CHIEFS TRAVEL TO OAKLAND TO FACE RAIDERS IN AFC WEST CLASH

For the second-consecutive week, the Kansas City Chiefs hit the road, this time to face their AFC West rival the Oakland Raiders. Kickoff at Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum is slated for 3:05 p.m. CT. The Chiefs are 10-2 against the Raiders since 2013 and have won the last three meetings against the club. KC is 21-2 (.913) against AFC West opponents in the last 23 games and 26-10 (.722) in AFC West play since 2013. In 2019, the Chiefs look to earn their fourth-consecutive AFC West Title in 2019 after finishing last season with a 12-4 record. Kansas City earned the number one seed last year, advancing to the AFC Championship Game. The club hosted the AFC title game for the first time in team history. The Chiefs defeated the Indianapolis Colts 31-13 in the divisional round, marking Kansas City's first home playoff win since Jan. 8, 1994.

Under Head Coach Andy Reid, the Chiefs have registered five 10-plus win seasons in six years and have qualified for the postseason five times (including four straight seasons). Reid earned his 208th career victory (regular and postseason combined) last week in Jacksonville as the Chiefs defeated the Jaguars 40-26. He ranks seventh on the NFL's all-time wins list. WR Sammy Watkins posted nine catches for 198 yards with three TDs in the contest. Reigning NFL MVP Patrick Mahomes posted 378 yards with three touchdowns and no interceptions. Defensively, S Tyrann Mathieu and DE Frank Clark made their Chiefs debuts. Clark recorded an INT in the victory.

In seven seasons with the club, Reid has recorded 66 regular season wins, marking the highest combined win total of any head coach in franchise history in that time frame. KC ranked first in the NFL in scoring last season (third in NFL history) with a franchise-record 565 points (35.3 ppg). The club led the league in yards per play (6.84) and ranked first in the NFL in yards per game (425.6). Mahomes' 50 touchdown passes and 52 throws of 25-plus yards led the league in 2018. He had a league-best TD/INT differential (+38) and tallied 10 300-plus yard passing games last season. TE Travis Kelce ranked second in the NFL in receiving yards for tight ends with 1,336 yards (second-most single-season receiving yards all-time by a tight end). He has caught a pass in 80 consecutive regular season games. WR Tyreek Hill ranked first in the NFL with 22 catches of 25+ yards. WR Sammy Watkins had 519 yards on 40 catches and three TDs. Defensively, Kansas City ranked tied for first in the NFL with 52.0 team sacks. DE Chris Jones recorded 15.5 sacks last season, including at least 1.0 sack in 11 straight games (Oct. 7-Dec. 23, NFL record for most consecutive games).

The 2019 Chiefs feature several new faces including new Defensive Coordinator Steve Spagnuolo. Chiefs GM Brett Veach added veteran leaders in S Tyrann Mathieu, DE Frank Clark and RB LeSean McCoy to bolster the roster. The average age of Kansas City's current roster is 25.9 years. KC returns home next week to face the Baltimore Ravens in its home opener.

The only trade personally orchestrated by Lamar Hunt in team history occurred after the 1962 season's first game when the Chiefs sent QB Cotton Davidson to Oakland in exchange for the Raiders first-round pick in '63, a pick that was used to select Hall of Fame DT Buck Buchanan with the first overall selection.

WHAT TO WATCH FOR...

- As a unit, the Kansas City Chiefs will aim to achieve the franchise's fourth consecutive AFC West Division title in 2019, potentially extending a club record for consecutive division crowns since the team's inception in 1960.
- Kansas City will look to start the 2019 regular season 2-0 for the third consecutive year with a win in Week 2 against the Oakland Raiders. With a win in Week 2 and a 2-0 start to the season, the 2019 Chiefs would tie the franchise record for consecutive seasons with a 2-0 start (1994-96).
- With a win in Week 2, Head Coach Andy Reid would tie Pro Football Hall of Fame Coach Chuck Noll for the sixth-most career wins by a head coach in NFL history (209).
- With an offensive output of 40 points in Week 1, the Chiefs tied the NFL record with 19 consecutive games of at least 26 points scored, set by the 2012-13 Denver Broncos. By posting at least 26 points in Week 2, Kansas City would be the lone record holder of the NFL superlative.
- By catching two TD passes in Week 2, WR Sammy Watkins would tie the NFL record for most receiving TDs in a player's first two games to begin a season.
- With 94 receiving yards this week, Watkins would break the club record for most combined receiving yards in the first two games to begin a season. With 160 receiving yards in Week 2, Watkins would break the NFL record for most receiving yards in the first two games, but with a 131-receiving yard output, Watkins would become the first player since 2015 to eclipse 329 receiving yards in a receiver's first two games to begin a season (Antonio Brown).
- By throwing for 279 yards in Week 2, QB Patrick Mahomes would set the franchise record for most total passing yards in a Chiefs QB's first two games to begin a season (Bill Kenney, 656).
- If Mahomes produces at least a 143.0 passer rating in Week 2, the secondyear signal-caller would become the first QB in NFL history to have two outings of at least a 143.0 passer rating in the first two games to begin a season.
- Mahomes threw for 211 yards in the first quarter of Week 1, the secondmost in the first quarter of an NFL game since Peyton Manning did so in 2004 (247). By throwing for 73 yards in the first quarter of Week 2, Mahomes would set the record for most first-quarter passing yards through the first two games.
- Prior the intermission of Week 1, Mahomes accumulated a career-best 313 passing yards and two passing TDs in the first half. With 226 passing yards in the first half of Week 2, he would set the NFL record for most combined first-half passing yards in a QB's first two games to begin a season (Aaron Rodgers, 603).
- Mahomes threw for three TDs against Jacksonville in Week 1, extending his league-leading active streak of 11 straight games with at least two passing scores.
 By throwing for at least two TDs in each of his next three games, Mahomes would tie Peyton Manning for the longest consecutive-game mark in NFL history.
- Following his three-reception, 88-yard output in Week 1, TE Travis Kelce is 12 catches and 176 receiving yards away from reaching the 425 reception and 5,500 receiving yard milestones.
- With a start in Week 2, Kelce would record his 75th career starting nod.
- RB LeSean McCoy's 81-yard rushing output in Week 1 propelled him to 23rd on the all-time career rushing list. With 550 more rushing yards, McCoy would surpass Hall of Fame RB O.J. Simpson and move into the top-20 of all-time.
- Following his full sack in Week 1, DE Emmanuel Ogbah needs 5.0 total sacks throughout the duration of the regular season to set a career-high mark.
- After converting 4-of-4 FGs and connecting on four XPs in Week 1, K Harrison Butker is five points shy of accumulating 300 career points scored as a Chief.
- With an appearance in Week 2, P Dustin Colquitt would tie the franchise record for career games played, matching Pro Football HOF G Will Shields' current record of 224 games played. Colquitt ranks fourth in team annals for consecutive game appearances (169) and his 223 career games played is currently the second-longest streak among active punters (Andy Lee, 234).

CHIEFS ALL-TIME IN SEASON OPENERS

Kansas City now owns a 33-27 (.550) record in season openers. Kansas City's highest score in an opening contest is 59 points, when the Chiefs defeated the Broncos 59-7 in Denver on Sept. 7, 1963. That game just so happened to be the club's first-ever season opener as the Chiefs (first year in Kansas City after the team moved from Dallas).

The Chiefs are 111-84-2 in the month of September. The Chiefs are 20-14 in road game season openers.

Home games in bold; all kickoffs are Central Time. * Subject to Flexible Scheduling

Flexible scheduling will be used in Weeks 11-17. Additionally, in Weeks 5-10, flexible scheduling may be used in no more than two weeks. In Weeks 5-16, the schedule lists the games tentatively set for Sunday Night Football on NBC. Only Sunday afternoon games are eligible to be moved to Sunday night, in which case the tentatively scheduled Sunday night game would be moved to an afternoon start time. A flexible scheduling move would be announced at least 12 days before the game. For Week 17, the Sunday night game will be announced no later than six days prior to December 29. The schedule does not list a Sunday night game in Week 17, but an afternoon game with playoff implications will be moved to that time slot. Flexible scheduling ensures quality matchups in all Sunday time slots in those weeks and gives "surprise" teams a chance to play their way into primetime. Flexible scheduling will not be applied to games airing on Thursday or Monday nights.

MCCULLOUGH'S AMAZING STORY

Kansas City Chiefs Running Backs Coach Deland McCullough was featured on ESPN's E:60, highlighting his inspirational journey to discovering his birth parents.

The feature, which aired on Sunday, Sept. 2, 2018, documents the life of McCullough, who was adopted at birth, and his search for his biological parents that spanned more than 40 years. That alone makes for a powerful story, but as it turns out, McCullough was already plenty familiar with his biological father – a man he had known since he was a kid, a man that was a mentor and father-figure who goes by the name of Sherman Smith. It's a story that defies the odds as his father was unaware that he had a son, but still served as an instrumental figure throughout McCullough's life.

"If you would have told me to pick who my father was, there's no way I would have picked him because I might have thought I wasn't worthy for him to be my father," McCullough said. "I felt like my blessings came full circle because I'd always wanted to be somebody like him."

THE BEST IN CHIEFS HISTORY

Entering his seventh season as head coach in Kansas City, Andy Reid is the club's third-longest tenured head coach trailing only Pro Football Hall of Fame Coach Hank Stram (15 years) and Marty Schottenheimer (10 years). In his first seven seasons as Head Coach of the Chiefs, Reid has coached the team to a 66-31 record in 97 regular season games. His 67.7 winning percentage is the top mark in franchise history for any coach in his first six seasons leading the club. Marty Schottenheimer is second on that list, leading his Chiefs teams to a 60-35-1 (63.0%) record in his first six seasons. In Reid's 97 total games with the Chiefs, he has registered a 36-12 (75.0%) record at home and a 30-19 (61.2%) record on the road.

CHIEFS EMBRACING HELMET TECHNOLOGY

The Kansas City Chiefs are among the league-leaders when it comes to the number of orders placed for the Vicis ZERO1 helmet, according to Chiefs Director of Equipment Allen Wright.

The helmet consists of technology that's new to the industry.

The "ZERO1" features a soft outer shell and an underlying layer of columns designed to mitigate collisions from multiple directions.

It's the first helmet that's made of a flexible polymer on the outside that deforms upon impact, much like that of a bumper on a car. It reduces the overall impact to the head, and it's being used by many players around the league and the Chiefs. Kansas City currently has 24 players in Vicis helmets including: QB Patrick Mahomes, WR Sammy Watkins, K Harrison Butker, T Eric Fisher and LB Reggie Ragland among others.

In collaboration with the NFL and the NFLPA, the 2019 helmet laboratory testing performance results chart, which is posted in locker rooms across the NFL, has the ZERO1 ranked as the best helmet on the market to reduce head impact severity.

2019 OFFSEASON NOTES

QB PATRICK MAHOMES CLEANS UP 2018 AWARDS

First-year starting QB Patrick Mahomes led the Kansas City Chiefs to the team's first AFC Championship Game appearance since 1993, ultimately being recognized for his seasonal efforts with a plethora of acknowledgments.

The 23-year-old Mahomes became the youngest NFL Most Valuable Player Award recipient since Pro Football Hall of Famer Dan Marino (1984) at NFL Honors, one week removed from being named MVP of the Pro Bowl Game where he helped lead the AFC to a convincing victory over the NFC, 26-7. Mahomes became the first MVP Award recipient in Chiefs history shortly after receiving his First-Team All-Pro nod.

Continuing recognition at the highest level across the National Football League, Mahomes was awarded the ESPY for Best NFL Player and was named AFC Offensive Player of Year at the 101 Awards. In the final puzzle piece to close the door to the 2018 NFL season, Mahomes ranked No. 4 in the NFL's Top 100 Players of 2019 poll, as voted on by the players.

CHIEFS NAME SPAGNUOLO NEW DC

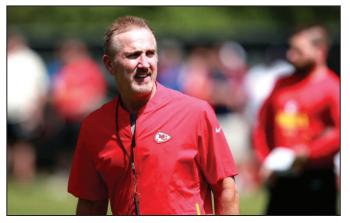

Head Coach Andy Reid and the Kansas City Chiefs announced on Jan. 24 that the club had hired former NFL head coach and long-time NFL assistant coach Steve Spagnuolo as Defensive Coordinator.

"Steve is a bright defensive mind with a lot of coaching experience and success in our league," Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid said. "I know him well from our time together in Philadelphia and I feel that his leadership skills and teaching abilities, combined with his scheme, will be a great fit for our team as we move forward."

Spagnuolo now brings more than 36 years of coaching experience across the collegiate and professional ranks to the Chiefs, including a tenure of two decades in the NFL. Prior to joining the Chiefs, Spagnuolo served as the defensive coordinator for the New York Giants for three seasons (2015-17) and was named the Giants interim head coach for the final four weeks of the 2017 season. His three years coordinating New York's defense marked his second stint in that role as he served as the Giants defensive coordinator from 2007-08. Spagnuolo's defense helped lead the Giants to a 17-14 victory over the previously undefeated Patriots in Super Bowl XLII.

After his first stop with the Giants (2007-08), Spagnuolo was hired as head coach of the St. Louis Rams, where he spent three seasons at the helm (2009-11). He also had a stint as defensive coordinator of the New Orleans Saints (2012) and spent two seasons on the defensive staff of the Baltimore Ravens, first as a senior defensive assistant (2013) and then as assistant head coach/secondary coach (2014).

Spagnuolo broke into the NFL under Kansas City Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid when Reid held the same position with the Philadelphia Eagles (1999-2012). Spagnuolo spent eight seasons (1999-2006), holding the positions of defensive assistant/quality control coach (1999-2000), defensive backs coach (2001-03) and linebackers coach (2004-06). While with the Eagles, Spagnuolo was part of four consecutive NFC East titles, reached four straight conference title games and earned a Super Bowl appearance following the 2004 season.

CHIEFS BOLSTER ROSTER WITH MOVES ON DEFENSE

The Kansas City Chiefs made quick work in the unrestricted free agency period of the offseason, signing S Tyrann Mathieu one day after the opening of the official signing period. Just over one month later, the additions continued on the defensive side of the ball as General Manager Brett Veach and the personnel staff orchestrated a trade with the Seattle Seahawks to acquire DE Frank Clark.

"Tyrann's a player we've had our eyes on for a while now, and we're excited about him joining our team," Chiefs General Manager Brett Veach said. "He's versatile and tough, with a lot of playmaking ability. He'll be a great addition to our secondary."

"Brett and his staff did a tremendous job working to get Tyrann here in Kansas City," Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid said. "He's a talented player and very physical on the football field. We are excited to get started working with him this offseason."

With the acquisition of Clark, the Chiefs established a presence on the edge to fit new Defensive Coordinator Steve Spagnuolo's style and system.

"We're happy to add Frank to our team," Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid said. "Competing against him and watching his film, you can see how physical and impressive he is in both the run and the pass game. He's young and has consistently played at a high level since he entered the league. Congrats to Brett and his team, as well as Frank's representatives on getting this deal done."

CHIEFS EXTEND BUTKER AND SCHWARTZ

The Kansas City Chiefs reached agreements to extend the contracts of both K Harrison Butker and T Mitchell Schwartz.

Butker, the former seventh-round pick out of Georgia Tech by the Carolina Panthers in 2017, was originally signed by the Chiefs from the Panthers practice squad two seasons ago. Before culminating the offseason, the Chiefs and Butker mutually agreed to a five-year contract extension.

Butker has converted 62-of-69 career field goals in his two seasons for the Chiefs, garnering a nomination on the PFWA All-Rookie team in 2017. Butker was also named the AFC's Special Teams Player of the Month for December of the 2017 season. Butker's contribution of 137 points in 2018 added to the team's franchise-record of 565 total points scored, which ranked third all-time in NFL history.

A key piece of the offensive unit that assisted in scoring the most points in franchise history was T Mitchell Schwartz, who also agreed to an extension prior to the commencement of the 2019 season. By agreeing to the extension, Schwartz's current deal currently has him as a member of the Chiefs through the 2021 season.

Schwartz earned a First-Team All-Pro nod following the 2018 season. The former second-round pick in the 2012 NFL Draft by the Cleveland Browns has recorded 112 consecutive starts since entering the league in 2012 and owns the highest current streak of consecutive snaps in the NFL (7,397).

Hardman hauled in 59 catches for 950 yards and 11 touchdowns in his last 29 games for the Georgia Bulldogs, averaging 16.1 yards per catch. He tallied seven catches of 30+ yards and four of at least 50+ yards in 2018.

DB Juan Thornhill was tabbed as the Chiefs' second and final second-round pick of the 2019 NFL Draft. Thornhill was selected 63rd overall out of the University of Virginia. He entered his senior season on the Nagurski and Bednarik watch lists and finished his career at Virginia as an AP All-ACC selection in 2018.

DL Khalen Saunders rounded out the Day 2 picks for the Chiefs, as Kansas City selected Saunders with the 84th overall selection out of Western Illinois. Saunders racked up 25 tackles-for-loss and 14.0 sacks over the last two seasons for the Leathernecks, earning AP FCS Second-Team All-American honors as a senior. Following his efforts at the FCS level, Saunders also earned an invite to the 2019 Senior Bowl in Mobile, Ala.

DB Rashad Fenton was selected with one of the team's two sixth-round picks in the 2019 NFL Draft. Fenton was taken with the 201st overall selection out of the University of South Carolina. Fenton tallied a teamleading three interceptions in 2018 to go along with 34 tackles, six pass breakups and 2.5 tackles-for-loss. Fenton appeared in 48 games (30 starts) over the course of his four-year career for the Gamecocks, recording 122 tackles, 24 passes defensed, five picks and a forced fumble.

RB Darwin Thompson was chosen by the Chiefs with the 214th overall pick on the team's second sixth-round selection. Thompson played just one season at Utah State, but tallied 1,044 rushing yards and 14 scores in 2018, averaging 6.8 yards per attempt, good for the 13th-best mark in the country. Contributing out of the backfield, Thompson hauled in 23 passes or 351 yards and two touchdowns to earn second-team All-Mountain West honors.

G Nick Allegretti was selected in the seventh round (216th overall) by the Chiefs out of the University of Illinois. Allegretti was a two-time captain at Illinois over his four-year career, earning Second-Team All-Big 10 honors from the media in 2018. He didn't miss a start over his final three years on the team. Allegretti also won the 2019 Big 10 Medal of Honor, which is awarded to one student athlete from the graduating class at each university who excelled both on and off the field. He was a four-time member of the Academic All-Big Ten, as well.

BRIAN WATERS SELECTED TO CHIEFS HOF

Kansas City Chiefs Chairman and CEO Clark Hunt announced that former offensive guard Brian Waters will be the 2019 inductee into the Chiefs Hall of Fame. Waters is the 49th individual and 45th player to earn this coveted honor. The official enshrinement ceremony into the Chiefs Hall of Fame will be held during Chiefs Alumni Weekend at Arrowhead Stadium this fall.

"In his 13 seasons with the Chiefs, Brian Waters was a fixture on some of the best offensive lines in franchise history," Chiefs Chairman and CEO Clark Hunt said. "Although he was undrafted coming out of college, Brian made the most of his opportunity here in Kansas City, and his work ethic, talent and toughness made him an undisputed leader on the field and in the locker room. Brian also has a tremendous heart of service, and his commitment to the Kansas City community earned him the prestigious Walter Payton Man of the Year Award in 2009. We look forward to adding Brian's name to the Ring of Honor at Arrowhead this fall."

Over 13 seasons with the Kansas City Chiefs (2000-10), the New England Patriots (2011) and the Dallas Cowboys (2013), Waters played in 186 games with 170 starts, earning six Pro Bowl selections and two first-team All-Pro recognitions by the Associated Press.

THE FIRST LADY OF FOOTBALL

Norma Hunt continues to play an integral part of the Chiefs in Kansas City. She owns the distinction of being the only woman known to have attended all 53 Super Bowls and was selected to preside over the coin toss at Super Bowl XLI along with Pro Football Hall of Fame quarterback Dan Marino. She is involved in numerous philanthropic and civic efforts in Kansas City and Texas. Her late husband, Lamar Hunt, was the guiding force behind the formation of the Kansas City Chiefs and the American Football League and was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1972. He, with the help of his family, coined the term "Super Bowl."

Hunt, along with her daughter-in-law Tavia Hunt and granddaughters Gracie and Ava Hunt, all participate in the NFL Women's Apparel advertising campaigns. The Hunts have been featured alongside other female NFL leaders such as Charlotte Jones Anderson (Dallas Cowboys Executive Vice President/Chief Brand Officer and NFL Foundation chair), Suzanne Johnson (wife of New York Jets owner Woody Johnson) and Tanya Snyder (wife of Washington Redskins owner Dan Snyder).

CHIEFS ATTEND 57TH ANNUAL KICKOFF LUNCHEON

Fans and members of the business community had the opportunity to join Chiefs players to celebrate the start of the NFL season at the 57th annual Chiefs Kickoff Luncheon on Wednesday, Aug. 28, prior to the team's departure to Green Bay to play its final preseason game.

Hosted by the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce, attendees heard from Chairman and CEO Clark Hunt, General Manager Brett Veach, Head Coach Andy Reid and some of the Chiefs key contributors on the field.

The mission of the Kansas City Chamber of Commerce is to provide leadership to help businesses grow and Kansas City to prosper - making KC the best place to live, work, start a business and grow a business.

For nearly six decades, the Kansas City Chiefs have commemorated the start of the NFL season with the opportunity for the community and fans to be introduced to the newest members of the team, as well as their favorite veteran players and the coaching staff.

CHIEFS PLAYERS VISIT RONALD MCDONALD HOUSE

The Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kansas City serves as a safe haven for those dealing with the most difficult of times, providing a place to stay for more than 80 families with children in the hospital on any given night.

"The Chiefs and the Ronald McDonald House partner together every year, and this is something that I've been a part of ever since I got to Kansas City," said offensive lineman Cam Erving. "We're just trying to come out here, have fun with the kids and bring a little bit of light to the tough time that they're going through. It's just fun to be out here having fun with them."

Erving was joined by defensive tackle Derrick Nnadi and kicker Harrison Butker at the Ronald McDonald House, which supports families that have children in the hospital. In a sense, Tuesday's visit was meant to let those kids – even for just a little while – experience the joy of simply being a kid.

RED FRIDAY KICKS OFF FOOTBALL SEASON

For the 28th annual year, the Chiefs celebrated the kick off of football season with Red Friday, a tradition started by Chiefs Founder Lamar Hunt and the Chiefs Red Coaters. The Chiefs again partnered with Kansas Cityand St. Joseph-area McDonald's to sell Chiefs Kingdom flags. The flags were sold for $5 each with net proceeds donated to Ronald McDonald House Charities. The flags were also sold at Kansas City-area Hy-Vee and CommunityAmerica Credit Union locations.

The flag designed for this year's collector's edition flag featured the club's specially designed 60th season logo, which will also be worn as a special helmet decal this season. Last year, more than $323,000 was raised from flag sales alone, while over the past five years, flag sales have raised over $1.2 million to help RMHC-KC continue its mission of keeping families close in times of sickness and need.

"Chiefs Kingdom continues to deliver incredible support for Red Friday and Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kansas City each and every year," Chiefs President Mark Donovan said. "The entire organization, including the players, coaches and staff, can feel the excitement and energy around the city and the entire Kingdom. This year's Red Friday will be a great way to kick off what will be a special 60th season of Chiefs football."

During the lead-up to Red Friday, special events took place over the course of the week. The week kicked off with a visit to Ronald McDonald House Charities from three Chiefs players on Tuesday. Chiefs jerseys, flags, artwork and red lighting gradually appeared around Kansas City throughout the week as the city prepared to celebrate Red Friday.

The inaugural Red Friday Eve Rally took place at on Thursday evening at Westport Ale House in conjunciton with CommunityAmerica Credit Union. The event included the unveiling of a new Chiefs mural featuring Patrick Mahomes on the side of Ale House.

Red Friday honors the long-standing tradition of selling team-themed publications around the city to raise money for local charities that was started by Chiefs Founder Lamar Hunt and the Chiefs Red Coaters. Since the inception of Red Friday, newspaper, magazine and flag sales have raised nearly $2 million for local charities, with an emphasis on assisting youth in need.

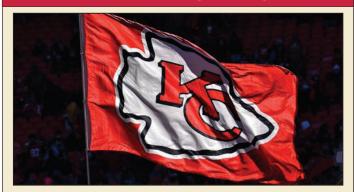

A special addition to this year's Red Friday celebration to kick off the Chiefs 60th season was the hosting of Missouri Governor Mike Parson and Missouri Senator Kiki Curls to sign a bill that made the Kansas City Chiefs the official National Football League team of the state of Missouri.

CHIEFS FANS SET WORLD RECORD

On Monday, Sept. 29, 2014, Kansas City defeated the New England Patriots 41-14, and Chiefs fans set a Guinness World Record for Loudest Crowd Roar at a Sports Stadium (Outdoors). Chiefs fans reached a peak decibel reading of 142.2 as Guinness World Records adjudicator Philip Robertson monitored the sound levels. The mark was set early in the contest while the club was on defense. The Arrowhead Stadium record passed the old record of 137.5 decibels and broke Seattle's record of 137.6. The Chiefs still hold the record five years later.

THE ARROWHEAD ADVANTAGE

"The fans, they're phenomenal. 142.2 decibels, I never thought I would be fired up (for) decibel levels but I'm fired up for them. My ears are still ringing, I mean it was loud, loud down there. Like incredibly loud."

- Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid

"One hundred percent. Whenever you can go out in pregame warmups and feed on the energy because the fans are there packing the stadium that early, it truly is special. We feed off that the entire game. There's not an empty seat in the stands and I know there won't be an empty seat in Arrowhead this week. I'm excited just to be in front of that crowd playing this AFC Championship."

- Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes

"A legendary environment like that at Arrowhead Stadium is something else. We're excited about it, we respect it, we realize that the environment is an issue and an element of play and it's something that we need to be prepared for and ultimately combat."

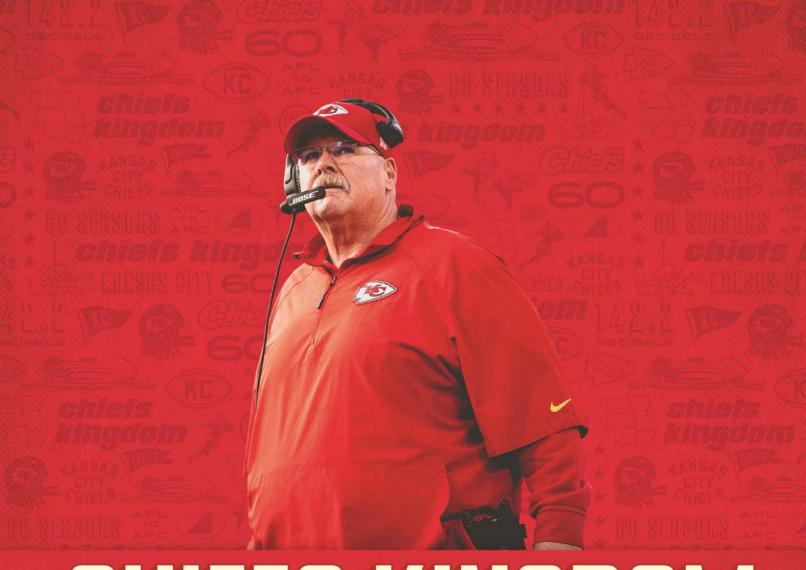

- Steelers Head Coach Mike Tomlin

An Underrated Star, Jamaal Charles Retires With The Chiefs

Jeff Fedotin

May 1, 2019

Forbes

Kansas City Chiefs RB Jamaal Charles, who signed a one-day contract to officially retire as a member of the Chiefs, is one of the more underrated running backs of all time.

Among running backs, only Marion Motley (5.7) has a higher yards per rushing attempt average than Charles' 5.4. That tops both Jim Brown (5.2) and Barry Sanders (5.0), who many consider as the greatest running backs of all time.

And some statisticians exclude Motley because he had fewer than 1,000 carries.

Charles' numbers speak for themselves, but offensive lineman Geoff Schwartz — whose brother, Mitchell, still starts for Kansas City — blocked for Charles in 2013 while starting seven games and gave further credence to Charles' value.

"Jamaal Charles is so underrated," Schwartz posted via Twitter in April. "He was on some bad teams and then got hurt. He was amazing."

The all-time leader in rushing yardage for Kansas City, Charles played from 2008 to 2016 with the Chiefs, rushing for 7,260 yards and 43 touchdowns. He played two more seasons — one with the Denver Broncos in 2017 and one with the Jacksonville Jaguars in 2018.

"After 25 years of playing this sport I love so much, and 11 years in the NFL," Charles said via an Instagram post. "I'm officially hanging up my cleats for the last time today."

Derrick Johnson signs contract to retire with Chiefs

NFL

Another Kansas City Chiefs legend not with a team will end his career as a member of the team.

Middle linebacker Derrick Johnson signed a one-day contract with the Chiefs and will retire, the team announced. ESPN's Adam Teicher first reported the news.

Johnson's decision comes one day after his former teammate, running back Jamaal Charles, signed a one-day contract and retired.

The 36-year-old Johnson entered the league in 2005 as a first-round pick (15th overall) with the Chiefs, and went on to enjoy a productive career in Kansas City as the heart and soul of the defense before his release in March 2018.

Johnson then joined the Oakland Raiders, but played in just six games before the Raiders cut him loose.

He finishes his career as the Chiefs' all-time leader in tacklers (1,151), while adding 14 interceptions, 27.5 sacks and 40 quarterback hits. Johnson was a first-team All-Pro selection in 2010 and a four-time Pro Bowler (2011-13, 2015).

Receiver Dwayne Bowe latest to sign one-day deal to retire with Kansas City Chiefs

KC Star

Dwayne Bowe is the latest player to sign a one-day contract with the Chiefs and retire from professional football.

Bowe hadn't played since finishing his career with the Cleveland Browns in 2015. He had spent his first eight NFL years with the Chiefs, and his 532 career receptions are the most by a Chiefs wide receiver. He ranks second on the team's reception list behind tight end Tony Gonzalez (916).

The Chiefs' first-round draft pick, 23rd overall, from LSU in 2007, Bowe started immediately and was a member of the NFL All-Rookie team after a 70-reception year.

He logged a career best 86 receptions in 2008 and his 15 receiving touchdowns topped the NFL in 2010, when he was selected to the Pro Bowl.

Bowe recorded 44 receiving touchdowns in his Chiefs career and had at least one in seven straight games in 2010. His 7,155 career receiving yards rank third in club history.

Bowe played on playoff teams in 2010 and 2013, and caught eight passes with a touchdown in the Chiefs' loss to the Colts in 2013. He appeared in 118 games for the Chiefs.

During Bowe's tenure, nine different quarterbacks started at least one game: Damon Huard, Brodie Croyle, Tyler Thigpen, Matt Cassel, Tyler Palko, Kyle Orton, Brady Quinn, Alex Smith and Chase Daniel.

Bowe follows former teammates Jamaal Charles and Derrick Johnson as former players to return to the team for a one-day contract signing and retirement this offseason.

The Chiefs Official Podcast Network to Deliver Exclusive Content, Behind-the-Scenes Access and a Perspective Unlike Any Other

Matt McMullen

May 31, 2019

Chiefs.com

For those that live, eat and breathe Kansas City Chiefs' football, there's a new podcast network hitting the airwaves made just for you.

It's The Chiefs Official Podcast Network – a medium dedicated to providing fans with exclusive interviews, behind-the-scenes anecdotes and the latest in Chiefs' news directly from the source.

The Network - which is available on Spotify, iTunes, Google Play, Stitcher, YouTube and here on Chiefs.com - is simply one-of-a-kind when it comes to talking Chiefs.

"Podcasts are one of the fastest-growing mediums in sports right now, and we want to be a part of it," said Chiefs Reporter BJ Kissel, who will host the Network's flagship show titled "In the Trenches." "It's our job to deliver the best content we can to those that love this football team, and this is just another way to do that."

Podcasts reach millions on a daily basis – including those right here in Chiefs Kingdom – and it's an area the Chiefs are ready to make their presence felt.

"The media landscape is always changing and evolving, and we know that avid fans are looking for content delivered in more ways than ever before," said Chiefs President Mark Donovan. "We've explored podcasts in the past, but believe we now have the technology and structure in place to really deliver unique on-demand content to our fans through The Chiefs Official Podcast Network"

The Network will feature several shows in the future, each of which will offer exclusive content designed for fans in Chiefs Kingdom. This football team means so much to so many, and through The Chiefs Official Podcast Network, fans can immerse themselves in it like never before.

From the latest news to captivating stories, the Network has it covered in a way that only the Chiefs can provide.

Kissel hosts "In the Trenches" alongside six-year NFL veteran Nick Leckey to kick things off for the Network, bringing together a pair of perspectives unlike any other. Nobody who covers the Chiefs is around the team more than Kissel, while Leckey knows first-hand what it's like to experience the grind of an NFL season.

Together, they provide a vantage point behind-the-scenes that's unmatched in the current market while also having plenty of fun along the way.

"We're going to break down what everyone is talking about and hit all the big stories, but most of all, we're going to have a good time," Kissel said. "I'll bring the perspective of a guy who's around this team every day while Nick brings some insight into what it takes to be a professional athlete."

Leckey, who was an All-American offensive lineman at Kansas State, suited up for the Arizona Cardinals, St. Louis Rams and New Orleans Saints during his career from 2004-09. He appeared in 65 games (32 starts) in that time, winning a championship with the Saints in 2009.

He retired on top following the Saints' Super Bowl run and now lives in Kansas City.

"As a player, I understand that you have to hold back some information when you're talking. You can't give everything away. Now that I'm retired, I can open up," Leckey said. "We want to show the thought-process behind things and talk about the human element – like an under the helmet look at the game - because I've been there and I've done that."

That experience made Leckey a natural fit to join Kissel on the airwaves when coupled with the fact that these guys go way back. Both K-State alums, the duo first met in person several years ago after coming across each other on Twitter. They've kept in touch ever since, talking about football and life in general on their own time. Now, they're just recording those conversations.

"We each bring something different. When I was playing, I always wanted to bring home stories to my friends. BJ is really good at extracting those, and now I can tell them," Leckey said. "He can also answer the questions like, 'What does a player do on a Tuesday or what's it like to travel?' I think that's really cool. Altogether, we're basically offering a peek behind the curtain."

"In the Trenches" is available now and will run on a bi-weekly basis up until training camp, when it will post weekly. When there's news in Chiefs Kingdom, Kissel and Leckey will have something to say about it.

And that's' just the beginning. While "In the Trenches" will serve as the Network's flagship show, there will be additional programming added as the 2019 season inches closer.

It's all yet another example of the Chiefs' desire to provide the very best content in the league.

Catch "In the Trenches" on iTunes, Spotify, Google Play, Stitcher, YouTube and Chiefs.com.

Cheers and Confetti Fill Union Station as Kansas City Earns Bid to Host 2023 NFL Draft

Matt McMullen

May 23, 2019

Chiefs.com

Confetti rained down as some of Kansas City's most-influential decision-makers shook hands and exchanged congratulations on Thursday morning at Union Station. After years of tireless work and collaboration between numerous groups, what began as a hopeful idea had finally transformed into a concrete reality.

The 2023 NFL Draft is headed to Kansas City.

"Great news like this shows what this city can be and what it's becoming," said Kansas City Mayor Sly James at Thursday's press conference. "Make no mistake, this will be one of the biggest events in the history of this city."

James was in attendance on Thursday alongside Kansas City Sports Commission President & CEO Kathy Nelson, Chiefs President Mark Donovan, City Planner Troy Schulte, Union Station President & CEO George Guastello and 2023 NFL Draft Local Organizing Committee Co-Chair Greg Graves – each of whom played a critical role in the bidding process and will continue to do so as preparations for the event get underway.

"Lamar [Hunt] is looking down and smiling right now," Donovan said, referencing the Chiefs legendary founder. "He would be proud of the impact this franchise has on this region, all of the cooperation between this city and this franchise, and all of the support from Chiefs Kingdom, which makes things like this possible."

Fittingly, the news came on the 56th anniversary of Hunt's initial announcement to move the Dallas Texans to Kansas City back in 1963. All these years later, Kansas City will host the marquee event of the NFL offseason and the second-biggest event on the league's calendar overall.

In fact, 47.5 million viewers tuned into the Draft just last year. It's a mammoth event, drawing the attention of more than 115 nations around the world.

"This is an enormous opportunity for all of us," Donovan added. "We are so excited to be a part of it."

Of course, earning the right to host an event of this magnitude isn't easy. It took vision, exhaustive research, seamless collaboration, endless hours of work and numerous bids to make this happen. What began as an initial inquiry back in 2015 led to formal bids that fell just short a few years later, but the group's unwavering persistence ultimately paid off this week.

"We know that Kansas City will be a successful host city," Nelson said.

"We are accessible to people from all four corners of the country. We have deep, historic cultural roots and great food and entertainment options, [not to mention] our passionate Chiefs Kingdom fanbase. We know we will create memories for fans of all teams as they enjoy a massive, free football festival, and we'll work with the NFL to make sure we create lifelong memories for the draft prospects and their families."

The Draft was held in New York City from 1965 until 2014 before moving to Chicago for two years from 2015-16. Philadelphia, Dallas and Nashville have all held the event since, with the latter attracting hundreds of thousands of fans just a few weeks ago while generating more than $200 million in estimated economic impact.

"We expect thousands of hotel rooms to be booked more than a year out," Nelson said. "Restaurants, bars, transportation, retail and local Kansas City attractions can all expect a major lift in business during draft week."

Steve Sanders

And while the three-day event is still four years away, the preparation will get started immediately.

"We will watch and learn from [the other cities in the coming years] and the NFL Events team will continue to work with us, our planning committee and city leaders on the details surrounding such a massive event," Nelson said. "Leading up to the 2023 Draft, we'll finalize the exact dates and the final location of the Draft stage and fan experiences, knowing that Union Station and the National World War I Museum and Memorial will be our focus for the backdrop."

That planning began as an idea all those years ago – a desire to thrust Kansas City onto the national stage in a way it has never been featured before – and as of this week, it's set to become a reality.

"I am beyond exhausted, but I am also beyond excited and beyond proud," Nelson said. "Kansas City is the home of the 2023 NFL Draft."

Chiefs to Play in Top Prime-Time Game of the Season According to NFL.com

Matt McMullen

April 18, 2019

Chiefs.com

The 2019 NFL schedule dropped on Wednesday night, finally providing fans with a look at game-times, dates and - of course - the prime-time slate.

And, for a second year in a row, the Kansas City Chiefs will spend plenty of time in the national spotlight. In fact, the Chiefs' five prime-time matchups are tied for the most in the league, and they're same good ones.

NFL.com analyst Adam Schein ranked the top-nine prime-time matchups on the league schedule on Wednesday, and Kansas City was in four of them.

Here's a look at each of those games along with Schein's commentary:

No. 8 – Week 11, Chiefs at Los Angeles Chargers (Mexico City) on Monday Night Football

"Mahomes had six touchdowns and zero interceptions in his two games against the Bolts last season, though the teams did split the series. Philip Rivers vs. the Chiefs will be fun. Just like last year. Just like always."

Indeed, this one should be fun. The Chiefs edged the Chargers for the AFC West crown last season after both teams finished the 2019 campaign with conference-best 12-4 records, and odds are the two teams will be battling for the division crown yet again next year.

Fans interested in traveling to see the Chiefs in Mexico City can check out PrimeSport travel packages by clicking here.

No. 7 – Week 5, Chiefs vs. Indianapolis Colts on Sunday Night Football

"It wouldn't shock me if this turned out to be a preview of the AFC Championship Game. And the rematch from last year's Divisional Round -- a game K.C. won handily, 31-13 -- will be spicy. Mahomes hosting Andrew Luck is a fantastic battle of quarterbacks who ooze talent and smarts."

The Chiefs' first prime-time matchup of the season features a Colts' team on the rise as Kansas City looks to continue its stellar record at Arrowhead Stadium since 2014. In fact, the Chiefs' 34 regular-season victories at home over the last five years are the second-most in the NFL.

No. 5 – Week 16, Chiefs at Chicago Bears on Sunday Night Football

"Are you the type who just can't wait to open your Christmas gifts? Well, here's an early present to all football fans, a few days before Santa comes down the chimney...The unstoppable offense vs. the immovable defense. Mahomes vs. Mack in a potential Super Bowl preview during the regular season's penultimate week. Am I greedy if I ask for snow? I want snow!"

This late-season matchup also pits the teacher against the pupil as Chiefs' Head Coach Andy Reid faces Bears' Head Coach Matt Nagy for the first time in the regular season. Nagy spent his entire professional coaching career under Reid before joining Chicago prior to last season.

No. 1 – Week 8, Kansas City Chiefs vs. Green Bay Packers on Sunday Night Football

"This is why you love football. This is why you love sports. Aaron Rodgers against Patrick Mahomes for the first time. Arguably the most talented quarterback ever against the quarterback who could eventually challenge him for that title. MVP past vs. MVP present.

"Add in the insane energy of a night game in Arrowhead? Nothing more needs to be said about this game. Just get me to October 27th. NOW!"

Schein said it best – this one speaks for itself. Arrowhead will be rocking. For fans interested in purchasing tickets to either of the Chiefs' prime-time matchups at Arrowhead, click here for more information.

Former Chiefs great Tony G: From bullied kid to Hall of Famer who speaks his mind

Vahe Gregorian July 28, 2019 KC Star

Grazing on a bowl of nuts and dried fruits at a table in his palatial home one day in June, Tony Gonzalez contemplated his ascension into the Pro Football Hall of Fame, and what he plans to say about it on Saturday in Canton, Ohio.

"I don't have a speech written out: I'm not that guy, I never will be," said Gonzalez, the first tight end named to the Hall in his first year of eligibility. "I like to just talk and whatever comes out, comes out."

No doubt his words will be eloquent and inspiring, particularly based on what he shared about three key pivot points from his humble and tentative roots to greatness on the field — not to mention prosperity and fulfillment today as a TV analyst, husband, father, motivational speaker, voracious reader and world traveler.

Also could be that some of his words will rankle, as Gonzalez long has been prone to do by spontaneously speaking his mind.

Influenced as he might be by such books as "Zen Reflections" and "The Book of Joy," Gonzalez in recent years also has strived to be less a conformist and pleaser in the spirit of another book on his shelf: "The Subtle Art Of Not Giving A F*ck."

The downside of that enlightenment, of course, is how others might interpret it.

That brings us to the subtle difference in how the Chiefs and their fans seem to be processing the simultaneous inductions of Gonzalez and safety Johnny Robinson, each of whom made their names in 12 years as Chiefs and refined, if not redefined, the positions they played.

And yet ...

"I would tell you that the Johnny celebration is going to be a little different than the Tony celebration," Chiefs president Mark Donovan said Friday. "But they're both going to be fun."

While adding "we'll always think (Gonzalez) is a Chief," Donovan didn't elaborate on the distinction.

Robinson is as pure and original a Chief as there can be, drafted in the franchise's first season, 1960, as the Dallas Texans, never playing elsewhere and becoming a key element in their pinnacle of triumph in Super Bowl IV in 1970.

That's all in contrast to Gonzalez: Seeking to play in a Super Bowl as he was aging and the Chiefs were in need of repair, Gonzalez requested a trade and played his last five seasons in Atlanta.

If that perceived affront to KC had faded, it was rekindled when he gushed over Atlanta when he was named to the Hall of Fame in Atlanta and was speaking with an Atlanta media outlet.

Never mind that he also said he was proud to be a Chief that day.

When I wrote a few weeks ago that Chiefs fans might want to chill and enjoy this moment with an amazing player, the reaction was mixed.

But Donovan was right when he said anyone who played for more than one team is "in a tough spot, right? You've got to take care of all the fans."

So we'll say it again: Chiefs fans can hold whatever grudge they want. But what a waste not to embrace this ride with Gonzalez, who loved Kansas City — the bedrock of a career in which he amassed the second-most receptions in NFL history (1,325, including 916 with the Chiefs).

"Mind-blowing numbers," said former Chiefs quarterback Trent Green, adding, "Tony was the superstar of the town ... He was that guy."

A man of "high integrity and character who always carried himself that way," former teammate and receiver Eddie Kennison called him.

Noting his fiendish work ethic, Kennison added, "He wasn't one of those guys to take a knee when it wasn't his turn."

In fact, that's the hinge of Gonzalez's story and something anyone should savor.

Despite his genetic gifts, his story is about a crusade and the example of how he navigated three turns that will dominate his Hall of Fame speech.

"Don't ever think that you just show up and this happens," he said. "The hardest things in my life have made me who I am."

BULLY PULPIT

Many of Gonzalez's early memories are of his family on welfare and moving around near Los Angeles as his single mother, Judy, toiled at a nursing home and became the strongest person he knows.

By the time he moved to Huntington Beach, a second-rate skateboard became his main transportation, and basketball and a surfboard from a swap meet his preoccupations. (The surfboard was courtesy of his father, Joe, who contrary to general understanding saw his sons on weekends.)

The self-described "goofy, goofy kid" whose mother will tell you he was clumsy never could have envisioned the arc of his life stemming from a game he initially couldn't stand.

He resisted football to the point of simply leaving practices and quitting his Pop Warner team during his second season before his older brother, Chris, ultimately coaxed out a love for the game.

But that wouldn't have happened if not for Gonzalez facing his nemesis: a boy a year older who routinely threatened and bullied him when Gonzalez was in eighth grade. Another bully joined in later, and together they once compelled him to run into his house yelling "Nooooo!"

Which promptly led to kids at school yelling "Nooooo!" to make fun of him.

He felt like a "loner, nerd, outcast, with no friends hardly." And a coward.

"But my philosophy back then was it's better to be a live chicken than a dead duck," he said.

Until his eighth-grade graduation.

While others celebrated, Gonzalez shuddered at seeing his main agitator and hid behind a wall, where his family found him.

"My mom didn't even say anything. She just looked at me with the eyes of disappointment," he said. "My brother mouthed the words, 'What are you doing?' They were both disgusted by me."

And that, he said, was it.

"One minute Tony was this way," he said, snapping his fingers. "And this next minute it's this way. It just changed me forever."

The next time he remembered seeing his prime tormentor was his junior year of high school, when Gonzalez had grown into an athletic 6-foot-3 or 6-4 frame.

"Now I'm looking down on him," Gonzalez said. "I just looked at him and smiled."

All these years later, he remembers his name (Curtis Parker) and wonders if Parker remembers his.

"I should thank him," he said. "It was the best thing that ever happened to me."

With a certain lasting impact: Even conceding he could have chosen his words better when he said, "It made my career to come to Atlanta," Gonzalez bristled at what he considered an overreaction in Kansas City and said no one was going to "bully me ... into thinking I did something wrong."

'IT'S ALL UP TO ME'

During his sophomore year as a two-sport athlete at the University of California in Berkeley, Gonzalez's 10 catches for 150 yards were offset by a fumble in Cal's 29-24 loss to rival Stanford.

He cried uncontrollably after the game and vowed never to fumble again. (In fact, he fumbled just six times in his NFL career and only once in his final 15 seasons.)

But the results came only after deeper soul-searching alone one night in the Berkeley Hills watching planes take off from Oakland.

He thought about how he was squandering his life by doing "what most lost college students do — partying and partaking in every activity you could think of and not really going to class that much."

He gazed at the planes and pictured where they were going, envisioning himself on various flights. One could be taking him home "with nothing to do — no career, no degree, no nothing, and forget about pro sports."

Or, he thought, "I can be on that plane going somewhere great, somewhere exotic ... It's all up to me."

Literally the next day, he said, snapping his fingers once more, his partying days were behind him and his workouts urgent.

"Cold-turkey everything," he said. "My life radically changed."

He became an All-America football player the next season, helped Cal to a Sweet 16 berth in the NCAA men's basketball tournament and was drafted 13th overall by the Chiefs when president and general manager Carl Peterson traded up to get him.

But the ultimate change was yet to come.

RESOLVING TO BE GREAT

As a Chiefs reserve his rookie year, Gonzalez showed promise. But it was the failures of 1998 that proved vital in all to come next: Gonzalez had 59 catches ... but dropped 16 passes.

Tony Gonzalez spent 12 mostly stellar seasons in KC before being traded to Atlanta. He made the Pro Bowl a total of 14 times during his career. KC STAR FILE PHOTO

He remembers being benched and booed at home. His brother, from whom he became estranged after his football career, sent him a letter simply saying, "I don't know who you are out there, but that ain't the Tony I've seen. You are playing scared."

"Best thing that ever happened to me. It was like a huge wakeup call," he said. "Once again, you have a choice: I can do this and get beaten down by it, or I can change it and say I'll never go through that again.

"And in the process of saying I'll never go through that again, I better learn how not to ever go through that again."

On team charters, Gonzalez immersed himself in motivational books (he has hundreds now) and morphed into obsessiveness.

From a book on Vince Lombardi, he was struck by the realization that "You'll never be better than anybody else, consistently, if you're doing what everybody else is doing."

So he resolved to catch more practice passes than anyone ever. Maybe it was a million over his lifetime, he reckons, which would mean approximately 755 for every one of his 1,325 career receptions.

He'd try to get 100 catches before practice and then more on the sideline while others were taking a knee. After practice, in pads with helmet on and mouthpiece in, he'd look for 100-200 more.

"He was different," Peterson said. "He really, really wanted to be the very, very best, the very, very best that he could be."

That zealous preparation naturally enhanced his skill-set. But it also changed a fragile mindset that might mean one drop would lead to another, to thinking "don't drop it," instead of, "It's mine."

Some might apply another meaning to that phrase — that Gonzalez was more consumed with himself than the team.

But Green scoffed at that, saying that even if he wished Gonzalez hadn't lamented the change from a West Coast offense under Dick Vermeil, it never mattered "eye-to-eye" in the huddle or in Gonzalez's habits — including trying to become a better blocker.

In 2008, though, Gonzalez found himself in the crosshairs of some Chiefs fans. Peterson was on the verge of indulging Gonzalez's trade request when, for reasons that depend on one's perspective, the prospective deals fell through.

"He was very angry that I didn't do it," Peterson recalled. "I said, 'Tony, you're too valuable to this organization.' "

With his request and disappointment publicly known, Gonzalez incurred the ire of fans even as he enjoyed one of his best seasons: 96 receptions, 10 touchdowns and 1,058 yards. Today, Gonzalez, who has an ongoing relationship with Peterson, looks back and thinks, "I probably wouldn't have let me go, either."

But when Scott Pioli succeeded Peterson in 2009, he traded Gonzalez to Atlanta for a second-round pick.

Gonzalez found more success in Atlanta, but he remains most distinguished by his time in Kansas City. He still hold numerous position and Chiefs records and notably is second only to Hall of Famer Will Shields in career starts for the Chiefs (223-174) after missing just two games from 1998-2008.

All of which helps explain why Peterson remains proud he held the line and wasn't responsible for Gonzalez leaving.

And why Kansas City fans might go ahead and appreciate that Gonzalez is foremost a Chief ... however it all comes out on Saturday.

Changes in Chiefs' camp over ten-year period

Bailey Ketcham

August 8, 2019

News-Press Now

The Chiefs' training camp has now been at Missouri Western State University's campus for 10 years. In those years, many aspects have changed and some have stayed the same.

When it was first decided that camp was coming to Western, the university's administration had about a year to figure out the logistics and how they wanted the camp to look before the summer of 2010.

Brett Esley, Western associate athletic director, says they've had to add a lot in order to be a quality place for camp to take place.

The Griffon Indoor Sports Complex and grass practice fields were constructed before camp began. After a few years of camp, the renovation of the entire Spratt Stadium took place to create a better atmosphere.

"None of this was here before camp, which is unique to a lot of other training camps that take place on college campuses," Esley said. "In most cases, the infrastructure was already there and the NFL team has to adapt to that."

Another change to camp is the practice style. The Chiefs' used to practice twice a day, giving more opportunities for fans to see the team. In 2011 the NFL collective bargaining agreement changed that, meaning teams could only practice once a day.

"In the first three years they would have night practices in Spratt Stadium, which is not the case anymore," Esley said. "Those practices were always some of the highest attended."

In the past it was common for NFL teams to train against another team during camp. This only happened once during the 10 years, when the Arizona Cardinals came and trained against the Chiefs for a practice.

One of the constants throughout the years, Esley said, is the stream of fans coming to camp.

"Year one has always been our record year in attendance with 66,000," Esley said. "There were more chances for fans to come see the Chiefs in a practice setting in that year, that attendance was going to be hard to beat."

However, with the Chiefs' coming off of three AFC West Championships in a row and an MVP quarterback in Patrick Mahomes II, the attendance still remains high at camp today.

Esley says Western is fortunate to have had the Chiefs here for all 10 years and is thankful for how they've helped the campus evolve.

Chiefs Chairman & CEO Clark Hunt Named Chairman of the NFL's Finance Committee

Kansas City Chiefs Chairman & CEO Clark Hunt is accepting a new responsibility with the NFL.

Hunt was named the new chairman of the NFL's Finance Committee this week, replacing the late Bob McNair, who passed away in November. The influential committee oversees the league's economic decision-making and is considered one of the NFL's most prominent groups.

A member of the committee for seven years, Hunt will now chair the group that includes fellow owners Arthur Blank (Atlanta Falcons), Joel Glazer (Tampa Bay Buccaneers), Jim Irsay (Indianapolis Colts), Shad Khan (Jacksonville Jaguars), Robert Kraft (New England Patriots), Jeffrey Lurie (Philadelphia Eagles) and Steve Ross (Miami Dolphins).

Hunt will remain on the International Committee with Glazer taking over as chairman. Hunt is also a member of the league's Digital Media, Conduct, and Management Council Executive committees.

As Chairman of the International Committee for the past eight years, Hunt oversaw the expansion of the league's International Series from one annual game in London to five games scheduled to take place between London and Mexico City next season.

The NFL has utilized iconic Wembley Stadium and Twickenham Stadium in London as part of the International Series and, to further facilitate international contests across the pond, the league partnered with Tottenham Hotspur of the English Premier League on the development of a new, dual-sport stadium that will feature an artificial surface for NFL games and a retractable, natural grass surface for soccer matches.

In total, 24 games featuring 30 teams have taken place in London since the first contest back in 2007, while two games have occurred in Mexico City at historic Estadio Azteca.

Kansas City has been right in the middle of that growing international footprint, as the Chiefs played a regular-season game in London in 2015 and will venture beyond our nation's borders once again next season to play in Mexico City.

The sport's popularity has grown on the global scale under Hunt's leadership, and it's one of the many reasons that have earned him a new post with the league.

Chiefs' Players, Alumni and Staff Kick Off NFL Huddle for 100 Campaign with Service Activity at Local School

Matt McMullen

June 19, 2019

Chiefs.com

They painted the railings, applied new decals to the football helmets and shared some major news on Monday afternoon as Kansas City Chiefs Chairman & CEO Clark Hunt, the entire rookie class, Cheerleaders and dozens of staff members joined the "NFL Huddle for 100" campaign at nearby Lincoln College Prep.

The event launched the Chiefs' participation in the league-wide initiative, which hopes to inspire every fan to contribute 100 minutes of community service this year in honor of the NFL's centennial season.

"It's important for us as an organization throughout the year to get out and give back to the community that has given us so much," Hunt said. "Today was a chance for us to beautify the campus, to help the football coach put some stickers on their helmets and to have a good time making a contribution to the community."

And that was just the beginning.

Following the service activity, Hunt announced that the Chiefs – in partnership with the NFL Foundation, LISC and Kansas City Public Schools – were providing Lincoln College Prep with a $250,000 "Grassroots grant" to build a new football field at the school that fittingly will sit near the site of old Municipal Stadium, where the Chiefs played from 1963-71.

The new field will be complete this fall just in time for Lincoln College Prep's homecoming and Chiefs Legends Weekend, which will invite the greatest players in franchise history - many of whom played at Municipal Stadium - back to Kansas City.

"What we always try to say to the community is that we're all a part of this. As an organization, - from [Founder Lamar Hunt] early on - he made it imperative that we give back to this community," said Chiefs President Mark Donovan. "To give back in a way that provides an opportunity for more kids to play our game is really impactful, and to tie that into a weekend where we celebrate the greatest of the greatest in Chiefs' history and to do it on the site of Municipal Stadium, it just all ties together so well."

The Chiefs also unveiled a new historical marker for the site that will sit at the corner of 22nd and Brooklyn this fall in an effort to celebrate an integral part of the franchise's history, but the rookies in attendance were just as focused on the future.

After the cameras had left and much of the staff had returned to One Arrowhead Drive, the players each took the time to introduce themselves to Lincoln College Prep's football team.

They shared their stories, lent some advice and provided insight into what helped them reach the highest level.

"It's just really beneficial for the kids to see these guys out in the community," said Lincoln College Prep Head Coach William Lowe. "The Chiefs have been really involved with our program over the last few years, and for our kids to see the Chiefs out here doing things like this up close means a lot to them."

And the campaign is just getting started. Fans are encouraged to join the initiative by volunteering and logging their participation with the hashtag #ChiefsHuddlefor100 on Twitter. It's all just another chance to demonstrate the special relationship between this community and its football team.

A builder and his foundation: Steve Spagnuolo uses the Chiefs' OTA practices to cultivate defensive unity

Nate Taylor

May 30, 2019

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Some reconstruction projects need to start with the foundation. Steve Spagnuolo knows this.

Six voluntary practices are all Spagnuolo has after Thursday, which ended the second week of organized team activities for the Kansas City Chiefs. Spagnuolo, the Chiefs' new defensive coordinator, didn't waste time during Thursday's practice, which was open to reporters.

Every period for the defense featured Spagnuolo's detailed approach. He kept his usual single pencil behind his right ear, grabbing it often after a drill to write down a note or check off a task related to building the foundation of his defense. Spagnuolo kept moving. He rotated from the secondary's drill on technique to the linebackers' drill on footwork to the defensive linemen's hand placement after the snap of the ball.

Consider next week, the Chiefs' final practices before their mandatory minicamp in two weeks, to be Spagnuolo's last chance to ensure that every defender passes his midterm exam. The team's mandatory minicamp will be the start of his advanced courses.

"We haven't put a shoulder pad on," Spagnuolo said. "Luckily, (the NFL) let us put helmets on. Otherwise, we'd still be doing all those pajama practices we were doing earlier. It's a long process. It's been all about building a foundation of fundamentals, communication and believing in the system. It doesn't take a lot of talent to communicate and get aligned."

Perhaps the period Spagnuolo enjoyed most during Thursday's practice wasn't when the team scrimmaged. Instead, it was earlier, when he directed the defense as the metaphorical opposing quarterback. Under center or in the shotgun, Spagnuolo called out the offense's formation. With the help of younger defenders, who played the roles of offensive skill position players, Spagnuolo wanted to see how his projected starters communicated in adjusting toward their proper alignment.

Spagnuolo then increased the speed of the drill. What happens in nickel coverage if a receiver motions across the formation? What word does the defense shout once the offense goes into a trips formation? How fast can one subpackage replace another if the offense is in no-huddle?

"I can see things in front of me like the quarterback sees it, plus I have a little bit of fun," Spagnuolo said. "I can make myself feel young in some ways. I've seen a lot of things, and those particular periods during practice are all mental. I'm looking to see how fast they can think. If I can keep it going fast, they think a little faster and hopefully, it carries over into the game."

But Spagnuolo is quick to mention that his comfort level at this point in the offseason is a credit to the work of his assistants, the men he persuaded in February to work with him again.

Defensive backs assistant Sam Madison, a former cornerback who played under Spagnuolo with the New York Giants, barked instructions throughout practice, always finding a way for the secondary to improve. Linebackers assistant Matt House has been a calm teacher. Brendan Daly, the defensive line assistant, is a vocal motivator.

"The energy within the defense, from what I've seen, everybody is excited," outside linebacker Darron Lee said last week. "But everyone is patient. That's what you like to see out of a new group of guys. I heard about (Spagnuolo) when he was with the Giants, and seeing him even as I was growing up as a kid, he's being patient with me."

At this stage, nothing from the defense is perfect. Yet defensive end Frank Clark has relished the opportunity to learn from Spagnuolo and his assistants. Clark, a star defender known for his passion, has already been influenced by the passion of his new coaches.

"They want to win," Clark said last week. "Their mindset is just winning and competition and getting better. I feel like those are steps to where you want to become as a franchise, specifically on defense."

All coordinators, especially when they are installing a new system, must have the support and faith of their star players. The two players Spagnuolo called his leaders Thursday were Clark and safety Tyrann Mathieu, the Chiefs' biggest acquisitions this offseason.

Beyond their study habits, Clark and Mathieu have impressed Spagnuolo with how they finish their repetitions. Spagnuolo has seen how prideful Clark and Mathieu are about their craft. In last week's open practice, Clark surprised quarterback Patrick Mahomes with his intelligence and athleticism. In Thursday's practice, Mathieu frustrated Mahomes by recording pass breakups on consecutive snaps during the team's seven-on-seven scrimmage.

"Sometimes, it's really difficult in free agency in this league to find out the intangible thing, the things you can't see on film," Spagnuolo said of Clark and Mathieu. "You've got to dig deep. (General manager) Brett (Veach) and his staff did a great job, and we knew what we were getting. We haven't played a game yet, but from a standpoint 0f practice and how hard they work, it's been really, really good."

A talented rookie has already captivated Spagnuolo, too. For the first time since the NFL Draft, Spagnuolo revealed Thursday that he was seriously intrigued by safety Juan Thornhill during the Senior Bowl, the pre-draft event in January. Thornhill was the first defender the Chiefs selected in the draft, bringing him in with the 63rd overall pick in the second round.

Thornhill has performed better than expected. He played several snaps Thursday alongside Mathieu during the team's full scrimmage.

"He's been a guy that's picked up things pretty good," Spagnuolo said of Thornhill. "I like the way he plays, and I complimented him in a unit meeting the other day. I put a clip on of where I saw him bursting to the football, which is really important in what we're doing. So far so good."

With Spagnuolo's praise of the defense's excellent execution or its proper adjustment also comes his responsibility to correct a mistake when one occurs. The consistency Spagnuolo seeks has yet to arrive. He has responded with consistency in another way: by giving face-to-face attention to his players.

"If you have a teaching moment and you have an opportunity to teach them something, then I think it just sinks in a little bit more if it's one-to-one than trying to yell over the music (from a distance)," Spagnuolo said. "I've kind of always done it like that."

How Andy Reid led the Chiefs from their darkest moment to one of their brightest

Sam Mellinger

September 5, 2019

KC Star

The most dysfunctional, ugly and tragic season in their professional lives had just ended in an appropriately non-competitive loss in Denver. Afterward, in his post-game news conference, the dazed head coach had no coherent response when asked why he should keep his job.

The 2012 Chiefs won just two games. They did not so much as hold a lead until their ninth game. A starting linebacker murdered the mother of their child, then drove to the practice facility and shot himself in the head with his bosses watching in horror.

The players showered and dressed in silence that day in Denver. Heads shook. They walked slowly from the locker room to the bus and out into the uncertainty of their futures.

"Thanks for playing hard," Norma Hunt, the franchise founder's widow, told many of them individually. "We have a lot to look forward to."

A few weeks later, punter Dustin Colquitt worked out alone at the Chiefs' practice facility. He'd been selected to the Pro Bowl and kicked through his preparation. A staffer approached. The new head coach wanted a word. Don't interrupt your work. Whenever you're done, walk into his office.

Colquitt liked that. The message came through clear. Work first, then we can get to know each other. He liked the meeting even more.

"Are you done with this city?" Reid said, according to Colquitt. "Or are you just done with what's transpired over the last four years?"

Colquitt answered quickly, and with certainty. "No, I love this city. I have too much going on. I don't want to start over."

Reid: "You don't have to. We want you here."

This is just one of a million moments that helped drag the Chiefs from their lowest point in history to now, perhaps their most anticipated season since Super Bowl IV.

Chiefs chairman Clark Hunt talked constantly of wanting stability. He used the Pittsburgh Steelers as the model, and for a while, that felt somewhat cruel. The Chiefs presented the ultimate picture of chaos: three head coaches in five years, in-fighting with the front office, distrust between the locker room and bosses.

Then came Hunt's finest moment. He blew up the only power hierarchy the team had ever known in an effort to promote more in-house cohesion, and then moved swiftly and decisively, out-maneuvering several other teams to hire Reid as his head coach.

The first bit of evidence that the Chiefs had steered away from the cliff's edge and back toward relevance came in Reid's first game as coach — a 28-2 win in Jacksonville so refreshing and encouraging that players literally sang their way into and danced their way around the post-game locker room.

Exactly six years to the day later, the Chiefs again open a season in Jacksonville. The questions have moved from whether Reid can save the franchise's dignity to whether he will deliver its first Super Bowl championship in 50 years.

This is the perfect moment to examine how the Chiefs got from there to here, through the eyes of five men who've been here the whole time: Reid, Colquitt, left tackle Eric Fisher, fullback Anthony Sherman and tight end Travis Kelce.

"Man, how did we get here?" Kelce said. "Back to Jacksonville, Week 1. It's luck of the draw, but I'm so fortunate to get stuck here with Andy Reid."

REID'S LEADERSHIP

A million reasons exist for the Chiefs' climb from the bottom to the precipice of the top. Most of them lead back to Reid, and we'll get into that soon, but no man walks alone.

The first thing Reid needed: buy-in. The strategy is multi-fold. Players describe him as stubbornly honest, always available and relentlessly committed to making them better.

"I haven't known anything different," said Sherman, among the first players acquired by Reid in Kansas City. "You know who he is, so let's go."

Reid's meeting with Colquitt is a good illustration of his leadership philosophy. You shouldn't be coaching down to anyone. These are grown men. Set boundaries, but if you respect them, they'll respect you. Some bosses are driven by ego. You probably know the type. It can be effective for a time, but eventually it is transparent — in a bad way.

The Chiefs had seen that, by the way. Several players came to see coach Todd Haley that way, before he was fired. General manager Scott Pioli, too. One-time Chiefs defensive coordinator Romeo Crennell, later promoted to head coach when Haley was ousted, is generally believed to be a good man with pure intentions, but even his relationships with players were often torpedoed by assistants.

In some ways, then, it's possible to think of the situation Reid inherited as destined for one of two directions. The players could have been so thoroughly burned out and mentally drained that they could trust no one in the building again, or so starved for success that they wrapped their arms around the new direction. That particular locker room had been beaten down, but it retained its pride.

"It's tough to even look back and even remember how things were, and you don't want to," said Colquitt, who has been a Chief longer than any other current player, coach or executive. "It's cut and dried. You know where you stand. There's no hidden agenda or surprises. He wants us to work, get better, be men, don't argue about trivial stuff that doesn't make us sharpen each other.

"Everything is on the forefront. These things can hurt us, and these things are great for our chemistry. We're going to stick with the things that are great for our chemistry."

Quickly, game-planning meetings that used to be full of friction and passive-aggressive signals became united. If you had something to offer, do it. The players quickly learned to trust that nobody would put anyone else in a bad spot.

Coaches talk about distractions so often it is perhaps the sport's most overused cliche. But they don't just mean outside noise. They mean clearing out anything that isn't helping push the team forward, including and especially petty in-house disagreements based more on ego or self-interest than the greater good.

Starting in 2013, the Chiefs operated with clear minds. Ask Colquitt if that was new.

"Absolutely," he said. "I would say there's no conflict now."

The difference could not be more stark, and by now the pattern has exposed itself. The Chiefs' culture change from 2012 is about a change in personality and style from the previous leadership group to Reid.

Where insecurity and distrust once spread, there is now confidence and cohesion. Where the head coach was once hired after two years as an offensive coordinator, there is now a man with 207 wins, including the playoffs, over 20 seasons.

SETTING EXPECTATIONS

The message is the same, whether it's told by guys who used to play for Reid, still play for Reid, have coached with Reid — or are Reid.

Be honest. Communicate. Be trustworthy. Work hard. Set high expectations, and help your coaches and players reach them.

"Whatever they throw out on the table, maybe I can help it or I can't help it, but I'm going to give them an honest answer," Reid said. "If I need to find something out that I don't know, I'll look into that. If we're serving Mahomes flakes and they don't want them, I'll go figure it out, right? It can be that simple.

"And it's not going to leave that room. I'm not going to hold a grudge if it's something I don't agree with. Just get it out of there, and then it works out OK. Then there's a trust that builds up."

Isn't that what all coaches should do? All leaders? Of course it is, but conversations over the years with various players with experience in multiple organizations reveals a generally similar hangup: The pressure of the NFL exposes the slightest faults.

A coach without full confidence might not fully share credit. He might work harder to gain trust and credibility than he does earning it.

This isn't simply about Reid, either. Assistants matter, and more than a quarter of the league's teams are coached by Reid or a former Reid assistant. That's not an accident.

"I'm not afraid to hire guys that are intelligent," Reid said. "Sometimes people get nervous (their assistants are) going to take over for you, or engulf you, impress more than you impress. The ego, or whatever you want to say. I don't worry about all that. I just want to find the best guys that love the game, and I don't have to worry about off the field (problems)."

The result is a culture that those involved in have consistently described as pure, together and focused on the same things.

Reid's teams in Kansas City have started 9-0 and 1-5, and Colquitt is among the players who swear the message stayed consistent. That builds trust, especially when the most important factor exists — that players believe the coach is helping them succeed.

"We get a lot of guys coming from other places and we have a special thing going here," Fisher said. "I don't think every locker room around the league is as tight as we have here. We have a core group of guys who've been around a while and know in and out what coach Reid expects of us, and we can kind of lead the newer guys on what's expected on a daily basis."

One more thing that keeps coming up in these conversations: fun. Reid's monotone, saynothing news conferences belie his true self. He is wickedly funny, with a sharp and quick and often self-deprecating sense of humor.

He has developed the people skills required to lead 53 players and a coaching staff, everyone with different wants and priorities. The NFL is a brutal business, and when teams lose fun, they always lose games.

Reid's Chiefs prioritize fun. That's easier now, too, with a quarterback who makes nothing impossible leading what could be one of the greatest offenses of all time.

"I think what was missing a little before this coaching staff walked in the building is joy," Colquitt said. "He's happy to wake up, happy to come to the office and happy that God has given him so many creative blessings. He joyfully comes to work and is thankful for what shoes he fills. That rubs off."

The results are there. A franchise without direction is now surgically focused. A franchise that was rocked by instability has made the playoffs five times and had a winning record in each of Reid's six seasons.

The transformation is thorough. All that's left is to see if the Chiefs can complete the journey from worst example of the NFL to the best.

Before this Chiefs rookie bought Mom a house, he nursed her through brain-tumor scare

Brooke Pryor July 28, 2019 KC Star

From the time he was a kid, Mecole Hardman promised his parents he'd buy them anything he could when he became a professional football player.

Houses, Range Rovers, anything and everything to show his appreciation for their support.

Hardman's first opportunity to fulfill that promise came when the Chiefs selected him with the No. 56 overall draft pick earlier this year.

Wooed by his speed and his prospects as a returner, the Chiefs traded up in the second round to nab the University of Georgia wide receiver..

Finally, Hardman had the resources to make a grand gesture.

Just a couple weeks before training camp he presented Danyell Hardman with the keys to a new home.

He announced his big purchase with a tweet and a video, one that now has over a million views on Twitter.

In his tweet, Mecole said it was his turn to take care of his mom now.

But the truth is Hardman started helping his mom long before he unveiled her new home.

Six years ago, doctors removed a tumor the size of an apple from Danyell's brain.

The pair had a close relationship before the tumor and the surgeries, but that ordeal formed an unbreakable bond between mother and son.

"That's when he became a mama's boy," Danyell said. "Because he was never a mama's boy. He was always up under his daddy. He was a daddy's boy 24/7. I think after that, that's when he really became a mama's boy."

AN UNEXPECTED DIAGNOSIS

Danyell Hardman bent down to square her putter with the ball on a stretch of green turf in Greenville, South Carolina.

It was March 2013, and the family had traveled about an hour to celebrate Mecole's 15th birthday with a couple rounds of putt-putt.

As she looked down to swing, Danyell felt something was wrong. She was overcome with dizziness, her sense of smell altered.

This was different from the headaches that had plagued her for the better part of two years, diagnosed by the doctors as chronic sinus infections.

"I think when you have headaches so long, you get used to the pain," she said. "And that's what happened. I got so accustomed to it that I just was dealing with it."

The episode at the putt-putt course convinced her to see a doctor again. This time, the diagnosis wasn't a sinus infection.

It was a meningioma, a rare, slow-growing benign tumor located near the middle of her head.

The first time it showed up on a CAT scan, Danyell's tumor looked to be the size of a golf ball.

An MRI showed it might be a little bigger, changing the doctors' initial plans to remove it through her nose.

But when surgeons opened Danyell's head in May 2013, they were shocked at what they saw.

The tumor was the size of an apple, so large it was pushing her brain against the back of her skull.

"They're not cancerous or anything, but they affect a lot of things, like your sight, sense of smell," Danyell said. "The doctors didn't think I'd be able to see again or smell again. It caused me to have a couple of seizures."

The removal process took multiple surgeries, including one in July 2013 to replace the part of her skull removed in the initial surgery. She had to wait months for the swelling in her brain to go down to have the second surgery. Mecole was right by her side, comforting his mom throughout the surgeries and keeping her company in the hospital.

"When you go through a situation like that, it's kind of hard because you're thinking about all the worst thing that can happen," Mecole said. "It's hard to think positive in situations like that. But all I remember, just hoping she'd get better and hope she'd be OK."

The experience also led to Mecole choosing Georgia over other suitors to stay close to his mom.

"He did not want to leave," Danyell said. "I think that put a different aspect of life to work harder for something when I went through all of that."

Avoiding doctors' worst fears about potential permanent damage to her senses, Danyell felt her recovery was speeding along.

She felt so good after the July skull surgery, she stopped taking her anti-seizure medication.

BECOMING A MAMA'S BOY

Danyell remembers waking up in an ambulance.

She had been driving back from Athens with her mother in the passenger's seat after the July surgery when her thoughts became jumbled. Her sentences became nonsensical.

Then she got quiet.

Her hands gripped the steering wheel and her foot mashed the accelerator.

As their car swerved all over the winding road, Danyell's mother tried desperately to pry her daughter's hands off the steering wheel. When she couldn't wrestle the wheel away, she prayed.

When Danyell's mom looked up, the car was on the side of the road with an ambulance behind it.

Danyell doesn't remember anything after her thoughts started to run together, and it wasn't until recently that her mom told her the full story of that afternoon.

"I didn't know who I was for a while, about six hours or so," Danyell said, describing waking up in the ambulance.

She found out later that she had suffered a seizure, one that occurred partly because she stopped taking her medication. Doctors told her to stop driving for three months while her brain continued to heal.

That's when Mecole, new to driving, took over as his mom's chauffeur.

With his siblings off at school and living across the country, Mecole became his mom's go-to helper. He took her to the grocery store, to work and all over town to run errands.

"He helped out a lot," Danyell said. "He really did because he was really the only one that was here."

Their arrangement was beneficial for both son and mother. He got driving experience and someone to talk to, and she had a way to get where she needed to go.

"Driving her around, she had to listen to me a lot," Mecole said. "It was fun being the bigger person in the situation. I had no problem with it."

The pair were close before Mecole drove Danyell around, but this strengthened their bond even more.

A NEW HOME FOR THE HARDMANS

The family started looking at new houses around the time Mecole decided he wouldn't return to Georgia for another year.

With 950 receiving yards, 14 total touchdowns and a handful of All-America honors for his kick-return abilities, Hardman was ready to make the jump to the NFL after his junior season.

The first time Mecole's parents toured their new house, there was another family there looking around, too. They assumed it would be off the market before they could make an offer, so they moved on.

But weeks later, Mecole Sr. told his wife that was their house. He just had a feeling.

So the couple called the real estate agent back. The house hadn't been purchased. They took another tour, and the couple agreed it was perfect for their family.

Then Mecole told his mom he wanted to wait until his second contract to buy the house and would instead upgrade their family home, doing things like replacing the old carpet.

But that was just to throw her off the scent.

Danyell didn't know that behind the scenes, Mecole was purchasing the home and arranging a major surprise for his mom.

Shortly before he reported for camp, Mecole loaded his family into a van and told his mom they were going bowling. Just before they reached the house, he slipped a blindfold over her eyes.

Not only did Hardman gift his mom the house, he also had another surprise for his dad delivered to the Hardmans' new home: a 2019 black Dodge Challenger with customized red leather seats.

"That's just been something that he's always wanted to do as a kid," Danyell said. "To show his mom and dad that he appreciates everything they've done for him."

Height Can't Measure Heart: Chiefs' Rookie Tailback Darwin Thompson is Determined to Prove He Belongs

Matt McMullen

May 5, 2019

Chiefs.com

He stands at just five-foot-eight-inches tall, but make no mistake, Kansas City Chiefs' rookie tailback Darwin Thompson will not be overlooked.

After all, he's been beating the odds his entire life.

Picked with the final selection of the sixth round in the 2019 NFL Draft last weekend, Thompson has had to prove himself at every turn – from junior college to his one season at Utah State in 2018 – and even back in high school.

"My junior year of high school, the kids told me that I couldn't be a running back because I was too slow and not big enough. After that year, it just never left me," said Thompson, who has less than five percent body fat on his 200-pound frame. "Everybody always asks me how I got my trap [muscles]. It was that one year of high school, I just went crazy on the traps and they never left."

Indeed, it only takes a quick glance to notice Thompson's solid stature. When others questioned his height, he responded the only way he knew how.

"I'm five-foot-eight, so I have to make up for my height somewhere, and I do that in the weight room," Thompson explained. "I think being strong in your lower half and your core is [important]. Look at [Saints' tailback] Alvin Kamara. You can see some of the things he does as far as training and core work - it just starts in the weight room - and eventually, you have to translate that to the field."

It certainly translated for Thompson, who emerged as a star out of the backfield at Jenks High School in Oklahoma. He watched guys like Adrian Peterson, DeMarco Murray and Marshawn Lynch while emulating the work ethic of his cousin – or his uncle, as Thompson calls him – David Thompson, who played football at Oklahoma State and spent three seasons in the NFL.

"If you see my uncle David and you see his body, you'll see where it comes from," Thompson said jokingly.

But despite earning the praise of the local media in Tulsa, the scholarships didn't follow suit. He eventually landed at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, and even then – despite Thompson's constant results - the doubters made their presence known.

"Once I got into junior college, people would say I couldn't do it and this and that or I was too slow," Thompson recalled. "After that, I really created something where nobody was going to stop me now."

And nobody has.

Thompson racked up the second-most rushing yards (2,420) in school history at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M before transferring to Utah State in 2018, where he just did more of the same, rushing for 1,044 yards and 14 touchdowns.

He averaged 6.8 yards per carry – the 13th-best mark in the nation – and earned each and every one of them, evading 48 tackles while picking up 765 yards after first contact, per Pro Football Focus.

In fact, Thompson's height has even proven to be an advantage in amassing those eye-popping numbers

"I don't have much to tackle, so I make a lot of people miss," Thompson said. "As they say, they can't tackle me in a phone booth. It's a blessing in disguise."

It was those overwhelming results – in addition to his chiseled physique – that prompted Kansas City to invite Thompson in for a top-30 visit during the pre-draft process.

"You talk about star-struck," Thompson recalled. "When I met Coach Reid, I was like, 'Man, this is a Hall of Fame coach.' Just to be in his system and to see what he's done with other guys at the running back position, it's the perfect situation."

And while he had been overlooked at every stage of his career, when the draft rolled around last month, the Chiefs were not about to make the same mistake.

"He's not the biggest guy, but he's rocked up. He's 200 pounds and kind of looks like a body builder with his shirt off," said General Manager Brett Veach last week. "He has great contact balance...it's really remarkable to see him always keep the ball forward and he's always finishing runs moving forward. He's tough and he can do some things out of the backfield. I think Coach Reid and the offensive staff are going to have a lot of fun with him."

Of course, the work has just begun. Thompson is one of 72 players competing in Chiefs' Rookie Minicamp this weekend with the goal of eventually making Kansas City's roster come August.

That's no easy task, but if his history has demonstrated anything, Thompson is certainly up for the challenge.

And after a lifetime of beating the odds, he's not alone.

"I'll always keep that chip on my shoulder, but I don't do it so much for people that doubt me – it's more for the people that are inspired by me," Thompson said. "It's much more than just about me now. I have kids that look up to me from my city, and I'm happy to represent them."

Chiefs rookie Mecole Hardman is more than a football player to special needs community

Brooke Pryor June 27, 2019 KC Star

Chrystal Thomas was never surprised when she saw Mecole Hardman free her students from the wires and tubes that tethered them to a mostly sedentary existence.

It didn't surprise her to see Hardman ease into one of her classroom's rocking chairs and pull one of her students up with him.

She smiles now, retelling the stories of those little moments.

Few students at Elbert County Middle School have interacted with her special needs students with such ease and confidence.

But Hardman was a natural, displaying his gift for working with the special needs community since he began escorting them at the county's yearly pageant as a sixth grader.

Hardman is a lot of things to a lot of people.

Son, brother, football star, wide receiver, Chiefs second-round draft pick.

To the special needs students in Elbert County, Georgia, though, Mecole Hardman is just their friend.

Through his work with Friends Helping Friends, a local organization that partners students with their special needs counterparts, Hardman has formed a lifelong bond with a group of people who don't care that he became the Chiefs' first draft pick a couple months ago. Or that he can fly, with a 4.33-second time in the 40-yard dash. Or that he'll be sharing a field with the NFL MVP this fall.

They care that he cares about them. That he spent nearly all of his free afternoons with them, rocking them in rocking chairs or going with them on field trips to Turner Field and the Fox Theater.

While most people define Hardman for what he can do on a field, the special needs community in Elbert County knows him best for what he does off of it — and that's what matters most.

"Those kids, they don't see me as Mecole the football guy: 'Oh, he's in the league,' or, 'He's doing good,'" Hardman said. "They just see me as Mecole, the loving guy. They just see me for me, as myself."

KENDRA AND BEKKAH

Falling in love with Kendra Turman was easy.

A girl about Hardman's age with a big smile and a word for everyone, Kendra was a magnetic personality in Thomas' class for students with moderate disabilities at Elbert County Middle School.

The two became fast friends, and it didn't take long for Kendra to develop her own term of endearment for Hardman: 'friancee.'

A mashup of friend and fiancee, the term elicited a big smile from Hardman as he talked about her.

"We always have a little game," Hardman said. "She'd be like talking to other people, so I'd be like, 'So you're cheating on me right now?' She's like 'Nooo, not cheating on you.' It's all love."

His friendship and work with Turman made Hardman even more passionate about working with those with special needs.

"She was like my baby," Hardman said. "When I started falling in love with her, I started falling in love with all the kids. That's when I really started taking it seriously."

Through his friendship with Kendra and the other kids in Thomas' class, Hardman was forced to grow up and mature in ways he never could have predicted.

In eighth grade, Kendra's best friend, Bekkah, died unexpectedly. A social butterfly like Kendra, the young woman with Down syndrome passed during the middle of a school day.

Just like that, she was gone.

Though he didn't want to go, Hardman attended the memorial service with the rest of the class.

Danyell Hardman saw something change in her son that day.

"He took that pretty hard," Hardman's mom said. "We took the kids to the funeral home to visit and that did something to him because he was so close to them.

"He didn't really say it, but you could see it on his face. He just wanted to go and support the other kids."

A couple years later, Hardman's life was shaken by another serious situation, this one involving Kendra.

Visiting hospitals made Hardman uneasy, and he tried to avoid them at all costs. But all that changed when his friend was admitted.

Hardman made the hour and a half journey south to visit her at the Augusta, Georgia facility one afternoon, mentally preparing the whole way to see a depleted version of his friend. She hadn't opened her eyes in days and was nearly motionless in the hospital bed.

But when Hardman walked in the room, Kendra opened her eyes and smiled. She sat up in the bed. These things were crucial steps toward her eventual recovery.

"She was trying to give up," said Traci Montgomery, Kendra's mom. "But with him being there, coming to see her and all the other kids that came with him, it meant a lot. Because that meant she was trying to fight to see him. It really meant a lot to me."

'THIS GUY, HE'S JUST DIFFERENT'

Hardman's gift for working with special needs students was apparent even during his earliest days at Elbert County Middle School.

Thomas saw Hardman and the way he interacted with her students, always making time to talk with them or make them laugh.

The official Friends Helping Friends Club was in its infancy at the high school, and a middle school branch was available to eighth graders. Though Hardman was only in sixth grade, Thomas knew he needed to be involved. So she went to Sandy Adams, one of the club's founders, and made her case.

"This guy, he's just different," Adams remembers Thomas telling her. "He wants to be involved with our kids. He's a super athlete. He's a great role model."

That spring, Hardman volunteered with the annual pageant, escorting some of Thomas' students and hanging out with them in the classroom while they waited for their turn to strut their stuff in the school's auditorium.

"We never do that," Adams said of allowing sixth graders to volunteer with the special needs class. "But he was an exception: He has so much energy. You can tell when our children with special needs love someone, trust someone. When they walk in the room, their eyes light up, their hands go up, they reach for them, they want to be around them.

"Mecole is that person. It started around sixth grade, and it has not stopped."

After that year, Hardman became more and more involved with the club. He became Thomas' official classroom helper in the eighth grade and was even named an officer of the club once he reached high school.

"A lot of the other guys would say, 'Oh the kids don't want us, they just want Mecole. He's a football star,'" Thomas said. "And we were like, 'No, they don't know he's a football star.' He's just a guy that comes in and plays with them no matter what. That was just his personality."

As demanding as his football schedule was, he always made time to volunteer with the students. He attended plays with them at Atlanta's Fox Theater and went along to Braves games. Even as he moved on to Georgia for his college career, Hardman made sure a stop at the Friends Helping Friends camps was included in his summer plans.

And if he couldn't get to a camp, he still stopped by the schools to see his friends.

"He was one of the ones who stood out from everybody else," Adams said, "because he wanted to participate in absolutely everything that we did because he truly loved the kids."

A 'TRUE FRIEND'

During Hardman's freshman season at Elbert County High, a couple members of Thomas' class attended one of his football games.

They sat in the stands with a homemade sign that proudly proclaimed, "No. 4, We love our boy in blue!"

He stayed late afterward, making sure he took pictures with everyone who came to support him — including his group of friends.

The game was important, but this, this was more important than any outcome on the field.

That moment, and all the moments Hardman spent with Friends Helping Friends, remains close to his heart. Those experiences ground him as his life lurches forward at breakneck speed and give him a perspective not many 21-year-olds possess.

"I think we're so spoiled that it actually makes you look at it and be like, all right, I need to be thankful for what I've got," Hardman said. "I like to give back to them, and I fall in love with them every time I see them. It's always smiles. I never have a bad day with them. Even when they bad, it's always good to be with them and I love to be around them."

As the Chiefs' first selection of the 2019 NFL Draft, Hardman enters his professional career with a mountain of expectations to climb.

He's expected to be a key member of a high-powered offense and a game-changing special teams unit.

So many people want him, need him to be so many things.

But the label that matters most to him is the one assigned by the kids in Elbert County.

"Our kids don't understand who Mecole has become," Adams said. "They know who Mecole is, and always has been, to them, which is their friend.

"Their true friend."

(Frank Clark)

Former Glenville and current NFL star defensive lineman Frank Clark returns to Cleveland to put on free youth football camp

Cameron Fields

July 13, 2019

Cleveland.com

CLEVELAND, Ohio – Frank Clark stood on the field in front of about 300 children at Robert Bump Taylor Field Saturday morning. He wore a red camp T-shirt with his name on it, and though the heat hadn't come just yet, he sported a bucket hat.

Clark was about to start his first football camp since he was drafted by the Seattle Seahawks in 2015. He graduated from Glenville High School in 2011, and he was back in the city to help his community.

"No matter what nobody tell you, just keep on going, keep on running through the wall," Clark said to the children. "You keep on fighting and you gonna get to where you want to be in life."

Clark hosted a free football camp for boys and girls grades 1-8. He personally funded the camp, and participants received instruction in various drills from him and local coaches. Each camper also was given an autographed card from Clark.

A defensive end preparing for his first season with the Kansas City Chiefs, Clark is passionate about doing what he can to help his city and the community's youth.

"I said I wanted to be able to give them a free camp until the day I die," Clark said. "That's one of my goals, and I'm going to continue to do that."

Clark is one of the highest-paid defensive ends in the NFL, as he signed a five-year, $105.5 million contract with the Chiefs after he was traded to the team in April. The contract comes with $63.5 million guaranteed.

Last season Clark ranked seventh in the NFL in sacks (13), and his 32 sacks over the past three seasons is ninth among active players. He has 35 career sacks.

But Clark knows what it's like to grow up in the inner city. He was homeless for parts of his childhood in South Central Los Angeles, and moved to Cleveland when he was 12. He's lived in both worlds, and that's why he wanted to give families in his community an opportunity to have fun for a few hours.

"You gotta be able to show them it's not all about the money," Clark said. "Your parents don't gotta pay $200, $300, $400 for a camp for a few hours for your kids. I understand everybody don't got that."

Parents watched their kids from the bleachers or stood near the field. Once it was time for foot races in various age groups, they congregated around the endzone to support their children as they crossed the finish line.

Kenyatta Shirley owns a daycare, and she made the 90-minute drive from Mansfield, bringing her two second-grade boys, David and Prince Phillips. Shirley heard about the camp from one of her friends. Her sons like football and basketball, and she's appreciative of how Clark interacted with the campers.

"He's not too high that he can't still interact with them, that's real humble," Shirley said.

Clark started the camp showing his spin technique for coming off the line, and throughout the camp, he talked with children as they worked through drills.

Courtney Waites, a local truck driver, brought sons Kyle and Christian, who are entering the eighth and first grades, respectively. Much like Shirley, Waites liked that Clark was fully engaged.

"He's definitely very in tune with all the kids here," Waites said.

Near the end of the camp, the campers played a couple rounds of games, and the camp finished with some of the kids dancing to "Suge" by rapper DaBaby. For lunch, Chipotle was provided, along with fruit snacks and water.

Clark said it was important to be a positive pillar in the community. He wants to make a difference in young lives and putting on the camp is part of that.

He wants children to learn positive messages, hoping what children learn at the camp can keep their minds off being in the streets.

"You can learn just some good habits from being out here," Clark said. "They can take something away from that. That's when I can rest and I can know we had a great day at this camp."

Chiefs receiver Demarcus Robinson takes a different kind of flight: with Blue Angels

Brooke Pryor July 5, 2019 KC Star

When Demarcus Robinson was presented with the opportunity to ride along with the famed Blue Angels, he didn't have to think twice.

"Automatic yes," the Chiefs wide receiver said Friday morning after completing an hour-long flight with the elite Navy demonstration squad at the Wheeler Downtown Airport.

Because Robinson loves rollercoasters and isn't afraid of heights, the decision to fly 15,000 feet in the air at speeds of up to 700 mph was an easy one. It also gave him a chance to have a little fun before training camp later this month.

"Just to get your mind off of things and just sit back and kind of relax and get out and do some things that are fun and not all about business sometimes," Robinson said, describing the benefit of doing events like ridealong. "Sometimes it's good to get out and fly planes, I guess."

Before he took off with Lieutenant Cary Rickoff, Robinson went through a 30-minute crash course in learning the mechanics of the plane and how to deal with the rapidly changing G-forces. He learned breathing techniques — called a Hick maneuver — that would keep him from passing out when the G-forces get really high.

After the course, Robinson got strapped into the back seat of the two-seater plane and took off down the runway. Initially, the plane hovered low, flying parallel with the ground under the gray, rainy skies. As soon as he reached the end of the pavement, Rickoff pulled the sticks straight back and accelerated into the clouds at a 45-degree angle.

Once airborne, Robinson's pre-flight learning came in handy.

"I was doing it when I don't think I even had to do it," Robinson said of the Hick maneuver breathing. "I was doing everything to try and stay awake and not pass out."

Not only did Robinson not pass out, he also didn't throw up during the ride.

He did, however, get a good workout without having to go to the gym.

"You have to strain your legs a little when you're going through the Gs and your G level is raising, as they call it in the plane," Robinson said. "You have to tighten your core and put some pressure on your core. Your legs and your hammies will be a little tight after."

With training camp less than three weeks away, Robinson's offseason is rapidly coming to a close. He's already working out with quarterback Patrick Mahomes, including a session that also included Gehrig Dieter on Thursday. And, Robinson said, Mahomes looks pretty good.

"Everything is even better," he said. "Even smarter, even quicker, even more precise."

The Chiefs' master chef: Mitchell Schwartz spends his offseason sharing his passion for cooking

Nate Taylor

July 5, 2019

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Zak Madelen calls himself a decent cook. In the midst of trying the ketogenic diet in February, Madelen was always searching for interesting recipes. A few of his favorite meals were recommended to him through Twitter from one of his favorite professional athletes: Kansas City Chiefs right tackle Mitchell Schwartz.

Eleven days after the Chiefs' season ended, Schwartz began "Mitch in the Kitch," a cooking blog, to share his most delicious dishes with fans.

Madelen, an algebra teacher at Lincoln College Preparatory Academy, saw that Schwartz promoted his blog on Twitter and became intrigued once he saw the second recipe: zucchininoodle chicken enchiladas.

"I figured, 'Why not check it out?" said Madelen, who is also the offensive line assistant at Lincoln Prep. "Finding recipes from one of the Chiefs' players, I thought that was especially awesome. A lot of his recipes are actually pretty good for keto. I always listen to his brother, Geoff, on his podcast. He always talks about how good a cook Mitch is."

Madelen, 29, and his girlfriend, Mandy Tomek, conduct their usual meal planning at the start of each week. Tomek, a physical therapist and athletic trainer, cooks most of the couple's meals, but Madelen took over the responsibility in February during his break in the academic calendar. Madelen followed Schwartz's directions for the enchiladas. He peeled the zucchini into strips, didn't add too much enchilada sauce and used nonfat Greek vogurt instead of sour cream.

Tomek saw and smelled Madelen's enchiladas and began asking questions. Did he find the recipe through PaleOMG? The Paleo Mom?

"When I told her I got it from the Chiefs' starting right tackle's website, she was like, 'What?!" Madelen said of Tomek's response. "She was surprised how good it tasted."

In a two-month stretch, Schwartz posted nine recipes on his blog. Each dish can be completed within an hour, and he has 385 subscribers who receive a notification when the next meal is posted. Sarah Bredeman, an author and the editor of Ant Colony Press, became a subscriber after her fiancé, Eli Waterman, a musician, recommended the blog.

Schwartz's hobby of cooking began around 2016, when he signed with the Chiefs after four seasons with the Cleveland Browns. Similar to how he learned football through coaching and studying his playbook, Schwartz sharpened his skills by watching hours of the Food Network. He tinkered with recipes, began chatting with chefs and was ecstatic when he used the Big Green Egg grill for the first time to cook two full slabs of ribs.

One reason Schwartz loves Chiefs fans is because of the alluring and scrumptious smells they produce from their cooking that greet him during his drive into Arrowhead Stadium for home games. With Kansas City known for its barbecue, Chiefs fans tailgate with grills filled with various cooked meats in almost every row in the parking lots surrounding the stadium. Schwartz realized that talking about food almost as often as football was another connection he had with fans.

"They obviously have an interest in how you play, but they're also interested in what you're doing in your personal life, and they want to get to know you better," Schwartz said of fans earlier this month.

"Typically, in most households, someone is cooking a meal, whether it's once a week or every night. Everyone has a vested interest in good food, so it's just a fun way to interact with people and to reach out. The response has been great."

The job of an NFL offensive lineman can be unglamorous. During games, Schwartz's biggest duty is protecting quarterback Patrick Mahomes, the NFL's reigning MVP. Schwartz's seasons are full of him battling the league's best pass-rushers in star players such as Denver's Von Miller, Los Angeles' Joey Bosa and Houston's J.J. Watt. Schwartz knows he has done his job well — beyond never missing a snap in his eight-year career — if fans don't hear his name during games.

Cooking, however, has allowed Schwartz to showcase more of his creativity.

In his blog, Schwartz explains why certain steps in the recipe are essential to the ones following. He shares which products he prefers — such as spicy chicken sausage from Whole Foods for his shrimp, chicken and sausage paella — for each meal. He tells the reader the compromises or alterations he and his wife, Brooke, have made from a traditional recipe.

"Everything is portion-controlled," Schwartz said. "Most dishes call for cheese or sour cream. We kind of just cut that out, and we find a better way to do it. Greek yogurt is a pretty good substitute for sour cream if you're looking for toppings for chili or other things. There's ways you can get the same flavors without all the fat."

One of Schwartz's most popular dishes on his blog is spicy shrimp fried rice. Schwartz and his wife used brown rice and cauliflower rice. They created the spice with garlic, cayenne pepper, garlic powder, paprika, chili powder and red pepper flakes.

"I did my normal shake of red pepper flake and my wife thought the dish ended up being a tad too spicy," Schwartz wrote in his blog. "Remember that the shrimp is seasoned with cayenne for heat, the rice will pick up remnants of the spice left in the pan, and also when you add the shrimp back. Try less than you think for the first time, then adjust up in future cooks as needed."

Schwartz posted a photo of the spicy shrimp fried rice on his Twitter account. The next day, Willie Roaf, a Hall of Fame left tackle, used his Twitter account to call his friend "Martha" Schwartz.

A few hours later, Madelen cooked the dish for himself and Tomek. The meal was so delicious that Madelen told Schwartz just that in their short Twitter exchange.

"I was trying to get a good picture to send him," said Madelen, who used his iPhone. "The shrimp one turned out looking halfway decent. The enchiladas tasted great, but I couldn't make them look good at all. Twitter is pretty cool in connecting fans and people in the community with people we never had access to before."

The Chiefs' video department visited Schwartz's home last season to get his perspective on perhaps his favorite meal growing up: pizza.

In the team's video of Schwartz, he explained how the flour and stretchy dough of the pizza he cooked can be comparable to training camp, in terms of the Chiefs needing to use that time to build a strong foundation. He said the crushed tomato sauce and fresh mozzarella symbolize the quality players on the team. The basil and slices of natural pepperoni, Schwartz said, remind him of the fun ways the Chiefs offense can be explosive in producing highlight plays and memorable touchdowns.

Inside the Chiefs' locker room, every player agrees that Schwartz is the undisputed cooking champion. He has cooked cheeseburgers for Mahomes and given plenty of recipes to other teammates.

One of Schwartz's favorite rituals is having the rest of the offensive linemen at his house in Overland Park, Kan., for a meal. Between the team's offseason workouts on the weekends, Schwartz has cooked different meats for his fellow linemen. Austin Reiter, the Chiefs' starting center, said the highlights of the gatherings were Schwartz cooking a 14-pound brisket that took close to 18 hours to perfect and steaks that were seasoned and grilled to perfection.

"It's the real deal," Reiter said earlier this month. "I think my favorite part was the steaks he cooked one night. I showed up when they were done. Perfect timing. I'm a medium-rare guy. They were excellent. Salt and pepper, I think, was all he had on there. I like it a little more on the plain side. I want to taste the good meat, and it was tender."

Are there leftovers after one of Schwartz's cookouts?

"No," Reiter said quickly.

In past years, Schwartz has seen his cooking have a positive impact on the interpersonal relationships among the Chiefs' offensive linemen. As the team's elder lineman, Schwartz understands food and engaging discussions can make the grind of a long season easier when teammates have a strong rapport with one another that is not solely tied to football.

"We have an excellent group of guys," Schwartz said of the 15 linemen on the Chiefs' roster. "We've got to work seamlessly with each other and we've got to make sure everything is flowing, so being able to have that much fun off the field together definitely makes things more fun when you're in the (Chiefs') building."

Throughout the summer, people have asked Schwartz if he'll write his own cookbook in the future. Schwartz thinks it's possible, perhaps after his NFL career is over and he can dedicate more time to his second craft.

His first book, which he wrote in 2016 with his brother and Seth Kaufman — titled "Eat My Schwartz: Our Story of NFL Football, Food, Family, and Faith" — has also deterred him a little.

"That didn't sell so well, so I'm sure there's copies available," Schwartz said with a big smile. "The blog has slowed down a little bit now that we've gotten back into football. I have a couple recipes in the back burner that I need to type out. I'll get back to it."

A gratifying part about cooking for Schwartz, alongside eating the meals and the praise he receives from fans of his recipes, is teaching people about his passion and sharing his methods.

When his NFL career started in 2012, Schwartz couldn't have imagined fans would attend events to see him cook. But last season, Schwartz gave people a cooking tutorial in October at the city's Jewish community center. He was one of the featured participants, along with Mahomes and star tight end Travis Kelce, to cook in the 'Que For a Cause event, a charity barbecue dinner to benefit the Lee Ann Britain Infant Development Center.

During the NFL Draft in late April, Schwartz grilled burgers for hundreds of the Chiefs' season-ticket members inside Arrowhead Stadium. Several fans took photos with Schwartz. They asked him for a few cooking tips, too.

"It gets a little toasty, but that's the fun of cooking," Schwartz said. "Whether it's my wife and making her a good meal or cooking for friends and family, you're doing something where you can make other people happy. It's definitely a good feeling."

CLEVELAND HEIGHTS, OH — One of Heights High's most famous alumni will give back to his hometown schools this week. Kansas City Chiefs tight end Travis Kelce's "Walk the Walk" fashion show fundraiser will be held July 19 at Red Space in Cleveland.

According to a spokesperson for Kelce, "Walk the Walk is a fashion benefit created by Travis Kelce to raise funds and awareness to give back to the city that raised him - Cleveland Heights."

"We're thrilled to be chosen to partner with Travis Kelce's Eighty-Seven and Running Foundation. As locals know, Kelce never misses the chance to remind a national audience where he's from and his pride in being a member of "Tiger Nation" as a 2008 graduate of Cleveland Heights High School and a member of the Distinguished Alumni Hall of Fame," said Julianna Johnston Senturia, executive director, Heights Schools Foundation.

Tickets are $80 for the event. Each ticket buys admission to a runway show, a silent auction, an after party with celebrity DJs and four drink tickets. Attendees must be 21 or older. The event's online ticket portal promises guests the chance to spend time with Kelce and his friends from Cleveland and Kansas City.

The proceeds from the event will go to Eight-Seven & Running, Kelce's charity, which is partnered with the Heights Foundation. The two groups work together on the school district's transportation needs.

"We're grateful that he is giving back to his hometown by increasing access to after schools programming. His Foundation is doing good work, and Heights Schools Foundation and the CHUH Schools District are proud to be a part of it," Johnston Senturia said.

Tickets can be purchased online.

Chiefs linebacker Anthony Hitchens shaped by life-altering decision made as a youth

Lynn Worthy

KC Star

For the record, Anthony Hitchens is not a robot. That needs to be stated for clarity's sake. Listen to enough of the praise from folks who admire the Chiefs linebacker's play, and you'll start to wonder if he came out of lab, a hybrid construction of flesh, nuts, bolts and the mental aptitude of a defensive coordinator designed and programmed to make tackles.

All football, all the time. Single-minded focus and intense preparation. That's the Hitchens most have heard about. Make no mistake, he's certainly driven and detail-oriented. That all shows up in his approach to the game — the copious note taking, constant film study and work ethic as well as a knack for raising the level of players around him.

There's more to Hitchens than that, however, and those traits didn't just develop when he put on pads. The game merely serves as the venue to display those elements of his personality. Football also provides the connective tissue for many of the people who helped foster and nurture him.

In particular, the game served as one of the initial bonds between Hitchens and an Ohio family that took him in when he was 12 and raised him as one of its own. Those people provided the structure Hitchens instinctively knew he coveted, but just hadn't previously experienced. Now, the 6-foot tall, 235-pound brick of a human being and fifth-year pro leans on those lessons daily.

"For me to get me through every day and every season and keep pushing to be a better player, it's just the way I got here," Hitchens said. "It was not a straight road. Obviously, it wasn't a straight road for a lot of people in all type of businesses.

"But just moving to another situation, getting to high school and almost breaking my back my (sophomore) year, then going to lowa and playing safety, switching to running back and then switching to linebacker — it's just like whenever I get in hard times, I just think about everything I did to get here. I think I got that discipline installed in me growing up."

THE ANDERSONS

Amy Anderson first remembers being aware of Anthony Hitchens during a visit to her son Zach's school in Lorain, Ohio. She'd been in the sixth-grade classroom and noticed a young man practically jumping off the walls. She turned to a teacher with the question, "Who is that kid?"

Zach and Anthony became best friends. When they started playing football, they were even more of a tandem with Zach at quarterback and Anthony at running back as the Emmitt Smith to Zach's Troy Aikman.

One Sunday, Zach invited Anthony to hang out and watch football. Anthony hopped on his bicycle and pedaled about a mile or two past the Andersons' home. After he backtracked and found the house, he ended up spending the night for the first of many times.

Amy regularly drove some of the boys home after football practice, and she noticed from time to time that Anthony was missing from the group. When she asked why, the other boys told her Anthony didn't show up for school that day.

Amy made it a point to invite Anthony to stay over at their house the next time she drove the boys home. Gradually, he began spending the night regularly during the school year. Anthony and Zach enjoyed hanging out together, and having Anthony in the house allowed Amy to be sure he'd get to school the following day.

"As parents, we just looked out for each other's kids," Amy said. "It wasn't in particular Anthony I was looking out for. There were parents that looked out for my kids. It's just a close-knit community. You got to know the kids your kids hung out with."

Amy and her husband, Brad, both knew Hitchens' mother, Norma. Brad had been a classmate and they both worked for a non-profit called the Neighborhood Alliance, which provided a childcare center, delivered hot meals to seniors, operated a shelter and senior center as well as worked to help homeless people find housing.

Without Hitchens' father, who was in prison and never involved in Anthony's life, Norma worked to support seven children in what Brad Anderson portrays as daunting and potentially discouraging circumstances in their small community about 30 miles outside of Cleveland.

Brad Anderson played high school football as a lineman but started working in a steel mill right after graduation. Other teammates ended up in trouble with the law.

"That's what they've been raised and shown to do" he said. "Anthony knew. It's kind of hard to believe that a kid 10 years old knew that he didn't want that lifestyle."

PART OF THE FAMILY

Brad and Amy Anderson discussed having four children when they were newlyweds. Amy said it was more Brad who insisted on that number more than she.

After Zach, they had just one more biological son, Chad, who's three years younger. Around the time Zach was in junior high, Brad and Amy became the legal guardians of a boy a few months older than Zach and Anthony named James Washington.

The summer going into the eighth-grade year for Anthony and Zach (James was going to be a freshman in high school), the boys appeared poised to be split up because Anthony's mom needed to move to an area where she could get subsidized housing. That meant he would go to Lorain High instead of Clearview High with his friends.

Mature beyond his years, Hitchens knew that the smaller high school, surrounded by his friends and under the supervision of the Andersons, would benefit him in the long run.

At the time, Hitchens wasn't thinking about football. Looking back, he likely would've gotten more attention if he'd played at Lorain, which faced more highly regarded competition. It had more than 1,700 students enrolled while Clearview had fewer than 500.

"I wanted to go to college," Hitchens said. "My best friend at the time was going to that school. I wanted to be close to him, and it was just living situations. My mom was on Section 8, living in a worse part of town than the other. Then she had to move even farther away because they didn't have Section 8 in the school district. It was better for me."

Moving in with the Andersons just made so much sense to Hitchens that he still speaks matterof-factly as he recounts how a 12-year-old made a life-altering decision. Amy Anderson said that had she had a daughter instead of two boys, she might have been hesitant to bring two boys into their house, but she and her husband hardly discussed Hitchens moving in permanently.

"We'd seen a young kid that was looking for a way out and just wanted to make something of himself," Brad Anderson said. "That was the honest to God's truth. Me and my wife, that's what we talked about."

Hitchens and Washington are black and the Andersons are white, but Amy insists she never heard any comments about the race of her boys. Both sides of their family treated all four the same, and the school never put up any roadblocks for her advocating for Washington or Hitchens as any parent might.

Amy Anderson recalled one year getting school clothes for all the boys and Hitchens asked why she did all the same things for him and Washington that she did for her biological children. Without a thought, Amy replied, "Because you're our kids too."

The Andersons never legally adopted Hitchens, and he remains close with his mother and bears her name in a tattoo on his left arm. But he also refers to Amy as his mother, Brad his father and Zach, Chad and Washington as his brothers.

At first, the four boys all slept in one room on a pair of bunk beds. Eventually, the Andersons added a living room, another bedroom, and a laundry room onto what was a modest two-bedroom home.

"A lot of people around here would say it's amazing what you guys did for those boys and this and that," Brad Anderson said. "... I always told (those people) they found us. This is how it was meant to be. Those boys meant as much to our family as we did to them."

STRUCTURE

Living with the Andersons came with some marked differences for Hitchens. Where he'd been largely independent and before, the Andersons ran a tight-yet-loving ship.

Amy Anderson required all the kids to do their homework when they got home before doing anything else. She'd been an active parent in school activities, and Brad Anderson grew up with several of the football coaches. Any missteps or transgressions — talk back to a teacher or a coach, skip a class, go to a party without permission — got back to the Andersons by the time the boys got home and they could expect to be grounded, lectured, punished or all of the above.

"If we couldn't get away with it at school, there's no way we're getting away with it at home," Hitchens said. "They're a very disciplined group. I've been in a household where there's just my mom, and sometimes she don't see everything. You can get away with some stuff. When there's two, one or the other is going to find out."

One early incident that let Hitchens know it was different came when he left one weekend and said he was staying with mother. The next day, Amy called Norma and realized her son didn't sleep there. He stayed with a cousin instead.

After a tearful Amy finally tracked Hitchens down and brought him home, Brad read him the riot act and boiled the message down to this: "Listen, the lifestyle of you just going and doing as you wanted to before is over."

From that point on, Hitchens embraced the discipline the Andersons provided. In certain regards it stoked the already extraordinary attention to detail coaches now rave about.

Even as a youth, Hitchens wanted certain things done "just so," as Brad and Amy describe it. His and Chad's room had to be kept a certain way, his clothes folded just right, his homework double- and triple-checked. He heeded the Andersons' message about academics: that the letter grade he received wasn't as important as whether he'd put in all the work possible.

"He's always been a hard worker," Amy Anderson said. "He doesn't want to leave anything on the field in anything that he does."

EXCELLING ON THE FIELD

A varsity athlete in football, basketball and track, Anthony Hitchens left a lasting mark on Clearview football program. He's still the only Clearview player to play in an NFL game.

He set program records for scoring and rushing yards. The play in which he became the career leading scorer was the result of a throw that made Zach Anderson the career passing leader.

"As a freshman he was quiet, yet he was one of those guys that everybody just levitated to because he got along with everyone," Clearview's offensive coordinator Don Collier said of

Hitchens. "He made everybody feel important even as a freshman and all the way up until a senior."

Collier ran the scout team when Anderson and Hitchens were freshmen and Washington a sophomore. Collier, who played offensive line as a teammate of Brad Anderson in high school, admits having been harder on them — with Brad's blessing — than the other boys.

"We demanded a little bit more of them only because they expected to be great too, and they were coachable and they wanted to be coached," Collier said. "We pushed them maybe a little bit harder."

After giving fits to the varsity defense, Hitchens went up to varsity by midway through his freshman year. He broke a long touchdown run the second time he touched the ball, and he went on to rush for 3,864 career yards and 52 touchdowns.

Those numbers were compiled despite him spending the first five games of his sophomore season in a back brace because of a chipped vertebrae.

Initially thought to be out the entire season, Hitchens got a second opinion in order to return to the field that season. Clearview ran off five straight wins and went undefeated in conference play the following season with Hitchens at running back and linebacker.

He earned first-team all-conference, all-county and all-state honors as a junior and senior.

"He was always the hardest-working guy in the weight room, in film, on the practice field. He wouldn't let anybody outwork him," Collier said.

Hitchens went on to the University of Iowa, where he moved from safety to running back before ultimately putting on weight and taking over the starting weakside linebacker job as a junior. He earned All-Big Ten honors in each of his last two seasons, and he led the conference with 124 tackles in 2012.

The Dallas Cowboys selected Hitchens with the 119th overall pick in the 2014 NFL Draft, and he started 48 of the 60 games he played before signing with the Chiefs this offseason as a free agent.

A LEADER IN KC

The Chiefs raved in training camp about Hitchens' work ethic and professionalism. General manager Brett Veach viewed Hitchens as a catalyst for their attempts to transform the defense.

So far Hitchens has made the team look prescient. Through two weeks, the Chiefs are 2-0 and Hitchens ranks second in the NFL in tackles (26) behind only Indianapolis' Darius Leonard (28). Hitchens came up with one of the biggest tackles during the season opener against the Los Angeles Chargers when he diagnosed and snuffed out a screen pass, halting a potential rally.

"He studies football around the clock," Chiefs defensive coordinator Bob Sutton said. "He knows what we're doing very well, and he knows a lot about the opponent. He really works at that part of the game. It carries over, and he's a gritty competitor and I think our other players feed off him from that standpoint, the way he approaches the game."

Hitchens and inside linebacker Reggie Ragland have taken on a leadership role in the center of the Chiefs defense. They played the role of pied pipers of the linebacker unit, getting the group to spend time together off the field and outside the meeting room for dinners and movies.

Having been a former teammate of cornerback Orlando Scandrick in Dallas, Hitchens helped recruit Scandrick when he became a free agent during training camp. Despite having still been new to the organization himself, Hitchens also helped Scandrick acclimate to the Chiefs.

Ragland said this week that Hitchens has put pressure on him to play better.

"He is really smart," Ragland said. "He sees the game at another level. While we are out there, he's telling everyone the play that is coming up. I like playing with him. ...

"I know the last couple of weeks I haven't had good weeks, in my opinion. He is making me work hard and become a better player, watching film and all of that. I have to step it up and play better beside him."

Hitchens already seems to be rubbing off on the Chiefs the way the Andersons rubbed off on him.

(Demarcus Robinson)

As Patrick Mahomes' on-field improv partner, WR Demarcus Robinson hopes to play a bigger role this season

Nate Taylor

July 17, 2019

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Patrick Mahomes can be described in many ways. One, of course, is that he's one of the most accurate quarterbacks in the NFL, which led him to winning last year's MVP Award. His arm is so gifted and so strong that just about every other quarterback in the league would trade their prized arm for his. And yet that might not even be his greatest strength. Perhaps his most dangerous abilities are his elusiveness from pass rushers and improvisational skills outside of the pocket to create highlight plays.

A magician, though, often needs help to complete his elaborate illusions. That can be said of Mahomes when he unleashes a pass that opposing defenses don't see coming. And the player at the receiving end of those deceptive passes much of last season wasn't receiver Tyreek Hill, tight end Travis Kelce or receiver Sammy Watkins.

The partner in magic was Demarcus Robinson.

"I don't remember the exact first moment," Robinson said, "but we've had a lot of moments."

This has become Robinson's forte, as everyone in the Kansas City Chiefs' offense understands that he was most comfortable last year when Mahomes' was on the move or playing a style closer to backyard football. Robinson's 2018 statistics, when just viewing them at Pro Football Reference, look ordinary: 33 targets, 22 receptions, 288 receiving yards and four touchdowns. But the film shows a lot more. They show Robinson has the size — he's listed at 6-foot-1 and 203 pounds — athleticism, instincts and intelligence to make impressive plays.

All four of Robinson's touchdowns occurred with either him adjusting his route in the middle of the play and/or Mahomes scrambling away from defenders. Against the Los Angeles Chargers, Robinson was the third and last passing option for Mahomes, who still completed the six-yard touchdown pass before safety Adrian Phillips could tackle him.

Throughout his lengthy career, Chiefs head coach Andy Reid has given his players the freedom to showcase their personalities and talents, even if it happens outside of his structured, complex playbook. When Reid re-watched film from last season, he was delighted when he noticed how much Robinson created on his own to help Mahomes.

"He and the quarterback have kind of a unique chemistry," Reid said of Robinson's relationship with Mahomes in April. "They have had some big plays. The quarterback likes him and has a lot of trust in him.

"The one thing I can tell you is Demarcus will continue the play. There is no pulling up. Sometimes guys will take a breather on the back end if (they think) the play is (away from where they are). Demarcus is 100 mph getting over there. Think about how many plays he made this past year by just that shear hustle.

"Our quarterback knows that if he gets into trouble, somewhere Demarcus is going to show up. He's going to be there."

Robinson and Mahomes aren't exactly sure why their rapport has been so healthy from the moment they began working together two years ago as members of the second-team offense. Their first highlight connection was in a preseason game against the Tennessee Titans, when Mahomes scrambled quickly to his right before launching a 50-yard pass to Robinson.

In the same game, Robinson caught a 28-yard touchdown pass from Mahomes.

Robinson was also the recipient of two memorable Mahomes passes during the regular season.

The first was Robinson catching a 17-yard no-look pass from Mahomes against the Ravens, a play that made CBS color commentator Tony Romo, a former Pro Bowl quarterback, giddy. The second was an 89-yard touchdown catch against the Raiders in which Robinson ad-libbed just seconds after the ball was snapped. The completion is the longest touchdown pass in Mahomes' career, and it was his 50th scoring throw from last season.

"The play was designed for Tyreek," Mahomes said after the game in December. "They may have even triple-covered him. Demarcus was supposed to run a stop route, but he beat (his defender) so well off the line that he kept running. He threw the hand up. I just put it out there. He made a great play and scored on it."

When the Chiefs begin their training camp next week, Robinson will arrive at Missouri Western State's campus in Saint Joseph, Mo., with a slightly new role. He will be asked to replace Chris Conley, the veteran receiver who signed a two-year contract with the Jacksonville Jaguars this spring. Conley, who was ahead of Robinson on the Chiefs' depth chart, recorded 32 receptions for 334 receiving yards and five touchdowns last season.

Reid is optimistic that Robinson can increase his production, particularly as another deep threat in the Chiefs' potent offense. In a few plays last season, Robinson displayed his combination of quickness and speed, the underrated skills that were part of the equation in his long touchdown catch against the Raiders.

"I don't really know what (other) teams think of me," Robinson said of whether he's labeled a speedster. "I wasn't really targeted a lot, but I definitely showed some things that I can do (downfield)."

Reid, offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy and receivers assistant Greg Lewis are working with Robinson in hopes he can better harness his speed and route running this season. Robinson could've had a caught 61-yard touchdown pass from Mahomes against the San Francisco 49ers last season but the ball fell a few feet in front of him. Although his speed was excellent on the play, Robinson didn't run his seam route smoothly before creating separation from 49ers safety D.J. Reed. Mahomes' pass could've also been a bit more accurate.

Another long misconnection occurred in the first drive against the Seattle Seahawks. With Mahomes moving to his right, Robinson adjusted his route and went deep, allowing him to get behind Seahawks cornerback Shaquill Griffin. The play ended with Griffin recording an impressive pass breakup on a 42-yard pass.

A former fourth-round selection in 2016, Robinson has made steady progress in Reid's offense. In order to have a career-best season this year, Robinson worked with Mahomes on long passes throughout the Chiefs' offseason practices earlier this summer. Even with their already tight relationship, Robinson wants to have better eye connection with Mahomes — where both players know what each other is doing — against certain pass coverages while staying within the designed structure of the play. The two teammates discussed the slight adjustments they can both make before the play begins.

Bieniemy and Lewis praised Robinson earlier this summer for his attempts at improving.

"I've been very impressed," Bieniemy said in May. "He's taken a step forward. This year, with the opportunity that's been presented to him on the field, he's done a heck of a job so far."

The Chiefs don't want Robinson to change too much. Mahomes will likely need Robinson and other receivers to improvise and find open spots on the field for their scrambling and gunslinging quarterback to keep opposing defenses off-balance. But Robinson wants to be known for more than just Mahomes' illusion partner or as a skill position player with potential; he desires to become a more complete receiver.

"This is a big deal, my fourth year, the last year of my contract," he said. "I just want to put numbers up, gett the guys' trust and let the coaches know I know what's going on so it'll be an easy and smooth transition on the field."

(Khalen Saunders)

'I wish I could see him play running back again': Before Chiefs, DT Khalen Saunders was a dual-threat phenomenon

Nate Taylor

July 12, 2019

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — All the emotion inside Khalen Saunders led to tears on his face after the final game of his college career. Saunders knew he would never wear his purple and white No. 99 uniform for Western Illinois again. His team, the Leathernecks, also fell in a heartbreaker. As a senior on Senior Day, Saunders was on the field when Indiana State made a 27-yard field goal as time expired for a 15-13 comeback victory.

Saunders, a nose tackle for WIU, will never forget what happened once the game ended. The cold rain and sleet from that afternoon last November helped hide some of his tears. And in the postgame exchange on the field, several players from Indiana State approached him.

He doesn't remember which player on Indiana State's offensive line gave him the strongest compliment.

Perhaps it was Isaiah Edwards, the senior left guard whom Saunders beat with a nifty swim move to record his first sack in the fourth quarter. Maybe it was Wyatt Wozniak, the senior center whom Saunders maneuvered past with an even quicker swim move for his second sack in the game's final minutes. Or it could've been James Lang, the senior right guard who was beaten repeatedly by Saunders, including on a play in the red zone that prevented Indiana State from scoring a touchdown.

"They were like, 'Man, we struggled with you all game," Saunders remembers hearing that day. "It was unfortunate because that was my last game of the year. I was crying like a little baby. It was still reassuring for him to be like, 'We couldn't do anything with you.' It makes you feel good about yourself."

Since that game, Saunders' life has changed drastically. He proved to be one of the most popular prospects before the NFL Draft, impressing league executives, scouts and coaches with his performance at the Senior Bowl.

He and his wife, Yaya, became parents to Kambridge, their daughter, in January during the week of the Senior Bowl. The couple's wedding was in April, just days before the Kansas City Chiefs selected Saunders in the third round of the draft. With Kambridge in his arms, Saunders cried as one of his biggest dreams came true.

Most NFL fans were introduced to Saunders during the broadcast of the draft through a short video clip of him that went viral on social media, a moment when his career and personal life intertwined. Saunders, listed at 6-foot and 324 pounds, celebrated Yaya's labor after one of the Senior Bowl practices by performing a running backflip, which surprised and amazed everyone on the field.

Saunders has been called an athletic freak, a generational talent, and was last labeled as perhaps the next Aaron Donald, the Los Angeles Rams' star defensive tackle who has won the NFL's last two Defensive Player of the Year Awards. Every NFL player is blessed with athletic gifts, yet some players among the elite group astonish their peers with their all-around superior skills. Saunders, at every level of competition, has been told he's one of those athletes.

Saunders' path to the NFL began in Chesterfield, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis. The stories of his legendary athletic feats are aplenty — tales that follow a typical pattern for Saunders: Coaches and opponents are usually giddy to recount his dominance.

"I do get a lot of positive confirmation," he said.

Mark Goldenberg knows an argument can be made that Saunders' best position in high school wasn't defensive tackle. Goldenberg, the longtime coach at Parkway Central High in Chesterfield, led the Colts to the 2013 Class 5A state championship game in part because he had Saunders playing on both defense and offense. And no, Goldenberg did just the opposite of having Saunders, who weighed 285 pounds at the time, put his hand on the ground as one of the Colts' offensive linemen.

Goldenberg gave Saunders the ball.

Similar to most young players, Saunders loved the feeling of running with the ball when he started playing the sport as a 9-year-old. As he grew and became older, Saunders knew his natural position would be on the defensive line. But as a sophomore at Parkway Central, Saunders started to convince Goldenberg he should get an opportunity on offense. The two agreed to a deal: If Saunders dominated the line of scrimmage on defense — a sack, stuffing a running lane on short yardage or creating a turnover — Goldenberg would call plays for him.

"He's kind of a once-in-a-generation guy," said Goldenberg, who has coached for more than 30 years. "He could throw the ball 50 yards in the air. He could punt, so we created a whole bunch of punt fakes with him as the upback. In high school, he was stronger and bigger than everybody."

As a fullback, Saunders was also faster than just about everyone. For the 2013 season, Goldenberg redesigned the Colts' offense to enhance what he called the team's "580 package," which was the combined weight of his two ball carriers in Saunders and Michael Slater, his close friend.

Parkway Central's first game that season was against Ladue Horton Watkins High, a local rival.

"That was a big game for me," said Malcolm Davis, who was a junior middle linebacker for Ladue. "Those guys were all-world. Our coach really humbled us that week in practice. We did a lot of extra running and a lot of pursuit drills because that's really all you can do to tackle (Saunders). We had a good game plan, but they got the better of us."

Parkway Central won, 41-10, and Saunders was the game's brightest star.

He scored three rushing touchdowns and intimidated Ladue's defenders throughout. On one touchdown, Saunders broke three tackles on a run between the tackles then sprinted away from a cornerback before reaching the end zone. Another play featured Saunders breaking two tackles near the line of scrimmage, hurdling two diving defenders in the open field and stiffarming a safety on a 30-yard touchdown run. On defense, Saunders recorded a sack, too.

Jack Fox, Ladue's junior punter, kicker and backup quarterback that season, didn't play in the game. But Fox was mesmerized watching Saunders from the sidelines.

"They might have called him a fullback, but he basically played halfback against us," Fox said of Saunders. "And you know, the first game of the season, everybody is a little bit more timid than normal. But we're playing against a 280-pound running back. I've never seen somebody that's that big and moves well.

"He probably ran like a 4.8 (40-yard dash), which is fast in high school. I'm sure he did some good things on defense, too. I just didn't even notice him on defense because he did so much stuff on offense that was just insane."

Davis and Fox agree Saunders' best play from that game wasn't one of his touchdowns.

Goldenberg, as a traditional coach, enjoyed having the Colts run the ball a ton to create the perfect opportunities for short passes. Once Goldenberg understood Saunders had the best hands on the team — "Unbelievable hands," Goldenberg said — he created the play "20-series bootleg," in which the fullback is the first passing option in the flat.

"He just loved that play," Goldenberg said. "It was absolutely lethal, an easy throw to get him the ball with momentum. Good things happened."

Against Ladue, Parkway Central ran the play-action bootleg pass and Saunders was Davis' primary responsibility on the 2nd-and-18 play.

"I was never really the best at pass-drops," said Davis, who went on to play at Dickinson College. "I knew I had safety help over the top, so I took what I thought was a semi-good drop. The next thing you know, the quarterback overthrows him."

"Khalen made a freakish catch," Davis said, which resulted in a 39-yard reception.

In the regular season, the Colts lost only one game. Goldenberg compared Saunders' season and ability to that of Christian Okoye, the former Chiefs star running back who was a two-time Pro Bowler. Although Saunders' complete season statistics are unavailable from his senior season, he scored at least nine touchdowns, five sacks and one interception — also on a one-handed catch — according to his highlight video from Hudl.com:

Former Kirkwood (Mo.) High School coach Matt Irvin told Goldenberg he wanted to change all of his team's blocking schemes after seeing how much damage Saunders inflicted. A coach from Rockwood Summit High told Goldenberg his defense would go at Saunders' legs in order to tackle him. After the game, the Colts cherished the multiple plays in which Saunders jumped over defenders en route to another victory.

"For him to take that much of a beating on offense and then turn around and make an impact on defense is just truly magnificent," Davis said. "I was pretty confident that he would go to the NFL."

Saunders' best game that season was in the state semifinals against Webster Groves (Mo.) High, the team that defeated the Colts earlier in the season. In the first half, Slater, who amassed 16 touchdowns that season, sustained an injury that forced him to miss the rest of the game.

"At halftime, Khalen made a passionate 'We can do this!' speech," said Goldenberg, who became emotional when retelling the story. "He carried us to the state championship. I mean, he physically carried us because we gave him the ball a bunch of times."

Saunders responded, scoring three touchdowns in the second half to lead the Colts to a 42-21 victory. Running with fury, Saunders broke five tackles on one play then carried more than half of Webster Groves' defense on another play for a 10-yard gain. On his final touchdown, Saunders stiff-armed two defenders and ran past a third for a 28-yard rushing score. On defense, Saunders recorded multiple tackles behind the line of scrimmage and collected a sack.

Even after that game, few college coaches express interest in Saunders because he wasn't considered tall enough. Goldenberg told recruiters Saunders did everything to help the Colts win as a leader, athlete and an intelligent young man. Goldenberg, to prove a point, explained to coaches how Saunders' abilities as a math student and as a musician who can play the piano by ear were a testament to his work ethic and desire not to fail.

The only FCS program to offer Saunders a scholarship was Western Illinois. Similar to how he was convinced, Goldenberg was sure Saunders was going to prove to everyone in college football that he deserved an opportunity to play in the NFL.

"I came from an underdog university," Saunders said, "so I'll always have that mentality."

After Aug. 31, 2013, the day Parkway Central crushed Ladue, Jack Fox has kept up with Saunders' career.

Fox followed Parkway Central's season, laughing and shaking his head each time he watched Saunders' highlights. When Fox googled him a few years ago, he wondered why Saunders didn't go to a bigger school than Western Illinois. But Fox saw that Saunders was doing well, having been named a second-team All-American after leading the Leathernecks last season with 7.5 sacks.

Saunders' best plays at Western Illinois resembled what he accomplished in high school — his quickness at the snap, his sharp spin moves that led to sacks and even a couple red-zone touchdowns. In the victory over Youngstown State last season, the Leathernecks ran a play almost identical to "20-series bootleg." As the fullback, Saunders ran his route into the flat and made a leaping 3-yard touchdown catch with a cornerback guarding him.

When Saunders executed his famous backflip at the Senior Bowl, Fox was one of the people from the St. Louis area who wasn't surprised.

"I sent it to all my friends back in high school on our big group chat," Fox said. "They were like, 'Who's this guy?!' I then sent them the Hudl video. My friends now text me and ask me what kind of guy he is, like, 'Is he still that athletic?!"

Fox was eager to find the answer since his career and Saunders' have intersected again — this time as teammates with the Chiefs. Less than a week after the Chiefs selected Saunders in the draft, the team signed Fox, who became one of the best punters in the country at Rice, as an undrafted free agent.

Fox and Saunders enjoyed reminiscing about their lone game against each other in 2013 during the Chiefs' rookie minicamp in early May.

"I told him he beat our asses and there was nothing we could've done about it," Fox said. "He's a really nice guy, and he was laughing about it."

Fox also mentioned he was glad he became Ladue's starting quarterback as a senior in 2014, when Saunders had already graduated from Parkway Central. Without Saunders disrupting the backfield, Fox led the Rams to a victory over the Colts.

"It's always fun to relive those moments, especially from another viewpoint," Saunders said of Fox. "He was just like, 'You were one of the craziest high school players we ever played."

Saunders understands his athleticism and Goldenberg's willingness to play him at multiple positions in high school helped him get comfortable in finding unconventional ways to perform well as an undersized defensive tackle. Playing a lot of snaps early at Western Illinois gave Saunders the opportunity to see different styles and approaches from offensive linemen. Such reps, along with studying film of Donald — "One of my biggest inspirations," he said — developed and better polished the techniques of his moves, which he knows will be critical to his success in the NFL.

But people who knew Saunders from high school have fun asking him a tough question: Is it more fun to run the ball toward the end zone or chase a quarterback for a sack?

"If I can be untouched going to the quarterback, then of course that's the goal," Saunders said smiling. "That leads to less injuries and more sacks. I definitely like to be untouched."

In their first chat this spring, Saunders asked Fox to do him a favor. He wanted Fox to help tell the Chiefs' coaching staff that he can still run the ball.

Fox did his best during the team's offseason practices this summer, even though the specialists usually do their work on a separate field from the rest of the team. Fox explained to Dave Toub, the Chiefs' special-teams guru, that Saunders could be a surprise option on a fake punt or fake field goal. Fox also shared stories of Saunders' legendary exploits in high school — the moments when he stiff-armed a defender, hurdled another defender and then ran over another defender in the same play — with kicker Harrison Butker, long-snapper James Winchester and punter Dustin Colquitt.

A few times during the practices, Fox turned his head toward the Chiefs' defense to see what Saunders was doing.

"He was so fun to watch," Fox said. "I wish I could see him play running back again, honestly."

'A perfect situation for me': Sixth-round pick Darwin Thompson's versatility makes him a good fit in Chiefs' offense

Nate Taylor

May 3, 2019

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Think of Darwin Thompson as a compact rock with a football.

Thompson is a different type of running back for the Kansas City Chiefs, a style of runner they haven't had the past few seasons. Listed at 5-foot-8 and 200 pounds, Thompson could be a multi-dimensional playmaker used in a number of ways: as a conventional between-the-tackles back, a matchup advantage in space on the perimeter, a return man on special teams or another gadget player for coach Andy Reid.

Entering last week's NFL Draft, the Chiefs wanted to select a running back. General manager Brett Veach waited until the sixth round (214th pick) to select the Utah State product. On the initial assessment, Thompson fits many of Reid's and Veach's requirements. He protects the ball — he had zero fumbles last season at Utah State — and can be an additional receiver out of the backfield, which Reid values. For Veach, Thompson is a determined prospect who has always demonstrated his talents when given the opportunity.

When Thompson received a phone call from the Chiefs on Saturday saying the team had picked him, he couldn't believe his professional career will start with Reid, the league's reigning MVP in quarterback Patrick Mahomes and an offense that last season scored the most points in franchise history.

"It's a perfect situation for me, my family, just the offense, everything," Thompson said. "It's a perfect fit. I'm a versatile player. I can be plugged anywhere. I'm blessed with this position."

At Utah State, Thompson's play was undeniable. He recorded 1,044 rushing yards on just 153 attempts for an impressive 6.8 yards-per-carry average. He also flashed as a route runner in gaining 351 receiving yards on 23 receptions. In only one season at Utah State, Thompson scored 16 total touchdowns, and his production was consistent throughout the team's 13 games.

"He is a big-play threat," said Trey Koziol, one of the Chiefs' national scouts. "It is a little bit different than what we had (at running back last season), so it gives us a bit of a different dimension in terms of the passing game and guys who can operate in space, too."

Thompson will get his first glimpse of Reid's vast playbook this weekend when the Chiefs hold their three-day rookie minicamp.

He's eager to learn after he met with the coaching staff during a predraft visit last month. Whether talking about the position with assistant coach Deland McCullough or getting motivational advice from offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy, Thompson was able to identify himself with Reid's staff for one reason: He believes they are all fighters.

"I can see myself growing (in Kansas City)," Thompson said. "They're going to push me to grow, not only as a football player but as a man. Once I saw that, it really blew me away how much I related to those guys.

"All my life, I've been the underdog. In this situation, I'm just coming in with a bigger chip on my shoulder."

Before his unconventional college career, Thompson was a valuable contributor at Jenks (Okla.) High School. As a senior, Thompson recorded 942 rushing yards and 10 touchdowns to help the Trojans win the Class 6A-1 state championship. But his offers were limited.

So Thompson went to Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, a junior college in Miami, Okla., where he was redshirted his first year. In two seasons at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M, Thompson scored 17 touchdowns, distinguishing himself as one of the best offensive players in the country.

Koziol was intrigued when he learned Thompson was transferring to Utah State. Koziol, before his promotion last year, was a West Coast scout who built relationships with Utah State's coaching staff. In his year-long evaluation, Koziol watched how dedicated Thompson was to his craft in his final collegiate year. Koziol said Thompson, who is close to graduating, loved three things while at Utah State: football, his academics and his teammates.

"This is an outstanding person," Koziol said. "This is a really, really driven kid. He's a guy who's really had to earn everything. I think those are the kind of guys you like having because he's on a mission to succeed."

At Utah State's pro day in March, Thompson ran his 40-yard dash in 4.50 seconds. He bench-pressed 225 pounds 28 times, an exceptional feat which led all of the prospects from the pro day.

"He's not the biggest guy, but he's rocked up," Veach said of Thompson earlier this week in a teleconference. "He looks like a bodybuilder with his shirt off. He has great contact balance, yards after contact, for a small guy. It's really remarkable to see him always keep that ball forward, and he's always finishing runs moving forward. He is tough, he can do some things out of the backfield, and I think Coach Reid and the offensive staff are going to have a lot of fun with him."

Contrary to other teams, Veach said he and his staff had Thompson graded as a higher prospect on their value board than a sixth-round selection. The Chiefs were optimistic they could gain a valuable prospect late in the draft, but Veach took a calculated gamble with the team's two picks in the sixth round. With the 201st pick, the Chiefs selected Rashad Fenton, a solid cornerback from South Carolina who can add depth to a thin position group.

After selecting Fenton, Veach said he called several teams between the 201st pick and the 214th pick to offer a trade that would allow the Chiefs to move up to select Thompson. A deal was never reached, but Veach said the Chiefs benefited in another way.

"I was looking at all these teams, and they'd taken a running back earlier in the draft, so I was like, 'I think we might be OK here,'" Veach said. "He's a really exciting player. That was the guy our eyes immediately went to. Again, surprisingly very good in between the tackles."

When asked to compare Thompson to a proven veteran, Veach chose Dion Lewis, the 5-foot-8, 195-pound back for the Tennessee Titans. Thompson said he emulated the running style of Atlanta Falcons running back Devonta Freeman, who is 5-foot-8 and 206 pounds.

The Chiefs will be thrilled if Thompson can have a career similar to Lewis or Freeman. When training camp begins in July, Thompson will learn from veterans in Damien Williams, Carlos Hyde and second-year player Darrel Williams. As a player selected in the sixth round, Thompson felt his introduction into the NFL is somewhat familiar to his start in college. He plans to run the ball with low pads, to evade the first defender, to excel in any role, to build chemistry with Mahomes and to be the next successful small skill player under Reid.

He wants to improve his reputation from being an underrated prospect to a valuable offensive weapon at the sport's highest level.

"I'm not a vocal leader," he said. "I lead by example. So from this point forward, there's not much I will say about it. But I'll prove my worth."

After years as a backup, Damien Williams begins new chapter as the Chiefs' lead running back

Nate Taylor

June 10, 2019

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Before his sophomore season at Arizona Western, Damien Williams knew he was probably the most talented player on the Matadors' roster. The coaches at Arizona Western knew, too. Williams was the clear starting running back entering the 2011 season and got a lot of work, scoring 30 total touchdowns, leading the Matadors to the NJCAA championship game as a first-team All-American.

Williams then transferred from Arizona Western to Oklahoma in 2012, beginning a seven-year football odyssey during which he was always considered the "other guy," a backup or just a situational player. Williams shared rushing attempts with Brennan Clay as a Sooner. As an undrafted NFL player, Williams served the Miami Dolphins as a utility option for four years until he sustained a left shoulder injury in 2017 that required offseason surgery.

The Chiefs signed Williams last year to add additional depth at the position, and a year later, Williams is just one of two players at the position that the Chiefs have retained. Williams has outperformed expectations during his time with the Chiefs — as a veteran on special teams, a third-down back, a conventional backup and as a spot starter — which has led him to be the team's projected starter for the upcoming season, a first since his days at Arizona Western.

"It means a lot because (your professional journey) starts somewhere," he said last week. "I laid a foundation down in Miami of my character. People talk (in the league), and it got around here what type of person I am. I have a lot of grit and determination."

One reason the Chiefs have faith in Williams is because of his consistency as a worker.

Despite the team's early concerns about his shoulder, Williams was the healthiest running back during training camp last year. He proved to have the best hands of the group, too, and his performance improved as his snaps increased, which occurred in the final four games of the regular season after the Chiefs swiftly released Kareem Hunt.

Williams became the Chiefs' starter midway through their comeback, overtime victory over the Baltimore Ravens when Spencer Ware sustained a strained right hamstring injury. Williams responded to his opportunity by scoring the game-tying touchdown pass from quarterback Patrick Mahomes in the final minute of regulation. In the next two games, Williams recorded more than 100 all-purpose yards, including three touchdowns.

"We expect him to excel," offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy said last month of Williams. "Obviously, just like with any other position, if something was to happen, knock on wood, you want the next man to step up. We always coach our starters not to allow anyone to take their job. But we also understand the importance of coaching our backup players to take their job and be ready when that opportunity presents itself."

Williams was rewarded by the Chiefs in late December when he signed a two-year contract extension worth a maximum of $8.1 million if he accomplishes all of the deal's incentives.

In the playoffs, Williams showed his toughness. He recorded a career-high 129 rushing yards and a touchdown in the divisional-round victory over the Indianapolis Colts. Against the New England Patriots in the AFC Championship game, Williams was an essential part of the Chiefs forcing the game into overtime by scoring three touchdowns after halftime.

"The way he's able to run the ball between the tackles but can still catch it out of the backfield, not a lot of running backs can do that at the high level that he's doing that," Mahomes said of Williams. "Being in the offense another year, he's really starting to understand every aspect of it. I think he's just going to keep getting better and better each and every year."

Since then, Williams said he has approached his repetitions with the first-team offense during the Chiefs' voluntary offseason practices as if his name wasn't at the top of the depth chart.

"Nothing changes at all," he said, later adding, "I just like to win."

Perhaps the largest test for Williams in his increased role in the Chiefs' prolific offense this season will be his durability. Entering his sixth year in the league, Williams has never had more than 50 rushing attempts in a season. The most receptions he has recorded in a season is 23. But Williams, listed at 5-foot-11 and 224 pounds, is slightly bulkier than his predecessor, Hunt, who is listed at 5-foot-11 and 216 pounds.

During coach Andy Reid's previous six seasons with the Chiefs, the team's primary running back has recorded at least 160 rushing attempts and has averaged 40.3 receptions.

"There's a certain challenge that comes with that," Reid said last week of Williams. "That's a tough position to play. You have to prepare yourself on and off the field, and he's taken that challenge."

The Chiefs, in the past couple years, have played their best on offense when their running back can do everything — rushing, pass-blocking, route running and receiving — well. Reid and Bieniemy have utilized the team's nine organized practices to see how they can create more advantageous mismatches in space with Williams as a fourth or fifth receiver on the perimeter.

A year ago, Reid and Bieniemy were trying to figure out how Williams best fit into the playbook. Back then, Williams was behind Hunt, Ware and Charcandrick West when training camp began. But when the Chiefs arrive at Missouri Western State in St. Joseph, Mo., in July for camp, Reid and Bieniemy will have adjusted and molded the playbook with the intent of making Williams more dynamic.

"It's a very complicated offense that Andy and E.B. put together," Williams said. "They just want to see how far they can push you and see where you can go. I'm being more involved in the offense, not just in the backfield. I'm doing things out wide and being put in different positions, making the uncomfortable comfortable."

As a self-described fighter, Williams knows that keeping his job at such a volatile position this season might be just as difficult as it was convincing his coaches he deserved the opportunity. He wants to keep impressing Reid and Bieniemy.

Reid, a master of maximizing the talents of various running backs, will give the ball to Williams plenty this season. He has updated certain screen passes to showcase Williams' elusiveness.

Pass-protection drills involving Williams in camp will be fun for Reid to watch. Reid, though, is most eager to see if Williams can harness the excitement from his new stature with the Chiefs and his knowledge from past experiences to yield the best season of his career.

"He wants to do this thing, and he's earned the right to be that guy," Reid said. "Now it's a matter of production. You've got to go do it."

Kansas City Chiefs star Travis Kelce attends wedding of deserving fans

AOL Editors

July 22, 2019

AOL.com

Rumor has it that if you send a wedding invite to Oprah, Mickey and Minnie Mouse or Queen Elizabeth, you'll receive a returned RSVP that may even include a small gift or a personalized note.

Of course, the odds of your favorite celebrity actually attending your nuptials are slim – unless you're Kansas City Chiefs fans Matt and Taylor Hubbard.

The Hubbards were selected as the winners of one of the NFL's "Experiences of a Lifetime" in honor of the league's 100th season. The couple applied to have the Chiefs' superstar tight end Travis Kelce attend their wedding ceremony and reception, and the stars aligned perfectly.

"The only time I had any interaction with them [before the wedding] was the video I sent letting them know I was going to be at their wedding and that they had won the contest for the NFL 100," Kelce told AOL.com of the Hubbards. "I lucked out because it was an absolutely unbelievable wedding and an unbelievable crew."

Part of Taylor Hubbard's pitch to the NFL was her family's long history of being Chiefs season ticket holders. Her grandmother, Grandma Donna, is what Taylor calls a "professional tailgater" and jumped at the chance to dance with Kelce, a self-proclaimed "freestyler," at the reception.

"It was really cool to feel how much she loved the Chiefs," Kelce, said of Grandma Donna.

"You could just feel how long she's been a Chiefs fan, how much it meant to her as a person to meet a Chiefs player."

Other than the time he spent with fans, Kelce said his favorite part of the wedding was cutting the special Chiefs cake provided for the Hubbards – though he's sure his future wife is going to have some feelings about his partaking in such a tradition before his own wedding.

The NFL will also be treating the Hubbards and their wedding party to a game at the Bud Lite Suite at Arrowhead Stadium this preseason, and Kelce said he hopes to "score a few touchdowns for them" when they're there.

Mahomes launches '15 and the Mahomies' charity on Late Night with Jimmy Fallon Monday

Brooke Pryor April 1, 2019 KC Star

Patrick Mahomes used his appearance on The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon to launch his charitable foundation, "15 and the Mahomies," on Monday night.

"It's a foundation that's designed all around kids, kids from either under-served communities that don't have the same opportunities I had when I was young, or kids that are in the hospital who have chronic illnesses or have suffered major injuries," Mahomes told Fallon. "Because those kids are the ones that train harder than me by 100 times every single day, and I want to make sure I can give back to them in any shape and any way in order to give them the resources they need to have an amazing life."

The organization has been in the works for quite a while, but Mahomes' management team wanted to wait until the offseason to launch it.

"The mission is to enhance the lives of children," said Leigh Steinberg, Mahomes' agent, in a January interview with The Star. "This takes many different forms, whether it's children's health, whether it's underprivileged children, but making a contribution to the next generation."

Steinberg told The Star the the organization would have an advisory board of leading political and business figures in the area and be set up as a pass-through foundation that would raise money and make grants to organizations doing charitable work in the community.

The foundation's website lists "15 for 15" as its signature program, one that will support 15 youth initiatives that, "focus on academics, science, the arts, classroom supplies, athletics, children with disabilities, after-school programs and more."

The reigning NFL MVP showed a dedication to community service during the season, too, with gestures such as a visit to KU Med and an an afternoon building homes for veterans with the Veterans Community Project.

"You have with him a really special young man who aspires to be a role model, wants to make a difference in the world, is very sensitive to the feelings of others, is very, very bright and very giving," Steinberg said.

Mahomes' agent is plenty familiar with the Kansas City community. He previously represented such Chiefs as Brad Budde, Derrick Thomas and Tony Gonzalez. Steinberg worked with all of them to launch their own charitable organizations in Kansas City during their tenure with the Chiefs.

"One of the benefits here is that I had my first draft pick in Kansas City in 1977," Steinberg said. "And got to know the community through these players really well, especially with involvement in (Derrick Thomas' organization) Third and Long and all the rest of it."

Mahomes briefly chatted with Fallon about his first year with the Chiefs — learning from Alex Smith in 2017 — and his conversation with New England Patriots QB Tom Brady after the Chiefs AFC Championship Game loss at Arrowhead Stadium in January.

Of Smith, Mahomes said, "I was blessed to be put in that situation to have Alex Smith in front of me. The greatest dude, the greatest person ..."

(Byron Pringle)

Byron Pringle is staying positive as ever, even as he fights for a Chiefs roster spot

Greg Woods

August 6, 2019

KC Star

Take a look at Byron Pringle's last 18 months and you'd forgive him if he ever gets down on himself.

The Chiefs wide receiver has been through quite a bit.

On the first day of 2018, Pringle announced his decision to forgo his final season at Kansas State, where he shined as the Wildcats' best receiver, and declare himself eligible for the NFL Draft. Pringle was 24 and the father of one, so the move made sense.

Four months later, the draft had come and gone ... and Pringle's name was not called.

He signed with the Kansas City Chiefs as a free agent and remained in the mix when August rolled around and the Chiefs kicked off their preseason schedule. Through their first three games, Pringle caught two balls for a total of 25 yards. But in his fourth and final contest, Pringle had racked up four receptions for 122 yards.

Then, disaster struck.

Pringle left the game, a 33-21 win over the Green Bay Packers, with a hamstring injury. It sidelined him for the entire 2018 season.

Damn, Pringle thought to himself. My opportunity is gone.

That wasn't the case, because the Chiefs saw enough potential in Pringle to slide him over to the injured-reserve list and keep him around, but even now, he's fighting for a roster spot as the 2019 preseason looms.

So surely he gets down sometimes.

Right?

"It's hard for me to get down. I always attack every day with a positive mindset," Pringle said after the Chiefs' Monday practice. "I don't get down. I get down when I start missing my sons, but other than that, I don't get down."

In short, that's Pringle: positive, energetic and determined, with enough NFL potential to match the mindset he preaches so enthusiastically.

It starts with his athleticism.

First off, he stands 6-foot-2, which doesn't sound like anything notable until you consider the other parts of Pringle's appeal: He runs a 4.46-second 40-yard dash, and he's strong for his position. Both attributes helped Pringle stand out in his two years at K-State, and the latter is what Chiefs coach Andy Reid said he's noticed as training camp marches on.

"I like what he's doing. We've expanded his role, so you'll see him mixed in there, rotating him in," Reid said. "So just getting back into the flow of things, coming off an injury. ... He had good OTAs, and now he's picking up from there, where it's live and you're going 100 miles an hour. I think he's doing a good job. Strong. Strong player."

Pringle will tell you he's gotten to know all the Chiefs wideouts: Tyreek Hill and Gehrig Dieter, Sammy Watkins and Demarcus Robinson, even Mecole Hardman and Cody Thompson, two rookies. They're a tight group, Pringle says, but that may be part of the trouble for players like Pringle, who don't have a spot on the 53-man roster locked down — there's just so many receivers.

In the Chiefs' first unofficial 2019 depth chart, released Sunday, Pringle was listed as the No. 6 wideout. That hardly solidifies Pringle's place on the Week 1 depth chart, not in early August, but the Chiefs value him elsewhere on the field, too.

Special teams coordinator Matt Taub said he likes Pringle as a returner of kicks and punts.

"Pringle is a guy, a kick returner, that at the end of last year before he got hurt was really coming on," Taub said. "He almost made the team before he got hurt. He is a guy that we are really going to look hard at."

While Pringle isn't among the specialists listed on the aforementioned depth chart, there's some precedent here. Across his two years at K-State, Pringle became a two-time All-Big 12 kick returner, collecting more than 2,000 all-purpose yards as both a wide receiver and kick returner, and he finished second in school history in career yards per reception (19.64) and sixth in both career kickoff-return average (27.6) and total yards (1,076).

Funny story, actually.

Of the two kickoffs that Pringle returned for touchdowns in college, one came in October 2016, when K-State was hosting Texas Tech. In the second quarter, after the Wildcats grabbed a quick 24-21 lead, the Red Raiders responded with a rushing touchdown.

The man responsible? Patrick Mahomes.

The very next play, when Texas Tech kicked off, Mahomes watched from the sideline, hands hung on his chest pads, as Pringle darted and slipped through defenders and took the kickoff back 99 yards for a touchdown.

Now, the two are teammates, Pringle a blossoming wide receiver and Mahomes an MVP quarterback.

"It's great catching from an MVP," Pringle said. "It's a great opportunity to even catch a ball from him. He hits you with the no-looks. You never know when that's coming. You've got to be prepared."

For the uninitiated: Mahomes has been known to unfurl a no-look pass on occasion. He did last season, in a win over the Ravens, and that's not to mention the other circus passes Mahomes gained attention for completing during his breakout 2018 season.

Pringle experienced Mahomes' wizardry firsthand this spring during OTAs when he snared a no-looker.

"When I caught it," Pringle said, "I was like, 'Oh ... It really came to me.' I caught it and ran with it. You've got to always have your eyes open."

Pringle may hail from Tampa, Florida, but he's spent much of his football career in the state of Kansas.

He spent the 2015 season at Butler Community College in El Dorado before he transferred to K-State for the 2016 and 2017 seasons. There, he blossomed into a standout wide receiver in a Big 12 conference chock full of them.

That's also where he learned a few lessons that he's used to ascend to the position he holds now.

"It prepared me well," Pringle said of K-State. "The communication, and being on time, and learning how to be a pro as well. At K-State, you've got to be accountable for a lot of things. That's the main reason right there."

.@pringle_byron presented Bill Snyder with a signed football today, thanking him for his opportunity at @KStateFB.

Still, Pringle insists he doesn't concern himself with the pattern. "As long I'm having the opportunity to play in the league, I'm happy," he says. Besides, he's trying to secure a roster spot.

The positive approach, he says, has played an irreplaceable role along the way.

"I'm just having a positive mindset, coming out here with a smile on my face," Pringle said. "Just to be out here and have an opportunity every day to come and prove myself and get better each day."

Darwin Thompson, among the team's smallest players, was feeling pretty tall after the Chiefs' 38-17 preseason opening victory over the Cincinnati Bengals.

The smallest of the Chiefs' running backs, Thompson got into the end zone on a 29-yard reception from Chase Litton in the third quarter and had one of the game's highlight plays when he ran through a tackle on his way to a 9-yard gain.

"I proved a little bit, I proved 5-8, 195 (pounds), I can play in the NFL," Thompson said. "I can break tackles. I can do the same things I did in college. Let me build on top of that."

The building will continue. Thompson, the sixth-round draft selection in April who played one season at Utah State, has had a productive training camp. He remains behind three veterans on the depth chart but was the third running back in Saturday's game because Damien Williams didn't play because of injury.

Thompson's five rushing attempts were the most by a Chiefs player. He entered the game in the second quarter and on his fourth attempt ran out of the grasp of linebacker Germaine Pratt to get the Chiefs close to a first down.

Early in the third quarter, he found the end zone. Thompson circled out of the backfield and took a short pass from Litton. Thompson was too quick for the covering linebacker and used his speed to finish the play.

"I didn't know it was coming to me," Thompson said. "As soon as I broke off the linebacker, there it was. It was like it was in slow motion ... I was like, 'Get going fast, take off now.' As soon as I got the ball, you lift you knees. Somebody's on your tail."

Starting quarterback Patrick Mahomes watched from the sideline and liked what he saw.

"The explosiveness you see when he gets the ball in his hands, it's special, it's why he got drafted," Mahomes said. "For him to be able to shake that defender in man-to-man coverage and make the catch and then run."

Andy Reid said he was especially eager to see Thompson against an opponent other than the Chiefs in training camp, where contact is limited.

"It's hard in camp because there are only a couple of days where we are live," Reid said.

"Getting in a game is important for that position. He got in ... and did a nice job running. He's a viable receiver, so I thought all and all it was good."

Thompson, from Jenks, Okla., felt the same way. And as the pregame nerves began to bubble, he was happy to get things started.

"When I first came in, I just wanted to run into something," Thompson said. "Let me get that nerve out of the way."

Thompson did, and made the most of his first NFL opportunity.

The inside story of legendary agent's successful recruitment of Patrick Mahomes

Sam Mellinger

August 15, 2019

KC Star

The first meeting happened over brunch in a restaurant in the suburbs of Dallas. On one side of the table sat the people who loved Patrick Mahomes the most: his father Pat, his mother Randi, his younger sister Mia.

On the other side sat two men gaining ground quickly: Leigh Steinberg, perhaps the most well-known sports agent in the history of the profession, and Chris Cabott, now the president and COO of Steinberg Sports & Entertainment.

The moment represented ground zero in the recruitment of a Texas Tech quarterback who would soon change so many things — the NFL, whichever team drafted him, and whoever signed him.

This is the story of how a small agency landed a quarterback so good he'd win the NFL's MVP award in his first year as a starter, and what we can learn about Mahomes from the decision.

"It's definitely a huge process," Mahomes, who turns 24 next month, said. "It's like choosing a school when you're going to a college."

Except bigger, in some ways. Especially for Mahomes. His college decision came fairly easily. Texas Tech was the only school from a so-called Power Five conference to offer him a scholarship to play quarterback.

But his father estimated as many as 10 firms reached out in the year before the 2017 NFL Draft, from giants like Creative Artists Agency that offered bigger infrastructure to smaller boutique firms that focused on personal attention.

The experience can feel a bit surreal, with strangers desperate to become friends, promises flying, visions being sold. Mahomes felt that more than most. He'd only been a full-time football player for a year, after all.

"We didn't even know he'd come out early yet," Pat Mahomes Sr. said. "We didn't know that. That wasn't his plan yet."

Today, we know that Mahomes is a virtual lock to sign the biggest contract in league history after this season, when he becomes eligible for an extension with the Chiefs. We know that the Chiefs' front office and Mahomes' agents will start banging out the framework soon.

We also know he will be worth every dollar, both in terms of what he does for the Chiefs' Super Bowl chances and what he means to their bottom line — in tickets, suites, merchandise, sponsorships, national exposure, franchise value ... everything.

UNBELIEVABLE SKILLS

Back then, in the summer of 2016, Mahomes carried considerably less weight: He was a rising junior with the Red Raiders, a former baseball player with intriguing talent and bloodlines but a guy who played in a system with a reputation for producing professional busts.

Steinberg and Cabott thought more of this prospect. Steinberg had worked with a few players from Mahomes' hometown of Tyler, Texas, including Earl Campbell. He asked around about Mahomes and everyone raved about him as a man.

They also watched his games and thought enough of his talent that a few months before the initial meeting, Cabott texted a board member at the agency to watch Texas Tech play LSU in the Texas Bowl "for the best quarterback in next year's draft."

"The arm strength, the touch and the rest of it was unbelievable," Steinberg said. "The draft is a projection of how a player is going to be for 10, 12 years. It's not a merit badge. So you had to look past that he played in an Air Raid offense, and that they (Texas Tech) had such little defense."

Steinberg and Cabott first reached out to Mahomes through social media and heard no response. They called Pat Sr., and still nothing. They called Randi, and silence. Cabbot found an email address for Randi, but it got kicked back. He called her at work, left a message, and still ... nothing.

Then, finally, a few weeks after the last message they left, she called back. Cabott took the call at a 7-Eleven near his condo in Los Angeles.

"I remember exactly where I was, exactly what I was doing, because I finally knew we might get an opportunity," Cabott said.

Randi gave Cabott an address. Cabott sent some information, and a month later they met in Grapevine, Texas, the meeting worked around Pat's summer baseball coaching schedule.

Steinberg, 70, had done thousands of these presentations before. He sort of backed into the profession when quarterback Steve Bartkowski, who he'd known as a student at Cal-Berkeley, asked him for help after being selected No. 1 overall in 1975.

Teams had all the power in those days, and the Atlanta Falcons negotiated hard. Steinberg created some leverage by floating the idea of Bartkowski joining the short-lived World Football League.

Eventually, they negotiated what was then the richest rookie contract in league history. One of the most successful careers in sports agency took off from there.

"He's the godfather of this industry," Cabott, 40, said.

RISE AND FALL, AND RISE

By the mid 1990s, Steinberg had represented eight No. 1 overall picks. His client list had included Troy Aikman, Steve Young, Warren Moon and five others who'd be inducted to Pro Football's Hall of Fame.

Then came the rain. Steinberg's father died, two of his children were sick, and he lost a house because of mold. One drink became three, and more. Alcohol became an escape. In March 2010, he chugged a bottle of vodka and began a 12-step program.

"I turned to the wrong thing," Steinberg said about alcohol.

By the time of the brunch meeting with Mahomes' parents, Steinberg had been sober six years. He had to start over from scratch, but the agency represented Paxton Lynch, who had just been selected in the first round by the Denver Broncos. He was on his way back. He did not wait for a question before discussing his problems.

Steinberg describes his current situation like this: He doesn't have a divine right to represent athletes, and parents looking out for their children should him ask the hard questions. Are you too old? Are you still relevant? What about the earlier problems?

So he talks about the past before the parents have a chance to ask.

"My thinking was he didn't have to tell us anything about that," Pat Mahomes said. "The name Leigh Steinberg kind of speaks for itself. This was a guy who knew what he was doing, but for him to come out and lay it all open, that was big, too."

The restaurant grew louder as the meal went on. Steinberg has a naturally soft speaking voice, and at times the family struggled to hear. Cabott's voice booms and he had no trouble usurping the white noise.

"The main cog in the whole thing was Chris," Pat said. "He was sharp, knew how to treat people. I knew that was the way to win Patrick over, because family is close to his heart."

The presentation followed the template developed by Steinberg over more than 40 years. He and Cabott described two plans. One short-term, and one long.

In the short-term, they would put Mahomes with trainers in San Diego. They would hire coaches to sooth the concerns they knew existed in his technique (footwork and comfort under center) and grasp of NFL offenses (command of terminology and calling plays).

The long-term plan, in Pat's memory, looked like this: use the first year to focus entirely on football, with no endorsements, earning the respect of teammates and learning how lead grown men.

The second year would be a focus on performance with some endorsements, and the third would build on that and hopefully set up the second contract.

Steinberg's strategy also includes what he calls "retracing roots." In the beginning, a scholarship is established at the athlete's high school. Then, one at the university. Finally, a charitable foundation is established, based in the player's NFL city with political and business leaders on board to help.

The presentation was bold, even including a prediction that Mahomes could be a Hall of Famer.

"They had a plan, and Patrick likes a plan," Pat said. "He likes to know what we're doing, where we're going, what we're trying to do. He likes structure. That's why he likes (Chiefs) Coach (Andy) Reid. He likes structure, and he wants to be challenged, every day."

A few other points stood out. Steinberg and Cabott earned trust, and not just with what they said but with what they didn't say. Other agencies offered money, Pat said. Steinberg and Cabott never did, instead focusing on the work.

One other thing: Steinberg and Cabott put Mahomes first. That's an agent's job, and they all try to do it. But they're all a bit different.

Steinberg and Cabott made it clear that the foundation would not be set up until Mahomes felt ready, and the purpose would be entirely his own idea.

Also, the style of representation the agents would provide would be built around Mahomes' personality and desires. They gave him a list of a dozen or so priorities — from short-term money to offensive system to geographic location to a second career — and asked Mahomes to rank them.

"The biggest thing for me is the sport of football, taking care of my family, and loving everything I do," Mahomes said. "I don't ever want to lose that love for the game. The money's awesome. The money's cool, for sure. You dream about making money and stuff like that. But I always say football is what I loved first."

CLOSING THE DEAL

Steinberg and Cabott met with Mahomes' parents a second time at a steakhouse in Patrick's hometown. That night, the two agents traveled to a Dallas hotel to meet with Mahomes' godfather, LaTroy Hawkins.

Hawkins referenced some notes he had taken a year or so before that meeting. He and Pat had driven to Lubbock for Patrick's spring game his sophomore year. The main topic of discussion there: If you get to the point of preparing for a professional career, what do you want in an agent?

Hawkins' notes related that Mahomes was looking for a smaller agency, but one with experience and personable representation that would treat him like family. Steinberg and Cabott seemed an impossibly perfect fit, and by the time Hawkins sat down with other agents, he said he was "checked out."

"The humbleness, the realness, that's what stood out with Leigh and Chris," Hawkins said. "When you have people coming in trying to recruit you they blow so much smoke up your ass they want your eyes to turn brown like theirs. I don't know how you want to write that, but that's the truth.

"There was none of that with Leigh and Chris. It was all about the business."

Steinberg and Cabott finally met Patrick after Texas Tech played Louisiana Tech on Sept. 17, 2016. That happened to be his 21st birthday. The conversation was somewhat brief, but Cabott went back for the Oklahoma game in October, and both attended the Baylor game the day after Thanksgiving.

"I could see he was surrounded by a great group of mentors and bright people," Steinberg said.

"There was a bonding and a click based on values."

Mahomes trusted his parents and Hawkins to filter the 10 or so agencies that reached out down to five. At one point, Patrick asked his father, mother and godfather to rank their top three. Each listed a different agency first.

"It doesn't matter what we think," Pat remembered telling Patrick. "It matters what you think, because you're going to be married to him. So you tell us. Because we're going to support you no matter what."

In the end, Mahomes simplified the decision as much as possible. He considered what each agency might bring and how it aligned with his highest priorities. His comparison to a decision about choosing a college is apt. The same way recruits often say the campus of their choice felt like home, Mahomes began to think of Cabott and those who worked with him as family.

The thing that stood above all else: Mahomes became convinced that Cabott and Steinberg would do whatever it took to give him the best opportunities and career possible.

Basically, he went back to what he said over that lunch with his dad and godfather. By then, the answer seemed clear.

"Just the way they approached it," Mahomes said. "They told me they would make me a top priority. They believed I could be a top 10 draft pick, and they'd help me elevate my off-the-field stuff in the best possible way.

"Them connecting with my family was huge. Them having that same vision. I felt we were on the same page as far as how the process should go."

Good sleep and this personal trainer have helped make a 'Greek god' of Patrick Mahomes

Vahe Gregorian August 19, 2019

KC Star

Surrounded by jubilant family members and friends that night in 2017 when the Chiefs traded up to select him 10th overall in the NFL Draft, amid learning details of his flight to Kansas City the next morning for the first day of the rest of his life, Patrick Mahomes might have succumbed to distraction.

Instead, he sought out Bobby Stroupe, the personal trainer with whom he began working out in fourth grade.

Fretting he might miss a few days of workouts, Mahomes wanted to get one in around 6 a.m. before flying. The idea was so ridiculous that Stroupe tried to talk him out of it.

But ...

"Nah," Stroupe said, "we went to work."

The snapshot is revealing in more ways than you might guess, a clash of two of Mahomes' characteristics that Stroupe believes make all else possible: a voracious devotion to work and ... ardent dedication to sleep.

"I want the headline to be that he is the most prolific sleeper in the world," Stroupe said, laughing. "Undisputed."

So, yes, at least in one way you, too, can be like Patrick Mahomes, who smiled at the topic and said, "I like to sleep, for sure."

But while Stroupe might jokingly call him a "sloth," more seriously he said the habit is his No. 1 performance-enhancer because of the regeneration, mental health, alertness and stability it helps provide.

"I mean, how much anxiety do you sense from Patrick?" said Stroupe, whose business currently supports more than 100 athletes in the NFL and Major League Baseball.

And beyond the odd conflicts here and there, such as in the immediate aftermath of being drafted by the Chiefs when the compulsion to work exceeded the sleep doctrine, prioritizing rest also is the underpinning of his capacity for everything else.

That in turn is part of a distinct change in Mahomes' physical stature as the reigning NFL Most Valuable Player enters his second season as a starter.

Kindled by approximately 72 personalized workouts with Stroupe at his APEC training center in Ft. Worth between the end of the season and the Chiefs' offseason program, Mahomes entered camp in St. Joseph entered camp in St. Joseph somewhat more sculpted than a year ago.

By Stroupe's measure, Mahomes arrived at about 227 pounds, down eight from 2018, and with approximately 11.5% body fat. Mahomes left camp last year with 12% body fat, and Stroupe believes he'll be about 9.5% this time around.

In addition to Chiefs' staff, Stroupe figures Mahomes has had some support in the cause from longtime girlfriend Brittany Matthews, trained by Stroupe during a sterling soccer career and now a personal trainer herself.

The result has him looking like "a Greek god," said Adam Cook, Mahomes' coach at Whitehouse High.

The more statuesque figure has its purpose.

"Last year, the focus was movement; we wanted him to be a more dynamic mover and be more difficult to catch. And it really worked well," Stroupe said.

But Mahomes nonetheless took a lot of hits as the season went on, giving Stroupe a glimpse of the way teams might approach Mahomes in the future.

When he met with Mahomes shortly after the season ended with the 37-31 overtime loss to New England in the AFC Championship Game, they talked over the need to put on muscle for the kind of increased and intensified contact he figures to get.

As he has for years, Mahomes bought in.

Speaking generally about working with Stroupe, Mahomes said the reason he's still with him after all this time is the contouring of the training and trust that comes with it. He knows his personality and knows how he plays the game.

"He puts me in positions that I'm going to be in throughout the game," Mahomes said. "He actually watches the tape and sees exactly how I watch the game, so it's not just training that's for everyone — it's training that's specifically for me.

"And he likes to put me in positions that he knows that I don't like and that I have to figure out ways to get out of. ... (And) he stays on me. I think that's another big thing."

The result, Stroupe believes, is more upper-body mass without losing mobility and flexibility.

"I dare say he's going to display more power," he said. "He's going to be a more robust athlete."

If anyone could track that, it would be Stroupe, who first encountered Mahomes when his father, Pat Sr., was working to make a comeback in baseball.

Since he was typically working with groups of athletes, his first distinct memories of the younger Mahomes are a few years later as his work ethic and arm strength became impossible to miss

"He's worked hard for that arm; it hasn't always just been a second-nature thing," said Stroupe, noting the elder Mahomes had more of a track and field type body than the "reverse centaur" he considers his son. "There's genetic influence from his father, no question, but their body types are so different that it's expressed in a completely different way."

Stroupe's way is focused on movement, which has further cultivated some of Mahomes' natural dynamism.

The regimens over the years help explain why Mahomes' arm can "display power from angles we've never seen before," as Stroupe put it. And why he looks so fluid amid chaos.

"The best way I would describe his physical ability is he's comfortable in uncomfortable positions and he's very comfortable in uncomfortable situations," he said. "And that's something that he's trained, we've trained that way, but he's also gifted that way."

Part of Mahomes' gift is what Stroupe calls amazing "problem-solving" skills, and the most visible part of that is what you see in any given Chiefs game ... after Mahomes gets in the right state of mind.

While Stroupe doesn't specifically work with Mahomes on his pre-game routine, he encourages creativity and individuality in pre-game warmups towards optimal mental boxes to check.

Visualization of what's ahead and such actions as throwing the ball as far as he can, Stroupe said, "get him into what we would call a flow state, to where his body is in less of a conscious-type mode and more of an unconscious, parallel-type universe."

Kind of like sleeping helps him get in the right state of mind for everything else.

"How many people," Stroupe said, "can say that about the way they go to work each day?"

A work commitment, incidentally, that was no different this last summer than it was the night of the draft.

For all his well-documented adventures around the country, Stroupe said, Mahomes seldom if ever missed workouts. At times, that meant Stroupe connecting with him trainers he's known at various outposts.

"The MVP thing had no effect on his approach to the offseason," he said. "Which can't be common."

Like about everything else when it comes to Mahomes.

LeSean McCoy finds his home with 'Big Red' and the Chiefs

Brooke Pryor September 2, 2019 KC Star

LeSean McCoy just wanted to go home.

To Philadelphia. Or to Andy Reid.

After two final years of tumult in Buffalo, he was searching for some kind of familiarity. The timing, though, never seemed to work.

But then Saturday morning he was cut by the Bills. And Reid was interested. So was Brett Veach, the man who convinced Reid to draft McCoy in the second round of the 2009 draft.

"We looked at the tape," Reid said. "And I've known him for a long time obviously.

"There aren't a lot of 31-year old running backs running around out there. He still has the great feet and vision."

By Saturday night, McCoy was coming home.

"My last two years at Buffalo, I've had so many trade requests," McCoy said. "Rumors every year. So I thought it would be with Coach Reid. This is when (Kareem) Hunt had just left — and then the Eagles.

"So I said 'OK, I'm going home somewhere. Back home to Philadelphia or back home to Big Red. It's going to happen."

And it did.

Monday morning the Chiefs officially announced the signing, and McCoy put a picture of his new No. 25 Chiefs jersey on his Instagram story, after procuring it from rookie Darwin Thompson — now No. 34.

McCoy, who signed a one-year deal worth up to $4 million, had a handful of teams reach out to him after his Saturday morning release, but his familiarity with the Chiefs' front office and his relationship with Reid made Kansas City the easy choice.

"I thought this was probably the best fit for me," McCoy said. "You see the offense, I'm just trying to fit a small role. These guys are rolling. And to be a part of that, a great chance at a championship, to pick a team that you want to play for.

"I think the best part about it is Andy Reid. He's one of my favorite coaches of my NFL career. He's had me since I was what? 20 years old. Now I'm at 31. Had a long talk and Brett Veach, a guy that believed in me for years. This was the right fit."

McCoy flourished in Reid's system in Philadelphia, putting together a career-high 17 rushing touchdowns in 2011 and averaging 967 yards per season during their four-year partnership.

And in those four years, McCoy formed a relationship with Reid that's proved to be unbreakable, even as the two have moved on in their careers. It wasn't just what Reid did for McCoy's career on the field, it was also how he taught him.

It's why McCoy trusts Reid to help him evolve in the next phase of his decade-long career.

"I love Coach Reid," McCoy said. "The biggest thing for me is that he's always been honest, since Day 1. He'll shoot you straight. He's family, same way. As a coach, I've learned so much from him.

"Now, coming here, I'm sure he'll teach me different things. I'm an older player and I want to stretch my career out as long as possible. I want to be productive as well. I think just playing with him, the type of roles that he sets up, when you watch the tape of the offense and how they go up and down the field, the small plays, the big shots to utilize all the open space for his players. When you see that, you fall in love with that."
