, really — I would say within the last two to three years — is when I really started watching the NFL.”

On his contact with the Chargers in the pre-draft process:

“Yes, ma’am. I talked to them a little bit. Like I said a little earlier, I was blessed enough to be able to talk to pretty much every single team with the Senior Bowl and with the Combine, as well. So I talked to them a little bit, just like I did everybody else.”

On the solitude currently in the room:

“That’s just because I’m upstairs and they’re all downstairs. I’m like in a secluded place of the house so that I can get a little bit of peace and quiet. But yeah, they’re all going crazy.”

On if his performance at the Senior Bowl ‘helped raise his draft stock’:

“I would assume it helped me quite a bit. I kind of have a knack for getting to the ball, so for me to be able to do that at the Senior Bowl against the greatest players in the nation, I think that helped me a little bit, as well. Then, also being able to be coached by NFL coaches. I’m sure they all talked in that circle about how coachable people were, and I’m a very coachable kid, so I’m sure they helped me, as well.”

On who he models his game after:

“That’s a little hard question for me. Somebody that I think I’m close to is [Bengals CB] Tre Flowers. He’s somebody who played safety, and then made the transition of corner. But when it comes to just pure safeties, I don’t think a lot of safeties in the league now kind of match my prototype, being 6-foot-2, 195 [pounds] and having the speed that I have. It’s a little bit rare, I’d say. Finding specific people who match me is a little difficult.”

On who he had to ‘kick out of the room’ before starting his media availability:

“My dad is really the only one. Everybody was kind of downstairs when it all happened and I kind of stepped away to just take the call. After I was actually told that I was going to be drafted, to just get the strategics and logistics of getting on this Zoom call, I was kind of able to step away from everybody. They probably didn’t even notice I kind of stepped out because they’re all going crazy still downstairs.”

On S Derwin James Jr.:

“Just an amazing ball player and an amazing athlete. I know he’s even more of an amazing person, so I just can’t wait to be in the same locker room as a dude like him and be able to learn so much from a dude like him; a multiple-time Pro Bowler. Who else wouldn’t you want to learn from?”

On tackling skills:

“Tackling is the utmost important thing, I think, especially when you play free safety, like I did in college. My philosophy is that I’m the eraser of the defense. So, it doesn’t matter what mistakes the 10 people in front of me and next to me had, it’s my job to get the ball down so that we can live to fight another day. That’s of the utmost importance. I think every defensive person knows that no matter how long the play is — if it’s 99 yards and they started at the opposite goal line, they still have that one yard to go. At Baylor, as a defense, we literally attested to that in the Big 12 Championship [Game] when we had Oklahoma State on the 1-yard line to win the game. I think tackling is just huge. It’s obviously something that I can work on, I’m sure everybody knows that every defender can work on tackling, and so that’s something that I’m always passionate about and always wanting to get better at my game.”

Chargers General Manager Tom Telesco Day 2 Draft Availability Friday, April 29, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On S JT Woods' nickname of 'Heartbreak Kid':

"I don't know who gave him that nickname, but it kind of fits a little bit, right? He was a big play guy for them. He turned the ball over a lot and made a lot of big plays for them."

On Woods' positional versatility:

"He's a unique player. Like [S] Nas [Nasir Adderley], like [S] Derwin [Jamrs Jr.], he's a safety with a lot of cover ability, with his length and his speed. He shows a little bit of corner movement, so we kind of see him as a defensive back. As you guys know, when we're in five DB [personnel], six DB, it can be any combination — it's not just necessarily three corners and two safeties or four corners with two safeties, you can go with three safeties. The fact is that we have some of these guys that can really cover, and that's what JT can do. JT, he's long and he is fast — like, legitimately fast, football fast. He has really good ball skills, turns the ball over, plays aggressive, really good feel for the game. He's a really interesting player."

On Woods' 'unique' size matched with skillset:

"It is unique because of his height. He's over six-foot-two, so he has long legs, long arms. Big-time track athlete in high school, sprints and hurdles — enough that he was a hurdler at Baylor, so that kind of tells you how fast he is because Baylor has a big-time track program. But, as you see him, you can see how fast he plays. You notice it right off the bat. Sometimes, guys were longer legs, it takes some time to build, and then you see the speed — he gets it going immediately. A unique player because of his size, his length and his ability to really cover a lot of ground from that safety position."

On if his tackling skills are a concern:

"He is aggressive, tough. The rest of the test will come along a little bit, but he's certainly more than willing to the point where he probably has to pace himself down a little bit. But, he can cover a lot of ground. Part of tackling, too, is getting into a position to get there, and he covers a lot of ground to the perimeter. He can erase some big runs that come out. Plus, we see him also with special teams ability, too, with his speed and his aggression."

On if the club was 'targeting' defensive back today:

"We weren't targeting a specific position. He was just a player that we really liked. He has that unique skillset in the secondary. It was just kind of blinking to us up there."

On if Woods 'will compete for a starting spot' within the secondary:

"Obviously, with our first-round pick, you can kind of see what his role is going to be. From here on out, these guys that come in are going to compete and try to earn a job some way, somehow."

On if Woods played on special teams in college:

"Yes, certainly early in his career."

On balancing between drafting ‘at a position of need’ or for the ‘best player available’:

“Once you’re out of the first round, the positions of need — trying to fill needs in the third through the seventh round, that’s not always realistic to do. Needs constantly change, so it’s not something that we’re really looking at. Best player available, we have players ranked, but, obviously, it’s very subjective. You aren’t really filling immediate needs once you’re into this part of the draft.”

On if Woods could potentially ‘cross-train’ as a corner:

“He’s a pretty good safety. I think, when you see him, you’ll see his middle of the field [skillset]. He has really good vision and eyes. He breaks on the ball quickly, especially going back. He has really big-time speed. Our safeties have to be able to cover, which all of our guys do.”

On if he could potentially be a returner on special teams:

“No, but a gunner, quite possibly. He does have pretty good return skills, once the ball is in his hands. I wouldn’t rule it out, but it wasn’t something that we were thinking about in terms of actually returning a kick or punt. As far as covering kicks and covering punts, definitely.”

On if Woods’ ability to cover tight ends ‘stood out’ to him:

“Yes, no doubt.”

On if Woods covering tight ends ‘frees up’ S Derwin James to ‘move around more’:

“Well, it would be hard to gameplan today for whoever we’re going to play. I mean, it’s the draft. But, certainly, when I say he’s a unique player, part of that is being able to try and handle a tight end.”

On if it ‘felt weird’ not picking in the second round:

“Yes, it took forever. It did. You see all of those good players go off, but we did put [OLB] Khalil’s [Mack] draft card up on the board in our second-round spot that we took him. He’s the oldest player I’ve ever drafted, and the most expensive, but I think he’s going to pan out just fine. We knew that going in, so you kind of sit and watch and kind of wait to take it. It is what it is.”

On Woods ‘covering the slot’ at Baylor:

“A lot of these guys, we’ll get them in here and we’ll just kind of let them develop and see where it goes. His skillset is pretty unique.”

On Woods also playing wide receiver during his time at Baylor:

“He’s a versatile player, but we’re going to keep him as a safety for now and let him play there. He’s a good athlete. In high school, he played, I think, running back, receiver, all of the defensive back positions and ran track. So, a good athlete.”

Chargers Head Coach Brandon Staley Day 2 Draft Availability Friday, April 29, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On the selection of S JT Woods:

“JT played on an outstanding defense at Baylor. I have a lot of respect for [Baylor Head Coach] Dave Aranda, [Baylor Defensive Coordinator] Ron Roberts. As you saw tonight, several of his teammates were drafted. That was definitely the top defense in the Big 12 [Conference] and one of the top defenses in the country. We just really see him as one of those secondary players that we really value. Can't have enough of them. You guys saw that the record amount of receivers that were drafted in the first two rounds in this year's draft. JT has a lot of rare DB stuff. He's six-foot-two-plus, 195 [pounds]. He runs 4.3 [40-yard-dash]. He had a 10'8" broad [jump], 39.5" vertical [jump]. Those are rare DB numbers. Then, he led the nation in interceptions. He had six interceptions. He returned a couple for touchdowns. He was a multi-year starter on that team. He ran track at Baylor. He was really sharp in the interview process. He can really run the show, which is something that we really value back there at safety, or just in our secondary, in general. We really think that he's versatile to play in a lot of different places, but specifically, he can play in the slot, he can play deep. You know how we use [S] Derwin James [Jr.], going down in the slot and playing Dime-Money or Star. Now, you have a guy in the deep part of the field. You have him and [S] Nas [Nasir Adderley] who can play the deep part of the field with a lot of range. You have really three guys with a lot of gas back there that can go make plays and get you the football. So, we felt like this would just really be an outstanding addition to the secondary because of those reasons. Then, we think he'll have kicking game value. This guy can really run and he's a really good tackler. He can play a bunch of different positions as a gunner, on kickoff, just all of those types of things. We just think that we're getting an outstanding player. He has a really good pedigree. We're excited to get him in our DB environment and get him going.”

On if having Woods in the deep part of the field helps S Derwin James Jr. 'move around' underneath:

“I think that when you play five and six DB groupings, if you do move Derwin closer to the line of scrimmage or in the slot somewhere, you don't want to lose that play-making ability in the deep part of the field. I think that what JT gives you is premium range back there. Now, you have two guys back there, with him and Nas, and Nas can play in the slot, too — I mean, he's done that in his career, too. He didn't do it last year, but depending on how the rest of our secondary shakes out, you have really three safeties, and then four if you really count [DB] Mark Webb [Jr.] because Mark Webb played in the slot at Georgia. Now, you have four safeties who all have slot flex. We really value that — the more DBs that you have in your secondary that can play the slot, whether it's Star or Money, it gives you a numbers advantage in how you cover these guys. When the money is on the line on third down in two-minute, you're going to have five and six DBs in the game. We play a lot of different types of five and six DBs, depending on the matchup, so it just gives us more flexibility. This guy's got a rare engine back there. His game speed, I mean he's running over 21 miles an hour, but it's the speed plus the way he processes. He has a great processor because he's really smart. When you put the physical speed with that mental speed, you're getting a really high-end secondary player.”

On if Woods' missed tackles 'are a concern':

"I think that he's coming out of the top. The way he runs the alley, I think that this guy has real speed to get there. I think that on his finish, he just has to use those 32-inch arms to wrap up. This guy is making really good contact. Sometimes you get a missed tackle because you didn't wrap it up. I think his angles, his tracking — I think the big part of playing safety, when you're coming out of the top, is you're assessing his angles. Does this guy play with good pace on the football? Those things are excellent. His tracking, his pace is excellent. I think his best football is ahead of him. I think that that's the intel we got from Dave Aranda and Ron Roberts, that this guy is a guy that throughout his college career, really, really improved, so we think that he can definitely hit another gear in our environment. Then, his defensive coordinator [Renaldo Hill] is a 10-year NFL safety. [Secondary Coach] Derrick Ansley is one of the superstar coaches in the NFL — with [Assistant Secondary Coach] Tommy Donatell, that's a superstar coaching staff, that trio right there. We think that he's going to get a lot better. Then, he's going to be with one of the top secondary players in the league every day in Derwin James. Then, teaming up with [CB] J.C. [Jackson], [CB] Asante [Samuel Jr.], [S] Nas [Nasir Adderley], Vato [CB Michael Davis], there are a lot of quality guys that he is going to be able to learn from."

On the potential of Woods' contribution in the secondary:

"I really think that this guy is going to be a factor early. I think we're going to have great competition in our secondary, but I would expect him to come in here and compete for a role. I think that all of that is going to express itself when the pads come on training camp, when there's live tackling. I think so much of playing in the secondary is that you have to remember that you're tackling these big runners, receivers and tight ends. A lot of that will work itself out when we get pads on in training camp, but we definitely drafted him because we have a vision that he's going to come in and help us."

On if Woods playing cornerback 'is a consideration':

"We don't really see him like that. We kind of see him as a safety, and then a Star and Money type of flex. He has that movement to play in the slot. When we kind of assess DBs that play safety, it's playing the ball in the deep part of the field, man-to-man coverage ability in the slot, and then open-field tackling. Then, obviously, [an ability to] key diagnose, communication, processor and all of that type of stuff. He really checks all of those boxes. At the Senior Bowl, they put him at corner and he had some reps there, where you kind of saw him play man-to-man, which helped in the evaluation, but at Baylor, they play a really pro-style defense, so you're getting a very pure look at a secondary player. I think that he just really fits with how we want to play, in particularly in the deep part of the field. I think what makes him unique is how he plays deep because he can really find the angle and he can get there. We're excited to work with him."

On if Woods' 'proven track record' of takeaway abilities 'fit a need' for the defensive unit:

"I think that we're going to improve our rush. Obviously, you add [OLB] Khalil Mack, and when you have Khalil Mack and [OLB] Joey Bosa rushing the passer, we feel like that's why it's important to get secondary players who can get you the ball, because we feel like people are going to be sped up and you want people back there who can catch a mistake and make plays back there. We really feel like he can do that. With his range, and then his size and his concept trigger, he can really get us the football. That's what he did for Baylor and that's what we are going to hope that he can do for us."

On Woods' ability to contribute on special teams due to his speed:

"Yeah, I definitely see that in his future. The more team speed you can get — the thing that people, I think, sometimes fail to realize on [special] teams is how much ground you're actually covering, so the faster you are, that works to your advantage. We're definitely going to try and get him, and everybody that can run, on [special] teams, so that we can really cut the field in half and win the vertical field position. I think that we've tried to really do a good job in this offseason of making our special teams as strong as they can be, certainly, with the specialists — deep-snapper, punter, kicker and then returner — but then, it's your core guys that really have to come on. I think last year, that second half of the year, our young guys really came on stronger. Now, we have to keep building this nucleus today and tomorrow with more guys that you can add to your core group that gives you that quality of depth on special teams."

On the value of C Corey Linsley and S Derwin James Jr. on aiding in the development of this year's first two draft selections:

"I think it's really important. I think when that you get a guy that you feel like has a lot of potentials, has a lot that's made up of the right stuff, it really reminded me of a couple of years ago when Utah's defense had a bunch of secondary guys. They had an incredible defense when I was with the Rams in 2020. That secondary group that they had was incredible. All of those guys are really playing at a high level in the NFL, and I see a lot of JT Woods in that group, where this Baylor group was really loaded. They had a bunch of ballers on that team and they had a really special chemistry. That's why they won a lot of games there. That's why they did a lot of things that that program had never done before, and that was a big factor of it, too. We want to bring people from winning environments in, and I think that's exactly what we did with [G] Zion [Johnson]. He comes from a pro-style coaching staff. They did a lot of really special things at BC when he was there transforming that place and getting that place going. JT was the same way. Where they started, at Baylor, and where they finished, he was part of program history. Then, specifically on defense, the way they played, you're matching up against Oklahoma. I'm watching this guy versus Oklahoma. I'm watching this guy against [former Oklahoma QB] Caleb Williams and all of those guys. I'm watching him against Oklahoma State, Texas and TCU. I'm watching him against Ole Miss in [the Sugar Bowl] and this guy, he's lighting the field on fire. Then, he had an awesome all-star game [Senior Bowl]. Much like Zion, this guy was at the all-star game, and so you're seeing him against the best in the country. Then, the Combine and then his Pro Day, you were just able to get a very full evaluation, and we really value that. We're excited about the pick."

On the amount of time Woods spent covering the slot at Baylor:

"He was there. [Former Baylor S Jalen and current Texans S] Pitre did that so much for them at Baylor, he was more like a Nickel Star, playing a little bit lower. But, JT did that, too. A lot of times in their rotations, he was kind of in that lower zone, in the slot covering. You got to see him doing a lot of things that we do, so it was very easy to project the fit. Then, you got to see him in the deep part of the field. I think in college football now, it's a lot harder to see safeties playing the deep part of the field because the passing game isn't as deep — it's quick game a lot, RPOs and just get it out quick, where you were able to see this guy in the deep part of the field track it and find the angle. We've been around a lot of great safeties. I've been fortunate, in my NFL career, and [Defensive Coordinator] Renaldo [Hill], obviously having played 10 years, and DA [Secondary Coach Derrick Ansley], [Assistant Secondary Coach] Tommy [Donatell], we've been around a lot of great secondaries. We feel like we're onto something with our group here. That was something that's really important with the passing game and where the NFL is going; you've have to have secondary players, and you can't have enough of them. We just really feel like there was great value for this guy."

On if the transactions made by other teams within the AFC West Division 'increased the urgency' to select a coverage player at a premium draft position:

"I think, philosophically, I've just always been that way. Really, I tried to bring that mindset to the Rams when I was the defensive coordinator — I was playing a lot of five and six DBs to everything, and then moving guys around. I think we've had really good success doing that, especially when you have the players with the flexibility to do it, because I think you can get really specific with the matchup and really put your guys in premium spots. I think that's just part of the passing game. Just because a team is a good passing team, doesn't mean it's the same as the next passing team. What we try to do with our guys is to kind of fit it to the game, and we're lucky that we're kind of building a secondary where we can play that way. I think that in our first two years here, we've been able to kind of get off to a good start and we'll see where it goes tomorrow. We're hoping to keep moving in that direction because, again, the other reason why you need a lot of secondary players is for special teams, because they're the ones that are covering the kicks."

Chargers Running Back Isaiah Spiller Introductory Media Availability Saturday, April 30, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On being selected by the Chargers:

“It’s just a blessing. I’m ready to work. Grateful for the opportunity that they gave me. The Chargers are a great team, they have a great organization over there, so I’m just ready to get down there and get ready to work.”

On how he would describe himself as a running back:

“I would describe myself as an all-around back. I feel like I can do it all; run, catch, and blocking, as well. So, just going in and improving on those things and getting to the next level to showcase what I can do.”

On what he learned the most from Texas A&M Head Coach Jimbo Fisher:

“Just how to approach the game. He really taught me how to practice, how to watch film. It made me become a better player mentally and physically. So, I feel like he really helped me be pro-ready and I’m grateful for that opportunity that he gave me at [Texas] A&M. So, that’s why I feel like A&M is a good organization and it really helped me get to this point.”

On if he can be a short-yardage running back:

“Yes, sir. I think I can do that in all types of ways. Just grateful for the opportunity that they gave me.”

On his receiving skills:

“Really good. My receiving skills are really good. I’ve always caught the ball. Even on film, I catch the ball, so it’s not a problem for me.”

On pass-protection:

“I feel like I really can still improve on that. Just learning the system and the technique that they like to use. So, I feel like I could really improve on that as well.”

On if he pass-protected at Texas A&M:

“Yes, sir. I did that a lot at A&M. We did a lot of pass-protections. So, I kind of have the concept down, a just need to learn the system and improve on my technique.”

On if he has any connections at the Chargers:

“No, sir. Not as of right now [laughter].”

On how much he has watched RB Austin Ekeler:

“I watched [RB Austin] Ekeler a lot. I watched the Chargers a lot, they throw the ball a lot. [QB] Justin Herbert’s a great quarterback. Ekeler is a great player as well. He’s strong, too. So, he’s been doing great for them. It’s going to be fun getting to know him and getting to work with him.”

On where he credits his receiving skills and if he ever played wide receiver:

“Just when I was growing up, that was the first position I ever played; receiver. My dad always taught me how to catch the ball first, so it’s just always been kind of natural to me. Just grateful for that.”

On if his dad played tight end:

“Yes, sir, at Texas A&M.”

On if he ever considered playing tight end:

“No, I never considered that. Running back was my position.”

On coming to the Chargers:

“I feel like it’s a great opportunity for me to showcase my abilities. So, I’m grateful for the opportunity. Big city. I’m ready to make it happen.”

On if he models his game after Vikings RB Dalvin Cook:

“I watched [Vikings RB] Dalvin [Cook], but I really model my game after [RB] Adrian Peterson. He’s the reason I started playing. Just watching him grow up a lot. He’s really influenced my game a lot. So, just to get to this moment is a blessing and I’m going to continue doing me.”

On if he was surprised it was the Chargers who drafted him:

“Yes, ma’am. I was surprised. I’ve been waiting for a minute. So, just grateful that the Chargers decided to choose me and I’m ready to get to work and give it my all every day. I’m really just blessed and thankful for the opportunity.”

On if he always carries a calm demeanor:

“Yes, ma’am [laughter].”

Chargers Defensive Lineman Otito Ogonnia Introductory Media Availability Saturday, April 30, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On being selected by the Chargers and remaining in Los Angeles:

“It’s amazing. I’m excited. Not having to leave Southern California after playing at UCLA and going straight there, it’s an amazing experience. To be honest with you, I always knew that I was going to the Chargers — ever since I visited them, I had a feeling that I was going there. I kind of manifested it, in a way — almost tried not to jinx myself, but it ended up happening and I’m forever grateful for it.”

On what led to his confidence surrounding being selected by the Chargers:

“The way that the meeting turned out, the vibe that I got, something just told me that this is the place where I can be the most successful and the place that I needed to be. Being under that staff and in that defense, it’s somewhere I can really excel. I think that it kind of went both ways; I think that they saw it out of me and I saw it out of them, so I knew that it was going to be my top destination and where I wanted to go to. It happening is a dream come true. There’s nothing better.”

On what he believes the Chargers like about his game:

“I think a big thing is my abilities at the point of attack; my ability to really knock guys back, get penetration, re-set the line of scrimmage, stop the run. Even in the pass, I’m able to push back the pocket and get vertical pressure up the middle. Those are things that they ended up mentioning and those are my strengths.”

On his track & field background and how that translates to football:

“Explosiveness. To be able to throw a 12-pound or a 16-pound shot put 70 feet takes enormous strength, explosiveness and speed. A lot of people think that it is pure strength, but a lot of it has to do with your hips and being able to drive from your legs, and being able to explode through your hips and through the front of the ring. Another component is just athleticism — I do a spin technique, so I rotate. To be able to rotate, at my size, and be do it really fast and explosive, takes quite a bit of athleticism. Those two things right there, as well as balance, those things really complement my game. In terms of body control and how to position the body for success, being able to out-leverage guys, from a body standpoint.”

On cooking and his favorite dishes to prepare:

“Honestly, cooking would be most of the stuff that I do on the smoker. I do a ton of stuff on the smoker, like bacon-wrapped pork tenderloin or ribs or duck — things like that are what I like to smoke. I definitely specialize in baking more, though; stuff like cinnamon rolls, croissants, tiramisu, cheesecake, things like that.”

On the Thanksgiving Dinner that he prepared for his UCLA teammates last season and the potential of repeating that this year for his Chargers teammates:

“For sure. That was something that I liked doing. If we can get that done, it’d be great to cook for some guys on the team, or at least the position group. I always like being able to serve guys and help guys try stuff out.”

On what he prepared last year for his UCLA teammates on Thanksgiving:

“No turkey, mostly because no one eats the turkey. Since it wasn’t a traditional Thanksgiving, I didn’t see the point — sometimes, turkey is just one of those things, kind of like an ornament that you just put out for the looks and for the pictures, so I wanted to go with stuff that people were going to eat, like ham and things like that. I went with ham, bacon-wrapped pork tenderloin and ribs for the meats, and some smoked duck.”

On how UCLA’s defense becoming ‘more aggressive up front’ last season elevated his ‘draft stock’:

“I think it’s done an enormous amount. Just being able to attack more and go vertical, being able to play a little bit more gap-and-a-half in our defense has been instrumental in our defense. Especially with some of the stuff that we did from a blitz standpoint, it got me a lot more one-on-one blocks. It’s been one of those things, that transition was extremely helpful, especially from where our defense was the first two years that I was there. We transitioned from a little bit more of a four-down [front] — maybe not as much of a true four-down, but way more of a four-down than we have been in the past. It’s been one of those things that has really helped me — and really helped a lot of guys — succeed, especially with being able to attack and penetrate.”

On contributing to this year’s UCLA draft class:

“It’s been great. Just where we’ve come from and being able to kind of come out on top like this at the end, especially for some of those guys that I started with like [Broncos TE] Greg [Dulcich] and [Packers OL] Sean [Rhyan] that came in a year after me, just all of the work we put in to get here and, hopefully, we’ll see more Bruins go here in the next couple of minutes. It’s one of those things where the truth to your labor is really there in front of you and it’s great to see that, especially last night when I saw Greg and Sean. I was so happy for those guys because I know all of the work that they put in. I know the time and effort that they put in. I know how bad they want it and how much they love football, so it was great to see. It’s been something that has been really special to me and my heart.”

On why he chose to attend UCLA:

“The biggest thing for me was that it was kind of the best situation. It allowed me to get a top-tier education at the No. 1 public school in the country, while also playing big-time football. I didn’t want to sacrifice the level of football in seeking the best education I could and then the school also gave me the best chance. [UCLA Head Coach] Chip Kelly and his staff gave me the best option and availability to be able to do track and field while I was there to be able to be a dual-sport athlete, so there wasn’t anything better that was giving me all of those options all at once. I knew it would be the spot. I know a lot of people kind of were getting at me for leaving Texas because guys rarely ever leave Texas, but it was something I had to do.”

On how his parents feel about him staying in Los Angeles:

“They’re OK with it. I mean, of course, my mom, especially, wants me to stay in-state because I’ve been away for so long, but I think they’re happy that I’m going somewhere familiar for the most part, and it’s not too far away from where I played — I think it was about 30 or 40 minutes when I went down there a couple of weeks ago. They’re ecstatic. I think they would’ve been ecstatic wherever I went. I think it’s even sweeter that it’s somewhere I’m more familiar with and somewhere I felt like I wanted to go and somewhere I knew I was going to go.”

On if he knows anyone currently on the Chargers’ roster:

“Personally, [RB] Josh Kelley.”

On how often he connects with Kelley:

“I just talked to him right before Senior Bowl. I got to connect with him about the process going into it. He’s been a great help and whenever he comes by the facility, we always kind of chop it up. He’s one of those guys, as you guys probably know by now, he has such a high character. He’s been instrumental in this process for me because he’s been one of those guys who has been there and done that and, of course, to go to the same team that he’s on, there’s nothing better than that. But, yeah, we stay in communication. I ask him about stuff every now and then, but that the most recent time I talked to him in-person, just because it’s been a little bit of a rollercoaster in terms of travel and whatnot, was probably right around the Super Bowl.”

On if he's ever been in SoFi Stadium:

"Actually, I don't think I have. I haven't been inside. I've been to SoFi, but not inside."

On what he was doing at SoFi Stadium:

"I think I just drove by. I parked and was just kind of looking at it right when they finished [building it]."

On SoFi Stadium being his new home stadium:

"It's one of the best stadiums out right now, especially with how modern and new it is, so I'm excited to be able to play there."

Chargers Offensive Lineman Jamaree Salyer Introductory Media Availability Saturday, April 30, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On being selected by the Chargers:

“I feel great. I want to start off by saying that I’m blessed — I’ve been waiting on this call for two days, so I’m blessed. I’m excited to get out to L.A. and meet my new teammates, meet the staff. I’m just excited for it to start.”

On playing all five positions along the offensive front while at Georgia:

“I think it did wonders for me. As a young freshman coming in the door, I didn’t exactly understand why [Georgia Head] Coach [Kirby] Smart wanted me to do those things, but for me, now just looking back on it. I think that it really made my process what it was. I’m really glad that I did do it and glad that it gave me the versatility to be able to do so.”

On mentorship that he experienced from former teammates throughout the draft process:

“I talked to [Giants T] Andrew [Thomas] a lot. Andrew’s here, actually. I’m glad that he’s here and was able to make it. I talk to those guys a lot, just asking them questions and being a sponge, trying to take it all in. One of my roommates was [Giants LB] Azeez Ojulari, so I’m trying to use those guys as a reference. I’m blessed to be able to have seen them go through that process. They are dear, close friends of mine. Even today, they’ve been telling me to relax and that it’s going to happen, one way or another. They’ve definitely helped me out.”

On if NFL teams ‘viewed’ him as a guard and where the Chargers plan on playing him:

“I honestly didn’t really talk to the Chargers a whole lot in this process. I know that a lot of teams, just meeting with a lot of different teams, they kind of told me interior and right tackle. That’s what I got from most of the teams that I met with. I didn’t get a lot of left tackle, and that’s where I played mostly in college — I played a lot of right tackle, as well. I mostly got interior and right tackle. I don’t know what the Chargers have planned for me, but I’m excited to find out.”

On playing right tackle at Georgia:

“I played right tackle my entire sophomore year and the back half of my freshman year.”

On getting reps at center at the Senior Bowl:

“I practiced at center every day in practice. Against the top defensive linemen that came out this year, I practiced against them every day in kind of an emergency role, just in case. I played center in a game once — it was against Missouri my freshman or sophomore year, I don’t remember exactly, there’s kind of a lot going on. I played center a good amount and I’m very comfortable there.”

On working through the waiting process over the past couple of days:

“It was definitely a relief. I was outside, honestly, just preparing and accepting the fact that I could go undrafted. I was kind of getting to that point of saying, ‘Hey, this might be a reality.’ I can honestly say that on Wednesday night, when I was imagining the way that this draft would go, I didn’t think that I would even get to this point. Now that I’m here, I’m glad that I got the call. I’m glad that the Chargers called me. When I say the L.A. Chargers come on my phone, I was like, ‘Guys, we’re cooking with something.’ It’s one of those things where you’re just sitting around and you’ll get a call from, like, your Grandma, and you’ll be like, ‘Thanks, Grandma, but keep the line clear.’ It will be a cousin and you’ll be like, ‘Keep the line clear, I’m expecting a specific call. I don’t know from who, but not from you, respectively.’ It’s definitely a fun, but anxiety-filled, experience.”

On if it is a ‘fairly easy transition’ to switch from playing on one side of the line to the other:

“I definitely feel pretty comfortable doing that. I did that on, pretty much, a day-to-day basis in practice. There would be days when guys would get injured and I was always the swing man. I started at left tackle, that’s what I played, but if we had a right guard go down, like in the National Championship Game, I would practice the rest of the day at right guard, just until he came back healthy. If we had a guy go down at left guard, same thing. We had a backup center, so I didn’t have to do that as much in that situation. Left guard, right guard, right tackle — that was kind of my thing, I was kind of the swing man in those positions. I feel pretty comfortable because I did it pretty much on a day-to-day basis in practice against really great players, so I feel really comfortable doing that.”

Chargers General Manager Tom Telesco Day 3 Draft Availability Saturday, April 30, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On the selection of RB Isaiah Spiller:

“Big back. Well-rounded. A lot of production in the SEC. A lot of big, explosive runs. 20 years old, so he has a lot of good football ahead of him. Wanted to add another running back to that room to kind of compete for some work with [RB] Austin [Ekeler]. It was a good pick for us.”

On Spiller’s ability to pass-protect:

“Every single college back needs work on pass protection, but he has the size and the physicality to do it. He has good hands out of the backfield. He’s a very well-rounded back. He’s over six-foot, 218, 219 pounds, but still a really good athlete. Against really high-caliber competition, really produced well and had a lot of big, long, explosive runs.”

On the selection of DL Otito Ogbornia:

“Big, strong defensive tackle. He was a two-sport college athlete for at least two or three years at UCLA. He was a shot-putter there, which is always interesting for that event because the lower-body explosion, upper-body explosion, and he plays defensive tackle. Really excellent size — strong, leverage. Great kid. Had a chance to spend a lot of time with him here at the local day, so that’s always helpful.”

On if a prospect that has experience throwing the shot put or discus is a benefit:

“I love that. I love wrestling backgrounds for offensive linemen. The longer that we’ve gone on, less and less kids are playing multiple sports in high school. But, obviously, he was so good at it that he could do it in the Pac-12, just like how [S] JT Woods was running track at Baylor. That’s pretty interesting stuff right there.”

On the selection of OL Jamaree Salyer:

“He’s an interior, more than likely, just based on his dimensions and how he plays. Played tackle in the SEC and really produced pretty well. Big and strong. Was a big recruit out of high school. The fact that he has played five spots is obviously a good feather in his cap, including some center. We’ll see where it goes, but that was good, as well.”

On if he was surprised that Salyer was not selected prior tot he sixth round:

“There are 32 teams in this league. The draft kind of tells you what you are sometimes. For guys like him, and some other guys, don’t really worry about when you were drafted, just where did you go and is it a good opportunity to go make the team somewhere? He has a great make-up, great attitude to come in and try and win a job.”

On the selection of CB Ja’Sir Taylor:

“Taylor was a two-time captain at Wake Forest — a really good program, [Wake Forest Head Coach] Dave Clawson does a great job there. Really quick, athletic. Can probably play a little inside and outside. We want to keep adding some guys with some really good cover skills to kind of fit what we do, so that’s why we went with Ja’Sir.”

On if Taylor will play inside or outside:

“He’s done both, so there’s no sense to put a guy in a box before they even get here.”

On the selection of FB Zander Horvath:

“Obviously, a college running back. We’re projecting him at fullback, which is what you have to do with probably 90 percent of the fullbacks coming out of college. Really good size. Tough, rugged, but a good athlete because part of that job is that you have to be on special teams. Come in and compete for a job. Almost everybody at that position, whether you’re making a linebacker turn into a fullback or a running back turning into a fullback, or even some shorter tight ends, we are going to have to project them back there. He has a good make-up for it. That was a fun pick in the seventh round.”

On if Horvath did any lead blocking in college:

“Not a lot. He was basically [former NFL FB] Mike Alstott there.”

On the selection of DB Deane Leonard:

“Another guy with cover skills. You’ve probably heard that a lot the last couple of days. A little taller and longer — six-foot with long arms. Probably play inside and outside. He played Canadian college football for three years, then two years at Mississippi. Ran fast, is quick. He has some cover ability. There will be some good competition in that backfield.”

On if there were any position groups that he wanted to address but were unable to:

“Yeah, a couple. The draft is funny because we’re drafting players more so than just positions. You can’t just go in and say, ‘Hey, look, I want this position, I want that position,’ because it doesn’t work like that. When you’re looking at filling immediate needs, that has to be done either through free agency, trades or developing your own players that you have on your current roster, which are typically players that you’ve drafted the last couple of years. Obviously, your first-round pick, that guy is probably going to fill a need right away. Second round, it’d be nice to have a bigger role, but everybody after that, these are just guys that we hope they can come in, earn a role, play some special teams and then develop into players down the road. These guys aren’t coming into starting roles or really big roles unless they really can earn it in training camp. When we’re drafting, it just has to be the best player there. There are always some drafts that come out of and that you wish some things would have broken differently. This is the second year in a row in the fourth round that we had some guys go off that were tough ones, but you can’t get everybody, it is what it is. That’s kind of the way that it broke down.”

On if he can dispel which position groups that the team was targeting that did not get addressed:

“No [laughter]. We drafted [OLB] Khalil Mack in the second round. That’s not bad, right? We have [OLB] Joey Bosa. We drafted [OLB] Chris Rumph [II] last year. We have a great sack guy from the CFL [OLB Jamal Davis II]. But, I like the mentality, though — just keep adding depth, I like it.”

On if he feels accomplished with the draft culminating:

“It never goes perfect because you can’t control everything, but it was a good weekend of work. This was the biggest pool of players to scout since I’ve been in the league, and I think that a lot of it is because of the pandemic. Our scouting staff, I mean, an incredible amount of work. Our school lists this year were so much bigger than they’ve ever been. [Director of College Scouting] Kevin Kelly and [Director of Pro Personnel] JoJo Wooden kind of managing that thing, and our two guys in-house — [Scouting Assistant] Ethan Brodsky and [Football Operations Intern] Jaylen Bannerman-Oden — and then our scouts on the road, there is a lot of work, more work than the usual draft. Again, everything was detailed, organized, and then you had the coaches work into it. Everything went really well. It’s not perfect, it just can’t be. In the fourth round, some guys went off. Then, we ended up trading those two seventh-round picks for a pick next year, so that worked out pretty well.”

On receiving the 2023 sixth-round pick that was initially dealt to Chicago in the Khalil Mack trade:

“I got my pick back [laughter]. To have that many picks in the seventh round, and we had 10 total picks going in, so just thought that it would be good if we could flip those two for a future pick next year because we were already down one for next year. The fact that it was actually our pick is kind of ironic, I guess.”

On if he told Bears General Manager Ryan Poles that he 'wants his pick back':

"I didn't realize that it was our [2023] sixth [-round selection] until after we had already talked to them. Very ironic."

On the possibility of OL Jamaree Slayer working at right tackle:

"I think he can be a pretty good guard. We're not going to put people in boxes before they even walk on campus here, but the fact that he's played at all five spots is one of the reasons why we drafted him."

Chargers Head Coach Brandon Staley Day 3 Draft Availability Saturday, April 30, 2022 ⚡ Hoag Performance Center ⚡ Costa Mesa, Calif.

On the selection of RB Isaiah Spiller:

“We did a lot of work on the backs in this class and we felt like Isaiah is a really good fit for what we were looking for in a back in this draft. He’s a very complete runner. I think that playing in [Texas A&M Head Coach] Jimbo Fisher’s offense, that offense really requires a lot of you. It’s a very easy transition, I think, to the pro game because it’s very much a pro-style offense. He has really good size for the position. He’s a six-footer, almost 220 [pounds]. He’s started since his freshman year in the No. 1 league in the country [Southeastern Conference]. He’s a three-time All-SEC player. I think that he can really see the game. I think that he has really good instincts. You can take a look at the data of making people miss — forced missed tackles, which we take a real close look at. Just felt like he was a really productive player coming from an elite program. You’re really seeing him have to navigate some NFL-type runs against NFL-type fronts, being in the SEC West. We’re really excited to add him to the group. I think that it’s going to create great competition in that room. I was really excited to be able to pick him.”

On Spiller’s ability in the passing game:

“In Jimbo’s offense, not only the protection side of it — he’s an excellent pass protector. Mentally, he was responsible for a lot there. He was a three-down back. I think that’s what Jimbo would tell you. He never left the field. Then, from a pass-catching standpoint, there was a lot of production in the passing game. From the workouts, you got to see him run a lot of different types of routes that you would see him run in the NFL. A very smooth, natural pass-catcher. Soft hands. I think this is a complete back. We’re excited to add him to this group and allow him to compete.”

On DL Otito Ogbornia:

“He was a really exciting evaluation. Just from a pure size standpoint, that’s really what we’re looking for. He’s six-foot-four, 325 [pounds]. Has 10-inch hands, 34.5-inch arms. He’s a real power player at the point of attack. We did a lot of work on this guy. He had an outstanding Senior Bowl. I think that if you take a look at his Senior Bowl, there were a lot of really competitive reps versus [G] Zion [Johnson] and [Patriots OL] Cole Strange, and a bunch of good players at that all-star game. I thought that he had an outstanding all-star game. Then, just from his game tape, I think that for a big man, you can really see this guy run and chase the football. If you go take a look at the LSU game, the Oregon game, stuff that’s on the perimeter, for a guy his size, what stood out to us is that he’s a guy that can really chase the football, too. Then, at the [local] pro day, [Run Game Coordinator/Defensive Line] Jay Rodgers and [Defensive Assistant] Johnny Timu worked him out and put him through our type of workout. He really aced that part of the process. I think that was a really big factor in us really solidifying our feeling for him, just seeing him live at our local pro day, where we were able to spend some time with him. Just excited about where he can go with his game because he’s at the beginning, but he’s what we’re looking for inside. We’re excited to get him in that room with [DL] Sebastian [Joseph-Day] and [DL] Austin [Johnson], two guys that have really established themselves in this league. A guy he can really learn from is [DL] Christian Covington, is a pro’s pro. Get him in there with [DL] Jerry [Tillery] and create some competition. I think that was a really good pick for us.”

On his level of comfort with the interior defensive line:

“I think that we look at lot closer to what I expect to look like. We’re not there yet, but we’re a lot closer. I think that the additions in free agency were really big because those two guys are outstanding interior NFL players with real experience. Then, you add in the fact that Christian [Covington] and Jerry [Tillery] have both played in our defense. Then, you have young guys — [DL] Breiden Fehoko, [DL Joe] Graziano, [DL] Andrew Brown coming back, those guys all played for us last year and they’ve come back a lot bigger, stronger. They know how we expect to play now. Otito [Ogbonnia], from a stylistic standpoint, he probably wasn’t a fit for everybody in the draft, but he was a really good fit for us. We did a lot of quality research on him and I think that he’s going to fit right in. It’s always a difficult transition inside in the NFL, no matter what side of the ball that you’re on, but we’re excited to get him in here and see what he can do.”

On the selection of OL Jamaree Salyer:

“Super excited about this guy. We held this guy in really high regard. He was at the University of Georgia, a National Champion. Beyond that, where he played for them, he started for two years at tackle and inside. You were able to see him against the best in the country. The way he played against Michigan [in the College Football Playoff], against those two rushers that were both first-round-caliber rushers — certainly, [Lions DE Aidan] Hutchinson, the second pick in the draft, and [Ravens DE David] Ojabo, he would have been a top-20 pick, or something like that. You were able to see him operate. Just in that league alone, I think that it was a really pure evaluation. He has size. He has real toughness. Heavy hands. He’s really smart. I have a great relationship with [Georgia Head Coach] Kirby Smart and that group of coaches — so much respect for them — and that’s what we’re looking for, we’re looking to join up with guys that have been champions in really, really tough environments. He’s blocked like 10 first-rounders his whole career, so every day in practice, you’re able to get a full measure of where you stand. I think that it was an outstanding pick for us. Great value. He just adds to the depth of our front. I’m really excited about how our O-line looks right now.”

On the potential of Salyer playing right tackle:

“Probably not to start out with, but just the fact that he has played there, I think that is a winning edge. He also snapped at the Senior Bowl, and I think that is a characteristic of a lot of the guys that we have taken. We’ve been able to see that flex. You know how it goes in the season, you normally keep eight [offensive linemen] on gameday and you need that flexibility. We’ve seen him block a lot of good players in a lot of different positions. That was a big part of the evaluation for us. We’re excited about him.”

On the selections of CB Ja’Sir Taylor and DB Deane Leonard:

“Ja’Sir Taylor was a guy that, from a defensive perspective and a kicking game perspective, we just felt like we really knew the guy. I think [Area Scout] James McPherson, our area scout who is a former Demon Deacon quarterback, we were able to get some inside knowledge on him. He was here on a 30 visit. He also had a private workout. Just felt like we knew a lot about him. He’s a two-time captain there. He also was a kickoff returner. He had a kickoff returned for a touchdown this year versus Old Dominion. I just think that you’re getting a DB with good dimensions. He’s five-foot-11, 190 [pounds]. 4.4 [40-yard dash]. 37-inch vertical [jump]. Ball skills. He’s played inside and outside for Wake [Forest]. Just feel like he’s a DB, a guy that we’d like to join up with. We’ll see where it goes. [Special Teams Coordinator] Ryan Ficken and [Assistant Special Teams Coach] Chris Gould, also, did a lot of work on him from a special teams standpoint as a returner in the core unit. I think that he will give us some good depth there. Then, we were able to get Deane Leonard from Ole Miss at the end there. We did a lot of work on the end of this draft because we had so many picks in the last two rounds. We did a ton of work. In the secondary, there were guys that you can find there late if you do the work. [Defensive Coordinator] Renaldo Hill, [Secondary Coach] Derrick Ansley, [Assistant Secondary Coach] Tommy Donatell, our scouts, we just did a ton of work on the back end of the draft. Deane had a lot of good things to join up with. He started out in Canada at [the University of] Calgary and played really, really well there, and then transferred to Ole Miss. You’re getting to see him against the best in the country each and every week. He’s six-foot, 190 [pounds]. Ran a really low 4.4 [40-yard dash]. He’s smooth in transition. He did play some inside. Really good in run support. Probably similar to [DB] Mark Webb [Jr.] last year, just has a lot of traits that we feel like really translate to the National Football League. We’ll see where it goes.”

On the selection FB Zander Horvath:

“We were able to get him at the end. He’s a really intriguing prospect. He’s a guy that has a lot of versatility; running the football, catching the football, blocking, special teams, he has a pro body and we’re just going to figure it out. I think starting him out at fullback and giving us a real look in a two-back role, but then, as a core special teams guy, just in that mold. This guy did a lot for Purdue. You were able to see him in a lot of different roles for those guys. [Purdue Head Coach] Jeff Brohm does a great job coaching on offense. You were also able to see this guy in the kicking game and he worked out really well. So, just excited to see where it goes with him, but really a quality player.”

On if there are any position groups he’d like to still address:

“We have some guys working right now in the undrafted free agent role with the rookie class. I think what we’re trying to do with the positions that you feel like can help your team out, just trying to onboard some guys that you feel like can compete and possibly earn a roster spot. I think we’re selectively kind of going through that right now. Like I said, we did so much work on the back half of the draft, I think we’re going to probably be able to join up with some good players. Last year, we had several undrafted guys end up making it for us and being a part of our team, whether it was the active roster, practice squad. I’m excited to see how this shakes out. It’s still going on right now. Then, after the draft, there’s still a veteran market right now. A lot of the veteran guys were kind of staying patient, waiting until after the draft to see how these rosters take shape, so now there will be another wave here in the springtime of veteran free agency. We’ll see where that goes, too.”

On the depth at the EDGE/outside linebacker:

“We went into the draft and if that was a part of the equation, then we would’ve selected a rusher, it just didn’t quite work out that way. So, to kind of fill out the depth of that position, we’re going to have to look elsewhere. The second phase, whether it’s the undrafted free agency right now or veteran free agency or before the first game — sometime during training camp — that’ll probably happen at one of those three junctures.”

On the wide receiver group:

“We really like our receiving corps. I know I sure do. I think that we have one of the top receiving corps in the NFL. Going into the draft, we stacked that position heavily. We definitely did all of the work on it, but we were definitely going to take the best player approaching this draft and it just didn’t work out that way. I think the flexibility that we have with the group that we have when you have guys like [WR] Keenan [Allen] and [WR] Mike [Williams] leading the way, two of the premium receivers in the league and then, last year, I think we saw how special [WR] Josh Palmer can be and [WR] Jalen Guyton has been a quality player here for two years now and he’s getting better coming back, we were able to onboard [WR] DeAndre Carter, who’s played receiver in this league, on top of being a returner. He’s actually played receiver at a high level. We’ll see where that goes at that position here in undrafted free agency and then see if we join up with someone later on. In our skill position players — receivers, tight ends, backs — I think we have a pretty complete unit right now.”

On if he heard from any of the current players about the draft class:

“Yeah, I got [S] Derwin James [Jr.]. He played for [Texas A&M Head Coach] Jimbo Fisher at Florida State, so he signed off on Isaiah Spiller in a big way. Derwin had to go play against that offense every single day, so he was saying, ‘You know that if you can play all three downs for Jimbo that you’re a legit guy.’ So, I got something from Derwin that way. The Georgia guys, I was talking to [Georgia Head Coach] Kirby Smart. I spoke at Georgia’s clinic in the springtime and I think that relationship has gone a long way. I was really picking [OL] Jamaree [Salyer] in this draft. I felt like I knew a lot about him, just going to talk with Kirby and then going through this draft process. I think we have a lot of Georgia guys on our team and that’s a good sign because they’re the best team in the country right now. So, the fact that you can get [TE] Tre’ [McKitty] and [DB] Mark [Webb Jr.] in last year’s class, we get Jamaree in this year’s class, I like that because that league is the best league in the country. There’s a reason why more people are drafted in that league than any other — these guys have been through the fire. I was able to talk to the Georgia guys, Mark and Tre’, about Jamaree, too.”

On how the roster has improved:

“Well, I think from the last game we played to now, we’re certainly a much different looking football team. We haven’t gone out there on the field yet, but it’s getting there, for sure. I think [General Manager] Tom Telesco and [Director of Player Personnel] JoJo Wooden, [Director of College Scouting] Kevin Kelly, our scouts deserve so much credit for all the work that we’ve done this offseason from the draft process and then [Owner and Chairman of the Board] Dean and [President of Football Operations] John Spanos leading the way, starting with the trades all the way to free agency to now, it’s been a team effort. I think that today was a culmination of all that hard work. It never ends in the NFL. Today was an ending, tomorrow is a beginning. There’s going to be more work to do onboarding players and there is a lot of time between now and our first game. There’s a long time between now and when we play. So, we’re always going to be trying to find that winning edge. I really like the team that we have in front of us right now and Monday, when we’ll be in meetings, it’s going to be exciting to see that group in person.”

On the depth at cornerback:

“I’m glad that we were able to draft a couple of guys because I feel like those guys really give us quality depth. I think the way we look at corner, we’re bringing back [CB] Asante [Samuel Jr.], TC [CB Tevaughn Campbell], Vato [CB Michael Davis] and then you onboard [CB] J.C. [Jackson], you have a good group coming back. We have Keman Hall coming back, who we have a really high opinion of. You get these two guys in the draft. Then, you have to remember with the way our safety group is, a lot of those guys have slot characteristics. So, you’re picking up almost extra corners with a Mark Webb, with a Derwin James with [S] Nas Adderley with a [S] JT Woods — you’re picking up slot flexibility. Again, I feel really good about where our DB group is at. I’m excited to see those guys compete, kind of build off that group that we had last year. I know that they’re going to play a lot better. Last year, we ended up playing a ton of corners because everybody was going down with injuries, but when our main guys were out there, we were tough to play against, so we’re excited to see that group come back. I liked what we did in the draft, so we’ll see how it goes.”

On if his looks for ball hawks and speed in a defensive back:

“In the secondary, you’re really looking for guys who can play man-to-man. It’s different, whether you’re playing corner or safety, but guys who can play man-to-man, guys who can play the ball in the deep part of the field and guys who are open-field tacklers. Then, we’re looking for that position flexibility if you can get it because that makes you a much more diverse secondary group. I think that the theme with all of these guys that we drafted in the last two years and that we’ve acquired in free agency is they can get the ball because that’s where it is in the NFL. You have to be able to take the ball away and the more guys that you can onboard that have ball skills, you increase your odds. We’re excited to work with this group and, hopefully, we’ll add a couple of guys in undrafted free agency that can help us, too.”
