DENVER BRONCOS QUICK HITS

The Broncos are 4-0 for the eighth time in franchise history and the first time since 2013 when they started 6-0. See Page 6

Denver has won 13 consecutive divisional road games dating to 2011 to represent the longest streak in NFL history. See Page 6

The Broncos have recorded 11 takeaways (6 INT, 5 FUM) while committing just six turnovers (5 INT, 1 FUM) to rank fifth in the NFL with a +5 turnover differential through Week 4. See Page 6

Owner Pat Bowlen, who was elected to the Denver Broncos Ring of Fame in 2015, has experienced more Super Bowl appearances (6) than losing seasons (5) in his 31 years with the team. See Pages 9

During Owner Pat Bowlen's tenure (1984-pres.), the Broncos have totaled the most regular-season wins (305) in the NFL. See Pages 10

Since E.V.P. of Football Ops./GM John Elway was hired in 2011 (and coming off a 4-12 record in 2010), the Broncos have totaled the second-most overall wins (53) in the NFL. See Page 11

Elway has signed or extended the contracts of 14 players who have combined for 20 Pro Bowl selections with the Broncos. See Page 11

In his 31 years in the NFL, including his nine years as a player, Kubiak has been a part of the second-most total wins among active NFL head coaches. See Page 11

Broncos Offensive Coordinator Rick Dennison (12 yrs.), Defensive Coordinator Wade Phillips (24 yrs.) and Special Teams Coordinator Joe DeCamillis (23 yrs.) represent the most experienced trio of coordinators in the league with 59 combined years of coordinator experience. See Page 12

Dennison's 16-year tenure on the Broncos' coaching staff is the third longest in franchise history, and his 27 total years with Denver represent the most in team history for a player/coach. See Page 13

Since Phillips' first stint as the Broncos' defensive coordinator beginning in 1989, every team Phillips has coached for has made the postseason during his first season on staff. See Page 21

Broncos QB Peyton Manning has won nine consecutive games against Oakland to represent his second-longest active winning streak against an NFL team (K.C. - 10 gms.); He owns active win streaks of at least three games against 14 of the 32 NFL teams. See Page 14

Denver WR Demarvius Thomas (33 rec.) and WR Emmanuel Sanders (25 rec.) represent the top pass-catching duo in the NFL, ranking first in the league with 58 combined receptions. See Page 20

The Broncos lead the NFL in several defensive categories, including total defense (275.5 ypg), pass defense (185.3 ypg.), opponent third down percentage (25.0) and sacks (18). See Page 22

Broncos OLB DeMarcus Ware, who was named AFC Defensive Player of the Month for September, leads the NFL with 12 quarterback hits through four games. See Page 23

Denver K Brandon McManus (9-9 FG), who is one of just four NFL players to attempt at least nine field goals without a miss, leads the league with three successful kicks of 50 yards or longer. See Page 24

OWNER PAT BOWLEN

PAT BOWLEN OWNERSHIP PROFILE

Broncos Owner Pat Bowlen, who is in his 32nd year with the team in 2015, has guided the franchise to an unprecedented run of success since purchasing the team in 1984.

Below is a summary of Mr. Bowlen's accomplishments during his 32 years with the Broncos.

- * Ranks as the second-longest tenured current owner in the NFL.
- * First owner in professional football history to win 300 games in his first 30 seasons.
- * Appeared in six Super Bowls (2nd most in history) during three different decades, capturing AFC Championships in 1986, 1987, 1989, 1997, 1998 and 2013.
- * One of five owners in history to win back-to-back Super Bowls (1997-98).
- * Broncos have posted the most regular-season wins (305) and have experienced the fewest losing seasons (5) during Mr. Bowlen's ownership tenure.
- * Denver is the only NFL team to win 90-plus games in each of the last three decades with Mr. Bowlen as the owner.
- * During Mr. Bowlen's ownership, every Broncos regular season and playoff contest has been sold out as part of the club's 46-year, 372-game sellout streak that is the longest in the NFL.
- * The Broncos own the NFL's best home record (183-67 / .732) in the NFL during Mr. Bowlen's ownership (1984-pres.).
- * Denver has led the NFL in attendance during Mr. Bowlen's tenure, drawing nearly 20 million fans to their home games from 1984-2015.
- * The Broncos have dominated the AFC West Division under Mr. Bowlen, posting more division titles (12), conference championship game appearances (8) and Super Bowl appearances (6) than any other club in the division.
- * The Broncos have played in an NFL-high 319 nationally televised games during Mr. Bowlen's ownership, a total that includes a league-best 177 primetime games.
- * Contributed more than $150 million to the construction of Sports Authority Field at Mile High, which opened in 2001, and commissioned $30 million worth of stadium upgrades during the 2013 offseason to improve the fan experience.
- * Mr. Bowlen has served on nine league committees during his ownership of the Broncos, including chair of the Broadcast Committee (2001-06) and co-chair of the Compensation Committee (2007-09) and the Management Council Executive Committee (2007-10).
- * Helped negotiate the NFL's $18 billion television contract in 1998, the most lucrative single-sport contract in history.
- * Played a key role in several extensions of the NFL's Collective Bargaining Agreement.
- * The Broncos have played eight international games in six different countries under Mr. Bowlen's ownership (7 American Bowls, 1 regular season game in London), marking the third-most such games in the league.
- * Mr. Bowlen has maintained a substantial profile in the community during his three decades as the Denver Broncos' owner, including donating more than $25 million to charitable organizations in the last 20 years.
- * Introduced as the majority owner of the Broncos on March 23, 1984; Mr. Bowlen and the Bowlen family acquired 100 percent ownership of the Broncos in July 1985.

COLQUITT A HOUSEHOLD NFL NAME

Denver's Britton Colquitt and Kansas City's Dustin Colquitt are the first brothers to punt in the NFL at the same time since 1941 (George and Wes McAfee).

The Colquitt family has produced four NFL punters, including Britton and Dustin's father, Craig, and uncle, Jimmy. Craig Colquitt won two Super Bowl rings as the Steelers' punter and Jimmy Colquitt played two games for the Seahawks in 1985. All four Colquitts attended the University of Tennessee.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

DECADES OF SUCCESS

The Broncos are in their sixth decade of professional football, looking to build off a body of work that ranks as the most consistent in the NFL in terms of winning over the last three decades.

Denver is one of just four teams to record three 90+ win decades since 1960 and the only organization to do so in each of the last three decades.

Below is a look at the Broncos' record by the decade. In its 50-plus seasons of football, Denver has posted the sixth-most regular-season wins (448 / 448-381-10) in the NFL and advanced to the postseason 20 times.

The Broncos' 361-game scoring streak is the longest active streak in the league. The streak, which began on Monday Night Football with a 16-13 overtime loss at Seattle on Nov. 30, 1992, is the second-longest such streak in NFL history.

In the impressive run, the Broncos have scored on their first possession 142 times. Denver has scored in the first quarter 233 times during the streak and has had it extended by halftime 334 times.

Denver has had to wait until the fourth quarter to extend the streak just five times.

HARRIS JR. AT A GLANCE:

 A fifth-year cornerback who played 67 regular-season games (51 starts) in his five NFL campaigns with Denver, totaling 11 interceptions (212 yds.) and 47 passes defensed during that span.

- Earned his first Pro Bowl selection in 2014 to become just the sixth undrafted cornerback in NFL history to accomplish that feat with his original team.
- Voted by his teammates as the recipient of the 2014 Ed Block Courage Award after coming back from a torn ACL in 2013 to start every game and ranking first in opponent quarterback rating (47.8) when targeted, according to Pro Football Focus.
- Posted his third consecutive season with at least three interceptions in 2014, becoming one of just five NFL players to reach that mark in every year since 2012.
- Recognized as the recipient of the Darrent Williams Good Guy Award in 2013 given annually to the Bronco who best exemplifies Williams' enthusiasm, cooperation and honesty while dealing with members of the press.
- Emerged as a regular starter for the Broncos in 2012, opening the final 12 games of the regular season and allowing the fifth-fewest receiving yards (400) and tying for the eighth-fewest completions allowed (35) in the NFL among players targeted at least 60 times.
- Represented one of just two defensive backs in the league in 2012 to record multiple interceptions (3) and sacks (2.5), while returning two of his picks for touchdowns to tie the franchise single-season record.
- Recorded the longest interception return for a touchdown in Broncos history with his 98-yard pick-six at Baltimore (12/16/12).
- Posted his first career multiple-interception game and his first career touchdown on a 46-yard interception return to seal Denver's win at San Diego (10/15/12).
- Played all 16 regular-season games (4 starts) and two playoff contests (1 start) as a rookie in 2011 after becoming the 13th college free agent since 1997 to make Denver's active roster out of training camp.
- Named to the 2011 NFL All-Rookie Team by the PFW/PFWA and Football Outsiders after ranking first among NFL rookie defensive backs (fourth on the Broncos) with 65 tackles (56 solo) to go along with one interception (15 yds.), six passes defensed and six special-teams stops.
- Played 50 games (41 starts) for the University of Kansas and finished his career ranked third among defensive backs with 290 tackles (197 solo) in addition to four sacks (21 yds.) and three interceptions (11 yds.).
- Saw time at safety and cornerback as a senior captain for the Jayhawks, earning KU Defensive Back of the Year honors.
- Entered the NFL with Denver as a college free agent on July 27, 2011.

CAREER TRANSACTIONS: Signed by Denver as a college free agent 7/27/11.

BORN: Dec. 25, 1987, in Montrose, Ga.

HIGH SCHOOL: West Laurens High School, Montrose, Ga.

Acquired: Draft #1a (22nd overall), 2010

NFL GAMES PLAYED/STARTED: 72/58 • POSTSEASON GP/GS: 7/7

• A sixth-year wide receiver and three-time Pro Bowl selection who has played 72 regular-season games (58 starts) and opened all seven postseason contests for the Broncos during his first five seasons in Denver.

 Ranks first in franchise history with 29 total games with 100-plus receiving yards—a figure that ranks second in the NFL since 2011 when he recorded his first 100-yard receiving output.

- Posted at least 1,400 receiving yards and 10 touchdowns in each of his last three seasons, joining Marvin Harrison (4) and Jerry Rice (3) as the only players in NFL history with three consecutive years producing those totals.
- Named to his third consecutive Pro Bowl in 2014—tying for the most selections by a wide receiver in Broncos history (Rod Smith)—after setting a franchise single-season record with 1,619 receiving yards and ranking second in team annals with 111 catches on the year.
- Set a franchise record in 2014 for most 100-yard receiving games (10), reaching the century mark in seven consecutive contests (Games 4-10) to tie for the second-longest streak in league history.
- Combined with teammate Emmanuel Sanders (101-1,404) to record the most receiving yards (3,023) and tie for the most receptions (212) by an offensive tandem in the NFL in 2014—marking the second time a pair of Broncos teammates posted 100-plus receptions in the same season.
- Established a Broncos single-game receiving yardage record with his 226-yard performance vs. Arizona (10/5/14) to earn AFC Offensive player of the Week recognition.
- Ranked second in the NFL with 14 receiving touchdowns and fourth in the league with 1,430 yards on 92 catches in 2013 to earn his second consecutive Pro Bowl selection and Associated Press second-team All-Pro recognition.
- Combined with teammate Eric Decker to represent the most prolific receiving tandem (2,718 vds.) in the NFL in 2013.
- Selected to his first Pro Bowl following the 2012 season in which he caught 94 passes for 1,434 yards (15.3 avg.) with 10 touchdowns, ranking fourth in the league in receiving yards and posting the second-most 25+yard receptions (18) in the NFL.

(*—the second number is the percentage the quarterback has put his team in position to score, allowing for missed field goals and subtracting those drives ended by the clock and replaced due to injury. Quarterbacks who leave the game during a drive only get a replacement credit if team goes on to earn at least one first down. Blocked punts for safeties counted as drive ended by punt; —does not include plays when not at helm or not truly setting a play in motion, i.e., muffed punts/kneel downs/spiked balls: Manning 4-for-[-4]; Opponents 1-for-[-1]. (3 & outs includes all drives without first downs, minus FGs and clock.)

Denver 19, Baltimore 13

Sunday, Sept. 13, 2015 • 2:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Partly Sunny, 88°, Wind NW 13 mph • TIME: 2:56 • ATTENDANCE: 76,798

Gary Kubiak earned a win in his Broncos head coaching debut as Denver outlasted the Baltimore Ravens 19-13 in a defensive battle at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

Two key defensive interceptions—one returned 51 yards for a touchdown by cornerback Aqib Talib and one by safety Darian Stewart in the end zone with 36 seconds remaining—helped Denver to its ninth-ever win without an offensive touchdown.

The Broncos' defense set the tone of the game from the opening snap, forcing the Ravens to punt on their first drive. The Ravens finished the first half with only 38 yards of offense and had four drives result in punts.

On Denver's first possession of the game, quarterback Peyton Manning led the Broncos 48 yards and converted four key first downs, three of them coming on receptions by wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders. This set up a 57-yard Brandon McManus field goal, the fifth-longest field goal made in Broncos history.

McManus converted a 56-yard field goal on Denver's next drive, becoming only the second player in NFL history with multiple field goals 56 yards or more in a single game.

Baltimore kicker Justin Tucker made a 52-yard field goal with 6:47 in the second quarter to put the Ravens on the board, and McManus added another from 43 yards out in the final seconds of the second quarter to give Denver a 9-3 halftime lead.

Denver received the kickoff to open the second half but turned the ball over on its third play from scrimmage. Ravens cornerback Jimmy Smith picked off Manning at the Denver 24-yard-line and returned the interception for a touchdown, giving the Ravens a 10-9 lead.

Baltimore expanded its lead to four after Tucker converted a 44-yard field goal early in the third quarter.

The Broncos struggled to move the ball in the third quarter, punting three times and gaining only one first down on four drives.

Talib gave Denver a much-needed jump start at the end of the quarter by intercepting Flacco and returning it 51 yards for a touchdown

Denver's defense held Baltimore on its next possession but the Ravens were able to pin the Broncos on their own 4-yard line after a 57-yard punt by Sam Koch.

The Broncos put together a gut-check 17-play, 81-yard drive that took 10:56 off the clock in the final quarter and resulted in McManus' fourth field goal of the game—this one from 33 yards.

The Ravens drove to the Denver 16-yard-line in the final two minutes of the game, but Stewart sealed the win against his former team by wrestling the ball away from tight end Crockett Gillmore in the end zone.

With the win, Denver improved to an AFC-best 36-10-1 all-time in regular-season openers.

Denver 31, Kansas City 24

Thursday, Sept. 17, 2015 • 7:25 p.m. CT • Arrowhead Stadium • Kansas City

WEATHER: Cloudy, 87°, Wind S 13 mph • TIME: 3:23 • ATTENDANCE: 76,404

The Denver Broncos made history with their NFL-record 13th consecutive divisional road win in a 31-24 come-from-behind victory against the AFC West-rival Kansas City Chiefs at Arrowhead Stadium.

With his 256 passing yards and three touchdowns against the Chiefs, Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning joined Brett Favre as the only players in history to reach 70,000 career passing yards. Overcoming a rough start to the game, Manning rallied the Broncos to a game-tying touchdown with less than a minute in regulation before the defense sealed the win with its last of five takeaways.

Kansas City was in control early as its offense drove 70 yards on its first possession. The Broncos were able to keep the Chiefs off the scoreboard when safety David Bruton Jr. stripped running back Jamaal Charles at the 5-yard line and safety Darian Stewart recovered.

The Chiefs finally broke through as Charles capped a 78-yard Chiefs drive with a 34-yard touchdown run that put the home team up 7-0. Rookie cornerback Marcus Peters gave Kansas City a 14-0 advantage when he stepped in front of a Manning pass and returned the interception 55 yards for a touchdown.

The Broncos battled back, scoring twice in a 1:43 span before halftime to even the score at 14-14.

Manning started Denver's scoring by hitting wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders for a 16-yard touchdown pass.

On the Chiefs' next drive, cornerback Aqib Talib recorded his 29th career interception—and his second in as many weeks—to give the Broncos possession at the Chiefs 15-yard line. The Broncos capitalized on the takeaway as Manning connected with tight end Virgil Green in the back of the end zone for a 1-yard touchdown.

Denver held Kansas City to a field goal to open the second half and forced the Chiefs to punt on their next three drives. Broncos kicker Brandon McManus helped Denver keep pace, converting a 54-yard field goal with 3:18 remaining in the third frame.

Midway through the fourth quarter, cornerback Chris Harris Jr. thwarted another red zone scoring attempt by the Chiefs as he intercepted quarterback Alex Smith on the Denver 10-vard-line.

Kansas City forced a Broncos three-and-out following the interception and used the momentum to take a 24-17 lead on an 8-yard touchdown run from Knile Davis with less than three minutes remaining the game.

Wide receiver Demaryius Thomas accounted for three first downs on the ensuing drive and Sanders caught his second touchdown pass of the evening from Manning—a 19-yarder with 0:36 seconds left—to tie the game.

With the game seemingly destined for overtime, Broncos linebacker Brandon Marshall knocked the ball loose from Charles and cornerback Bradley Roby recovered the fumble, returning it 21 yards for the game-winning touchdown.

Denver 24, Detroit 12

Sunday, Sept. 27, 2015 • 8:30 p.m. EST • Ford Field • Detroit

WEATHER: Indoors • TIME: 3:19 • ATTENDANCE: 62,920

The Denver Broncos improved to 3-0 for the 13th time in team history and earned their second consecutive road win by beating the Detroit Lions 24-12 in a Sunday Night Football match up at Ford Field.

The Broncos' reinvigorated offense, which operated exclusively out of the shotgun and pistol formations, helped quarterback Peyton Manning post his 92nd career 300-yard passing game (31-of-42, 324 yds., 2 TD, 1 INT). Denver also benefited from 10 points off three turnovers as the defense limited Detroit to just 4.3 yards per play on the night.

Denver started strong defensively, forcing three punts and a turnover on Detroit's first four possessions. Linebacker DeMarcus Ware was in on two sacks of Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford, who was under pressure throughout the game.

The Broncos seemed poised to score after cornerback Bradley Roby's early interception, but on the first play of the second quarter, Lions defensive tackle Haloti Ngata tipped a Manning pass that safety Glover Quin was able to intercept.

Denver's offense responded after a Lions punt and Manning led the Broncos on a 12-play, 80 yard scoring drive, capped by running back Ronnie Hillman's 1-yard touchdown run.

Detroit followed with a rushing touchdown on their next drive, a 1-yard-run by running back Joique Bell. On the Lions' extra point attempt, cornerback Aqib Talib blocked the kick to preserve Denver's lead.

Up 7-6 with 1:03 remaining in the half, Manning went back to work, finding wide receivers Bennie Fowler and Demaryius Thomas for key first-downs. On fourth-and-1 near midfield, Manning hooked up with Thomas along the right sideline for a 45-yard touchdown to give Denver a 14-6 halftime advantage.

The Broncos opened the second half with a fumble that the Lions capitalized on with a 16-yard touchdown pass from Stafford to running back Ameer Abdullah.

Safety T.J. Ward helped the Broncos stop the Lions' two-point conversion and Denver maintained a 14-12 lead entering the final quarter.

Broncos kicker Brandon McManus converted a 48-yard field goal midway through the fourth to give Denver a five-point advantage. The score was set up by a Detroit fumble that was forced by Shaquil Barrett and recovered by Malik Jackson.

On the Lions' next drive, safety David Bruton jumped a Stafford pass and intercepted it with 3:37 remaining in the game.

The offense responded for Denver as Manning found wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders for a 34-yard reception and capped the drive with an 11-yard touchdown pass to tight end Owen Daniels for the game-sealing touchdown.

Denver 23, Minnesota 20

Sunday, Oct. 4, 2015 • 2:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Cloudy, 60°, Wind NE 9 mph • TIME: 3:00 • ATTENDANCE: 77,029

The Denver Broncos used a late field goal and a last-minute takeaway to stay perfect on the season with a 23-20 win against the Minnesota Vikings at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

The Broncos won their first four games for the eighth time in franchise history and quarterback Peyton Manning recorded his NFL-record seventh career 4-0 start.

Denver found success on the ground, recording its first 100-yard rushing game of the season with 144 total yards and a touchdown. Meanwhile, the Broncos largely contained Minnesota's potent rushing attack that featured All-Pro running back Adrian Peterson.

The Denver defense, which totaled seven sacks from seven different players, pressured Vikings quarterback Teddy Bridgewater early and forced consecutive punts to start the game.

Kicker Brandon McManus gave the Broncos a 3-0 lead by converting a 33-yard field goal on Denver's opening drive. Minnesota attempted to tie the game early in the second quarter, but kicker Blair Walsh's 38-yarder sailed wide left.

On Denver's ensuing possession, running back Ronnie Hillman raced 72 yards for a touchdown—the fourth-longest scoring run in team history—to give the Broncos a 10-0 lead.

Both teams added field goals in the second quarter before a Manning pass at midfield was intercepted by Vikings linebacker Anthony Barr with 32 seconds remaining in the half. Minnesota capitalized on the Denver miscue with a 4-yard touchdown pass from Bridgewater to wide receiver Mike Wallace and narrowed the score to 13-10 at halftime.

Manning orchestrated an 8-play, 80-yard drive to open the second half highlighted by a 43-yard completion to wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders. On fourth-and-goal from the 1-yard line, Manning found tight end Owen Daniels wide open in the end zone to extend the Broncos' lead to 20-10.

The Vikings used a fourth down scoring play of their own to answer early in the fourth quarter. Peterson, who was held to 30 rushing yards through three quarters, scored on a 48-yard run on 4th-and-1 to trim Minnesota's deficit to 20-17.

On Denver's next drive, Manning's pass to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas was intercepted by Minnesota safety Harrison Smith near midfield. The Denver defense was able to keep Minnesota out of the end zone as the Vikings settled for a 33-yard field goal from Walsh to tie the game at 20-20.

The Broncos responded with a field goal drive of their own as McManus converted a 39-yard kick with 1:51 remaining.

With the Vikings driving to win or tie the game, Broncos safety T.J. Ward recorded his second sack of the game, forcing a Bridgewater fumble. Linebacker Von Miller recovered the fumble to seal the Broncos' fourth consecutive win.

Broncos and Gary Kubiak emphasize family, and this hire is for the patriarch

By Paul Klee Colorado Springs Gazette July 21, 2015

The preparation was over, the hype in full buzz. But first things come first, you know.

Here, two days before the Broncos would host the Colts in an AFC playoff game, three of the men at the core of the Broncos operation had one more stop to make. John Elway, Peyton Manning and longtime athletic trainer Steve "Greek" Antonopulos convened at Dove Valley.

Together, they paid a visit to Pat Bowlen, the team owner for three decades.

Mr. B is why this is possible. I suggest Mr. B is why all of this is happening.

Bowlen isn't the only reason why John Elway left a charmed life with 10 a.m. tee times to risk his football legacy as general manager of the Broncos, or the only reason Gary Kubiak returned to Colorado and was introduced as their coach Tuesday.

But after a riveting press conference at Dove Valley, one that felt more like a family reunion than a business exchange, I approached Kubiak with this question: How much of your decision to return to the Broncos was based on winning one for Mr. Bowlen?

Kubiak stopped me before I could even finish, his heartfelt response proof enough.

"I know where you're going," Kubiak said. "It's tremendous motivation for me to come here and work for their family. It would be a dream come true to come here and let them hold that trophy again.

"You're right. He's been a very special man in my life. It means a great deal to me."

On the first day of training camp, the 2014 season began with an emotional press conference in which the Broncos announced Mr. Bowlen would relinquish control of the team. He had, and has, Alzheimer's disease.

The 2015 season, and beyond, began Tuesday with a reunion of the greatest era in Broncos history. Mr. Bowlen would, and does, approve of the Broncos hiring Kubiak.

Retired public relations chief Jim Saccamano confirmed Kubiak is one of Bowlen's favorite people to ever walk the hallways at Dove Valley. Everybody there, it seems, has a soft spot for Kubes.

Kubiak arrived in Denver in the same 1983 NFL draft that brought Elway to the Broncos - Elway with the first pick, Kubiak with the 197th. Kubiak was a rookie quarterback out of Texas A&M. He recalled his first day of working alongside Elway, during a minicamp practice at the Air Force Academy.

"I had to throw next to him for a day. After that day I called home and said, 'I have no chance,'" Kubiak said.

With Elway, the Broncos have always had a chance. Once he learns the difference between a championship roster and one that simply looks like a fantasy team, they will have a chance to win another Super Bowl. Chemistry remains an irreplaceable ingredient.

This front-office arrangement is founded in chemistry. Kubiak and Elway were Broncos quarterbacks together for nine seasons, coach/quarterback for four more. After their second Super Bowl win, in 1999, Mike Shanahan sent a player to convince Elway to return for a run at three straight titles. That player was Kubiak.

Elway's response, according to Kubiak: "We're going to sit here and visit. But I'm not playing anymore."

Elway's pitch to Kubiak, on Sunday in Houston, proved more effective.

It should be slightly concerning the Broncos weren't sure if Kubiak wanted to be a head coach again. But this search was over the minute Elway got that confirmation.

"He was at the top of the list," Elway said. "There's no question."

You hear athletes talk about their locker rooms as family. That's hogwash, mostly. In a game of cutthroat free agency, another cliché is far more apt: It's a business.

But it was clear from the moment Rhonda Kubiak, the coach's wife, hugged Elway like a long-lost brother that the Broncos now are operating with family as their base.

Families are fun. Families usually share inherent trust.

"We did the contract in about five minutes," Kubiak said.

There's also no fight like a family fight. Behind closed doors, those are coming, too.

"John's the most competitive human being I've ever been around - whether you're playing cards or pingpong or whatever," Kubiak said. "I think I'm very competitive, too. But that's probably why we're still standing in this league."

The patriarch of this Broncos family couldn't be in attendance for its reunion Tuesday. His health wouldn't allow it.

I think Elway and Kubiak are driven to win another Super Bowl here because an athlete never loses his competitive drive. I think they loathe watching the Patriots and Seahawks in the Super Bowl because they remember a time when Elway quarterbacked the Broncos to a 31-10 record against those teams.

But I think there is another motivating factor, one that doesn't get publicized because it's not in plain sight. I think they are motivated to win a Super Bowl for the man who made all of this possible, who watched Kubiak's return to Colorado on television.

"Thank you, Pat," Kubiak said into the cameras. "Thank you so much for bringing me home."

As Joe Ellis knows, new year for Peyton Manning brings new questions for Broncos

By Mike Klis Denver Post March 23, 2015

Happy birthday, Peyton Manning.

The Broncos' star quarterback turns 39 on Tuesday. The stinging truth is the birthday brings as much concern as celebration to the Broncos' fan base. Especially when his 38th year, after a promising start, didn't finish so well.

Manning's age is one reason it's fair to wonder which way the Broncos' arrow is pointing. It's not the only reason.

For the first time in the Joe Ellis-John Elway management era, the Broncos lost more headliners (Julius Thomas, Terrance Knighton, Orlando Franklin and Rahim Moore) to free agency than they signed from the market (tight end Owen Daniels is the team's most significant addition).

The Broncos posted 13-3, 13-3 and 12-4 records the past three regular seasons, yet in part because those years did not culminate with the hoisting of the Lombardi Trophy, the team turned over the top end of its coaching staff with John Fox, Jack Del Rio, Adam Gase and Jeff Rodgers exiting and Gary Kubiak, Wade Phillips, Rick Dennison and Joe DeCamillis stepping in.

And has it been mentioned that Manning is 39?

But this is the half-empty approach. Sit across the table from Ellis during a break from the NFL owners meetings Monday at the Arizona Biltmore resort, and the Broncos' president and chief executive officer provides a far more optimistic outlook between sips of his iced tea. And, yes, there were long stretches when the glass was half full.

"We're excited for 2015," Ellis said. "It's true 2014 didn't end the way we wanted to, but we're assembling a team that should be competitive again. We believe we will be competitive again in 2015. We've had a nice run of success since John Elway took over football operations.

"I think there's some anxiety out there that we didn't make a splash in free agency. Two things on that: You don't win a Super Bowl in March. And two, John made some significant investments in players in recent years in free agency."

"Spend to the cap"

Still, any team with Manning on its roster is going to be a team heavily dependent on its guarterback.

And for the first time since coming back from his surgically repaired neck that forced him to miss the entire 2011 season, Manning will enter a new season with questions.

"There's been a lot of speculation regarding how he's going to perform when he comes back," Ellis said. "I think a lot of that speculation is questioning his ability and doubting his ability. And I can only imagine how hard he is champing at the bit to prove everybody wrong."

Manning will play while living on a tighter budget; the Broncos slashed his 2015 pay from $19 million to $15 million. Some American families have tighter budgets than others.

But the Broncos had to get their books in order this year after they spent heavily in free agency the previous three seasons. And within the next 12 months, the team hopes to sign the likes of Demaryius Thomas, Von Miller and Malik Jackson to contract extensions.

And so asking Manning for financial relief was deemed necessary.

"It's sticking to a discipline," Ellis said. "You step outside the discipline, it comes back to bite you. And John's not going to do that. He's a smart businessman as well as a good football person."

By discipline, Ellis means maintaining a budget that spends one dollar of cash for every dollar of the Broncos' $150 million salary cap payroll in 2015.

"We'll spend to the cap," Ellis said. "We've spent a lot of money. We've always done that. We better do that. Because if you're not doing everything you can to win, why would anybody support you? Why would people purchase their tickets?'

"Sometimes I think it's easy to forget you can't spend like that every year because you end up mortgaging your future. The system doesn't allow for that to happen."

The Broncos' ownership structure is unusual, if not unprecedented, because Alzheimer's disease caused owner Pat Bowlen to place the team in a trust last July. The trust states Bowlen's desire is to have one of his seven children run the club when one proves to have earned the position.

Bowlen "a battler" The trust is controlled by Ellis, Broncos general counsel Rich Slivka and Denver attorney Mary Kelly. The New Orleans Saints are going through an embarrassing family feud with owner Tom Benson's revised secession plan. Could the Broncos be similarly vulnerable?

"Pat Bowlen put in a plan over a decade ago to deal with the secession planning for his team in the event of death or incapacity," Ellis said. "We're executing that plan, we're keeping the family informed and any further details on that are private to the family and out of respect to Mr. B and his wife and his children."

Bowlen's absence from these annual meetings remains palpable; for years he was one of the NFL's most influential owners, serving as a longtime co-chairman of the broadcast and labor committees.

So how is Bowlen doing?

"He's a battler," Ellis said. "He's doing the best he can with a disease that's just unfair. It's tough on him, it's tough on Annabel, it's tough on his seven children. But he's fighting it as best he can."

The Bronco Blueprint

By Peter King MMQB.com September 30, 2015

Sometimes things happen pretty fast in the NFL, and you don't really notice them until you look up one day and say, "My gosh, Denver can play some defense."

Then you start looking into it, and you say, "My gosh, John Elway's a pretty good architect."

Think of times in football history when a great player transitioned to the front office. How many have really worked out? Ozzie Newsome in Baltimore, to be sure. Hall of Fame safety Larry Wilson ran the Cardinals for 17 years, but never built a champion, or even a playoff team. Most great players find other things to do with their lives, things that require less than 24/7 dedication. Elway did that for a while, selling cars and running a restaurant and an arena football team.

But this is his fifth year managing the Broncos, and his fingerprints are all over the roster. Everyone thinks of Elway's role in luring Peyton Manning to Denver, convincing him to restart his career in Denver in 2012. That's been the biggest reason why Denver is 41-10 in the regular season since opening day 2012. But the defense, which surprisingly has more of Elway's imprimatur than the Denver offense, is no longer just along for the ride. It's driving the bus.

First things first: Why do this, at the time in Elway's life when a football obsession wouldn't be the priority for a fifty-something man?

"What I found out about myself," Elway said from his office Tuesday, "is I enjoy having a scoreboard on the weekend."

He went on. "Nothing will replace playing. But football is what I know best. To be able to get into it and run a team and have the opportunity to use all the assets I've learned, to put them all together, to be the architect, is a great challenge. I tell these guys here all the time what a gratifying feeling it was to work to build a championship team. I felt that as a player. I want to give these guys a chance to feel that.

I want to give them the best opportunity to win one of those."

I'd have thought Elway would be focused more on offense than defense, being a Hall of Fame quarterback. Not that he's neglected the area around Manning, but three points to be made about Elway's defensive obsession:

- Denver is ranked 30th in the league on offense and first on defense through three weeks.
- In the five Denver drafts Elway has run, he's chosen a defensive player first.
- Of the 20 defensive players with the most snaps in 2015 for Denver, Elway was responsible for bringing 19 into the fold in the past five years. The only player to precede Elway: reserve safety and special-teamer David Bruton.

"I guess, looking back to where I've come from, it might surprise you, but I have a defensive base," Elway said. "My first 10 years in the league with [coach] Dan Reeves, we were very good on defense, first with Joe Collier as defensive coordinator, and then with Wade Phillips. I guess my philosophy came watching how we were set up defense first when I played. Run the ball next, then the passing game complemented that. I wanted to be good on defense, and then I wanted to be as talented as I could be on offense. The way I saw it, if you're good on defense, you always have a chance."

For Denver, if you're deep on defense, you've always got a chance. His first draft pick was Von Miller in 2011. He got a stereo rush guy, DeMarcus Ware, in free agency in 2014, and filled in with draft picks (Sylvester Williams, Malik Jackson, Shane Ray) and undrafted free agents (Shaquil Barrett) and street free agents (Brandon Marshall, Antonio Smith). But the strength, I think, is the secondary. Elway has imported three prime corners in three different ways—through the draft (slot corner Bradley Roby), in undrafted free agency (Chris Harris) and unrestricted free agent Aqib Talib. Who has three premier corners today? The safety group is just as diverse.

"One of the things that really helps us," Bruton said, "is we've got a lot of bright guys who are really students of the game."

One is Bruton, who speaks to former Eagle and Bronco Brian Dawkins often about little edges to the position. "I study ballcarriers," Bruton said, "and I get a lot of help from Dawk. How ballcarriers carry the ball, how we should attack it. He's big on ripping it out, and he seems to know something about a lot of guys still playing even though he's retired. I think it helps us that because so many of the guys study the game so well we have a good idea where it's going. We've got ball-hawking guys everywhere."

Elway has figured out the equation to succeed today on defense. He could have built a great secondary, but it won't look so great if he hasn't built a front that gets significant pressure. "You need the pressure," said Elway, "but if you don't have three good corners it's not going to work. You're playing 50, 60 percent three corners now, so you need to have depth there now, more than when I played."

It's strange to think of Denver this way, with Manning playing almost a subservient role. But it's the defense that's played the biggest role so far, and the defense that will have to be huge if the Broncos are going to unseat the Patriots atop the AFC. The Broncos have moderately good offenses—Minnesota, Oakland and Cleveland—on the horizon in October. But November will be tougher: Aaron Rodgers and the Packers on Nov. 1, a date at Indianapolis the next Sunday, and a Thanksgiving weekend match with the Patriots that could be New England's biggest challenge all season. It's in Denver. If the Broncos are healthy, it'll be interesting to see how New England blocks Miller and Ware—and how Brady attacks the diverse secondary.

Come Nov. 29, the world will be hyping Brady versus Manning, perhaps for the last time. But Elway knows it's more Brady versus Talib/Harris/Roby. That's what the architect of the Broncos has done to a storied rivalry, and you won't hear Manning complaining about it. For once, Manning knows he doesn't have to score in the thirties every week to have a good chance to win big games.

Now, onto your email:

ON QUARTERBACK SENIORITY

I don't know what Ed Hochuli said to Cam Newton but from watching football on Sunday, there is definitely different levels of contact allowed on QBs based on their standing in the league. If you watch young mobile QBs (Colin Kaepernick, Cam Newton, etc) when they scramble and slide feet first, they always get a little shoulder to the chest from a defender. It doesn't get called, which is fine. However, if this is Tom Brady or Aaron Rodgers or Peyton Manning or other traditional veteran QBs, it is always a penalty if they are touched after a slide. Hochuli might not have said it but I think refs definitely make players earn that extra protection.

-Bryan, San Diego

Two seasons ago, in a story I did about a week in the life of an officiating crew, I watched Gene Steratore get graded negatively for a borderline hit on a no-name quarterback, Case Keenum. The men who grade the officials' performance are not looking at flags on QB hits and saying, "If this is Tom Brady, I have to be sure that we protect him." You believe that Brady and Manning are protected more zealously than mobile quarterbacks, and you are certainly entitled to your opinion. I'm just not convinced at all that guys like Manning get breaks and guys like Newton do not.

EQUAL BYE WEEK

I know that you will be hard pressed to find anyone outside of New England or Tennessee feeling sorry for Patriots and Titans having to take a bye in Week 4, but why is this still happening in today's game? The timing of a team's bye week has an advantage/disadvantage to teams. To those taking a bye this early, they now need to play 13 consecutive weeks while others only have to do so for stretches of 8-10.

How about this solution:

NFC teams have their bye in Week 8 while the AFC teams have theirs in Week 9. You schedule division games during these weeks to help provide games that non-fans would want to watch and you can even brand it as NFC Week and AFC Week. You would provide each conference with a level playing field with its direct competitors. Why has this never been done?

—David P., Richland, Wash.

That certainly makes a lot of sense. The problem is byes are put into place not for football reasons, but for television reasons. You can't have a week in the middle of the season where you take away eight of 16 games and you can't have a week where you take away, for instance, all of the Fox games with the NFC games and then another week where you take away all the CBS games with the AFC games. In a perfect world, you would do something that would be very equal like that. But that would simply take away too much inventory on a Sunday for the NFL to ever consider it.

ON DAILY FANTASY HYPOCRISY

Can you please explain to me the NFL's sudden decision to embrace the online fantasy football sites FanDuel and DraftKings? For a league that is so openly opposed to gambling, isn't this an obvious contradiction? These sites are nothing more than organized gambling rings. It seems as though this is just a blatant cash grab by the NFL. Why isn't there more of a reaction?

— John, Erie, Pa.

The MMQB is in the process of working on a story on these fantasy sites and the league's attitude towards them. You ask a legitimate question and I want to give it a thoughtful answer, not a knee-jerk one. Give us a week or so and I'll make sure that we publicize our stories so you can be sure to read them and see how the NFL explains its position on this.

BYE-BYE BRADY

While I appreciate that Tom Brady is a once in a generation talent, can you PLEASE reduce your coverage of him? Or, maybe you should start a new column called The MMTB: The Monday Morning Tom Brady column. With a column dedicated to Tom Brady you can get it all out of your system and we can read about other 1,695 players in the league.

—Tim L.

The Patriots as of this morning are either the best team in football or one of the very best. Tom Brady, at 38, is probably having the best year of any old player to ever play the game, and he's doing it after one of the most tumultuous offseasons a player has ever gone through. I appreciate your suggestion, and you are not the first one to tell me I am all Tom Brady all the time. But this would be my suggestion: skip the Brady stuff. I write approximately 10,000 words in my column each Monday morning. This week, I wrote 624 words on the Patriots and Brady—that leaves 9,376 words to the other teams and other events of the week for you to enjoy.

WILDCAT WONDERS

How about a little love for my alma mater, Kansas State University, from which matriculated your two most dangerous return men, Darren Sproles and Tyler Lockett?

—Jim Spencer, Wichita, Kan.

You got it. Good job, Wildcats. There must be something about Manhattan, Kansas, that breeds NFL return men who cannot be tackled.

MISSING MONTEE

I find it strange that Montee Ball hasn't been signed with a team. Can you help me understand why a team wouldn't take a chance on him as a backup RB?

—Bill J.

I'm a bit surprised by that, too. I think, and this is just a gut feeling, that people looking at his 2014 tape see a running back who rarely makes more than what is there. Although he had some strong impact toward the end of his rookie year, he didn't follow that up in 2014. Part of that is because he was plagued by a groin injury, which ended up finishing his season. But the Broncos have always been the kind of team that is the land of opportunity for running backs, and Ball simply didn't make the most of his. It does seem like he should get another chance and I will be surprised if he didn't.

By David Ramsey Colorado Springs Gazette September 1, 2015

New blood.

That's what many franchises seek when chasing a championship.

The Broncos are going with a radical alternative.

Old blood.

Proven blood. (Broncos fans are hoping there's no over-the-hill blood.)

Gary Kubiak arrived in Colorado in January facing a simple, immense task. He has to outperform John Fox. That's all.

Remember, Fox won the AFC West four times in four seasons. He claimed 38 regular-season wins in the past three seasons. He directed the Broncos to seven playoff games, including a Super Bowl. (The Broncos played in five playoff games, total, from 1999-2010.)

All those accomplishments failed to satisfy Broncos godfather John Elway, who pushed Fox out the door.

The Broncos will be chasing NFL supremacy with what amounts to a reunited band. You know what we're talking about: One of those collections of aging rockers who hit the road one last time, hoping to recapture the magic and the money and the success of yesteryear.

Elway has assembled quite a band.

He and Kubiak traveled to five Super Bowls, three times as teammates and twice with Kubiak running the Broncos offense as coordinator. After convincing Kubiak to return to Colorado, Elway summoned Wade Phillips to lead the Broncos defense.

And the final, giant step, Elway convinced Peyton Manning to take his aching 39-year-old body and powerful right arm on a final quest to rule the football world.

For Kubiak, this is a homecoming. He labored as Elway's backup from 1983-91. He served as lead coordinator for an offense that carried the Broncos to consecutive Super Bowl victories.

"Obviously, I'm very familiar," Kubiak said. "I know where to go. I know where everything is in the building and all those good things, but football is football. There is a lot of work to do and there's a lot of work to do to put this team together."

After Fox departed the Broncos, a disappointed Elway said he was weary of the Broncos getting kicked around in their final game of the season. The Fox-led Broncos boasted many strengths, but finishing strong was not one of them. In 2011, the Broncos ended the season by getting trampled in the playoffs by the Patriots. In 2012, the Ravens came from behind to win on a freezing afternoon in Denver. In 2013, the Seahawks annihilated the Broncos in the Super Bowl.

And in Fox's farewell, the Broncos timidly wandered to a home loss to the Colts.

"I think if there is one thing that you would like to have and you want to feel - at least in the last game you want to feel like you go out kicking and screaming," Elway said. "When you're right there and I think two years in a row it didn't feel like we went out kicking and screaming because of the fact the way we played the last game."

At that instant, Elway formulated the slogan for his 2015 reunion band.

He also placed a burden on Kubiak's shoulders. Elway and Kubiak are close friends, but both men realize winning is a requirement for their professional relationship to flourish.

Phillips is, like Kubiak, familiar with Colorado. He coached the Broncos defense from 1989-92 before a two-season reign as head coach. He worked alongside Kubiak with the Houston Texans. Phillips, 68, is a football lifer who began his NFL coaching career in 1976 in the latter days of the Gerald Ford administration.

"Hopefully, we're kicking and screaming," Kubiak said. "I am really excited about our defense."

Manning will play the central role in this reunion band. He's the NFL's ultimate regular-season quarterback, but he owns only one Super Bowl ring.

He wants another. That's why he returned to this venerable, aging band.

Gary Kubiak enters first year of the job he was made to do

By Troy Renck DenverPost.com July 26, 2015

On Aug. 2, 1976, Gary Kubiak walked off a plane and into the rest of his life. Just 14 years old, he absorbed the enormousness of the Kansas City Chiefs' Arrowhead Stadium, the exhilaration, the screaming fans, the red and yellow seats, the white scoreboard staring from above the top deck as if it were a robot raising its hand.

Kubiak caught his breath as he jogged onto the field for the preseason game. He knew how lucky he was to be a ballboy for the Houston Oilers, throwing training camp passes to Earl Campbell and Mike Barber at Sam Houston State. The players treated him like one of their own, knowing he was a rising high school football star. But this — well, this was different.

The experience resonated in a way that makes Kubiak smile 39 years later.

"That was the first pro football game I ever went to. (Coach) Bum Phillips took me to Kansas City that day," Kubiak said. "I still remember as a kid going into the stadium, chasing the balls. That was my first day. I was part of pro football."

On Friday, Kubiak enters training camp in his 22nd season as an NFL coach but his first as the boss of the Broncos. He inherits a team with Super Bowl aspirations. He landed the job in part because a pair of numbing playoff exits overshadowed four consecutive AFC West titles by the John Fox-coached Broncos.

General manager John Elway sought a head coach who could inspire the Broncos to "never stop kicking and screaming," especially in big games, which haunted Fox's tenure.

"Hopefully you have that mindset every day, every week, not just one week. There's no substitution for playing hard," Kubiak said. "You have to compete all the time, not just when you think it's appropriate."

He relishes the pressure that comes with high expectations.

"I was part of this organization for many years. I know where they expect to go, that they expect to win Super Bowls," Kubiak said. "It's something you want to be part of. Does it make it tougher? I don't know. People can say what they want to say, but this is why I do what I do. That's why I love to go to work every day."

The job found Kubiak in January when Fox and the Broncos mutually parted one day after a stunning home playoff loss to the Indianapolis Colts. Kubiak, 53, was content to stay with the Baltimore Ravens as their offensive coordinator, after eight seasons as coach of the Houston Texans. He told the Chicago Bears and New York Jets — and anyone else who would listen — that he wasn't interested.

Then Elway, his roommate when they were players, called.

"He's always had strong feelings for Denver. He spent so much time there, time he enjoyed," longtime NFL coach and mentor Mike Sherman said of Kubiak. "Going to Houston was home. But when you think of his career, really Denver is going home. This is kind of a unique opportunity to end it where it started."

Kubiak will stand in the middle of the field Friday at Broncos headquarters at Dove Valley, surveying the buzz of activity from his familiar spot with hardly anyone noticing him. He coaches football because he enjoys the grind, embraces the challenge. It's difficult, uncomfortable and liberating.

Like the truth.

What he thinks

Kubiak doesn't have a problem telling people what he thinks. Consistency and honesty are staples in his life. They remain the central themes when talking to people who watched him grow from a record-setting quarterback at Houston's St. Pius X High School to a Texas A&M star to a reliable backup with the Broncos, and a reason they predict he will succeed with Denver.

"As a coach, when you get kids, you spend a lot of time trying to smooth out problems," said former Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum. "With Gary, he didn't have any rough spots. He's always been mature with a great value system from Day One.

"I first met him when he was 17, and he hasn't changed a bit. What you see is what you get. Try to find someone who has a bad word to say about him. You can't. He could have ridden off into the sunset, but there's nothing that would mean more to him than to come back to the Broncos and have a great run."

Had Kubiak embarked on his second head coaching job elsewhere, shrugged shoulders would have greeted the announcement. He went 63-66 in eight seasons with the Texans (including 2-2 in the playoffs), turning a 2-14 team into a two-time division champion. He didn't fail as much as he didn't finish the job, undermined by awful quarterback play in 2013, which led to his firing.

In other cities, he's Kubiak. In Denver, he's "Kubes," well-known for saving the Broncos in a Monday night game at Washington when Elway had the flu from, as legend has it, chipped beef on toast from President George H.W. Bush's table at the White House. And again in 1992 when Elway rallied the Broncos past the Oilers in the playoffs, a breathtaking comeback that required Kubiak to handle a low snap setting up David Treadwell's 28-yard field goal with 16 seconds left.

Few would argue Kubiak's merits as a brilliant offensive mind, a man who learned from Mike Shanahan, Bill Walsh and Alex Gibbs. Kubiak has been creating mismatches for three decades, camouflaging repetitive zone-blocking schemes with multiple personnel groups and formations. He owns three Super Bowl title rings as an assistant with the San Francisco 49ers and Denver, where he helped Elway transform seamlessly from electric to acoustic in his final two seasons as a player.

Kubiak will be heavily involved in the Broncos' offense. He looks to establish the run to open the field for play-action passing. The idea is to ease the pressure and reliance on quarterback Peyton Manning the way Kubiak did when he ran the Broncos' offense in Elway's final two championship seasons.

"It should only help a quarterback when you run the ball," Kubiak said. "It's what you have to be doing if you want to be a physical football team."

During his 20 seasons as an offensive coordinator or head coach, Kubiak's running game averaged a ninth-place NFL finish, including eighth last year with Baltimore. The Broncos ranked 15th in rushing last season.

As for play-calling, Kubiak says: "That's something I've been doing my whole career. I love it. That's where my competitive juices flow, calling the game."

And yet, there is that record with the Texans — under .500. It raises questions about whether Kubiak is running from a cliché about nice guys and where they finish.

"He treats you the way you wanted to be treated. It creates the false narrative that he's strictly a player's coach, that he's too easy on guys. That couldn't be further from the truth," said veteran offensive tackle Eric Winston, who played for Kubiak in Houston. "He shoots straight. It's not about him. That's the thing. Some coaches yell just so they can be seen yelling. It's never about him. He's not coaching for attention. He's coaching to win.

"In our meetings, they were some of the most uncomfortable I have ever been in. He holds players to a high standard. Sometimes you want to be as small as you can in that chair. If you don't hear your name, it's a great day."

Slocum gave Kubiak his first coaching job, at Texas A&M in 1992, after his playing career ended in Denver. He knew he couldn't keep his former quarterback long because he was too talented, something he showed while coaching running backs such as All-American Greg Hill.

"Players loved him. And he didn't think he had all the answers," Slocum said. "As a head coach, you have every right to be demanding, but you don't have the right to be demeaning. Gary leads with class."

Kubiak brings a reputation for rolling up his sleeves. On a typical morning, he shows up at Dove Valley at 5 a.m. Even after he suffered a mini-stroke in 2013 during a nationally televised game, Kubiak never considered leaving coaching. He changed his diet, and when he was supposed to be taking it easy, he would leave Texans headquarters, then sneak back in to do more work.

"He gets things done. If you are there, you are there to work," said Sherman, who helped Kubiak understand how to watch game film at Texas A&M and later joined his staff in Houston. "You aren't there to tell stories and play games. There's no wasted time. That's Gary. You always know where you stand. There's no hidden agendas, which is why his assistants are so loyal to him."

"Be accountable"

When a new head coach arrives, the franchise gives him the opportunity to redecorate. The Broncos' team meeting room featured multiple slogans the past few years. Kubiak replaced them with a single saying in huge, bold letters across the back wall: "Be accountable."

"People ask if he can be stern enough," said Hall of Fame tight end Shannon Sharpe. "I was in meetings with him for seven years. He knows what to say and when to say it. He lets you know when you don't make a play you should have. But he will also be the first to admit his mistake. He will say, 'I have to do a better job. That's on me.' As a player, you can't help but respect that."

Six months into Kubiak's tenure here, Broncos president Joe Ellis referenced the meeting room when asked for an anecdote. To him, it captures Kubiak.

"Simple, straightforward, honest, that's Gary," Ellis said. "That's who he is as a leader in his dealings with everyone in the building."

Elway formed a strong bond with Kubiak, first as a roommate. Kubiak joked that his most important job was to take calls and tell people, "John's not here." They competed at everything, from cards to pingpong.

Kubiak learned early how to lead. He began his freshman season at St. Pius X High School in Houston standing 5-foot-9 and weighing 135 pounds. He wore size-11 cleats, foreshadowing a growth spurt. But opportunity couldn't wait for his body to sprout. With the Panthers struggling through a clumsy season, coach Rene Hancock had Kubiak start the second half in a game against Beaumont Kelly. Kubiak completed 14-of-17 passes for 179 yards.

Four years later, Kubiak left St. Pius as Texas' all-time prep passing leader with 6,190 yards, winning three consecutive titles at a time when high school running backs Eric Dickerson and Craig James were stealing the headlines.

"When he broke the record, one of the officials stopped the game," Hancock told reporters a few years ago. "I sent the managers out to get the football. The officials said no — they wanted me to come get the football. I congratulated Gary, and Gary looked up into the stands and said, 'Can I go tell my parents, "Hi"?' That touched me. It was equally important that he go tell his parents. That's what Gary is like. That's the kind of person he is and the kind of leader he is."

Kubiak and his wife, Rhonda, have three sons — Klint, Klay and Klein — and all three played college football. Klein now is an intern with the Broncos, Klay is a teacher, and Klint is the wide receivers coach at Kansas. It brings Kubiak back to his days as a ballboy. Oilers owner Bud Adams was a Kansas graduate, and Kubiak's presence at practice sure wouldn't hurt the Jayhawks' recruiting efforts.

"I guess that is kind of how I got the job. I don't know if that was legal or not," Kubiak said. "I don't think they were too mad I went to A&M. Klint's at KU, so they got a Kubiak eventually."

The Broncos did too. With Kubiak pegged at one point as Shanahan's successor, the Texans prevented a move. Kubiak's team was on the rise when the Broncos fired Shanahan after the 2008 season. Houston is Kubiak's hometown. But Denver, in many ways, is home. When he steps onto the practice field this week, Kubiak will be in full view, eyes staring at drills, looking for ways to improve.

He is a coach. In a complicated world, it's that simple.

"There's a ton of things that people should know about him," Winston said. "I think there was an unfair characterization of how it ended in Houston. I really thought if we had a healthy quarterback in 2011, we could have won it all. With (Kubiak), no one has anything negative to say. It's not because they are scared. It's because he's as genuine a guy you will find in this league. You respect it, especially when youare away from it. He will make the Broncos better. He teaches guys how to be professionals, how to be men. He will win games and have a profound impact on lives."

DeCamillis' career returns to Denver

Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com February 10, 2015

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. —Denver isn't how new Broncos Special Teams Coordinator Joe DeCamillis remembers. There are more houses than when he was here last, more than two decades ago, and many more than when he grew up in Arvada, Colo. And then there's the entire practice facility, which is completely new and probably feels a bit alien considering the jump in technology from 1992 to 2015.

"It's surreal at times, you look around and I'm thinking, 'Man, I'm back in this building.' So it's just a privilege and I'm excited. I mean, like I said, I want to help Mr. Bowlen and help this organization win championships."

DeCamillis, now entering his 27th season in the NFL, got his start in the league in Denver as an assistant to the GM and head coach, a position he described as being "basically a secretary."

And though he left the Broncos in taking the next step in career in special teams, he would eventually be involved in one of the Broncos' Super Bowl victories. However, that would be on the other side of the field with the Falcons in Denver's 34-19 win in Super Bowl XXXIII.

Now back with the Broncos about 23 years after leaving, his job involves a lot more responsibility and difficulty as he takes charge of the special teams as the coordinator. But at this point, it's nothing he hasn't proved his proficiency in. He spent his previous two years in Chicago coaching their special teams and as an assistant head coach, helped the Bears earn two consecutive seasons as the best kickoff coverage team. From coverage to excellence in kicking, punting and return specialists, DeCamillis has coached it all everywhere he's been and wants to bring that standard to the Broncos.

"We want to play faster than our opponents. When they look at it on tape I want them to know that we're going to be a fast team and a physical team," he said in his introductory press conference Tuesday. "The other thing about it is you want to be very fundamentally sound. Any time a coach turns on the film I want them to say, 'Wow, that guy—technique-wise—they're excellent at what they do.'

"And that's really, kind of fits in to what [Head Coach Gary Kubiak] 'Kub' is asking for, too," he added. "We came in and talked and that was something that was important to him and we want to carry that on and get better."

In these initial days, the coaching staff has begun looking at and evaluating personnel and DeCamillis says he's seen some standouts already, but they're still in that process. "We've just got to identify all of them and try to put them in the best possible positions to succeed."

And one of the things he tries to instill with his coaching is a toughness, a willingness to take on difficult challenges that aren't what they're used to.

DeCamillis knows that challenge of taking on unfamiliar challenges, having recovered from serious neck and back fractures after the Cowboys' indoor practice bubble collapsed in 2009.

"That was a situation that occurred that was adverse, but I think it helped me to be honest with you," DeCamillis said. "I think it helped me to figure out a way to come back from something tough. You always tell your players to do something that's unnatural—well you had a chance to show them that you could come back from something like that. Still to be coaching and walking to be honest with you, is a blessing. So, I'm jacked up, man. I'm excited to be here, no question."

DeCamillis has come a long way to reach this point, not only in his recovery, but in his career as well, in a circle that's returned him to his hometown with the goal of helping return his hometown team to the Super Bowl.

Dennison's experience will help as offensive line faces uncertainty

By Jim Saccomano DenverBroncos.com June 1, 2015

The injury to starting left tackle Ryan Clady is an obvious blow to the Denver Broncos. However, as Offensive Coordinator Rick Dennison said after practice Thursday, "The biggest disappointment is for Ryan himself."

It is very disappointing for a fine young man and excellent player. Nevertheless, the reality is that the football season moves forward no matter what.

"I love being coached," said Quarterback Peyton Manning about Dennison.

Of course, it goes without saying that Manning loves being coached. Especially when the coaching is at a high, intelligent and stimulating level.

And therein lies the solution.

Let John Elway and the Broncos' personnel bring in talented players—which they've been doing since Elway's return to football operations—and let the coaches coach.

A significant part of everything the team does on offense will fall under the wing of Dennison. Rick has been a favorite of mine ever since he arrived as an unheralded free agent linebacker from Colorado State University.

He made the team and played for the Broncos from 1982 to 1990, a nine-year span in which he played both defense and special teams.

Before returning to Dove Valley this year, he previously coached the Broncos from 1995 to 2009. During that time he worked as an offensive assistant and special teams coach, before coaching the offensive line and finally becoming offensive coordinator.

If you weren't counting, those above cited years make him the longest tenured Bronco player and coach combination of all-time. 2015 is Rico's 25th overall season in Denver.

He also has a master's degree in Aeronautical Engineering from CSU. So, while it is quite true that coaching football is not rocket science, Dennison is in fact a rocket scientist.

Manning's comment is a hint at the preparation and intellect that Dennison brings to his work coordinating the offense. As he said after Thursday's practice, "All good players—great players—love to be coached."

Coaching does not so much involve the yelling and screaming that gets air time in short video clips. Instead it involves meetings, planning, questions, answers, challenges and feedback—things that belong in a classroom setting, which is where they spend a great deal of time. They spend more time in the classroom than they do on the field.

So, the loss of Ryan Clady is a tough pill to swallow. But, as Dennison said, "We're going to do what we do best. We are the 2015 Denver Broncos."

Not any other version. Not any other year.

We would all do well to remember that it is only late May. It's a long way from the start of the new season.

When asked how concerned he was about not knowing who would be at left tackle Dennison said, "I'd like to go into the first game [knowing who will be on the line]. Preseason, I could care less what we are thinking."

He says the team will go into the first regular season game "knowing what we are going to do."

I really enjoyed watching Dennison's career evolve during his previous time in Denver. There never seemed to be a job he was given that he could not do. And, of course, he was a member of five Super Bowl teams in Denver: three as a player in the 1980's, then consecutive world championships of Super Bowls XXXII and XXXIII in 1997 and 1998.

The development of young players is a key part of coaching and we have coaches here with a proven track record. Elway has said that in addition to free agent talent the young guys we have should get a chance to grow and develop.

Head Coach Gary Kubiak, Dennison and offensive line coach Clancy Barone are veterans of the professional football offenses. They understand the diversity of offenses that each new season brings.

There is a lot of offseason left and plenty of time for roles to be filled. Sometimes that can happen in a way that no one ever considered. Young guys can take the field and make it happen.

I have a world of confidence in this coaching staff and so, too, should Broncos fans.

It is never just about one player. That is why football is the ultimate team game.

We all feel terrible for Ryan Clady and wish him a quick recovery. But in the meantime, there is big-time coaching talent evaluating players and positions. I have every bit of confidence in the final product.

Broncos MVP (MVC?) through two games: Wade Phillips

By Paul Klee Colorado Springs Gazette September 17, 2015

Still think Wade Phillips was the wrong choice as defensive coordinator of the Broncos?

Vance Joseph was the popular pick, and it's entirely possible he'd have been a good one. We'll never know. But when the Bengals wouldn't release Joseph from his contract, some media even pulled the race card. Get out of here with that nonsense.

Joseph might become a brilliant coordinator. But the Broncos — with their window and the money committed to their defense — needed a sure thing. There was no room for maybes. Wade Phillips is a sure thing, and what the coordinator has done so far is wizard's work.

Five turnovers tonight here at Arrowhead Stadium. Four sacks of Chiefs quarterback Alex Smith. So much swag the team plane might need a Thule rack to carry it home.

The story now is Peyton Manning shoving a foam finger into the air at all the haters. The story from now on — Elway voice — should be how good this defense is going to be.

I wrote way back on Feb. 11, two weeks after he was hired, that Phillips would prove to be the most important acquisition of the offseason for the Broncos. I was wrong. Remove the free-agent signing of Manning, and Phillips could prove to be the most important acquisition of the Elway era. Over the previous nine seasons the Broncos had ranked in the top nine in turnover differential only once. Now....

Through two games the Broncos have forced seven turnovers. The Broncos have forced three turnovers in the red zone, equaling their total all of last season. Their two wins were clinched on turnovers — the Darian Stewart interception to thwart the Ravens, the Bradley Roby fumble return to stun the Chiefs. And there's a strong feeling inside their meeting rooms the defense has only scratched the surface of what it will become by December.

Even the mistakes seem to carry meaning. Von Miller and Malik Jackson were among the perpetrators to commit four personal fouls in tonight's 31-24 win at Kansas City. They were dumb moves, but don't forget who led the NFL in penalties two years ago. Rhymes with Schmeattle Schmeahawks.

Some penalties, however dumb, serve a purpose. The Broncos bullied the Chiefs, again.

Here's a hunch one month from now wins over the Ravens and Chiefs will look like signature wins for the Broncos. There's a fine chance both are playoff teams. Baltimore is usually in the conversation, and Kansas City, if not for some head-shaking play-calling and distrust of Smith, the quarterback, should've left "Red Thursday" with an AFC West win.

Emmanuel Sanders scoring the game-tying touchdown had to feel like lime squirted into the eyes of the 76,404 who roared, admirably, until Brandon Marshall's strip and Roby's return shut it down. Sanders told me he was this close to being a Chief. That's got to tickle.

I'm not sure it's common knowledge how good this Broncos team can be. But two things must happen for Denver to reach its potential: The offensive line needs a fix, and Manning must be allowed to be Manning. If those things happen, good luck finding a weakness.

The Ware-Talib-Welker-Vasquez-Sanders signings shook the pool with their splash.

But the acquistion that's causing waves was the most unassuming of all: Wade Phillips.

Wade Phillips: Harris Jr. and Talib the best CB duo he's had

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com August 11, 2015

In 38 years of NFL coaching, Defensive Coordinator Wade Phillips feels that this 2015 Broncos team has the best starting cornerbacks of any team he's ever been with, even rivaling those he's coached in the Pro Bowl.

With a Pro Bowl selection apiece in 2014, Chris Harris Jr. and Aqib Talib certainly have the accolades to their name to justify such praise. Harris had perhaps the best season of any cornerback in the league last year with the highest rating by Pro Football Focus and highlighted by the fact that he didn't give up a touchdown all year. Talib, meanwhile, put up a terrific season of his own, punctuated by four interceptions, of which two were returned for touchdowns.

"They're probably the best," Phillips said. "I've had a lot of really good corners. The latest, the guys in Houston, were really good, but these guys are the best, I think, that I've been around. They rate with the Pro Bowls that I've coached. They're that kind of players."

Talib's big plays in camp drew rave reviews, especially from Head Coach Gary Kubiak, who said: "To me, the difference in this league between a good corner and a great corner is guys that have ball skills. [...] That's what separates him. If he gets his hands on the ball, like I told the guys the other day, 'Let's go to work,' that will be a touchdown, not just turnover."

In turn, Talib discussed Harris' rise as a prominent defender.

"I love it. It's my little brother," Talib said. "It's like my little brother getting the recognition that he deserves. [It's] long awaited, so I'm as happy for him as anybody."

However, the position's talent runs deep into the roster at cornerback beyond Talib and Harris, Phillips added.

"They're really talented, and our other guys — [Bradley] Roby's coming along and [Tony] Carter's coming along."

The skills at the position have been a big point of discussion when it comes to their abilities in helping the defensive line and linebackers put pressure on opposing lines and quarterbacks. They certainly seem poised to do that for Phillips' defense.

As icing on the cake, should Harris and Talib be selected to the Pro Bowl again, it would mark the first time a cornerback duo made the Pro Bowl in multiple years in the free-agency era, and the first time at all in the last 25 years.

Clancy Barone feels right at home coaching Broncos' offensive line

By Terry Frei DenverPost.com August 2, 2015

Broncos assistant Clancy Barone has returned to the coaching assignment he loves the most.

A holdover from the Josh McDaniels and John Fox regimes, Barone coached the Denver tight ends the past four seasons under Fox.

Under Gary Kubiak, Barone is back to coaching the offensive line.

It can almost seem a "careful what you wish for" scenario, considering that Barone in 2015 will be trying to get the most out of a shaky-on-paper group with one proven, no-doubt, entrenched NFL starter — right guard Louis Vasquez.

"I've been coaching for 30 years and darned near all of them were coaching the offensive line," Barone, 52, said after Sunday's practice at Dove Valley. "It's my nature. It's what I've always done and what I've always wanted to get back to."

After seven collegiate stops, including Texas A&M, Wyoming and Houston, Barone broke into the NFL as an assistant line coach under zone-blocking guru Alex Gibbs with Atlanta in 2004. From 2005-09, Barone coached tight ends for the Falcons and Chargers and, ultimately, for the Broncos in the first year of McDaniels' tenure.

In McDaniels' bizarre second season, which included his early December firing, Barone had his first chance as an NFL head offensive line coach, getting the most out of rookies J.D. Walton and Zane Beadles as starters.

But Barone was back to handling the tight ends during the Fox regime.

"I still got to work a lot in the run game," Barone said. "I got to work a lot in protections. The coordinator I worked with always trusted me to do that, along with coaching the tight ends and work with the passing game stuff. It was a challenge to learn a new part of the offense. I enjoyed it and I got to work with some great players. But it was always kind of my career goal to get back home."

"Home" means, among other places, the offensive line meeting room. In the NFL, it's typically a workplace of dry and barbed humor and perhaps even more "in it together" camaraderie than anywhere else in the building.

Barone and Eric Studesville are the only Denver assistants to remain through the past two head coaching changes.

"There's always that anxious time where you're thinking, 'Do we have to move?' "Barone said. "But I've known Gary for a long time, and we worked together at Texas A&M (in 1993), and I think that was Gary's first coaching job. I knew I would love to stay and I'm fortunate that it all worked out for me and Rosie, my wife."

Barone also is centrally involved in the return to the zone-blocking scheme.

"There is that learning curve about how you adjust it, why you adjust it, when do you adjust it — all those types of things," Barone said. "That's probably part of the fun of it, to teach them the overall big picture."

Although the Broncos have shuffled their No. 1 offensive line during the first three days of camp, most noticeably giving veteran Ryan Harris looks at right tackle, one of the constants has been rookie Ty Sambrailo, the second-round draft choice from Colorado State, at left tackle. That has reinforced the impression the job of succeeding the injured Ryan Clady is Sambrailo's to lose.

"Ty got a ton of reps during the spring," Barone said. "I don't see Ty as a rookie mentally anymore. Now, he hasn't seen any live game reps in this system, but as far as the mental reps and the time-on task and meetings, he is not a rookie in my mind."

Even when he was coaching tight ends, Barone never was accused of lacking enthusiasm. So it would be unfair to say he has been re-energized. So let's just say that he's kicked it up a notch.

"I wake up and just sprint to work every day," Barone said. "It's a blast."

Bill Kollar, Broncos d-line coach, wears passion on sleeve, bears any challenge

By Troy Renck DenverPost.com May 30, 2015

A little past 10 a.m. on Thursday, a few beads of sweat trickling off his forehead, Bill Kollar walks into the lobby at Broncos headquarters. He is there for an interview. He has been in front of the recorder before. He has a funny story about that.

"So this guy called me up in 1975 or so. He says, 'Go downtown (in Cincinnati) and take a picture with a bear for 50 bucks.' So I show up at this hall, and there's 50 people or so talking about how some guy is going to wrestle a bear," Kollar said. "I said, 'Wrestle a bear? What?' And then I realize he's talking about me."

What happened next explains why Broncos boss Gary Kubiak desperately wanted Kollar to coach his defensive line. Kollar demands effort, doesn't put up with any, well, you know what, and coaches like his hair is on fire (if he had any).

Back to Cincinnati. Standing on a 4X4 loose rug, Kollar faced off with the bear. At 6-foot-3 and 255 pounds, Kollar was already a Tiger (technically a Cincinnati Bengal), so he figured he could trade a few headlocks with the beast.

"The bear is wearing a muzzle. They take it off. And he grabs a bottle of Coke and drinks the whole thing," Kollar said with a straight face.

On a sugar high, the bear charged Kollar, shoving him to the ground. Kollar, now peeved with cameras rolling, bull rushed the bear. The bear toppled over, leading to cheers and a proposition.

"They asked if I could take on a 9-foot Kodiak the next weekend in Columbus," Kollar said.

Kollar wisely moved on, finishing his career with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. In Abe Gibron, his line coach, he found a kindred spirit and a blueprint. Gibron coached with passion, losing his voice at practice. Kollar appears to be losing his mind at times. He screams words of encouragement, blending teaching technique with veins-popping noise.

"I always start out by telling them, I am going to be on your (backside). I am doing it for one reason: to get you to be as good a player you can be. I have guys say all the time that 'I hear you yelling at me in my sleep.' That's just the way it is. It's an automatic deal," said Kollar, 62, who is credited for speeding up reigning NFL defensive player of the year J.J. Watt's learning curve. "They either get it and do it the right way, or they are gone. That's just the way it is, dude."

Pull into the Broncos' parking lot, and you can hear Kollar before you see him. Talk to NFL insiders, and they wonder if Kollar could become the Broncos' most important offseason addition. He is challenged to wring out the potential in Sylvester Williams and Marvin Austin, while continuing Malik Jackson's ascension toward stardom.

"He's a serious guy, but he likes to have fun," Jackson said. "He's going to make you get your work in and make sure that we're the best defensive line in the league. That's what I'm learning. You have to have a great work ethic with him. If you don't and you're not willing to learn and go out there and produce, you're not going to play for him."

Williams received advice from Kollar months ago. It helped convince Williams to spend the bulk of the offseason in Denver training. The Broncos are counting on him to start at nose tackle, filling the enormous void left by the departure of Terrance Knighton.

"I'm excited to play for him," Williams said. "I think he can be a great guy. Like I said, he's got a lot of history in the NFL. What we noticed right away is that he is going to get us a lot better, and that's exciting."

Talk to Kollar and it becomes a trip into grainy black-and-white film. He is no-nonsense; as sympathetic as a parking ticket and as blunt as a hammer. He represents a stark contrast from last year's Denver coaching staff. Success can be reached through different paths. Kubiak has compiled a group whose passion manifests in volume — and sometimes requires earmuffs for those easily offended.

"Bill is loud," said defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, "but he's got a great knack for getting on people, getting them to go harder, but for them to like him. Normally a guy that's as loud as he is, that hollers at you, you think 'Wow.' They know it's in their best interest when he gets on them. Everybody coaches different ways, and I think his style is really good. It fits well with those guys."

Kollar left the Houston Texans on good terms. Texans coach Bill O'Brien granted the parallel move, which placed Kollar near family. One of his sons, Chad, a former SMU player, lives in Denver with his wife and two young children.

Kollar loves to play with the grandkids. He is in his 60s, but he doesn't lack energy. And, yes, he has a funny story about that.

"I have never had a cup of coffee in my life," Kollar said. "I have a soda now and then, but not that Red Bull stuff. All that caffeine with the way I am, my head might explode."

Tyke Tolbert honored with father's induction to Texas high school hall of fame

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com July 22, 2015

Wide Receiver Coach Tyke Tolbert hates to lose in anything. When his oldest daughter was 4 years old, he bought an air hockey table. Though he was happy to concede a goal here and there, his competitive spirit wouldn't let him lose the game.

But that's just how he's wired. It's how his father Leon Tolbert was, how he is and now how his youngest daughter is.

"I got that from my dad and now my youngest daughter has that same competitive fire in her," Tyke said on Monday. "She's 9 and doesn't like to lose in anything. That's the biggest thing I got from my dad, being ultra-competitive."

That fire has been a driving factor in Tyke's career, first as a football player and now as a coach, and it was also what propelled Leon's athletic accomplishments that recently earned him a posthumous induction into the Prarie View Interscholastic League (PVIL) Coaches Association Hall of Fame.

The PVIL was a pre-desegregation league that existed from 1920 to 1970, governing academics, athletics and music for black high schools in Texas. Among the esteemed PVIL athletes are six Pro Football Hall of Fame members: Joe Greene, Gene Upshaw, Dick "Night Train" Lane, Charley Taylor, Emmitt Thomas and Ken Houston.

At a difficult time in American history with segregation, the schools existed with meager resources but produced distinguished students who would become some of the country's finest citizens, athletes, entertainers and more. Though the era marked a dark period before the Civil Rights Movement, PVIL is proud to remember the outstanding people who came out of the climate in spite of segregation. "Remembering the past with pride" is the slogan that adorns the top of their website.

Leon Tolbert was one of those stellar athletes for Booker T. Washington High School in Conroe, Texas, where he won two state championships in the 1960's, including a season in which the Bulldogs went 13-0

Tyke's mother designated him to speak on his father's behalf, which was a great honor for him.

"We were very humbled by his induction and we had some family and friends there," Tolbert said. "There was over 1,000 people in attendance because there were several inductees but my dad got inducted for football so it meant a lot. I know he would have been proud to be there if he could have been there but for my mom to designate me to give the acceptance speech on his behalf was a very proud moment for me."

Leon's athletic legacy lives on for Tyke and his family in his mother's collection of newspaper clippings from the era. Tyke knows some of the stories his father told may have had a bit of exaggeration, but those clips are able to document Leon's some of his proudest moments in his football career.

"He used to tell us a lot of things about what he used to do. But the funny thing about it is my mom kept newspaper articles and all that stuff so I can actually read it and see his name in print the things he actually did, which is pretty impressive," Tolbert said. "So he had the evidence, I guess, to back it up about how good of a player he was and things he did of that nature. But I'm sure that would have been very good for him, very proud for him to be able to be inducted into the Hall of Fame. And he would have been really, really happy with that."

Why has C.J. Anderson succeeded? It's as much about his mind as his moves

By Andrew Mason DenverBroncos.com September 10, 2015

If you're going to line up behind or alongside Peyton Manning in the backfield, you'd better know what you're doing.

But Manning will help you. Seventeen previous seasons and a lifetime immersed in football make him a human library of information. But to access the information, you have to walk through the door, go up to the desk and ask. He encourages his teammates to seek him out if they're uncertain about a concept, but he won't hold the door open.

Few have taken greater advantage of that resource than running back C.J. Anderson. Manning would remind his fellow Broncos to ask him questions "all the time," and Anderson accepted the open invitation.

"I got the opportunity to play here, and I'm playing with probably the greatest to ever know everything before it's coming," Anderson said. "I'd be an idiot not to pick his brain.

"I always go up to him and ask him a question when I can, just to make sure we're on the same page. At the end of the day, he's the commander, and if you can get on the same page as him, the ball will come your way more -- which is always good," Anderson continued, a smile crossing his face, "and good things always come out of it."

Good things for Anderson -- and the Denver offense as a whole, as well. After becoming the first-teamer following Ronnie Hillman's foot injury in Week 10 of the 2014 season, Anderson gained more yards from scrimmage than all but one running back (Pittsburgh's Le'Veon Bell). He also emerged as one of the league's best blockers at his position, and ranked sixth among all running backs from Weeks 10-17 in ProFootballFocus.com's pass-blocking rankings.

"He's been in a lot of situations, whether it's two-minute drills or faced a lot of blitzes, he's seen a lot of defenses and he's really a bright player," Manning said. "I think he has a good concept of what defenses are doing. He can see, especially when you're back there in the shotgun, he and I are talking a lot. He kind of has an understanding of which way the defense is rotating, so he knows where the blitz might occur."

That's not to say he's perfect, but moments like the one in the preseason where NaVorro Bowman raced through the A-gap and Anderson couldn't guide him away from Manning in time are the exception to the rule.

"Now I have the offense, and now I'm going into it with the confidence that I have and understanding what we're trying to do, and now me and him are on the same page," Anderson said. "It's a lot better that I'm back there and I can go, 'Hey, this is coming, this is going to happen,' and he looks at me, and he trusts me, and it happens, and then he goes, 'Man, good call.'"

That's a long way from the brief appearances he made during his rookie year. During the 2013 season, Anderson played 25 snaps -- a season-high 10 of which came late in the Broncos' 34-31 Week 12 loss at New England.

"I was still swimming, and [Manning] was telling me what to do, and that kind of bothered me, because at that one time and moment, I feel like I wasn't at my best at what I do -- which is pretty much knowing everything that's going on.

"[In] my rookie year, if I would have said something, he probably would have looked at me like, 'You don't know what you're talking about.'"

Quite the opposite is the case now.

"He has used his playing time, his repetitions and his young career really to his advantage and to make him a more confident player," Manning said. "The more you know what you're doing, the more confident you are. He's really done a good job taking advantage of those reps."

But it's not just about asking questions or studying the playbook. Some of it has to be innate.

Anderson takes understandable pride in his natural intelligence. As he said last year when noting his caution and change to a new helmet after he suffered a preseason concussion, "I'm a Cal guy, so I love my brain."

"I think one of my biggest attributes was football I.Q. I don't know if it's something you can coach. [Running backs] Coach [Eric] Studesville calls it a gift," Anderson said. "For me, that's always something that's been the next level to my game. I feel like I'm always at my best because I know what's coming before it comes a majority of the time."

There are plenty of running backs with some combination of attributes: speed, quickness, the ability to read blocks, pass-protection instincts and the intelligence to quickly diagnose a defense's intent. Few have all of these. Anderson is one of those select running backs.

As a runner's career progresses, he might lose a half-step of straight-line speed, or a half-tic of quickness in his cuts. But he can compensate with a greater understanding of the cerebral aspects of his position.

That's where Anderson knows he can grow. The more the Pro Bowler asks questions of Manning, and the more defensive looks he sees and learns how to diagnose, the better he gets.

"It just feels good to grow and keep working," he said. "You can learn every day."

Kenny "Night Train" Anunike on right NFL track

By Nicki Jhabvala DenverPost.com August 9, 2015

The call came Oct. 26, 2013, in Blacksburg, Va. On a third down in the red zone against 14th-ranked Virginia Tech, Duke's defensive coordinator, Jim Knowles, requested "The Train," a play he designed for his speedy 6-foot-5, 260-pound defensive end.

"He kept telling me, 'Coach, you call that and I'll get it done. I'll get a sack or I'll make something happen,' "Knowles said.

On cue "The Night Train" delivered, roaring through the line, beating one, two blocks before hitting Virginia Tech quarterback Logan Thomas. The ball came out of Thomas' hands and was ruled incomplete, setting up a field-goal try on fourth down.

No good.

The Night Train helped Duke post a 13-10 victory, its first over a ranked team in 19 years. It was a historic moment for a program that coach David Cutcliffe was in the process of restoring.

It also was a moment of validation in the six-year career — yes, six — of Kenny "Night Train" Anunike, a member of Cutcliffe's first recruiting class.

Anunike (pronounced AN-NU-NICKY) wears a new number now, and the blue on his jersey is a darker hue. But the Night Train is still running and he's making a strong impression in his second season with the Broncos through the first week of training camp.

Dig a little deeper and you will find there's much more to the lineman than a box score shows.

Higher education helpful

In 1979, Kenny's father, Emmanuel Anunike, left his village and all that he knew in Onitsha, Nigeria, and hopped on a plane bound for Boise, Idaho, in search of a better life and a better education.

"That concept 'Only in America,' where you can come here with almost nothing and become something spectacular, something great — that appealed to me," Emmanuel said. "It was something I wanted to be a part of."

Emmanuel had been raised by a father who had lived much of his life with only a second grade-level education because his mother couldn't afford school fees. It was a hardship Emmanuel didn't want to endure.

He now has three degrees — a bachelor's in architecture, a master's in urban studies and a Ph.D. in educational leadership — and works as an energy specialist for the Ohio Development Services Agency in Columbus.

From an early age, Kenny, the oldest of four siblings, was taught the value of higher education.

"That's my Nigerian culture," he said. "That's what we do. We get our education because without education, you have nothing."

There's a joke in the Anunike family that Emmanuel buys grades. But he's a picky shopper.

"I don't buy B's," he said. "I buy A's. If you get A's, you get something for that. But no B's."

To play football, as he loved, Kenny had to balance the A's with the X's and O's. And with the X-rays that all too often came along with football.

Kenny arrived at Duke in 2008 as a tight end and a biological anthropology and anatomy major. He redshirted his first season to recover from his first knee surgery. After two more surgeries on his left knee and a switch to the defensive line, he finally was on track to have his best season yet in 2011, recording his first two career sacks on Stanford star Andrew Luck. In the first three games, he made a conference-leading four sacks.

Then he suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament. Again.

Nearly every high was met with a low throughout Anunike's college career. Five, actually — four surgeries on his left knee, one on his right ankle.

"He was on a first-name basis with just about every doctor at Duke," said Dave Harding, a former Duke captain and offensive lineman. "Just when you thought Kenny was done for his career, he would fight back, and each time he came back, he'd have a better season than he had before."

Despite making regular appearances in the operating room, he wasn't about to quit football. Kenny had a routine and an education that made him better suited than most to handle recovery.

It helps when your anatomy professor also is your surgeon.

After being granted a sixth year of eligibility, Anunike left Duke in 2014 with 15 career sacks, 148 tackles, two bowl game appearances, numerous scars, one bachelor of arts degree and almost a master's degree.

Next stop on The Night Train: the NFL.

Textbooks and playbooks

It's hard to imagine how a power forward-sized player could be overlooked, but Anunike was. No NFL team was willing to draft a guy with more surgeries than full seasons in his college career.

The Broncos took a flier, signing him as an undrafted free agent a year ago. But Anunike couldn't escape his history. In the third quarter of the final preseason game, at Dallas, Anunike went down with an elbow injury. He was placed on injured reserve and sent back to rehab. Back to waiting. Back to hoping his health would hold out for more than a few games.

He also went back to what he knew best — balancing textbooks and playbooks. He was one course shy of completing his master's degree in liberal studies and had made a promise to his father that he would do so.

"I'm trying to be like him," Anunike said. "That's where I get my ambition. That's where I get my drive."

Anunike reached out to Dr. Deborah T. Gold, a professor of medical sociology at Duke, about setting up a long-distance system so he could finish his degree while rehabbing in Colorado.

"I know he's a great kid and has the best of intentions, but man, how is he going to find time?" Gold thought. "And yet, he was able to compartmentalize and to focus on this, which was important to his family, but also, in a very realistic way, was important to him."

His 50-plus-page thesis: "Coping with Injury: How High-Performance Athletes Mitigate the Biopsychosocial Consequences of Sports Injury."

Kenny graduated this past May, but has yet to see his degree.

"I gave them the address of my house in Ohio, put my dad's name on it and had them send it straight to him," he said. "This was for him. I had work to do here."

The work already has started to pay off, but it's far from finished.

Anunike has packed on about 13 pounds this summer to get to 273. But the Broncos' defensive line coach, Bill Kollar, would like to see him add a few more. If he can, there might be an opportunity for Anunike to play on a line whose depth has dwindled in recent weeks.

A spot on Denver's 53-man roster is where The Night Train is headed next. And his father, whose wish was granted with the master's degree, is on board.

"The reason I came to America, to fulfill my dreams — I can tell you this football thing is his dream," Emmanuel said. "I'm not bugging him for any education again. He's done it. It's all about football now."

Shaquil Barrett and his wife happy to see their perseverance pay off

By Nicki Jhabvala Denver Post September 6, 2015

Jordanna Barrett has been planning her dream wedding since the day she got married.

On Feb. 2, 2012, she and her fiancé stood in a sterile courtroom. She, nine months pregnant. He, a sophomore at Colorado State. Both teenagers, signing off — literally — on the next phase of their lives.

"We never shared vows," she said. "When we got married, we said we are going to have a wedding and we are going to exchange vows."

On Feb. 27, 2016, in her hometown of Omaha, Jordanna will again marry the man of her dreams in the big, glamorous wedding she's been envisioning for years. The one in the picturesque church, with the steeple and stained glass. The one with the real flowers. The one with some 250 guests, with eight bridesmaids and eight groomsmen. The one that is followed by an exotic honeymoon, just the two of them.

This wedding, though, won't be the start of something new, as it is with most couples. The Barretts' road to the altar has been long and rocky. This wedding will be a celebration, Jordanna said. A celebration of the past five years of their journey and of all the people who helped them get this far.

This one will celebrate their dream realized when he — Shaquil Barrett, a father of three, a husband and a 22-year-old outside linebacker — became a Bronco.

One door closes, another opens

After three seasons, 37 games, 245 tackles, 18 sacks and six forced fumbles, Shaquil saved one of his finest plays for last in his career at CSU. The Rams trailed Washington State by eight points with two minutes left in the 2013 New Mexico Bowl when Cougars running back Jeremiah Laufasa took the handoff at Washington State's 31-yard line. After three strides upfield, he was stopped in his tracks by Barrett, who snatched the ball out of his arms and fell on it.

The fumble and recovery set up a Rams touchdown and game-tying, two-point conversion. CSU went on to win 48-45.

"It's about being resilient," then-CSU coach Jim McElwain said afterward. "It's about understanding every play has a history and life of its own."

That play's history was one most college students don't choose to have. Barrett was a father of two at the time. He was playing for his family. And, he hoped, a future NFL paycheck.

"His kids are his pride and joy," Jordanna said. "If anybody watched us, that's the first thing they would see. His kids are who he is."

Jordanna learned she was pregnant with Shaquil Jr. not long after Shaquil Sr. learned the University of Nebraska at Omaha was shuttering its football program in 2011. He had just finished his freshman season with the Mavericks, and she had just completed high school. He decided to continue his dream at CSU. And she followed.

From 7 a.m. to 1 p.m., Jordanna worked as a nanny. She'd return home for a few hours, maybe see her husband for one after he finished school and football practice, then she'd race off to her second job, as a manager at Taco John's. She'd get home again at 1 a.m., only to wake up every few hours for night feedings before starting the process all over again. Shaquil picked up random work shifts where he could. He begged Jordanna to let him help at night with Shaquil Jr., now 3, and later with Braylon, 2.

"A lot of dads are like, 'You got it. You can handle it,' " Jordanna said. "He wanted to be a part of it."

They found help along the way. Former CSU cornerback Bernard Blake and his brother, Eric, volunteered to babysit, freeing up Jordanna to work in the mornings and, occasionally, allowing the couple to go on dates.

But the worry that comes with raising a family while one spouse juggles school and football and the other works and raises two children took its toll. The Barretts chose this and they wanted it and they have no regrets. But that didn't keep the "what ifs" from flooding their thoughts. What if Shaquil doesn't get drafted? What if he gets hurt? What will they do? Where will they go? What's next?

Shaquil promised his wife that his pursuit, this paycheck-to-paycheck lifestyle, would have a pot a gold at the end.

"I finally had to just listen to him or I was going to break down," she said. "I didn't know what the future held, but I knew his dream was to get to the NFL."

"I just love being around them"

Aaliyah Barrett, a baby girl Shaquil calls his little princess, was born March 30, 2015. She, like Braylon, was planned, timed so Shaquil could be there for her birth and enjoy her first couple months of life before football took over.

But football arrived earlier this year, and the need to secure a full-time job became even more pressing.

Barrett wasn't drafted after finishing his career at CSU, but the Broncos signed him as a free agent and kept him on the practice squad last year. He never got into a game.

So he and Jordanna teamed up to hurdle the next obstacle. He changed his diet to help improve his game. She made all the meals, tailoring a plan she received from his agent to his preferences. His body fat dropped from 18 percent to 11, and his comfort in new Broncos defensive coordinator Wade Phillips' 3-4 alignment grew.

For nearly a month during training camp this summer, Barrett was separated from his family. Jordanna and the kids visited her family in Omaha while he focused on football. Every morning, though, no matter if he had returned from a game the previous night at 3 a.m., Shaquil would wake up at 8 a.m. to FaceTime his wife and kids, to tell them how much he loved them and how much he missed them before heading off to work.

"I just love being around them, making them laugh and playing around with them," he said. "It makes their day and it makes mine."

Shaquil, a name unfamiliar to most Broncos fans at the start of the summer, made a splash during the exhibition schedule. He recorded a team-high 16 tackles (13 solo) and tied for a league high with four sacks. Four months ago the Broncos boasted two elite edge pass rushers, Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware, and held out high hopes for first-round draft pick Shane Ray. Now they might have four.

The hype is nice every now and again. But it's not why Barrett is here. And it's not why his family will be celebrating, together, in February. "Not many people set that high of a goal and actually get there," Jordanna said. "He has. It's been a hard road, and we're at a point now where we can just live."

Omar Bolden looks to get his kicks on returns for Broncos

By Troy Renck DenverPost.com May 31, 2015

There he is, in open field, the place he envisions when he closes his eyes at night. Everyone in the stadium watches him, eyes following, excitement increasing, danger lurking.

Twice, Omar Bolden found himself loose on kickoff returns last season, racing toward the end zone. Twice, a kicker helped prevent a score. Though the stops mitigated his satisfaction, it didn't change a salient truth as the Broncos continue their offseason workouts this week: Bolden is a weapon for a team committed to improving on special teams.

He didn't qualify among the league leaders because of too few attempts, but Bolden's 33.3-yard average last season led all players with at least 10 returns. He plans to continue ripping off big chunks of yards, not interested in losing his spot.

"I'm going to go on and say that is my job. I want it and I want it bad," Bolden said. "I want to lead the league in kick-return yards."

Looking to caffeinate a lethargic return game, former coach John Fox provided Bolden an opportunity Nov. 23 against Miami. He responded with 100 yards on three returns. Bolden's path up field resembled a dart, not an S, helping explain his success.

"I have no fear," said Bolden, quick to credit the 10 blockers in front of him.

Dating to his college days at Arizona State, Bolden has embraced the return game. Entering his fourth pro season, he seeks to provide more impact for the Broncos.

The key remains doing more with less, explained new special teams boss Joe DeCamillis. Bolden returned only five kicks at home last season, where touchbacks are the norm. On, the road, Bolden delivered a team-best 77-yard return at Cincinnati, helping the Broncos counter the explosive performance of the Bengals' Adam Jones. Bolden finished with a 31-yard average his last seven returns on the road.

He missed only in one regard, failing to provide a touchdown.

"I'm trying to score a lot of touchdowns for the team and have exciting plays for us on special teams," Bolden said.

While kickoff chances are few — the Broncos' 32 returns ranked 25th in the NFL — punts are not. Denver proved pedestrian in that area, only receiving a lift when Wes Welker took over late in the season. He's gone, but Bolden, Jordan Norwood, Kyle Williams, Solomon Patton, Emmanuel Sanders and Isaiah Burse are in the mix. Burse held the job for much of last season, but requires better to earn a roster spot. Norwood appeared to secure the role before tearing an ACL in his knee late in training camp. Williams (San Francisco) and Patton (Tampa Bay) held the role at various times with their previous teams.

"If we've got a guy that's a speed guy, we need to get him outside more, and we are going to do that," explained DeCamillis on his plans to boost the returns. "If we have a guy that's more middle of the field, take one cut and go, we're going to do that, too. We've got to find what our guys do best. ... We've got to be a great punt return team."

Broncos David Bruton wants to make jump from special teams ace to just 'special'

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com September 29, 2015

In some ways for Denver Broncos safety David Bruton Jr., whether he's being called "awesome" by his head coach these days or getting some live broadcast love during a primetime appearance for the team, he's an overnight sensation that's been seven years in the making.

But with the Broncos' first-year coaching staff has come the kind of playing time Bruton has always hoped for in the first place. And after spending his first six seasons as a special teams ace who could play on defense if needed, Bruton is now a key contributor on the league's No. 1 defense.

"It's always fresh to kind of break that label a little bit," Bruton said. "I've been heralded as a special teams guy for years and I can't necessarily downplay it. I've been here in the league and here with the Broncos for that reason for so long. Having a fresh set of eyes, going out there and competing and still building on what I started last year, it's definitely great. I'm relishing the opportunity and the moments and taking full advantage of any chance that I get."

Three games, and three wins, into the season for the Broncos and Bruton has made plays to help seal two of those victories. He created the interception opportunity for safety Darian Stewart in the season-opening win against the Ravens and intercepted Detroit Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford in the closing minutes this past Sunday.

For the season Bruton is not only up to his usual business -- he's tied for the team lead in special teams tackles -- but he's played 59 percent of the defense's snaps and has a sack, the interception, three passes defensed and forced a fumble.

"It's been awesome, hasn't it?" said Broncos coach Gary Kubiak. "It's been special ... We're only three weeks deep and he has been a factor in every week -- just very proud of David."

Bruton began to carve out some room for himself on defense in last season when he finished with 17 percent of the defensive snaps for the season – 188 plays – those largely on passing downs. It was more than he's had in most of his seasons -- he started two games in 2010 to go with three games (one regular-season and two in playoffs in 2011) -- but not as much as he had hoped to have.

But after Rahim Moore's departure in free agency this past season offseason left plenty of playing time up for grabs -- Moore was one of two Broncos' defensive players to play more than 1,000 snaps in 2014 - Bruton said throughout the spring and summer he considered himself to be a viable option, that he considered "myself as a starter."

Bruton started the opener when T.J. Ward was suspended for a violation of the league's personal conduct policy and has played in the team's dime package (six defensive backs) in the second and third games. But because of Bruton's versatility in coverage, or lined up as a weak-side linebacker at times in some of the specialty looks, defensive coordinator Wade Phillips has been willing to play the six-defensive back look on a bigger variety of down-and-distance situations.

Bruton's interception against the Lions, when he cut underneath Calvin Johnson to first tip, and then catch, Matthew Stafford's throw, came on a third-and-12 situation. Johnson was beyond the first down marker, in Broncos' territory, when Bruton intercepted the ball in a game Denver led by five points at the time.

"It was just a formation where we knew what was coming," Bruton said. "They've had a high tendency to show a particular play ... We were just alert ... It was just a great read and I got just enough depth to be able to get a hand on the ball and control it."

With left tackle Ryan Clady on injured reserve, Bruton, who was a fourth-round pick by the Broncos in the 2009 draft, is the longest-tenured player with the Broncos on the team's current roster. And in the right-place, right-time department, the team's defensive staff figures to keep putting him in the lineup given they want to play a long list of players to keep everyone fresh and given the way Bruton has produced when he has played.

The Broncos used 20 different players for at least two snaps on defense in the win over the Lions.

"All of our personalities get a chance to show [on defense]," Bruton said. "Not to say that we're arrogant, but we're very confident players, and the fact that we're playing so well definitely boosts our confidence even more ... I alluded to what coach Phillips mentioned the first day in OTAs. We have our own assignments, but our responsibility is to get to the ball."

Bubba Caldwell may have hauled in another roster spot

By Mike Klis 9 News Sport August 25, 2015

Rahim Moore moved up to cover the tight end hook pattern, leaving his former teammate Andre "Bubba" Caldwell alone with his thoughts.

Denver Broncos quarterback Brock Osweiler had thrown a gorgeous pass. A beauty. It hung in spiral form for seemingly minutes. Caldwell was a good two strides, maybe three, past Houston Texans cornerback A.J. Bouye who thought, mistakenly, that safety Moore would be there for over-the-top help.

Instead, Moore saw Broncos' tight end Dominique Jones wide open in front of him on a hook pattern.

Caldwell was running alone looking back at the ball falling, trying not to notice the 68,677 fans watching.

"They're the worst ones when you're so open, you start thinking," Caldwell said. "You think, get in my hands, just catch it, and get in the end zone. But Brock did a great job putting it on the money making it easy for me."

Caldwell did haul in the 57-yard heave from Osweiler for the touchdown in the Broncos' 14-10 preseason win Saturday against the Texans.

"As I watched it on film, as soon as Brock let the ball go you see Rahim clapping his hands saying to himself, 'man,'" Caldwell said. "The tight end (Jones) did a great job of getting open. That opened it up for me."

Caldwell may not have needed the big play to make the Broncos' 53-man roster for a fourth consecutive season but it won't hurt. Once again, Caldwell appears destined to become the Broncos' No. 4 receiver – behind Demaryius Thomas, Emmanuel Sanders and Cody Latimer, but trying to fend off Jordan Norwood, Bennie Fowler, Nathan Palmer, Solomon Patton, Jordan Taylor and Isaiah Burse.

"These other receivers are no slouches at all," Caldwell said. "I go through this every year. I just focus on me. In this league they try to replace you with younger, faster, bigger guys every year. I worry about doing my job, making plays and hopefully get another chance to be on a team."

This would be Caldwell's eighth NFL season. He played his first four years with the Cincinnati Bengals, where for three seasons he was their No. 3 receiver but he found the Denver pass-catching group a little deeper with talent.

But receiver is only part of Caldwell's game, and maybe not even the biggest part.

"Special teams is a big part of my game -- that helped me survive for going on my eighth year," Caldwell said. "I try to play offense well and special teams really well and you've got a good shot of making it."

Caldwell and his wife Niche' have one child and another due in March. He's made a decent living in the NFL, but it doesn't last forever and his $1.35 million salary this year is the first time he's crossed into seven figures.

Yes, playing football is the life, but when you have a family, there must be consideration for life after football.

"There can be stress because you're the provider, you're the breadwinner for the most part, and football is the means of me taking care of my family," Caldwell said. "So I leave it all on the field so I can provide a good future for them."

Veteran Colquitt chooses to lead by example

By Allie Raymond DenverBroncos.com May 30, 2015

Entering the 2015 offseason as the longest-tenured specialist isn't something that punter Britton Colquitt expected or thought about.

"It's not something you think about all the time," said Colquitt of his veteran status. "I guess I don't feel that old."

Colquitt might not be 'that old', but with 80 regular-season and seven postseason game appearances under his belt after seven years with the Broncos, the punter has more than enough experience to help lead the group of young specialists.

"I try to lead by example," said Colquitt. "I've got to really work hard, show what it means to be a pro. I'm still learning that. I still look for more ways that I can do things to make me a better player and just try to lead by example."

With the addition of first-year Special Teams Coordinator Joe DeCamillis, Colquitt's experience is invaluable to the specialists. His professionalism and attitude hasn't gone unnoticed by DeCamillis.

"The biggest thing is... you want to see to a pro... and I think he is," said DeCamillis of his first impressions of Colquitt. "He's done a great job so far. It's a different system for him, it's a little bit different – what we're asking him to do - and he's bought in completely so far. So we've got to keep him on that path and so far he's been hitting the ball excellent."

The franchise career leader in gross (45.5) and net (39.0) punting average, Colquitt is already feeling comfortable under the direction of DeCamillis.

"It's going really good, he's a great guy, a great coach obviously, he's been around a lot of years, so he knows what he's doing," said Colquitt. "With us, the specialists in particular, he's big on working and looking at film and stuff like that and that's something that at our position you could easily get away from.

"He's a coach who's there pushing you, but also is cool off the field and just a fun guy to be around. So I think he's definitely going to make an impact and guys are already starting to buy into his ideas."

Each year as a Bronco, Colquitt not only gains more experience, but also becomes more comfortable. When asked what differences he's noticed this offseason in comparison to 2014, Colquitt says it hit him this year that Denver feels like home.

"I feel like now that I've been in Denver going on seven years, its feels more like home," said Colquitt. "Like I'm a real part of this organization, whereas before, you're kind of just hoping. It's not that I'm complacent, I just feel like I have more pride in this team and more of a reason to want to help us to do well and win."

Owen Daniels came for Kubiak, Manning, finds paradise

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press June 15, 2015

For Owen Daniels, this is heaven.

His quarterback is Peyton Manning.

And he's living in Colorado.

Daniels smiled at the mention of each of these benefits as the Broncos began their final week of offseason workouts Monday.

The big tight end from the University of Wisconsin reunited with Kubiak, who's been at his side for his entire NFL career, and he brings pedigree to a position where Manning lost Pro Bowler Julius Thomas in free agency.

In what he calls "a big bonus," Daniels gets to watch the ferocious spring storms roll over the snowcapped Rocky Mountains and swirl across the sky before re-gathering in a fury over the Great Plains.

Perfect for a weather geek like him.

Daniels majored in meteorology in Madison and has made occasional appearances on TV talking about forecasts and football, like the time he worked alongside Al Roker two years ago.

Daniels' interest in the climate dates to his childhood in the southwestern suburbs of Chicago. Like many kids, he was scared of storms, terrified of thunder, phobias he tackled before ever picking up a football.

"I remember seeing funnel clouds by my house growing up," Daniels said. "If there was some strong winds blowing through, I kind of freaked out."

So, he set out to learn all he could about watches and warnings, troughs and twisters. A hobby took shape as his curiosity conquered his anxiety.

"The fear turned into an excitement and an adrenaline rush," said Daniels. "As I got older, I became less of a wimp about it. I started to think it was really, really cool."

When friends dropped by his house they were just as likely to see Daniels absorbed in The Weather Channel as MTV or ESPN.

When he went to Wisconsin, he dived into atmospheric and oceanic studies.

"That was kind of a rude awakening because the classwork and the workload are just ridiculous," Daniels said. "I remember I had three semesters of calculus, three semesters of calculus-based physics, aerodynamics, differential equations, all stuff that really weeds people out. Your casual weather geek might not want to stick around and do all that work."

Daniels did.

"I still love it. Right now I'm paying attention to this tropical storm that's going to run through Houston," where Daniels maintains his offseason home.

When he's not catching passes from Manning or blocking for him, Daniels is often sky-gazing.

"It's amazing. I have never had this kind of perspective on the weather," Daniels said. "You have peaks and valleys in the Denver area, so it seems like you can see forever."

One day last week, Daniels was so enthralled by "this ridiculous thunderstorm complex" that he pulled over to snap photos from his car on his way home from minicamp.

"It's crazy. Every picture was different," Daniels said. "Being in Houston, you don't get that perspective. It's so flat down there you can't see too far. It's obstructed views. Here, it's unbelievable to see that type of stuff."

After watching spring snowstorms in April and May, Daniels is eager to see what the summer, fall and winter brings.

"For a weather person, it's exciting because you get to see everything. From day to day can be totally different. From morning to night," Daniels said. "It's just more volatile because you get the hot air and then if you get a tropical flow from the south, you get those air masses combining with each other.

"It's a recipe for some awesome stuff happening," he said, smiling at the thought.

Then, looking around, he leaned in closer, whispering, "If you're into that weather stuff."

He doesn't broadcast his weatherman ambitions, but some of his teammates know this and they'll ask him what kind of cloud that is or will it rain this afternoon?

Daniels figures he'll be putting his meteorology degree to work one of these days, saying, "You can't play football forever and I'm going to want to do something when I'm done."

First, he wants to experience a rain of confetti that's eluded him.

"I'm just trying to win a championship — or help a team win a championship," Daniels said. "So, to me this is the best place to be doing this. You know how much Peyton wants to win. You know how much Kubiak wants to win. And Colorado's beautiful."

Part of his progression is seeing the game through a wider lens. Davis believes knowing what the defensive line and safeties are doing every play will "just allow me to know exactly where I fit in."

Davis stuck out in his hometown of Palmdale, Calif. this spring. From his high school mentors to people on the street, Davis received recognition. It motivated Davis to provide more starry-eyed kids — just like he was — an opportunity. He will hold the Todd Davis Football Camp on July 11 at Highland High School in Palmdale.

"I remember (former Bronco) Marlon McCree had a camp that I went to, and I just know how much it meant to me to meet some players and learn some things I wasn't getting before," Davis said. "I want to give back."

The story figures to resonate because of Davis' resume. He was an afterthought, considered too slow, too small for the NFL. Now, he is candidate to start, to see meaningful snaps, better equipped after his first experience on that Monday night.

"That game, it was like 'aaahhh... man.' But after the first half, I realized I can do this," Davis said. "I realized I am made for this and that I just have to trust that and go out there and play."

Inside look at inside linebacker

Todd Davis took a strange path up the Broncos' depth chart, claimed off waivers from the New Orleans Saints on Nov. 13and thrust into a starting role after Brandon Marshall's foot injury. NFL reporter Troy E. Renck analyzes his highlights:

- Made career-high seven tackles vs. Cincinnati after difficult first half.
- Played 61 snaps in regular-season finale victory over Oakland.
- Graded out strong in run defense on 37 plays during Broncos' playoff loss to the Colts.
- Appeared in 45 games for Sacramento State, finishing second in school history with 351 tackles.

How He Fits: Fifth-round CB Lorenzo Doss

Andrew Mason DenverBroncos.com May 2, 2015

With 15 interceptions and two fumble recoveries in three seasons as a cornerback at Tulane, Lorenzo Doss showed a knack for being around the football, which resulted from above-average anticipation and the ability to read the quarterback's intent before the throw.

"He has tremendous ball skills and cover skills. So we're excited about getting him," Executive Vice President/General Manager John Elway said.

Given the Broncos' cornerback depth, he will have to transfer those skills to the practice field this summer if he is to see any substantial playing time beyond special teams, where he could project as a gunner.

At 5-foot-10 and 182 pounds, Doss' frame would project to being a nickel cornerback, working against small, quick receivers and using his anticipation to jump routes.

But the Broncos are so stacked at cornerback that opportunities might be scarce if the team has good health at the position. Chris Harris Jr. built his reputation as a slot cornerback before moving to a dual role that put him in the Pro Bowl; Bradley Roby also has the ability to work inside. Aqib Talib is a Pro Bowler on the outside. Kayvon Webster returns as a No. 4 cornerback, with Omar Bolden getting more looks at safety.

Doss would appear to be in a scrum for playing time with Webster, veteran Tony Carter and former Green Wave teammate Taurean Nixon, one of three Broncos seventh-round selections. If Doss shows the same takeaway touch he demonstrated at Tulane, he could have an edge and might earn repetitions in dime packages this year.

Bennie Fowler again introduced at Ford Field

By Mike Klis 9 News September 28, 2015

Ford Field knows Bennie Fowler.

The NFL had no clue who Fowler was until Sunday night. But Ford Field is a place where Fowler historically has introduced himself.

"I got my first catch in college here," Fowler said Sunday night following the Broncos' 24-12 win against the Detroit Lions. "Now I got my first NFL catch here. Played two (high school) state championships here."

He helped Detroit Country Day win the state basketball championship his sophomore year (spring semester) of 2007 and state football championship his senior year (fall semester) in 2008.

He spent five years in the Michigan State Spartans' football program, making his first catch, for 8 yards, as a redshirt freshman in 2010 against Florida Atlantic and not really getting to play much receiver until his junior year.

Undrafted last year, Fowler signed with the Broncos as a college free agent, spent the entire 2014 season on their practice squad then emerged in August in a preseason game at Houston.

His first NFL catch came with 8:35 remaining in the second quarter Sunday, a 13-yard grab on a pass thrown by Peyton Manning. Fowler finished with four catches for 50 yards.

He knew from last week's game plan he might get a chance.

"I knew I would play a little bit," Fowler said. "I didn't know I was going to get the ball that much but I'm not mad about that."

Fowler has moved ahead of Cody Latimer, the Broncos' second-round draft pick last year, as the No. 5 receiver.

Max Garcia: "Don't feel sorry for me"

By Mike Klis 9 News Sport August 27, 2015

Whatever joy there may have been inside the Denver Broncos' locker room for the signing of Evan Mathis, it was tempered by the realization Max Garcia had lost his starting job.

"Don't feel sorry for me," said Garcia, whose days as the Broncos' No. 1 left guard are numbered until Mathis gets in shape. "I'm happy to be a part of this team. I'm content with the situation. I'm just going to keep striving to get better."

That type of maturity explains why Garcia almost pulled off the upset and became the starting left guard even though he is a rookie who wasn't drafted until the fourth round.

It wasn't Garcia so much as Broncos' general manager John Elway didn't want to stack three offensive linemen with zero NFL playing experience – rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo, Garcia and center Matt Paradis – together in front of star quarterback Peyton Manning.

And the best blocker available to break up those baby Broncos was Mathis, an 11-year NFL veteran who is coming off back-to-back Pro Bowl appearances.

"We needed a little bit of experience, especially on that left side," Elway said. "Evan's able to bring that plus a Pro Bowl-caliber type player. ... Max has a tremendous career ahead of him. This has nothing to do with how Max was playing."

Keep in mind, the Broncos only gave Mathis a one-year deal. Garcia can get his job back next year. He had moved ahead of Ben Garland as the Broncos' top left guard in the second week of training camp.

Garcia started the first two preseason games at left guard and he'll be with the No. 1 unit Saturday against the San Francisco 49ers as Mathis probably won't play until the regular-season opener Sept. 13 against the Baltimore Ravens.

"It's part of the business, part of the game," Garcia told 9NEWS Thursday. "I feel like it's a good move for the team. I'm not going to take it personal by any means. I know the coaches have been impressed with me, they have confidence in me, they have trust in me. I think this is for the overall betterment of the team. It's a good move. I'm still going to prepare like I'm the guy like I've been doing."

Virgil Green versed in versatility

By Allie Raymond DenverBroncos.com September 1, 2015

Standing at an imposing height of 6 feet 5 inches with what looks like 255 pounds of sheer muscle, tight end Virgil Green says and looks like he can do just about anything.

But that's not quite the case.

"I can't draw," Green says, smiling. "My dad's really good at drawing, my brother's really good and I would try to draw and none of my artistic designs would ever come out decent."

While art may not be Green's strong suit, he says it's really the only thing he can't do. That's a bold statement, but one look at Green could make anyone believe it. "If I can try it, I can pretty much probably do it," Green said.

Not only has Green played most positions on the offense—including a few practice snaps on offensive line (though none at quarterback)—since his arrival in Denver four years ago, but he's also played a laundry list of other sports since he was a child. Green played football, basketball, track and field and soccer.

Combined, each has made him the all-around athlete he is today.

"Just being versatile – being able to do different things," said Green of what all those sports taught him. "Basketball, you have to be able to play defense and offense. So, I think that helps out athletically."

At Tulare Union High School in Tulare, California, Green lettered four years in basketball and a year in track and field. In basketball, he played power forward and in track, he participated in sprints, vertical jumps and even threw the shot put.

"I didn't start playing football until I got to high school," Green. "I was a basketball guy, I loved basketball, wanted to play basketball in the NBA. It didn't work out that way. I turned out to be a lot better at football, and I only went out because all my friends play, and that's how it all began."

In football, Green had the opportunity to showcase his talents and versatility across a multitude of positions before finding his fit.

"I played linebacker to start — outside linebacker — and then my junior year, they moved me to tight end, receiver," Green said. "Then my senior year I played wide receiver." After a successful high school campaign, Green and his family were faced with a new challenge in his college recruitment.

"It was crazy," Green said. "My dad, he didn't play football or basketball or anything. He road dirt bikes for a living, growing up. He knew everything you could know about dirt bikes, but we didn't know too much about the recruiting process and things like that. We just went with our gut with how things felt. Nevada seemed like the right place for me to go."

At Nevada, Green moved back to tight end but continued to line up at different positions on offense in the Wolf Pack's scheme.

"In college, especially for a tight end, you have to play all positions, really," Green said. "To me, for any tight end at any level, you've got to be able to play multiple positions because it creates mismatches. It creates havoc for defenses and that's kind of what our coach demanded for us at Nevada. I carried the ball in college before, I've gotten a pitch, and I've gotten a shovel pass. I've pretty much done it all at the tight end position."

After sitting out his first season at Nevada due to injury, Green tallied 939 receiving yards on 72 receptions and added 11 touchdowns in his three seasons. From 2007-10, Green helped the Wolf Pack rank fifth in the nation with 500.2 total yards per game. As a senior, he recorded a personal-best 35 catches for 515 yards with five touchdowns, earning him first-team All-Mountain West Conference honors.

Those stats were good enough to get him a ticket to the 2011 NFL Combine in Indianapolis at Lucas Oil Stadium where he had his shot at proving his athleticism to scouts from all 32 teams. Upon his arrival, Green was heralded for his superior ball skills, something that could easily be attributed to his time on the basketball court. He was a top performer in the 40-yard dash, vertical jump, broad jump, three-cone drill and 60-yard shuttle — just like his days as a track and field athlete. Green excelled in the vertical jump, a common measure to show a player's explosiveness. His 42 1/2-inch vertical ties for the eighth-best mark all-time and the second-best for a tight end in NFL Combine history.

After an impressive showing at the combine, it wasn't surprising the Broncos selected Green in the 2011 Draft.

Four years later, he is still a vital part of the Broncos offense. Primarily a blocking tight end in his rookie season, Green saw action in 15 regular-season games while blocking for the league's No. 1 rushing attack (164.5 ypg). In his career, Green has amassed more than 200 receiving yards and averages nine yards per catch.

Last March, after four years with the Broncos, Green decided to re-sign and spend three more years playing in the orange and blue.

The choice was easy for Green and his wife Marianne, a former Nevada basketball player.

"I've built so many different relationships out here," Green said. "I work with United Way, my financial advisor lives out here, my wife has a job out here, it just all pretty much fit the puzzle for what we're trying to do in our life."

With the addition of new Head Coach Gary Kubiak and Offensive Coordinator Rick Dennison this spring, Green is excited and looking forward to the changes on the offense. In the first preseason game at Seattle, Green was the sole Bronco to haul in a touchdown on the night.

"Virgil is obviously a really good athlete," Tight Ends Coach Brian Pariani said. "Playing in this system is going to be really good for him because we're tight end-friendly. He has skills, he can catch the ball. You're able to see him put his foot in the ground and run away from people and he's had a chance to make plays not only in practice, but he had a chance to go do it in a game. Once somebody does it in a game, no one can take it away from them."

Green echoed Pariani's sentiments on the offense. Against the Seahawks in August, he led the team in receiving with five catches for 45 yards.

"Somebody asked me earlier after the game if I think it is a tight end-friendly offense and I felt like the first three passes of the game, I caught three balls," Green said. "So that's pretty friendly to me. I just think it can do a lot of things in the run game and in the pass game and we can win a lot of games with that."

Green also has impressed Kubiak this year beyond the X's and O's.

"Virgil's a warrior," Kubiak said. "He's beat up, he's had a finger, he's had a toe, you name it — Virgil has not missed a day."

That fighter attitude ties into Green's goals for the 2015 season. Not one for losing, he's committed to bringing a championship home to Denver no matter what.

"To me, I only play this game for one reason: It's for championships," Green said.

"My wife always tells me that I'm a sore loser and she's correct. I am a sore loser. I hate losing, I don't want to lose, I don't accept losing, I pretty much don't care how the game goes as long as we come out with the 'W.' I don't care how many touchdowns I have in a game — if we lose, it doesn't matter. It doesn't count. It's all about winning."

He may not be an artist, but Green is poised for a breakout season, and fans and coaches alike will be able to see his unique palette of skills and how much it can add to the Broncos offense.

Don't Call Me Underrated

By Chris Harris Jr. The Players' Tribune September 17, 2015

I've always been an underdog.

In college, I had a great career. I started every game. I had the second-most tackles in Kansas history. I was one of the best players, offense or defense, in the nation.

When draft day came around in 2011, I sat in a room with my family and friends waiting for my phone to ring.

But it didn't ring. I wasn't drafted at all.

There's a huge stigma to going undrafted. Not a lot of people talk about it, but there is. For a guy who's drafted, and in particular drafted high, you're allowed to make so many more mistakes. People want you to succeed, and any shortcomings you have are viewed as temporary. An "adjustment phase."

When you're undrafted, you just don't have that same margin for error. You have to go above and beyond — and then above and beyond that.

Like a lot of guys who were snubbed in the draft, I play with a chip on my shoulder. Every play is an opportunity to prove wrong everyone who did not recognize my talent.

As an undrafted player, you're playing every game against a team that passed on you ... with every single pick they owned. Other coaches, other players and even some members of the media assume there must be a reason you were not drafted.

They're looking, waiting, just hoping for you to make a mistake.

Why?

Because if you do make one, they can think to themselves, "Oh. That's why he went undrafted. Okay. We're fine. We did our jobs." And that's the stigma you don't hear as much about. It's not just that everyone thinks you're a fringe player. It's that, in this weird way, everyone wants you to be one.

Name. Pedigree. Reputation. They're hard to overcome.

Luckily, I came in with veteran players who didn't care about any of that. And I mean I got really lucky. I got two all-timers: Brian Dawkins and Champ Bailey. Out of everyone in the league, those were probably the two best and most professional guys to be able to play under. I got both of them. And once they saw I could play, nothing else mattered. They wanted to win. Pretty soon they were fighting our coaches to put me in.

I made first-team All Rookie that year. And I've been playing on an elite level ever since.

But still, there's that stigma. Even after you prove yourself, it follows you around. It's the difference between having and lacking pedigree: When you have it, you're "confirming." When you lack it, you're "proving."

Sometimes, it's in subtle ways. When I tore my ACL last January, a lot of people wrote me off. Most guys, if they tear their ACL at 25, people are optimistic. But with me, for whatever reason, it was like, "He won't get it back. He's on the downside now."

I came back in seven months, which shocked people. Then I put up a Pro-Bowl and All-Pro season, which shocked them even more.

Earlier this summer, the football analytics site Pro Football Focus released their annual list of the Top 100 players in the NFL. I came in at No. 4 — behind only J.J. Watt, Aaron Rodgers and Justin Houston.

When the list came out, some people made a big deal about my ranking being so high.

But to me, it honestly didn't seem strange at all.

To arrive at their rankings, Pro Football Focus uses a lot of advanced metrics — high-end stats and high-end film. But at the same time, they really only use one metric, and it's the simplest one there is: performance. I'll quote them: "This list is based solely on 2014 play. Nothing that happened in previous years or may happen in the future is accounted for. This isn't about class or talent; it's about form throughout 2014."

And that's what separates the PFF list from other lists. It's name-blind, pedigree-blind and reputation-blind. It asks one question: Did you perform? And it measures one thing: How did that performance stack up against the rest of the league?

There are two main things you want from a cornerback: First, don't give up touchdowns. And second, don't give up big plays. I didn't give up a single touchdown last year. And I didn't give up a single play over 22 yards. Zero and zero. If I was a pitcher in baseball, I'd have pitched a shutout — for an entire season.

A couple of months later, NFL Network released its own Top 100 list. In a way, it was the complete opposite of the Pro Football Focus list. This one, voted on by players, had no defined criteria.

And when a list's criteria are "undefined," what that really means is they're defined by our default settings — the instinctive ways that we judge people: Name. Pedigree. Reputation.

So when the NFL Network list came out, I didn't even need to look. I could already guess. And I guessed right.

Remembered by facts and forgotten by opinions: That's the life of the undrafted underdog in the NFL.

So, yeah, I know I'm not the most famous player. I know I'm always going to rank higher on certain lists than others. But I know who I am. I know what I'm capable of. And I know there is only one way to make sure that people never forget my name.

Win the Super Bowl.

OT Ryan Harris: from Bronco to former Bronco to veteran Bronco

By Troy Renck DenverPost.com August 9, 2015

Ryan Harris remembers when he quit baseball. A hulking first baseman at Cretin-Derham Hall school in St. Paul, Minn., he buckled on his first curveball.

"I jumped out of the way," Harris said of his freshman year. "I couldn't hit it."

The right offensive tackle watched teammate Joe Mauer, who struck out once in high school, slug all pitches and figured it was time to move on. The two teamed on the gridiron. Mauer, a quarterback, turned down Florida State to join the Minnesota Twins. Harris went to Notre Dame, beginning a journey that has resembled a slalom course on his way back to the Broncos.

Once too young, once too injured, Harris believes he has found the right team at the right time. At age 30, the 6-foot-5, 302-pounder holds the Broncos starting job at right tackle, five years since he last played in Denver and two years since he worked for coach Gary Kubiak in Houston.

"Every year you grow," Harris said. "I understand so much more how the little things matter. At the same time, time is running out on my career to win a championship. It was always the goal, but now getting older and hopefully wiser, I just really want that championship. And I think it's just a great opportunity to do so here."

Harris made Denver home since the Broncos drafted him with the sixth pick of the third round in 2007. He played 46 games in four seasons before a back issue sidelined him. His career in limbo, Harris bounced back in Kansas City last year, starting 15 games. As a free agent, his phone rang, but the offers weren't serious.

"I am not going to lie, that surprised me because I thought I played well," Harris admitted.

The Broncos were one of the teams to begin preliminary talks in mid-May. Everything changed when Harris' good friend Ryan Clady, someone he considers family, suffered a season-ending torn ACL in his left knee May 29.

Added for depth, Harris supplanted Chris Clark a few days into training camp. Kubiak has witnessed a change in Harris since their time together in Houston.

"I can say this: Ryan is a little different guy this time around. I really see a hunger from him. I know he's a little older. I think he sees an opportunity here," Kubiak said. "He's taking care of himself a lot better. We'll see where it goes. But he's doing a good job."

As a player ages, no detail becomes too small. Harris improved his training, his diet. He sleeps more. Everything from his prepractice routine to his drill work reflects his experience.

"You see quarterbacks come out onto the field early to warm up, but few others," Harris said. "I like to get out there and get my hips warmed up, move around and start thinking about the points of emphasis. And this (zone-blocking) scheme is familiar. I can play and not think as much. I also know how teams try to attack certain plays."

Training camp brings challenges. Harris stays humble by squaring off frequently with edge rusher Von Miller, who turns tackles into turnstiles.

"He's making me a better player," Harris said. "I am taking nothing for granted. Believe me."

The Broncos boast a chilling amount of youth up front. Harris and Louis Vasquez have played 15 NFL seasons. The remaining three players now starting — center Max Paradis, left guard Max Garcia and left tackle Ty Sambrailo — have played zero combined NFL games.

It's a curveball most weren't expecting. Harris understands the anxiety but insists it can work.

"Don't worry, we got this," said Harris on what he would tell fans. "The first year I started in 2008, Ryan Clady was a rookie left tackle, Chris Kuper hadn't played and was at right guard and I was at right tackle. That whole season together, we allowed (12) sacks. You are not something until you are, and we believe we will be a great part of this team."

Ronnie Hillman breathes life into Broncos' run game

By Nicki Jhabvala Denver Post October 4, 2015

Broncos coach Gary Kubiak explained, succinctly, what needed to happen.

After three games and three wins and three shaky offensive showings, Kubiak still was searching for a run game that, in January, validated his reasoning to move to the zone-blocking scheme. Heading into Sunday's game against Minnesota he still was searching for the performances that helped running back C.J. Anderson to his first Pro Bowl a year ago and could help alleviate the pressure on 39-year old quarterback Peyton Manning.

So Kubiak issued the challenge last week. Sometimes, he said, despite all the changes on the offensive line in front of them, the running backs have to create their own space. They have to make defenders miss.

On Sunday, in the Broncos' 23-20 victory over the Vikings, the backs met the challenge. After gaining just 171 yards rushing through three games, the Broncos ran for 146 yards on 22 carries.

It was Ronnie Hillman, a backup, who did the most to breathe life into a run game that had been on life support, gaining 103 yards on 11 carries.

In the second quarter, Hillman fielded a pitch to the left from Manning out of the pistol formation and bolted through the scrum and up the left sideline 72 yards for the score and a 10-0 lead. It was the fourth-longest run from scrimmage in Broncos history.

"You always need something to spark the running game," Hillman said. "This week, it was just our time."

Kubiak described it as a "huge play," but one wasn't enough to change his plan on how to use Anderson and Hillman.

"We're going to play them both. I think they both improved over the course of this past week. We banged pretty good on Thursday and I think they responded," Kubiak said.

The opportunities and the handoffs kept coming to Anderson, even after Hillman's score. But so did the frustration.

On third-and-10 in the final seconds of the third quarter, Anderson plowed through the line for a gain of 9 yards. He slapped the ground and stood up with a glare of dissatisfaction, knowing he came up short.

"There were a couple big runs that I knew I could have had if I stepped out of a tackle," said Anderson, who ran for 43 yards. "So I was really more frustrated with myself. I wasn't frustrated with what was going on. It was more with me, in breaking the tackle and getting out of there."

Anderson had a huge run with the game on the line. After a defensive holding call on Minnesota moved the Broncos to the Vikings' 38-yard line with the game tied at 20 and the clock at 2:20, Anderson burst through the line for a 13-yard gain. That set up Brandon McManus for a game winning 39-yard field goal.

"A lot of lanes today," Anderson said. "It's up to me and (Ronnie) to step out a little bit more on tackles so we can get what we want. But give credit to the O-line. They played their (butts) off today, and that's what you love as a running back. It's up to us to make that one person miss so we can have those big runs. like Ronnie had."

The Broncos' offensive line continued its dance. A shoulder injury to starting left tackle Ty Sambrailo forced Kubiak to call up Michael Schofield, a second-year player who, before Sunday, had yet to take a regular-season snap. Schofield moved in at right tackle, with veteran Ryan Harris shifting to the left.

In a blocking scheme that requires the line to migrate to one side, pull the defense along with it and open up quick and tight lanes for the backs to run through, the new front five had to work in unison with little practice.

"I think the O-line just got tired of the outside noise," Hillman said, "and they started giving us lanes."

But from Kubiak's vantage point on the sideline, the call was answered by more than the young faces in front of Manning.

The Broncos showed their running game. There were warts, but there also were yards.

"We asked a lot out of them and I think they're starting to respond," Kubiak said. "Hopefully, we took a step in the right direction running the ball."

A run for the books

Ronnie Hillman's 72-yard touchdown run in the second quarter tied for the fourth-longest in Broncos history. Here's a look at his company in the books:

Rank Player Opp. (Date) Yards

- 1. ... Gene Mingo ... vs. Oakland (Oct. 5, 1962) ... 82 yards
- 2-T. ... Mike Anderson ... at Seattle (Nov. 26, 2000) ... 80 yards
- 2-T. ... Floyd Little ... at San Francisco (Oct. 25, 1970) ... 80 yards
- 4-T. ... Ronnie Hillman ... vs. Minnesota (Oct. 4, 2015) ... 72 yards
- 4-T. ... Javon Walker ... at Pittsburgh (Nov. 5, 2006) ... 72 yards
- 4-T. ... Joe Dawkins ... at Kansas City (Oct. 7, 1973) ... 72 yards

Malik Jackson starting football camp to benefit military families

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com June 22, 2015

As Malik Jackson nears his first NFL season as a starter, he's looking to not just become more of a leader on the field, but also off it in the community.

Jackson will host his first football camp in Colorado Springs for children ages 8-14 from July 9-11, offering support for children in their athletic goals and also in their lives in other facets.

"What I want to show the kids is that if you just have the right skills, you go out and do it right and put your mind to it, you can really go as far in life as you want to in anything you do, whether it be football or school or something culinary or hospitality; whatever you want to do, you can do it," Jackson said.

With the help of Rodney Smith, the co-founder and president of Helping Hands for Freedom, Jackson offers complimentary entry to the camp. Smith's organization focuses on helping military children and their families and has partnered with Jackson with the goal of helping kids in military families who are thrust into tough situations of deployment, injury or loss.

"I just want to let them know that football is an option. You can come out here and just have fun for a day," Jackson continued. "I know it's hard, parents are struggling, the economy's tough, so for parents to be able to see their kids smiling for however long we're out there—an hour or two hours—just having fun and forgetting about the outside world, or what's going on at home, is wonderful."

Ultimately, Jackson knows the reality of the fickleness of celebrity and knows how this is a prime time to make an impact on lives and he wants to take advantage of it.

"I think that's my main goal is just to be out in the community and let them know who I am behind the mask and just get that going," Jackson said. "Because football only lasts so long and I should touch a few lives while I'm still doing it and still relevant."

And while that's the case, he wants to give kids and their families the feeling he gets from playing football.

The feeling of escape is something that Jackson particularly enjoys about going to play the game, even as an adult, and it's something he'd like to share with children in Colorado Springs and the surrounding area, which is home to many military families.

Darius Kilgo has shown Broncos he has a nose for the quarterback

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com August 25, 2015

If there is a do-the-dirty-work, get-no-endorsement-love position in the NFL, nose tackle might be it.

Or, as former long-time Denver Broncos defensive coordinator Joe Collier put it; "You're basically asking someone to eat up all the blockers so somebody else can make the play."

But in a preseason quirk that's unlikely to carry over to the regular season, one the current sack leaders for the sack-happy Broncos is rookie nose tackle Darius Kilgo.

Kilgo had two sacks in the Broncos' 14-10 preseason win in Houston on Saturday night and is tied with linebacker Shaquil Barrett with two preseason sacks.

Overall the Broncos have a league-leading 12 sacks in their two preseason games, with 11 players having had at least a half sack, but DeMarcus Ware isn't one of them. And Von Miller has just one in limited duty so far, a strip-sack on Seahawks' quarterback Russell Wilson in the preseason opener.

Asked Monday if the team's nose tackles -- Kilgo or Sylvester Williams -- have reminded the Broncos' more accomplished pass rushers of their sack prowess, Williams said;

"We try to stay away from messing with those two guys," said Williams with a smile. "We know when the regular season comes where the shining is going to come from, so we just take out shine where we can."

When the Broncos made the change in coaching staffs and implemented a 3-4 defense, it meant they were on the hunt for somebody to play the nose tackle. Terrance Knighton would have been a natural for the job, but Knighton did not receive much interest from the Broncos in free agency, so he signed with the Washington Redskins.

Both defensive coordinator Wade Phillips and coach Gary Kubiak believed Williams was a fit, and he has been, but the Broncos need two players at the high-impact, heavy-lifting position. Marvin Austin Jr. had been Williams' backup in the offseason program, but was derailed by injuries and is now on injured reserve with a groin injury. The Broncos are expected to reach an injury settlement with Austin which would make him a free agent.

That has left Kilgo, a sixth-round pick in this past April's draft, with an opportunity which he has taken full advantage of. However, having been a nose tackle at Maryland, Kilgo might have the Broncos player who actually had the most experience playing the position in a 3-4 defense.

"I think he's been showing a lot of progress," Williams said. "Really since day one, since I've first seen him play to now, I think he's shown a lot of growth. He's a strong guy -- perfect for the nose tackle position. The thing about Kilgo is that he's a hard worker and he gives 100 percent to get better every day. Every day I see something different that helps him improve as a player."

"I'm just trying to work as hard as I can," Kilgo said. "I want to learn and work ... help this team."

If Kilgo remains in the rotation, he will be among a handful in the Broncos' most recent draft class poised for significant playing time. Ty Sambrailo (second round) is starting at left tackle and Max Garcia (fourth round) is starting at left guard while Shane Ray (first round) will be a situational player in the defense. Tight end Jeff Heuerman (third round), who will be moved to injured reserve (knee) when the Broncos make their roster cuts, had been tabbed for a role in the offense before his injury.

WR Cody Latimer joins fight against cancer in honor of dad

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press October 2, 2015

When Denver Broncos receiver Cody Latimer was 11, his father was diagnosed with colon cancer.

The two had not lived together since his parents divorced when Latimer was a toddler. After surgery and chemotherapy, Colby Latimer became a bigger part of his son's life: picking up Cody from school, taking him out for pizza and playing basketball together.

Cody didn't notice his dad losing weight. The older Latimer was a 6-foot-3, 240-pound linebacker at Bowling Green until his junior year when bi-polar disorder and manic depression ended his college career.

Cody doesn't remember the whites of his dad's eyes starting to turn yellow. Doctors thought it was hepatitis. But when they went in to check on his liver, they found the cancer had returned.

Colby Latimer was 38 when he died in 2005.

Cody, then 12, lost the father he'd only just found.

"He just came around like every day that last year. Me and him grew real close," Latimer recalled. "And then he was just gone. That's why it hurt so much."

In his last year, Colby Latimer showered his son with love and never talked about his own health.

"His dad was just one of those people that never complained about anything," said Tonya Dunson, Latimer's mother. "He always saw the best in everything. He would tell you everything was going to be OK."

Latimer inherited his father's athleticism, only he figured his future was on the hardwood. Although one of his high school teammates was Adreian Payne, who now plays for the Minnesota Timberwolves, it was Latimer who led Dayton Jefferson Township to a small-school Ohio state title in his junior year.

"I thought I was going NBA," Latimer said.

His mother encouraged him to play football. She saw a lot of Colby in her son and thought he could transfer his basketball skills to the football field.

"He wanted to play pro sports, but my gut feeling was he had a better chance of doing that playing football." she said.

Because there were only 13 other players on the football team at the 225-student school, Latimer played safety, linebacker, wide receiver, running back and even punter.

"I never got off the field," he said. "My senior year, I started getting a lot of scholarship offers for defense, which was crazy."

Michigan State wanted him as a safety, Ball State as a linebacker.

"But I wanted to catch touchdowns," Latimer said.

So, Indiana it was.

After a standout career for the Hoosiers, the Broncos drafted Latimer in the second round in 2014.

Earlier this year, another family member died of cancer. His mother's aunt, Ana "Lala" Vigay, who looked after Latimer and his little brother when their mother was working full-time and going to school, died at age 73.

"Cancer runs on both sides of my family," said Latimer, who spends some of his off days visiting young cancer patients.

He also raises money for the American Cancer Society by donating proceeds from T-shirt sales on his personal website www.thecodylatimer.com that he launched this summer.

Like his career, his cancer awareness and fundraising efforts are just getting started, Latimer said.

"It's just going to be bigger," he said. "I just got to wait until I get a bigger name."

He's working on that.

Latimer received an invitation to Peyton Manning's annual passing camp at Duke this spring and got plenty of snaps with the starters during Demaryius Thomas's protracted contract stalemate. So far this year, Bennie Fowler and Jordan Norwood have worked in the slot ahead of him.

The Broncos still believe the exceptionally sure-handed Latimer will start showing up on Sundays.

"He's a special young man," coach Gary Kubiak said. "He's young in his career and handles himself tremendously. I know we're sitting here and want things to go faster for him football-wise and they will happen because he's made of the right stuff. He's got all his priorities in line."

By playing in the NFL, Latimer is honoring both his mother's wishes and his father's memory.

When he first tried football at his mother's request and realized he was good at it, "I said, this is coming from him, this athleticism, because football wasn't my thing," Latimer said. "I'm still raw at it now. I'm learning. But it was his legacy. He couldn't get this far but I did."

Manning's Chattanooga Heroes Fund tops $1 million

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com September 23, 2015

In two months, the Chattanooga Heroes Fund -- established by Peyton Manning and his family in partnership with Tennessee Senator Bob Corker -- has raised over $1 million, which is an endowment large enough to sustain the fund for the foreseeable future, the Community Foundation of Greater Chattanooga (CFGC) announced Wednesday.

The fund was established to support the families of the servicemen who lost their lives or were wounded in the July 16 shootings in Chattanooga, Tenn.

"We are overwhelmed by the outpouring of support shown to these families through contributions to the Chattanooga Heroes Fund," Manning said. "Now that contributions to the fund have topped $1 million, we decided to end the contribution phase on September 30 and focus on providing assistance to those in need.

"Thanks to the goodwill and generosity of so many donors, the fund is fully equipped to provide long-term financial support for the affected families as they face the challenge of rebuilding their lives – and their futures," Manning added. "We would like to express our sincerest appreciation to each and every person, family, and organization that made a donation in honor of the servicemen who sacrificed their lives, and the police officer who risked his life to protect the greater Chattanooga community on July 16."

Manning, who lives in Chattanooga for part of the year and went to school at the University of Tennessee in Knoxville, felt compelled to help one of the places he calls home in the aftermath of the tragedy.

"The Community Foundation of Greater Chattanooga would like to reiterate our gratitude to donors across the U.S. and beyond who have provided support for the Fund," said Pete Cooper, president of the Community Foundation of Greater Chattanooga. "We will continue working closely with Peyton Manning, Senator Corker, and key military and governmental officials to ensure proper protocols for funds disbursement are in place, and to provide appropriate support to the families based on their needs."

Though contributions to the Chattanooga Heroes Fund are closed, anyone who would still like to make a gift in support of the families affected on July 16 -- or in honor of military and government service personnel after Sept. 30 -- may still do so through the CFGC 7-16 Freedom Fund, which is dedicated to providing college scholarships for children and spouses of the fallen servicemen, Cooper said.

Donors can also contribute to the CFGC First Responders Fund, which is dedicated to providing financial support to families of Chattanooga area first responders killed or wounded in the line of duty.

The Chattanooga Heroes Fund is administered by the Community Foundation of Greater Chattanooga. Chattanooga's oldest community-based foundation, the CFCG has track record of managing funds dedicated to addressing areas of critical need in the Greater Chattanooga community for over 50 years. This includes the administration of more than 350 funds totaling more than $100 million in assets and more than $14 million in grants in 2014.

Peyton Manning eclipses 70,000 passing yards

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com September 17, 2015

With a 10-yard pass to wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders midway through the third quarter Thursday night at Arrowhead Stadium, Denver Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning carved yet another slice of NFL history.

With the play, Manning became the second quarterback in NFL history to surpass 70,000 yards passing in his career. Brett Favre holds the record with 71,838 career passing yards, another benchmark Manning is expected to eclipse this season.

Manning finished with 256 yards passing, going 26-of-45 with three touchdowns and an interception, in the Broncos' 31-24 comeback win over the Kansas City Chiefs.

Only one other quarterback has surpassed 60,000 yards passing in a career: Hall of Famer Dan Marino, who had 61,361 career passing yards.

Manning, who had 175 passing yards in the Broncos' season-opening win over the Baltimore Ravens, entered the game needing 134 yards to reach the milestone.

However, after Thursday's win, the focus was on the Broncos' stunning rally, which saw them score two touchdowns in the final minute of the fourth quarter to claim the victory. Manning threw a touchdown pass to Sanders with 36 seconds left to tie the score. Then, Brandon Marshall stripped Chiefs running back Jamaal Charles, and Bradley Roby returned the ball 21 yards for a touchdown with 27 seconds left, capping the comeback.

"To be able to win two games in this fashion, you can always refer back to games like this later on in this season," Manning said, also referencing the Broncos' opening win over the Ravens, which they sealed with a 17-play final drive that took 10:56 off the clock.

"These are obviously great times to play football," Manning said. "To win a division game on the road, a great atmosphere, this place is always a great place to play football, and the crowd was rocking [Thursday], they were into it. ... Yeah, I think this is one that you always remember, certainly the way it ended."

Manning's father, Archie, was on the losing end of the last NFL game to feature a team scoring two touchdowns in the final minute of the fourth quarter with the second being the go-ahead score, according to the Elias Sports Bureau. Archie Manning's New Orleans Saints lost 20-17 to the Atlanta Falcons on Nov. 12, 1978, with the Falcons' Haskel Stanback scoring with 57 seconds left, followed by a touchdown pass from Steve Bartkowski to Alfred Jackson with 10 seconds left.

Peyton Manning work to connect with younger generation, his teammates

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com September 9, 2015

It's a question of birthdays.

Candles on a cake, miles on the human odometer and experience. And Peyton Manning has had 39 birthdays, that's the number in his age-is-just-a-number approach to his 18th NFL season.

Manning sets the tone for the Denver Broncos, a team that from the executives' offices on down believes it can be in the Super Bowl conversation.

One of Manning's biggest football jobs for the coming season may not have a whole lot to do with X's or O's. Certainly, Manning needs to adapt to a new offense, throw touchdown passes and lead a team through the inevitable ups and downs of the season. But to do that he will also have to connect with teammates, all of his teammates, many of whom are getting younger all the time.

"I understand it's different for me now, and I understand I need to be more conscious of it, work at it, understand it," Manning said with a laugh. "A couple years ago I think one of the rookies said: 'I was 5 years old when you were a senior at Tennessee.' I don't want to hear that, but it teaches you a quick lesson of where you are and what you need to do."

The 53-player roster the Broncos figure to take into Sunday's regular-season opener against the Baltimore Ravens features 14 players who are 23 or younger, 20 players who are 24 or younger. The youngest Broncos player -- rookie cornerback Lorenzo Doss -- was six months old when Manning started his first game at the University of Tennessee.

"When I got drafted, one of the first things I thought was playing on the same team as Peyton Manning," Doss said. " ... An incredible person, one of the best ever and just wants to win."

The opposition can also become enamored. Houston Texans practice squad cornerback Charles James approaching Manning during warmups before a preseason game to tell Manning he's "a f---ing legend," a free-spirited moment caught on the HBO series "Hard Knocks."

Manning knows he has to bridge the gap between where's he been to get to where his teammates are at the moment. When the Broncos claimed two players off waivers Sunday -- tight end Mitchell Henry and center James Ferentz -- one of the reasons Broncos coach Gary Kubiak offered was: "We got a little younger ... so, that's a good thing."

"You've got to work at it," Manning said. "When you first get in [the NFL] and you don't have kids, you're the same age and you're all kind of doing the same things. But now things are different, life is different, things change when you have kids. It changes your time; it changes your life. ...Get to know [your teammates], when you have the time, when you do those things, any functions, or eating lunch, sitting in the cafeteria, whenever you have a chance."

Former Broncos guard Orlando Franklin has portrayed Manning as distant at times. In a Pro Football Talk appearance shortly after he signed in San Diego in free agency, Franklin said Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers was "more approachable" than Manning.

For his part, Manning took issue with Franklin's assessment.

"I really disagree," Manning said. "I'm approachable, I like to engage, but I think you do have to work a little harder at it as you go. ... There is an age thing. You can outgrow the locker room and if you remove yourself too much, then you become distant. I try to cut up, I'm the butt of many-a-joke in there; I like that."

But much in the way Manning attacks a game plan, he believes a little more information can go a long way.

"It's a conscious decision," Manning said. "But I try to study the bios, get to know them, talk to them, introduce myself, the sooner we can get to work together, the better. If you're going to succeed you need everybody, I know that, I understand it. I really do."

Peyton Manning playing alongside and against many of his fans

By Nicki Jhabvala DenverPost.com August 24, 2015

Seventeen NFL seasons, 14 Pro Bowl selections, seven first-team All-Pro honors, five MVP awards, a Super Bowl ring, a Super Bowl MVP award, the NFL record for career touchdown passes and countless other accolades and all-time records will do this.

Peyton Manning, a sure-fire hall-of-famer, is widely regarded as one of the best to play the game, at any position. As he enters his 18th season, and as many come to grips with the fact that his presence in the pocket is expiring, Manning finds himself playing alongside and against many players who idolized him when they were growing up.

"I try not to think about this too much, but I had his college jersey when I was in junior high, so it goes back to me being a fan even back then when I was guarterback back then," tight end Owen Daniels said.

"Obviously he was one of the best to do it in college and at this level, and now to be in the same huddle with him is pretty special. I look at it as art to play with a guy like that and you just want to give your best effort on every down."

Ty Sambrailo, the Broncos' rookie left tackle out of Colorado State, said in May that the opportunity to play alongside Manning is "unbelievable."

"That's a future hall-of-famer and that's exciting to be in the same building as him," Sambrailo said in May, after the two crossed paths in the team cafeteria.

Two preseason games into his pro career, the appreciation of Manning is still there for Sambrailo.

"It's a dream come true, really," he said after Saturday's win in Houston. "I mean, I've been watching him play since I was a little kid, so it's kind of crazy to be out in the huddle and get play calls from him. It's football still, and we're all here for a reason, we're all professionals, so it's your job to protect whoever's back there, and it just happens to be one of the greatest."

The Manning fans can also be found across the line of scrimmage.

Houston's rookie cornerback Kevin Johnson had two tackles in Saturday's preseason game, and recorded a pass defensed against Manning that forced a three-and-out on the Broncos' opening drive. Johnson's reaction?

"Yeah, yeah. It was pretty cool," he said. "It was pretty cool just going out there, lining up, and looking in at the quarterback and it was Peyton Manning. That's pretty cool."

Devotion turns into dedication for Broncos linebacker Brandon Marshall

By Troy Renck Denver Post September 13, 2015

It was a slow day in June, time for an NFL player to steal hours with his family during the offseason. Brandon Marshall, a Broncos starting inside linebacker, was headed to the airport but had a more important trip first. Asphalt disappearing under his car tires, Marshall turned down a street in West Las Vegas.

Through the most difficult times — the concern for his mother's safety, the anxiety about his own future — Marshall found solace at his granddad's home. Little Roy Williams, a World War II Navy veteran and master carpenter, had a way of putting people at ease. A man of faith and principle, Little created peace amid turbulence for young Brandon, let him know it was OK to dream.

"I always considered him the rock of our family," Marshall said. "He was the major father figure in my life. His home was everybody's safe house. You could get a good meal, good conversation, watch sports. Talking to him, it would just take my mind off a lot of things."

Marshall always thought about his granddad. But this June day was different, the gravitational pull strong. He knew he had to visit, recognizing Little's advice could help him deal with the lingering pain and doubt caused by the Lisfranc surgery on his right foot. Little had been in and out of a hospital the last few months. He wasn't feeling well, though it never occurred to Marshall he wouldn't improve.

"I was there at his house with my cousin Anthony. He said, 'Anthony, you are a successful engineer. Brandon, you are in the NFL. I am proud of you,' " recalled Marshall, hesitating. "Then he actually cried. I was shocked. It was the first time in my life I had seen him cry. It was then that I understood the impact we had on each other. And when I knew something was really wrong."

Little Roy Williams died a few weeks later at age 88, passing away July 7 after contracting pneumonia following surgery. The family gathered at his bedside: Brandon, along with mother Barbara and his brother, Marcus. When you mention Little two months later, the memories tumble out. Little — he had an uncle named Big — sitting in his maroon chair in his Las Vegas living room, dressed in his Los Angeles Lakers cap and sweat shirt, talking to her boys. The breakfasts at Denny's in Reno following Brandon's games at the University of Nevada.

A picture from one of those days is her favorite. One taken in a hospital remains the most poignant. Brandon is holding his granddad's hand in his final moments. "It means a lot to Brandon and I. It's very powerful," Barbara said.

"Tribute ... was beautiful"

Little's absence hurts Brandon. It can be heard in his voice. He has dedicated this season to his granddad, and honored him with a tattoo on his chest reading "Williams 7-1826— 7-7-15" while depicting a hand holding a hammer about to pound a nail.

"I didn't know about it. He wanted to surprise me. When he sent me the picture, it brought me to tears," Barbara said. "For him to give him that tribute. ... It was beautiful."

It's hard for Brandon to explain how much Little meant to him as he embarks on the most important season in his NFL career. Little was the one who explained things to him. He encouraged him to play sports. He rented a van for the family and drove Brandon off to college, where he started four seasons. He reminded him to keep his priorities straight. He taught him to be a man after Brandon and Marcus watched their father abuse Barbara, who courageously escaped to a shelter with her sons when they were 10 and 12, forging steps of hope that have led her to help victims of domestic violence.

"I was so fortunate my children had such a great man like that in their lives," said Barbara, whose son Marcus is a talented singer and songwriter. "He really taught them about respect and responsibility."

This season set up as a challenge before Little died. Marshall injured his right foot Dec. 14 at San Diego. He missed the final two games last season, then played sparingly in the playoff loss to the Colts. When the injury didn't heal, Marshall had surgery March 11. He will play this season with two screws in his foot, his recovery a month ahead of schedule as he starts Sunday's opener against the Ravens.

"I don't have control of what happens to me, but I have control over how I respond," said Marshall, echoing his granddad's advice. "It's going to nag at me. I have to work hard and rehab. I am still fighting these battles. It's painful. It's aggravating.

"But you know what? I have to push through this for my team, myself and my family. I am on a mission to prove I can overcome a Lisfranc injury and have a great season."

No denying super dream

It never dawned on Broncos tight end Virgil Green that Marshall would not play again. They first met at Nevada when Marshall lived across the street. Green recognized Marshall, then an outside linebacker, had uncommon focus.

"He was really mature, well beyond his years," Green said. "We trained a lot at the facility this offseason, and I just knew that somehow, someway Brandon would find a way to get back on the field."

Barbara likes to joke the three of them — she, Brandon and Little — could be triplets. They have inner strength, quiet confidence, their values mirroring each other.

Humility defines Marshall. He deflects praise, and talks about his team like it's his family.

He led the Broncos in tackles last season with 110, a rocket ride to prominence after the Jaguars cut him, forcing him to climb up from Denver's practice squad. The ascension began in 2013, a season he will forever remember because of Little.

It was after the third preseason game, and his granddad rang.

"He says, 'Hey, Brandon I had a dream that you were playing in the Super Bowl. In the Super Bowl!' At first I got excited. I thought it was cool. But then I thought about where I was at," Marshall said with a smile. "I said, 'Granddad, I am in Jacksonville, it might be a while.' He said, 'No, Brandon, I had the dream.' "

Marshall ended up in Denver. He was not an active player, at least not until Dec. 24, but his imagination ran wild.

"As the season went on, I realized we had a great team. Then next thing I know we are in the Super Bowl," Marshall said. "One of my favorite memories is talking to him about that, and telling him he was right."

Sunday will be a transition for Marshall. As part of his game-day ritual, he called his granddad on his way to the stadium. It began in college. They were snapshots back to Marshall's youth when he hung out in Little's home and talked sports.

"It was just great hearing his voice, you know?" Marshall said.

He will call his mom Sunday. They will pray and give thanks.

"I had to be here for this game. It's going to be emotional," Barbara said. "I am so used to talking to my dad during the games. We couldn't hear each other, but he wanted to know all the details. It's going to be tough. But it's good too. My dad's spirit lives on through Brandon."

Evan Mathis: "No. 1 priority was playing for contender"

By Mike Klis 9 News Sport August 25, 2015

Feeling queasy about having three offensive linemen with zero NFL snaps of experience stacked together, Denver Broncos general manager John Elway decided he needed to insert a veteran.

The Broncos reached agreement on a one-year, $2.5 million contract Tuesday with left guard Evan Mathis, an 11-year player coming off two consecutive Pro Bowl berths.

"The No. 1 priority in finding a new place to play was playing for a contender," Mathis said from Scottsdale, Ariz. in an phone interview with 9News. "The Broncos weren't in the mix early on. They were kind of the darkhorse in the race. They emerged here late and I just couldn't turn down that opportunity."

Mathis had held out from the Philadelphia Eagles this offseason in protest of his contract that would have paid him $5.5 million this year. The Eagles responded by releasing him. Mathis took a substantial pay cut to play with the Broncos, although he can earn an additional $1.5 million -- $4 million maximum value -- if he hits incentives.

"But I also turned down an offer equal to what I would have made in Philly," Mathis said. "It was a decision to be on a team I thought had the best chance to make a run. And it's not all about the money. You can't put a price on peace of mind."

Once he gets in playing shape, Mathis, 33, will become the Broncos starting left guard, moving in between rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo and first-year center Matt Paradis, who spent his entire rookie season last year on the Broncos' practice squad.

Mathis said he's ready to be a mentor to the kids on his flanks.

"I've been through a lot in my journey," said Mathis, who was selected out of Alabama in the third round of the 2005 draft by John Fox's Carolina Panthers in 2005 and has also played for Miami and Cincinnati in his career. "I think I've learned a lot, I think I have a lot to share with these guys as well as the technical aspects of the game. And then ultimately leading by doing the right thing. Taking care of my body. Playing as hard as I can play. Making the decisions in life that ultimately make me a better ballplayer."

It's a blow to Max Garcia, a fourth-round rookie from Florida who had been the Broncos' first-team left guard since the second week of training camp, and Ben Garland, the former Air Force Academy star who has been running as a second-string guard.

But it gives much needed experience to the offensive front protecting 39-year-old quarterback Peyton Manning. The Broncos also have veterans Louis Vasquez at right guard and Ryan Harris at right tackle. Mathis has been getting better as he's aged, as his two Pro Bowl berths came the past two years.

"My past four years have been my best four years by far," Mathis said. "I've just continued to learn and grow as a player."

Mathis says he's stayed in shape. He will take his physical exam for the Broncos at their UCHealth Training Center on Wednesday morning. it would be a surprise if the Broncos had Mathis practice and play this week against the San Francisco 49ers. The team usually has veterans condition on the side while observing practice.

Make no mistake, Mathis will start the regular-season opener Sept. 13 against the Baltimore Ravens.

"I'm in shape," Mathis said. "I'll have to get used to the altitude there."

And with that, Mathis said he had to click over to an incoming call. Peyton Manning was calling.

Young Broncos kicker Brandon McManus has arrived

By Mike Klis 9 News September 13, 2015

Scotty O'Brien started coordinating NFL special teams units for Bill Belichick and the Cleveland Browns in 1991 and he finished his special teams career for Belichick and the New England Patriots last year.

For a few years in between he branched out and helped Mike Shanahan and the Denver Broncos by coordinating their special teams in 2007-08.

If O'Brien told me once, he told me a dozen times: It takes young kickers a couple years to figure it out. Figure out how to handle the pressure, mainly. Figure out how to get set up when the offense is running off the field and special teams is running on. Figure out leg swing fundamentals that can maintain consistency week-in and week-out, whether it's for the game's first extra point or a final-second, win-or-lose midrange field goal attempt.

O'Brien believed in young kicker named Matt Prater even though Prater had been cut by the Detroit Lions, Miami Dolphins, Atlanta Falcons and Dolphins again.

O'Brien stuck with Prater through the kicker's inconsistent first full-time season with the Broncos in 2008.

Prater would become arguably the league's best kicker from 2011-13 and broke the field goal record with a 64-yarder.

O'Brien would have loved the Broncos' current kicker, Brandon McManus. Like Prater, McManus has a thunder leg. Like Prater, McManus was inconsistent as a field goal kicker in his first full season.

Like Prater, McManus had a veteran special teams coordinator who stuck with him. Only this time it was Joe DeCamillis – and NFL special team's coordinator for going on 23 years -- who kept McManus' stronglegged potential around this year instead of the steadier, but weaker–legged Connor Barth.

McManus rewarded DeCamillis and the Broncos on Sunday with field goals of 57 and 56 yards with the wind and field goals of 43 and 33 against the wind. Only they might not have been against the wind when he kicked them.

"The wind was definitely at my back (in the first quarter)," McManus said. "I don't think people realize how windy it is in this stadium. It kind of swirls. If you looked at the flags you would have said I kicked those into the wind. I think every quarter it changes."

The Broncos beat the Baltimore Ravens, 19-16 in the season opener on a hot Sunday in September so you figure out what four field goals meant. McManus became the second kicker in NFL history to have two field goals of at least 56 yards in the same game. The other was the St. Louis Rams' Greg Zuerlein in a 2012 game.

McManus' winning performance was not bad for a guy whom the Broncos cut last year after he clanked a 33-yard field goal – this year's extra-point distance – off the upright in game 11 against Miami.

"People might be shocked I made those kicks but I know the confidence I have in myself," McManus said.

Besides the four field goals, McManus had touchbacks on five of six kickoffs. The only one he didn't boot out he was on orders to deliver a power squib kick at the end of the first half.

Von Miller, Broncos linebacker: "I'm a once-in-a-lifetime player"

By Nicki Jhabvala Denver Post August 18, 2015

Von Miller knew this question would come. He was just hoping for once, just for one year, he could evade the subject, even as the Broncos prepare to face the Houston Texans.

Does he really need to tell you once again what he thinks of J.J. Watt?

"You all ask me this every year," he said. "It's about the same week every year. J.J., he's an awesome talent. He's incredible, a once-in-a lifetime player, but I'm a once-in-a-lifetime player, too. I feel like I go out there and I can play with the best of them."

This isn't braggadocio. This isn't Miller feeding you a line for a salacious headline. This is Miller being honest.

Since he was selected with the No. 2 pick in the 2011 draft, Miller consistently has performed among the game's top linebackers, compiling 49 sacks and earning three Pro Bowl selections. But it wasn't until after his first two seasons that his role, his impact and his potential to do even more became apparent.

At least, not to him.

Miller's six-game suspension for violating the league's substance-abuse policy in 2013 delayed a start to a season that would eventually be cut short by a torn anterior cruciate ligament. The Year of '13 might be the lowest point in Miller's career, but looking back, he says perhaps it was necessary.

"Experience helped me," he said. "It helps everybody. You really don't have your priorities in order when you first get here."

When Miller is at practice now, he's in his element. The field is his sanctuary. His work is proof.

Miller returned from knee surgery last season to make 14 sacks, sixth in the league, and 59 combined tackles in the Broncos' 4-3 defense..

Now he's in the 3-4, which exploits edge rushers and ratchets up the quarterback attacks. It's a defense seemingly tailor-made to Miller, led by a coordinator in Phillips who is known to play to his players' strengths. Miller has a few.

"He's got tremendous speed and tremendous quickness, and a feel for the game," Phillips said. "Some guys can run fast, but they can't play football like he can. He can recognize where the ball is going quick and he can get to it."

The Broncos re-opened training camp to fans this season, and the thousands who have flocked to Dove Valley have been treated to a show.

There's Miller tearing through the young offensive line with ease. In Tuesday's practice he made a beeline to Peyton Manning at least four times, whipping around the edge and bear-hugging the quarterback with his long arms."

There's Miller, turning attempted blocks by tackles Ryan Harris and Ty Sambrailo into a game of limbo.

And there was Miller on Friday in Seattle, pushing off Justin Britt then sneaking up on Russell Wilson for a strip-sack 39 seconds into the Broncos' preseason-opening victory.

Miller is eager to show he's the finest defensive player in the NFL, perhaps a necessary mentality for any player. But in true Miller fashion, he's just telling it like he sees it.

Defensive elite

A look at how Von Miller's 2014 statistics compare to other top defensive players in NFL:

Player	Tackles (solo)	Sacks	Int.	FF
Justin Houston, LB, Chiefs	68 (59)	22	0	4
J.J. Watt, DE, Texans	78 (59)	20.5	1	4
Elvis Dumervil, LB, Ravens	37 (27)	17	0	2
Mario Williams, DE, Bills	42 (36)	14.5	0	2
Connor Barwin, LB, Eagles	64 (47)	14.5	0	2
Von Miller, LB, Broncos	59 (42)	14	0	1
Ryan Kerrigan, LB, Washington	64 (51)	13.5	0	5

[&]quot;He's been a dominant player for a while now," Phillips said. "I expect him to keep doing that."

Jordan Norwood took long way into Broncos' offensive plan

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com September 25, 2015

In a live-and-learn world, Jordan Norwood has discovered you can indeed cling to a dream with all of your might and still plan for the possibility it may not come true.

Sure, that was two long years ago and plenty of football road has been traveled along the way, but surf the web and an apparel company -- Deadstock Inc. -- still lists the Denver Broncos wide receiver as its "president and co-founder." Formed with two friends, the company was going to be part of Norwood's life after football.

"At that point, there was a lot of uncertainty," Norwood said this week. "I was pretty uncertain about what would happen, but I don't think I ever got to a point where I didn't think good things were still going to happen. So, it's a little bit on the back burner right now; it will still be there later."

Later will have to wait until, well, later. Because after being out of football in 2013 and on injured reserve in 2014 with the Broncos, Norwood has somewhat surprisingly, yet methodically, carved out a niche in the Denver offense as the No. 3 receiver. He has earned the trust of quarterback Peyton Manning; in the first two games, only Demaryius Thomas and Emmanuel Sanders -- two Pro Bowl receivers who each topped 100 receptions last season -- have been targeted more than Norwood.

Still, even as training camp rolled along, that No. 3 spot was tabbed as Cody Latimer's or veteran Andre Caldwell's. Instead, it has been Norwood's, and he claimed it as August drew to a close.

"What we're asking out of that spot, I think he's earned his keep," Broncos coach Gary Kubiak said. "I think he's done a really good job."

That's a guy who was released by the Cleveland Browns just before the 2013 season began. He had missed two preseason games with a hamstring injury, and though he had a couple of tryouts in the months that followed -- Cleveland and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers -- he was out of the league until the Broncos signed him to a "futures" contract at the end of that season.

"When I got cut, I had a place in State College [Pennsylvania], where I went to school, so I lived there for a little bit," Norwood said. "Then I moved to New York and worked out there, actually started the clothing brand at that point. But then the Broncos called."

A futures contract is indeed a chance, but it is also really just a sort of proposition. It's an invitation to a team's offseason program, but in many ways it's a four-month tryout, a kick-the-tires deal that can often end the moment the team believes it found somebody else with a little more potential.

Yet Norwood had climbed the Broncos' depth chart throughout last year's offseason program, as well as training camp, and was poised to make the roster when he tore his left ACL in a joint practice with the Houston Texans.

"When we first got him two years ago, he had bounced around a little bit," Broncos receivers coach Tyke Tolbert said. "He was kind of unknown to everybody, kind of at the bottom of the depth chart, but what he did is he worked ... his confidence went up, coaches' confidence went up, quarterbacks' confidence in him went up. So, they moved him up the depth chart and he just kept going. ... He's probably the smartest guy in the room, including me."

After a season on injured reserve, Norwood began the climb up the depth chart again -- this time passing Caldwell and Latimer, at least for the moment, and into prime playing time.

Norwood has played 68 snaps in the Broncos' two games, or 65 percent of the team's plays. That's all with a team that believes it will be in the Super Bowl conversation by the time January rolls around.

"I just want to play football; football is part of my family, my father is a football coach," Norwood said. "I guess I never really looked at it like, 'Oh, I got hurt' or 'Oh, I didn't make it this time.' The next step was always to get healthy or to keep working. So it's a blessing to get healthy and to have a chance to keep going, to have friends and family who always keep encouraging me. I had times when I thought, 'Man, I don't know if I can do this,' but the people around me wouldn't let me go without encouragement -- my parents, my siblings, my wife -- they believed like I believed."

Brock Osweiler wastes no time making big impression in preseason finale

By Andrew Mason DenverBroncos.com September 4, 2015

It has been said that Brock Osweiler and the Gary Kubiak offense might be a perfect match. The Broncos' first play from scrimmage Thursday is a reason why.

Osweiler play-faked to Montee Ball, rolled to the left as Ball and the flow of the play went right, turned upfield and fired a deep strike to Andre Caldwell.

Just like that, the Broncos were up 7-0 -- and it was all according to the script.

"The first play was something that we knew prior to today," Osweiler said. "We script out a couple plays at the beginning of the game. We knew that play had a chance for a big-play opportunity.

"We were fortunate to get the coverage we were hoping for. The offensive line and the backs did a tremendous job of really selling a run to allow me to get outside and get that edge to give me the time to throw the ball to Bubba."

@MaseDenver

Plays like that are why you look at Osweiler and say, "This offense fits his skill set perfectly."

It was hard for the longtime Broncos observer to not recall visions of John Elway or Jake Plummer running similar plays during Super Bowl XXXIII or on a snowy night at the end of Thanksgiving weekend in 2004. And while nobody will compare Caldwell with the man who caught both of those passes (Ring of Famer Rod Smith), the execution was just as crisp, and the result just as productive.

Kubiak was the Broncos' offensive coordinator at both of those moments. That play worked before. It will work again. And if and when Osweiler's status as "quarterback of the future" becomes "quarterback of the present," Osweiler looks like he can run it as well as his predecessors.

No deep pass can be considered a "bread-and-butter" play. Its use is too infrequent for that description unless a team has abandoned all discretion in play-calling, something that won't happen on the Broncos sideline.

Brock Osweiler

But after that lightning strike to open the game, the offense failed to generate any consistent electricity. The following two drives resulted in a pair of Brandon McManus field goals, but on the 21 plays that followed the Osweiler-to-Caldwell strike, the Broncos gained 53 yards, for an average of 2.52 yards per snap.

Osweiler ended the night with 108 yards on 7-of-12 passing, but was limited to checkdowns and short underneath passes after that. A potential deep strike to Cody Latimer up the left sideline in the second quarter was just two steps too far and beyond the second-year receiver's reach.

Osweiler finished a busy preseason with a 94.2 rating, three touchdowns, one interception and 484 yards on 44-of-68 passing.

"As a competitor, you're always going to think you could have done better. I would say I'm my hardest critic. I'm always going to grade myself very hard and really dive into that film and my performances," Osweiler said.

"I think I did some great things throughout preseason and then, obviously, I did some things I need to learn from, I need to build upon, [and] make sure that those things don't happen again. They won't and they'll make me a better football player in the end."

In four weeks of work, Osweiler answered some lingering questions. Now he can only sit and wait for an opportunity.

But in the space between Thursday night and when his first regular-season starting nod arrives, he can only be patient -- just as he has since 2012, as he's watched other members of his draft class rise or fall.

"Without a question, it's going to be hard," Osweiler admitted. "To get a taste of what it's like to start in this league -- I know it's preseason, but still, anytime you're starting a football game, I treat them all the same way. To get out there and be able to play with that first unit, obviously, it keeps you very eager to want to be out there and play more, but that's not my role."

Osweiler knows his job. He'll do it well. But he's only human. He aches for a greater role. But when it arrives, it will be clear that he has earned it, and that Denver might be the best place for it.

It's a bad idea to give ax to Broncos center Matt Paradis

By Woody Paige DenverPost.com August 29, 2015

A year ago today, Matt Paradis was cut by Broncos Planet.

Today, he is the center of their universe.

"What a crazy ride I've had in football," Matt says.

Since Paradis showed up at Broncos camp last summer as a dicey sixth-round draft choice, he has been a red-haired, Paul Bunyan-sized mystery man. Who knew?

In the seventh grade, Paradis was the backup guarterback for Council (Idaho) Junior High.

"Mostly, I ran the quarterback sneak," he said.

He grew out of the position and into a lumberjack.

As a senior at Council High, Paradis, a defensive tackle and offensive guard, was selected the top eightman football player in the state — despite tearing his ACL in practice before the championship game.

"The surgery was postponed," he said. "The doctor put a brace on my knee, and I played."

The Lumberjacks won.

Paradis received no football scholarship offers.

"Eight-man football, small town (population 839, counting crows), wrecked knee," he said. "I wasn't recruited. I decided not to attend college. I was going to work for my father."

Parents Michael and Janice Paradis own a cattle ranch (300 acres, 150 cows).

Football isn't that tough. When Matt was in kindergarten as the youngest of four children, his job every dawn was to drive the family's 1957 flatbed pickup while his father threw hay bales off the back. A 5-year-old kid can't reach the gas and break pedals.

"My dad put the car in second gear, made it roll, jumped out and got on the back," he said. "I stood on the seat and held the steering wheel."

Ultimately, Boise State coaches told Matt he could be a walk-on defensive lineman and a grayshirt while rehabilitating.

He earned an academic scholarship and selection as Boise State's best scout-team player. A season later he was asked (ordered?) to switch to center. Paradis started 26 straight games and was named all-Mountain West and selected for the national Hampshire Honor Society team.

The Broncos took a chance on Paradis. Previously the organization had drafted six Boise State players, including another offensive lineman No. 1 in 2008. Tackle Ryan Clady turned into a Pro Bowler.

Paradis was cut at the end of the 2014 camp, then signed a few days later to the practice squad, on which he spent the entire season — forgotten.

"The coaches thought enough to keep me around, and I just kept grinding and hoping," he told me Friday.

If he failed, Paradis would use his business economics degree to become a financial adviser.

The practice squad's other nine members picked Paradis to a mythical "Scout Team Pro Bowl."

"It was their idea of a joke," he said.

Paradis is funny, personable, intelligent, humble, strong as Babe the Blue Ox and a natural leader.

However, in the Broncos' 2015 media guide, Matt was listed in the back of the profile section with "other players." Just a guy (JAG). The Broncos had acquired veteran center Gino Gradkowski from Baltimore.

Matt might as well have been a 300-pound backup QB.

But Paradis wasn't disillusioned or delusional.

"I think I really developed as a player last year. It was like a redshirt year," he said. "This offseason I tried to soak up information and concentrate on technique, footwork, the new blocking schemes and calls, being more forceful. I think my consistency and work ethic must have gotten the coaches' attention. I appreciate their belief in me."

In camp Matt became the center of attention. He supplanted Gradkowski as No. 1 on the depth chart and started the first two exhibitions with rookies Max Garcia at left guard and Ty Sambrailo at left tackle.

"We bonded and helped each other out," he said.

Then, suddenly and shockingly on Tuesday, the Broncos signed free agent Evan Mathis, who was graded by Pro Football Focus in 2013 as the best in the league at left guard.

The center now is flanked by Mathis and another former Pro Bowler — Louis Vasquez. Those two have combined to play exactly 200 NFL games. Paradis has zero.

"Incredible," Matt says. "I'm very lucky. I couldn't even imagine starting and being surrounded by two great guards. I've got to work even harder to stay with them."

Could the interior offensive linemen — Mathis, Vasquez and Paradis — be the Broncos' MVPs? A year from today The Council Kid could be All-World, too.

Broncos hope Tyler Polumbus' experience helps him adapt quickly

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com October 1, 2015

With Denver Broncos rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo a question mark with a shoulder injury he suffered in the team's win Sunday over the Detroit Lions, the team moved quickly to bring back a familiar face.

The Broncos signed Tyler Polumbus Thursday. After passing a physical in the morning Polumbus took part in the team's practice as Sambrailo was held out for the second consecutive day. Polumbus, who started his NFL career in 2008 when he made Denver's roster as an undrafted rookie and spent two seasons with the Broncos, has played in 101 games with four teams in his career.

He's played in offenses similar to the Broncos' current scheme. Polumbus was playing in Denver when offensive coordinator Rick Dennison was on the staff. He also played for Mike Shanahan in Washington and was with Atlanta this season where Kyle Shanahan, Mike's son, is the offensive coordinator. With Sambrailo still hurt, Polumbus has exactly the kind of profile the Broncos needed. He had only become available Tuesday when he was released by the Falcons.

"Obviously we walked out here on the field Wednesday with [just] two healthy tackles," coach Gary Kubiak said. "It's a concern and all of sudden [Polumbus] got let go ... there's a lot of people here familiar with him. [He's] played a lot of snaps we need someone here who has a lot of playing under their belt. And he's been active the last three weeks. So, it's a nice fit for us to pick him up."

Upon his arrival, at minimum, until Sambrailo is back on the practice field, Polumbus is an option as a swing tackle -- a backup who can play either left or right tackle if needed. The terms in the Broncos' offense isn't an exact match to what Polumbus has done in the past, but many of the concepts are the same, so his adjustment period should be shorter because of it.

"It's always good to have some familiarity," Polumbus said. " ... Fortunately for me I get to come back ... it helps in the transition."

For Wednesday's practice Ryan Harris, who last started 16 games in a season in 2008, and Michael Schofield were the team's healthy tackles. Kubiak has not said who would start for Sambrailo if the rookie can't play Sunday against the Vikings, but it's Harris who is the likely first option with Schofield on the right side.

However, if Sambrailo can't play Sunday and Polumbus settles in quickly the Broncos could move Harris to left tackle -- he has started the first three games of the season at right tackle -- and play Polumbus on the right side. In his career Polumbus has started six games at left tackle -- all with the Seattle Seahawks in 2010-2011 -- 51 at right tackle and three at left guard.

Asked following Thursday's practice if it was "realistic" for Polumbus to be in a position to play in some fashion Sunday, Kubiak said: "It has to be realistic ... If we need him we see him as the best possible option for us."

Kubiak has not given up hope that Sambrailo, who was wearing a sling on the injured left arm and shoulder, could play Sunday. Kubiak said Wednesday said Sambrailo may practice "hopefully tomorrow."

Broncos' Shane Ray responds well after bump on the learning curve

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com September 24, 2015

Call it a teaching moment.

A teaching moment in a nationally-televised classroom, with 76,000 or so folks in the seats around him. But mark down Denver Broncos rookie linebacker Shane Ray for a lesson learned.

Right about the time in the second quarter last Thursday night when he was unblocked, strayed a little too far up the field, only to then see Kansas City Chiefs running back Jamaal Charles cut back, to Ray's inside shoulder, and go 34 yards for a touchdown.

It is also the longest play the Broncos' defense has surrendered in two games. While Ray wasn't the only Broncos defender who had a chance at the elusive Charles -- safety T.J. Ward got caught in Charles' second cut-back in the run -- it was Ray who was in the crosshairs from defensive coordinator Wade Phillips a bit more this week.

"Jamaal Charles is a great back," Phillips said Thursday. "We made a big mistake on his long run, that obviously added to his yardage."

Asked what Ray should take away from the play, Phillips dead-panned "Take the running back and tackle him instead of letting him run."

"He's practicing real hard this week and sometimes it takes something like that to let you know 'hey, I've got to get even better, I'm not where I need to be in this league,' and he's taken the bull by the horns," Phillips added.

In an effort to rotate players and manage snaps, Phillips has constructed lineups in such a way in the Broncos' first two games the defense has had 17 players play at least 23 percent of the team's defensive snaps. Charles' run was one of those plays with Ray and Shaquil Barrett at the two outside linebacker spots instead of Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware.

"We take it very personally because when we go in the game, we're expected to hold down the front," Ray said. "When communication errors happen like that and big plays happen, we're responsible for that, and we understand that. We have to do better when things like that happen to make sure when we do get on the field that we stop it."

For the season Ray, who the Broncos traded up five spots, to No. 23, to select in this year's draft, has played just over 25 percent of the Broncos' plays on defense. Phillips has used players like Ray, Barrett and rookie nose tackle Darius Kilgo to spell some of the more experienced Broncos.

But it means occasionally the risk of an assignment error from a young player is possible.

"I told our guys all along, our philosophy is if you're good enough to play, then we're going to find you, we're going to get you some playing time," Phillips said.

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com August 3, 2015

Though rookie outside linebacker Shane Ray was held out of most of the on-field work in the Denver Broncos' offseason program because of a toe injury Ray suffered in his final game at Missouri, Ray has not been limited in the opening week of training camp.

Ray might even have had his best day of the early going on Monday, when he worked with the starting defense because both Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware were among the veteran players who were held out of the practice to rest. Ray worked at outside linebacker with the starters and consistently showed the kind of explosiveness that made him the team's first-round selection in this year's draft.

"I'll tell you what, Shane had a good practice," Broncos coach Gary Kubiak said following Monday's practice. "He started slow early in practice. We got him going and he made some plays late in practice. We need him to show up and quick, and (Monday) was his day to be a starter. Obviously, we've got two great ones right there, but he was brought here to be a big part of that. He took a step in the right direction today."

In the early days of camp both Miller and Ware have worked extensively with Ray in between drills as well as before and after practices, giving advice, showing techniques and discussing different situations that could come up in games.

"We're getting him ready," Miller said. "He's not a rookie to me and DeMarcus, not at all, he needs to be ready to play because he's going to help us."

Ray had suffered what he called a "variation of turf toe," in Missouri's bowl game to close out the 2014 season. From their perspective, the Broncos felt Ray did too much in the pre-draft build-up to fully let the injury heal.

Ray did not participate in workouts at the scouting combine, but he continued to prepare for his pro day and was limited some in his on-campus workout to the point where some scouts in the league wondered before the draft if the injury was going to be an issue for Ray.

The Broncos rested him for much of the offseason work, giving him limited snaps, and also gave him some orthotics to wear in his shoes. The fruits of that strategy have been easy to see in camp's early going.

"It felt great," Ray said. "You have to come out and be a little bit more physical, work different techniques, especially in the running game, and I felt really good. Now it's football. You have the pads on, guys are hitting, getting really intense, attitudes are rising a little bit, but that's what football is all about. With these kinds of practices, we have the opportunity to show how good of a football player you really are."

Ray is certainly not going to displace either Miller or Ware in the lineup, but the Broncos do want to manage Ware's snaps differently than last season, when he led the defensive linemen in snaps played and had just two sacks over the last eight games -- none in the final four games of the regular season.

Defensive coordinator Wade Phillips has also said he looks forward to putting Miller, Ware and Ray in the formation at the same time. But in the end, Ray said he's glad just to feel healthy and back in the mix.

"It's very frustrating when you're injured and as much as you want to go out and compete, you can't," Ray said. "To be out here, to be with your teammates and be able to actually sweat and feel pain -- as crazy as that sounds -- but to do that with your brothers is a great feeling. I'm glad that I'm out here with my guys every day."

Bradley Roby ready for more playing time, if opposing offenses will cooperate

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com September 21, 2015

The Denver Broncos have tried to get cornerback Bradley Roby on the field more this season, but so far opposing offenses haven't really been on board with that idea.

Roby, who scooped up a fumble and scored to give the Broncos a win last Thursday night in Kansas City, has played 52.5 percent of the Broncos' defensive snaps this season. And that is actually a rather sharp reduction in Roby's activity from the 2014 season, when he had played 75 percent of the team's defensive snaps. But last season, often trailing against the Broncos' high-flying offense, opposing offenses most often lined up against the Broncos' nickel package (five defensive backs) rather than the Broncos' base defense.

"I just want to be a part of a defense that makes plays to win games," Roby said. "That's always kind of been my goal here, I want to be a player they trust and I want to be a player that makes plays that help us win games. That's it."

Roby's fumble recovery -- after linebacker Brandon Marshall knocked the ball free from Chiefs' running back Jamaal Charles -- certainly did that. Overall, though, the Baltimore Ravens and the Chiefs, in an effort to slow down the Broncos' pass rush, have largely elected to stay a little bigger on offense and try their luck against the Broncos' base defense.

And that leaves Roby largely out of the mix. However, defensive coordinator Wade Phillips has played Roby at safety in the base defense for a handful of snaps in the Broncos' first two games, including on back-to-back plays late in the first quarter Thursday night.

Phillips and Broncos coach Gary Kubiak still have plans for Roby, though, especially after a long look in the offseason program and in training camp. With Chris Harris Jr. having been held out of some practices, Roby spent plenty of time in the offseason working with the starters.

"Bradley worked as a starter for most of the offseason," Kubiak said. " ... He's reaping the rewards of his work."

Things could change this week and beyond, however. Two of the Broncos' next three opponents -- Sunday against the Lions and Oct. 11 against the Oakland Raiders -- are among the league's top seven in pass attempts after the first two weeks of the season. The Raiders are tied for third at 44.5 attempts per game while the Lions are seventh at 41.5 pass attempts per game.

The Lions also attempted 53 passes in their loss to the Vikings this past weekend. And an offense that looks to heave it around a little more in the face of the Broncos' pass rush is one Roby would face more as well. So, the opportunities for Roby could increase, especially if the Broncos' own offense can carve out some leads as well. In the win over the Chiefs, Roby's touchdown in the closing seconds was the first time the Broncos had a lead in the game.

"I'll go in when they want me to," Roby said. "I'm ready, I keep myself ready."

Broncos' Ty Sambrailo continues to learn from Von Miller, DeMarcus Ware

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com August 19, 2015

Those who know Gary Kubiak well will often talk of his even-keel public persona, the Texas drawl that rides along with the many matter-of-fact things he says on any given day.

But Tuesday, Kubiak may have dropped one of the spectacularly great understatements of whatever becomes of the Denver Broncos' upcoming season.

In some give-and-take following Tuesday's practice about a re-vamped offensive line and what it means to quarterback Peyton Manning, Kubiak said simply:

"Keeping him upright will be of the utmost importance for this team."

If Kubiak were the type to drop the mic, he could have right there. Because the main storyline of this Broncos training camp has been how a Super Bowl contender with five returning Pro Bowl players on defense, two returning 100-catch receivers and one 39-year-old future Hall of Famer returning at quarterback will get things sorted out in the offensive line in front of said quarterback.

And after one preseason game, it still remains a work in progress. The Broncos currently have two rookies in the offensive line -- left tackle Ty Sambrailo and left guard Max Garcia -- to go with center Matt Paradis, who spent his rookie season in 2014 on the Broncos' practice squad.

Of the three it just might be Sambrailo who finds himself in the hottest of zones, given he was tabbed to replace a Pro Bowl tackle in Ryan Clady as Manning's blind-side protector as soon as Clady suffered a season-ending knee injury in May. Sambrailo, a second-round pick in this year's draft, also is being introduced to the NFL on a daily basis against outside linebackers Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware, who have made football life fairly miserable for tackles much more experienced than Sambrailo.

And there have been times in training camp, Tuesday's practice included, when Miller and/or Ware have done a buzz-the-tower fly by on Manning before he throws because they beat the blockers in front of them. On one snap, the two Pro Bowl rushers converged on Manning well before he threw and had they been allowed to tackle the quarterback as they would in a game, it would have potentially been the kind of hit that gives coaches ulcers and sends quarterbacks to the trainer.

"As a coach that's personal, because you know what you have and you have to do things schematically to protect him as much as you possibly can," Kubiak said. "At the same time you've got to let guys practice, you've got to see what you've got, see what they can handle."

Sambrailo has played with confidence since his injury-related promotion. He has said he arrived to the Broncos with the mindset he wanted to compete "for as much playing time as possible."

But certainly Miller off the edge is a long way from any player Sambraillo saw in his games at Colorado State.

"I think you saw [Tuesday] it's challenge," Kubiak said. " ... I watch Ty [Tuesday], Ty has some rough snaps that I can recall in practice. If you go against guys like that every day you walk on that field expected to go against great players, that's a tough thing and he's got to continue to push through it."

"Ty is a young guy," Miller said. "We're all out there to get better and he's working like we're working. Me and DeMarcus, though, we'll go over and let him know after the play what happened if we get in there. ... He's a good player and we're just out here working."

Kubiak has said the Broncos have made the decision to play the young players in the offensive front because those players have earned "the right" to start, but the Broncos also want to build an offensive line they can keep together for multiple seasons.

"I want Ty to be a Pro Bowler and a six-year player today, but I also understand the process he's going through, he, and Max [Garcia] and Matt [Paradis]," Kubiak said. "And watching them as coaches we've got to have some patience when we see some of those things and make sure we're correcting them and trying to help them."

Miller and Ware have regularly been seen talking to the young linemen in practice -- Sambrailo in particular -- after some team periods. They have had discussions after one-on-one pass-rush drills between the offensive linemen and the defensive lineman as well.

"The thing I'm really impressed with," Kubiak said, "is watching DeMarcus or Von grab them after that series, 'Come here, let me tell you why that just happened, I was watching your stance, I knew this, I knew that,' so that's encouraging.''

Emmanuel Sanders' maniacal work ethic, drive has been years in the making

By Nicki Jhabvala Denver Post September 26, 2015

Emmanuel Sanders awoke in his downtown Kansas City hotel room the morning of Sept. 17 knowing the day would be trying and tear-filled. Just as the past three Sept. 17s have been.

He said his prayers, then pulled on the focused but jovial expression he has worn so well in difficult times. Just as he has the past three Sept. 17s.

But this one — this one was different.

Stephanie Ann Sanders, his mother who died in her sleep in 2011, would have turned 45 on the night her son was playing in a nationally televised NFL game.

"It's always tough," the Denver wide receiver said. "But I just said hopefully I can go out and have a good game on 'Thursday Night Football' and at least be able to wish her a happy birthday."

Sanders' wish came true against the Chiefs. He pulled in eight passes for 87 yards and two touchdowns, the last one capping a game-tying drive late in the fourth quarter before Bradley Roby produced the Broncos' winning TD with a scoop-and-score fumble return.

When the final whistle blew, Sanders walked onto the set of NFL Network to tell of his feats then onto a plane, bound for Texas, to celebrate and shed more tears with family as they remembered his mother and their life together in Bellville.

It was a fitting tribute to the woman described as tender and tough, who helped to instill a competitive spirit that Sanders carries today.

One that, in his sixth NFL season and second with the Broncos, has helped him become Peyton Manning's leading target and the league's leading receiver on third down (11 catches for 117 yards and two touchdowns).

And one that, over the years, has been refined and enhanced to reach a level few in the NFL can match — or tame.

Brawls in Bellville

Josh Bryant knew that he and his cousin were wired differently when their friendly games as kids turned into brawls. There was that time Sanders smashed his cousin's head into a goalpost during a soccer game. And the time Bryant smashed a baseball bat across the head of Sanders, leaving a scar above his left temple that now glistens in the camera lights.

"I don't know what happened," Bryant said. "I probably lost and he probably bragged about it, so I hit him with a bat."

Bryant and Sanders, born a month apart, grew up as brothers in Bellville, a small town northwest of Houston. They, and nearly four generations of their family, shared a one-bedroom home where money was tight but the living was good. The two spent their early years idolizing their twin uncles who were bull riders before their other uncle, Josh's father, Howard Bryant, turned them on to baseball and football.

"He was the one who told us, 'Nobody owes you (expletive),' " Josh said. "We were out there at 6 a.m. hitting balls and my dad was like, 'If you want it, you gotta earn it.' "

Sanders believed as early as 12 that football was his ticket out of Bellville, a place he's proud to call home but where few ever leave. In high school, the possibility of playing in college became real, and he and Josh started taking campus tours and attending camps, including one at the University of Houston.

"There was this one play where Emmanuel was running a go route and the quarterback overthrew the ball really bad," Josh said. "Emmanuel ran out of bounds and dove onto the surrounding track. He knew if he did well, he might get offered a scholarship and he would be the first one in his family to go to college."

Houston would offer Sanders that chance. So would Southern Methodist, a school four hours away, in Dallas. Too far for his mother.

So one morning, with the help of Josh, Sanders disconnected the battery from his Pontiac Sunfire, pushed the car down the street and out of earshot from his sleeping mother, reconnected it and drove off, bound for his official visit before his mother could stop him.

"He came back and was like, 'I'm going to SMU,' " said Bryant, who would join him as his teammate and roommate a year later. "That was all she wrote."

"No stopping him"

In their two seasons together at SMU, Jeff Reinebold was a witness to Sanders' evolution from a raw receiver into a school record-holder who thrived in coach June Jones' run-and-shoot offense.

"We had a drill where we caught tennis balls and he wanted to beat the record every day," said Reinebold, who was the Mustangs' wide receivers coach from 2008-11. "Every competition was the most fierce. Once he learned how to harness that, there was no stopping him."

At 8 a.m. every Sunday, Sanders would join Reinebold in the film room, breaking down his routes and reads. In a system that required receivers to react to defenses, Sanders learned pieces of many pro schemes years before he would enter the NFL.

"Emmanuel wanted to be coached and he wanted to be coached hard," Reinebold said. "His expectation of himself was greatness. Not average. Whatever we asked, he would do."

They told him to get stronger, so he could stand up to the NFL defensive backs. So he worked with SMU's strength coach in the weight room. They told him to improve his pass blocking, so he honed his technique.

"He never saw SMU as his end point," Reinebold said. "There's a lot of guys who talk about that, but there aren't a lot who can be about it. He was about it every day."

Highs and lows in NFL

Sanders got a taste of pro success early after Pittsburgh selected him in the third round of the 2010 NFL draft. It was sweet at first, but it quickly turned sour.

A trip to the Super Bowl in 2011, in the Dallas area no less, ended in the second quarter because of a fractured foot. Surgery the next day was followed by another two months later and then one on his knee, in November. His time in rehab meant more time for Antonio Brown, a sixth-round draft pick, to become Antonio Brown, the Steelers' top receiver.

In the middle of it all, Sanders' mother passed away, not long after one of his uncles had died.

"When we lost his mom and our uncle, we talked about football more," Bryant said. "Friday nights before a game, when most guys go out to the club, we're talking about the first play of that Sunday's game."

The losses, the notion that football and life could be stripped from under him at any time with no warning, put Sanders into overdrive. His career season and first Pro Bowl in 2014 wasn't enough.

May never be enough.

This past summer, Sanders purchased a Jugs passing machine to spit out footballs when Denver coaches couldn't. Hours he spent, fielding catch after catch after catch, contorting his body every which way as the beat of the machine echoed like a metronome.

"Doesn't surprise me," said Broncos wide receivers coach Tyke Tolbert. "He loves to play and he loves to practice football."

After practices, Sanders is the last one off the field, often staying an extra 20 minutes, sometimes 40, fielding more passes to improve his technique. In meetings, he sits next to Tolbert, filling his notebook with his position coach's every word.

Emmanuel Sanders is always on.

"He's had the taste of success," Bryant said. "And success heals a lot of things."

Michael Schofield planning to prove his worth to Broncos in first career start

By Cameron Wolfe Denver Post October 2, 2015

It's like deja vu for Broncos tackle Michael Schofield. One man's injury is another man's opportunity. And Schofield is the benefactor.

Not only will it be Schofield's first start, it'll be his first career NFL snap.

"I'll definitely have some butterflies. I'm sure everyone does in their first game. I've just got to go out there, play with confidence and play with good technique," said Schofield, in his second season with the Broncos.

An almost identical situation happened to Schofield during his redshirt sophomore year at the University of Michigan. He wasn't supposed to get much action that season, but the starting left guard went down with an injury in Week 1 and it was his job from that point on.

That's where a lot of his motivation comes from this week. Despite struggling in training camp and during the preseason, Schofield is confident he can do the job.

"They drafted me last year in the third round, so I've got to prove I was worth that pick and come out there and dominate," he said.

He found out he was getting the start Wednesday. Immediately, he reached out to Harris and right guard Louis Vasquez for advice.

But Schofield knows when he hits the field Sunday, it'll all be on him. Also, new Broncos tackle Tyler Polumbus, who was signed Wednesday after being released by Atlanta, will be available if needed.

Along with the added pressure, Schofield has a lot of of pent up frustration. He watched the team move Vasquez from right guard to right tackle instead of him last season when coach John Fox reshuffled the offensive line at mid-season. And, this year, after being an early favorite to start at right tackle, he was quickly passed by Harris and former Bronco Chris Clark in training camp. Clark was subsequently traded.

Schofield treated it like an indictment of his play and said he's on a mission to prove his worth.

"This is a great opportunity for Michael. As a player, that's all you ask for — work, work, work and then someday, okay, hey, here we go. Then you find out," Kubiak said. "It's Michael's turn."

Schofield isn't the only offensive linemen with a new challenge this week. Harris will play left tackle in a regular season game for the first time since 2013.

He's played on both sides of the line throughout his NFL career but admitted it's not an easy switch. All of the terminology is backwards and then there's the added pressure of protecting Peyton Manning's blindside against the Vikings' top pass rusher.

Sambrailo sustained his injury late in Sunday's victory over the Lions. The Broncos offensive line had perhaps its best game of the young season though the running game remained stalled. They allowed one sack versus the Lions after allowing seven in the previous two games.

Harris isn't looking for any pity. The rest of the line isn't either.

"You play in the NFL, things aren't going to be perfect, ever," Harris said. "That's in life, too, whether you're a sports writer or a fan, things in life don't go perfectly and you have to be ready to adapt. The team that can adapt the best is going to win on Sunday and is going to win the Super Bowl."

Trevor Siemian stuck because he 'just continued to make plays'

By Andrew Mason DenverBroncos.com September 6, 2015

It should come as no surprise that Gary Kubiak kept three quarterbacks on the 53-man roster. He carried three passers into the regular season for his last five seasons as the Houston Texans' head coach.

But when training camp began, few pundits projected the Broncos to carry three quarterbacks. And fewer knew that seventh-round pick Trevor Siemian would not only come all the way back from a torn anterior cruciate ligament suffered last November at Northwestern -- but would thrive.

"That was a concern -- how far could we go?" Head Coach Gary Kubiak said Saturday. "He worked really hard throughout the course of the summer off with the players, and when he came back, he was ready to go, and he just continued to make plays."

Siemian's inclusion on the post-preseason 53-man roster set at the 2 p.m. MDT roster deadline Saturday marked a significant accomplishment for the seventh-round pick, even though he is likely to spend the coming his months biding his time on the scout team behind perennial Pro Bowler Peyton Manning and four-year veteran backup Brock Osweiler.

Barring a calamitous set of circumstances, Siemian won't see any action this season. But he needs to continue his progress -- both in his passing and his leadership -- on the practice field.

"He's a very confident kid. There's not a throw he can't make," Kubiak said. "I think the question was how much he can handle mentally, and from what he did, how much could he progress? And he's handled that very, very well. Guys gravitate to him. You never know about leadership until a guy walks in the door, and he has shown that. Hopefully we'll continue with that."

Siemian's arm strength was evident on his Northwestern film, and once his knee healed and he incorporated Quarterbacks Coach/Passing Game Coordinator Greg Knapp's teachings into his footwork, his accuracy began to improve along with it.

"We saw the arm. There was no doubt about the arm," Kubiak said. "When you watch him throw the ball at Northwestern, in some of the wind, the trees are blowing sideways, and he's out there making throws all over the field. You knew that he had that ability.

"Now everything else, you've got to see."

And that's what the Broncos began witnessing this summer, first on the practice field, and then in the fourth quarter of the preseason opener in Seattle, where he completed five of his six passes and stabilized an offense that flailed during a fruitless third quarter.

That was Siemian's first opportunity to relay play calls in NFL nomenclature, and he wasn't fazed by it.

"He's adapted very well to the calling system, making long calls in the huddle, things that he's never been a part of," Kubiak said. It's really part of his progress, but the physical skills, we knew they were there. With the knee coming along, [it was a] project situation. We didn't know."

Kubiak has a better idea now.

"Every time we went on the field, he found a way to make plays," Kubiak said. "He's a leader -- a very confident young man. So we feel very good about the opportunity here, and having the ability to get him that late in the draft and to have a player with that type of ability."

Shelley Smith's journey to the Denver Broncos filled with connections

By Cameron Wolfe DenverPost.com June 12, 2015

When you mention the name Shelley Smith to Ty Sambrailo, you see his face light up. The Broncos offensive linemen hadn't played a down together before this offseason, but share the pride of being former Colorado State Rams.

"When I was coming out of high school, it was Shelley's senior year," said Sambrailo, a second-round draft pick by the Broncos this year. "When I was getting recruited by (CSU) I was watching film, and he was one of the best players. I would always watch him from afar, and he's been a great Ram."

Smith didn't have the direct Rams- to-Broncos pipeline Sambrailo did. The five-year veteran was drafted in the sixth round by Houston where he spent the first two years of his career with Gary Kubiak and Rick Dennison. He didn't play a snap for the former Texans coaches, but he must have done enough to impress them to take another shot on him in Denver.

Smith signed a 2-year contract worth $5.65 million in March with hopes he would compete for a starting job on the offensive line.

"I feel like my chances are very good. There's a lot of competition in the room," Smith said. "I believe it'll be the best five guys, and I hope I'm one of them."

His biggest competition might come from former Air Force and Broncos practice squad player Ben Garland, who ran a lot of snaps with the first team offensive line in minicamp.

"We are very competitive right now. Shelley is pushing Garland," Kubiak said. "But how it's going to end up, I don't know."

Because of injuries, free agency and trades, the Broncos will have at least four new starters on the offensive line when the season begins in September. One advantage Smith might have on his competition is the experience he has working in Kubiak and Dennison's zone blocking schemes.

"We've had Shelley before; we had him in Houston, and then we lost him," Dennison said. "We know what he is because he's a CSU guy. He's athletic, he knows what to do and he's developed."

Smith spent two years in St. Louis and last season in Miami, but returning to play under the coaching staff that gave him his first chance played a huge role in his decision to return to Colorado.

"It's like a second home. It's awesome to come home and see familiar faces and play for Coach Kubiak and his staff again," Smith said.

Regardless of the Kubiak-Smith connection, the starting left guard job will be won in training camp. Garland and Smith both hope to fill the role vacated when Orlando Franklin signed a five-year, $36.5 million deal with the San Diego Chargers in March.

The Broncos return only one player with a positive Pro Football Focus individual blocking grade that started at least one game in 2014, right guard Louis Vasquez. Smith was listed as the 64th best guard in the league by PFF last season. There are only 64 starting guards in the league when each season begins.

Smith and the entire offensive line will have to play a lot better to protect quarterback Peyton Manning and provide holes for the Broncos' running backs.

The connection between Kubiak and former Houston players has been well-documented, but Kubiak also has shown an affinity for Colorado State. Both of his sons, Klint and Klay, played for CSU. With running back Kapri Bibbs and linebacker Shaquil Barrett returning, the Broncos have four Rams on their training camp roster. There are four former CSU players currently on the other 31 NFL rosters.

Smith and Sambrailo said they plan to take a trip to Fort Collins this summer when they're off. But their first goal is to win football games. Whether they'll be starting next to each other, that's for training camp to decide.

Broncos' Left Guard Position At-a-Glance

Shelley Smith and Ben Garland will compete for the Broncos' left guard position during training camp:

Shelley Smith

- A former sixth-round pick who has a reputation of an agile, zone run blocker.
- He started three of 11 games at guard for the Dolphins last season.
- The former Ram battled a knee injury that held him out for a month and he never gained his starting job back last season.
- Released in March.

Ben Garland

- A former Air Force nose tackle who earns his keep as a gritty, tenacious player.
- The 27-year-old Grand Junction native originally was signed as an undrafted free agent in 2010.
- After spending two years honoring his military commitment and two years on the Broncos practice squad, Garland made his NFL debut last November against the Oakland Raiders.

Through my eyes: Darian Stewart seals Broncos' win

By Darian Stewart DenverBroncos.com September 15, 2015

The week before our game against the Baltimore Ravens, I told our defensive backs coach Joe Woods that I was going to catch a pick this week.

Every single practice we work on making big plays and finding ways to change the momentum – but my determination to get an interception was rooted in something bigger. Before becoming a Bronco during the offseason, I was a Raven for a year.

Our goal for the game was simple: play fast and physical. That's the goal every week. Last week we wanted to accomplish that and most definitely, without a doubt, we achieved that. It was a physical game all around, but I think we were the most physical.

The game came down to the wire at the end of the fourth quarter. We were leading, 19-13, but the Ravens were driving toward our end zone.

With less than two minutes left in the game, the Ravens made their way to our red zone, but on third-and-10, something was wrong. I felt a little sharp pain through my leg.

"Go out if you're hurt," cornerback Aqib Talib told me. But it was a critical moment in the game and I felt like I had some more juice in me to finish so I just stayed in.

I was in the coverage and had good vision on Baltimore quarterback Joe Flacco and he just so happened to throw it to the seam. He put some air under it and I was able to get to it. I think if he would have put it on a straight line, I wouldn't have been able to get in front of their tight end Crockett Gillmore. But he put air under it and with good coverage from David Bruton Jr., I was able to get it – and seal our first win of the season.

It was a great feeling. I felt like I stepped up for the team and was able to make a play when it was what was needed.

Going into the game I had three interceptions in my NFL career – and I can remember every single one of them because they were almost all in red-zone situations and one was a pick-six. Now I have four interceptions in game-changing situations.

When I got back to my locker after the game, I had over 100 text messages. But I'll never forget those who have always had my back, so the first people I texted were my friends who I grew up with.

While the play was amazing and one that I'll never forget, it's time to move on. This Thursday is a new game at Kansas City and it's time to put Sunday's game to rest.

But, they say, "Once you catch one, they come in bunches."

Darian Stewart more than a safety valve for Broncos

By Troy Renck DenverPost.com August 28, 2015

In an effort to create competition and microwave player evaluations, the Broncos held joint practices with the 49ers this past week. The prevailing silence was unsettling because it sat in stark contrast to the chirping of the 5,000 fans during training camp. There were no fights. No pushing. No shoving. And little talking, save for San Francisco linebacker NaVorro Bowman accusing an official of a hometown call on a juggling reception by Denver's Cody Latimer.

With one play, Darian Stewart returned the cacophony to the Broncos sideline by intercepting a pass by the 49ers' Colin Kaepernick. Denver's defense boasts 12 sacks this preseason, and with tempered optimism, general manager John Elway said it is the most talented defense since he arrived in 2011.

Interestingly, there is only one prominent new starter: Stewart. The conclusion remains easy to draw: Wade Phillips' 3-4 defense fits the personnel better, and Stewart's addition fortified a secondary that aims to be the NFL's best.

"No doubt," Stewart said. "That's the goal."

Signed as a free agent from Baltimore, Stewart took hold of the free safety position in the spring and has only tightened his grip over the past month as the Broncos face the 49ers on Saturday in their preseason home debut.

"Stewart has done a really good job, he's learned the defense, he really plays well," defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said. "He plays fast in the games. I like that about him."

Stewart struggled with inconsistency in Baltimore last season, losing his job at one point. However, he played his best game in the Ravens' playoff upset of the Steelers. Stewart replaced Rahim Moore, who signed with Houston as a free agent. They couldn't be more different. Stewart is softspoken. Moore is an energetic run-on sentence. Stewart seeks contact. Moore plays a deep center field.

Stewart's skill set makes him interchangeable with strong safety T.J. Ward, varying the defensive looks.

"The defense is just pretty much straight forward. That has helped," Stewart said. "I am believing what I am seeing. Playing with T.J. helps. You know you can count on him. He has your back."

A stout 5-foot-11, 214 pounds, Stewart has made three tackles in 42 snaps in the first two exhibition games. With two new starters last season, the secondary required time to gain trust, finally coalescing in November. The communication has improved dramatically this season, helped by Stewart's quick learning curve.

"He's very smart and calm back there. That's what I like about him," Ward said. "You never really see him flustered, you never really see him out of position."

Performance and maintenance carry equal importance to Stewart. Playing at altitude and in a dry climate, leg issues are prevalent. Stewart has worked extensively on his flexibility.

"Every off day I find something to keep my body right, whether that's stretching or massage," Stewart said. "And it helps that Coach (Gary) Kubiak takes care of his players like he does. You are already seeing the results."

Through two games, the first-string defense has not allowed a touchdown. There are reasons to believe, Stewart insisted, that this is a preview not just another preseason mirage.

"It's just coach Wade. He challenges us. Everyone's job is to get to the ball," Stewart said. "When you have 11 guys with good speed, doing that, good things are going to continue to happen."

Stewart steps up

The Broncos feature only one defensive starter who didn't play regularly last season: free safety Darian Stewart. NFL reporter Troy E. Renck with a look at the newcomer:

- Star basketball player along with twin brother Jared at Lee High School in Huntsville, Ala...
- Considered playing college hoops at Memphis before choosing football at South Carolina
- -Made St. Louis Rams as an undrafted free agent in 2010.
- His first interception came against New Orleans' Drew Brees in 2011.
- Joined Baltimore Ravens last season, starting 14 games and delivering his best performance in playoff victory over Pittsburgh.
- Has made three tackles in two preseason games.

Aqib Talib playing at a "premium" once again for Broncos

By Nicki Jhabvala Denver Post September 17, 2015

Aqib Talib sat back in his two-point stance, his eyes fixated on his target, his fingers fluttering as the urge to pounce ran through him.

Kansas City quarterback Alex Smith, at his own 20-yard line in the second quarter, dropped back and eyed Jeremy Maclin turning toward to the right sideline.

The adrenaline coursing through Talib's veins took over. As the ball left Smith's fingers, Talib lurched forward to snatch it out of the air and sprinted up field 9 yards.

Interception. Another Agib Talib interception.

Talib would call it a "premium look." His coaches would likely call it a big play.

But it was more.

The pick was his second in as many games for the Broncos and one that put the ball back in Peyton Manning's hands for a touchdown drive to close out the first half.

The pick was also the 29th of Talib's career, tying him with Asante Samuel for the most by an NFL cornerback since 2008.

The pick changed the momentum and gave the offense a chance — another chance — to put points on the board.

"We called a blitz," Talib said. "I knew the ball was going to come out fast. I just took advantage of the situation. Interceptions are always momentum-changing plays. It doesn't matter when they come."

The Broncos' defense gave a taste of its potential in the preseason that has been realized in games that now matter. Their bounty of edge rushers have wreaked havoc on quarterbacks, just as they vowed to do in camp.

And in two games, the defense has accumulated three red-zone takeaways, equaling their season total in 2014.

But it has been Talib, an eighth-year veteran who played wingman to Chris Harris last year, who has come up with the crucial plays. The game-changers.

Against Baltimore on Sunday, Talib saved it for the third quarter, when he flew in front of Ravens receiver Steve Smith and returned the ball 51 yards for a score.

The Broncos' offense would continue to limp to the finish. The defense would win it, an interception by Darian Stewart in the waning seconds sealing the victory.

At Kansas City, the trend continued at the start and in spurts. Manning was sacked three times. Manning threw a pick-six. And the offensive line looked shaky, at best, until the veteran quarterback engineered a game-tying drive in the final minute.

The defense continued to wreak havoc, to the tune of four sacks, two interceptions and three fumble recoveries — the last of which, by Bradley Roby in the final 30 seconds, gave the Broncos an improbable victory.

The defense won again.

And Talib again came up with the premium look, the big play. And chances are he'll be back in the same stance in Detroit in Week 3. Eyeing his target and waiting to pounce.

Talib's tallies

Broncos cornerback Aqib Talib intercepted a first-half pass against the Chiefs on Thursday night to give him 29 picks since 2008. That number is tied for the most during that span. A closer look at the list:

Player	No.
Aqib Talib	29
Asante Samuel	29
Tramon Williams	27
DeAngelo Hall	26
Richard Sherman	24

With deal signed, Demaryius Thomas says he wants to 'retire a Bronco'

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com July 17, 2015

Saying he "wanted to finish a Bronco, retire a Bronco," Denver wide receiver Demaryius Thomas said Friday he's glad that negotiations worked out on a new long-term deal and that he looks forward to helping the team win the Super Bowl.

Thomas, 27, who had been designated as the team's franchise player, signed a five-year, $70 million deal Wednesday that includes $43.5 million in guarantees.

And though the negotiations came down to the final hours before the deadline for teams to agree with players with the franchise tag, Thomas said he never doubted an agreement would be made.

"No, I didn't [worry a deal would not get done]," Thomas said. "I kind of knew for a little while I was going to be a Bronco. ... Kind of a week before they were going back and forth, I kind of knew."

Thomas, a team captain this past season and one of the team's cornerstone players since he was a first-round pick in the 2010 draft, is now the longest-tenured player with the team on the current roster. Left tackle Ryan Clady was a first-round pick in 2008, but he has already been moved to injured reserve after tearing an ACL in an offseason workout.

Earlier in the week, Broncos executive vice president of football operations and general manager John Elway said: "[Thomas] has developed into one of the top wide receivers in the NFL, and making sure he remained a Denver Bronco was a significant priority for our team. Demaryius is a special talent and an elite player who has also become a team leader during his five NFL seasons."

Thomas, a three-time Pro Bowl selection, also said Friday even if he had not agreed to a long-term deal that he would have played the 2015 season under the franchise player tender (one-year, $12.82 million) and that "I wasn't going to sit out any games."

But the negotiations were never acrimonious, and the Broncos had made enough progress on the deal that they had already shipped Thomas a playbook and practice video to see the new offense under first-year coordinator Gary Kubiak. Thomas was also regularly in touch with wide receivers coach Tyke Tolbert and quarterback Peyton Manning.

Thomas said Friday he intended to play this season at about 222 pounds after playing at about 229 pounds last season and has made setting an NFL single-season record for receiving yardage one of his goals for the season. Calvin Johnson holds the record, which he set in 2012 with 1,964 yards.

Thomas finished with a franchise-record 1,619 yards this past season, despite having 48, 62 and 31 yards in the team's first three games in 2014.

"I had three bad games last year or I would have hit it then, don't forget," Thomas said with a smile.

It has been a huge week for Thomas both personally and professionally. Monday he received the news his mother, Katina Smith, was one of 46 nonviolent drug offenders to have her sentence commuted by President Barack Obama.

Smith and Thomas' maternal grandmother, Minnie Pearl, were arrested in 1999 for narcotics trafficking. Both had been in prison since Thomas was 11 years old. Smith was scheduled to be released in 2017.

Thomas said Friday his mother will now go to a halfway house in Macon, Georgia, in two weeks and is scheduled for a release from the halfway house, he hoped, by November.

"I look forward for her coming to her first game," Thomas said. "It's [all] kind of breathtaking."

Minnie Thomas received a life sentence for that crime and remains in prison.

On the field, since starting the 2011 season, Thomas ranks second in the NFL with 28 100-yard-receiving games in the regular season and postseason. Last season he posted 10 100-yard games, including seven in consecutive weeks. His 226 yards in the Broncos' Oct. 5 win over the Arizona Cardinals is a single-game franchise record.

With Manning at quarterback, Thomas has had three consecutive seasons with at least 92 receptions, 1,430 yards receiving and 10 touchdowns. He is only the third player in league history to have three consecutive seasons of at least 1,400 yards receiving and at least 10 touchdowns; Jerry Rice and Marvin Harrison are the others.

The Broncos have now signed their past three players to carry the franchise player tag to long-term deals just before the deadline -- Clady and kicker Matt Prater were the others. Thomas' deal gives the Broncos the franchise player tag back, so it is available to use on linebacker Von Miller, whose contract is set to expire after the 2015 season.

Thomas is scheduled to have a football camp in Denver on Saturday and Sunday.

Broncos running back Juwan Thompson runs hard in memoriam

By Cameron Wolfe Denver Post September 2, 2015

Instead of celebrating his game-winning touchdown run in Saturday's 19-12 Broncos preseason win over the San Francisco 49ers, running back Juwan Thompson sat at his locker after the game kicking himself for a first-quarter special-teams blunder.

Thompson is usually tough on himself, but Saturday was different. He wanted that day to be perfect because of what it meant.

His grandmother, Hattie Marie Simon Griggie, would have turned 63 on Saturday if she had not lost her valiant fight with cancer two years prior. Thompson said he played the game in her memory.

"It was definitely on my mind," Thompson said. "I wanted to score a touchdown for her. And I'm happy I did."

Thompson said his family gets really emotional this time of year, and he was hearing about it from his mom up until a few hours before game time.

It started to get to him.

But he had a game to play. Once the pads were on and ankles were taped, it was all about football. And on first-and-goal from the 1-yard line, the Broncos called his number and he punched it in up the middle for six points.

Then, he followed it up with another run, right up the gut, for the two-point conversion.

"I think she would be real proud of me," Thompson said. "She never saw me play, but I think it would have made her smile to see me scoring a touchdown."

Running backs usually don't like to tackle, and some prefer not to be tackled, either. But Thompson is a little different.

He seeks contact. When he was the starting running back at Duke, he also moonlighted as the special-teams captain.

"He does whatever you ask him to do, big or small," running backs coach Eric Studesville said. "He understands a lot of his role, if he's here, is on special teams."

And that's how he made the team last season. He joined a crowded backfield with C.J. Anderson, Montee Ball and Ronnie Hillman already in Denver. But Thompson made himself a valuable commodity on special teams and as a short-yardage back, which allowed the Broncos to keep him active in 15 games.

Thompson's Twitter bio references Galatians 6:9 which says: "Let us not become weary in doing good, for at the proper time we will reap a harvest if we do not give up."

That defines Thompson's mind-set on special teams and how he got in the NFL as a whole.

He wasn't a star at Duke. In fact, he started just 24 of the 49 games he played and amassed only 1,244 yards over a four-year career.

As a senior, he was the team's starter to begin the year. By the end of the season, he had totaled only 355 rushing yards in 14 games.

Thompson was largely ignored in the draft process and was prepared to hang up his cleats before the Broncos saw his potential and signed him as a college free agent.

"I just wanted to give it a shot and see how much football I had left in me," Thompson said. "I was going to go to grad school (at Duke). I already got in and everything. But I worked my (behind) off. And I made the team."

Not only did he make the team, he was a key contributor. He rushed for 272 yards and three touchdowns and became the first undrafted rookie since 2006 to rush for two touchdowns in a game with his performance against San Diego in October.

"An opportunity is only an opportunity if you're in the position to take advantage of it," Studesville said.

Now, a year later, Thompson is in the same position again.

His roster spot appears more secure, but you never know in this league.

Coach Gary Kubiak noted Thompson's special-teams prowess as the main reason he has passed Ball in the running back rotation.

Still, Thompson is not ready to let down his guard. Hard work is how he got in the league, and hard work is how he'll go out.

Inside linebacker turns to 'Child's Play' for Danny Trevathan in his return for Broncos

By Troy Renck Denver Post September 24, 2015

The piercing eyes and fire red hair create squirms. And questions.

Linebackers create fear with hits, but art? Drawn on Danny Trevathan's left pectoral, the possessed doll "Chucky" stares back at onlookers.

"I was scared of clowns as a little kid, but not Chucky. Chucky's like my little brother," Trevathan said Thursday of his newest tattoo. "I have seen every one of the movies. I wasn't scared. I know they are kind of creepy. After awhile, you just catch on."

For Trevathan, the ink provides a peek behind the curtain, explains why, after multiple knee injuries, he leads the Broncos in tackles. He remains strong in his faith, devoted to his daughter. When he pulls on his helmet, though, he undergoes a transformation. It's too simple to say it's "Child's Play," but Trevathan competes with a fervor of a kid trying to earn his varsity letter.

"I think I like Chucky because I am a defensive guy, an aggressive guy," Trevathan said.

The scar on his left knee reveals how much he loves football and the challenge he faced at regaining a starting job. Poised for a Pro Bowl-caliber 2014 season, Trevathan wrecked his knee in training camp. He re-injured it twice during the regular season, requiring reconstructive surgery on his kneecap. Trevathan never doubted he would return, gaining confidence as he learned to trust pushing off his knee and stopping abruptly.

But at what level?

"I started to wonder if I could be my old self. It took some time, and it will still take some time. I am almost were I want to be," said Trevathan, who has made 16 tackles, 13 unassisted. "The beginning has been encouraging. During games I don't think about it. This defense is not hard, not hard at all. Be short with what you are doing and do it fast. If you mess up, do it at 100 miles per hour. I am getting there, but I am not satisfied. I am hungry."

Trevathan approached rehab like an oncoming blocker. He knuckles under to no one. Life in the trainer's room can be a lonely existence, creating a disconnect and loss of identity. Brandon Marshall, who flanks Trevathan at linebacker and spent time rehabbing his foot alongside his friend, saw a teammate determined to shape his future not wallow in the past.

"I always knew there was greatness in him, that he had the will and desire to come back. To me it looks like 2013 all over again," Marshall said of the season Trevathan finished with a career-best 124 tackles. "We discussed about how we were going to play together again and have success. Our goal was to be premier players."

The defense boasts a battery of stars, reflected in the statistics. The Broncos rank second in yards allowed (487) and takeways (seven). The concerns about Marshall and Trevathan's recovery from injuries have quietly dissolved.

"For starters, Greek (trainer Steve Antonopulos) had a great plan for them. He kept them moving forward. They are peaking at the right time," coach Gary Kubiak said. "Both are full go now. You are seeing two really good players, and the more they play together, it's only going to get better."

Beyond health, Trevathan and Marshall faced questions about their size in a 3-4 defense. They must be strong enough to shed blockers, but quick enough to guard running backs and tight ends in space. Marshall remains in the game on passing downs, logging 114 snaps, with Trevathan excelling against the running game, playing 70 snaps.

"Those guys back there are doing a good job of protecting us," defensive end DeMarcus Ware said. "Danny has the most tackles, and he came and told me that. I told him, 'you know, keep eating. You keep making those plays.'^"

It wasn't that long ago, nine months, Trevathan navigated the locker room on crutches. His comeback offers shades of fearlessness. Perhaps not surprising for someone with a horror icon on his chest.

"There are not too many linebackers in the league stronger and more aggressive than us. That's the type of player I am. I don't care how big you are. I don't care how wide you are, how physical you are and how you try to run people over," Trevathan said. "You have to bring your game to play me. I am getting back to my mean self. I am ready for anybody who thinks they can come here and take me on."

Louis Vasquez welcomes new leadership role with Broncos

By Cameron Wolfe DenverPost.com August 7, 2015

At first glance, Louis Vasquez would appear more likely to start, or better yet, end a fight than offer a helping hand.

The Broncos' 6-foot-5, 335-pound right guard is the biggest and most physically imposing man on the team. But you wouldn't know it from hearing him speak.

"He's not a rah-rah guy. Probably no one else can hear him except the guys in our (meeting) room," offensive line coach Clancy Barone said. "But he's certainly the leader in the room and has been so from Day One this offseason."

With the departure of left guard Orlando Franklin in free agency and left tackle Ryan Clady lost to a season-ending knee injury, Vasquez became the main source of guidance for a young, unstable offensive line.

Vasquez is exactly what he looks like on the field — a mauler and grinder, a guy you don't want face as a defensive player. Off the field, he prefers to lead by action. He believes you can show a lineman technique critique a lot better than you can tell him.

"My mentality is by the end of the fourth quarter, we want to feel your soul wilt in our hands. So I'm trying to instill that in the offensive line because it's dirty work. You might as well get nasty with it," said Vasquez, who was an all-pro and Pro Bowl selection in the 2013 season.

Last year Franklin operated as a vocal leader, and stood before the media on multiple occasions as the offensive line received criticism and dealt with desperate position shifts midway through the season.

Now Vasquez, 28, has been passed the torch with a less experienced group.

Vasquez represents the one known commodity. The Broncos could have four new starters on their offensive line, including rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo and center Gino Gradkowski. Among the candidates at left guard — Ben Garland, Shelley Smith and Max Garcia — only Smith has made a start in an NFL game.

"They're all just big eyed and bushy tailed, trying to take in any information they can," Vasquez said.

Relationships are built in the offseason, so after witnessing Garcia's potential, Vasquez decided to take him under his wing. He made guiding Garcia's development into becoming an elite guard one of his primary missions. They work on pass protection after practices.

"As a rookie you don't take anything for granted, especially when you have an elite guard like himself just taking the time to give me some critiques. I'm always looking for someone to emulate," said Garcia, a fourth-round pick in this year's draft.

Barone said Vasquez has turned the film room into his personal classroom, often pulling Garcia and others aside not only to point out their mistakes, but to show them how to correct them.

Vasquez, a 2009 third-round draft pick from Texas Tech, was a similar player coming into the NFL. Like Garcia, he was a natural power run blocker who had to work hard on pass protection to become one of the best and well-rounded guards in the league.

In 2013, his first year with the Broncos after spending his first four with San Diego, Vasquez didn't give up a sack and was ranked 97th on NFL.com's 2014 list of the league's top-100 players.

"Louis is a stalwart. He's down there grinding every day. We have to tell him to take a day off," said offensive coordinator Rick Dennison.

He was well on his way to repeat his success in the 2014 season, but when the Broncos struggled to find consistency at right tackle from Chris Clark and Paul Cornick they kicked Vasquez outside. He struggled, posting a negative Pro Football Focus blocking grade for the season. He said he never was comfortable with the finesse position.

Now he's back at what he calls his home at right guard. His roommates will be different, and Vasquez admitted it will be a tough transition.

"Obviously, I miss my brother Manny (Ramirez). It's the nature of the beast; this business doesn't really care about your relationship with other players," Vasquez said. "Whoever is playing next to me, I have to elevate our level of play."

If the other four guys on the line turn in the work ethic and focus on technique that Vasquez does, the Broncos offensive line won't be much of a worry at all.

Vance Walker brings value, versatility in attempt to rebound with Broncos

By Troy Renck DenverPost.com May 22, 2015

Vance Walker found obscurity in Kansas City.

It wasn't supposed to happen this way. The Chiefs chased Walker in free agency last March, turning him into their prized offseason acquisition, and almost immediately he became lost on their depth chart.

Walker played well. If he played. He started twice and logged more than 20 snaps in only three games. Seen as a catalyst to an evolving defensive line mix, he turned into a casualty, released after one year.

"I dealt with that when it happened. It's an unfortunate situation. I can complain about it, but I've let it go months ago," Walker said last week.

For the Broncos, Walker's inability to crack the Chiefs' rotation might be the best thing to happen for them. He remained a productive, if sparingly-used player, last season. The Chiefs guaranteed Walker $3.75 million on a three-year, $13.75-million contract. The Broncos kept him from signing with the Seattle Seahawks when he agreed to a two-year, $4-million contract with a $1.5-million signing bonus.

Value and versatility make Walker an intriguing offseason addition in the highly anticipated switch to a 3-4 defense that, nonetheless, features uncertainty along the defensive line.

"It's obviously a priority as we move forward, and we'll play a lot of people," coach Gary Kubiak said.

Walker, 28, didn't produce as expected in Kansas City, unable to supplant Allen Bailey or Jaye Howard. The Chiefs saved $1.7 million in salary cap space by cutting ties. Their desire to move on doesn't mean Walker can't move blockers. Insert a DVD from last season, and you will see the 6-foot-2, 305-pound Walker line up from end to nose and everywhere in between on multiple series.

He has consistently done one thing well, making him a potential fit for defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, who looks "to put players in position to succeed."

Pressure Point

Vance Walker signed a two-year deal for $4-million with the Broncos, choosing Denver over Seattle. He will be counted on to provide versatility along the defensive line. A look at how he stacks up against the Broncos' two remaining defensive tackles from last season, according to Pro Football Focus:

Defensive Lineman	QB Sac	ks	QB Hits	S QB hurries	Snaps
Vance Walker 2	1	8	238
Sylvester Williams	0	3	13	468
Marvin Austin 0	1	5	299

Walker boasts pass-rushing skills. He posted 32 quarterback hurries in 2013 with Oakland, fifth best among 3-4 defensive tackles, and eight last season in 238 snaps, nearly half of which came in just two games.

"The nose has a lot of versatility in this system," Walker said. "The biggest thing is really getting after the quarterback. That's something that I like to do. I'm just looking forward to it."

Pressure up the middle defines strong defenses. In NFL parlance, it means moving the quarterback off his spot. A hand in the face or a push of the center, preventing the quarterback from planting to throw, can lead to turnovers. The Broncos delivered in many ways last season — their defense ranked first in franchise history in rushing yards allowed per game — but they were not consistently disruptive. Denver ranked 13th in turnovers produced at 25. Phillips' defense features interchangeable parts, aggressive schemes, and a focus on reaching the pocket with purpose. DeMarcus Ware spent four seasons with Phillips in Dallas, earning three first-team All-Pro berths, while averaging 15 sacks.

"The new guys, the guys already here, everybody's going to be able to thrive to a new level in this type of defense," Ware said. "The offenses really have to be keen on who's bringing the pressure because this is a pressure defense."

Walker, a teammate at Georgia Tech with Broncos receiver Demaryius Thomas and WWE star Roman Reigns, can help by providing impact and depth. The Broncos' want to use a rotation of players, but effectiveness is required to share snaps.

It didn't happen in Kansas City. That, Walker said, is over. Denver presents an unrivaled opportunity.

"We have super high expectations. Just to be the best. We've got a really good group of guys between the D-Line, the linebackers, the ends obviously, the cornerbacks and safeties. I don't think I've ever been on a team more talented," Walker said. "We have high expectations. We've just got to go out there and work every day to live up to those."

T.J. Ward creates danger from safety in Broncos' 3-4 defense

By Troy Renck Denver Post October 5, 2015

Safety seems incongruous. When T.J. Ward blitzes, he should come with a warning label. He morphs into a hybrid: part linebacker, part defensive back, full on rage.

Facing a potential upset, clock ticking toward its death, Ward bolted from the left side Sunday, sacking Minnesota's Teddy Bridgewater, stripping the ball and protecting the Broncos' undefeated record.

Ward celebrated with his right hand in the air followed by a mudwalk celebration toward the sideline. For the second consecutive week, the coaches voted Ward the Broncos' defensive player of the game. He leads NFL defensive backs with two sacks. He has made three tackles for losses.

"Heck yeah it does matter. It means more to me now than ever before," Ward said of the staff's recognition. "You are playing with so many great players, guys like (DeMarcus Ware) DWare, Von (Miller), Agib (Talib), Chris (Harris), for me to have the most plays made, that means a lot."

When the Broncos signed Ward to a four-year, $22.5-million contract, this is the player they sought. A thumper, a playmaker.

"I wasn't allowed to be that guy last year," Ward said Monday.

Ward carried out his role last season for defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio, exercising restraint, following the plan. It turned him into an undersized linebacker rather than a disruptive safety. Del Rio left to become the coach of the Oakland Raiders, this Sunday's opponent, and took his 4-3 defense with him. Defensive coordinator Wade Phillips installed a 3-4 alignment, emphasizing pressure.

It caffeinated Ward.

"Why do I like blitzing? Because I am good at it," said Ward.

Teammates witnessed it early in the offseason. They recognized in practice that Phillips' philosophy would increase Ward's impact.

"T.J. can blitz, man. That's what he do," cornerback Aqib Talib said. "He plays around that box (with the linebackers). Wade knows what he can do, and he puts him in position to do what he does best. We definitely knew this was coming."

The strategy appears to be working. Ward owns 19 tackles, 13 solo, in three games. At 5-foot-11, 200 pounds, Ward brings a physical presence. But his intelligence sets him apart. What might look like freelancing is controlled chaos. On the Vikings' final snap, Ward crept toward the line of scrimmage next to outside linebacker Von Miller.

Ward refused to reveal too much to Bridgewater. He stood opposite of the tight end, creating the impression he was in man coverage. On the snap, Ward read running back Adrian Peterson. Once he fanned out for a pass, Ward finished like Mariano Rivera, bringing closure to another nervy Sunday.

"It's all about timing and anticipating who is going to block you, and beating the block," Ward said. "I thought I had a chance to get loose. I knew that Adrian Peterson was going to block me. Once he went out on the route, I knew I was free."

Ward earned Pro Bowl honors last season but wasn't himself. His personality fits the current defense's aggression and expectations. The Broncos lead the NFL with 18 sacks by 11 players. And Ward remains convinced they've left meat on the bone.

"We are trying to get more. Yes, more. I am telling you we have missed a bunch of sacks," Ward said. "We missed about seven on Sunday."

This season began in a way inconceivable to Ward. He was suspended one game for violating the personal conduct policy for an incident 15 months prior when he was charged with misdemeanor assault and disturbing the peace. The charges were dropped in a plea deal. Ward took responsibility for his actions. Missing the opener — he was "miserable" watching the Baltimore Ravens from home — sprinkled kerosene on his fire this season.

"His level of leadership, his passion for the game, it's obvious," free safety Darian Stewart said. "What he brings is big for us. It's what we need. We feed off it."

Ward's Finals focus is on Warriors

By Allie Raymond DenverBroncos.com June 4, 2015

While Denver and cities alike buzz with anticipation for Thursday night's Game 1 of the NBA Finals, one Bronco in particular has been waiting for this day his whole life.

A native of the Bay Area, safety T.J. Ward has been a Golden State Warriors fan for as long as he can remember and has attended games since he was eight years old.

"I remember being able to go to the arena, walking right up and buying the ticket for like $15," said Ward.

But Ward isn't just a typical Golden State fan. This May, he permanently showed his support for the team by inking a tattoo of the Warrior's logo with 'Golden State Warrior' written around.

The tattoo not only supports his hometown NBA squad but also represents how he sees himself.

"The mascot alone exemplifies how I like to play - my mentality as a Warrior," said Ward. "It's just to show my hometown some love, representing where I'm from."

So it goes without saying that Ward was on cloud nine when his local team topped the Houston Rockets in Game 5 of the Western Conference semifinals, earning their first Finals berth in nearly half a century.

"Oh, I was ecstatic," said Ward. "This organization hasn't been to the finals in 40 years. It's huge for the city, it's huge for the entire Bay Area, and I'm very proud. I'm proud of what they're doing this year."

When asked to weigh in on the matchup of Golden State's Stephen Curry and Cleveland's LeBron James, Ward was neutral, appreciating both Curry's and James' talent on the floor.

"I think you can't stop either one of them," said Ward. "They're going to get their points, so it's pretty much going to be up to what the other eight players on the floor are doing."

One subject Ward is willing to indulge in is Curry's young daughter, Riley, who captured the hearts of fans across the nation (and on the internet) with her post-game media antics.

"I saw the postgame interviews — she's adorable!" said Ward. "She definitely has a lot of personality."

The Warriors are set to host Game 2 of the Finals on Sunday and Ward hopes to be there to support his team. But just because he's behind his team bringing a championship to the Bay Area doesn't mean he's lost sight of his own championship in Denver.

"I'll be happy about it, but I've got a championship that I'm trying to win right now," said Ward. "It's going to be all great, don't get me wrong, but I'm looking forward to this season and winning a home championship."

DeMarcus Ware and the art of the sack

By Troy Renck Denver Post October 3, 2015

A time existed when an NFL pass rusher operated like a Tyrannosaurus Rex. He pursued the quarterback with carnivorous instincts and little concern of his path to the sack. Those are the days of the dinosaur. Watch the Broncos' DeMarcus Ware, currently the top performer on the NFL's top defense, and it's easy to see how the much the game has evolved.

Ware, 33, boasts the best start of his career at an age when he should be considering broadcasting options. Pass rushers aren't supposed to get better when they get older, especially one who finished with just one sack in the final seven games last season.

Part of what sets Ware apart is film study, a constant processing of information. He has turned the art of the sack into a blend of analytics and brute instincts.

"I look at tape week in and week out on one guy who I am going to be facing. It's like a chess match. What would I do when this guy did that move? And I watch it 40 times, the same play over and over and over," Ware said last week. "I then see how he handled different types of rushers. Then I go back to that play. It's seared into my head once I go into the game."

It's third-and-7 in the Broncos' season opener. The Baltimore Ravens face an obvious passing situation late in the first quarter. Ravens left tackle Eugene Monroe stands across from Ware. He assumes a passing stance that Ware detects from his film study, recalling how Monroe reacted to a specific move off the edge. He calculates how the Ravens' offensive line will counter Von Miller rushing from the opposite side.

Ware decides on a power-punch move to create a short path to quarterback Joe Flacco rather than making a wide loop around Monroe. The hours of study produced the answer Ware sought. He broke free of Monroe and pulled Flacco down by his shoulder pads in a burst of brawn and brains.

"Once you get around the corner," Ware said, "you already know it's Christmastime now. I am thinking in my mind, 'Don't throw the ball, don't throw the ball.' Once Flacco started running, I knew from the film that he holds on to the ball the majority of the time in that situation. Once I get there, I still don't know if he has the ball or not. I always turn around and look. That's why you see me do that. I always come and I swipe and try to knock the ball out. I try to see if the ball is out or if he's on the ground with the ball. Getting that sack, that's the ultimate reward."

Ware uncovers clues of his craft each week, burying his head into his iPad. He's able to notice things that few in his own locker room can. A twitch, a head movement, a shoulder raise, the slightest inflection by the offensive tackle might tip him off.

"He does enough studying for about four or five of us. It definitely helps me, and not only me, but everybody in the meeting room," Miller said. "He'll watch film for like three or four plays and he'll have a tendency right there. He'll be like, 'The quarterback is lifting his hands.' He always has something just off one or two plays."

Welcome to the film room

The evolution of Ware was not televised. It occurred during his third season with the Dallas Cowboys in front of a TV in a linebackers meeting room. Ware began his career terrorizing quarterbacks, collecting 19½ sacks in his first two seasons and Pro Bowl honors in 2006. In 2007, Ware changed his approach at the urging of teammate and fellow pass rusher Greg Ellis, a productive but aging veteran. He gave Ware invaluable advice. Ware was gifted athletically. Everyone realized this. Ellis told Ware what he did away from the practice field could make him better than what he did during workouts.

"He pulled me aside and showed me this and that on film. I remember looking at the screen and saying, 'I don't see anything,' " Ware said. "The more I did it, the more I understood. Now I go in the film room with guys like (Broncos outside linebacker) Lerentee (McCray) and he says, 'I see it.' I realized I would never see it without putting in long hours in the film room."

Ware has become so adept at analyzing offensive sets that he has developed a code language with Miller. He will yell across to him using key words known only to them that tip off a protection scheme, or the right time to use a move they worked on in practice.

"It's the language that he can speak with me that he can't speak to rookies. It's advanced when he starts speaking like Chinese," Miller said.

Knowledge is power for Ware. He used to run by offensive tackles with alarming regularity, playing bigger than his 247 pounds. He long ago heeded the advice of Hall of Famer Michael Strahan, who told him to get lighter as he aged. He uses his hands as well as any pass rusher in the game, skills gleaned from countless sessions with mixed martial arts experts.

Back in Wade's world

Statistics lay bare Ware's success this season. He leads the AFC in sacks with 3½. He ranks first in quarterback hits with 11. Returning to a 3-4 defense with defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, who helped Ware average 16 sacks per season in their four years together at Dallas, accelerated his rebound.

"This defense is his baby," Broncos inside linebacker Brandon Marshall said. "This is his home."

That's only partly correct. Ware's residence is the backfield, via the film room. So confident was Ware in his revival, he bought a 1982 Red Bourdeaux — the year he was born. If successful the previous week, he savors a glass each Thursday.

"It tastes good," Ware said with a big smile. "So good."

The mystery of Ware, of how a player growing older appears to be getting younger, goes beyond his statistics. Watch the game, peel back the layers. Ware will set up the tackle, using a power move in a specific situation only to switch to a spin move when he needs it most in the fourth quarter. It's the equivalent of Clayton Kershaw eschewing his curveball for a changeup to strike out a hitter with runners on base.

Ware's September is a tribute to understanding the NFL's nuances.

"If you really want to excel, you really start paying attention to the small things. That became film study for me," Ware said. "Everybody has tendencies and little glitches. I have glitches. But when you understand what they are in an opponent, and you turn it into a sack on Sunday, it makes it all worth it."

Sack is in the bag

Broncos star DeMarcus Ware is experiencing a renaissance at age 33. NFL reporter Troy E. Renck examines the art of the sack with Ware, by words and numbers:

Ware's favorite move is the "stab and swipe," in which he gets his hands into the offensive tackle's chest and then uses his hands to clear or swipe past the blocker.

Ware's favorite move he has seen used by someone else? The "side scissor" by fellow former Dallas Cowboys pass rusher Greg Ellis. "He swipes through their hands underneath," Ware said, "and it works. I am like, 'Why do they keep sticking their hands out?' "

Ware's 3½ sacks this season lead the AFC. He was chosen the AFC defensive player of the month for September.

Ware's 11 quarterback hits lead the NFL, three ahead of Houston Texans star J.J. Watt.

Ware's 132½ career sacks rank 13th in NFL history, two behind Lawrence Taylor and Leslie O'Neal.

DeMarcus Ware: I've found the fountain of youth

By Paul Klee Colorado Springs Gazette October 3, 2015

The fountain of youth is available for purchase.

Contrary to legend, this spring of juvenescence is not located in St. Augustine, Fla., nor did Ponce de Leon discover it. It comes corked, bottled, and you must ignore the price tag.

"It's expensive," DeMarcus Ware said. When I asked for more detail, the Broncos star revealed a tidy secret that threatens to turn this season into a History Channel special and send anti-aging experts to a southwest region in France.

"On Thursday nights I have a glass of wine," he said.

So that's the elusive fountain of youth?

"That's right. A 1982 Bordeaux."

The Broncos star pass rusher was joking, but only kind of.

When Ware copped his metaphorical fountain of youth before this season - a vintage from his birth year - the Broncos star did so as a reward to himself.

On Thursday nights he pours a glass. By then Ware is finished with his obsessive film study, a review of 40 snaps with almost every fathomable situation he could face the next Sunday. This Sunday at Sports Authority Field, when Minnesota quarterback Teddy Bridgewater encounters third-and-long, Ware has seen over three dozen episodes of that scenario and filed them away in his mind's library.

Hence, film study is his time machine, a glass of red the destination.

The age of football stars is a big thing around here lately, even if the real world chuckles at the notion of a 30-something being old, washed up, over the hill. But the NFL is not the real world, more of a discriminatory planet where 30-year-old running backs and linebackers are yesterday's cuts. Football years are like dog years, multiplied by seven and rounded up.

Then September happened, and Tom Brady, at 38, won AFC Offensive Player of the Month, and Ware, at 33, won AFC defensive player of the month - for the first time in his 11 seasons, a bizarre statistic considering a resume that includes eight Pro Bowls and membership on the All-Decade team of the 2000s.

"DeMarcus, he's playing like he's 22," said Broncos rookie Shane Ray, who is actually 22.

All those studies suggesting red wine can slow the aging process? Ware assured the secret isn't actually corked in a bottle, but stored on his team-issued iPad.

He has 3.5 sacks and 21 quarterback hurries, tied with cohort Von Miller for the NFL lead. If those numbers aren't enough to rattle a quarterback, the detail of his film study should. Knowledge is power, and Ware's memory squats 900 pounds.

During one game this season, Ware told Ray the opposing center was rocking backward just before he snapped the ball. During another game, at halftime, the veteran told the rookie the opposing quarterback would lean on his heels the instant before the snap. Watch for that in the second half, Ware advised.

"He does enough studying for about four or five of us," Miller said.

During a game against San Francisco in which Ware scored three sacks, he had noticed that left tackle Joe Staley, a particularly athletic offensive tackle, would spin to stop Ware's rush. Ware feigned a spin move, Staley bought it, and the next exit was 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick.

"There is a lot more dedication to film later on your career," Ware said. "If you really want to excel, you start paying attention to the small things. The little, small things are in film study."

It wasn't until Ware's third season of pro football that he devoted hours each week to rewinding tape. (The next season he had 20 sacks, a career high.) Cowboys defensive end Greg Ellis invited him to one of his private sessions, a gesture Ware now pays forward by extending the same invitation to Ray and other young Broncos.

"(Back then) I'm looking at it like: 'I don't see anything!'" Ware said. "It's the same thing they tell me (now): 'I don't see it! I don't see it!' I go in there and tell Lerentee (McCray, another pass rusher) and the light bulb comes on: 'I see it!'"

Half the time, Ware is simply setting up a lineman for his next move. All the time, he tomahawk chops at the quarterback's arm to knock the football free.

"How he wasn't a defensive player of the month (in Dallas) amazes me," Broncos defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said. "That's Jerry Jones' problem, I guess."

With 130.5 career sacks, Ware needs 70 to break the career record held by Bruce Smith. Ware has averaged 12.5 over his past five seasons, and, on that pace, would overtake the record at age 38, if he sticks around that long. Smith played to age 40, and the next three guys on the career-sacks list - Reggie White, Kevin Greene and Chris Doleman - played to 39, 37 and 38, respectively. With two more sacks, Ware ties Lawrence Taylor with 132.5, good for 11th all-time.

"It's going to be exciting to see him again and play against him and make him get his money's worth," Vikings star running back Adrian Peterson said.

If it's not attention to detail keeping Ware young - in football years, of course - it's time-traveling back with his traditional pregame song, "Eye of the Tiger," or giving a pregame speech to the Englewood High football team recently, similar to when Bo Jackson spoke to his Boys and Girls Club in Alabama.

"I do feel like I've found that fountain of youth," Ware said. "It feels good."

Or it's popping the cork on a specific vintage he purchased before this season - with the expectation he would find reason to celebrate.

"I just feel like I opened a 1982 bottle of wine and I'm drinking it right now," he said.

Broncos' DeMarcus Ware fills one of the few holes on his NFL resume

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com October 1, 2015

In a team meeting Thursday morning, Broncos coach Gary Kubiak started to list some of what is on DeMarcus Ware's football resume.

Things like 130.5 career sacks – 13th all time – eight Pro Bowl selections, four first-team All Pro selections and a selection on the NFL's All-Decade team for the 2000s.

But nowhere to be found in all of that was either an AFC or NFC Defensive Player of the Month honor, not even in a 20-sack season in 2008 with the Dallas Cowboys or a 15.5-sack season in 2010 or a 19.5-sack season in 2011. Ware was named the AFC's Defensive Player of the Month for September on Thursday with his 3.5 sacks in the Broncos' three wins – he's the only player in the league with a sack in each of the first three games of the season.

"This morning with the team I read off a list of things he's accomplished in his career, but that one wasn't on the list until today," said Broncos coach Gary Kubiak following Thursday's practice. " ... True pro."

Defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said the fact Ware had never won the monthly award was worthy of a double take.

"He's an amazing guy. I've been lucky to coach him twice now," Phillips said. "I don't know what's wrong with the Dallas [Cowboys] PR or whatever, he had 20 sacks, he tied Simon Fletcher's record for 10 straight games with sacks when [he was] in Dallas, so how he wasn't defensive player of the month amazes me, but that's Jerry Jones' problem. [So] it did surprise me ... You just look at the numbers now, Von Miller's a great player and he's got 50 sacks. DeMarcus has got 130."

Ware said he hadn't noticed the oversight over the years.

"I didn't even know anything about it," Ware said. "I just think about consistency and trying to just play well throughout the whole season and that's just the first half. I sort of split the season into four quarters. It's the first quarter now, but you have to start thinking about October. This league is, 'What have you done for me lately?' You have to sort of scratch September, think about it, how you played and what you do to get better for October."

Ware played the most snaps of any Broncos' defensive linemen in 2014. He lined up at defensive end in the team's 4-3 defense and wore down a bit in 2014, with just three sacks in the last 10 games of the regular season. So the Broncos have tried to manage the snaps for both Ware and Miller by using rookie Shane Ray and Shaquil Barrett in the two outside linebacker spots at times.

At 33 years old, a move back to outside linebacker has helped Ware as well. At linebacker he's not consistently in a three-point stance wrestling with offensive tackles on every play, especially on early downs.

"I was kind of talking to the players after practice [Thursday], you watch guys go through the grind and stuff, and you watch how he takes care of himself, how much he loves to play," Kubiak said. "I was preaching to young players [Thursday], you need to look at guys like that because those guys that last that long they usually last for a reason and they're usually made with a ton of class," Kubiak said.

Sylvester Williams proving worthy to anchor Broncos' defense

By Cameron Wolfe Denver Post September 25, 2015

For Sylvester Williams, the pressure was building like an overfilled water balloon in the summertime. No more kid gloves. No more giving him time to adjust. No more talk of potential.

After two years of subpar-to-average play from their 2013 first-round pick, the Broncos took a leap of faith. They decided to let their mammoth nose tackle Terrance "Pot Roast" Knighton go in free agency and hand the torch to an unproven Williams.

The coaching staff admittedly was uneasy. They knew he had the talent, but could he put it all together on the field in a new system?

Through two games, the answer has been a resounding yes. Lost in the shuffle of the veteran-led, top-ranked defense has been Williams' play as the anchor in the middle.

It hasn't showed up much on the stat sheet, yet, but his value to the defense has been felt across the board.

"When we played 4-3 here last year, he was a little bit iffy on how to play and where he fits in the defense," outside linebacker DeMarcus Ware said. "But now he can use his athleticism to sort of push the pocket and get pressure on the quarterback."

Williams knows he cannot replace Knighton's personality or gobble up two or three linemen in the middle like Pot Roast. He's abandoned hopes of duplicating either.

Instead, Williams focuses on using his quickness and explosiveness to not just hold the line, but to break it.

"Obviously I want to keep the linebackers clean, but I also want to make some plays myself and show up on the highlight tape too," said Williams, who has four tackles through two games.

More specifically, he wants to redefine the nose tackle spot.

You wouldn't know it by looking at his 6-foot-2, 318-pound frame, but he's undersized for the spot. He added 12 pounds in the offseason just to get to his current weight, and he's far smaller than his predecessor.

After two disappointing seasons, Williams is treating 2015 as his breakout year.

He finally took Knighton's suggestion and stuck his head deep into they're going and you'll be ahead of the curve.

Another change was the addition of defensive line coach Bill Kollar, who wouldn't allow Williams to have another year of being hesitant and getting pushed around. Kollar demanded playmaking from the entire unit.

"He preaches that everyday," Williams said. "He keeps that fire under us."

The Ravens couldn't douse that fire in Week 1, rushing for only 73 yards (3.2 yards per carry average).

Kansas City running back Jamaal Charles got off for 125 rushing yards in Week 2, but defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said failure to contain the edge and missed tackles on the outside caused most of those problems.

Broncos defensive coaches give grades, plus or minus, on each play. For the first time in three years, Williams said, his grades are more positive than negative.

"He'll have a heck of a year. He's truly a hard worker," Phillips said. "He's got talent, but a lot of guys have talent and they don't work how he does."

Outside linebacker Von Miller isn't surprised when he see some of the moves Williams is doing in games.

"I'm the one telling him, 'You have to try some of this,' " Miller said. "It's exciting to start to see him develop into the type of player that we all know that he can be."

It wasn't long ago Ware and Miller were pushing Williams to perform better, to live up to his high draft status. Now, Williams is earning praise from two of the team's best players.

And he's the rock in the middle on defense.

Hungry like D-Wolfe

By Andrew Mason DenverBroncos.com October 5, 2015

Bill Kollar made sure Derek Wolfe got right back to work.

The session left the fourth-year defensive lineman gasping. But it didn't dull his excitement at being back.

"Just hitting the sled until you're ready to fall over. Just running [around] hoops and working pass-rush moves. He made me do a 200-yard sprint. That was fun," Wolfe deadpanned.

"He had to make sure that I was in shape and ready to go. I'm glad he did it. I'm going to come in [Tuesday] and do another one."

To be prepared to say, "Thank you, sir, may I have another?" to Kollar's grueling workout, Wolfe had to stay in shape. He said he treated the last four weeks like "another offseason," training as hard as possible while avoiding injuries.

During the first week of his suspension, Wolfe worked out with safety T.J. Ward, who served a one-game suspension at the start of the regular season. Wolfe even worked out while his teammates played.

"A lot of times I was actually working out at the same time trying to mimic the game tempo with my workouts and stuff," Wolfe said. "The last two weeks, I kind of backed off of it a little bit because I pushed really hard the first two weeks and backed off a little bit. I got to sit at home, be a civilian for a little while and just watch the game, sit back and enjoy."

It was hard not to enjoy what the defense did in the last four weeks, racking up 18 sacks and 64 quarterback hurries, according to ProFootballFocus.com. And although he loved seeing his teammates in action, he ached at what he was missing.

"It was awful," Wolfe said. "I've had to sit and watch before because of injury, but when you're perfectly healthy and you're just chomping at the bit ready to go and you feel the best you've ever felt, there's nothing worse."

Wolfe said he tried to keep in touch with teammates. He sent a group text message out to teammates before games, and said he spent time hanging out with outside linebacker Von Miller at his house.

"We stayed in contact and I'm ready to come back in like I never left," he said.

But he could only do so much, and he couldn't even take his playbook iPad with him during his suspension.

"All that I could get was from what the guys would tell me was going on," Wolfe said. "But for the most part, nothing's really changed."

Except that the Broncos now have one more starting-caliber defensive lineman at their disposal. The Broncos can carry Wolfe without releasing another player for a week, but Kubiak expects to use Wolfe against the Raiders.

"It's up to us to decide whether he'll be ready to go this week, but my expectations are that he will," Kubiak said. "It will be a big week of practice for him and it's great to have him back."
