GAME PREVIEW

The Oakland Raiders open the 2019 preseason with a home contest against the Los Angeles Rams at Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum on Saturday, Aug. 10 at 5 p.m. PT. The matchup follows a week that features two joint practices against the Rams' ball club at the Silver and Black's training camp home at the Napa Valley Marriott in Napa, Calif. After two weeks of training camp, Head Coach Jon Gruden and the Raiders will begin a preseason slate that showcases three NFC West teams and one NFC North club. The squad opens with the Rams and will then travel to play the Arizona Cardinals in a nationally-televised matchup on ESPN, before heading to Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada to face the Green Bay Packers in Week 3, concluding the preseason schedule on the road against the Seattle Seahawks for the 14th consecutive year.

Coach Gruden, now in his second year of his second stint as the head coach for the Silver and Black, returns to the sideline once again to bounce back from a 4-12 season in 2018. QB Derek Carr, entering his sixth season, will again be at the helm of the offense after a year that saw him hit career marks in passing yards (4,049), completions (381), completion percentage (68.9) and yards per attempt (7.3 avg.). Carr set a franchise record by throwing 332 consecutive passes without an interception, a streak that ranks third-best in NFL history, and also set an NFL record for most completions (1,759) through a player's first five seasons in the league. Added to the offense is four-time All-Pro WR Antonio Brown, who comes off a 2018 campaign in which he led the NFL with 15 receiving touchdowns. On the defensive side of the ball, DT Maurice Hurst looks to build upon a strong rookie campaign after leading the team in sacks, with the help of newcomers LB Vontaze Burfitt and S Lamarcus Joyner. The team will also look for strong contributions from their three 2019 first-round selections: S Johnathan Abram, DE Clelin Ferrell and RB Josh Jacobs.

Following Saturday's game, the Raiders will return to Napa for a short week of practice before making their first road trip of the preseason slate, as they travel to Arizona to face the Cardinals at State Farm Stadium on Thursday, Aug. 15, a game that will be featured on ESPN at 5 p.m. PT.

HEAD COACHING MATCHUP

JON GRUDEN

Jon Gruden returned as head coach of the Oakland Raiders on Jan. 9, 2018, welcoming back one of the most respected and successful coaches in the storied history of the Silver and Black. Gruden, who was first introduced as head coach of the Raiders over 20 years ago, served four seasons with the Raiders from 1998-2001.

Gruden has compiled a 99-92 (.516) regular season mark as a head coach with the Raiders and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (2002-08), and a 5-4 record (.556) in postseason contests, which includes a victory in Super Bowl XXXVII.

In his first season back on the sideline in 2018, Gruden oversaw the development of quarterback Derek Carr, who established career single-season highs in completions (381), passing yards (4,049) and completion percentage (68.9). Carr also piloted three fourth quarter/overtime game-winning drives on the season and set a franchise record by throwing 332 consecutive passes without an interception, a streak that covered 10 games.

The youngest head coach in the NFL at age 34 upon his initial hire by Raiders Owner Al Davis in 1998, Gruden posted a 38-26 record (.594) and led the Silver and Black to back-to-back AFC West titles in 2000 and 2001. He guided the Raiders to an AFC Championship Game appearance in 2000, a campaign in which the Raiders set a franchise record with 479 points and led the NFL in rushing (154.4 avg.).

In all, Gruden-led teams have claimed five division championships and have recorded six seasons with nine-or-more wins. As a head coach, he has seen 22 different players combine for 40 Pro Bowl selections. In addition, Rich Gannon was tabbed for the Maxwell Club's Bert Bell Award as the league's Most Valuable Player in 2000 and four players who Gruden tutored as a head coach have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame: Jerry Rice (2010), Warren Sapp (2013), Derrick Brooks (2014) and Tim Brown (2015).

Gruden spent seven seasons as head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, finishing his time there as the winningest coach in franchise history by compiling a 57-55 (.509) regular-season record, while leading the Buccaneers to three division titles and a 3-2 mark in the postseason, including a Super Bowl XXXVII victory, becoming the youngest head coach in NFL history to win a Super Bowl.

Prior to beginning his initial tenure in Oakland, Gruden was a seven-year NFL assistant, helping his teams qualify for the playoffs five times. Gruden spent three seasons (1995-97) as offensive coordinator for the Philadelphia Eagles. He was the NFL's youngest offensive coordinator at age 31.

Before joining Philadelphia, Gruden worked for three years at Green Bay from 1992-94. He served as an offensive assistant to head coach Mike Holmgren in 1992 and spent the 1993 and 1994 seasons as Green Bay's wide receivers coach. Gruden worked as offensive assistant to head coach George Seifert with the San Francisco 49ers in 1990.

Born August 17, 1963 in Sandusky, Ohio, Gruden attended South Bend (Ind.) Clay High School and was a three-year letterman at quarterback at the University of Dayton, graduating in 1985 with a degree in communications. Gruden and his wife, Cindy, a former University of Tennessee cheerleader, have three sons, Deuce, who is in his first season as an assistant strength and conditioning coach for the Silver and Black, Michael and Jayson.

SEAN McVAY

On January 12, 2017, Los Angeles Rams Owner/ Chairman E. Stanley Kroenke named Sean McVay the 23rd full-time head coach in franchise history. McVay became the youngest coach in modern NFL history.

Head Coach Sean McVay's record through the first 32 regular season games of his coaching tenure is one of the best starts of all coaches hired since 2000.

McVay won 24-of-32 games during his first two regular seasons as a head coach. He trails only former 49ers Head Coach Jim Harbaugh for the most wins through the first two seasons.

Following his second season with L.A., McVay led the Rams to Super Bowl LIII, becoming the youngest head coach in Super Bowl history (33 years old) to guide his team to a World Championship appearance.

In his first season guiding the Rams, McVay completed one of the greatest offensive turnarounds in NFL history. He helped the Rams move from the 32nd-ranked scoring offense in 2016 to the league's top-scoring team in 2017, marking the first time in league history a team has gone from last to first in scoring. The first-year head coach led the Rams to an 11-5 record and their first NFC West title since the 2003 season, earning the team's first playoff berth since 2004. Following his first season in L.A., McVay was named The Associated Press Coach of the Year, becoming the youngest head coach to ever win the award. The Rams placed eight players in the 2018 Pro Bowl, the most in a single season by the franchise since the 1999 campaign.

McVay completed his third season as the Redskins' offensive coordinator in 2016 after initially being promoted to the position on January 15, 2014. Prior to his promotion during the 2014 offseason, McVay spent three seasons as the team's tight ends coach (2011-13) and one as an offensive assistant (2010). The 2016 Redskins' offensive unit broke many franchise records and ranked in the top-three in a number of statistical categories. McVay's group posted a breakout campaign in his second year as offensive coordinator in 2015, including record-setting performances by quarterback Kirk Cousins and tight end Jordan Reed. Collectively, McVay's 2015 offense recorded Top 10 rankings in third down percentage (43.5, fifth in the NFL), red zone scoring percentage (61.2, eighth), yards per play (5.6, 10th) and points per game (24.3, 10th).

In 2013, McVay played a crucial role in Reed's development, as the rookie compiled 45 receptions for 499 yards – Redskins' single-season rookie tight end records. During Washington's NFC East championship season in 2012, McVay's unit was productive despite losing starting tight end Fred Davis to a torn Achilles tendon in Week 7. In 2011, McVay played an integral role in Davis' emergence, as the then fourth-year tight end surpassed his previous career highs despite playing in only 12 games. McVay served as an offensive assistant to the Redskins in 2010 in addition to working with the tight ends during the final four weeks of the season.

McVay joined the Redskins prior to the 2010 season after an undefeated regular season with the Florida Tuskers of the United Football League (UFL). McVay originally entered the National Football League as an offensive assistant with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in 2008. McVay graduated from Miami University (Ohio) where he played wide receiver from 2004-07, earning Miami's Scholar-Athlete Award in 2007. His grandfather, John, served in various roles – including vice president/director of football operations from 1983-94 – for the San Francisco 49ers from 1979-95, overseeing five Super Bowl championship squads and earning induction into the 49ers Hall of Fame in 2013.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders — who began play in the American Football League in 1960 — enter their 60th year of professional football competition, including the last 49 as a member of the National Football League.

In six memorable decades — the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and 2010s — the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three world championships of professional football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 22 playoff seasons, finished 35 seasons at .500 or better and played in 44 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s.

The Silver and Black are the only AFC team — and one of just two NFL teams (Minnesota) — to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only three original AFL teams to have captured three world championships of professional football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980.

In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

With four postseason victories, the Raiders were the first of the AFC West teams to win multiple postseason contests in the new millennium by six years.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During the memorable 59 years in Oakland and Los Angeles, the Raiders have won 466 league games, tied 11 and lost 423.

"Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization during the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium as shown by their domination of pro football.

More than 20 of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced six Coaches of the Year.

In addition, 71 Pro Bowl players have earned 202 Pro Bowl selections representing the Silver and Black. In 1970, as the Raiders began their second decade of play, the merger between the AFL and NFL became a reality on the field. In the 1970 through 2012 period of interconference play, the Raiders compiled a remarkable 92-77-1 record against present National Football Conference rivals.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 — "Monday Night Football." The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build a 39-29-1 record in Monday night play. In the 49 years of this series, the Raiders are 17-9-0 in "Monday Night Football" games at home.

Through the decades — the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and now the 2010s — the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports.

Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

MIKE MAYOCK

THE GENERAL MANAGER

Mike Mayock was named General Manager of the Oakland Raiders on Dec. 31, 2018, becoming just the third general manager in Raiders franchise history. Mayock previously served as an Emmy-nominated analyst and draft expert for the NFL Network and handled color commentary duties in the broadcast booth for both college and NFL games before joining the Silver and Black.

Mayock has already applied his expertise in player evaluation to provide his own stamp on the Raiders' roster. Mayock acquired elite wide receiver Antonio Brown via trade with the Pittsburgh Steelers prior to the start of free agency in March, making a major splash with his first significant player transaction as a general manager. Mayock continued to strengthen the roster in the early free agency period, agreeing to terms with tackle Trent Brown and wide receiver Tyrell Williams, while adding versatile defensive back Lamarcus Joyner on the defensive side of the ball.

In his first NFL Draft at the helm, Mayock and Head Coach Jon Gruden used four picks among the top-40 players selected to assemble a group of "foundational" standouts. The Raiders selected defensive lineman Clelin Ferrell from Clemson with the fourth-overall pick before adding Alabama running back Josh Jacobs and Mississippi State safety Johnathan Abram with late first-round selections. Mayock executed two trades on the draft's second day to move back to the 40th-overall spot, selecting Clemson defensive back Trayvon Mullen and netting additional fourth and fifth-round picks. The Raiders were involved in five draft-day trades in total, trading up in the fifth round to pick Clemson wide receiver Hunter Renfrow, helping complete a draft haul that earned plaudits from around the NFL.

Prior to assembling talent for the Raiders, Mayock's NFL Draft analysis had been one of the most respected voices among media, NFL front office personnel and team scouting departments. His expertise featured within the NFL Network's extensive coverage of the NFL Draft, including the show "Path To The Draft," as well as the network's exclusive coverage of the NFL Scouting Combine and the Reese's Senior Bowl.

Outside of the studio, Mayock served as the television analyst for the Philadelphia Eagles' preseason games since 2015. He also served as a game analyst for NFL Network's broadcasts of the Senior Bowl and East-West allstar game, as well as preseason analyst for the Minnesota Vikings for several seasons.

In 2010, Mayock became the color commentator for NBC's coverage of Notre Dame football, teaming with play-by-play announcer Tom Hammond. In January 2011, he teamed with Hammond to call NBC's broadcast of the NFC Wild Card playoff game between the New Orleans Saints and the Seattle Seahawks. The following year, he called an AFC Wild Card contest featuring the Cincinnati Bengals and the Houston Texans.

Mayock teamed with Brad Nessler to call the NFL Network's Thursday Night Football package from 2011-2013. Prior to joining NFL Network, Mayock served as a college football analyst for ABC Sports (2001-03), Fox Sports Net (2000), and CBS Sports (1996-99). He also covered the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament as a reporter for CBS (1997-99). From 1993-95, Mayock worked on ESPN's coverage of the Canadian Football League.

A 10th-round pick in the 1981 NFL Draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers, Mayock then played for the New York Giants from 1982-83. He is a member of the Boston College Hall of Fame, where he captained both the football and baseball teams. Mayock graduated from Boston College in 1980.

Mayock and his wife Amanda reside in Alameda and have four children (Leigh, Michael, Mackenzie and Jack).

OAKLAND Vs. NFC NORTH

Oakland will face off against the NFC North this season, marking the first time since 2015 that they have played the division. Last season, the NFC North saw the Chicago Bears claim the third seed in the conference after posting a 12-4 record. The Minnesota Vikings also finished with a record above .500 (8-7-1). The Raiders hold a 27-25 combined all-time record against Chicago, Detroit, Green Bay and Minnesota.

SILVER AND BLACK IN PRIME TIME

- The Raiders will play two primetime games in 2019: the season opener on Monday Night Football against the Denver Broncos on Sept. 9 and a Thursday Night Football contest against the Los Angeles Chargers on Nov. 7. The Thursday Night Football contest against the Chargers will be televised on FOX with a simulcast on NFL Network.
- This will mark the Raiders' 71st contest on Monday Night Football and fourth consecutive year on the broadcast. In 2018, the team opened the season on Monday night at home against the Los Angeles Rams and also hosted the Denver Broncos on Christmas Eve in Week 16. The Raiders have split their last two Monday Night Football appearances, falling to the Rams, 13-33 and defeating the Broncos, 27-14, last year.
- This year's Monday Night Football contest marks the second consecutive year the Silver and Black will open the season at the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum on Monday night. It will also mark the second-straight year the Raiders have hosted the Broncos on Monday Night Football. Oakland has faced Denver more than any other opponent on MNF, holding an 8-9-1 record against the club. From 1997-2002, the Raiders faced the Broncos five straight times on MNF.
- Oakland holds a 39-29-1 all-time record in Monday Night Football contests.
- The Thursday Night Football contest against the Chargers will mark the seventh game between the two clubs on Thursday. Oakland has played no other team more on Thursday than the Chargers and holds a 5-1 record. The matchup also marks the first primetime matchup between the two teams since the Chargers relocated to Los Angeles, with their last primetime meeting coming on Thursday Night Football on Christmas Eve in 2015, when the Raiders claimed a 23-20 victory in overtime.
- On Thursdays, the Raiders are 10-11 all-time, including a 3-4 record on Thanksgiving Day.

MILES AND MILES

Factoring in two trips to the Eastern Time Zone and four to the Central Time Zone, the Raiders will once again travel more miles in the NFL this season than any other club. Oakland will log approximately 32,000 miles in 2019, approximately 300 more miles than their 31,732 miles traveled in 2018 and over 1,000 more than their 30,889 miles in 2017. Additionally, the Raiders are the only team in the NFL that will surpass 30,000 miles traveled in 2019.

The team's total of over 32,000 miles traveled exceeds the combined total of the Buffalo Bills, New York Giants and New York Jets' total of approximately 23,500 miles. During the club's 49-day stretch without playing in Oakland, the team will travel approximately 21,300 miles, more than 22 NFL teams will travel for the entire 2019 campaign. The Raiders also have the longest non-international road trip of the season, as they are set to travel just over 5,100 miles roundtrip to play the New York Jets in Week 12.

KEEP YOUR CARR CLEAN

In 2016, the Raiders posted a league-best 18 sacks allowed, the fewest by the club since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger. With 24 sacks surrendered in 2017, the unit tied for the third-fewest sacks given up league wide.

Since QB Derek Carr entered the league in 2014, the team's 155 sacks allowed are the fifth-fewest in the NFL. Their 94 sacks surrendered since 2016 rank sixth.

BIG ADDITION

In the 2019 free agency period, the Raiders bolstered their offensive line, adding Super Bowl Champion, 6-foot-8, 380-pound offensive tackle Trent Brown into the mix of an already talented group of lineman up front. The addition of Brown gives the Raiders projected starting front five that averages a height of 6-foot-5 and weight of 336 pounds. Brown has started in 44 of his 47 total appearances in his career and has started in all three postseason contests. Last season, Brown was part of an offensive line that surrendered just one sack in the postseason during the team's Super Bowl run. According to Pro Football Focus, Brown gave up just three sacks in 744 pass-blocking snaps last season. In the postseason, Brown gave up just four pressures and no sacks in 127 pass-blocking situation over the course of the team's three playoff contests.

ANCHORING THE LINE

Since arriving to the club in 2015, C Rodney Hudson has been an integral part of the Raiders success upfront. Dating back to his arrival, the offensive line has surrendered just 127 total sacks, the fifth-fewest allowed in the NFL during that span.

CARR'S INSURANCE

Anchoring the line once again in 2019, C Rodney Hudson was ranked by Pro Football Focus as the NFL's No. 2 center last season. Hudson tallied 1074 snaps and did not to surrender a sack, while allowing just one hit and four quarterback hurries. To put it in perspective, no other center with at least 1,000 snaps this season allowed fewer than eight hurries. Hudson led all centers in 2018 with a pass-blocking efficiency of 99.6.

----- PFF'S PASS-BLOCKING CENTERS IN 2018 -----

Rank	Player	Team	Efficiency Grade
1.	Rodney Hudson	Oakland Raiders	99.6
2.	Jordan Devey	Kansas City Chiefs	99.4
3.	Jason Kelce	Philadelphia Eagles	99.2
4.	Cody Whitehair	Chicago Bears	99.1
5.	Austin Reiter	Kansas City Chiefs	99.1

While Hudson has dominated in the run game, ranking seventh in the NFL among all centers, he has been that much more impressive in the passing game. Since his arrival, Hudson has surrendered just one sack since Week 1 of 2015 (2,678 snaps), per PFF. The Raiders also added C Jordan Devey in free agency this past offseason, who ranked second in the NFL in 2018 with a pass-blocking efficiency grade of 99.4, giving the Raiders a 1-2 ranked tandem in the aforementioned category.

Mo Hurst

DT Maurice Hurst was drafted in the fifth round (140th overall) of the 2018 NFL Draft. Hurst, a four-year letterman at the University of Michigan, was a 2017 consensus All-American and the school's Bo Schembechler Award winner as Most Valuable Player, while also garnering Walter Camp Football Foundation Second Team and Football Writers Association All-Big Ten First Team honors. As a senior for the Wolverines, he was also a semifinalist for the Chuck Bednarik Award. An immediate impact on the field at the pro level, Hurst led the team in 2018 with four sacks on the year while starting in 10-of-13 games, adding three passes defended and one forced fumble.

Mo Sacks, Mo Problems

A disruptive force in just his rookie season, Hurst's four sacks in 2018 ranked tied for 10th among all rookie defenders. Dating back to 1993, Hurst's three sacks through Week 10 were tied for fifth-most among defenders drafted in the fifth round or later. Since 2013, no rookie defender drafted in the fifth round or later has compiled more sacks through their first 10 games. Shown below is a chart of top rookie performers from the 2018 season.

Additionally, Hurst's four sacks on the season tied for 10th-most by a rookie in club history and tied for the most by a Raider rookie since Khalil Mack's four in 2014. On top of that, only one true defensive tackle in club history has recorded more sacks in his rookie campaign than Hurst (Scott Davis, 5.5, 1988), as his four sacks are the most by a rookie defensive tackle since Tommy Kelly's four in 2004.

DANIEL CARLSON

ALL-TIME RAIDER

In his first season with the Silver and Black, K Daniel Carlson made it one to remember. After a disappointing start to his career as a fifth-round selection by the Minnesota Vikings, Carlson joined the Raiders, refueled and poised, ahead of Week 8 on the team's Bye Week. The rookie out of Auburn appeared in 10 contests for the team, making 16-of-17 field goals for a 94.1 field goal percentage to mark a new franchise record in just his inaugural season in the National Football League. Carlson connected on all 18 extra point attempts last season and earned AFC Special Teams Player of the Week honors in Week 11.

Among kickers with at least 15 attempts in 2018, Carlson's 94.1 field goal percentage with the Raiders ranked fourth across the NFL. Among kickers with at least 15 PATs, Carlson was one of just four to finish with a perfect percentage, finishing 18/18 with the Raiders in 2018.

PLAYER OF THE WEEK

In Week 11 of the campaign, Carlson earned his first career game-winner and AFC Special Teams Player of the Week Award when he booted a 35-yard field goal through the uprights as time expired to defeat the Cardinals, 23-21. It marks the team's second such award of the season en route to three overall. Carlson's stat line from his 'special' day can be found below.

Stat line: Connected on all three FG attempts from 49, 21 and 35 yards out, while booting four of his five kickoffs into the end zone for touchbacks and making both PATs

- His 35-yard FG as time expired was his first career game-winner
 - His FG was one of just two game-winning kicks with time expiring among AFC teams in Week 11
- His 49-yard FG was a career long
- His three FG makes tied for second-most in the NFL and tied for first in the AFC in Week 11
- His 11 points scored tied for fourth-most among kickers in Week 11 and tied for first among AFC kickers
 - His 11 points scored marked a new career high
- His 80% touchback percentage on kickoffs ranks fifth in the NFL and second in the AFC in Week 11

CONNECTING FROM DEEP

Carlson was fantastic for the Raiders in 2018, and perfect in some aspects. In just his first season in the league, Carlson was perfect from 50 yards and beyond.

Carlson was good one field goals from 50 yards on three different times this season, while connecting on eight-of-nine field goals from at least 40 yards out.

In 2018, there were 25 kickers who attempted at least three field goals from 50 yards and beyond, but only two of them were perfect on each of their attempts: Daniel Carlson and Chandler Catanzaro.

Mike Mayock on the 2019 Draft, and Building the Raiders in the Mayock-Gruden Image

By Albert Breer

May 6, 2019

Someone raised an interesting point last week, and I honestly can't remember who it was, but the gist was simple: Maybe if Mike Mayock was still at NFL Network, we'd have a different opinion on Clelin Ferrell going fourth overall.

It's a fair point, too. How the football-watching public perceives a prospect is shaped largely by the media, and the Raiders GM carried a big stick in that arena after two decades of breaking the draft down on TV. So when we talked on Thursday, I had to ask the new exec, with whom I worked for six years, how he'd have reacted to Ferrell at 4 if he was on a set in Nashville rather than in a war room in Northern California.

"I don't think I would've been as surprised as a lot of the world," Mayock said, with a laugh. "At the end of the day, people act like the thought wouldn't occur to me to trade down and still get Cle. He was our guy, OK? And whether we got him at 4, 8, 10, it didn't matter. He was gonna be our guy."

"He's a foundation player. And even more importantly, he's a three-down defensive end who can stick his hand in the dirt and play on run downs and pass downs. He's not a guy who's going to be a designated pass-rusher. He's in there on every snap. And he's gonna set the tone for us, as far as these young guys are concerned. I couldn't wait to get to that pick."

In my final "rumors" column that went up about three hours before the draft started, we did connect the Raiders to Ferrell. That was based on a couple tips I'd gotten. But, full disclosure, I didn't think there was a chance they'd take him at 4, nor did the teams picking around them. In the end? I underestimated just how vital building around the right kind of guy—"our guy"—was going to be. I think most teams did, too.

So if there's one thing that marks Mayock's first class, that's it, without question.

And here's the thing: Mayock wasn't even hiding it. He actually explained the "our guy" idea, repeatedly, before the draft. But saying it and driving it home like the Raiders did are two different things. And did Mayock ever drive it home, first with Ferrell, then with Alabama RB Josh Jacobs, then with Mississippi State S Johnathan Abram, then with Clemson CB Trayvon Mullen, and you get the picture.

Message sent. Message received. Over and over again.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I felt like the entire draft was important that way," Mayock said. "We had four of the first 35 picks, and I think if you look at those four picks, all of those guys share traits. They have a passion and a love for the game, and you can see it the way that they play. I think we were consistent throughout the draft, and I think we sent a message that Jon [Gruden] and I believe in.

"Yeah, Cle was very important, but we felt like the consistency of the entire draft was just as important."

The good news for Raiders fans, in my mind—there's a lot of rhyme and reason to what Mayock and Gruden are doing. I don't know if it'll work or not. No one really does.

But this plan, which Mayock took me through, does make some sense.

So how does Mayock know that he'd have approached the Ferrell pick differently from most analysts if he were on TV for it? Because in the fall, he was preparing for the draft as if that was just where he'd be—which is when he first got smitten with the two-time First Team All-American. Which, in turn, is to say he actually knows what he would have said, for a fact.

"If you remember when Chris Long got drafted by St. Louis, he was the second pick, and when they drafted him, I knew the kind of player they were getting," Mayock said. "Now, they were never able to successfully bring other guys around him, but Chris Long played his butt off every snap of every game, he set a physical edge in the run game, he got his 7, 8, 9, 10 sacks, and he energizes a locker room.

"He's what I call a glue player. I looked at Ferrell back in September and October, and I watched three or four tapes and at the bottom of my notes, I wrote 'glue/Chris Long.' That's the kind of guy, to me, who has more value than you can even put a number on. Chris hung in there, ended up in New England, gets a Super Bowl, goes to Philadelphia, gets another. Chris Long's a glue guy. And I think Cle is also."

So that, in a way, connects where Mayock was in the fall—watching kids on tape from his home in Philly—to where he wound up in the spring. But a lot happened in the time in between. And that's why, in the wake of his first draft with Gruden, as they assembled a class in their image of what a Raider will be, I figured it would make sense to double back with Mayock now and fill in a bunch of the blanks.

Here, then, is the New World of Mike Mayock four months in, according to the man himself.

The biggest adjustment. When I asked Mayock for his biggest blind spot, he didn't hesitate for a second. It was in pro scouting. And his responsibility in that area only grew when Raiders pro scouting director Dave Vandernat was fired in January. So really, while Mayock was hired for his work on the college side, the time from his start date to the March 13 open of free agency became a dead sprint through unfamiliar territory.

"I had to put aside everything else and just gear up with Jon on free agency," Mayock said. "The thing that was really intriguing, there was more of a volume of work that had to be done—by position, by free agent. And the only way you could do that was by watching tape. Jon and I and [director of football research] David Razzano and Jon's staff had to grind it pretty hard to get ready for free agency."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

As they did that, the Raiders' cap people, led by Tom Delaney, worked to benchmark the market for every player, which didn't do a ton to settle nerves. "The fear of the unknown for me was, 'Wow, we're talking about spending 20, 30, 40, 50 million dollars, a lot of it guaranteed, on these guys,'" Mayock said. "We needed to get it right."

And just as quickly as a free-agent class headed by Trent Brown, Lamarcus Joyner and Tyrell Williams came together, it was over. "I just couldn't believe how quickly deals were getting done the day of free agency," Mayock said. "I just was like, 'Oh my god.' We took Trent Brown off the market immediately. And you look around the league and you're like, 'Wow, three-quarters of our board is already gone!'"

The relationship with Gruden. With all the work that needed to be done, and the game of catch-up being played, you might imagine that Mayock was keeping long hours. And as has been well documented, Gruden has always kept long hours. Over time, that's where they bonded.

"The first month I was here, I was walking in the building and it's 5:30 in the morning, and Jon's already in there watching film, and I start watching film in my office," Mayock said. "And after a few days, it's, 'This is crazy, why am I over here watching film and he's over there?' So I just started grabbing my coffee and going over there, and he and I would sit down and watch film.

"It was a really good lesson for me to see how he watches film, because everybody watches it a little differently. And Jon's got just miles and miles and miles of cutups that he's had his whole career. He can pull up cutups from 20 years ago just by clicking a button. The volume of work he does is mind-boggling. And I respect that."

It was there, in the wee hours, that the more conservative Mayock and more aggressive Gruden worked to find common philosophical ground. There and ...

The National Championship Game. A week after he was hired, Mayock made his first public appearance in a work setting, donning a Raiders parka at the national title game in nearby Santa Clara. That night, he saw two of his three first-round picks [Ferrell and Jacobs], and his second-[Mullen] and fifth-rounders [Hunter Renfrow] live. And as you might've guessed, that night was important.

"I felt it on the field before the game, these were the two best college programs in the country and have been for several years now," Mayock said. "And when you walk around on the field before the game and watch these guys warm up, and you do your body types, you're taking notes—they look like two NFL teams. I said it to somebody, I don't remember who, and I remember thinking to myself, 'Man, if you just draft from these two teams, you're gonna do well, forget the rest of the country.'"

"I didn't consciously set out to make that happen. But we got more and more impressed with these Clemson kids, as we met them, as people. We loved the Alabama tailback. And it worked out pretty well from our perspective."

An underlying factor here, that Mayock affirmed in our talk: If you're trying to build a certain championship atmosphere, it doesn't hurt to have kids from the likes of Alabama and Clemson.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The scouts. This is where Mayock raised his voice a little. The Raiders dismissed scouting chief Joey Clinkscales and Vandernat shortly after the season, and knew more changes would come post-draft. And yes, Mayock did send scouts home a week before the draft to close the circle. But he told me only three of those guys were actually let go. A bunch of them are back at work now.

"I never fired any of them. I didn't. I sent them home," Mayock said. "Listen to me, I sent them home, and I fired zero of them until the day after the draft. And then I notified a couple guys [that they were let go]. End of story. Nobody follows the story. Nobody cares. Everybody just wanted to report that Mayock sent everybody home."

And while the idea that Mayock banished people had a totalitarian feel to it, the GM was actually very quick, in our conversation, to credit the work of assistant player personnel director Trey Scott and scouting coordinator Teddy Atlas. The latter, in fact, was "directly responsible" for the team's seventh-round pick, Prairie View pass-rusher Quinton Bell, according to Mayock.

"When the rest of the league was hoping to sign him as a free agent, Teddy was at his pro day," Mayock said. "He was a converted wide receiver who went to defensive end at Prairie View. And Teddy kept this kid alive for me. And he ends up being 6'4", 240, ran 4.44, played one year at defensive end. The bottom line is those two guys helped me immensely throughout this whole process."

The coolest part of the draft. I'll let Mayock take this one.

"There were two things," he said. "One is just the absolute joy that Jon Gruden has talking to the players on that phone call. I mean, I'm telling you, he couldn't wait to get on the phone. And his joy and true excitement in welcoming these players to the team was awesome. I got excited and almost emotional just watching him do it.

"That's one, and I think the other one is, we moved down a couple times in the second round, we moved from 35 to 38 to 40, and picked up a couple extra picks, and were able to keep our guy, Trayvon Mullen, who we wanted all along. Jon and I were connected on that. We were sweating through every pick, and it ended up working out. I think both of us really enjoyed that process."

So now his first draft is in the books, and Mayock has turned the page and is working on getting a few hires done to fill out his staff. But allowing himself one last look in the rear-view mirror, the TV-guy-turned-GM remembered sitting on the North team bus en route to the Senior Bowl on Jan. 26.

"This is just for the Senior Bowl game, and I'm sitting there across from Jon [who was coaching the North], going, 'OK! This is real, we're about to go play a game,'" Mayock said. "Even though it was the Senior Bowl, you feel some skin in the game."

And they did have some skin in that game, in the end. Four guys who played that afternoon were drafted by the Raiders (Abram, Renfrow, Isaiah Johnson and Foster Moreau), and three others were signed by the team as college free agents (Te'von Coney, Alec Ingold, Keelan Doss).

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

As was the case with the national title game, Mayock got a chance to see those kids up close, and that really does matter to him, for the same reason he sees getting his next set of hires right as vital, and values what he got in Ferrell and company in the draft. He hasn't been working for teams the last 20 years, but he's seen enough good ones to know what it takes, beyond what a stopwatch can tell him.

"My whole goal, my whole belief, is that people change circumstances," Mayock said. "Not buildings, not anything else—it's people. It's the draft picks you bring in, it's your coaching staff, it's your scouting staff. And I'm excited about where we're headed. I'm excited about the people we're bringing in to this building. And I think everybody sees the opportunity and the energy that's going on with the Raiders."

By everybody, I'm thinking he didn't mean the rest of us—those people who sat there just a little stunned with what he did with his first pick. And besides, in any other year, we might have understood it a little better.

Fatherhood drives Raiders rookie safety Johnathan Abram

By Matt Kawahara

June 16, 2019

At a news conference in late April, the three players selected by the Raiders in the first round of this year's draft were asked to describe what motivates them.

Johnathan Abram, the 27th overall pick out of Mississippi State, spoke last.

"For me, I have a daughter," Abram said. "She has helped me gain another sense of purpose for why I tick, what makes me get up in the morning."

For Abram, whose daughter Harlee turned 2 in May, Father's Day invites both celebration and reflection. Abram and his wife, Bri'Anna, originally conceived twins. A second daughter, Halle, was stillborn.

"I think about it all the time," Abram said last week. "There's supposed to be two rather than one. We think about it quite often."

Johnathan and Bri'Anna share a hometown of Columbia, Miss., and began dating, Bri'Anna said, after she'd already finished high school.

Abram was still at East Marion High School, where he played baseball in addition to safety and quarterback for the football team. He committed to play football at Georgia and when he moved there in 2015, Bri'Anna, who'd just finished nursing school, moved as well.

"I'll tell you something about me — I'm a huge football fan," Bri'Anna Abram said by phone last week. "I'm his biggest critic, even to this day. Even if he had a good game I would literally sit in the stands and count missed tackles and stuff."

"He came from a very small (high) school. I don't know if he thought he had the opportunity to even get this far coming from this small school. He surprised a lot of people."

Abram transferred after his freshman season at Georgia to Jones College in Ellisville, Miss., and then — after a season as the country's top-rated junior college safety — to Mississippi State.

In January 2017, Bri'Anna learned she was pregnant with twins. Johnathan had already started at Mississippi State so Bri'Anna, living a few hours away in Hattiesburg, "kept him updated on appointments."

Around 16 weeks, Bri'Anna said, she learned the twins were girls. At 18 weeks, an appointment revealed "growth restriction" in one of the girls, Halle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Twin-to-Twin Transfusion Syndrome, or TTTS, according to Johns Hopkins Medicine, is a rare condition that occurs in pregnancies when twins share one placenta and a network of blood vessels. It can result in an imbalance in blood exchange, leaving one twin with less blood and the risk of malnourishment and the other at risk of heart complications from overwork.

"It's a rare situation," Abram said. "A lot of people end up losing both twins."

Bri'Anna wasn't diagnosed with TTTS at the 18-week appointment, as the twins didn't show all the symptoms. At 24 weeks, though, an appointment revealed Halle had lost amniotic fluid. Bri'Anna transferred to a hospital in Cincinnati, where she was diagnosed with TTTS. Johnathan later met her there.

Bri'Anna said an ultrasound showed Halle starting to go into heart failure. Harlee was also experiencing heart distress, as "she was trying to work for both of them at that point." Doctors suggested a laser ablation, a surgery aimed at correcting the blood-sharing imbalance.

"It was a risk that we would lose one or both," Bri'Anna said. "So we were like, we're going to try whatever they suggest for us to at least try to save one."

"After the surgery, the doctor checked me. She thought my water broke, but it was actually the rest of the amniotic fluid. Probably a couple hours later, that's when Halle passed away."

Harlee was born about a week later, on May 21, 2017.

"We tried to save both," Abram said. "We had to lose one to save one."

Born about three months premature, Harlee spent two months in a newborn intensive care unit. Abram said she pulled out her own breathing and feeding tubes before being released.

"She's a character," Abram said. "She's probably one of the most fun people to be around. She is super-funny. I call her a copycat. She does every single thing she sees me and my wife do."

"She is like Johnathan," Bri'Anna said. "I'm more laid-back, chill. Her and John are like fireballs. She loves him. She follows him around like a little puppy. She wants to do whatever her daddy is doing. ... Any time he has to be on his own or something and leave, she flips out. She wants to be with John."

Johnathan and Bri'Anna were married in May 2018, before his final season at Mississippi State. The Raiders, who praised the 6-foot safety's physicality and tackling in college, have raved this spring about his early grasp of their defense. In a revealing move, they assigned Abram No. 24, previously worn by Hall of Fame defensive back Charles Woodson.

Bri'Anna and Harlee moved to the Bay Area last month, as Abram, who is projected to start as a rookie for the Raiders, participated in his first NFL offseason program.

"It just makes the entire situation better to get to go home to my daughter every day, to get to go home to my wife," Abram said. "It just makes it feel more like home."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"You have to have your own self-motivation. But to have a child depending on me ... to be able to go out every single day and make sure she has a better life than I had, that's probably my biggest thing. I want to create more opportunities for her to see the world and experience things I didn't experience growing up."

Bri'Anna said she's continuing her nursing studies and eventually plans to focus on one of two areas — pediatric or surgical.

"I'm very grateful for Harlee," Bri'Anna said. "She's taught me a lot just with perseverance and how strong she is. And she doesn't even know that yet."

"She kind of matured and changed both us. Some parents, kids change their lives for the greater good. I think she did that for both of us."

Beezy & Weezy: Why becoming a Raider is a heart-tugger for Trent Brown

By Jerry McDonald

March 20, 2019

ALAMEDA — Trent Brown stood in the middle of a Super Bowl celebration last month in a state of euphoria and sadness. As confetti fell inside Atlanta's Mercedes-Benz Stadium, the New England Patriot's tackle kissed the Lombardi Trophy and said, "Weezy, that was for you."

Neiron Ball, aka "Weezy," was unaware of his best friend's tribute after the Patriots defeated the Los Angeles Rams 13-3. Ball, a former Raiders linebacker, is in a coma at a long-term care facility in Georgia after an aneurysm burst in his brain Sept. 16.

It has been an emotional six months for Brown, who last week signed with the Raiders for the richest contract ever for an offensive lineman.

Moments after meeting local reporters to discuss the signing of a four-year deal with a guarantee of more than $36 million, Brown spoke about his friendship with Ball.

"I call him a walking angel, a true soldier who will never give in," said Brown, whose friend dubbed him "Beezy."

Ball, 26, was diagnosed eight years ago while playing at the University of Florida with a rare, congenital condition called arteriovenous malformation (AVM), in which the brain's blood vessels get tangled and rupture.

Physicians thought the condition had been corrected after a radiation treatment, but Ball suffered an episode last fall that left him in a medically induced coma.

Brown, starting his second game as the Patriots' left tackle that September day, expected to see his friend afterward in Jacksonville, Florida. The Florida teammates had made plans the day before the game.

Exhausted after a 31-20 defeat in 97-degree heat, Brown was sitting on a table getting rehydrated with intravenous fluids when his cell phone rang. It was Ball's brother.

"I'll never forget it as long as I live," said Brown, who was traded last year by the 49ers. "He told me Neiron was throwing up and then unresponsive. I was like, 'I know Neiron. He's going to shake this.' I just knew he would be out of that state by now, but here we are."

NiQuae White, 16 years older than Neiron, said her brother is out of intensive care, "progressing," and the family hopes he will eventually move to a rehabilitation facility. Family members are not providing many of the medical details to protect Ball's privacy.

Neiron's life was in doubt from the start. NiQuae, whose mother Johanna White was undergoing treatment for the autoimmune disease lupus, described her brother's life as a miracle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"My mother was having chemotherapy when she found out she was pregnant and doctors advised her to terminate the pregnancy," NiQuae said. "She said, 'I'm done taking the chemo. I'm going to have this baby and the baby is going to be healthy.' "

Neiron Ball arrived on Aug. 20, 1992. Although six weeks premature, he weighed 9 pounds. For 12 days, Ball remained in the hospital with a heart murmur.

Life didn't get any easier for the child. When Ball was 6, Johanna White had a fatal heart attack on Mother's Day. Within two years, Neiron's father Ronnie Ball was diagnosed with lung cancer and died after a seizure, an episode the son witnessed.

Raised by his grandmother and other relatives in Jackson, Georgia, Ball developed into a top-flight football player. In 2010, he earned a scholarship at Florida and played in 13 games as a freshman.

After the season Ball, then 18, saw physicians when he felt pain in his neck and head. They identified the condition as an AVM, which can leave victims paralyzed and is sometimes fatal. But Ball recovered and was cleared to play in 2012.

"I went from a very serious brain injury to being able to play in a year," Ball told this news organization in 2015. "After it happened, I wasn't even thinking about playing. But I just kept getting better. I felt blessed."

His trials were not over. Ball had a potentially career-ending knee injury as a college senior that needed microfracture surgery. Ball said that after conquering the AVM, knee surgery didn't seem like much of an obstacle.

"If you know his full life story, everything he's been through during his time on earth, that's why to me he's a walking angel," Brown said. "He's not done and I will do my best to finish whatever I can for him."

As the story goes, the college roommates were engaged in some good-natured banter when Brown said his buddy called him "Beezy." The big lineman countered with "Weezy," and the monikers stuck. So did the friendship.

White, the oldest of five siblings, considers Brown, 25, her adopted brother.

"I can honestly say they're closer to one another than their own siblings," she said of Ball and Brown. "And they love their siblings. It was like a puzzle piece that fit perfectly."

Fate brought Brown and Ball even closer during the third day of the 2015 NFL draft.

The Raiders took Ball in the fifth round with the 161st pick after the linebacker had an excellent Pro Day to show scouts he'd recovered from knee surgery. Two rounds later, the 49ers drafted Brown at No. 244.

Ball was elated, while Brown was disappointed he didn't go higher but eager for his NFL opportunity.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Best of all, Weezy and Beezy, neither of whom had been to California, were headed to the Bay Area.

"We were right across the bay so we probably saw each other once a week," Brown said. "He'd be sleeping at my house or I'd be sleeping at his. We talked just about every day."

As a rookie, Ball impressed Jack Del Rio's staff with his special teams play. His athleticism was so apparent he became the starting weakside linebacker in the season's fifth week, logging 36 snaps. But in his second start, Ball had a non-contact knee injury after 18 snaps that ended his season — and career. He struggled through the 2016 preseason, but was placed on injured reserve and did not return.

Brown, meanwhile, played sparingly for the 49ers. The largest player in the NFL at 6-foot-8, 380 pounds, Brown made five appearances with two starts.

"They were basically out there by themselves," said White, the sister. "They made it their business to see one another when they weren't training, and to pick up the phone to vent, share secrets and advise each other. I think they know more about each other than anyone else could possibly know."

Through it all, Ball's disposition remained relentlessly positive, a smile rarely leaving his face. Ball befriended the family of a 10-year-old boy who had suffered paralysis as a result of an AVM and attended an awareness fundraising walk organized by the Aneurysm and AVM Foundation. He was an inspiration to those whose conditions up to that point had a far more serious outcome.

All of which makes the current situation more painful. The family has said only in a statement in September: "We believed Neiron's AVM was obliterated. That doesn't seem to be the case as he developed an aneurysm that burst. His family asks for continued prayers."

Beezy, meanwhile, carries on. He made trips from Boston to Georgia to see his best friend during the season, and shed some tears in solitude as the reality sunk in about joining Ball's Raiders. To NiQuae White, Brown's landing spot in free agency made perfect sense.

"Wow, look at this — God is sending you to finish what our baby brother started," White said. "You're doing what Neiron wanted."

"Trying to help the Raiders be great."

TE Paul Butler

THE ATHLETIC

How tight end Paul Butler took a detour through The Spring League, chugged chocolate milk and earned an unlikely Raiders roster spot

By Vic Tafur

June 27, 2019

The poster boy for The Spring League had some early doubts.

Paul Butler actually thought he might have been scammed.

Butler, now a tight end with the Raiders, was playing for Team West in The Spring League in Austin, Texas, just a year ago. But when he first signed up for the developmental league — and paid his $800 registration fee and bought his airline ticket — the silence was deafening.

Then, the rosters for the four teams were announced. He kept scanning for his name Butler, Butler, Butler ... Nope.

"I was freaking out," Butler said. "Getting really nervous. Like maybe I had been ripped off. I paid, they didn't put me on a roster and they weren't answering any of my e-mails or anything ... What's going on?"

But it was just a logistical mistake, and Butler finally got in touch with league founder Brian Woods.

Butler flew to Austin from Pennsylvania, and no one even noticed the Division II California (Pa.) University product until he made a catch in traffic, withstood a shot in the ribs and stayed on his feet. Butler also had a touchdown catch in another game.

"I made some noise," Butler said.

Butler went on to make the practice squad with the Raiders last season, and he made himself known again, as he was promoted to the 53-man roster for the last two games.

West coach Glenn Smith, who used to coach in the NFL before hooking up with The Spring League, will never forget his first impression of Butler.

The kid was green. And red.

"He was a raw kid," Smith said in a telephone interview Thursday. "He didn't really know what was going on. Everything was new to him. He was a wide-eyed country kid who could run a little bit. ...

"He is from upstate Pennsylvania. He hadn't seen the sun in about four years, and he comes to Austin and on his first day got the shit sun-burned out of him. I mean, his arms and neck were red as shit. It was so bad you hurt just looking at him."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But Smith said Butler never let the burn get to him, and warmed up to the offense quickly.

"He had a great work ethic and he asked a lot of questions," Smith said. "He had never really been exposed to a pro-style offense, and that's the great thing that The Spring League does. He took notes and was always the first guy in and the last guy out."

Butler was driving to the Raiders facility on Christmas Eve last year when his agent called and told him the Lions were claiming him off the Raiders' practice squad. But the Raiders then told him they were going to activate him, and the choice was his.

"It was a no-brainer," Butler said. "I love the coaches and the players here. The Raiders believed in me throughout the journey."

When he signed his new contract and returned to the practice field, the other tight ends congratulated him.

"It hit me that I made it," Butler said. "It's probably the best feeling that I have ever had."

Butler has stood out during offseason workouts and the minicamp two weeks ago.

Like, who is that guy?

"He takes his shirt off and you wonder why is there a pro wrestler on the practice field," offensive coordinator Greg Olson said, then laughed.

The 6-foot-6 Butler is shredded. He reported last year at 246 pounds, dropped to 238 during training camp and is back up to 255 now.

"I am trying to get as lean as I can," Butler said. "I want to separate myself as much as I can, and I feel like changing my body is one way to do so."

Imagine how lean Butler could be if ever gets on a diet, as he admits to still eating a lot of Wendy's and pizza.

"I am just trying to get calories any way I can and then I lift a lot of weights," he said. "Taking the supplements I am supposed to take."

His family and friends back home gave Butler some friendly side-eye when he would say as a high school senior that he wanted to play in the NFL.

He was a senior receiver who had 18 catches as part of a running offense. His coach was even skeptical when Butler asked for his help with recruiters.

"He told me would send some film out, but not to Division I schools," Butler said. "He didn't want to mess up an opportunity for future recruits who were worthy, because they wouldn't take him seriously because he had sent in my tape."

Jeez, that might be the hardest hit Butler will ever take in his career.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"That put a chip on my shoulder," Butler said.

Plus, the chip was heavy as Butler only weighed 170 pounds back then.

"I was really skinny," he said. "I started hitting the weights and I would drink a gallon of chocolate milk every day."

He tried out for the University of Akron team twice before making it.

"They kind of misled me, they told me if I enrolled I would have a spot on the team as a preferred walk-on," Butler said. "So I enrolled and they told me I had to try out."

He made it, but then there was coaching change, and Butler had to try out again. He made the cut — as a defensive end.

"They had me playing a position I had never played before," he said. "So I did that all year until they needed a scout-team tight end one day. And I lit our defense up."

The Zips were short on defensive ends, though, so Butler — already out two years of out-of-state tuition — had to transfer to California University to get a scholarship and to get his hands on the football again.

That summer, he drank two gallons of chocolate milk a day. He did so while training and working at the Water and Sewer Authority. (He also spent the summer of 2016 pouring concrete 50 hours a week to earn enough to fund his dream.)

"I was drinking it to survive more than for the taste," Butler said. "I had to do it to gain weight. A gallon has 3,500 calories and 150 grams of protein."

Butler still pounds the chocolate milk, especially when he is back home. "Galliker's is a local dairy farm, and it's so good," Butler said. "It's like drinking chocolate milkshakes."

After tearing ligaments in his foot his junior year at California, Butler came back in 2016 and had 173 receiving yards and three touchdowns on 15 catches.

"Not a lot there to get NFL teams excited," said Butler, who did have a tryout with the Steelers in 2017.

Butler actually started losing weight that year — so he could try out as a receiver in Canada — before he heard about The Spring League. He registered in December.

"It worked out well," Butler said. "The Spring League gave me the reps and the confidence that I could really do this. It was a very satisfying experience. I was out of football a year and essentially dead to the NFL. There is no developmental league. Having teams watch me again at The Spring League was huge."

Butler is in a gym right now back home in Philipsburg, Pennsylvania, trying to get up to 260 pounds before camp.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Though he keeps getting bigger, don't assume Butler will step in for the departed Lee Smith as the main blocking tight end. The Raiders still view Butler as more of a receiving threat, but one who can move defensive players with his blocking.

Butler is one of six tight ends who will hit training camp next month likely vying for four spots. Darren Waller will be the primary receiving target, and the Raiders drafted Foster Moreau to eventually fill Smith's shoes. That leaves Butler and three guys with NFL experience in Derek Carrier, Luke Willson and Erik Swoope.

"We have a really good group. We're all versatile and it's going to be a very good competition," Butler said.

The Raiders training camp in Napa next month will be a bit more relaxed than the competition at those practices for The Spring League.

It was a chaotic scene, as all four teams had to share an Austin high school practice field for two weeks.

"There were like 200 dudes on the field," Butler said. "There were guys everywhere, trying to make an impression, because there were only two games. There were NFL scouts there every day. It was a cool feeling."

Woods founded The Spring League in 2016. It's for young players who may have slipped through the cracks and/or have spent time on an NFL active, practice or pre-season roster.

"We identified an area of critical need," Woods said in a phone interview. "We bring players in at the end of March, and we think we have found a sweet spot in the calendar year. We provide the housing and the meals. It's kind of similar to the NBA Summer League."

"We are using players who the NFL wants to see again, with an average age of 26."

The four teams played two games again this April. There are also two annual showcases for scouts (the league just had one in Los Angeles), and Woods plans to expand to eight games by 2020.

"What Brian Woods is able to do, because so many people don't understand is whether it's the (Alliance of American Football), the XFL, everybody has tried to put spring football together and failed," Smith said. "The only thing that has stuck and given these kids a chance is what Brian has done with The Spring League."

In addition to having used Johnny Manziel, Canadian Football League players and players from Japan, Woods is also looking to add players from Mexico.

"We want to get guys battle ready, some guys who missed their window or never had a window," Woods said. "Guys like Paul Butler, who took the chance to develop and ran with it."

The NFL has sent memos to teams encouraging the use of The Spring League.

"We scale it back and don't put much offense in," Smith said. "We are not giving them as many defensive looks — just three or four defensive fronts. We don't shift or motion and we keep the tight end on one side, so the defense doesn't get all jacked up. Just a clean game ...

"It was amazing to see how much better Paul got and how much he picked up in two weeks. He learned how to create separation inside right away. Most players' first response is that they have to run away from the defender, but he grasped quickly that he had to get to that guy's feet and put the defender on his heels and close the cushion before he got open.

"He was head and shoulders ahead of everybody because of his ability to adapt. And I am sure it's the same with (Jon) Gruden's system. Paul takes advantage of every opportunity he gets."

The big opportunity came right after The Spring League, as Butler had an immediate rookie minicamp invite from the Raiders.

"I packed my bags to stay when I came to Alameda," Butler said. "Took a giant suitcase and told my mom that I am not coming home. I was going to do whatever it took to get signed."

Gruden heard Butler's story, and had him address the other rookies and tell them about all the stops that he had made before Alameda. Gruden named Butler the offensive MVP of rookie camp, and the team pulled him off the field on Day 3 to sign him to a contract. They also gave him a special No. 18 (as in 2018) jersey as a trophy, and Butler sent it to his mom right away.

He also called his mom as soon as he was signed to the 53-man roster last December, and the plan is that she will be there at a game next season for his first catch.

"I am just excited to get to training camp and put the pads on," Butler said. "I know what I can do. Just want to show the world what I can do. "

Butler has always kept motivational quotes on his phone. And one that he often looked at is from Gruden, from way before they ever met.

"All it takes is one coach who truly believes in you," Gruden once told a player. "Just keep working and you will get your shot."

LB Te'von Coney

THE ATHLETIC

Why Te'von Coney visited a juvenile detention center the same week he visits with NFL teams

By Pete Sampson

March 21, 2019

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — To reach the gymnasium of the Juvenile Justice Center here means passing through a half-dozen doors that open and lock behind you, sensations not lost on anyone walking this beige hallway. Outside on a Monday afternoon earlier this week, light snow flurries animated the dull sky, flecks of white breaking up the massive gray. There's a vibrant mural on one of the interior courtyard walls. This represents décor, along with a Martin Luther King Jr. picture hanging in the hallway. There is barely any view of the outside world.

This is not a place where people want to come. These aesthetics ensure that. Teal doors break up the monochrome, but that's about it. That's the last color before the gymnasium door is unlocked by the security guard who had stored his firearm minutes earlier. Inside the gym are 18 kids who are longer-term residents, nine boys in the front row and nine girls in the back. A handful of administrators stand at the ready behind them.

They're all facing Te'von Coney, here because he wants to be and here because he believes he needs to be. The former Notre Dame linebacker, who will participate in Pro Day less than 48 hours later, is dressed in a red sweater with a sparkling TC4 chain around his neck. He wears ripped black jeans and Gucci shoes that his parents gave him for a graduation present.

Some kids ask questions. Others stare blankly forward. The curious ones want to know about those shoes. They want to know about the NFL. One asks where he played college football. Another asks what position he played. One asks about the Clemson game. All of those answers grant Coney some credibility with the group. None offers more than when he's asked about the greatest adversity he's overcome. Coney doesn't need to think about his answer. He says his own friends back home growing up around West Palm Beach, Fla.

If that feels like a shock answer, it's not in this gymnasium. The kids barely react when the words come out. They know exactly what Coney is talking about.

"I'm just like y'all," Coney says to the group. "Growing up, there are two outcomes, dead or in jail. That's it."

In this moment Coney may be just three miles away from Notre Dame, where he'll soon work out under watch of all 32 NFL teams. He'll meet with the Cincinnati Bengals and the Detroit Lions. The week will put him within touching distance of NFL dreams he's had since elementary school, dreams that were laughed off by friends and coaches because going to college and beyond isn't what happens for kids from his neighborhood. In that way, Coney is closer to his old home while talking to these kids than the one he's kept for the past four years at Notre Dame.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

He could have been one of them. The fact that he's not is down to fine margins, a recruitment that ended with Coney taking a leap of faith toward Notre Dame. He'd never seen snow before enrolling early four years ago. He'd never left Florida before his recruitment, never been on a plane. He could have been one of these kids again when he was arrested with four teammates in mid-August before his sophomore season, pulled over with marijuana and a gun in the car.

And even though Coney graduated before his senior season with a degree in philosophy and a minor in business economics while helping lead Notre Dame to the College Football Playoff with a team-high 123 tackles, distancing himself from the kids at juvenile centers was never really the point. If anything, it made him want to connect with the next Te'von Coney more, whether he played football or not, whether he was a he or not.

"It's a crowd of kids that are young and confused and they need someone that understands them," Coney said. "That's important for them to know that the person they're listening to that they can relate to, that that person is only speaking from the heart."

It's an afternoon of promise but not promises for Coney, who can't make guarantees. He talks about cutting off friends back home that aren't on his same track, kids who didn't want to study didn't want to work out at 6 a.m. He doesn't present himself as a paragon of living right. He just talks about making enough good choices, intentionally letting them add up.

Coney hopes to start a foundation once his pro football career is off the ground, helping out kids in his adopted NFL city or back home in West Palm Beach or maybe both. Coney is a 21-year old with big dreams and the world in front of him, if he can go out and grab it. As much as Coney can pour his soul into the next generation of kids like him, kids who might have grade school coaches who laugh about their college football goals, he's got to earn the funding for all that.

And that's all a different kind of challenge, but a challenge just the same.

When Te'von Coney attended the NFL Combine but declined to do testing, he made a heavy bet on this week. And regardless of how his Pro Day played out, it made sense as Coney explained it. After the Cotton Bowl loss to Clemson, Coney had jumped into training for the Senior Bowl. And when that wrapped up, only then did Coney get down to the business of picking an agent and where to train.

There were hometown options, including former Notre Dame safety Abe Elam, who represents several South Florida prospects and is the father of four-star Florida signee Kaiir. Instead, Coney went with BEGREAT Sports, led by former Northwestern and NFL linebacker Barry Gardner. From there, the next step was getting connected with EXOS in Phoenix, training at the same facility as Jerry Tillery, Brian Burns, Devin Bush and a handful of other potential first-round picks.

Coney didn't arrive until a couple weeks after Tillery, later enough that he didn't feel he could fully train himself into Combine shape in six weeks. The decision to check the "choice" box to not work out was a rare one, especially for a player whose draft stock felt like it could range from early on the second day to dragging well into the third.

For the sake of comparison, Spotrac.com lists the monetary difference between the first pick in the third round and the first pick in the sixth round at nearly $1.5 million, with a drop in signing bonus accounting for nearly a million of it.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"Once I set my process up on how I wanted to do everything, my timeline was much different than a lot of other guys who were at the combine," Coney said. "My training said that I needed to train for eight weeks before I performed, and that was something that I needed to do to be at my best. I felt like I owed it to myself to be at my best."

To that end, the Coney who showed at Pro Day appeared to be in impeccable shape and moved well through position drills for a middle linebacker. But the testing portions that could be quantified didn't fit a linebacker who was the best defensive player on the field in the Citrus Bowl against LSU and who looked the part in the Cotton Bowl against Clemson.

Coney twice posted a 4.72 in the 40-yard dash, which would have rated 18th among the 24 linebackers who tested at the Combine. His 18 bench reps would have tied for 19th among 28 linebackers who tested. His 4.45 in the 20-yard shuttle would have tied for 16th among the 17 linebackers who worked out in Indianapolis.

"I can't control the outcome, but I had to just work my hardest at whatever it is," Coney said afterward. "You want to be able to show the scouts what you have. You never want to leave anything to chance. You only get one opportunity at this, so you want to put your best out there every time you step on the field."

After wrapping up NFL meetings this week, Coney plans to head home to Florida to keep training. A workout with the New Orleans Saints is scheduled for next month. Then it's a matter of waiting. There are draft party plans at home with family and friends, even though Coney keeps his circle small. He wants to buy his mother a new home and maybe a Range Rover.

"One of Te'von's strongest qualities is he is fiercely loyal," said defensive coordinator Clark Lea. "He had a deep appreciation of the people in his corner. And he's smart enough to understand that not everyone is on his path. That's a concept that's not familiar to many people." If Coney's testing numbers did not light Pro Day ablaze, there should still be enough film the past two seasons since he began working with Lea and strength coach Matt Balis. At the time, Coney was a sometimes starter, sometimes backup concerned with the distinction between the two. Lea was a first-year linebackers coach at Notre Dame trying to create that exact unease.

As Coney put distance between himself and that arrest the preceded the 2016 season, it took until the following summer before he and Lea began to connect beyond new coach and new player. The pair would text, Lea sometimes calling Coney on his way home from the office. On a surface level, Lea, a product of the prestigious Montgomery Bell Academy in Nashville and eventually Vanderbilt, would not appear to be a natural match with Coney. But those are the relationships Lea is employed to create.

"Te'von's a guy that needs to trust you, but that can't come in a cheap way," Lea said. "I probably have coached guys like him in the past and failed to understand what was needed to get over the hump."

When Coney returned that summer before his junior season, Lea sensed a player ready to throw himself toward the next step of his college career. By midseason, Coney was probably Notre Dame's best linebacker. By the end of it, he definitely was. His play helped make that sophomore arrest something close to a footnote, pushed down by not forgotten. Coney not only understands why, he appreciates it.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I tell many teams and people at home that I would have never wished for something like that to happen to me, but I'm glad it happened," Coney said. "It took for me to almost lose everything to know how it feels. If you don't understand how it feels to lose everything, you can almost take it for granted sometimes."

Maybe that's why Coney came across as genuine in not sweating his testing numbers Wednesday during a public job interview while dressed in compression shorts. He's cleared larger hurdles. And he's studied their architects. Because really, Coney is not just a story where the protagonist simply observed the events that happened to him. It's one where the main character studied the challenges in front of him, why they were put there in the first place and how to help somebody else elevate beyond them.

To understand Te'von Coney is to realize he understands himself in ways that don't get spelled out in postgame press conferences or three-minute media meetups after Pro Day. How he got there probably required some of those missteps along the way, even ones that could have wiped out everything on the way to this.

As a prospect, Coney's recruiting host was Greg Bryant, a former five-star running back who was shot and killed in West Palm Beach less than a year after left he Notre Dame with plans to finish his college career at UAB. The death rocked the remaining roster. When Lea put a No. 1 jersey on a tackling device during his first season, the linebackers asked to have it changed. That was Bryant's number.

"As a 17-year old kid, I knew I wanted to get outside of my comfort zone and he was the person that already did it," Coney said. "It's OK if you leave home. It's OK if you cut off friends that aren't good for you. He's seen the potential in me that I can be at this stage one day if I surrounded myself around the right people who truly care for me."

If Bryant's death was the harshest case study for Coney, it didn't mark the end of his education. Last fall, because he'd already fulfilled his graduation requirements, Coney had the option to take just one class. The lighter load let him train extra and recover more, watching bonus film and preparing like a professional football player in college. His weekends were tamped down, too, often spent at his apartment with his Yorkie named Lola.

Coney enrolled in Social Inequality In American Education, taught by sociology professor Amy Langenkamp. When the class discussion turned to the socio-economic ranges in secondary education, Coney volunteered about his own experiences before Notre Dame, foreign to much of the general student body. He studied the dynamics that put schools in poorer areas behind the curve in teacher quality, in part because of staffing turnovers and a parade of first-year educators finding their own ways.

"Often times those students don't want to talk about their schools because they recognize when those professors talk about good schools and bad schools, it's 'The bad schools were the ones that I went to,' " Langenkamp said. "He was always willing to share his experiences."

"There's a lot of things that influence how kids do in school that have nothing to do with their intelligence."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The class debated the merits of school choice, single-sex education and high-stakes testing. The course put Coney's own education experiences into a syllabus and helped inform what could come next when Coney has the resources to boost the kinds of kids he grew up with and the kinds of kids he spoke to at the Juvenile Justice Center.

"It helped me understand what needs to be addressed in those areas as far as improving that gap," Coney said. "It gave me a better perspective about how certain kids don't grow in the education world or how they don't have insight or that motivation to want to go to college."

"In high school I was passionate about helping younger kids, but maybe didn't know how to seek it, didn't know who to go to for it. I want to be the guy who's got open arms that if people needed me, I can be there to help."

The foundation Coney imagines will help keep kids involved in sports, provide equipment and offer educational outlets after school. Where that all goes and when it gets there, Coney is not certain. Whatever comes down the road will eventually come. All Coney can do is prepare himself for the future that he wants while guarding himself against alternatives.

These four years at Notre Dame have helped make Te'von Coney. So did everything that came before it. It's why the messenger and message were so on point at the Juvenile Justice Center this week and why Coney has the potential to take it all a step farther once making the NFL.

"Part of his evolution was identifying in the moment the narrative that he was gonna write from what was the lowest of low points for him to what became a really celebrated career," Lea said. "It wasn't perfect and just like with anyone's experience, we had ups and downs continually. But I think he became really aware of what he could accomplish."

"He came out of it with a great story to tell and a story that can be impactful."

Why the Raiders just had to pick 'Mad Maxx'

By Paul Gutierrez

May 14, 2019

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- To Oakland Raiders owner Mark Davis, there was something familiar about the way Maxx Crosby moved around the field, disrupting opposing offenses on game tape.

A long torso with long arms and long legs. A whirling dervish with a chip on the shoulder and a motor that never stopped.

Yes, Davis, who has been around the Raiders since his late father Al came aboard in 1963, saw a little Mad Stork in the Eastern Michigan Eagle.

That would be Ted Hendricks, a Hall of Famer and three-time Super Bowl champion with the Raiders, whose physical attributes are similar to Crosby's.

"Long, lanky, tall," Davis told ESPN.com. "I remember being very excited about seeing him on film and wondering about the competition [he faced]."

"But saying somebody is Ted Hendricks? That's tough. I've always said, if I had one guy to start a team, it would probably be Ted Hendricks. Remember, until we got Ted, we couldn't get over the hump in conference championship games. We got him in 1975 and then we broke through that wall. He's one of just [six] players to play on all three [Raiders] Super Bowl champs. Ted dominated one whole side of the field."

Davis took a breath, fast-forwarded from the late 1970s and early '80s to last month's NFL draft, in which the Raiders used their first of three fourth-round draft picks, No. 106 overall, on Crosby, and then exhaled.

"On tape, he does look good," Davis said. "I just wondered about the competition."

Crosby played defensive end in the the Mid-American Conference at Eastern Michigan and received only one scholarship offer out of high school. He has gone from Ypsilanti to being a third-day draft pick and comparisons to a Pro Football Hall of Famer. No pressure, kid. None at all.

"It's an honor," Crosby said at the start of the Raiders' rookie minicamp. "He's a legend. It's kind of crazy just seeing all the feedback. It's been mostly positive and fans here in Oakland are die-hards. It's an honor to be here, to play for such a legendary organization and I can't wait to go put it out on the field."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Even Hendricks reached out on Twitter to welcome Crosby to the Raiders.

Still, Hendricks was more of a hybrid outside linebacker/defensive end at 6-foot-7, 220 pounds, while the 6-foot-5, 255-pound Crosby is a pure defensive end.

Crosby racked up 18.5 sacks and eight forced fumbles during his final two college seasons and addresses a specific need for a Raiders team that had a league-low 13 sacks last season.

So long as he adds some bulk to his long frame.

"He plays every snap like his hair is on fire, that's No. 1," said general manager Mike Mayock, who first told of Davis comparing Crosby and Hendricks in a Sirius XM radio interview. "No. 2, he has length. No. 3, he ran in the 4.6's, low 4.6's -- so he has some twitch. He has length, he has twitch. He has a great motor. What he doesn't have yet is power. He doesn't have strength yet, and he needs to develop that."

Introducing, then, Raiders strength and conditioning assistant and world class power lifter Deuce Gruden. Yes, coach Jon Gruden's son.

"When I got on the phone with [Crosby], I told him that his future was going to be dependent on a Gruden, but not the one he thought," Mayock said. "It's going to be Deuce. I wanted him to get philosophically connected at the hip with Deuce because he has to get stronger. But I love his tape because he plays his ass off on every play."

Crosby needs more than fast hands.

"They just want me to get stronger," he said of the Raiders. "I don't think weight is the biggest issue. I'm around 255 right now. I just have to keep getting stronger and I have all summer to do that. I'm going to do everything I can to make that happen."

Crosby is one of three defensive ends the Raiders drafted, along with No. 4 overall pick Clelin Ferrell and seventh-rounder Quinton Bell, who made the unusual switch from wide receiver to edge rusher as a college senior.

He is also one of six defensive players in the Raiders' nine-player draft class.

Yeah, there was a need. More than few holes for Oakland to fill.

"He's 'Mad Maxx,'" Jon Gruden said with a snarl. "He comes off the ball repeatedly with great effort. I like that relentless style he plays with. He's gotten bigger and stronger every year that he's played and some of his second effort production is what stands out the most, but he really tested well at the combine."

"He's got real big upside and I think he's got a real big role model to learn from in our first-round pick [Ferrell]."

Crosby and Ferrell hit it off at the combine and reunited in Oakland.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I've played in a 4-2-5 and [the Raiders] run a 4-3, so it's kind of similar, but new techniques and all that, it's going to take a little bit of time to just get adjusted and get the movements down," Crosby said.

"It's still football at the end of the day and we're playing defensive end. We're supposed to get sacks. That's why they pay us, so I just have to get after the quarterback, and the same with everybody else on the D-line."

Now that sounds like something Hendricks might say, and Davis would approve of going forward.

How 'Mad Maxx' Crosby went from one college offer to Raiders wild card

By Matt Schneidman

May 7, 2019

The first time Maxx Crosby met with his coaches at Eastern Michigan, he stunned them.

Not with his quick twitch off the line. Not with his knack for leaving quarterbacks on the ground. Not with a ferocity that earned him the nickname "Mad Maxx."

Chris Creighton was stunned because it was June, and just five months prior the EMU head coach had watched Crosby play high school basketball weighing around 250 pounds. Now Crosby sat in front of Creighton on Eastern Michigan's campus, 40 pounds lighter, forced to explain himself.

"We were definitely concerned," Creighton said. "It was way past just shedding weight. It was like, 'What have you been doing?' ... He was just rail thin."

Crosby had felt hampered by "baby fat" left over from a growth spurt the year prior. He wanted to lose it, then replace it with muscle in college, but he went overboard trying to slim down.

"I kind of got carried away a little bit," Crosby told the Bay Area News Group. "I got a little too thin, just from running and doing all that stuff."

Creighton planned to redshirt Crosby even before he lost all that weight, but the freshman still required a physical transformation if he ever wanted to make a name for himself as a 6-foot-5 pass rusher filled with potential.

Thus began Crosby's evolution, one that's taken him from a 210-pounder who only Eastern Michigan offered out of a high school football hotbed to the wild card of this Raiders draft class. He's an intriguing 255-pound edge rusher taken in the fourth round who Jon Gruden will count on to help transform the NFL's worst pass rush, just like he transformed his own body to get to this point.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's 'Mad Maxx'," Gruden said with a smirk. "He comes off the ball repeatedly with great effort. I like that relentless style he plays with. He's gotten bigger and stronger every year that he's played and some of his second effort production is what stands out the most, but he really tested well at the combine. He's got real big upside."

Crosby stands at the podium at Raiders headquarters on Day 1 of his new job, smile across his face and black flat-brimmed hat turned backward on his head. He's asked about meeting Deuce Gruden, Jon's son and Raiders strength assistant who will help Crosby add even more muscle. He's asked about the pressure of helping lift an anemic pass rush from the depths of the NFL. He's asked about Raiders owner Mark Davis telling general manager Mike Mayock that he sees legendary Raiders linebacker Ted Hendricks in Crosby.

So how, especially coming from Colleyville Heritage High School in the highly recruited Dallas Fort-Worth area, did a player now basking in the NFL limelight and drawing Ted Hendricks comparisons receive just one college offer?

Maybe it's because at a lanky 6-foot-5, Crosby played out of position at linebacker until switching to defensive end for his senior season. There he showcased his craftiness in shedding blocks, his speed in disrupting backfields and that lankiness in wrapping up quarterbacks, but those highlights came too late for other schools to offer. Eastern Michigan remained his only option, and as a freshman redshirt he won Scout Team Player of the Year. That's "a pretty big deal," Creighton said. EMU coaches started to realize how lucky they were having no competition for Crosby's college choice. Now if only he could add that weight again.

He tallied only 1.5 sacks and 5.5 tackles for loss his first year playing in 2016, then skyrocketed to 11 sacks and 16.5 tackles for loss in 2017 en route to earning team MVP and First-Team All-Mid-American Conference honors. Ben Needham took over as Eastern Michigan's defensive line coach before the 2018 season, and upon first watching Crosby's film he saw a player he thought could make the NFL.

When he learned Crosby's only offer came from EMU, Needham was stunned, just like his colleagues when the pass rusher now blossoming into an NFL hopeful around 240 pounds first arrived on campus.

"Especially coming out of Texas," Needham said. "Sometimes you hear those stories about Iowa, always has a guy who played six-man football and nobody came to his school and so that was his only offer. That you can kind of understand. This guy's from the DFW area and that's about the most recruited place in the world."

Hoping to expand his arsenal before his redshirt junior season, Crosby consulted defensive line specialist Brandon Jordan, who's based in the Dallas area. While training with Jordan, Crosby worked with NFL veteran Damon Harrison, now a Detroit Lions defensive tackle and one of the best run-stoppers in the league. Jordan saw in Crosby an effective pass rusher, but a run defender needing improvement.

Harrison's early reaction to Crosby? "Man, he's gonna be special."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Rounding out his repertoire with Jordan and Harrison led to a productive 2018 season in which Crosby improved defending the run, his sack numbers dipping slightly with opponents more aware of his pass-rushing prowess but his tackles for loss still rising.

To motivate his defensive line, Needham awarded points for plays that didn't necessarily appear in the box score, like finishing a play unblocked or executing a tackle with proper form. Sometimes blowing up a play earned a point, too. As Crosby put it, "just the baddest dude on the field" got rewarded.

Each week the player with the most points received a figurine of Ebros the Assassin, a grim reaper wielding a scythe in one hand and flashing a middle finger on the other.

"He won it certainly more than anybody else in our room," Needham said of Crosby, who registered 19 tackles for loss, 7.5 sacks, four forced fumbles and an interception returned for a touchdown in 2018.

Crosby earned First-Team All-MAC honors again. He wanted to probe his NFL prospects, and scouts advised he return to school since he wasn't projected to be a first- or second-round pick and he was still too light. Crosby listened to their advice, but entered the draft anyway.

He added 15 pounds to reach 255, then among edge rushers at the combine finished 10th with a 4.66-second 40 time, second in the three-cone drill at 6.89 seconds, second in the 20-yard shuttle at 4.13 seconds and tied for sixth in the vertical jump at 36 inches.

Though Crosby still weighed less than the Raiders preferred, how he used that physique impressed them enough. They used their first of three fourth-round picks on him at No. 106 overall. Their first four selections came from Clemson, Alabama, Mississippi State and Clemson again. Then...Eastern Michigan.

"He'll make his body do what they want and need for him to do," Creighton said. "I'm not concerned about that at all."

Now at the beginning of his professional career, Crosby faces similar demands from his superiors as he did starting his college career.

"He has length, he has twitch, he has a great motor. What he doesn't have yet is power," Mayock said. "He doesn't have strength yet, and he needs to develop that. When I got on the phone with him, I told him that his future was going to be dependent on a Gruden, but not the one he thought. It's going to be Deuce. I wanted him to get philosophically connected at the hip with Deuce because he has to get stronger. But I love his tape because he plays his ass off on every play."

All Crosby has to do aside from pack on muscle is help improve the league's worst pass rush, one that tallied only 13 sacks last year, fewest in a single season since the 2008 Chiefs finished with 10. Those who've worked closest with him, however, think he can do it.

"His motor, the way he moves, his get-off, his speed and the way he listens and picks up everything, he has the total package with him," Jordan said. "... He's a dominant pass rusher. I can see him going there on third down and dominating on third down."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Crosby may not start, as that responsibility is likely to be shouldered by second-year defensive end Arden Key and 2019 first-rounder Clelin Ferrell. The lights will shine brightest on those two first, then maybe next on veteran defensive end Benson Mayowa, who signed with the Raiders as a free agent after tallying four sacks with the Cardinals in 2018.

Crosby is no stranger to waiting his turn, though, as he did waiting to be recruited, then waiting to play in college, then waiting to hear his name called on Day 3 of the draft. But when Crosby does get on the field, whenever and however that chance comes, the Raiders hope he's a player 31 teams wish they hadn't passed on.

Military upbringing taught Raiders' draft pick Clelin Ferrell about leadership, sacrifice and teamwork

By Vic Tafur

May 27, 2019

Clelin Ferrell didn't know about his dad's visit until after his father had passed away. Clelin was a freshman at Benedictine College Preparatory, a private military academy in Richmond, Va., when his dad died after a bout with lung cancer. And shortly after that is when he heard about his dad's talk with Benedictine football coach Greg Lilly.

It was about pushing his son to stay on the right path.

Ferrell, now the top 2019 draft pick of the Raiders, is being looked to by coach Jon Gruden and general manager Mike Mayock to not only make plays at defensive end but also to quickly develop into a leader. It was something he demonstrated in helping win two national championships at Clemson, and something he became at Benedictine.

"Military school definitely shaped who I am as a person," Ferrell said in a telephone interview on Thursday. "I always had a love and respect for the military because of my mom and dad's service, but our house wasn't that strict like everyone thinks. It was a laid-back home, just like other kids', and that's why I was surprised when my mom started talking about military school."

Ferrell's mother, Faye, served 22 years in the U.S. Army. She was a staff sergeant who served in Operation Desert Storm. It was in the Army where she met Cleavester Ferrell, who would serve 24 years in the Army, including two tours of duty in the Vietnam War. Clelin was the youngest of nine kids, and two of his brothers and an aunt also served in the military. It's where he saw himself going one day, until he became one of the top football players in the country, at a military school that he didn't want to attend.

"Nobody wants to go to military school," Ferrell said. "No young teenager wants to go to a school where it's all boys, and you're in there every day from sun up to sun down, with the dress code and all these rules, and you're taking military history and theology classes. But it definitely taught me discipline and integrity and got me in touch with my spirituality. It also taught me how to be a good teammate. You always hear that you will die in battle without good teamwork. Military school made me a better person, which in turn made me a better football player."

Ferrell had always thought he would go to the public high school in Richmond with his friends, but his mom had other ideas. Well, not ideas — that implies it was open for debate.

"I thought she was joking at first," Clelin said. "Then it became clear that I could cry and whine all I wanted to, but I was going to Benedictine."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"We just felt that he needed some structure," Faye told the Post and Courier in Charleston years ago. "My husband and I both coming from the military, we figured that he would get that. But, trust and believe me, he was resistant of it."

Faye stopped doing interviews years ago and declined this one, but it is clear that she thought her youngest son was a little rebellious.

"I thought I was cool," Ferrell said. "Cool doesn't last too long at military school."

After his son tried a couple challenges to the school's dress code, Cleavester went in to see Lilly, who is still coaching at the school and is now also the admissions director. Cleavester was very sick and two of his other sons took him in to see Lilly.

"He told me he wasn't going to be around much longer," Lilly said in a telephone interview. "He told me the kind of man he saw his son becoming, and he asked me to push him and to make sure he worked hard."

Cleavester never told Clelin about the talk.

"I didn't know about it," Clelin said. "I didn't know that it happened until my coach told me about it after my dad passed. My dad told him to look out for me, to watch out for me and made sure I stayed on the right path, to give me that father figure if I needed one. And he was. My coach was always in my corner and helped me develop into a man."

When they went fishing together, Cleavester would also tell his son to be an inspiration to other people. And in that meeting with Lilly, he enlisted some help.

Cleavester passed away in March 2012 and the entire junior varsity football team attended the funeral.

Clelin was touched by the gesture, and it drove home the idea of a football team as a family. That's something that Ferrell took with him to Clemson — especially after he tore his ACL his senior year in high school after he had verbally committed to the Tigers and they didn't back out of his scholarship offer.

Clemson defensive line coach Todd Bates didn't join the program until 2017. He remembers a sophomore knocking on his door.

"Clelin walked in and told me whatever I needed, I should let him know," Bates said in a telephone interview. "If there was a player that I needed him to get on, to let him know. I knew right away that he was a gifted player, a very hard worker and someone that put the team and the pursuit of winning above everything else. The other players and coaches really loved him and we were all thrilled that he went fourth in the draft. I think the Oakland Raiders fans are really in for a treat. They are going to love him, for the player and person that he is."

Mayock told Ferrell when he was drafted that he was going to be a key to turning the team around, both on the field and off, as far as his leadership presence in the locker room and his worth ethic "changing the culture" on the Raiders.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Ferrell has been working out with his new Raiders teammates for a few weeks now and Thursday, he tweeted out: "Man, I love this team!!!"

I asked him what sparked the tweet.

"I can just feel it, that we're really starting to have a good core here," Ferrell said. "I know the other rookies, and I have met the veterans now. I just feel like we have the right guys, we just have to put everything together. We have to really put in the work to get out of it what we want. It starts with having the right mindset and attitude and setting goals for ourselves ...

"I like this group. I feel like we have really good guys in this locker room. I don't know what it was like before I got here, but it's been all good since I got here. I am just a rookie and I am trying to soak it all in."

And just like in military school, Ferrell wants to be pushed. By Raiders coaches and his veteran teammates.

"For me, coming from a military family, my mom always told me, 'Clelin, you've got to understand,'" Ferrell said last month, the day after he was drafted by the Raiders. "That drill sergeant who was training her for war, he was hard on her all the time but she knew that that drill sergeant loved her because he didn't want her to go out there and die on that battlefield. It's all about good relationships and just letting the people around you know that any type of leadership role as far as holding them accountable, it comes from a good place. You want for them what you want for yourself. That's the biggest thing. I'm all about us, I care about the people that I work with."

And he obviously cares about people, especially the people in his family, who have served this country. Ferrell said he will pay his respects on Memorial Day, but that he pays his respects every day.

In March, Ferrell was at an autograph signing at Haywood Mall in Greenville, S.C., when he spotted a man sitting on the floor with a camouflage backpack with a U.S. Army logo. He went over and sat next to him, and after a long talk, handed the man a purple Clemson jersey, the one the team has worn in the past on Military Appreciation Day.

Another fan that was there took a picture of the encounter and the image went viral on social media.

"I saw the picture and to be honest with you, I didn't feel like it was that special of a moment," Ferrell said. "I was just talking to somebody and giving them something they deserved. ... He had come up earlier and I saw his Army hat, and I thought about giving him the jersey then but forgot about it when I started signing for other people."

"And then I saw he was over there after I finished signing, and I went over to ask him a couple of questions. His father was in the military like mine. He had served in Afghanistan, like my brother did. I gave him the jersey, but I didn't feel like I was doing him a favor. I just felt like he was owed that. He was a big Clemson fan and he had sacrificed his life for our country."

"That jersey meant a lot to me and I hope it means a lot to him. Actually, from talking to him, I am pretty sure it does."

THE PLAYERS' TRIBUNE

People Say I Run Angry

By Josh Jacobs

April 25, 2019

I just kept running.

I didn't know what else to do. I was just walking up to the gas station with three of my friends when a car pulled up in front of us. One of the dudes inside said something. I didn't hear him. One of my friends said something back. I don't remember what. The car sped off. We kept on walking. Then we saw the same car loop back around.

The lights cut off first. That's when we started running.

Then came the gunshots.

We scattered. I was booking it down the sidewalk. Out of the four of us, the car chose to follow me. And the dudes inside just kept on shooting.

I broke off and jumped over a fence into somebody's backyard. I juked my way through a bunch of kids' toys and jumped another fence. I was trying to calculate how far I was from home when I realized ... I couldn't go home. These dudes were following me. And I didn't want to lead them to my house.

So I just kept running.

I ran for about 10 blocks. One gear. Nonstop. A hundred miles an hour. Faster than I've ever run in my life. Just crashing through backyards and changing directions until I couldn't hear any gunshots or car engines.

When I finally stopped, I had no idea where I was. I just remember it felt like all the air had been sucked out of my chest at once. Like I had been punched in the gut.

That was the first time I got shot at. I was in middle school. About 13 years old, if I remember it right. And I'll be honest ... I was scared, man.

But being scared isn't even the worst part.

The worst is when you get used to it.

When you hear gunshots, and you don't even run. When you see people fighting in the street, and you don't even look twice. When the spotlight from a helicopter shines through your bedroom window, and you just pull the shades down.

Because it's just another day in the life.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I was so relieved when I got home. Not only because I got there safe, but because I had a home to go to at all.

I grew up in Tulsa, Oklahoma. When I was in the fourth grade, my parents split up, and I went to live with my pops. He had just moved out of his apartment. He'd had another one lined up, but it wasn't ready yet. It was supposed to only take a couple of weeks, so we stayed with some relatives for a bit. But the apartment took longer than expected. When we had no family left to stay with and nowhere else to go, we slept in my dad's Suburban.

I would shower in the locker rooms after football practice, then my pops would pick me up and drive around to look for a spot on the side of the road to park for the night. Somewhere out of the way. I would lie down in the back seat and he would be up front. I remember he had a gun, and whenever he laid his seat back at night, he would always keep it on his chest with his hand on it. Just in case.

If he ever slept, I didn't see it. Every time I woke up — whether it was morning or the middle of the night — he was awake. Watching out. Protecting me.

We slept in that Suburban every night for maybe two weeks until the apartment was finally ready. We moved in, and a couple of months later, my dad won custody of my three brothers and my sister, and they moved in with us, too.

Then, my dad lost his job.

We eventually got kicked out of the apartment. Pops couldn't pay, and the landlord had somebody else lined up who was willing to pay more anyway. So that was it for us. For the next two years or so, we basically lived out of our backpacks, hopping from motel to motel. Every now and then my dad would snag an apartment, but it wouldn't last too long. And before we knew it, it was back to the motel.

On good days, we'd find a spot that had a continental breakfast where we could sneak enough fruit and bagels to last us a whole day. On bad days, we would eat rice and beans or ramen noodles. I was the king of white rice and ramen noodles, man. A five-star microwave chef. My dad used to buy them in big quantities so he could feed all of us. I'd cook for everybody. Some nights, when the food supply was really thin, my dad wouldn't eat. I would try to give him some of my food, but he wouldn't let me.

I didn't really understand it all at the time — the way we were living, the sacrifices my dad was making ... none of it. I just never looked at our life as a struggle. To me, it was just life. It was all I knew.

But now, looking back on it all, I understand.

I understand how difficult it was for my dad. How frustrating it must have been. And he never took those frustrations out on us. Even on the worst nights, when we didn't have enough food to eat or any clean clothes to wear to school the next day, we would still laugh together. We didn't have game nights or movie nights. Pops used to have us sing. We'd write poetry. Freestyle rap while the others beatboxed. My older brothers would always draw. He wanted us to express ourselves. To engage with each other.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Even when our stomachs were empty, we would spend all night laughing together, as a family.

I remember one night, when money was at its tightest, my dad told me that if he went out on the street and sold drugs, we wouldn't have to worry about money, or food, or a place to live anymore. There was plenty of money out there to be had.

But he said he would never do it, for two reasons. One, it was too risky. If he got arrested or sent to jail, there would be nobody to take care of us kids, and he might lose us. And that was out of the question.

And two ... he said that the easy way out usually isn't the right way. He said it's hard work and perseverance that gets rewarded, not shortcuts.

That's what he had been doing. Working hard. Persevering. Trying to do the right things, knowing — no ... hoping — that everything would work out.

Then, the summer before I went into the eighth grade, pops landed a pretty steady job. We left the motels behind and moved into a house — the one in the rough part of town with the gunshots and the street fights and the helicopters. Food was still hard to come by. Money was still tight. Life was still a struggle.

But we finally had a place to call home.

Football wasn't an escape. I didn't play to take out my frustrations, or to cope, or to keep off the streets.

I played because I loved it.

By my junior year in high school, I knew I had potential. I thought I could be pretty good. By my senior year, I knew I could be special.

My stats were so ridiculous that when my coach sent them in to the local newspaper each week, they wouldn't even print them. They didn't believe them. They thought my coach was padding my stats to make me look good. I sat back and watched as other kids with less impressive stats got their names in the paper and won all kinds of weekly awards.

I was getting nothing.

So my coach called up one of the reporters from the newspaper and told him to come down to McLain High School and watch me play in person. To come see for himself.

This was about halfway through my senior year. I was averaging around 300 rushing yards per game, but I still had no scholarship offers. I had zero stars on the recruiting websites.

I didn't just want to show that reporter what he had been missing. I wanted to show everybody.

I scored the first touchdown of the game on a 65-yard run. By the end of the night, I had run for 455 yards and six touchdowns. And I did it all on just 22 carries.

It was the best game of my high school career.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

My pops always preached that if you do the right things, everything else will work out. Control what you can control, and everything else will fall into place, he'd say.

So it was crazy to me that even after that huge game, it was still crickets on the recruiting front. By the end of the season, I had better stats than some of the dudes in my area getting scholarship offers. And we had basically played against the same competition.

Just doing the right things obviously wasn't working. I needed to do more.

But I didn't know what else to do. I couldn't afford football camps. My high school didn't have a history of big-time recruits, so college coaches rarely came to visit. We just weren't on their routes. And they don't usually go out of their way to see just one guy.

Then my dad got a phone call from a random dude down in Texas. He said his name was G. Smith. He works with high school kids to help them get recruited. He had stumbled upon my highlight tape while he was checking out some other recruits, and he was so impressed that he tracked me down and reached out.

"This is one of the best highlight tapes I've ever seen," he told my dad. "It's like 12 minutes of straight touchdowns ... how does he not have any offers?"

Coach Smith said he was going to help me get noticed. He told me to start a Twitter account and post my highlights. He would take it from there. And I don't know what he did ... but like a day or two after I started posting my highlights, my phone started ringing off the hook.

Wyoming, Missouri, New Mexico State, Purdue, Oklahoma ... so many schools.

Some of those phone calls turned into scholarship offers.

That's when I could finally breathe a sigh of relief. I had more than just some interest. I had actual offers. So no matter what, I was going to school somewhere — something not a lot of kids from my neighborhood get to do.

Wyoming was the first school to really show genuine interest in me. The first school to offer me. They were on me way before anybody else. Two weeks before signing day, it was basically a lock. I was going to Wyoming. Then Alabama showed up.

Ask anyone I grew up with ... Alabama was my favorite team. I had wanted to play there since middle school. So when they came into the fold, it was a wrap.

Everybody knows Alabama for being a football factory. For putting dudes in the NFL left and right. But I didn't look at it that way. I saw it as an opportunity to play against the most elite competition in college football, and to get a quality education at the same time. Where I'm from, kids don't get either of those opportunities. So that was all I was focused on. Getting to the NFL was the absolute furthest thing from my mind.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I honestly don't think I even considered the NFL as a possibility until the SEC championship game last year against Georgia.

I had been sick the whole week. Flu-like symptoms. That weak kind of sick where your back aches and you don't want to eat or stand up or even move.

I was at the tail end of it by the time the game came around, but I had missed a lot of practice time that week. I still couldn't eat. I was dehydrated. I was in rough shape. The trainers tried to hold me out.

But I told them I was playing.

I got one IV before the game, two more during and one after. Every time I came to the sideline, it felt like I was dying of thirst and I had no wind. So they had the IVs and an oxygen mask right there waiting for me.

I only got eight carries in the game. But I ran for 83 yards and two touchdowns.

Enough to win MVP.

That was my Jordan Flu Game, man. I came out of that one knowing that if I could be in that kind of condition and not just fight through it, but still ball out ... on that big of a stage, against a great defense like Georgia's ... then I have what it takes to play at the next level.

And if the Georgia game got me thinking about the NFL for the first time, the Oklahoma game basically punched my ticket. It felt like every time I touched the ball in that game, something special happened.

My favorite play — I think everybody's favorite play — was when I ran over the safety on my way to the end zone.

The thing I loved most about that play is what happened after. Because the next few guys who tried to tackle me ... they were easy targets, man. They were so worried about getting bulldozed that they were lunging at me. So I could lower the shoulder like I was gonna try and run them over, then hit them with a juke, and they'd go flying.

I love setting dudes up like that. It's a chess game for me. I want to keep the defense guessing. Keep them off balance.

And I think that Oklahoma game is proof that I'm versatile enough to do that.

People say I run angry.

I don't know. I guess I do. But I honestly don't think it's about how I run. It's about why I do it, and who I do it for.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I run for my pops, the man who sacrificed so much and worked so hard to provide for me and educate me. I run for my three-year-old son, Braxton, so he can have a father he's proud of, like I'm proud of mine. I run for my sister and my three brothers. I run for my teammates and my coaches. I run for everybody who has ever supported me, anyone who's ever doubted me, and for anyone out there living on white rice and ramen noodles. I run for anyone who's in a tough situation and feels like it's never going to end — that there's no light at the end of the tunnel.

I run to show them that there is.

Then, when I'm totally spent — when I'm on my last leg and I have absolutely nothing left to give ... I dig even deeper.

And I run for me.

Because I love it.

Because it's what I do.

That's the kind of player you're going to get if you draft me. Someone who loves the game of football. A hard worker who's totally dedicated to the team, and to winning. You'll get a fresh, healthy back, because I split carries at Alabama. They didn't use me up. So I'm a low-mileage guy who's ready to run up the odometer and shoulder the load.

But most of all, you'll get a player who is very appreciative.

I'm never going to forget the nights spent in the back of that Suburban. I'll never forget the motels. The gunshots. The helicopters. I know what it's like to be scared. To be hungry. To have nothing in my future but uncertainty.

So I'm never going to take the privilege of playing in the NFL for granted. I'm going to come in and sacrifice whatever is necessary to succeed. I'm gonna hustle. I'm gonna put the work in and do the right things, like my pops always said.

Everything else will fall into place.

Josh Jacobs' story: From the 'concrete rose' of North Tulsa to a Raiders' first-round selection

By Vic Tafur

May 14, 2019

The first time Josh Jacobs and his father said it to each other was when Josh was in the fourth grade and they were sleeping at night in their car.

They would say it often as Jacobs blazed a trail from the darkness in Tulsa to the NFL Draft two weeks ago. That Thursday night, when the Alabama running back got word that the Raiders were about to draft him in the first round, he looked to his dad and said it again.

This time he said it to make sure his dad wasn't going to cry.

"You good?" Josh said.

"I'm good," Marty Jacobs said. "You good?"

"I'm good," Josh said back.

The two men embraced and Jacobs took the stage in Nashville to begin the next chapter of what will surely be a movie at some point. After Jacobs shook commissioner Roger Goodell's hand, put on his Raiders hat and walked off, he showed Hall of Famer Deion Sanders the lining of his suit jacket.

It looked like a map at first, but it was a rendition of a road in Tulsa with a red flower coming out of it.

"It was very important for me," Jacobs said when I asked him about the jacket later that night. "It's a concrete rose. It has North Tulsa where I'm from and it was very important for me to pay homage to where I'm from, because with me ... it's like I have the city on my back. I give everybody back home faith and hope.

"I mean, I'm the first one to do it out of the school that I come from. I'm the first one to even go to college out of the school that I come from for sports, so it's just huge."

Jacobs is also the first one to do it after living as a kid night-to-night in his dad's maroon Chevy Suburban and later in motels.

"Where this kid has come from, there is something inside of him ... that I didn't go through as a young man," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said.

The Raiders drafted Jacobs 24th overall because he was the best running back in the draft and Gruden has long said he wanted a three-down back. On Monday, Jacobs and the other Raiders rookies were allowed to workout on the field with the veterans for the first time. He showed the cutting ability, fast-developing speed, power and soft hands that general manager Mike Mayock fell in love with at the College Football Playoff championship game in January.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But the 5-foot-10, 219-pound Jacobs offers a lot more than that. He is a special kid who turned to football as a youngster and gave everything he had to the game. And the game gave back.

"Football is kind of like my peace," Jacobs said the day after the draft. "It's like the one place I feel like I can do no wrong. Growing up and going through everything that I've been through — being homeless, living in hotels and stuff — football was always an outlet.

"That's what kind of drives me and that's where I found the love of the game and that's why I play with so much emotion."

Jacobs started playing youth football around the same time his father and mother separated in 2006. Marty fought for custody of the five kids, and rather than wait for a decision, Josh went with his dad. Josh didn't get along with his mother. (Marty would ultimately win custody of all five kids.)

Shortly after he joined his father, an apartment that Marty had lined up fell through. Money was very tight. So the two drove around every night for two weeks, looking for a safe-enough spot to park and get some sleep. Josh, at least, would sleep in the back seat. But he doesn't think his dad ever did close his eyes.

"I remember he had a gun, and whenever he laid his seat back at night, he would always keep it on his chest with his hand on it. Just in case," Jacobs wrote for The Players' Tribune last month. "If he ever slept, I didn't see it. Every time I woke up — whether it was morning or the middle of the night — he was awake. Watching out. Protecting me."

Josh said he always felt safe. His dad had him write poetry to combat the down time, and he said he didn't realize what he didn't have until he got to middle school and heard about how good the other kids had it.

His dad later lost his job and Jacobs and his four siblings lived from motel room to motel room until Marty found another one. Josh was the cook of the household.

"I was the king of white rice and ramen noodles, man," Jacobs wrote for The Players' Tribune. "A five-star microwave chef. My dad used to buy them in big quantities so he could feed all of us. I'd cook for everybody."

Marty would often skip meals because there wasn't enough, as he looked for more work and the family's next residence.

"I didn't really understand it all at the time," Josh Jacobs wrote. "The way we were living, the sacrifices my dad was making ... none of it. I just never looked at our life as a struggle. To me, it was just life. It was all I knew."

And he knew how to run by and through tackles on the football field. Jacobs grew, and ran faster and harder, just like his favorite player, Adrian Peterson. His senior year at McClain High, Jacobs lined up as the team's Wildcat quarterback and ran for 2,704 yards and 31 touchdowns, averaging 15 yards a carry.

Still, somehow, he wasn't on the map for recruiters. Jacobs had never been to any of the summer camps, and, like he said, his high school had no football history.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"The local newspapers thought I was making his stats up," retired McClain coach Jarvis Payne said in a telephone interview. "They were unbelievable."

Only Wyoming and New Mexico State offered scholarships. TCU wanted him as a cornerback and an assistant coach even told Jacobs that there were 1,000 other running backs like him.

That was when a recruiting coordinator and coach in Texas happened to see some highlights of Jacobs. Gerald Smith tracked down a number for Marty Jacobs and told him that his son needed a Twitter account to post his highlights on.

So Jacobs, with Payne's help, created an account. And Smith made sure other recruiters knew.

Two days later — yes, two — the offers started pouring in.

"The phone was ringing off the hook," Jacobs said.

Missouri, Purdue, Oklahoma. Soon, Alabama took notice.

"And once Alabama wants you, that's it," Jacobs said.

Jacobs went on to become part of a three-headed running attack at Alabama with Damien Harris and Antioch High alum Najee Harris.

(In an amazing footnote, Jacobs has never met Gerald Smith, though his dad did once.)

Jacobs helped the Crimson Tide win a national title in 2017 and he averaged 5.9 yards a carry his three seasons there. He also caught 30 passes last season. The Raiders told him they planned to draft him back in February.

"I never dreamed we would be in the position we're in now," Marty Jacobs told ESPN Radio two weeks ago. "Actually, when he was born I did have dreams about him playing in a big stadium, but I never really thought that meant anything. I just wanted him to be better than me ... I didn't know how we were going to do it, but I knew the kids were going to be safe with me. I had to protect their destinies. ..."

"We went through a lot. Josh was always strong and always positive."

Marty Jacobs declined an interview request last week and is working on a deal to sell the story rights. As for Josh, he and his 3-year-old son, Braxton, are preparing for their own adventure.

Jacobs even has his first commercial deal. After years of sleeping in the car and on hotel floors — he even slept on the floor his first year at Alabama because he was used to it — Jacobs is now a spokesman for Sleep Number beds.

"There is nothing like a good night's sleep in a comfortable bed," Jacobs said.

When his head hits the pillow every night, it all comes back to him. All the hard work and sacrifices. By him and his dad. Jacobs is still processing that he is a running back in the NFL.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"It's a lot of emotions," Jacobs said a day after the draft. "It's like everything hitting you at once. It's everything you've worked for, everything you've prayed for, everything for you've sweated for, cried for, everything. It's just finally coming to reality.

"The crazy thing about it is, you're happy in the moment, but then the next thing you think about is it's the beginning of everything ... so it's a lot of emotions."

Before Jacobs came out for the Raiders' rookie camp on May 3, his dad gave him a call to check on him and see if he was nervous.

"You good?"

"I'm good."

'I've got to prove it every day': Raiders LB Brandon Marshall on motivation, mental hurdles and mentorship

By Lindsay Jones

Aug. 2, 2019

NAPA, Calif. — Brandon Marshall walked off the practice field after a full-contact, run-heavy, two-and-a-half hour training camp practice and ... smiled?

Marshall, 29, who signed with Oakland in the spring after six years with the Broncos, isn't just surviving his first training camp with the Raiders, he's enjoying it, because for the first time in almost a year, he feels healthy when he's on the field. He injured his knee in the 2018 season opener and played through the pain for two months before finally sitting out four games in the second half of the season. His rehab started immediately after the season, through his first stint in free agency and throughout the spring in Oakland, where he was held out of offseason practices as his sore right knee continued to heal.

Now the Raiders are counting on Marshall to start at inside linebacker alongside another new addition, former Bengals standout Vontaze Burfict, and help bring some veteran leadership to a defense that finished last in points allowed last season.

In this next edition of our training camp Q&A series, Marshall discusses the lengthy rehab process he went through to get back to this point; his desire to earn a second contract from the Raiders in 2020, which would allow him to play in his hometown of Las Vegas; his new teammates, his offseason travels and the unique community work he does through his Williams-Marshall Cares Leadership Program.

What did it take to get you to this point, where you're pain free and feeling confident in your knee again?

A lot of rehab, a lot of seeing doctors, you know. I definitely tried a lot of shit.

Like what? Did you try anything new?

I got a Regenokine. It's something that Kobe (Bryant) did. I got that. That shit helped a lot. (*Editor's Note: Regenokine is an anti-inflammatory treatment. It is not approved by the FDA. In 2012, Grantland did a piece exploring why Kobe and other athletes were seeking this out and addressed some of the skepticism surrounding it.)

What does that process entail?

They just take your blood, they do something with it for like 24 hours and they inject it back in. I got like six. I've got more to get. But after No. 2, I was like, shit, this is crazy.

I imagine when you go back and watch your film from last season, that's not how you believe you can play, because of the knee. How motivated are you to prove to the Raiders, and really the rest of the league, what kind of player you can be when you're healthy?

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I want nothing more. I want nothing more. You know, I just, I want to be able to prove my worth, and I'm on a new team, so I can't expect them to say, "OK, this is B-Marsh. We know what he can do." Nah, I've got to prove it every day. And that's what I plan on doing. I got to get over these mental hurdles. So that's why today is big. [Thursday] is day five. I haven't missed a practice yet. I've been bad at my technique a little bit, because I was babying the knee and I was hesitant. So today I felt good. I was just pushing through. So I'm just going to keep going.

What's it like to play with Vontaze Burfict?

He's smart, man. He communicates well. He's funny, I like him. Great dude.

Is that different than what the outside perception might be of him?

Yeah. He is A1. He helps the whole defense. He's been in this defense his whole career. He's almost like a coach on the field. You can recognize that. People don't really understand, they don't really grasp the type of player he is mentally. People will say, 'Oh, he's dirty,' or this and that. Nah, Vontaze is great.

What do you like so far about this defense?

It's a lot of fast guys. Guys are hungry. A lot of attention to detail. Guys are — we want to win. We've got to change the culture around here and continue to build on things during practice.

You signed a one-year deal here. How much are you motivated to get re-signed so you can play in Las Vegas?

That's in my mind a lot. I'm fighting to get there. But I'm taking it one day at a time, because I don't want to think about it every day, because then I missed the point. I've got to work on something each day to get better, and that will ultimately get me there. So it's in the back of my mind, no doubt, but I've got to focus on the little things first.

Other than rehabbing, how did you spend your offseason? What did you do to get away from football?

I went to Africa this offseason — I went to Johannesburg, I went to Egypt. Then I also went to Barcelona. That was all the same trip. I was just traveling; I wanted to see the world a bit.

Why were those the places you wanted to see this offseason? What spot was your favorite?

I just want to see more of the world. Barcelona, I loved it. Johannesburg, to see the Mandela statue and everything. I love to travel. It's one of my favorite things to do. Egypt, the pyramids, I really enjoyed that. Seeing that, and the history, and kind of seeing how people live there, gave me perspective on a lot of things. There's not a lot of opportunity outdoors. It's dangerous. Driving from the airport, I saw a guy holding a machine gun on top of a tower. To get into these hotels, you've got to go through TSA, basically.

So seeing how people live there put things in perspective. I want to get experience and get cultured on what's going on around the world, what people go through. It puts perspective on how blessed I am to have the opportunities to do what I want to do. We were able to talk to the ex-president's son in South Africa, and he was telling us how in America, you can be who you want to be, be self-made. In South Africa, those opportunities aren't there, and that's unfortunate.

Back at home, I know you spent a lot of time with your camps and your mentorship program for teenagers in Las Vegas. How were you able to expand that program this year?

We had two kids finish the program last year, and we took them to Washington, D.C. This year, we got 11 to finish, and we all went to Atlanta, to visit CNN, the Martin Luther King Jr. Center. The kids went to a place where they were able to plant trees and work cleaning up; it was community service in addition to sight-seeing.

What do the kids have to do to finish the program?

They have to come to a certain amount of events. They can't get in trouble in school or get suspended. There are a lot of things they have to be involved in. Our last event was a career exposure day, a youth economic summit. We have way more than 11 kids come, but at the end of it, we had a ceremony and we passed out certificates to whoever completed the program. Not everyone got one. It might be sad, but we're trying to simulate life. Just because you show up to a couple of events doesn't mean you finish the program and get to go on the trip. It's sad, like, you showed up but you didn't get a certificate, but that's life. You've got to do the work.

The ones who finished and you took to Atlanta, what do you hope they got out of it?

We just want to give them more culture. We want them to understand how life works — you put in the work and you get rewarded. You finish something, you get rewarded. And then they get to see different things. You go to CNN, you see how different things work. With the Martin Luther King (Jr.) Center, there's a lot of history. It's a beautiful thing for them to go and see. I feel like I'm a different person because I left at 17. I went to Reno, and then Jacksonville, Denver, wherever. When I go back (to Las Vegas), I feel like I'm advanced because I got to experience that. I got culture and I saw different parts of the United States. Some of my counterparts that I went to high school with are kind of stagnant because they didn't get out in the world and experience different perspectives.

One of the things that I think is also unique about your youth programs is that you include sessions on healthy relationships in your football camps. When did you start doing that, and why is that something you wanted to add?

This year was my fourth camp. I put it in year two. My mother, she's a domestic violence survivor, she's big on that. I was like, OK cool, let's make it something we could teach our boys because a lot of people have football camps but not everybody is going to teach the kids how to have healthy relationships, ways to diffuse an argument or a hectic situation, how to communicate in a healthy way, what is trust about, and love. We want to teach that.

You're just one of a bunch of new faces around here. Any of your new teammates making a big impression so far?

Trent Brown. He's the best tackle in the league. He's the biggest, but he's the most athletic. Strong, great feet. Smart. Amazing. I'm telling you, Trent Brown is amazing. I got so much praise for him. He's the best, easily. I'm not even a pass rusher, but I just see him, going up against him in practice, and it's like, this guy has to be the best player in the league.

How do you make all these new pieces fit? There are a lot of new veterans, with big personalities. What is the key to making it work?

Everybody's got to have the same goals, the same mindset, you know? Our No. 1 goal is to win, and we're going to do what it takes. Nobody is going to put anything else first but the team, and that's what we're going to do. Not worried about the individual glories or shit like that. We just want to win.

Brandon Marshall: Putting in the work for his career and his cause

By Lindsay Jones

Aug. 2, 2019

Tucked away in an underused section of Abraham Lincoln High School in Denver is a charter middle school for underprivileged students, almost all of whom are minorities and eligible for subsidized lunches.

It's almost 1 p.m. on a Tuesday and Broncos veteran Brandon Marshall has just arrived at Compass Academy's second-floor wing as students flock to room 228 for their weekly Action Youth Class, an hour-long development and leadership program.

"Are you for real? We get to meet a Broncos player?!" a student belts out as her peers trickle into the room.

"Yeah, Brandon Marshall," another responds. "He's a linebacker."

Upon introduction, Marshall walks to the front of the room as nearly two dozen eyes fixate on him.

"My name is Brandon Marshall," he begins. "I'm from Las Vegas, Nevada. I grew up with a single parent. I worked hard and earned a scholarship to the University of Nevada and played football four years there. I got drafted by the Jacksonville Jaguars, didn't really work out, but I kept pushing and kept fighting and it's been really good for me. I can relate to a lot of you guys. I grew up in a home where my mom, she worked two jobs. We didn't have money like that. Domestic violence-filled home as well when my dad was present.

"So I can relate to a lot of you guys."

This is how Marshall spends many of his off days from football practice and meetings — at local schools or shelters or transition programs or rehabilitation centers, telling his story or listening to others tell theirs. The linebacker, in his seventh pro season, who was cut three times by the Jacksonville Jaguars before earning a starting role with the Denver Broncos, has had a winding journey through the NFL, receiving as much pushback as support as he has married his passions for community work and social justice with his love of football.

This year, as he has endured injuries and the arrival of younger talent at his position, Marshall has experienced the gamut of emotions, including frustration and nervousness about his uncertain future in Denver. But his long-held pledge to make a difference off the field hasn't waned and has included the launch of a new initiative, the financial backing of the Broncos and regular visits to those in need in Denver and Las Vegas.

Marshall was selected The Athletic Denver's 2018 Person of the Year for his commitment to change off the field, leadership on the field and his embodiment of an athlete who is simply more — more than an athlete, more than a performer on game days.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's got passion for the community and it's shown in his stance he's taken over the last three years. That takes courage," coach Vance Joseph said. "That takes courage, especially when you're at work doing those things. I'm very proud of him. He's stood by his commitments, and that's a man."

Marshall could feel his heart beating out of his chest as he scanned the crowd at Broncos Stadium and found his mother in the stands. He had thought about this moment for a while — if he should go through with it, what it would feel like and even how he would feel if he didn't do it.

He noticed his coach behind him and he looked back at his mother, who had begun to sing the national anthem along with near 76,000 in attendance that evening. Slowly, Marshall fell to one knee and folded his arms across his left thigh as the cameras zeroed in.

It was the evening of Sept. 8, 2016, a Thursday night season opener that featured the Carolina Panthers and Denver Broncos in a Super Bowl 50 rematch. All eyes were on Marshall, and there was no escaping the persistent questioning thereafter. For seven games that season, following the lead of his University of Nevada teammate, Colin Kaepernick, Marshall protested social injustice and police brutality across the United States.

"I came back to my phone to at least 300 text messages," he said. "A lot of notifications on Twitter. A lot of hate. A lot of hate, man. A lot of love, but a lot of hate. I didn't let that hate stop me from doing what I believe in."

"I think it's important that whenever we take action on something or believe in something, like if you want to protest something — I think it's important to make the necessary steps to back up your words. You say something, you have to put the action behind it. That's just what we should do as people. I said something, I said what I believe in, I said I wanted certain changes, so I decided, 'Let me live in that.'"

Marshall immediately lost two endorsement deals. He saw a video of a man who pulled up to the Broncos' training facility and set ablaze an orange T-shirt bearing Marshall's name. He was threatened and criticized on social media, and he even received a handwritten letter that read: "Your time is coming, watch out N—. ... We are channeling a devastating hard hit for you. Something to make you an invalid in a wheelchair."

Days after giving team security the letter, Marshall met with the Denver police chief to discuss his concerns, and he later engaged in the department's simulator used to train officers in shoot and don't-shoot situations, and he also completed a ride-along with officers.

"We had a great dialogue," Marshall said of former police chief Robert White. "I gave him my side, which is the side of the civilian. ... But he wanted me to see his point of view as well, what it's like to be a cop and how dangerous it is, so I took him up on it."

Midway through the 2016 season, shortly after the Denver Police Department announced changes to its use-of-force policy, Marshall stood for the anthem, announcing he was encouraged by the changes but realized the work wasn't done.

He wasn't done.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

In the two-plus years since his initial protest, Marshall has spread himself thin. His attendance challenge for fourth-grade students in Denver boosted numbers at Swansea Elementary for the first time in years. After a subsequent challenge last year, he returned to the school in January armed with pizzas as a reward.

In 2016, to pair action with his protests, Marshall donated more than $15,000 ($300 per tackle he made that season) to local organizations addressing social issues. Over the years, he has served meals at Denver Rescue Mission, prepared Thanksgiving dinner for hundreds at the Salvation Army, visited patients at Children's Hospital Colorado and adopted families over the holidays to shower them with gifts.

Marshall also turned his annual football camp in Las Vegas — a USA Football FUNdamentals clinic — into a developmental workshop for boys, incorporating classroom sessions about healthy relationships and communication. The leftover pizzas from the camps were distributed to the homeless.

"I started doing community service in high school," Marshall said. "I was a part of this organization that kind of taught us how to be men and we did community service. We had fun, too, but I started doing it then and I think as I got older, I just enjoyed it. I loved it. Obviously, I'm helping other people, but it makes me feel good as well."

Last year, Marshall and six other NFL players formed the nonprofit Through Our Eyes to document their travels and incorporate charity work at each stop. On their first trip, to South Africa, they stopped by an orphanage in Cape Town. On their second trip, to Montego Bay, Jamaica, in March, they teamed up with Granville Project, a nonprofit to support underprivileged students at Granville All-Ages School. The players held a fitness day with the students, guiding them through football drills and activities that promote teamwork. They also visited an orphanage and donated suitcases of clothes.

At the heart of Marshall's off-field work is his foundation, the Williams-Marshall Cares Leadership Program that introduces high school students in Nevada to local professionals and influencers. Each month Marshall and his team meet with the group of boys, requiring them to maintain a certain GPA and stay up on required reading.

In May, Marshall rewarded those who met the requirements with a trip to Washington, D.C., where they toured the Capitol, visited the National Museum of African American History and Culture and spent time at a transitional center for homeless youth.

"It was kind of eye-opening because a lot of these kids were (young teens) and they lived there. They work and they go to school and they don't have anybody," Marshall said. "The center is all they have really as a place to stay. I got to let them pick my brain and they pick each other's brains, and the kids at the center, they talk to me about things and I talk to them about what they want to be."

The program has already welcomed its second class, a group of 16 boys from Las Vegas. And the plan is to expand the program for girls in Denver.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

As part of his foundation, Marshall launched The FEEL (Feed & Educate to Empower Leaders) Movement to further help those in Las Vegas and Denver. For every $250 raised through the Shop Now To Fund e-commerce platform, a FEEL Box that includes a month's worth of nonperishable food, hygienic products and a tablet loaded with digital books and programs, is provided to a family.

Marshall and the Broncos committed $50,000 to the cause, with the funds spread to three different organizations that fit the pillars of the movement: Denver Rescue Mission (feed), Action Youth (empowerment) and Adolescents Know Your Rights (leadership). Each organization was hand-picked by Marshall.

"Just hearing Brandon talk about his food box idea reminded me of a little girl we worked with — she was a middle school student and one of our mentors would connect with her every day, every week — she told us she was surviving off ramen noodles and it broke our heart," said Jerry Torrez, the president and CEO of Action Youth. "The mom would come to us for money, and so on and so forth, and we would try to provide hygienic products and food boxes the best way we can, but that was outside the scope of our actual programming. So, to hear that you're providing that, plus the funding, is going to enable Action Youth, our program, to take a part-time staff person to full time who can be 24 hours, seven days a week in the lives of these kids."

The day after the Broncos returned from Los Angeles, where they rallied to upset the Chargers and picked up their first of three consecutive wins, Marshall spent his evening at Denver Rescue Mission to serve a dinner to dozens of individuals and families trying to get back on their feet after hardship.

"This means a lot," a man told Marshall as he filled a plate with ham and roasted chicken. "I really appreciate you taking the time for us."

"When are you gonna play again?" asked another.

"Soon," Marshall said with a grin. "Real soon."

Eight days later, Marshall was at Compass Academy, fielding question after question from eighth-graders curious about his job and his tattoos and whether he was involved in a gang and why he chose football and what he studied in school and what it was like to win a Super Bowl and whether he knew Demaryius Thomas.

As he spoke, a hush fell over the classroom. For nearly an hour they sat and they listened because perhaps, finally, they found someone who understood.

Marshall told them he loves his job and that he's lucky because many don't love theirs. He told them his favorite tattoo was one he got in honor of his late grandfather, Roy Williams. He told them he was never involved in a gang because his mother "wouldn't have that" and he was too driven anyway.

He told them he fell in love with football when he was their age and, when he was 13, he began to work out with high schoolers with the goal of making it big. He told them he majored in criminal justice at the University of Nevada because he wanted to work with troubled youth. He wanted to make a difference.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

He told them Super Bowl 50 was surreal, along with getting drafted. And, yep, he knew Thomas, and that he was a hard worker and great teammate.

He also told them he pays little mind to naysayers.

"I don't know if you remember a guy named Wesley Woodyard," Marshall told the students. "He used to play here. He told me one time that it only takes one person to believe. So I know y'all might share your dreams with other people. But if that's your best friend and you tell her you want to be a lawyer and she doesn't think it's going to happen, it doesn't matter what she thinks. What only matters is if you believe it. If you believe it, then it can come true.

"Really, you can do whatever you want in life if you have that dedication and hard work.

"And perseverance. While you're on a journey to do whatever you want in life, it's going to be hard. It's not gonna be easy. You're gonna have speed bumps along the road and hurdles to jump over, but if you stop and quit, you'll never know what could have happened. That's why you have to keep pushing, no matter how hard things get. Just keep going."

A Q&A with Kolton Miller: The Raiders' 2018 top pick has bulked up, healed up and is getting a house built in Vegas

By Lindsay Jones

April 22, 2019

One of the things most Raiders fans ask me about is how the offseason went. Not mine. Kolton Miller's.

The rookie started all 16 games at left tackle last season, and while he struggled some, you have to attribute at least a little bit of that to playing with a bad knee the last 13 weeks of the season.

Plus, the 15th-overall draft pick was seen as a bit of a project coming in, one that would need to put on some more muscle and grow into his role as Derek Carr's blindside protector. Miller has done that the last four months and we sat down for 15 minutes last week to discuss his new-found power, what he learned last season and his big plans for not only next season but when the team moves to Las Vegas in 2020.

(Heads up: I have written several times that the Raiders are planning to keep Miller at left tackle and play free-agent signee Trent Brown on the right side. Coach Jon Gruden and general manager Mike Mayock both passed on the question when others asked several times, so I felt there was no need to put Miller on the spot and ask him here.)

Both the coaches and you said that you wanted to get stronger this offseason. Looks like mission accomplished. What have you been doing?

I have been training with Dan Jameson at Boss MMA in Roseville. I am close to 330 pounds right now and bench and my squat have gone up. I was throwing around 505 pounds in the back squat and benching 320 like it was nothing. I got a lot stronger.

Besides weights, we're doing movement drills and working on my footwork. I have been doing some boxing and some hip exercises as well. A little bit of everything.

Were you about 315 last year?

When I got drafted, I was 312. And then I got up to 320 when the season started and I lost some of that during the season.

This past week was the first week of offseason workouts here at the team facility. What was your first impression of Trent Brown? You feel small?

He is big. Really big. I don't think I have ever said that before. He is 6-9 and he is easily more than 360. We have talked a little bit but it's early still. Everyone is just getting acquainted and in meetings learning the offense.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

You lost a couple of veterans on that offensive line in Donald Penn and Kelechi Osemele. What did those guys leave you with?

Donald was a big help last year. Just having him on the sidelines during games and even at practices. If I messed something up, he would make sure I knew it and offer suggestions about what I could do to make it better. KO was great to have next to me. Guys would be scared to try to go inside against me. Both are hard workers. It's a shame they're gone but that's how the business works. I grew a lot with them last year and that should really help me this year.

When you look back at last season, do you remember the successes — you had some nice games against some top pass rushers — or the struggles more? Or is it the knee that you think of first?

It's all experience. That's the biggest thing. When you look at football compared to other sports ... in baseball, you're playing 162 games, basketball 82, but in football it's a limited amount of games, so for young guys you have to get that experience in and try to get as much 1-on-1 work on the side and in the offseason as you can.

The injury thing ... I have never had to deal with that, really, before. At UCLA, I didn't get hurt that much at all. Then last year, it was sort of a big deal. I think some guys would sit out, but I was just trying to manage it and adjust my schedule all week to get my knee ready for games. I just wanted to be a pro and keep competing,

It was a MCL sprain on your right knee, correct? All good now?

Yeah, Grade 2. I hurt it (Week 4) during the Browns game. KO got hurt that game too. There were occasions later in the season where it would be getting better and then it would get hit. And you're like, "Damnit!" So, I was working through that all season — and learning from it. That made me stronger mentally and should really help my game this year. ...

Toward the end of the season, that's when I felt better and I got used to it. I don't think it's ever going to be normal — you still feel a little bit of looseness — but it shouldn't affect my game. If anything, I have heard from vets — Lee (Smith) and Derek — that when you have the injury first it really sucks, but when you have that and if you are to get the same thing again, the healing process is a lot quicker. ...

A trainer said it's kind of like working with spaghetti. (Laughs) They have compared people who have had surgery for it and people who haven't and it ended up healing the same.

Being a rookie left tackle ... Gruden alluded to it a few times just how hard that is. How long did it take you to get comfortable last season?

Yeah. Everything was faster in college than high school. Now, you get to the NFL and everything is (snaps fingers repeatedly) super, super fast. Even once you get the play call and get set, it's even faster. I think the game will be a lot slower for me this season and I am diving deeper in my studies to help with that. Understanding the bigger picture and why things happen.

Like, how plays develop ...

Yeah, that and the defensive rotations, and what we can expect. What pressures come from different looks.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Who was the toughest guy you went against last year?

I would say Myles Garrett and Melvin Ingram. I would fight them the whole game and besides their power, they also have really good speed.

I know players take it game to game, and season to season, but do you have to look ahead a little bit, with the team moving to Las Vegas in 2020? Is that weird at all, or do you not even think about that yet?

Well, I am building a house in Vegas right now. Back in Henderson, about 10 minutes from the new facility. My mom is helping me with it. I am terrible at picking things out, and she has an eye for that kind of thing. We went down last weekend and had all the options picked out.

You make sure and get the man cave put in?

Yeah, it's a game room. I think it's by the pool. Gotta have a pool in Vegas. And a man cave. I am really excited about that house. It's going to be cool. But first things first.
