GAME PREVIEW

The Oakland Raiders kept their playoff hopes alive this past Sunday by defeating the Chargers in Los Angeles. After kicking off the season series on Monday Night Football in Week 1, the Raiders will travel to Denver in Week 17 to close out their regular season slate with a contest at Empower Field at Mile High against the Broncos. The Raiders defeated the Broncos in Week 1 by a score of 24-16, marking their second consecutive victory over Denver. The Raiders currently lead the all-time series 64-52-2 and will look to claim their first victory in Denver since 2015, while also looking to finish at least 4-2 in the AFC West for just the third time since 2002. Week 17's divisional clash will commence at 1:25 p.m. PT on CBS with Andrew Catalon and James Lofton on the call.

The Silver and Black defeated the Los Angeles Chargers by a score of 24-17 in Week 16 to move to 7-8 on the season and 3-2 in the AFC West. In the contest, QB Derek Carr passed for 291 yards on 26-of-30 attempts for the second-best single-game completion percentage (86.7 percent) of his career. Carr rushed for one score and threw for another, earning a passer rating of 118.2 and marking his 32nd career game with a passer rating over 100, tying Ken Stabler for the most such games in club history. Carr's touchdown through the air was reeled in by WR Hunter Renfrow, who returned to action after missing three games due to injury. Renfrow recorded his first career 100-yard game, notching seven receptions for 107 yards, and became just the second player in the league this season to record multiple 50-yard receiving touchdowns on third down. Renfrow also made five third down receptions and leads all rookies with 16 first-down receptions on third down. On defense, DE Clelin Ferrell chipped in with a sack, totaling 4.5 on the season, contributing to an NFL-leading 13 combined rookie sacks by Raiders in 2019.

The Broncos enter Week 17 defeating the NFC North's Detroit Lions in Week 16 by a score of 27-17, while also claiming victories in three of their last four contests. The Raiders look to finish 8-8 on the year and earn their first regular season finale win since 2010.

NOTES VS. BRONCOS

INDIVIDUAL STATS VS. DENVER

QB Derek Carr

Career Totals: Carr holds a 5-5 record all-time against the Broncos. He has tallied 2,028 yards passing on 204-of-308 attempts (66.2 percent) while adding 11 touchdowns to just four interceptions for a passer rating of 91.2.

- In Week 1 of 2019, finished with an 84.6 completion percentage and 10 yards per attempt. His 121.0 passer rating marked his highest in a season opener, besting his previous high of 114.3 against the Tennessee Titans in 2017.
- Last year in Week 2 against the Denver Broncos, Carr put together one of the greatest single-game passing performances in NFL history when he completed 29 of his 32 pass attempts for a 90.6 completion percentage. Among quarterbacks with at least 30 pass attempts in a contest, Carr's mark against the Broncos ranks second all-time, while standing as the best single-game percentage in club history. Only Drew Brees' performance in Week 15 this season (96.7 percent) topped Carr's.
- Carr became the first quarterback in NFL history to complete at least 90 percent of his passes while recording at least 30 pass attempts in the contest.

RB Josh Jacobs

- In Week 1, became the first player since LaDainian Tomlinson in 2001 to tally 100 scrimmage yards and two TDs in his NFL debut.

WR Tyrell Williams

- In Week 1, recorded his first 100-yard contest as a Raider and eighth of his career. It marks the first time in his career tallying at least 100 yards against the Broncos.

SNAPSHOT

Overview: Head Coach Vic Fangio, who was named the 17th head coach in franchise history, has the Broncos at 6-9 and in third place in the AFC West. Denver has won three of the past four after defeating the Detroit Lions, 27-17, in Week 16. The Raiders won the first matchup, 24-16, on Monday Night Football in Week 1 and look to sweep the season series for the first time since 2010 when they travel to Empower Field at Mile High this Sunday. Denver trails Oakland in the all-time regular season series 52-64-2.

Offense: QB Drew Lock has led the club to three wins in four games since taking over as the starting quarterback ahead of Week 13. In his four starts, Lock has completed 83-of-128 pass attempts (64.8 percent) for 843 yards with six TDs against three INTs for a passer rating of 89.4. The Broncos offense has averaged 22.8 points in his four starts, up from 15.9 points per game in the previous 11 games. WR Courtland Sutton leads the team with 1,060 receiving yards and six TDs, and is the first Broncos player to reach the 1,000-yard receiving mark since 2016. Sutton is tied for seventh in the AFC in receiving yards and ranks 15th in the league in yards per reception (15.6 avg.). TE Noah Fant leads all rookie tight ends in the league with 39 receptions and 558 receiving yards, and ranks second with three TDs. The Broncos have the 18th ranked rushing attack in the NFL, averaging 106.1 yards per game. RB Phillip Lindsay rushed for 109 yards last week and will look to gain 1,000 yards on the ground in consecutive seasons. Lindsay currently ranks 10th in the AFC with 958 rushing yards and is tied for fifth with seven rushing TDs. RB Royce Freeman has rushed for 500 yards and three TDs, adding 42 receptions for 248 yards and one TD.

Defense: The Broncos defense is ranked sixth in pass defense (215.3 avg.), ninth in points per game allowed (20.1) and 16th in total sacks (38.0). LB Von Miller earned Pro Bowl honors for the sixth consecutive year after recording 42 tackles, seven sacks, one pass defended and one forced fumble this season. DE Shelby Harris (6.0) and DE DeMarcus Walker (4.0) have registered career highs in sacks. S Justin Simmons leads the team with four INTs and 14 passes defended, while LB Todd Davis leads the team and ranks third in the AFC with 121 total tackles (70 solo).

RAIDERS VS. BRONCOS

WHAT TO WATCH FOR VS. DENVER

Head Coach Jon Gruden recording his 50th career regular season victory as head coach of the Oakland Raiders.

The offensive line not allowing a sack for the fifth time in 2019. The Raiders are one of five teams this year to hold at least four different opponents without a sack.

The rookie class continuing to lead the NFL in total touchdowns. Through Week 16, the Raiders 2019 rookie class has combined to score 16 touchdowns.

The rookie class recording 3.5 sacks to tie the franchise record for most team sacks by rookies in a single season set in 1983 (16.5).

The offense continuing to lead the NFL with in 10-play drive points. Through Week 16, the Raiders' have 155 points on drives of at least 10 plays.

QB Derek Carr earning a passer rating of at least 100.0 for the 33rd time in his career and for the ninth time in the last 13 games. The Raiders are 22-10 when Carr surpasses the 100-point barrier. His 32 games with a passer rating of at least 100.0 ranks first in franchise history through a player's first six seasons and is tied for most overall in club annals. His 33rd game with a passer rating over 100.0 would surpass Ken Stabler for most such games in franchise history.

Carr earning a passer rating of at least 120.0 for the third time this season, tying a single-season career high.

Carr continuing to lead the NFL in passing touchdowns on third down. Carr's 14 such scores are the most in the NFL through Week 16.

Carr passing for at least two touchdowns for the 42nd time in his career, which would be tied with Tom Brady for eighth-most in NFL history through a player's first six seasons. Carr ranks first in franchise history with 41 such games and first through a player's first six seasons. Carr's 41 such games are ninth-most in NFL history through a player's first six seasons.

Carr passing for at least three touchdowns for the 19th time in his career, tying for eighth-most in NFL history through a player's first six seasons. His 19th game with at least three passing touchdowns would tie Daryle Lamonica for second-most such game in franchise history.

Carr passing for two touchdowns and a passer rating of at least 115.0 for the fifth time this season and 20th time in his career. His fifth such game would tie the club record with Ken Stabler for most such games in a single season.

Carr completing three passes (totaling 2,094 in his career) to surpass Matt Ryan for second-most completions in NFL history through a player's first six seasons, trailing only Peyton Manning (2,128).

Carr completing 18 passes to join Matthew Stafford as the only players in NFL history with four campaigns of 350 completions in their first six years in the NFL.

Carr passing for 337 yards to reach the 4,000-yard mark to become the first quarterback in franchise history with multiple 4,000-yard campaigns.

Carr passing for one touchdown to break a tie with Andy Dalton for sixth-most touchdown passes (143) through a player's first six seasons.

Carr passing for 300-or-more yards for the first time this season, and 19th time in his career. The Raiders are 12-6 when Carr reaches the 300-yard mark, and 3-0 when he surpasses the 400-yard barrier.

P.A.J. Cole placing three punts inside the 20-yard line to surpass Shane Lechler for third-most punts inside the 20 in a single season in franchise history (33).

DE Maxx Crosby recording a half-sack to tie Aaron Wallace for second-most sacks (9.0) by a rookie in franchise history.

Crosby recording two sacks to tie Greg Townsend for most sacks (10.5) by a rookie in franchise history.

S Erik Harris returning an interception for a touchdown for the third time this season and becoming just the second player in franchise history with three interception returns for scores, joining Eric Allen (2000).

RB Josh Jacobs recording one touchdown to break a tie with RB Arthur Whittington for the second-most rushing scores (eight) by a rookie in franchise history.

Jacobs recording two rushing touchdowns to become the 11th running back in NFL history to have four multi-rushing touchdown games through a player's first 14 career contests.

Jacobs recording his sixth career 100-yard rushing game. Jacobs would be tied for the 11th-most games in NFL history through a player's first 14 games. Jacobs would also tie Napoleon Kaufman (1997) and Darren McFadden (2010) for second-most 100-yard rushing performances in franchise history during a single season.

Jacobs rushing for 120 yards to become the 17th running back in NFL history with at least four games of 120 rushing yards through their first 14 career games.

Jacobs rushing for at least 120 yards and two scores to become the sixth player in NFL history with three such games through their first 14 career games.

Jacobs rushing for eight yards to surpass Darren McFadden (2010 - 1,157) for fifth-most rushing yards in a single season in club history.

Jacobs rushing for 19 yards to surpass Marcus Allen (1984 - 1,168) for fourth-most rushing yards in a single season in club history.

Jacobs rushing for 50 yards to become the 20th running back in NFL history with at least 1,200 rushing yards through their first 14 career games.

WR Hunter Renfrow recording two receptions to surpass Zach Miller (44) for second-most receptions by a rookie in a single season in franchise history.

TE Darren Waller recording 115 receiving yards to tie Todd Christensen (1986 - 1,153) for second-most receiving yards in franchise history by a tight end in a single season.

Waller recording 100 receiving yards for the fifth time this season, breaking a club record for most such games in a single season among tight ends.

Waller recording nine receptions to surpass Todd Christensen (1983 - 92) for second-most receptions in franchise history by a tight end in a single season.

A WIN WOULD...

...improve the Raiders overall record to 8-8 and 4-2 against AFC West opponents. Since divisional realignment in 2002, the Raiders have posted a winning record in the AFC West two times: 4-2 in 2002 and 6-0 in 2010.

...mark Oakland's third-straight win against Denver after defeating the Broncos in Week 16 of 2018 and Week 1 of 2019.

...mark the Raiders first win on the road against the Broncos since Week 14 of the 2015 campaign.

...give Oakland its first regular season series sweep against Denver since 2010, when the Raiders finished 6-0 against AFC West opponents.

...give the Silver and Black a 8-11 all-time record at Empower Field at Mile High.

...improve Head Coach Jon Gruden's record against the Broncos to 4-10.

HEAD COACHING MATCHUP

JON GRUDEN

Jon Gruden returned as head coach of the Oakland Raiders on Jan. 9, 2018, welcoming back one of the most respected and successful coaches in the storied history of the Silver and Black. Gruden, who was first introduced as head coach of the Raiders over 20 years ago, served four seasons with the Raiders from 1998-2001.

Gruden has compiled a 105-101 (.510) regular season mark as a head coach with the Raiders and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (2002-08), and a 5-4 record (.556) in postseason contests, which includes a victory in Super Bowl XXXVII.

In his first season back on the sideline in 2018, Gruden oversaw the development of quarterback Derek Carr, who established career single-season highs in completions (381), passing yards (4,049) and completion percentage (68.9). Carr also piloted three fourth quarter/overtime game-winning drives on the season and set a franchise record by throwing 332 consecutive passes without an interception, a streak that covered 10 games.

The youngest head coach in the NFL at age 34 upon his initial hire by Raiders Owner Al Davis in 1998, Gruden posted a 38-26 record (.594) and led the Silver and Black to back-to-back AFC West titles in 2000 and 2001. He guided the Raiders to an AFC Championship Game appearance in 2000, a campaign in which the Raiders set a franchise record with 479 points and led the NFL in rushing (154.4 avg.).

In all, Gruden-led teams have claimed five division championships and have recorded six seasons with nine-or-more wins. As a head coach, he has seen 22 different players combine for 40 Pro Bowl selections. In addition, Rich Gannon was tabbed for the Maxwell Club's Bert Bell Award as the league's Most Valuable Player in 2000 and four players who Gruden tutored as a head coach have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame: Jerry Rice (2010), Warren Sapp (2013), Derrick Brooks (2014) and Tim Brown (2015).

Gruden spent seven seasons as head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, finishing his time there as the winningest coach in franchise history by compiling a 57-55 (.509) regular-season record, while leading the Buccaneers to three division titles and a 3-2 mark in the postseason, including a Super Bowl XXXVII victory, becoming the youngest head coach in NFL history to win a Super Bowl.

Prior to beginning his initial tenure in Oakland, Gruden was a seven-year NFL assistant, helping his teams qualify for the playoffs five times. Gruden spent three seasons (1995-97) as offensive coordinator for the Philadelphia Eagles. He was the NFL's youngest offensive coordinator at age 31.

Before joining Philadelphia, Gruden worked for three years at Green Bay from 1992-94. He served as an offensive assistant to head coach Mike Holmgren in 1992 and spent the 1993 and 1994 seasons as Green Bay's wide receivers coach. Gruden worked as offensive assistant to head coach George Seifert with the San Francisco 49ers in 1990.

Born August 17, 1963 in Sandusky, Ohio, Gruden attended South Bend (Ind.) Clay High School and was a three-year letterman at quarterback at the University of Dayton, graduating in 1985 with a degree in communications. Gruden and his wife, Cindy, a former University of Tennessee cheerleader, have three sons, Deuce, who is in his first season as an assistant strength and conditioning coach for the Silver and Black, Michael and Jayson.

VIC FANGIO

Vic Fangio enters his first season with the Denver Broncos in 2019 after being named the 17th head coach in franchise history on Jan. 10, 2019. A 40-year coaching veteran with 32 seasons of NFL experience, Fangio has been a defensive coordinator for 20 of the last 24 seasons at the NFL or college level. He most recently served as the Bears' defensive coordinator for the last four years (2015-18) after leading the defenses for San Francisco (2011-14), Stanford University (2010), Houston (2002-05), Indianapolis (1999-2001) and Carolina (1995-98).

Fangio has led a defense that has ranked among the NFL's top-8 in passing yards for seven consecutive seasons, and his teams have ranked among the league's top-5 in fewest defensive penalties in three of the last four years. During his 32 years coaching in the NFL, Fangio has helped 14 different teams to the playoffs across six different organizations.

Fangio's defense with the Bears in 2018 led the NFL in scoring defense (17.7 ppg), rushing defense (80.0 ypg), yards per play (4.8), takeaways (35), interceptions (27), three-and-outs (26.8%) and 20+yard plays (46). Fangio joined the Bears after working as defensive coordinator for San Francisco from 2011-14 under Head Coach Jim Harbaugh. During his four seasons in the Bay Area, the 49ers made three playoff appearances, won two NFC West titles and advanced to Super Bowl XLVII.

In that four-year span under Fangio, San Francisco's defense ranked second in the NFL in points (17.4 ppg) and third in yards (310.2 ypg) allowed. Fangio's unit also boasted the league's top run defense (92.0 ypg) and tied for the third-most takeaways in the league from 2011-14.

Fangio spent the 2010 season with Harbaugh as Stanford University's defensive coordinator. Before working at the college level, Fangio spent four seasons with the Baltimore Ravens under Head Coaches Brian Billick (2006-07) and John Harbaugh (2008-09). He worked as a special assistant to the head coach/defensive assistant for his first three years with the Ravens and then coached a linebackers group in 2009 that featured All-Pro Ray Lewis.

Prior to joining the Ravens, Fangio spent 12 seasons as an NFL defensive coordinator—four years each with expansion teams Carolina (1995-98) and Houston (2002-05) under Head Coach Dom Capers as well as three years with Indianapolis (1999-2001) under Head Coach Jim Mora Sr.

Fangio began his NFL career with New Orleans as the team's linebackers coach from 1986-1994 during which time he coached the famed "Dome Patrol," one of the greatest defensive groups of all-time. Before entering the NFL coaching ranks, Fangio was a defensive assistant for Mora Sr. with the USFL's Philadelphia/Baltimore Stars from 1984-85, where he was a part of back-to-back USFL Championships. He also worked as a graduate assistant at the University of North Carolina in 1983.

Fangio began his career in 1979 coaching linebackers at his alma mater, Dunmore (Pa.) High School, under legendary football coach Jack HENZES. He was promoted to defensive coordinator in 1980 before assuming the same position with Milford (Conn.) Academy in 1982. Fangio, who graduated from East Stroudsburg University with a health and physical education degree, was inducted into the Northeast Pennsylvania Hall of Fame in 1993. Born on Aug. 22, 1958, Fangio has a son, Christian, and a daughter, Cassie.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders — who began play in the American Football League in 1960 — enter their 60th year of professional football competition, including the last 49 as a member of the National Football League.

In six memorable decades — the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and 2010s — the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three world championships of professional football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 22 playoff seasons, finished 35 seasons at .500 or better and played in 44 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s.

The Silver and Black are the only AFC team — and one of just two NFL teams (Minnesota) — to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only three original AFL teams to have captured three world championships of professional football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980.

In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

With four postseason victories, the Raiders were the first of the AFC West teams to win multiple postseason contests in the new millennium by six years.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During the memorable 59 years in Oakland and Los Angeles, the Raiders have won 473 league games, tied 11 and lost 431.

"Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization during the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium as shown by their domination of pro football.

More than 20 of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced six Coaches of the Year.

In addition, 71 Pro Bowl players have earned 202 Pro Bowl selections representing the Silver and Black. In 1970, as the Raiders began their second decade of play, the merger between the AFL and NFL became a reality on the field. In the 1970 through 2012 period of interconference play, the Raiders compiled a remarkable 92-77-1 record against present National Football Conference rivals.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 — "Monday Night Football." The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build a 40-29-1 record in Monday night play. In the 50 years of this series, the Raiders are 18-9-0 in "Monday Night Football" games at home.

Through the decades — the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and now the 2010s — the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports.

Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

MIKE MAYOCK

THE GENERAL MANAGER

Mike Mayock was named General Manager of the Oakland Raiders on Dec. 31, 2018, becoming just the third general manager in Raiders franchise history. Mayock previously served as an Emmy-nominated analyst and draft expert for the NFL Network and handled color commentary duties in the broadcast booth for both college and NFL games before joining the Silver and Black.

Mayock has already applied his expertise in player evaluation to provide his own stamp on the Raiders' roster. Mayock strengthened the roster in the early free agency period, agreeing to terms with tackle Trent Brown and wide receiver Tyrell Williams, while adding versatile defensive back Lamarcus Joyner on the defensive side of the ball.

In his first NFL Draft at the helm, Mayock and Head Coach Jon Gruden used four picks among the top-40 players selected to assemble a group of "foundational" standouts. The Raiders selected defensive lineman Clelin Ferrell from Clemson with the fourth-overall pick before adding Alabama running back Josh Jacobs and Mississippi State safety Johnathan Abram with late first-round selections. Mayock executed two trades on the draft's second day to move back to the 40th-overall spot, selecting Clemson defensive back Trayvon Mullen and netting additional fourth and fifth-round picks. The Raiders were involved in five draft-day trades in total, trading up in the fifth round to pick Clemson wide receiver Hunter Renfrow, helping complete a draft haul that earned plaudits from around the NFL.

Prior to assembling talent for the Raiders, Mayock's NFL Draft analysis had been one of the most respected voices among media, NFL front office personnel and team scouting departments. His expertise featured within the NFL Network's extensive coverage of the NFL Draft, including the show "Path To The Draft," as well as the network's exclusive coverage of the NFL Scouting Combine and the Reese's Senior Bowl.

Outside of the studio, Mayock served as the television analyst for the Philadelphia Eagles' preseason games since 2015. He also served as a game analyst for NFL Network's broadcasts of the Senior Bowl and East-West all-star game, as well as preseason analyst for the Minnesota Vikings for several seasons.

In 2010, Mayock became the color commentator for NBC's coverage of Notre Dame football, teaming with play-by-play announcer Tom Hammond. In January 2011, he teamed with Hammond to call NBC's broadcast of the NFC Wild Card playoff game between the New Orleans Saints and the Seattle Seahawks. The following year, he called an AFC Wild Card contest featuring the Cincinnati Bengals and the Houston Texans.

Mayock teamed with Brad Nessler to call the NFL Network's Thursday Night Football package from 2011-2013. Prior to joining NFL Network, Mayock served as a college football analyst for ABC Sports (2001-03), Fox Sports Net (2000), and CBS Sports (1996-99). He also covered the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament as a reporter for CBS (1997-99). From 1993-95, Mayock worked on ESPN's coverage of the Canadian Football League.

A 10th-round pick in the 1981 NFL Draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers, Mayock then played for the New York Giants from 1982-83. He is a member of the Boston College Hall of Fame, where he captained both the football and baseball teams. Mayock graduated from Boston College in 1980.

Mayock and his wife Amanda reside in Alameda and have four children (Leigh, Michael, Mackenzie and Jack).

New York Jets	12/11/60	11/24/19	23-18-2
Tennessee	9/25/60	12/8/19	26-21

- The Raiders have faced the Chargers 120 times, the most of any opponent. They have faced the Broncos and Chiefs each 119 times, as they only played each team once during the strike-shortened 1982 season.

OAKLAND Vs. NFC NORTH

Oakland faced the NFC North this season, marking the first time since 2015 that they have played the division. Last season, the NFC North saw the Chicago Bears claim the third seed in the conference after posting a 12-4 record. The Minnesota Vikings also finished with a record above .500 (8-7-1). After a 2-2 finish against the division, the Raiders hold a 29-27 combined all-time record against Chicago, Detroit, Green Bay and Minnesota.

RAIDERS VS. NFC NORTH IN 2019

Date	Opponent	Result
9/22/19	at Minnesota	L, 14-34
10/6/19	vs. Chicago	W, 24-21
10/20/19	at Green Bay	L, 24-42
11/3/19	vs. Detroit	W, 31-24

SILVER AND BLACK IN PRIME TIME

- The Raiders played two primetime games in 2019: the season opener on Monday Night Football against the Denver Broncos on Sept. 9, a game the Raiders won by a score of 24-16, and a Thursday Night Football contest against the Los Angeles Chargers on Nov. 7, a game they also came away victorious by a score of 26-24.
- This marked the Raiders' 71st contest on Monday Night Football and fourth consecutive year on the broadcast. In 2018, the team opened the season on Monday night at home against the Los Angeles Rams and also hosted the Denver Broncos on Christmas Eve in Week 16. With a 24-16 victory over Denver in Week 1, the Raiders have now won two consecutive games on Monday Night Football.
- This year's Monday Night Football contest marked the second consecutive year the Silver and Black will open the season at the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum on Monday night. It also marked the second-straight year the Raiders hosted the Broncos on Monday Night Football. Oakland has faced Denver more than any other opponent on MNF, and now is tied at 9-9-1 against the club in the primetime series. From 1997-2002, the Raiders faced the Broncos five straight times on MNF.

- Oakland holds a 40-29-1 all-time record in Monday Night Football contests.
- The Thursday Night Football contest against the Chargers marked the seventh game between the two clubs on Thursday. Oakland has played no other team more on Thursday than the Chargers and holds a 6-1 record. The matchup also marked the first primetime matchup between the two teams since the Chargers relocated to Los Angeles, with their last primetime meeting coming on Thursday Night Football on Christmas Eve in 2015, when the Raiders claimed a 23-20 victory in overtime.
- On Thursdays, the Raiders are 11-11 all-time, including a 3-4 record on Thanksgiving Day.

TEAM NOTES

MILES AND MILES

Factoring in two trips to the Eastern Time Zone and four to the Central Time Zone, the Raiders will once again travel more miles in the NFL this season than any other club. Oakland will log approximately 32,000 miles in 2019, approximately 300 more miles than their 31,732 miles traveled in 2018 and over 1,000 more than their 30,889 miles in 2017. Additionally, the Raiders are the only team in the NFL that will surpass 30,000 miles traveled in 2019.

The team's total of over 32,000 miles traveled exceeds the combined total of the Buffalo Bills, New York Giants and New York Jets' total of approximately 23,500 miles. During the club's 49-day stretch without playing in Oakland, the team will travel approximately 21,300 miles, more than 22 NFL teams will travel for the entire 2019 campaign. The Raiders also have the longest non-international road trip of the season, as they are set to travel just over 5,100 miles roundtrip to play the New York Jets in Week 12.

2019 TRAVELING BREAKDOWN
Team	2019 Traveling Miles
Oakland Raiders	32,023
Los Angeles Rams	29,974
Los Angeles Chargers	28,262
Seattle Seahawks	27,484
San Francisco 49ers	25,512

Fun Fact: Five teams (L.A. Chargers, L.A. Rams, Oakland Raiders, San Francisco 49ers and Seattle Seahawks) will "travel around the world" at least once in 2019 (approximately 25,000 miles).

RAIDER ROOKIES

In Week 9, the rookie class of 2019 accounted for all four touchdowns on offense - two from RB Josh Jacobs and one apiece from TE Foster Moreau and WR Hunter Renfrow - the first such occurrence in franchise history dating back to the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger. Additionally, the Raiders as a rookie unit have combined for more scores than any other rookie class this season.

The rookie class scored at least one touchdown in seven consecutive games from Week 4 against the Indianapolis Colts to Week 11 against the Cincinnati Bengals. They have failed to reach the end zone only five times this season: Weeks 2, 3, 12, 13 and 15. In Week 11, the Raiders tied a franchise record for most touchdowns by a rookie class in one season, tying the 14 scored in 1982 by the rookie class. In Week 14, they set a new club record with 15.

TEAM NOTES

KEEP YOUR CARR CLEAN

In 2016, the Raiders posted a league-best 18 sacks allowed, the fewest by the club since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger. With 24 sacks surrendered in 2017, the unit tied for the third-fewest sacks given up league wide. In Week 1 of the 2019 campaign, the Raiders made a statement, surrendering zero sacks or hits against the Denver Broncos' well-renowned defensive front. It marked just the third time since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger that the Raiders have held their opponent to zero sacks in the season opener. Since then, the Raiders have remained stout in pass protection.

10.	Pittsburgh	30

The Raiders have held four opponents without a sack thus far in 2019. After doing so against the Broncos in Week 1, the team held the Bears' defense to zero sacks in Week 5 for just the second time since 2017. The team followed up that performances with two more shutouts: one in Week 7 against the Green Bay Packers and again in Week 8 against the Texans. At the time, the Packers were the only team in the league with two players that each had at least five sacks on the year. The Raiders are currently one of five teams in the NFL that have held at least four teams without a sack.

ANCHORING THE LINE

Since arriving to the club in 2015, C Rodney Hudson has been an integral part of the Raiders success up front. Dating back to his arrival, the offensive line has surrendered just 151 total sacks, the fifth-fewest allowed in the NFL during that span.

Anchoring the line once again in 2019, C Rodney Hudson was ranked by Pro Football Focus as the NFL's No. 2 center last season. He tallied 1074 snaps and did not to surrender a sack, while allowing just one hit and four quarterback hurries. To put it in perspective, no other center with at least 1,000 snaps last season allowed fewer than eight hurries. Through Week 16 of 2019, Hudson has not allowed a sack or hit in 476 pass-blocking snaps and leads the NFL with a 99.8 pass-blocking efficiency rating by PFF.

CARR'S INSURANCE

In the 2019 free agency period, the Raiders bolstered their offensive line, adding Super Bowl Champion, 6-foot-8, 380-pound offensive tackle Trent Brown into the mix of an already talented group of lineman up front. The addition of Brown gave the Raiders starting front five that averages a height of 6-foot-5 and weight of 336 pounds. Brown has started in 54 of his 57 total appearances in his career and has started in all three postseason contests. He helped hold four different opponents to zero sacks this season, making the Raiders one of only five clubs in the NFL to have four such games. Brown also paved the way for the first 100-yard rookie rusher in franchise history and earned his first Pro Bowl nod. According to Pro Football Focus, Brown surrendered just one sack in 326 pass blocking plays before being placed on IR.

CLELIN FERRELL

DE Clelin Ferrell was drafted in the first round (fourth overall) of the 2019 NFL Draft. A prolific three-year starter at Clemson, Ferrell started in all 44 appearances and helped the school capture two National Championships in 2016 and 2018. Over his career, he totaled 166 tackles, including 50 for loss, 27 sacks, seven passes defensed, five forced fumbles and two fumble recoveries. Ferrell's career sack total ranked tied for fourth in Tigers history, and he left Clemson as just the second player in school history to tally two first-team All American honors from the Associated Press. He also became just the third player in Clemson history to earn the first-team honor as either a freshman or sophomore. As a senior in 2018, Ferrell won the Ted Hendrick's Award, given to the nation's top defensive end.

TEAM NOTES

T-DUB

The Raiders welcomed a new leader to the defense in 2018 with the signing of LB Tahir Whitehead. Since 2016, Whitehead has recorded three 100-plus tackle seasons after surpassing the 100-tackle mark in Week 14 last season. Whitehead became just the sixth Raider to surpass 125 tackles in a single season. In Week 16, Whitehead crossed 100 tackles for the fourth consecutive season.

7.	Landon Collins	437
8.	Benardrick McKinney	430
9.	Lavonte David	423
10.	Todd Davis	414

Whitehead led the Raiders with 126 tackles in 2018, the seventh-most by a linebacker in club history, while ranking ninth-most in the NFL this past season.

HARRIS' HOUSE CALL

S Erik Harris recorded two interceptions, including one returned for a touchdown, in the first quarter of Week 10's contest for the first time since Joe Haden did so in 2013. He's just the sixth player to do so dating back to 1991. It was Harris' second interception returned for a touchdown this season, after intercepting Jacoby Brissett in the fourth quarter of Week 4's contest against the Colts to seal a Raiders victory. Harris is the first Raider to return two interceptions for a touchdown in a single season since Thomas Howard did so in 2007.

Harris currently ranks tied for second in 2019 with two defensive touchdowns.

DEREK CARR

CARR AT THE HELM

QB Derek Carr was named the Raiders' starting QB heading into the 2014 season, becoming the first rookie QB in team history to start in Week 1. Carr has grown into one of the league's top QBs, as he became the second QB in NFL history to complete at least 300 passes in each of his first six seasons. Carr set a new franchise mark in 2018 for most consecutive pass attempts without an interception (332) and single-season completion percentage (68.9 percent). Carr ranks first in club history with 22,111 yards through the air and third with 141 passing scores. In 2016, he became the first QB in franchise history to throw for 3,000 yards in each of his first three seasons and led seven fourth-quarter comebacks en route to winning the NFL's Castrol Edge Clutch Performer of the Year award.

TD-INT RATIO

Among Carr's great talents as a quarterback is his ability to protect the ball and minimize turnovers. Through the first five years of his career, there have been few to ever do it better than Carr when it comes to touchdown-to-interception ratio.

Carr's 2.29 TD-INT ratio (142/62) is fifth-best in NFL history among QBs with 3,000-or-more attempts. Shown below is the elite company Carr has joined with those numbers:

Rank	Player	Team	Ratio

THREE-TD GAMES

Through his first 53 games, Carr put up some of the most prolific numbers in NFL history, as he ranks tied for third with the most three-touchdown performances to start his career. See Below:

Rank	Player	Team	3-TD Games
1.	Dan Marino	Dolphins	22
2.	Kurt Warner	St. Louis	21
3t.	Derek Carr	Oakland	14
3t.	Peyton Manning	Indianapolis	14
3t.	Aaron Rodgers	Green Bay	14
3t.	Matthew Stafford	Detroit	14

Now in Year 6, Carr has totaled 18 career games with at least three touchdown passes. The Raiders are 12-6 when Carr tosses three touchdowns or more. The chart below shows where Carr ranks in club history.

 Carr's 17 such games through his first five seasons rank first in club history, with Tom Flores' six such games ranking second. Among all quarterbacks in NFL history under the same criteria, Carr's 17 games with at least three touchdown passes are currently tied for sixth-most with Matthew Stafford and Johnny Unitas.

DEREK CARR

LEADING THE CLASS

As a rookie in 2014, Carr led his draft class in completions (348), passing yards (3,270) and touchdowns (21). His prolific rookie campaign ranks among the best in NFL annals. He has continued to excel compared to both the 2014 draft class and the NFL in general.

RECORD STREAK

From midway through the team's Week 5 (2018) contest against the Los Angeles Chargers to the opening quarter of their Week 17 matchup with the Kansas City Chiefs, QB Derek Carr did not throw an interception. A span of nearly 12 games and totaling a remarkable 332 pass attempts, Carr broke the previous franchise record set by Rich Gannon in 2001 (277) for most consecutive passes without an interception and etched himself among NFL history.

HIGHLY RATED

Over the last four seasons, Carr has emerged as one of the league's leading passers. His passer rating improved by 14.5 points from his rookie season in 2014 to 2015, and by 5.6 more in 2016, helping him post the ninth- and third-best ratings in franchise history. Carr bounced back in 2018 with the second-best mark of his career, earning a 93.9 passer rating. Here is how Carr's 2015, 2016 and 2018 seasons stack up among the best passing campaigns in Raiders history:

----- RAIDERS SINGLE-SEASON PASSER RATING -----

9.	Derek Carr	2015	32/13	91.1

*Note: Min. 14 attempts/team game.

Carr is just one of two quarterbacks in club history, joining Rich Gannon, to record three seasons with a 90-plus passer rating. He also ranks tied eighth in NFL history with three such seasons in his first five years in the league.

4,000-YARD CLUB

With 185 yards in the 2018 season finale against the Kansas City Chiefs, QB Derek Carr surpassed the 4,000-yard barrier for the first time in his career. Carr became just the third quarterback in franchise history to hit the mark, joining Carson Palmer and Rich Gannon. Carr's mark of 4,049 yards this year ranks second in club history, as he currently holds three of the top-5 single-season passing performances in club history.

FRANCHISE RECORD

In Week 2 of QB Derek Carr's sixth year in the NFL, he cemented himself as the club's all-time passing yards leader with a 16-yard completion to TE Darren Waller in the second quarter, breaking the record held by Hall of Fame QB Ken Stabler since 1979. Carr became just the 15th quarterback in NFL history to surpass 19,000 passing yards in 80 career games or less, as his 19,196 yards ranked 12th through a player's first 80 career contests. A look below shows the club's top-5 passing leaders in franchise history. He surpassed the 20,000 barrier in his 84th game.

DEREK CARR

THROWING FOR SIX

Carr has enjoyed one of the most prolific starts to a career in NFL history, especially when it comes to finding the end zone. His 53 TDs rank second most by any NFL player through his first two seasons, trailing only Dan Marino (68). And although his 2016 season was cut short due to injury, he continued his stellar start to his career by throwing 28 more TDs in his third season. His 142 TDs are also 10th-most in the NFL since 2014.

Carr crossed the 100-touchdown barrier just 60 games into his NFL career, the quickest to reach 100 passing scores in Raiders history. By doing so in his first four seasons, Carr joined Dan Marino, Peyton Manning, Andrew Luck and Russell Wilson as the only quarterbacks in NFL history to toss 100 touchdowns through their first four seasons in the league.

RAIDERS ELITE

Carr threw 32 TD passes in 2015, giving him the second most TD passes in a season in franchise history behind Daryle Lamonica's 34 TDs in 1969. Lamonica also threw 30 TDs in 1967, making him and Carr the only Raiders to throw 30-plus TD passes in a season.

CARR IN CRUISE CONTROL

In Week 2 last season against the Denver Broncos, QB Derek Carr put together one of the greatest single-game performances in NFL history when he completed 29 of his 32 pass attempts for a 90.6 completion percentage. Among quarterbacks with at least 20 pass attempts in a contest, Carr's mark against the Broncos ranks fifth all-time, while standing as the best single-game percentage in club history. Only nine quarterbacks in NFL history have crossed the 90 completion percentage barrier among the same criteria. On the season Carr ranked fifth in the NFL with a 68.9 completion percentage.

MAXX CROSBY

MADD MAXX

DE Maxx Crosby was drafted in the fourth round (106th overall) of the 2019 NFL Draft. Crosby appeared in 37 contests during his career with Eastern Michigan, starting in all 24 games in his final two seasons with the school. Over his career, he totaled 162 tackles (73 solo), including 41 for loss, 20 sacks, one interception returned for a touchdown, four passes defended, eight forced fumbles and four fumble recoveries. Crosby's tackles for loss and sack total over his career both rank second in Eastern Michigan lore. As a senior in 2018, he notched an All-MAC First Team honor, becoming just the third defensive player in school history to garner the accolade in consecutive seasons and just the fourth Eagle defender overall to earn the honor twice over their career.

Crosby has become a game-changer on defense this season and earned AFC Defensive Player of the Week honors in Week 11 after recording a Raiders rookie record four sacks, a mark that is tied for second-most in NFL history among rookies.

JOSH JACOBS

JOSH JACOBS

With the 24th overall selection in the 2019 NFL Draft, the Oakland Raiders selected RB Josh Jacobs to be their bell-cow back out of the University of Alabama. After earning the starting role at the conclusion of his first training camp, Jacobs made his rookie debut on Monday Night Football at home against the Denver Broncos.

With 23 carries for 85 yards and two rushing scores, while adding one reception for 28 yards, Jacobs became the first player since RB LaDainian Tomlinson (2001) to tally two rushing TDs and 100 yards from scrimmage in his rookie debut. Jacobs also became the first player in franchise history to score two rushing TDs in his NFL debut. Since then, Jacobs has taken the NFL by storm, becoming the first rookie in franchise history to earn two NFL Offensive Rookie of the Month honors (October and November), while racking up five 100-yard performances and also breaking Marcus Allen's franchise rookie rushing record set in 1982 for total rushing yards and 100-yard contests. Jacobs also became the 21st player in NFL history with 1,000 rushing yards through his first 12 career contests. A look below shows Jacobs' rushing statistics 16 weeks into his rookie campaign.

DARREN WALLER

DARREN WALLER

Last season, TE Darren Waller was signed by the Oakland Raiders off of the Baltimore Ravens' practice squad. Waller flashed his athleticism in his second game as a Raider in Week 15 against the Cincinnati Bengals, posting a career-long 44-yard reception and 21-yard rush in the same contest. This offseason, Waller built upon his strong finish to the 2018 campaign and earned the starting role out of training camp. Thirteen weeks into his first full season with the Silver and Black, Waller currently leads the team in receptions and receiving yards. Waller's receptions (84), receiving yards (1,038), receiving touchdowns (three) and first-down receptions (50) are all career highs.

Raiders stay in playoff hunt, beat Chargers: Studs and duds

By Jerry McDonald

December 22, 2019

CARSON — The Raiders flipped the second-half script, snapped a four-game losing streak and stayed alive for an NFL playoff berth Sunday with a 24-17 win over the Los Angeles Chargers at Dignity Health Sports Park.

It was the last game for the Chargers at their temporarily home before becoming tenants of the Rams next season, and the first time the Raiders have won there despite a decided home-field advantage in terms of rooting interest.

The Raiders (7-8) have had issues in the second half this season, the third quarter in particular, as was the case in last week's 20-16 loss to Jacksonville in the Coliseum.

But the Raiders drove 75-yard with their first possession of the second half, taking 8:49 off the clock, with DeAndre Washington scoring on a 6-yard run. A later 75-yard drive ending in Daniel Carlson's 48-yard field goal ate another 7:36 of clock time.

Raiders cornerback Trayvon Mullen was injured in a collision with teammate Curtis Riley just before the two-minute warning and was taken from the field on a stretcher.

The Raiders also lost slot corner Lamarcus Joyner and corner Nick Nelson during the course of the game and went into it without running back Josh Jacobs, guard Richie Incognito and tackle Trent Brown. Despite it all, the Raiders go in to next Sunday's finale in Denver with a chance at being a wild card team.

"It's a great stride that we made. We have a lot of new rookies and players that we signed in the last six weeks," coach Jon Gruden said. "We're doing everything we can to bring this franchise back. We have a long way to go, but today is an obvious step in the right direction. We're going to go see the trainer to see who we have available next week. We lost a lot of guys"

Some studs and duds:

STUDS

Derek Carr: Put together a flawless two-minute drill after the Raiders had given up the game-tying touchdown to the Chargers.

Taking over with 1:47 to play in the half, Carr completed 8 of 9 passes for 72 yards, his only incomplete pass a throw-away near the goal line, and scored on a 3-yard rollout to his right to put the Raiders up 14-7.

Carr finished the half 16 of 20 for 217 yards and the 56-yard touchdown pass to Renfrow on the opening drive. He was 26 of 30 for 291 yards and no turnovers in the game.

"Let's be honest. No one thought we' play week 17 for the playoffs," Carr said. "Let's be real."

DeAndre Washington: Took over as the lead ballcarrier with Josh Jacobs out of the lineup and produced some tough runs, including a 6-yard touchdown run on the Raiders' opening possession of the second half. Washington closed out the game with a first down and finished 85 yards on 23 carries.

"It's a great feeling, man," Washington said. "It felt like a home game for us, and to do that in front of a home crowd was a great feeling. It's a crazy league, man. No matter what happens, you've got to show up every week. We need to get another win this week and keep ourselves in it. Let's see what happens."

Hunter Renfrow: On the Raiders opening possession, Carr found Renfrow on a slant pass and the rookie found nothing but green grass in front of him. It went for a 56-yard scoring play. Renfrow had missed the previous three games with a broken rib sustained against the New York Jets.

Renfrow also had key catches on the Raiders' late first-half touchdown drive and had five receptions for 96 yards in the half. Renfrow finished with seven receptions for 107 yards and did much of his damage on third down. The 100 yards was, somewhat surprisingly, a statistical milestone.

"They told me on the sideline. In high school or college, I'd never had a 100-yard game," Renfrow said. "Usually I'd have like 96 but I'd never get over the hump. It was good and it was good because we needed it to win."

Gruden said during the week Renfrow would play, but hinted only of "getting him on the grass" and there was no indication his role would be substantial.

Clelin Ferrell: A fourth-quarter sack of Philip Rivers put the Chargers into a third-and-20 play which led to a punt and the Raiders getting the ball back with a two-score lead. Ferrell has 3.5 of his 4.5 sack total against the Chargers this season.

Daryl Worley: Worley, who missed the Jacksonville game with a neck injury, was back in just about every position as the Raiders saw Joyner, Nelson and finally Mullen go down.

"I can't say enough about what Worley did today," Gruden said. "He was out, didn't play last week. We asked him to move to safety. All our corners got hurt so we asked him to play nickel. . Then our nickel got hurt and we said go play corner."

Run defense: The Chargers tried, but got nowhere on the ground. They had 16 carries for 19 yards for the game.

"They were getting in the right calls, slants, beating us one-on-one or our backs weren't seeing it right," Chargers running back Austin Ekeler said. "For whatever reason, we were getting stuffed and even losing yards. It's hard to get your offense going when they make you one-dimensional."

DUDS

Raiders penalties: The Raiders defense was doing good work against the Chargers, but three penalties led to a 78-yard, eight-play drive by the Chargers and a 1-yard touchdown run by Melvin Gordon.

The first was a debatable pass interference flag against Nevin Lawson against Mike Williams on a pass well over their heads. That was on third-and-9. Then came another first down on a five-yard illegal contact by Lawson. Finally, Keisean Nixon interfered with Williams in the end zone to set up Gordon.

Two-minute pass defense: The Raiders allowed the Chargers to drive the length of the field late in the fourth quarter with a 10-point lead, with defenders allowing receptions at the boundary which enabled the clock to stop after each Rivers completion. The Raiders did stiffen, but Michael Badgley kicked a 27-yard field goal to make it 24-17 with 1:29 left.

Raiders pass protection: It got better on the last drive of the half, but Carr was sacked three times, with Melvin Ingram III getting 1 1/2 and Bosa getting one. The Raiders replaced right tackle Brandon Parker with David Sharpe midway through the second quarter.

Raiders beat Chargers, 24-17, keeping playoff hopes alive

By Matt Kawahara

December 22, 2019

CARSON, Los Angeles County — Entering Sunday, the Raiders' slim postseason hopes hinged not only on their beating the Chargers but on the results of four other games falling their way.

So ... Yahtzee!

The Raiders snapped their four-game losing streak with a 24-17 win over the Chargers and will head into the season's final week, improbably, still with a shot at the playoffs.

"I mean, I can't believe we're still in it. I'm thrilled," receiver Hunter Renfrow said. "We were talking before — we don't have a great chance, but we've got a chance."

They will, again, require help. The Raiders will need the Steelers and Titans to lose next Sunday and the Colts to win. They will, of course, need to beat the Broncos in Denver. And they would need strength of schedule to favor them over Pittsburgh for the final AFC wild card spot.

But despite a 7-8 record, and one year removed from a 4-12 season, they are still alive.

"It's a great feeling knowing we still have something to play for," safety Erik Harris said.

"It's a crazy league, man," running back DeAndre Washington said.

"No one thought we'd play Week 17 for the playoffs," said quarterback Derek Carr. "Let's just keep it real."

The day began ideally for the Raiders, who needed and received wins by the Ravens, Colts, Jets and Saints leading into their game at Dignity Health Sports Park. At the Chargers' temporary home, they were greeted by a spirited, decidedly pro-Raiders crowd.

"Everyone kept saying last week was our last home game," Carr said. "I was like, you all know we go to L.A. next week, right? Every time we come here it's a home game."

After their defense forced a punt on the opening series, the Raiders scored on a quick strike. On 3rd-and-6, Carr threw a slant to Renfrow, who slipped a tackle and sprinted for the 56-yard touchdown.

"We weren't really swinging for the fences," Renfrow said, "but it worked out."

It was Renfrow's first catch in his return from a three-game absence due to a rib injury. Renfrow said last week he and Carr were "starting to hit a stride" before his injury. They found it again Sunday as Renfrow had seven catches for 107 yards — his first 100-yard game at any level.

"That's what he told me," Carr said with a smile. "I said, 'Wow, I thought you were the best receiver at Clemson.'"

The Raiders punted on their next four drives but held the lead, thanks to their defense forcing punts on its first five series. Since allowing 552 yards to the Titans, the Raiders' defense has allowed 262 and 284 total yards in its past two games. On Sunday, they held the Chargers to 19 rushing yards on 16 attempts and a 3-of-11 success rate on third down.

"I think it's obvious that when the front seven sets a tone for us shutting down the run and getting after the quarterback, it makes our job on the back end easier," Harris said. "Today, they really set the tone."

Philip Rivers, who completed 27 of 39 passes for 279 yards, led the Chargers on an eight-play touchdown drive — aided by three first downs via Raiders penalties — shortly before halftime, with Melvin Gordon's 1-yard run tying the game.

But Carr, who was 26-for-30 for 291 yards, responded by completing 8 of 9 throws on an 11-play drive that he capped with a 3-yard TD run. Rolling right, Carr found nothing open, ran for the pylon and fired the ball into the stands for emphasis.

"He is a much better athlete than people know about, and we have been trying to encourage him to do more of that," head coach Jon Gruden said. "L.A. did a nice job covering it and ... you need to be a threat to run. That's what he did today, and it was a big, big play for us."

Said Carr, who has fumbled multiple times in the past reaching for a pylon: "Let's just say the thought was to protect the football and make sure we were in."

A 13-play touchdown drive after halftime that used 8:49 off the clock gave the Raiders a 21-7 lead. With running back Josh Jacobs inactive, DeAndre Washington had seven carries for 33 yards on the drive and Jalen Richard had a 6-yard catch on 3rd-and-5 that set up Washington's 5-yard touchdown run.

It remains to be seen whether Jacobs can return from a shoulder injury to play next weekend. The Raiders, who lost several more players to injury Sunday, will be hobbled going into the season finale.

"It's a great stride that we've made," Gruden said. "We're doing everything we can to bring this franchise back. We have a long way to go. But today is an obvious step in the right direction."

Said Carr: "We've been through a lot of crap, and it is what it is — nobody cares at the end of the day, but we have. And to say that we're still playing Week 17 for something, that's unbelievable."

Raiders takeaways: What we learned from huge 24-17 win vs. Chargers

By Scott Bair

December 22, 2019

CARSON – The Raiders hit a four-team parlay Sunday morning.

The Indianapolis Colts, New Orleans Saints won, New York Jets and Baltimore Ravens all won.

Those results kept the Raiders in the playoff hunt. Those things only mattered if the Silver and Black snapped a four-game losing streak.

They handled business with a 24-17 victory over the Los Angeles Chargers at Dignity Health Sports Park, where the crowd was full of Raiders fans, moving to 7-8 with the win.

They need a series of super fortunate events to happen again next week to reach the postseason, but in the words of Lloyd Christmas, "so you're saying there's a chance."

Here are three takeaways from a victory the Raiders had to have.

Raiders finally snap the streak

The Raiders were 6-4 way back when, walking with a noticeable spring in their step heading into Week 12. They had a division title in their sights and a controllable path to a wild-card spot before them, benefits lost during a four-game losing skid filled with blowouts and bad news.

Rock bottom came last week in a disastrous loss to the Jacksonville Jaguars that could've prompted the Raiders to stay down for the count and lose out. They rallied instead, showing fortitude that has characterized a club dealing with adversity all season long.

Head coach Jon Gruden has poo-pooed playoff talk all year until this week, dangling that carrot in front of his team as a motivational tactic. The team was engaged all week and found a way to rally and win a game that still had meaning thanks to a crazy stretch of favorable morning game results.

Getting a victory here was impressive, leaving open the prospect the Raiders could reach .500 and maybe, just maybe, get to the postseason.

Offense wakes up

The Raiders have struggled to find offensive consistency in recent weeks, especially in games played without feature back Josh Jacobs. They solved that riddle Sunday with a productive day from DeAndre Washington, Jalen Richard and the play-action passing game.

Hunter Renfrow's return to the Silver and Black paid immediate dividends, with a 56-yard touchdown reception on the opening drive. Renfrow was as reliable as ever, with seven catches for 107 yards and a score.

Derek Carr was on point from jump street, going 26-of-30 for 291 yards and one touchdown. He also ran for another score at the end of the second quarter that set up a double score to end the first half and open the second half.

The Raiders scored a third-quarter touchdown for the first time in forever, building a firm lead that created some margin for defensive error.

Raiders play another home game

Los Angeles loves the Raiders. The team's host city from 1982-1995 has a rabid fan base here that came in droves, making this road trip feel like a home game. Silver and black jerseys dominated the stands, with roughly 85 percent of those in attendance cheering for the road team.

That was definitely a benefit in this game, with the Chargers offense often operating with a silent count in their final game at this soccer stadium temporarily housing an NFL team. The Bolts move into the grandiose SoFi Stadium next season, where Raiders fans will dominate those proceedings as well.

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Raiders keep playoff hopes alive with win over Chargers

By Vincent Bonsignore

December 22, 2019

CARSON, Calif — The Raiders' playoff hopes will live to see another day after they held on to beat the Los Angeles Chargers 24-17 on Sunday.

The Oakland win, in front of a decidedly Silver and Black crowd at Dignity Health Sports Park, coupled with losses by the Steelers and Titans and a win by the Colts, ensured that the Raiders will wake up next Sunday with a chance to advance to the postseason as an AFC Wild Card.

Three observations from the win over the Chargers:

Raiders show the ability to battle

Football is nothing if not a battle of attrition, and certainly the Raiders have battled as much as anyone dealing with a massive number of injuries. That frustrating trend continued on Sunday as they started the game without rookie running back Josh Jacobs, linebacker Marquel Lee, tackle Trent Brown and guard Richie Incognito. Then, as the game wore on, they lost cornerbacks Lamarcus Joyner, Trayvon Mullen and Nick Nelson.

Despite that, the Raiders barely batted an eye while continually plucking players off the bench or moving players around to fill holes.

One such player was Darryl Worley, who started the game at safety only to move to nickel corner to replace Joyner and then to perimeter safety when Mullen twice left the game with head and neck injuries.

"I can't say enough about what Worley did today," Raiders head coach Jon Gruden said.

In spite of losing four straight games to put their playoff hopes on life support, the Raiders have not given up.

"That's what great teams do. That's what great pro football teams do. That's what the Raiders are supposed to do," Gruden said. "They find a way."

Said Raiders quarterback Derek Carr: "I really hope that the message is, that's the culture that we have now. Everything we've been through, and let's not sugarcoat it, we've been through a lot of crap, right? ... And to say that we're still playing week 17 for something, that's unbelievable. That's really a good thing. Because I've been on teams in the past where when we're in those moments, we lose a couple games in a row and it's 'oh no.' This team never did that."

Carr finds another gear

A lot has been made about Carr not being willing to tuck the ball and run when needed. But for the second week in a row, he became a runner on a run-pass option play. As opposed to last week when a blown call by the game referee negated the impact of Carr's late-game sprint for a first down, there were no such mistakes on the 3-yard touchdown sprint to put the Raiders up 14-7 near the end of the first half.

Carr punctuated the score by throwing the ball into a sea of Silver and Black clad Raiders fans sitting in the back of the end zone.

"That was something we are really looking for and excited about," said Gruden. "He is a much better athlete that people know about, We have been trying to encourage him to do more of that."

For Carr, the decision was easy.

"When I came around the corner, obviously I went through my progression and I was like, oh, shoot, I can run it in," Carr said. On the play, Carr said if Chargers safety Derwin James had come up to stop him, he "would have dumped it over the top." When James did not, he ran it in.

Second half finally kind to Raiders

After being outscored 34-0 over their last four third quarters, the Raiders finally got untracked by scoring a touchdown on their opening drive of the second half to complete a 14-0 run that began with their last possession of the first half. In the process, they turned a 7-7 tie into a commanding 21-7 lead and were able to unleash their defense in a way they haven't been able to do the last four games.

"We always talk about doubling up," Carr said. "The goal is to always get that last possession of the (first) half, score, and then score again, however you get points. And we were able to do that and help our defense have a cushion. ... It was huge."

THE ATHLETIC

Hunter Renfrow keeps the Raiders in the playoff hunt — with a boost from a friendly LA crowd

By Vic Tafur

December 22, 2019

CARSON, Calif. — It's pretty bizarre and amazing that a season in which the Raiders played games in Winnipeg and London and then got booed off the field at their last home game in Oakland would be saved in Los Angeles.

Their redemption came not in their current home or their next home, but their other home.

It's also remarkable and absurd that a season that started with coach Jon Gruden drawing up most of his playbook for mercurial and explosive playmaker Antonio Brown would end up relying on calm and reliable fifth-round rookie Hunter Renfrow in Week 16.

But here we are. The Raiders kept their postseason hopes alive Sunday afternoon, as Renfrow had seven catches for 107 yards in a 24-17 win over the Chargers in front of an 80-percent Raiders crowd in Carson, Calif.

"No one thought we'd play Week 17 for the playoffs," quarterback Derek Carr said. "Let's keep it real."

The Chargers were not only booed when they took the field, but quarterback Philip Rivers had to call a timeout in the third quarter because he couldn't hear the play call.

"It was a Raiders home game, no doubt," rookie defensive end Maxx Crosby said. "The veterans were telling me last week, but I didn't know it was going to be like that. It was all Silver and Black. It was awesome."

"We had a tough stretch in the last few weeks and we needed all the help we could get," Gruden said. "It was cool to see them out there."

The Raiders (7-8) came into Sunday needing nine outcomes to go their way the final two weeks of the season to make the playoffs, including two wins on their part. Well, go ahead and cross off the first five, as the Colts, Ravens, Jets and Saints won before the Raiders did.

"I can't believe we're still in it," Renfrow said. "I'm thrilled. It's unbelievable, really. We don't have a great chance, but we have a chance. ... We're excited and it means nothing if we don't go and take care of business next week against Denver."

It will still mean something to Gruden, who came in with a team that had lost four straight and was without top running back Josh Jacobs and top offensive linemen Trent Brown and Richie Incognito. And then the Raiders lost three defensive backs (Trayvon Mullen, Lamarcus Joyner and Nick Nelson) to injury during the game.

"It was a great win for the team," Gruden said. "We fought hard and I'm proud of them."

And, oh yeah, one more thing.

"I'm really happy the referee didn't screw up the clock again at the end of the game," Gruden said.

Ah, yes, the blown call in last week's loss to the Jaguars, in which the official ignored Carr taking a knee inbounds and stopped the clock instead of letting it run. The stopped clock played a big part in the loss and the league later apologized, and Gruden now compares that call to the infamous Tuck Rule call in the 2001 postseason.

"I'm not going to let that go," he said.

But Gruden will hold on to the significance of being in the playoff race in Week 17. It is only the third time in the last 17 years that the Raiders have not been mathematically eliminated going into the last week — they had already clinched a spot in 2016 and could have won the AFC West with a win in 2011.

"It's a great stride that we made," Gruden said. "We have a lot of new players, rookies and players that we signed here in the last six weeks. We're doing everything we can to bring this franchise back.

"We have a long way to go, but today is an obvious step in the right direction. We are going to see the trainer to see who we have available next week."

There was some good news Sunday night about Mullen, who had to be carried off the field on a stretcher with 2:05 left with a neck injury. (Teammate Curtis Riley went for the knockout shot on the Chargers' Austin Ekeler, and nailed Mullen instead, the second time Sunday Mullen was hit by one of his own teammates.)

Mullen visited the hospital after the game — "the signs are pretty good," Gruden said — and he was able to fly home with the team.

Mullen is part of a landmark rookie class that has taken turns hitting center stage. Sunday it was Renfrow's moment to shine in what was the 5-foot-10, 185-pound receiver's first game back after missing three games with broken ribs.

"He's a beast," Crosby said. "Hunter is a game-changer."

Five of Renfrow's catches came on third down, including the first one, where he caught a short slant, bounced off two defenders and ran 56 yards for a touchdown.

"You get the base hits, base hits, base hits, base hits ... then you get a home run," Renfrow said. "We weren't really swinging for the fences, but it worked out."

Renfrow wound up with the first 100-yard game of his life, having never done it in high school or at Clemson.

Carr said "obviously the chemistry is there," but also credited Gruden for designing plays to combat the different looks the Chargers gave them.

"I can get through the progressions faster this year," Carr said.

Carr finished 26 of 30 for 291 yards and a touchdown pass, but Gruden was more impressed with his 3-yard scoring run that put the Raiders up 14-7 at the half.

“That was something that we were really looking for and excited about,” Gruden said. “He is a much better athlete than people know about and we have been trying to encourage him to do more of that. It was a bootleg designed for (Darren) Waller and the fullback. LA did a nice job to cover it. That’s what you need to be. You need to be a threat to run and that’s what he did today.”

DeAndré Washington also did a nice job of running the ball, and finished with a combined 106 yards of rushing and receiving.

The Chargers were getting pressure early, sacking Carr three times and hitting him three other times in the first half. But the Raiders replaced right tackle Brandon Parker with David Sharpe, and left tackle Kolton Miller also gave fill-in left guard Denzelle Good a lot of credit.

“Sharpe was huge, and Good was cleaning out guys the whole game,” Miller said. “I thought I was in great position against (Joey) Bosa on that first sack, but his hips are so mobile ... somehow he still he got inside. We made adjustments and kept Derek clean.”

The defense, meanwhile, started out strong. Linebacker Will Compton and cornerback Nevin Lawson were flying around and the Raiders forced the Chargers to punt on their first five possessions.

After running for 146 yards on 30 carries in their first matchup against Raiders last month, the Chargers were held to 19 yards on 16 carries Sunday.

“The plan was that we needed to stop the run,” Crosby said. “And I thought we did a great job doing that. And we didn’t get a ton of sacks (one), but we got pressure on him.

“It’s been a super-tough month, but we came out with a lot of energy and we need to carry that over to next week.”

Too bad the Raiders can’t flex the game to Los Angeles.

The fans showered the Raiders with love, and Carr basked in the emotions after his touchdown run, throwing the ball in the stands and urging fans to get louder. It was a nice moment, especially after he had been booed when he went to visit fans in the Black Hole the previous week.

“We knew a lot of those people were going to be at this game, so we wanted to make sure that this week, we really took care of business for them,” Carr said. “The Black Hole yelling at me ... but it’s all love. I love Raider Nation and there’s nothing like it.”

There’s been nothing like this wacky season, that’s for sure, and it isn’t over yet.

Raiders? Playoffs? So you're telling me there's a chance?

By Paul Gutierrez

December 22, 2019

CARSON, Calif. -- To quote Lloyd Christmas (three days before Christmas), "So you're telling me there's a chance?"

The Oakland Raiders entered Sunday needing 10 things to happen in these last two weeks of the season to, gulp, qualify for the playoffs. Four of those things went their way before their game at the Los Angeles Chargers entered the second quarter.

The Pittsburgh Steelers, Tennessee Titans and Cleveland Browns all lost, and the Indianapolis Colts won. A Raiders' win against the Chargers would officially keep Oakland alive heading into the final week of the season, despite so many scheduling issues, so much roster shuffling and a four-game losing streak.

Done deal, as Oakland beat the Chargers 24-17 in front of a massively pro-Raiders crowd at ROKiT Field at Dignity Health Sports Park.

A few more things need to happen next week, of course, and it obviously includes the Raiders, who ended a four-game losing streak to improve to 7-8, winning at Denver, as well as a Steelers loss to Baltimore, a Titans loss to the Texans and a Colts win against the Jaguars.

Describe the game in two words: Still alive. As unlikely as it seems, and as outlandish as it sounds, the Raiders remain alive for the sixth and final spot in the AFC playoffs.

Buy a breakout performance: DeAndré Washington more than acquitted himself well in starting for injured rookie running back Josh Jacobs. Washington sealed the game with a tough 13-yard run on third-and-10 on the final play. Washington rushed for 85 yards on a career-high 23 carries, including a 5-yard TD run. The Raiders will need more of that next week in Denver should Jacobs' injured right shoulder again keep him out.

QB breakdown: Derek Carr took off for the right pylon late in the second quarter from 3 yards out and you could hear the collective voice of Raider Nation scream, "Don't dive!" or "Two hands!" Indeed, Carr lost a fumble through the end zone at Green Bay this year and against Dallas two years ago. Carr kept the ball tucked and won the race to the pylon for the go-ahead TD just before halftime. Carr, working behind a makeshift offensive line, operated as well as could be expected, despite being sacked three times in the first half. He passed for 291 yards in completing 26 of 30 attempts with a TD.

Pivotal play: Let's go with the thing that got the offense rolling in the first half. Taking a simple slant pass from the left slot, rookie Hunter Renfrow bounced off Desmond King II and was gone, 56 yards to the house. It was Renfrow's first catch in his first game back since he suffered a broken rib at the New York Jets on Nov. 24. It came with 10:57 to play in the first quarter, setting a certain tone for him. Renfrow, a fifth-round draft pick, finished with a career-high seven catches for a career-best 107 yards. As noted by ESPN Stats & Information research, it was Renfrow's first career 100-yard receiving game in 65 games between his time in Clemson and Oakland.

Raiders Keep Playoff Hopes Alive With Victory Over Chargers

By Joe Reedy

December 22, 2019

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — Derek Carr and the Oakland Raiders will go into the final week of the season still having a chance for the playoffs after Sunday's 24-17 victory over the Los Angeles Chargers snapped a four-game losing streak.

Oakland (7-8) still has a chance after losses by Pittsburgh, Tennessee and Cleveland. It needs a win over Denver next week and some help for only their second postseason trip since 2003.

Raiders coach Jon Gruden said he didn't know about the results from earlier games when his kicked off.

"Let's not sugarcoat it, we've been through a lot. To say we are still playing in Week 17 for something, that's unbelievable," said Carr, who completed 26 of 30 passes for 292 yards and a touchdown. "No one thought we would be playing for the playoffs. Let's just keep it real."

Carr gave the Raiders a 14-7 lead with 8 seconds remaining with a 3-yard bootleg off right end. But Carr — whose 86.7% completion rate is his second highest in a game — also got plenty of help from players who have had to step up because of injuries.

Hunter Renfrow had seven receptions for 107 yards, including a 56-yard touchdown on the opening drive. DeAndre Washington started in place of Josh Jacobs, who was inactive because of a shoulder injury, and ran 85 yards rushing on 23 carries. His 5-yard score midway through the third quarter extended Oakland's lead to 21-7.

"That's what great pro football teams and the Raiders are supposed to do. They find a way," Gruden said. "I'm really happy for these guys tonight."

Melvin Gordon scored a pair of 1-yard touchdowns for the Chargers (5-10), who have dropped five of their past six. Philip Rivers was 27 of 39 for 279 yards in what could be his final home game with the Chargers. The 16-year veteran quarterback's contract expires at the end of the season. Keenan Allen had five receptions for 71 yards.

"They dictated the pace of the game. They outplayed us," coach Anthony Lynn said. "We lost too many one-on-ones and critical situations."

The game was tied at 7 late in the first half, but Oakland took control with touchdowns on two straight drives. Carr's run put the Raiders up for good and Washington's score completed a 13-play possession to start the second half which lasted 8:49.

"We were able to give our defense a cushion by getting points on both drives," Carr said.

Michael Badgley's 27-yard field goal with 1:29 remaining brought the Chargers within a touchdown, but Oakland recovered the onside kick and ran out the clock.

RENFROW'S MILESTONE

Renfrow had to wait until he got in the NFL for his first 100-yard receiving game. The rookie said he didn't have one in high school and the closest he got at Clemson was 93 yards as a freshman.

He got more than half his yards in the first quarter on the 56-yard touchdown from Carr. Renfrow caught it at the LA 47 on a slant route, eluded an arm tackle from Desmond King and outraced Rayshawn Jenkins to the end zone.

"Usually I had like 96, but I'd never get over the hump," Renfrow said. "It was good because we needed it to win."

RAIDERS' PATH TO THE PLAYOFFS

Oakland needs to beat Denver next Sunday, needs losses by the Titans at Houston and Steelers at Baltimore along with Indianapolis beating Jacksonville.

That would create a four-way tie. Oakland would win the tiebreaker over Pittsburgh based on strength of victory and Indianapolis by virtue of its win in Week 4. The Colts would eliminate Tennessee by having a better division record.

GOODBYE, CARSON

It was the Chargers' final game in Carson before they move into the new stadium at Hollywood Park next season with the Rams. They were 11-11 over three seasons in the 27,000-seat facility built for soccer and 2-5 this year.

Even though the schedule listed it as a Chargers home game, the crowd was predominately silver and black.

"Everyone kept saying last week was our last home game, it wasn't," Carr said. "Every time we come here it is a home game. We didn't use the silent count, they did. We wanted to make sure we came out of this week and took care of business for our fans."

Rivers said some of the Chargers have gotten used to being a visitor on their own field and hopes that changes when they move into their palatial new home.

"Being someone that remembers what it used to be like in home games, it's pretty bad. It's disheartening to say the least," he said. "I don't think all our guys understand that, but the guys that have been here a long time certainly know what it used to be like."

INJURIES

Raiders: Cornerback Trayvon Mullen (neck) collided with safety Curtis Riley on a reception by Andre Patton during the fourth quarter. He was taken off on a stretcher but was moving his arms.

UP NEXT

Raiders conclude the regular season next Sunday at Denver. Oakland won the first meeting 24-16 in Week 1.

Chargers: wrap up the year at Kansas City next Sunday. Los Angeles has dropped 10 of its last 11 against the Chiefs, which included a 24-17 loss in Mexico City in Week 11.

THE ATHLETIC

What's your favorite Jon Gruden story? Players, coaches share

By Greg Auman

Aug. 6, 2019

HBO's "Hard Knocks" show is following the Oakland Raiders this summer, and it premieres tonight. In anticipation of what's sure to be some entertaining television, thanks in no small part to head coach Jon Gruden, we reached out to former coaches, players and colleagues from all steps of his career.

The question was simple: What's your favorite Jon Gruden story? And from his earliest days in coaching, even his modest playing days in college, to his long run on "Monday Night Football," the answers didn't disappoint.

Dayton coach: Gruden saw this coming as a backup QB at Dayton

Gruden played one year of football at Muskingum University in Ohio, then transferred to Dayton, where he had an unremarkable career as a backup quarterback for then-head coach Mike Kelly, now an assistant to the athletic director. Kelly estimates he's introduced Gruden 50 times at Flyers events and various Hall of Fame presentations over the years. Even 30-plus years later, Kelly remembers that Gruden had a very clear vision of what was ahead.

Jon was and still is, obviously, a very goal-oriented person, somewhat of a perfectionist in everything he did. Sometimes it got him into trouble. Not in a bad way, but he put so much pressure on himself that I couldn't get him to relax.

I would sit down with each one of our athletes, twice a year, and we go through their goals and objectives. What do you want to do today? What do you want to do this week? This month? This year? And after they graduate, I sit down with them. One of the questions I'd ask seniors who were leaving was, "What are you going to be doing 10 years from now?" Tell me exactly where you're going to be and what you're going to be doing.

Jon was sitting across from me, one on one in my office. He stood up, pointed his finger at me, and he says "Coach, I don't know what I'm going to be doing 10 years from now, but by the age of 40, I'm going to be the head football coach at Michigan." I thought "Oh, my gosh, this little guy, he's struggling to play at little old Dayton. How in the world is he going to be the head coach at Michigan?" End of story, at the age of 39, I won't name the university, but he turns down a major, major university — says "I'm very good where I'm at." The bottom line is he's goal-oriented, stayed on his track, had his goals in order and knew what he had to do. And, by golly, he did it.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The other story I always enjoy telling is he comes into my office his junior year (while) he's fighting to get playing time as a quarterback. I've heard him say he was the backup to the backup as a quarterback. He said, "Coach, I'm a pretty good punt returner." I'd never looked at him as a punt returner; he was a quarterback. I told him I thought he was all-state, the No. 1 punt returner in the state of Indiana. He said, "I was pretty darn good, and I'd like to have a crack at that back there."

I looked at him, stared at him, and said, "You want to go into coaching, right?" He said, "Yes, sir." I said, "When one of your quarterbacks wants to be a punt returner, what are you going to do? Are you going to stick your quarterback out there as your punt returner?" He didn't say a word, stood up, turned around and walked back out the door. In other words, "Right, Coach. I don't think it's a good idea."

Bill Maskill: Gruden got $15,000 and a room at the Drury Inn

Gruden's first full-time coaching job was in 1988 at Division II Southeast Missouri State, about two hours south of St. Louis in Cape Girardeau. Maskill, who still coaches at Midwestern State, hired Gruden and, when Gruden left, replaced him a year later with future Lions head coach and longtime NFL coordinator Marty Mornhinweg.

It was my first head-coaching job, and I inherited a staff, but one coach left the day I got there. My AD says, "You can hire a quarterbacks coach for $15,000." Another character involved in this was a guy by the name of Gary Horton, who was more instrumental in Jon's progress going up the ladder than anybody knows. Gary and I worked together at Arizona State in '78-'79. I called him, and he's going to all these different colleges, seeing all these coaches, and I say "Do you have anybody? I'm looking for a good, young quarterbacks coach." He says "I've got the guy for you."

It's my first job. I didn't know what the hell I was doing. I called his high school coach, called his Dayton coach, made enough calls to find out about Jon. What sold me is Gary tells me, "If you don't hire him, you'll wish you would have. He's going places." So Jon's in Knoxville, he's probably two and a half hours from Nashville, and it's another two and a half hours from Nashville to Cape Girardeau. So a five-to-six-hour drive, with a time difference, we're an hour earlier. I get to the office at 7 in the morning, and Jon is sitting on the steps, waiting for me for his first interview. I said, "What time did you get here?" and he said, "About 6:50." So he had to leave at about midnight to get there. You know, he doesn't sleep. He's one of those guys. That struck me quite a bit.

This is spring practice now, and I tell him we can put him on salary July 1 for $15,000, but in the meantime, all I can do is get you a motel room at the Drury Inn. He says, "OK, I'll do it." He goes back home, packs his bag, comes back. We put him up at the Drury, so he's getting a free breakfast there, and he coaches spring ball. During spring ball, he wrote up after every practice, graded the quarterbacks, the receivers, the tight ends and the running backs, all by himself. Jon did all that, put it on a grid sheet, made comments. We all stayed late, but he stayed later than most of us and got to the office earlier. That's impressive, and then when we got done with spring ball, to get some money just to live because we weren't paying him anything, he started working for a carpet company, tearing up carpet.

He made the sacrifices to go. Jon and I aren't close. I haven't talked to him in forever, but he reminded me of myself at that age. He had all the answers. He knew everything. Which is what everybody does when they're young coaches and they don't realize other people have knowledge. Jon has surpassed whatever I've done. Everybody asks if I knew Jon could be where he is today, and at that age, I really didn't know. I knew he was a worker, knew he was dedicated, knew he had passion. I was a hardass in my first job, and he was a hardass. We went back and forth, but he brought a lot to the table.

Everybody's running the I-formation, and Jon comes in with three wide receivers, which we hadn't done. Even though he wasn't the coordinator and he wasn't ready to be the coordinator, he had a lot of impact as to what we were doing. He coached the quarterbacks like a defensive line coach. He was hard on those guys. He was 24. They loved him.

I really wished we could have been closer than we are today. He obviously has a wealth of knowledge, knows the game inside and out, is a workaholic and has been very successful.

Harris, the former Pitt and Stanford coach, was the offensive coordinator at Tennessee in 1986 when Gruden got his first coaching job as a graduate assistant with the Vols. He'd later hire Gruden in 1989 as his tight ends coach at Pacific, which shut down its program in 1995.

Gary Horton contacted me about Jon coming down from Dayton for an interview at Tennessee. I said, "Sure, have him come down." He came down and he was dressed Midwest style vs. Southern/Tennessee style, almost like he had high heels on, really high shoes. He was all dressed up — sportcoat — and he was looking good. We teased him later about not being the tallest guy in the world. Neither am I.

Jon has an amazing ability to see and remember. Even at that young age, amazing. One thing I remember is Daryl Dickey had been our quarterback when we won the Sugar Bowl (in January 1986), beat Miami when they were No. 2 in the nation. We beat them 35-7 and Daryl was the MVP. Jon had gone off and gotten a full-time job (at Southeast Missouri State), and Daryl had been a GA, was helping me coach the quarterbacks.

Jon and his wife-to-be Cindy came to our final game (in 1988). It was so funny because Jon had been away for a year, and Daryl, who sat next to me in the press box, knowing how astute Jon is at helping, gave Jon his seat. "Hey, Coach, you sit here." Daryl gets out of the way, offers to get Cokes or waters or whatever we were drinking. Jon took over as my eyes in the sky, and it was like he'd never missed a day. It was amazing. Really impressive for being away for a year, to come back and act like it was the next day. Jon's very, very smart. He might make you think he's not, but he's very smart, very quick, great memory, great eyes, great recall, everything. He moved out of SEMO's offense and right back into our offense — terminology and everything — and did an unbelievable job in the press box. I was shocked.

At University of the Pacific, he was my tight ends coach. I thought it would be the best opportunity for him to learn offensive line play with tight ends as part of the run game and part of the passing game. He didn't like that initially. He wanted to coach receivers. I was coaching the quarterbacks, so he knew that wasn't an option. It was a good upbringing for him. Maybe someday he'll admit it. I don't know.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

We opened at (Pitt). The first pass we ever threw to a guy Jon Gruden coached, hit him right in the butt. Guy didn't even turn around. Our quarterback, who Jon recruited, hit the tight end right in the butt, never turned around. That was Jon's inaugural event in major college football.

George Seifert: Gruden learned from the best

Gruden's first NFL job was as an entry-level offensive assistant with the San Francisco 49ers in 1990, working on the staff of George Seifert, who had won a Super Bowl in his first year as head coach a year earlier. The Niners opened the year 10-0, finished 14-2 as division champs and lost in the NFC Championship Game to a Giants team that would win the Super Bowl a week later.

Anybody that was involved with the organization, particularly coaches, were impressed by how Coach Gruden always worked so hard to continue to gain knowledge about the sport. We had a particularly talented offensive line coach in Bobb McKittrick, and each time you'd pass Bobb McKittrick's meeting room as he was meeting with his offensive linemen, Jon was always in that meeting, involved in that meeting somehow.

He studied the offensive line blocking schemes that were utilized at that time as much or more than anyone I ever remembered. One of the reasons for the success of our offense was the ability of Bobb McKittrick to turn a fellow that might have been an average player — Bobb could coach him up, you might say, and turn that man into a talented offensive lineman.

(Gruden) made quite an impression on Mike Holmgren when Mike was an assistant on our staff at the time, and that's the reason they worked together for a period, along with Ray Rhodes. I'm totally retired and live in a different world right now than does Jon, but he's doing a fine job, and I look forward to following his success.

Ty Detmer: Don't forget Two Jet Flanker Drive

Gruden spent another six years as an NFL assistant, with the Packers and Holmgren from 1992-94, then with the Eagles as Rhodes' offensive coordinator from 1995-97. At both stops, he worked with former Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Ty Detmer, who helped the Eagles to a 10-6 record and a playoff appearance in 1996.

His energy sticks out to me. Always the first guy in the building, and he would always tell us stories about going through the tollbooth from Jersey to Philly at 3:30 in the morning. He was one of those guys who didn't sleep a lot during the season.

In Green Bay, he was a quality-control coach the first year, helped with the receivers, but I can remember him coming by in minicamp, and he's grilling me as we're in stretch: "Give me a formation for Two Jet Flanker Drive." He was that type of guy, always compiling film of plays he saw and he liked, even at that time. Then he became the receiver coach and had a lot of passion with those guys. He was football, 24 hours a day.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

That first stint in Green Bay, working his way up, Ray knew the football mind he had, the work he put in, so when he got the head coaching job, he felt real comfortable taking him to Philly as the offensive coordinator. You could tell a difference, whereas as a quality-control (coach), you're not as likely to be as vocal with the leadership qualities. When I got to Philly, you saw how he commanded the room and had the respect of the guys. You could see the difference and how he'd grown into that. I didn't have the opportunity to play for him as a head coach, but as a coordinator in Philly, he pretty much had the run of the offense.

I heard when he got to Tampa, some of the play calls were pretty lengthy (1:40 mark here), even more so than in Philly. I remember seeing a clip of Chris (Simms) and feeling bad for him. He kind of let him have it, but that was just his way of letting you know, "You've got to learn this stuff." That first minicamp, you're trying to remember everything, and they're throwing everything at you to shellshock you into studying more. People might think he's putting on a show, but that's just how he is — all the time.

Tyrone Wheatley: An ugly jersey number, a great run in Oakland

Gruden was only 33 when he became head coach of the Oakland Raiders, and after two 8-8 seasons, they won back-to-back division titles in 2000-01. A big, physical running back, Wheatley, after four seasons with the Giants, had his best years with Gruden, rushing for a combined 1,982 yards and 17 touchdowns in 1999-2000, all while wearing No. 47, a nontraditional number for a running back. Now 47 years old, Wheatley is in his first season as head coach at Morgan State.

He was very instrumental in my development as a player. He was always after me. His whole thing was, "You've got to grow! You can't just run two or three plays, Wee-Wee. You have to grow."

My very, very first time I met Gruden, I was leaving Miami, and I worked out for Oakland. He came out and said, "I have to see this guy Wheatley. I have to see what he's about." I ran my 40 and said, "I want to stay here and see what you're about. I'm not going on my next visit." He says "OK. But I tell you this: You better be prepared." I go in the locker room to get my equipment, and the equipment guy gives me (jersey number) 47. He says, "Listen, this is all we have. Once we make the cuts, we'll give you another jersey."

Gruden goes: "Make some cuts? Hell, he might be the next guy getting cut. Don't get too comfortable." I said, "Up until this point, I haven't been comfortable. My career has been ugly." And he says "Yeah, well, you're ugly." I said, "If that's the case, I'm keeping 47." He says, "Aw, shit, don't take that ugly number." I told him, "Just because you don't like it, I'm keeping it." So that was the birth of 47. People always ask me, "Why in the world would you wear 47?" That was the reason 47 came about. It was ugly, and I kept it. I made it work for me, work for the Raiders. I love the guy, man. He's a good dude and he means a lot to me.

Jay Gruden: Big brother was competitive at a young age

Jay Gruden followed in his brother's footsteps in becoming an NFL head coach with the Washington Redskins, and he got his NFL start as an assistant on Jon's staff with the Buccaneers. His Redskins have finished third in their division in each of the last three years. If they can both keep their jobs, the brothers' teams will face off during the 2021 season in Las Vegas.

Well, he's always been really competitive. I played on one of his baseball teams when I was 9 and he was 12. It was 0-0, there was a guy on first and second, two outs in the last inning. I was playing second base as a 9-year-old, and a guy hit a ground ball right to me, and it went right through my legs, and we lost the game. So he let me have it then, as a little 9-year-old. He got on me pretty good. He's always been very competitive.

A strong work ethic, strong desire to win at every level ever since he was a little kid, up into high school and college. Heck, in high school he had a bad neck injury and was able to overcome that and continued to play football. He's been very passionate and very competitive about the game of football. He used to battle fans when my dad coached at Notre Dame when the fans would talk bad about him, and he would go to war with these guys (laughter). He's just a very competitive guy. He just loves the game.

MNF's Jay Rothman: 'I want you to help make me great'

After Gruden was fired by the Bucs, he found another career in the broadcast booth on "Monday Night Football," with a successful nine-year run before he returned to the NFL with the Raiders last year. Rothman, who is the lead producer for "MNF" and helped hire Gruden in 2009, also produced 60 episodes of his "Gruden's QB Camp" series with top draft prospects from 2010-17.

I think about the very first meeting we had at the Gramercy Tavern (in Manhattan) when we recruited him to come to "Monday Night Football." This will be my 29th season producing football, and he made me better. He made our whole group better. We thought we loved the game, thought we knew the game, but he took that to a far greater level. His passion was infectious, (he) was a natural on TV, so much fun to work with, worked his ass off, total ball-buster. He was all of that, and I miss him.

We had a three-hour lunch recruiting him to "Monday Night Football," and he gave me his cell phone number on a napkin. I met outside the restaurant with other ESPN executives and said, "We've got to sign this guy." We had a very short deadline in which to sign him, and we all agreed we were going to make a run. I wound up taking a taxi back to Penn Station to take the Amtrak back to Connecticut, and I literally was going down the escalator, and he texted me. He said, "Would you mind coming back and having a few beers with me?" So I went back up the escalator, went back over, and his agent sat at the end of the bar drinking Ketel One, and Jon and I had a bunch of beers and spent another few hours together.

The one thing he said to me was, "I want you to help make me great." I'll never forget it. He said, "Al Davis tore my ass to shreds. There's nothing you can say that will hurt my feelings. I want you to make me the best that there ever, ever was." That was like a game-changer for me, because it opened it up. Producers in general, depending on the talent they have, can be ginger or whatever it might be. He opened the floodgates for us to have a relationship. A week before training camp, he texted me a picture of him and Cindy at the Gramercy Tavern.

They were not thrilled to be chosen to do “Hard Knocks.” And I’m being mild there: They were not happy about it, very vocal about that. Having said that, Jon’s not stupid. He and I spoke the night it was announced. He knows he needs to win. They were 4-12 and there’s pressure to win, and that’s his A-number-1 focus, I know that. Having said that, he has such a creative mind, so I’m excited to see the wrinkles he brings to “Hard Knocks.” One that I’ll bet you my house, my wife and children on will be how he integrates the alumni into the practice that inevitably will be on the show. He has such an unbelievable respect for the history of the Raiders. Them being around is very important to him. You’re going to see Jerry Rice and Tim Brown breaking the huddle with Derek Carr and Antonio Brown. It’s very important to him that the players know the roots and history for today’s Raiders.

Mayock and Gruden's mirror images in football philosophy began with burgers and beer

By Jerry McDonald

August 22, 2019

A few days before the 2009 draft, a room full of assorted NFL Network employees met for a production meeting in New York.

There was much to discuss, but it wasn't long before Mike Mayock and Jon Gruden were doing all the talking.

Mayock had been a draft analyst for the network since 2003. Gruden had just hit the open market after being fired as coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The two first met in Philadelphia in the mid-1990s, when Gruden was offensive coordinator of the Eagles and Mayock was working in commercial real estate but beginning a transition to broadcasting. They began communicating often about anything and everything to do with football.

But it wasn't until they were paired on the 2009 draft telecast that Gruden and Mayock discovered how much alike they were.

"It was pretty much just Jon and I doing the talking," Mayock said. "It was funny. They're asking us questions, and we'd segue into all kinds of things. I'd say something, and then he'd play off it. I felt an energy. There were 40 people in the room but just two of us talking ball."

Yet Gruden and Mayock weren't all talked out. When Mayock returned to his hotel room, his phone rang.

"It was Jon. He said, 'You think we could go find a place to have a beer and a burger?'" Mayock said.

The two met in the lobby and over cheeseburgers and cold beer began to break down a sport that has been the love of their lives other than their own families.

"We see the world similarly," Gruden said.

Both were born into football families. Gruden's father, Jim, spent his life in football, coaching in high school, college and the NFL until moving into personnel. He was working as a scout with the 49ers and helped Jon get an entry level position in the NFL.

Mayock's father, Mike Sr., played football at Villanova and was a football coach for 40 years. Mayock describes his father as a strong, silent disciplinarian who told players the truth.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

When Mayock played four seasons of football at the Haverford School in Pennsylvania, he was coached by his father, who never cut his son a break.

"I probably ran more sprints than anyone in the history of the program," Mayock said.

Mayock went on to play at Boston College and, like his father, was drafted by the Pittsburgh Steelers, although knee troubles forced him out of football.

Both made the most of their early positions in pro football. One of Gruden's responsibilities as a go-fer for the 49ers was to help Steve Young learn the playbook as he competed with Joe Montana.

Mayock, who was cut by the Steelers, joined the New York Giants in 1982 and as a rookie was given the job of making sure Lawrence Taylor was awake for meetings.

The world, according to Gruden and Mayock, has a 100-yard field and 53-man rosters. It values size, speed, intelligence and above all else a love for football. The topics open for discussion are endless, even over beers and burgers.

"We were getting deeper and deeper into philosophies and team-building, and I swear, it's like we're checking each other out, trying to figure out what we believe in, what we don't believe in," Mayock said.

Gruden's time with the NFL Network was brief, as he was hired by ESPN to do "Monday Night Football." But the two kept in touch. A future collaboration was never discussed, as Mayock's draft expertise dominated the NFL Network's coverage to the point where he'd had opportunities with NFL teams to work in personnel departments.

Mayock's work caught the eye of late Raiders owner Al Davis, who flew him in for an interview. Davis' interviews were lengthy and draining, as he attempted to extract as much information as possible in addition to learning about the person he was interrogating.

"I spent 10 hours in a room with Al Davis by myself," Mayock said. "We just bounced from topic to topic. The guy's memory for football people and events was off the charts, and you had to be on top of your game for 10 straight hours, which is exhausting."

Mayock wasn't hired, but last December he heard again from the Raiders, who were looking for a replacement for Reggie McKenzie. Mayock met the club in Kansas City, where the Raiders were finishing the regular season against the Chiefs.

Like the NFL Network production meeting, there were other people in the room, but most of the talking was done by Gruden and Mayock.

Gruden, who'd had his own interviews with Al Davis, employed a similar tactic. He tried to keep Mayock off-balance. After exchanging pleasantries, Gruden opened a folder, looked at it, and fired off his first question:

"Mike, you're 60 years old, born on Aug. 14, 1958. You're an old dude. Why do you want to do this?"

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Mayock's reply?

"Jon, you were born Aug. 17, five years later. You're not that young."

They both laughed, then proceeded to cover a myriad of issues and philosophies about talent, team-building and what makes winning football.

"Even though there were several people in the room, for the most part it was Jon and I going back and forth," Mayock said. "I think he was trying to drill down philosophically and see if we were a fit."

"We have a very similar big picture and a very similar tiny picture what the criteria of each individual player is we're looking for," Gruden said.

While known as borderline obsessive when it comes to film and preparation, even Gruden is impressed with Mayock's passion for the sport.

"He's just a high-energy guy. He beats to a different drum," Gruden said. "He loves to study tape. He loves to have one-on-one interaction with coaches and players. He'll study anything — Canadian Football League film, the league that played this spring. He just loves it."

Mike Mayock on the 2019 Draft, and Building the Raiders in the Mayock-Gruden Image

By Albert Breer

May 6, 2019

Someone raised an interesting point last week, and I honestly can't remember who it was, but the gist was simple: Maybe if Mike Mayock was still at NFL Network, we'd have a different opinion on Clelin Ferrell going fourth overall.

It's a fair point, too. How the football-watching public perceives a prospect is shaped largely by the media, and the Raiders GM carried a big stick in that arena after two decades of breaking the draft down on TV. So when we talked on Thursday, I had to ask the new exec, with whom I worked for six years, how he'd have reacted to Ferrell at 4 if he was on a set in Nashville rather than in a war room in Northern California.

"I don't think I would've been as surprised as a lot of the world," Mayock said, with a laugh. "At the end of the day, people act like the thought wouldn't occur to me to trade down and still get Cle. He was our guy, OK? And whether we got him at 4, 8, 10, it didn't matter. He was gonna be our guy."

"He's a foundation player. And even more importantly, he's a three-down defensive end who can stick his hand in the dirt and play on run downs and pass downs. He's not a guy who's going to be a designated pass-rusher. He's in there on every snap. And he's gonna set the tone for us, as far as these young guys are concerned. I couldn't wait to get to that pick."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

In my final “rumors” column that went up about three hours before the draft started, we did connect the Raiders to Ferrell. That was based on a couple tips I’d gotten. But, full disclosure, I didn’t think there was a chance they’d take him at 4, nor did the teams picking around them. In the end? I underestimated just how vital building around the right kind of guy—“our guy”—was going to be. I think most teams did, too.

So if there’s one thing that marks Mayock’s first class, that’s it, without question.

And here’s the thing: Mayock wasn’t even hiding it. He actually explained the “our guy” idea, repeatedly, before the draft. But saying it and driving it home like the Raiders did are two different things. And did Mayock ever drive it home, first with Ferrell, then with Alabama RB Josh Jacobs, then with Mississippi State S Johnathan Abram, then with Clemson CB Trayvon Mullen, and you get the picture.

Message sent. Message received. Over and over again.

“I felt like the entire draft was important that way,” Mayock said. “We had four of the first 35 picks, and I think if you look at those four picks, all of those guys share traits. They have a passion and a love for the game, and you can see it the way that they play. I think we were consistent throughout the draft, and I think we sent a message that Jon [Gruden] and I believe in. “Yeah, Cle was very important, but we felt like the consistency of the entire draft was just as important.”

The good news for Raiders fans, in my mind—there’s a lot of rhyme and reason to what Mayock and Gruden are doing. I don’t know if it’ll work or not. No one really does.

But this plan, which Mayock took me through, does make some sense.

So how does Mayock know that he’d have approached the Ferrell pick differently from most analysts if he were on TV for it? Because in the fall, he was preparing for the draft as if that was just where he’d be—which is when he first got smitten with the two-time First Team All-American. Which, in turn, is to say he actually knows what he would have said, for a fact.

“If you remember when Chris Long got drafted by St. Louis, he was the second pick, and when they drafted him, I knew the kind of player they were getting,” Mayock said. “Now, they were never able to successfully bring other guys around him, but Chris Long played his butt off every snap of every game, he set a physical edge in the run game, he got his 7, 8, 9, 10 sacks, and he energizes a locker room.

“He’s what I call a glue player. I looked at Ferrell back in September and October, and I watched three or four tapes and at the bottom of my notes, I wrote ‘glue/Chris Long.’ That’s the kind of guy, to me, who has more value than you can even put a number on. Chris hung in there, ended up in New England, gets a Super Bowl, goes to Philadelphia, gets another. Chris Long’s a glue guy. And I think Cle is also.”

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

So that, in a way, connects where Mayock was in the fall—watching kids on tape from his home in Philly—to where he wound up in the spring. But a lot happened in the time in between. And that's why, in the wake of his first draft with Gruden, as they assembled a class in their image of what a Raider will be, I figured it would make sense to double back with Mayock now and fill in a bunch of the blanks.

Here, then, is the New World of Mike Mayock four months in, according to the man himself.

The biggest adjustment. When I asked Mayock for his biggest blind spot, he didn't hesitate for a second. It was in pro scouting. And his responsibility in that area only grew when Raiders pro scouting director Dave Vandernat was fired in January. So really, while Mayock was hired for his work on the college side, the time from his start date to the March 13 open of free agency became a dead sprint through unfamiliar territory.

"I had to put aside everything else and just gear up with Jon on free agency," Mayock said. "The thing that was really intriguing, there was more of a volume of work that had to be done—by position, by free agent. And the only way you could do that was by watching tape. Jon and I and [director of football research] David Razzano and Jon's staff had to grind it pretty hard to get ready for free agency."

As they did that, the Raiders' cap people, led by Tom Delaney, worked to benchmark the market for every player, which didn't do a ton to settle nerves. "The fear of the unknown for me was, 'Wow, we're talking about spending 20, 30, 40, 50 million dollars, a lot of it guaranteed, on these guys,'" Mayock said. "We needed to get it right."

And just as quickly as a free-agent class headed by Trent Brown, Lamarcus Joyner and Tyrell Williams came together, it was over. "I just couldn't believe how quickly deals were getting done the day of free agency," Mayock said. "I just was like, 'Oh my god.' We took Trent Brown off the market immediately. And you look around the league and you're like, 'Wow, three-quarters of our board is already gone!'"

The relationship with Gruden. With all the work that needed to be done, and the game of catch-up being played, you might imagine that Mayock was keeping long hours. And as has been well documented, Gruden has always kept long hours. Over time, that's where they bonded.

"The first month I was here, I was walking in the building and it's 5:30 in the morning, and Jon's already in there watching film, and I start watching film in my office," Mayock said. "And after a few days, it's, 'This is crazy, why am I over here watching film and he's over there?' So I just started grabbing my coffee and going over there, and he and I would sit down and watch film.

"It was a really good lesson for me to see how he watches film, because everybody watches it a little differently. And Jon's got just miles and miles and miles of cutups that he's had his whole career. He can pull up cutups from 20 years ago just by clicking a button. The volume of work he does is mind-boggling. And I respect that."

It was there, in the wee hours, that the more conservative Mayock and more aggressive Gruden worked to find common philosophical ground. There and ...

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The National Championship Game. A week after he was hired, Mayock made his first public appearance in a work setting, donning a Raiders parka at the national title game in nearby Santa Clara. That night, he saw two of his three first-round picks [Ferrell and Jacobs], and his second-[Mullen] and fifth-rounders [Hunter Renfrow] live. And as you might've guessed, that night was important.

"I felt it on the field before the game, these were the two best college programs in the country and have been for several years now," Mayock said. "And when you walk around on the field before the game and watch these guys warm up, and you do your body types, you're taking notes—they look like two NFL teams. I said it to somebody, I don't remember who, and I remember thinking to myself, 'Man, if you just draft from these two teams, you're gonna do well, forget the rest of the country.'

"I didn't consciously set out to make that happen. But we got more and more impressed with these Clemson kids, as we met them, as people. We loved the Alabama tailback. And it worked out pretty well from our perspective."

An underlying factor here, that Mayock affirmed in our talk: If you're trying to build a certain championship atmosphere, it doesn't hurt to have kids from the likes of Alabama and Clemson.

The scouts. This is where Mayock raised his voice a little. The Raiders dismissed scouting chief Joey Clinkscales and Vandernat shortly after the season, and knew more changes would come post-draft. And yes, Mayock did send scouts home a week before the draft to close the circle. But he told me only three of those guys were actually let go. A bunch of them are back at work now.

"I never fired any of them. I didn't. I sent them home," Mayock said. "Listen to me, I sent them home, and I fired zero of them until the day after the draft. And then I notified a couple guys [that they were let go]. End of story. Nobody follows the story. Nobody cares. Everybody just wanted to report that Mayock sent everybody home."

And while the idea that Mayock banished people had a totalitarian feel to it, the GM was actually very quick, in our conversation, to credit the work of assistant player personnel director Trey Scott and scouting coordinator Teddy Atlas. The latter, in fact, was "directly responsible" for the team's seventh-round pick, Prairie View pass-rusher Quinton Bell, according to Mayock.

"When the rest of the league was hoping to sign him as a free agent, Teddy was at his pro day," Mayock said. "He was a converted wide receiver who went to defensive end at Prairie View. And Teddy kept this kid alive for me. And he ends up being 6'4", 240, ran 4.44, played one year at defensive end. The bottom line is those two guys helped me immensely throughout this whole process."

The coolest part of the draft. I'll let Mayock take this one.

"There were two things," he said. "One is just the absolute joy that Jon Gruden has talking to the players on that phone call. I mean, I'm telling you, he couldn't wait to get on the phone. And his joy and true excitement in welcoming these players to the team was awesome. I got excited and almost emotional just watching him do it."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"That's one, and I think the other one is, we moved down a couple times in the second round, we moved from 35 to 38 to 40, and picked up a couple extra picks, and were able to keep our guy, Trayvon Mullen, who we wanted all along. Jon and I were connected on that. We were sweating through every pick, and it ended up working out. I think both of us really enjoyed that process."

So now his first draft is in the books, and Mayock has turned the page and is working on getting a few hires done to fill out his staff. But allowing himself one last look in the rear-view mirror, the TV-guy-turned-GM remembered sitting on the North team bus en route to the Senior Bowl on Jan. 26.

"This is just for the Senior Bowl game, and I'm sitting there across from Jon [who was coaching the North], going, 'OK! This is real, we're about to go play a game,'" Mayock said. "Even though it was the Senior Bowl, you feel some skin in the game."

And they did have some skin in that game, in the end. Four guys who played that afternoon were drafted by the Raiders (Abram, Renfrow, Isaiah Johnson and Foster Moreau), and three others were signed by the team as college free agents (Te'von Coney, Alec Ingold, Keelan Doss).

As was the case with the national title game, Mayock got a chance to see those kids up close, and that really does matter to him, for the same reason he sees getting his next set of hires right as vital, and values what he got in Ferrell and company in the draft. He hasn't been working for teams the last 20 years, but he's seen enough good ones to know what it takes, beyond what a stopwatch can tell him.

"My whole goal, my whole belief, is that people change circumstances," Mayock said. "Not buildings, not anything else—it's people. It's the draft picks you bring in, it's your coaching staff, it's your scouting staff. And I'm excited about where we're headed. I'm excited about the people we're bringing in to this building. And I think everybody sees the opportunity and the energy that's going on with the Raiders."

By everybody, I'm thinking he didn't mean the rest of us—those people who sat there just a little stunned with what he did with his first pick. And besides, in any other year, we might have understood it a little better.

S Johnathan Abram

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Fatherhood drives Raiders rookie safety Johnathan Abram

By Matt Kawahara

June 16, 2019

At a news conference in late April, the three players selected by the Raiders in the first round of this year's draft were asked to describe what motivates them.

Johnathan Abram, the 27th overall pick out of Mississippi State, spoke last.

"For me, I have a daughter," Abram said. "She has helped me gain another sense of purpose for why I tick, what makes me get up in the morning."

For Abram, whose daughter Harlee turned 2 in May, Father's Day invites both celebration and reflection. Abram and his wife, Bri'Anna, originally conceived twins. A second daughter, Halle, was stillborn.

"I think about it all the time," Abram said last week. "There's supposed to be two rather than one. We think about it quite often."

Johnathan and Bri'Anna share a hometown of Columbia, Miss., and began dating, Bri'Anna said, after she'd already finished high school.

Abram was still at East Marion High School, where he played baseball in addition to safety and quarterback for the football team. He committed to play football at Georgia and when he moved there in 2015, Bri'Anna, who'd just finished nursing school, moved as well.

"I'll tell you something about me — I'm a huge football fan," Bri'Anna Abram said by phone last week. "I'm his biggest critic, even to this day. Even if he had a good game I would literally sit in the stands and count missed tackles and stuff."

"He came from a very small (high) school. I don't know if he thought he had the opportunity to even get this far coming from this small school. He surprised a lot of people."

Abram transferred after his freshman season at Georgia to Jones College in Ellisville, Miss., and then — after a season as the country's top-rated junior college safety — to Mississippi State.

In January 2017, Bri'Anna learned she was pregnant with twins. Johnathan had already started at Mississippi State so Bri'Anna, living a few hours away in Hattiesburg, "kept him updated on appointments."

Around 16 weeks, Bri'Anna said, she learned the twins were girls. At 18 weeks, an appointment revealed "growth restriction" in one of the girls, Halle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Twin-to-Twin Transfusion Syndrome, or TTTS, according to Johns Hopkins Medicine, is a rare condition that occurs in pregnancies when twins share one placenta and a network of blood vessels. It can result in an imbalance in blood exchange, leaving one twin with less blood and the risk of malnourishment and the other at risk of heart complications from overwork.

"It's a rare situation," Abram said. "A lot of people end up losing both twins."

Bri'Anna wasn't diagnosed with TTTS at the 18-week appointment, as the twins didn't show all the symptoms. At 24 weeks, though, an appointment revealed Halle had lost amniotic fluid. Bri'Anna transferred to a hospital in Cincinnati, where she was diagnosed with TTTS. Johnathan later met her there.

Bri'Anna said an ultrasound showed Halle starting to go into heart failure. Harlee was also experiencing heart distress, as "she was trying to work for both of them at that point." Doctors suggested a laser ablation, a surgery aimed at correcting the blood-sharing imbalance.

"It was a risk that we would lose one or both," Bri'Anna said. "So we were like, we're going to try whatever they suggest for us to at least try to save one."

"After the surgery, the doctor checked me. She thought my water broke, but it was actually the rest of the amniotic fluid. Probably a couple hours later, that's when Halle passed away."

Harlee was born about a week later, on May 21, 2017.

"We tried to save both," Abram said. "We had to lose one to save one."

Born about three months premature, Harlee spent two months in a newborn intensive care unit. Abram said she pulled out her own breathing and feeding tubes before being released.

"She's a character," Abram said. "She's probably one of the most fun people to be around. She is super-funny. I call her a copycat. She does every single thing she sees me and my wife do."

"She is like Johnathan," Bri'Anna said. "I'm more laid-back, chill. Her and John are like fireballs. She loves him. She follows him around like a little puppy. She wants to do whatever her daddy is doing. ... Any time he has to be on his own or something and leave, she flips out. She wants to be with John."

Johnathan and Bri'Anna were married in May 2018, before his final season at Mississippi State. The Raiders, who praised the 6-foot safety's physicality and tackling in college, have raved this spring about his early grasp of their defense. In a revealing move, they assigned Abram No. 24, previously worn by Hall of Fame defensive back Charles Woodson.

Bri'Anna and Harlee moved to the Bay Area last month, as Abram, who is projected to start as a rookie for the Raiders, participated in his first NFL offseason program.

"It just makes the entire situation better to get to go home to my daughter every day, to get to go home to my wife," Abram said. "It just makes it feel more like home."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"You have to have your own self-motivation. But to have a child depending on me ... to be able to go out every single day and make sure she has a better life than I had, that's probably my biggest thing. I want to create more opportunities for her to see the world and experience things I didn't experience growing up."

Bri'Anna said she's continuing her nursing studies and eventually plans to focus on one of two areas — pediatric or surgical.

"I'm very grateful for Harlee," Bri'Anna said. "She's taught me a lot just with perseverance and how strong she is. And she doesn't even know that yet."

"She kind of matured and changed both us. Some parents, kids change their lives for the greater good. I think she did that for both of us."

T Trent Brown

THE ATHLETIC

The greatest underdog: Trent Brown never celebrated his big contract because the Raiders' tackle wants more

By Vic Tafur

September 12, 2019

When the ball is snapped, Trent Brown has to get back quickly. If you aren't watching it happen, you wouldn't think that a 6-foot-8, 375-pound wall could move that fast.

But he can, and All-Pro Broncos pass rusher Von Miller is coming at him fast, trying to get past the Raiders right tackle Monday night to bury quarterback Derek Carr.

Brown backs off the line of scrimmage and gets set, establishing some balance before the tornado tries to blow through.

"Our get-off is just as important as the pass rusher's," Brown said. "Then once you're set, it's all about hand placement."

It's strangely evident watching Brown why he got a bad rap at Florida, only starting 11 out of 23 games before being drafted in the seventh round in 2015.

Because he makes it look easy. Way too easy.

Brown's 36-inch arms are outstretched and his hands are on Miller now, guiding him to the right. What comes next against other pass rushers is usually a combination of hand moves and brute strength that simply dismisses them, left on the side of the curb like the weekly trash.

But Miller is not other pass rushers. He is likely going to the Hall of Fame one day, so he is still churning his legs and coming after Carr.

Brown now uses his eyes to see what Miller is trying to do next and to look out for other trouble brewing in his area. He lowers a little into a good position and holds off Miller, with his feet and large anchor moving to stay in front of him.

"You have to be ready so you can take on power rushes and speed pushes," Brown said.

Brown held Miller without so much as a quarterback pressure in the 24-16 win in the season-opener. Carr may have felt Miller's breath in his vicinity once or twice, but the giant bouncer was always there, too. Carr had a great night, completing 22 of 26 darts, and Brown was a big reason why.

While receiver Antonio Brown stole all the headlines this offseason, he was never the Raiders' biggest or most important acquisition. That would be the other Brown. That was clear for viewers who tuned in Monday and saw why the Raiders made Trent Brown, 26, the highest-paid offensive lineman in NFL history.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Brown is the best kind of team leader, one who leads pass rushers away from his quarterback and one who leads running backs into the freshly carved-out open field.

The Raiders gave Brown a four-year, $66 million contract in April, with $36.75 million guaranteed, and then, in something that had to make the 49ers wince, Brown came to the Raiders' training camp in July in even better shape. You see, the 49ers were the ones who drafted Brown and then traded him away a year and a half ago because they weren't certain that he could be counted on to stay at 380 pounds. You know, more money, more food, more problems.

But hit the fast forward button, and Brown is putting on daily clinics on how to play tackle. Against Miller, at practices and even after practices, as he stays and works with the team's younger linemen.

Brown worked out for five and a half weeks this offseason with offensive line development consultant Duke Manyweather rather than take a long vacation to celebrate the new contract.

Did he at least have a party?

"No," he said.

Why not?

"I want more."

More what?

"Everything," Brown said. "I want more rings. I want another huge-ass contract. I want anything I can get out of this game, and I have to give my all to get it back."

Raiders defensive line coach Brentson Buckner knew Brown was very good, but he was speechless sometimes at camp in Napa watching Brown hone his craft.

And Buckner is usually loud.

"Trent is a big guy that can move," Buckner said at training camp. "Normally you get a big guy with slow feet that can't move, or you get a tall guy, not as heavy, who has good feet. He's got it all. He's long-armed and he is so cerebral with it, he is so smooth. Everything looks effortless with him."

Buckner played 12 years as a defensive lineman in the NFL and has been coaching the last six, and doesn't recall seeing anyone like Brown.

"I coached against him in San Fran, but now, seeing him work every day, I am like, 'Wow.' This guy is a different breed. You don't get many 380-something pound guys with ballerina feet that still got the strength to knock you off the ball."

Miller has been a fan of Brown's since they tangled at joint 49ers and Broncos practices in 2016.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's one of the best tackles in the game," Miller said last week in a conference call. "I've been a huge fan of Trent for a long time. I love the guy. He's tall, he's big, he's quick."

Brown has even been an honorary offensive lineman at Miller's offseason pass-rusher summits.

On Monday, Brown schooled Miller again (he also held him without a pressure in a 2016 game). He has handled all the top sack artists.

"If you watch tapes of Trent over the years," guard Gabe Jackson said at camp, "he gets guys that aren't supposed to be got."

Manyweather was a fired-up observer on Monday.

Brown went to Frisco, Texas, early this summer after Manyweather had given Brown an invitation and "a detailed scouting report with things that I saw as weaknesses," Manyweather said in a telephone interview.

"I just wanted to get stronger and work on my balance in the positions I had to be in," Brown said. "I feel better and stronger."

That is scary, Manyweather said.

"There is not a more massive human being in terms of length and girth and muscle," Manyweather said. "He is as big as they come, but the quickness and the ability to bait with his hands ... and the reason he makes it look so easy at times is his feet. Trent has really, really good footwork. Trent is always in position."

"Add in his length, size, power and his hand usage and it makes for a long day for any edge rusher lining up against him."

Brown is definitely not shy about spending his money on fancy clothes, size-18 shoes and an oversized shiny watch. The good thing is, he doesn't have to worry about blowing his fortune on his posse. There are no hangers-on, and the reason is simple.

"No one expected me to do this," Brown said. "I was always the underdog, even as a kid. Always flew under the radar. My posse is my family. And a couple of friends. That's it."

Brown lost a member of the small support group Monday, as Brown's best friend, Neiron Ball, passed away. The former Gators and Raiders linebacker had been in a medically-induced coma for the past year after an eight-year battle with a rare congenital condition called arteriovenous malformation (where the brain's blood vessels get tangled up).

Brown had dedicated his Super Bowl win with the Patriots in February to Ball, after sobbing the morning of the game over him. And on Wednesday, Brown said he plays every week for his old college roommate.

Brown was wearing a pendant with a picture of Ball and said his friend "is an angel now. He was always an angel."

Brown's father, Reginald, played basketball overseas in China before becoming a police officer, and his mother, Tiffany, was a high school volleyball player who went on to be a teacher.

"You can't be raised by those two and not have a strong work ethic," Brown said. "Not possible."

(In fact, his parents refuse to stop working, even though Brown secured the bag.)

Trent Brown was a basketball player like his dad as a kid until he decided that "basketball was soft." He grew up in Albany, Ga. — playing on youth teams 2-3 years older than he was because of his size — and focused his energy on being a running back and then a quarterback until high school. That's when, as a freshman, he was told that the services of a 6-2, 250-pound quarterback were not needed.

"It's been left tackle or right tackle ever since," Brown said.

He spent two years at Georgia Military College before transferring to Florida. That he woke up every day at 5:30 a.m. and wore a uniform somehow eluded NFL scouts who questioned Brown's work ethic.

"People also mistake the chill," Brown said.

It's a nice turn of the story that Brown has returned to the Bay Area as a much bigger star after the 49ers traded him away in 2018. He used to be mad about it but says the 49ers "blessed me by trading me to the Patriots."

Brown went from being an unsure rookie in 2015 to someone whose confidence shot up after he played in the final five games that season.

"It clicked," Brown said. "Whoever lined up in front of me, I was trying to whoop their ass. And then when I did, it made me want to whoop the next one."

He learned by watching veteran tackle Joe Staley, who compared Brown's potential to that of Jonathan Ogden. Brown saw that his footwork was already good enough and he worked hard on improving his hand use.

"I think coming into the league a lot of guys aren't ready — the veterans are way better at using their hands," Brown said. "That was something I really had to work on."

The work got more demanding after he was traded (along with a fifth-round pick) to the Patriots for a third-rounder after the 49ers used their first-round pick on his replacement, right tackle Mike McGlinchey.

"You can just feel it, the energy when you walk in that building," Brown said. "They expect greatness and you got to do great things and that's why they're in the Super Bowl year in and year out."

It was not a smooth transition, as the Patriots wanted to see more technique, more tempo and less getting by on your freakish athletic ability.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He picked it up quickly and was unbeatable in pass pro," Patriots guard Shaq Mason said in a telephone interview. "I think everybody was surprised how good he was in the running game. He is so big and quick, he was just moving people out of the way."

Brown allowed only three sacks during the regular season, according to Pro Football Focus, and then pitched a shutout during the postseason.

The Patriots wanted to re-sign Brown, but the Raiders coming off a season in which they allowed 52 sacks, practically gave him a blank check in the opening minutes of free agency.

Brown said he felt like he was "finally appreciated."

Brown said he always worked hard, in college at Florida and with the 49ers and Patriots, but some people just didn't notice.

"My personality and my work ethic have been misconceived," Brown said. "Lot of people didn't understand me. I'm not a rah-rah guy. I am chill guy, laid back. I am not going to be a vocal leader, I am just going to do what I have to do, come to work, get better and win."

It's an underdog story, which is good since Brown has a website at officialTB77.com that sells shirts and hoodies that say, "TB77 Greatest Underdog."

"It explains itself," Brown said. "Greatest underdog. Those two words explain me to the T. I was drafted in the seventh round and now I'm the highest-paid offensive lineman in NFL history. That's a testament to the work and just the way I go about my everyday life, how I treat people and how I sow good seeds and I'm reaping the harvest of my work."

And how he doesn't coast now that he, his parents and his two kids born in the last two years, are set for life.

"He came in every day with a chip on his shoulder, and it was hard to figure out why," Manyweather said. "He finds things to be pissed off about, and not in a way that will distract him but in a motivational way. I don't think money is a motivator for him."

"He will look at stuff like his 'Madden' rating and wonder why he is not up there. And then hit the gym. He wants to be the best. Some people aren't satisfied and don't do shit about it, but he brought it every day. ... You could make the argument that his best football is still ahead of him."

Brown might think about that when he lights his candles and meditates, with some blues or gospel music in the background. And he might think about the past as well.

Back in 2015, when Brown only played five games as a rookie for the 49ers, what if someone had told him that four years later he would have a Super Bowl ring and be the highest-paid tackle in the NFL? Would he have believed it?

"I would have believed him," Brown said. "I always believed it about myself."

Beezy & Weezy: Why becoming a Raider is a heart-tugger for Trent Brown

By Jerry McDonald

March 20, 2019

ALAMEDA — Trent Brown stood in the middle of a Super Bowl celebration last month in a state of euphoria and sadness. As confetti fell inside Atlanta's Mercedes-Benz Stadium, the New England Patriot's tackle kissed the Lombardi Trophy and said, "Weezy, that was for you."

Neiron Ball, aka "Weezy," was unaware of his best friend's tribute after the Patriots defeated the Los Angeles Rams 13-3. Ball, a former Raiders linebacker, is in a coma at a long-term care facility in Georgia after an aneurysm burst in his brain Sept. 16.

It has been an emotional six months for Brown, who last week signed with the Raiders for the richest contract ever for an offensive lineman.

Moments after meeting local reporters to discuss the signing of a four-year deal with a guarantee of more than $36 million, Brown spoke about his friendship with Ball.

"I call him a walking angel, a true soldier who will never give in," said Brown, whose friend dubbed him "Beezy."

Ball, 26, was diagnosed eight years ago while playing at the University of Florida with a rare, congenital condition called arteriovenous malformation (AVM), in which the brain's blood vessels get tangled and rupture.

Physicians thought the condition had been corrected after a radiation treatment, but Ball suffered an episode last fall that left him in a medically induced coma.

Brown, starting his second game as the Patriots' left tackle that September day, expected to see his friend afterward in Jacksonville, Florida. The Florida teammates had made plans the day before the game.

Exhausted after a 31-20 defeat in 97-degree heat, Brown was sitting on a table getting rehydrated with intravenous fluids when his cell phone rang. It was Ball's brother.

"I'll never forget it as long as I live," said Brown, who was traded last year by the 49ers. "He told me Neiron was throwing up and then unresponsive. I was like, 'I know Neiron. He's going to shake this.' I just knew he would be out of that state by now, but here we are."

NiQuae White, 16 years older than Neiron, said her brother is out of intensive care, "progressing," and the family hopes he will eventually move to a rehabilitation facility. Family members are not providing many of the medical details to protect Ball's privacy.

Neiron's life was in doubt from the start. NiQuae, whose mother Johanna White was undergoing treatment for the autoimmune disease lupus, described her brother's life as a miracle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"My mother was having chemotherapy when she found out she was pregnant and doctors advised her to terminate the pregnancy," NiQuae said. "She said, 'I'm done taking the chemo. I'm going to have this baby and the baby is going to be healthy.' "

Neiron Ball arrived on Aug. 20, 1992. Although six weeks premature, he weighed 9 pounds. For 12 days, Ball remained in the hospital with a heart murmur.

Life didn't get any easier for the child. When Ball was 6, Johanna White had a fatal heart attack on Mother's Day. Within two years, Neiron's father Ronnie Ball was diagnosed with lung cancer and died after a seizure, an episode the son witnessed.

Raised by his grandmother and other relatives in Jackson, Georgia, Ball developed into a top-flight football player. In 2010, he earned a scholarship at Florida and played in 13 games as a freshman.

After the season Ball, then 18, saw physicians when he felt pain in his neck and head. They identified the condition as an AVM, which can leave victims paralyzed and is sometimes fatal. But Ball recovered and was cleared to play in 2012.

"I went from a very serious brain injury to being able to play in a year," Ball told this news organization in 2015. "After it happened, I wasn't even thinking about playing. But I just kept getting better. I felt blessed."

His trials were not over. Ball had a potentially career-ending knee injury as a college senior that needed microfracture surgery. Ball said that after conquering the AVM, knee surgery didn't seem like much of an obstacle.

"If you know his full life story, everything he's been through during his time on earth, that's why to me he's a walking angel," Brown said. "He's not done and I will do my best to finish whatever I can for him."

As the story goes, the college roommates were engaged in some good-natured banter when Brown said his buddy called him "Beezy." The big lineman countered with "Weezy," and the monikers stuck. So did the friendship.

White, the oldest of five siblings, considers Brown, 25, her adopted brother.

"I can honestly say they're closer to one another than their own siblings," she said of Ball and Brown. "And they love their siblings. It was like a puzzle piece that fit perfectly."

Fate brought Brown and Ball even closer during the third day of the 2015 NFL draft.

The Raiders took Ball in the fifth round with the 161st pick after the linebacker had an excellent Pro Day to show scouts he'd recovered from knee surgery. Two rounds later, the 49ers drafted Brown at No. 244.

Ball was elated, while Brown was disappointed he didn't go higher but eager for his NFL opportunity.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Best of all, Weezy and Beezy, neither of whom had been to California, were headed to the Bay Area.

"We were right across the bay so we probably saw each other once a week," Brown said. "He'd be sleeping at my house or I'd be sleeping at his. We talked just about every day."

As a rookie, Ball impressed Jack Del Rio's staff with his special teams play. His athleticism was so apparent he became the starting weakside linebacker in the season's fifth week, logging 36 snaps. But in his second start, Ball had a non-contact knee injury after 18 snaps that ended his season — and career. He struggled through the 2016 preseason, but was placed on injured reserve and did not return.

Brown, meanwhile, played sparingly for the 49ers. The largest player in the NFL at 6-foot-8, 380 pounds, Brown made five appearances with two starts.

"They were basically out there by themselves," said White, the sister. "They made it their business to see one another when they weren't training, and to pick up the phone to vent, share secrets and advise each other. I think they know more about each other than anyone else could possibly know."

Through it all, Ball's disposition remained relentlessly positive, a smile rarely leaving his face. Ball befriended the family of a 10-year-old boy who had suffered paralysis as a result of an AVM and attended an awareness fundraising walk organized by the Aneurysm and AVM Foundation. He was an inspiration to those whose conditions up to that point had a far more serious outcome.

All of which makes the current situation more painful. The family has said only in a statement in September: "We believed Neiron's AVM was obliterated. That doesn't seem to be the case as he developed an aneurysm that burst. His family asks for continued prayers."

Beezy, meanwhile, carries on. He made trips from Boston to Georgia to see his best friend during the season, and shed some tears in solitude as the reality sunk in about joining Ball's Raiders. To NiQuae White, Brown's landing spot in free agency made perfect sense.

"Wow, look at this — God is sending you to finish what our baby brother started," White said. "You're doing what Neiron wanted."

"Trying to help the Raiders be great."

Derek Carr nearly quit football for preacher's life before rookie season with Raiders

By Jerry McDonald

Sept. 3, 2019

"God sent the Raiders quarterback, of all people. The Raiders. I sent that dude. A little dude out of Fresno, California. I sent him to be the Raiders quarterback so that maybe people would listen to him. Who else do I have to send to tell you the truth?" — Derek Carr addressing a gathering during a sermon entitled "Holy Fire" at Brave Church in San Ramon on July 7

SAN RAMON — Something was nagging at Derek Carr, and it wasn't as simple as trying to learn the nuances of an NFL offense for the first time.

Having just arrived at training camp in 2014, the second-round pick out of Fresno State was realizing a vision he'd been chasing since he'd tagged along with his older brother David, the former No. 1 overall pick of the Houston Texans, 12 years earlier.

Being an NFL quarterback is all Derek Carr ever dreamed about. He was a prodigy who was watching game film, and comprehending it, by age 10. Although he didn't know it yet, the second-round pick was about to be anointed a rookie NFL starter because of that readiness that was all too apparent.

And just as suddenly as that dream was about to begin, the pang in Carr's gut was growing more undeniable. As he lifted weights in the makeshift field house behind the Napa Valley Marriott, nothing could soothe his soul. A guy about to be handed the keys to an NFL offense as a rookie was looking for something more that he didn't completely understand.

And how could he?

"In my heart, I'd never had this feeling where I was so overcome with my thoughts that I was like, 'I can't do anything right now,'" Carr said as he sat at a table in the lounge of an East Bay hotel. "The thought was, 'You need to stop playing football and preach.'"

Carr didn't hesitate to speak back at his inner voice. "I'm thinking, 'I've dreamed of being an NFL quarterback my whole life, so chill out.'"

But chilling was easier said than done for the restless rookie. Carr was soon knocking at the door of Dennis Allen, telling his head coach he was considering walking away from the sport before ever participating in a single padded practice.

"He didn't take it too great, obviously," Carr said with a chuckle. "He didn't even know what to say to me."

Although veteran Matt Schaub had been signed as a free agent, Carr's work in the offseason had made it clear he would be ready to play as a rookie.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Some 13 years earlier, running back Napoleon Kaufman, a talented former first-round draft pick, retired after six seasons to devote his life to ministry. The Raiders signed Charlie Garner and moved on.

This was different. Carr had formed an instant bond with his teammates. His arm made Schaub's look like a pop gun. Carr was smart, mature and more game-ready than anyone had realized. The Raiders were convinced they'd gotten a franchise quarterback at No. 36 overall to go along with linebacker Khalil Mack at No. 5.

With a franchise quarterback and an elite pass rusher in the fold, things were looking up. Only now a big part of the equation was in question.

What ensued was an ultra-secret period of damage control. Allen quickly sent a text to offensive coordinator Greg Olson, urging him to talk with his quarterback.

While Olson is reluctant to delve into specifics of private conversations, this much is known: Olson urged Carr not to say anything until he'd thought it through. Derek said his parents were on their way to Napa and were going to bring him home. They knew of Derek's intention to walk away and were on board.

Carr's grandfather on his mother's side was a preacher. Sheryl Carr had told Derek she was sure one of her three sons would be a preacher, and now it was on the verge of becoming a reality.

Then-Raiders general manager Reggie McKenzie, along with Olson, tried to reason with Carr. As a devout Christian himself, McKenzie's words carried some weight. He told Carr he was walking away from probably $60 or $70 million down the road. Carr said he didn't care about the money.

Football, McKenzie and Olson reasoned, would give Carr a bigger platform from which to preach and reach people. Carr remained non-committal, but promised not to tell anyone about his decision until he was sure.

Only a few people knew of Carr's crisis of conscience — his immediate family, Allen, Olson, McKenzie, owner Mark Davis and one member of the media relations staff.

Carr missed a day of meetings while he soul-searched. The direction of the franchise, as well as the future of those who put themselves out on a limb by drafting this future cornerstone quarterback, not a preacher, hung in the balance.

"Oley told me, 'Go spend time with your family. No matter what you decide, I love you, man. I'm here for you — love that guy,'" Carr said. "Reggie McKenzie was the same way."

Carr talked it over with his family after they arrived in Napa. He prayed on it, and ultimately came to a decision.

"It wasn't my time yet," Carr said of walking away from his NFL dream. "It was cool to know I believed in something so much."

Five years later, as the second year of Jon Gruden's return unfolds, Carr says retirement from football is the furthest thing from his mind.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

He's become increasingly active as a preacher, not only at Brave Church in San Ramon but other Christian churches as well. But that off-field pursuit ends as soon as training camp begins.

With his near change of heart as a rookie far in the past, he says God and family and football — in that order — are in proper balance. Even if he played well into his 30s, Carr now understands that there is plenty of time for his next career.

There is no clock winding down.

* * *

It's the first week of July, and the 8 a.m. crowd has filed out of the church auditorium on a sunny day, with another capacity crowd of approximately 350 making its way in to hear Derek Carr deliver a 10 a.m. sermon entitled "Holy Fire."

Carr already spoke at the first service, and waits in a side room with his wife, Heather, and infant son, Deakon, as the room begins to fill up once again.

The atmosphere is relaxed and casual. Suits and ties are scarce, giving way to Tommy Bahama shirts and cargo shorts. There's one man in a No. 4 Carr jersey and two teenagers in gym shorts who appear to be headed to a basketball camp after the service.

Seated in the third row are Raiders coach Jon Gruden, who is seeing Carr preach for the first time in person, and his wife, Cindy.

A five-piece band, some wearing backwards ball caps and t-shirts, plays soft rock gospel, with the crowd clapping in rhythm.

Samuel Laws, the pastor at San Ramon's Brave Church, takes the microphone and tells the crowd of upcoming events before introducing the special guest, who receives loud applause.

Carr, wearing a short-sleeved collared shirt and jeans, takes the microphone. He speaks to the gathering rather than at them. There is no fire, brimstone or solemn warnings about failing to heed God's word.

Rather than requesting people to silence their cell phones, Carr tells the crowd they can reference Google to find scripture relevant to his talk.

It's a relaxed and honest tour de force. Carr is in many ways the same kid who drove his mom crazy because he approached strangers in the grocery store with a disarming friendly sincerity. His delivery is easy, natural and sincere, whether you believe in the message he's delivering or not.

"I want to tell you some stories. You guys like stories, right?," Carr said. "And none of them are about football today, I'm sorry. If you want to hear football stories you could leave now ... or if you're a 49er fan you can leave."

Laughter and applause ensue, and Carr, with a perfect sense of timing, reminds them of the obvious.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I'm just kidding," he said.

Carr's 45-minute talk is mostly preaching, part testimony of his own experiences and, yes, he does manage to work a little bit of football in now and then.

Gruden, talking in the parking lot after the service, said he was so impressed with what he heard that he and Cindy will consider making Brave their regular church.

"Derek is what he says he is — No. 1, he's a man of faith; No. 2, he's a family man, and third is football." Gruden said. "And he's put forth as much effort as any man could possibly put forth in those three areas."

* * *

Carr got serious about Christianity after a "big man on campus" period in college where he became a major partier. His behavior resulted in a letter from his eventual wife Heather, who told him "You're not the man I thought you were."

His father Rodger, mother Sheryl and older brothers David and Darren also had their say.

Derek decided to begin living the life he had professed to lead and gradually began searching for more.

"You can be on the right path, but still realize something is missing," Carr said.

The more Carr spoke before church groups, the more he simply began recounting his daily thoughts which come from reading his Bible and applying those lessons to the world around him. He easily mixes in life stories from family and football and is unafraid to discuss his own vulnerabilities and insecurities.

Carr's previous engagement at Brave came in late January, shortly after he challenged ESPN host Max Kellerman and co-host Stephen A. Smith to a fight in a UFC Octagon. Kellerman had said on the air that Carr "didn't look like he wanted it."

He saw it on his phone while working out, fired off a retort, and instantly regretted it.

"Not the brightest move by me," Carr said. "I saw instantly it was going to blow up. They were talking about it for four days."

So Carr included his social media mistake with the gathering and told them God had already fought the important battles.

The notion of Carr being "soft" because of his Christianity provokes a laugh. He played threw a broken finger on his throwing hand in 2016, had his season ended by a broken fibula that same year. In 2017, Carr missed just one game with three fractured transverse processes in his back.

"When I put my helmet on, I'm ultra competitive, talking trash," Carr said. "Tough, gritty, those are things that have been in me since I was a little kid. I have two big brothers. I had to be. None of that changes what I believe, or what goes on in my heart."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Perspective allows Carr to push aside talk of it being a crucial year for his Raiders career and that he could be playing for his job in 2020.

Despite plenty of speculation last spring that the team would consider drafting eventual No. 1 overall draft pick Kyler Murray and possibly part ways with Carr, instead he goes into this season with his $19.9 salary for 2019 guaranteed.

Carr realizes when a team goes 4-12, the quarterback takes the heat. Even after posting career bests in completion percentage (68.9), passing yards (4,049) and yards per attempt (7.3) and posting a QB rating (93.9) that trailed only his 2016 season that had people talking MVP before he suffered a broken fibula headed into the playoffs.

Somehow, Carr made it through 16 games of 2018 while being sacked 51 times behind a patchwork offensive line. The Kellermans and Smiths of the world point to moments where he's too timid, makes questionable decisions with the ball for a veteran QB, throws short of the stake on big downs too often. They point to a QBR rating that puts him at 27 among NFL quarterbacks.

If there is a whisper of discontent among teammates, it's been well hidden. Kelechi Osemele, traded to the New York Jets, recently called Carr one of the best teammates he ever had.

Defensive tackle Justin Ellis entered the league with Carr and has watched the progression as closely as anyone.

"He has evolved as a player — the longer you're in it, the smarter you are," Ellis said. "He's always been the guy who he is to this day. But now, it's his team. When he was young, he was a rookie trying to take his role. But now he knows he's one of the main guys, he walks with it, he leads by example."

Running back Jalen Richard, also a Christian, believes Carr's faith is a key component to his leadership. The positivity and focus on doing things right sets the proper tone and pushes those around him.

"He's a nice model to have around you, a family man, does everything the right way," Richard said. "When you've got a guy like that, who has so much faith, no matter what's going on, that picks up your faith and makes you start to search for faith in yourself."

Is his QB soft? Richard laughs.

"He wants us to go hurt somebody — but not really hurt 'em. But it's a battle," he said. "It's a battle when you're fighting for Christ. You do battles every day. The devil is continuously throwing his little darts at you and you've got to put on that armor of Christ. He's talked about that before, putting on the full armor of Christ. He's still a battler."

Ultimately, Carr will be judged by the Raiders' improvement in the win-loss department. With a much better supporting cast on both sides of the ball and having a year of Gruden's system under his belt, even a brutal six-week road stretch will be no excuse for anything resembling 4-12.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Carr understands this on some level, but has too much faith in his coaching staff and teammates to verbalize the possibility of failure. Being negative in public isn't a part of his makeup. He plans on being the Raiders quarterback in 2020 in Las Vegas. There, Carr will find a new Christian community while also being involved with Brave Church and making regular visits.

"I believe God has given me talents and abilities to be my very best and work harder than anybody else," Carr said. "I feel like I'm doing it for a higher purpose than just money, a higher purpose than fame.

"There's a quote, and it's not scripture, it's from Steve Prefontaine, the runner, who said, 'To give anything less than your best is to sacrifice the gift.' I've taken that to heart. I believe to give anything less than my best is to sacrifice the gift that God has given me."

Raiders' Derek Carr finds peace, hardened exterior after tough offseason

By Scott Bair

Aug. 7, 2019

NAPA – Derek Carr has done everything possible to be the perfect face of this Raiders franchise. The team's unquestioned starting quarterback says the right things, acts the right way. He's never, ever critical, toeing the company line. He smiles for every picture and signs every autograph.

He is, by every measure, a model NFL citizen.

That hasn't stopped some from hating him. That's a hard truth for an admitted people pleaser, who has tried and tried to turn the naysayers around. Resistance, it seems, is futile.

"I have tried so hard. I feel like I have tried to do this whole NFL quarterback thing right," Carr said last week in a one-on-one interview with NBC Sports California. "It's not an act. It's just who I am. I thought that's what people would want. What I've realized is that you can't please everybody. That has been hard for me. That's really hard for me, to be honest with you."

No quarterback's approval rating sits at 100. Some casual fans and hot-take analysts even dislike guys with several Super Bowl rings. Those without the hardware prove far easier targets, especially after signing nine-figure contracts.

That's why Derek Carr often echoes this mantra: "Ignore the praise and the criticism, because neither matter."

It turns out that's easier said than done. Carr heard outside noise a little clearer this offseason, elevating from "barely audible" to the annoying buzz of a gnat that you swat and swat but can't shoo away.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

That led to an experience that hardened Carr's outlook and outfitted him for training camp in new, diamond-plated armor -- coated in Teflon.

"What I've realized is all that talk, all that is said doesn't matter," Carr said. "Honestly, that clicked for me. That click happened this offseason."

Jan. 23 to be specific. That's when Carr fired back at ESPN's "First Take," challenging the show's hosts Max Kellerman and Stephen A. Smith to a UFC fight.

Kellerman essentially questioned Carr's heart -- characterizing him as too willing to tap out. Carr can handle it if someone attacks his 32-46 overall record as a starter, his injury troubles or even his throw selections. But going after his drive to play the game and his toughness was a personal affront that garnered a response.

It was a misstep that gave the Kellerman's comments a larger platform and turned a one-off segment into a several-day story. It prompted one blog after another to detail every part of the exchange, giving the story legs that ran right through the mud.

The unsavory experience taught him a valuable lesson -- one that forced him to go somewhat against his personality type.

He's working through this training camp with outside-noise canceling headphones and an unshakable core belief that he's a darn good quarterback. He is supremely confident in his ability, his upgraded supporting cast and his scheme knowledge working with head coach Jon Gruden.

Nothing said will shake that.

"I've really grown a lot in not caring what anyone else thinks," Carr said. "For so long, I wanted to please everybody. That's my personality. I came into this NFL experience with several goals. I was going to work my tail off and treat the media with respect. I'm going to treat my opponents with the same kind of respect. I'm going to try and do everything right. Somewhere along that course, some people decided that they don't like me. That was hard for me, because I was trying to do my best and produce and do things that haven't been done here in a long time. You sit back after all that and understand fully that it's all about winning."

Carr hasn't won enough. He won't excuse his record, but let's be honest. The man has weathered some storms.

Head coach Dennis Allen got fired four games into Carr's rookie year. Tony Sparano never had his interim tag removed. The Raiders rebuilt into a highly competitive team under Jack Del Rio, but Carr's third head coach wasn't allowed to rebound after 2017's disappointment.

Then came Gruden -- owner Mark Davis' dream hire -- finally offering the schematic and coaching stability Carr hasn't had during his NFL career.

Continuity didn't create calm seas. Stories about Gruden and Carr being oil and water popped up before the two began working together, and grew louder this spring as the Raiders wine and dined top NFL-draft-eligible quarterbacks.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Carr remained silent during all that pre-draft speculation, trusting what Gruden said about him remaining the Raiders quarterback. He places great trust in Gruden and has enjoyed working with him and within his offensive scheme.

"I don't know why people come at our relationship so much," Carr said. "What people don't know is that we're super close. We're going to live next to each other (in Nevada next year). There must be something going on that's all right. For us, at first when we started hearing it, we couldn't figure it out ... We finally got to a place where, even if they don't like us, let's keep growing and keeping doing our thing."

Carr believes that Gruden elevated his game last year, 4-12 record be damned. Carr set career marks in passing yards and yards per attempt, despite being frequently chided as a check-down artist. His interception percentage was only lower in 2016 -- when the Raiders were awesome and he was a legitimate MVP candidate. Those 2018 numbers are more impressive coming with an offensive line hindered by injuries and inexperience and a group of skill players lacking speed.

Carr did what was asked of him last season, but the 4-12 record is what gets remembered. So do some unflattering moments, including a fourth-down-and-forever check down and a few ill-timed interceptions in the end zone.

He understands and respects that, knowing he must win more and more often, but doesn't believe the year's experience should be cast aside or cement anyone's belief he isn't a quality NFL signal-caller.

"Last year was some of the best I've played quarterback since I've been in the NFL, but we didn't win 12 games," he said. "When you're the same face for the last six years and everyone else is gone, people don't have anyone else to point at. They think, 'it's got to be that guy.' He's the constant. I was also the constant when we were winning, but that's being quarterback in the NFL. You get a lot of blame. You get a lot of credit. It's part of the deal.

"For me, I know who I am. My coaches know what I can do. My teammates know what I can do. If they believe in me, then let's roll."

Carr is ready to roll into the regular season with Antonio Brown, Tyrell Williams and Darren Waller in the pattern, Josh Jacobs in the backfield and Trent Brown and Kolton Miller protecting his flank.

Those weapons and another year in Gruden's scheme has Carr believing a monster year is on the way.

"I haven't played as good a football as I have in this training camp and this offseason," Carr said. "I'm the best version of myself right now. Some of the best football I ever played was last year, and I feel like I'm just going up.

"When Coach Gruden got here, it was a fresh restart. He told me, 'you're a rookie again. Let's build this thing.' He said, 'it may be tough at first, but let's grow this thing.' We get to this year and we're ready to do it now."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Carr will tune out the adulation that would come with a return to glory, now knowing how the milk can turn sour with a few poor results.

While Carr's exterior has hardened, he's still the same guy at his core, willing to offer kindness to strangers.

That was clear after Saturday's practice, while spending a rare camp moment with his family.

Travis Raefield, a Concord resident with Down syndrome wanted to meet his favorite Raider and was introduced to Carr. Raefield showed off his Special Olympics jersey with the No. 4 in honor of Carr, and got an autograph and an extended conversation with his idol.

This wasn't a scheduled photo opp. "Hard Knocks" cameras were nowhere near the exchange. It was just a genuine human moment that made Raefield's month and reminded Carr why he'll never close himself off to the fan base just to avoid a vocal few.

"I've never been out (in public) and run into someone who criticizes me," Carr said. "Everywhere I go, at a game or a practice or wherever, everyone loves our team and supports me. I haven't run into a Raider fan where it's the other. I'm sure there are a few people out there who aren't fans of mine. But the support I get from Raiders fans is so positive. They say, 'thanks for doing it right.' Those moments confirm, 'just continue to be yourself.'"

Why the Raiders just had to pick 'Mad Maxx'

By Paul Gutierrez

May 14, 2019

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- To Oakland Raiders owner Mark Davis, there was something familiar about the way Maxx Crosby moved around the field, disrupting opposing offenses on game tape.

A long torso with long arms and long legs. A whirling dervish with a chip on the shoulder and a motor that never stopped.

Yes, Davis, who has been around the Raiders since his late father Al came aboard in 1963, saw a little Mad Stork in the Eastern Michigan Eagle.

That would be Ted Hendricks, a Hall of Famer and three-time Super Bowl champion with the Raiders, whose physical attributes are similar to Crosby's.

"Long, lanky, tall," Davis told ESPN.com. "I remember being very excited about seeing him on film and wondering about the competition [he faced]."

"But saying somebody is Ted Hendricks? That's tough. I've always said, if I had one guy to start a team, it would probably be Ted Hendricks. Remember, until we got Ted, we couldn't get over the hump in conference championship games. We got him in 1975 and then we broke through that wall. He's one of just [six] players to play on all three [Raiders] Super Bowl champs. Ted dominated one whole side of the field."

Davis took a breath, fast-forwarded from the late 1970s and early '80s to last month's NFL draft, in which the Raiders used their first of three fourth-round draft picks, No. 106 overall, on Crosby, and then exhaled.

"On tape, he does look good," Davis said. "I just wondered about the competition."

Crosby played defensive end in the the Mid-American Conference at Eastern Michigan and received only one scholarship offer out of high school. He has gone from Ypsilanti to being a third-day draft pick and comparisons to a Pro Football Hall of Famer. No pressure, kid. None at all.

"It's an honor," Crosby said at the start of the Raiders' rookie minicamp. "He's a legend. It's kind of crazy just seeing all the feedback. It's been mostly positive and fans here in Oakland are die-hards. It's an honor to be here, to play for such a legendary organization and I can't wait to go put it out on the field."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Even Hendricks reached out on Twitter to welcome Crosby to the Raiders.

Still, Hendricks was more of a hybrid outside linebacker/defensive end at 6-foot-7, 220 pounds, while the 6-foot-5, 255-pound Crosby is a pure defensive end.

Crosby racked up 18.5 sacks and eight forced fumbles during his final two college seasons and addresses a specific need for a Raiders team that had a league-low 13 sacks last season.

So long as he adds some bulk to his long frame.

"He plays every snap like his hair is on fire, that's No. 1," said general manager Mike Mayock, who first told of Davis comparing Crosby and Hendricks in a Sirius XM radio interview. "No. 2, he has length. No. 3, he ran in the 4.6's, low 4.6's -- so he has some twitch. He has length, he has twitch. He has a great motor. What he doesn't have yet is power. He doesn't have strength yet, and he needs to develop that."

Introducing, then, Raiders strength and conditioning assistant and world class power lifter Deuce Gruden. Yes, coach Jon Gruden's son.

"When I got on the phone with [Crosby], I told him that his future was going to be dependent on a Gruden, but not the one he thought," Mayock said. "It's going to be Deuce. I wanted him to get philosophically connected at the hip with Deuce because he has to get stronger. But I love his tape because he plays his ass off on every play."

Crosby needs more than fast hands.

"They just want me to get stronger," he said of the Raiders. "I don't think weight is the biggest issue. I'm around 255 right now. I just have to keep getting stronger and I have all summer to do that. I'm going to do everything I can to make that happen."

Crosby is one of three defensive ends the Raiders drafted, along with No. 4 overall pick Clelin Ferrell and seventh-rounder Quinton Bell, who made the unusual switch from wide receiver to edge rusher as a college senior.

He is also one of six defensive players in the Raiders' nine-player draft class.

Yeah, there was a need. More than few holes for Oakland to fill.

"He's 'Mad Maxx,'" Jon Gruden said with a snarl. "He comes off the ball repeatedly with great effort. I like that relentless style he plays with. He's gotten bigger and stronger every year that he's played and some of his second effort production is what stands out the most, but he really tested well at the combine."

"He's got real big upside and I think he's got a real big role model to learn from in our first-round pick [Ferrell]."

Crosby and Ferrell hit it off at the combine and reunited in Oakland.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I've played in a 4-2-5 and [the Raiders] run a 4-3, so it's kind of similar, but new techniques and all that, it's going to take a little bit of time to just get adjusted and get the movements down," Crosby said.

"It's still football at the end of the day and we're playing defensive end. We're supposed to get sacks. That's why they pay us, so I just have to get after the quarterback, and the same with everybody else on the D-line."

Now that sounds like something Hendricks might say, and Davis would approve of going forward.

How 'Mad Maxx' Crosby went from one college offer to Raiders wild card

By Matt Schneidman

May 7, 2019

The first time Maxx Crosby met with his coaches at Eastern Michigan, he stunned them.

Not with his quick twitch off the line. Not with his knack for leaving quarterbacks on the ground. Not with a ferocity that earned him the nickname "Mad Maxx."

Chris Creighton was stunned because it was June, and just five months prior the EMU head coach had watched Crosby play high school basketball weighing around 250 pounds. Now Crosby sat in front of Creighton on Eastern Michigan's campus, 40 pounds lighter, forced to explain himself.

"We were definitely concerned," Creighton said. "It was way past just shedding weight. It was like, 'What have you been doing?' ... He was just rail thin."

Crosby had felt hampered by "baby fat" left over from a growth spurt the year prior. He wanted to lose it, then replace it with muscle in college, but he went overboard trying to slim down.

"I kind of got carried away a little bit," Crosby told the Bay Area News Group. "I got a little too thin, just from running and doing all that stuff."

Creighton planned to redshirt Crosby even before he lost all that weight, but the freshman still required a physical transformation if he ever wanted to make a name for himself as a 6-foot-5 pass rusher filled with potential.

Thus began Crosby's evolution, one that's taken him from a 210-pounder who only Eastern Michigan offered out of a high school football hotbed to the wild card of this Raiders draft class. He's an intriguing 255-pound edge rusher taken in the fourth round who Jon Gruden will count on to help transform the NFL's worst pass rush, just like he transformed his own body to get to this point.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's 'Mad Maxx'," Gruden said with a smirk. "He comes off the ball repeatedly with great effort. I like that relentless style he plays with. He's gotten bigger and stronger every year that he's played and some of his second effort production is what stands out the most, but he really tested well at the combine. He's got real big upside."

Crosby stands at the podium at Raiders headquarters on Day 1 of his new job, smile across his face and black flat-brimmed hat turned backward on his head. He's asked about meeting Deuce Gruden, Jon's son and Raiders strength assistant who will help Crosby add even more muscle. He's asked about the pressure of helping lift an anemic pass rush from the depths of the NFL. He's asked about Raiders owner Mark Davis telling general manager Mike Mayock that he sees legendary Raiders linebacker Ted Hendricks in Crosby.

So how, especially coming from Colleyville Heritage High School in the highly recruited Dallas Fort-Worth area, did a player now basking in the NFL limelight and drawing Ted Hendricks comparisons receive just one college offer?

Maybe it's because at a lanky 6-foot-5, Crosby played out of position at linebacker until switching to defensive end for his senior season. There he showcased his craftiness in shedding blocks, his speed in disrupting backfields and that lankiness in wrapping up quarterbacks, but those highlights came too late for other schools to offer. Eastern Michigan remained his only option, and as a freshman redshirt he won Scout Team Player of the Year. That's "a pretty big deal," Creighton said. EMU coaches started to realize how lucky they were having no competition for Crosby's college choice. Now if only he could add that weight again.

He tallied only 1.5 sacks and 5.5 tackles for loss his first year playing in 2016, then skyrocketed to 11 sacks and 16.5 tackles for loss in 2017 en route to earning team MVP and First-Team All-Mid-American Conference honors. Ben Needham took over as Eastern Michigan's defensive line coach before the 2018 season, and upon first watching Crosby's film he saw a player he thought could make the NFL.

When he learned Crosby's only offer came from EMU, Needham was stunned, just like his colleagues when the pass rusher now blossoming into an NFL hopeful around 240 pounds first arrived on campus.

"Especially coming out of Texas," Needham said. "Sometimes you hear those stories about Iowa, always has a guy who played six-man football and nobody came to his school and so that was his only offer. That you can kind of understand. This guy's from the DFW area and that's about the most recruited place in the world."

Hoping to expand his arsenal before his redshirt junior season, Crosby consulted defensive line specialist Brandon Jordan, who's based in the Dallas area. While training with Jordan, Crosby worked with NFL veteran Damon Harrison, now a Detroit Lions defensive tackle and one of the best run-stoppers in the league. Jordan saw in Crosby an effective pass rusher, but a run defender needing improvement.

Harrison's early reaction to Crosby? "Man, he's gonna be special."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Rounding out his repertoire with Jordan and Harrison led to a productive 2018 season in which Crosby improved defending the run, his sack numbers dipping slightly with opponents more aware of his pass-rushing prowess but his tackles for loss still rising.

To motivate his defensive line, Needham awarded points for plays that didn't necessarily appear in the box score, like finishing a play unblocked or executing a tackle with proper form. Sometimes blowing up a play earned a point, too. As Crosby put it, "just the baddest dude on the field" got rewarded.

Each week the player with the most points received a figurine of Ebros the Assassin, a grim reaper wielding a scythe in one hand and flashing a middle finger on the other.

"He won it certainly more than anybody else in our room," Needham said of Crosby, who registered 19 tackles for loss, 7.5 sacks, four forced fumbles and an interception returned for a touchdown in 2018.

Crosby earned First-Team All-MAC honors again. He wanted to probe his NFL prospects, and scouts advised he return to school since he wasn't projected to be a first- or second-round pick and he was still too light. Crosby listened to their advice, but entered the draft anyway.

He added 15 pounds to reach 255, then among edge rushers at the combine finished 10th with a 4.66-second 40 time, second in the three-cone drill at 6.89 seconds, second in the 20-yard shuttle at 4.13 seconds and tied for sixth in the vertical jump at 36 inches.

Though Crosby still weighed less than the Raiders preferred, how he used that physique impressed them enough. They used their first of three fourth-round picks on him at No. 106 overall. Their first four selections came from Clemson, Alabama, Mississippi State and Clemson again. Then...Eastern Michigan.

"He'll make his body do what they want and need for him to do," Creighton said. "I'm not concerned about that at all."

Now at the beginning of his professional career, Crosby faces similar demands from his superiors as he did starting his college career.

"He has length, he has twitch, he has a great motor. What he doesn't have yet is power," Mayock said. "He doesn't have strength yet, and he needs to develop that. When I got on the phone with him, I told him that his future was going to be dependent on a Gruden, but not the one he thought. It's going to be Deuce. I wanted him to get philosophically connected at the hip with Deuce because he has to get stronger. But I love his tape because he plays his ass off on every play."

All Crosby has to do aside from pack on muscle is help improve the league's worst pass rush, one that tallied only 13 sacks last year, fewest in a single season since the 2008 Chiefs finished with 10. Those who've worked closest with him, however, think he can do it.

"His motor, the way he moves, his get-off, his speed and the way he listens and picks up everything, he has the total package with him," Jordan said. "... He's a dominant pass rusher. I can see him going there on third down and dominating on third down."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Crosby may not start, as that responsibility is likely to be shouldered by second-year defensive end Arden Key and 2019 first-rounder Clelin Ferrell. The lights will shine brightest on those two first, then maybe next on veteran defensive end Benson Mayowa, who signed with the Raiders as a free agent after tallying four sacks with the Cardinals in 2018.

Crosby is no stranger to waiting his turn, though, as he did waiting to be recruited, then waiting to play in college, then waiting to hear his name called on Day 3 of the draft. But when Crosby does get on the field, whenever and however that chance comes, the Raiders hope he's a player 31 teams wish they hadn't passed on.

'It was a surreal moment': Keelan Doss lives out his childhood dream in Raiders' preseason opener

By Vic Tafur

Aug. 10, 2019

The first time Keelan Doss scored at Oakland Coliseum, he was in sixth grade. His Pop Warner team was playing at halftime of an Oakland Raiders game. The then-running back from Alameda broke a long run and scored easily.

Doss remembers standing in the end zone that day and thinking, "If I could do this one day as an Oakland Raider, that would be awesome."

Fast-forward to Saturday night, when Doss, now a wide receiver, caught a 3-yard, third-quarter pass from Nathan Peterman in the Raiders' preseason opener, a 14-3 win over the Rams.

"It was a surreal moment when it happened," Doss said. "But I gotta move on it and prepare for next week."

The UC Davis product at least enjoyed the moment Saturday night, with more than 100 family members and friends on hand. In fact, all of the Raiders wide receivers had a pretty good night, even with starters Antonio Brown and Tyrell Williams not playing. J.J. Nelson pretended he was still in Napa and caught a 38-yarder, Ryan Grant had three catches and showed he is not conceding the slot position to rookie Hunter Renfrow, and 2018 preseason star Keon Hatcher caught two passes for 45 yards. Marcell Ateman and Jordan Lasley also had first-down catches.

"I think (the wide receiver group) is incredible," said Peterman, who won over some fans with a 50-yard run. "We've got guys that can flat out fly out there and have great ball skills. Everybody's making plays."

Quarterback Mike Glennon, who started in place of Derek Carr, agreed.

"It's a really deep group and there's going to be some tough decisions to be made," he said. "I think a lot of guys put some good tape out there today, and I'm sure that's a good problem to have."

The Raiders led wire to wire in the last preseason game ever in Oakland as DeAndré Washington scored on a 7-yard touchdown run on the Raiders' first possession. Glennon was sharp for the most part (17 of 25 for 200 yards) but threw two awful interceptions that Raiders coach Jon Gruden will remind him of numerous times before the next preseason game Thursday.

"Both quarterbacks, in their opening possessions, had beautiful touchdown drives," Gruden said. "That's what we want. We want the quarterback to take control of the game and get us on schedule. ... Mike had two interceptions. The one in the end zone can't happen. He got fooled on the other one."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The Raiders' defense was fine, thanks to Rams third-string quarterback Brandon Allen, who struggled, playing most of the game. Arden Key picked up a sack, and rookie cornerback Trayvon Mullen broke up a pass, but there was some bad news as rookie defensive end Maxx Crosby broke his hand. (The Athletic learned of the injury after Gruden addressed the media, and Crosby was not available for comment.)

"I thought Arden Key had a good game," Gruden said. "He made a lot of plays. Credit to him, too. He played a lot of football tonight. I thought he stood out."

Key played the whole game because defensive ends Josh Mauro and Benson Mayowa had the night off. Key probably would have played until the sun came up to get that sack, though, after getting only one last season.

"It felt great to hit the quarterback," Key said. "Get the first one out of the way early."

Key set up his second-quarter sack by bull-rushing Rams tackle Bobby Evans the entire first quarter.

"Then I gave him the double hands," Key said. "First quarter ... bull, bull, bull. Then I put a little finesse on him."

As for Brown, Gruden finally broke his silence on the wide receiver's foot injury, as well as his problems with the league-mandated helmet. Brown had a grievance hearing with the league about the helmet on Friday, and ESPN reported Brown has threatened to not play again if he can't wear his old helmet. (The league said it's outdated, but the new model apparently affects Brown's vision.)

Gruden hopes Brown is back in Napa for training camp when the team returns Monday.

"There have been a lot of reports out there — I can't say that I agree with all of them," Gruden said. "But I support this guy. I think that's what needs to be said. This foot injury wasn't his fault. This was a total accident. It really wasn't his fault. It's a serious injury, I know some people are smarting at it. But it's really not a laughing matter."

Brown reportedly sustained frostbite on his feet after not wearing the right footwear when he went into a cryogenic chamber. Neither Brown nor the Raiders have verified that.

"And the helmet thing is a personal matter to him," Gruden said. "He has a strong feeling about what he's worn on his head, and we're supporting him. We understand the league's position as well, so we're in a tough spot. And we hope Antonio is back here soon because he is exciting to be around. I have some plays for him, and I hope we can start calling them."

"I have a feeling that he would play with no helmet, that's how much he loves to play. But I am not going to put words in anybody's mouth. We're going to support him, and whatever his decision is, we'll stand by it. But we're confident that he is going to be a huge factor for the Raiders for years to come."

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders' Keelan Doss carries 'chip on my shoulder' from draft snub

By Matt Kawahara

Aug. 9, 2019

Receiver Keelan Doss did not hear his name called among the 254 players selected in this year's NFL draft.

Only after the final round, Doss said, did his phone start ringing, with teams wanting to sign him as an undrafted free agent.

"I want to say close to 20" teams, said Doss, the receiver from Alameda High School and UC Davis. "I was like, 'Well, I wish y'all would've drafted me. I would feel a lot better.'"

Doss still "had a good feeling," though, from his week at the Senior Bowl playing for the Raiders coaching staff and Jon Gruden — who reached out "right when (the draft) was over."

"As soon as he called me, I knew exactly where I wanted to go," Doss said recently at Raiders training camp in Napa. "And that was here."

As a result, when the Raiders host the Los Angeles Rams in their preseason opener at the Coliseum on Saturday, Doss will suit up for his first NFL experience minutes from where he grew up.

The Raiders are expected to rest most of their starters for the game after evaluating them in two joint practices with the Rams during the week. Instead, Gruden said the Raiders plan to use the game to "take a look at some young players — some guys that need the opportunity."

That includes Doss, who is competing for a spot in a crowded receiver group and whom Gruden has said will "play a lot in these preseason games."

"He's playing three positions and is making some difficult catches against very good defenders," Gruden said this week. "He's in the mix. ... He'll get a great opportunity."

The Raiders, who opened last season with six receivers on their 53-man roster, have 12 in camp. Antonio Brown, who has missed most of camp, and Tyrell Williams are projected as their top two receivers. Rookie Hunter Renfrow has taken most of the first-team reps at slot receiver, while Dwayne Harris doubles as a return specialist.

J.J. Nelson, Ryan Grant, Marcell Ateman and Keon Hatcher are among the other receivers jockeying for the final spots with Doss, who has experienced rookie swings in his first NFL training camp.

In one early practice, Doss made a highlight-reel catch by going into a full-extension dive on a deep pass from Mike Glennon. That same day, Doss dropped a routine pass near the sideline. Quarterback Derek Carr later said the key for Doss is consistency.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I think we've seen him make some spectacular catches," Carr said. "I think the thing for Keelan — and with any rookie, this is not a knock on Keelan — is the simple plays. He drops a ball on the sideline, all he's trying to do is get the ball and make the next play. His mind-set is right. I think as the game settles down for him, it's just making the simple play."

As a junior at UC Davis in 2017, Doss led all FBS and FCS players by averaging 136.3 receiving yards per game (115 catches, 1,499 yards). While some expected Doss to declare early for the draft, he opted to return for his senior season and helped lead UC Davis to an FCS playoff berth.

Doss said that going undrafted was "definitely frustrating." For perspective, though, he need only look at the top of the Raiders' receiver depth chart.

Brown, a sixth-round draft pick by the Steelers in 2010, is a four-time All-Pro selection and the only receiver in NFL history with six consecutive seasons of 100-plus catches and 1,000-plus receiving yards. Williams was signed as an undrafted free agent by the Chargers out of Western Oregon in 2015. The Raiders signed him to a four-year, $47 million contract in March.

Gruden recently said he's partial to players who "come up the hard way, with a chip on their shoulder." Doss, recalling his draft-day experience, said he fits that description.

"I'm never going to live that down, as far as the chip on my shoulder or that feeling inside me," Doss said. "I'm sure if you ask A.B., he'll feel like he should've gone first round. You ask Tyrell, I bet he'll say he should've gotten drafted. What makes those players great in my opinion is they come out with a purpose and chip on their shoulder, and that's kind of what I thrive on as well."

Raiders draftee Clelin Ferrell explains why he hates being called 'rookie'

By Jerry McDonald

August 21, 2019

The Raiders surprised some people by taking Clelin Ferrell at No. 4 in the NFL Draft.

Not that the Ted Hendricks Award winner wasn't a great player for national champion Clemson. It's just that most people pegged him as a mid-to-late first-round pick since Khalil Mack, for example, had gone No. 5 overall.

Ferrell, the youngest of nine kids, sat down to discuss the term "rookie," criticism over how high he was drafted and the pressure to live up to Mack's legacy.

You don't like being called a rookie. How come?

My coaches don't like it, either. It's just a mindset. For me, it's all about proving yourself to your teammates. That term has a connotation of having an excuse for why you might be doing bad. I don't want nobody to make no excuses for me. If I mess up, if I'm not doing well, then that's on me.

You want to be a leader right off the bat. Today at practice both Jon Gruden and Mike Mayock came up to you for a few words before practice. Isn't that a lot to put on your shoulders?

Nah, the biggest thing is just being me. Being a leader isn't just being the most vocal guy or being the guy in the room that tells people what to do. In my room, with my group of guys, I feel like being a leader is helping to empower others. We've got a lot of guys that haven't been leaders before. It's really for me to empower other guys and motivate other guys to be a leader and hold me accountable.

You grew up with two parents with military backgrounds. Do you feel that makes you a leader?

It had an effect because I see the type of leaders my parents were. But though they both were in the military, it wasn't really that much of a military-type atmosphere growing up. I would say more so, my mom sending me to a military high school (Benedictine College Prep in Richmond, Virginia) to learn the different traits and assets of what being a leader really means. It's not just about hearing a drill sergeant yelling at you. It's about motivating others and helping each other focus on maintaining a common goal. As far as growing up, my parents treated me like a normal kid.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

You were the youngest of nine kids...

One of nine, right. It's hard to really keep your eyes on all the kids. I was the baby, so everybody felt like I was kind of spoiled a little bit. I don't. My brothers and sisters were hard on me.

Did you hate military school?

I hated it my first two years. I literally was about to be at the school protesting the military. But coming into that high school, I would say internally I didn't have a lot of discipline as a man. I was a bit rebellious, kind of wanted to be with my boys from the neighborhood. But I really learned about integrity and character and being disciplined, and it helped me to grow up, Any time a kid's got to grow up, it's hard for them.

What do you say when people say, "Ferrell is pretty good, but not at No. 4. It's too high"?

I don't say nothing. I had that in college, where you hear the talk, good and bad about somebody. But you can never listen to it. The biggest thing is after this season you won't be able to tell if I was worth the pick whether I have a good or bad year. Come back to me 10 years from now, at the end of my career, and tell me if I was worth it.

You're the highest defensive pick here since Khalil Mack at No. 5 in 2014. And also a defensive end. Think Raider fans are going to look at that?

I hope not. I'm not Khalil Mack, but Khalil Mack isn't me. We can't be each other. He brings things to the table, and so do I. Respect to a great, great player. A guy I looked up to coming out of high school and college. He's on a completely different team, and I'm just focused on the Raiders now. So I hope Raiders fans welcome me with open arms.

The Raiders had just 13 sacks last season. Coaches have been reminding the defense about it. Does that motivate you?

Hell yeah, that's motivating. We're trying to shatter that number. The best part about that is that this group didn't get 13 sacks last year. It was last year's group. But this D-line hasn't proved anything yet, and we've got a lot to prove and have set high goals for ourselves.

Your family watches you closely from afar. Did you get a good review from them after the Rams game?

My brothers definitely got on me about making more plays. They want me running to the ball more. And they were wondering why I wasn't in on special teams. I told them I didn't know why coach didn't put me out there because I've been playing them in practice.

Military upbringing taught Raiders' draft pick Clelin Ferrell about leadership, sacrifice and teamwork

By Vic Tafur

May 27, 2019

Clelin Ferrell didn't know about his dad's visit until after his father had passed away. Clelin was a freshman at Benedictine College Preparatory, a private military academy in Richmond, Va., when his dad died after a bout with lung cancer. And shortly after that is when he heard about his dad's talk with Benedictine football coach Greg Lilly.

It was about pushing his son to stay on the right path.

Ferrell, now the top 2019 draft pick of the Raiders, is being looked to by coach Jon Gruden and general manager Mike Mayock to not only make plays at defensive end but also to quickly develop into a leader. It was something he demonstrated in helping win two national championships at Clemson, and something he became at Benedictine.

"Military school definitely shaped who I am as a person," Ferrell said in a telephone interview on Thursday. "I always had a love and respect for the military because of my mom and dad's service, but our house wasn't that strict like everyone thinks. It was a laid-back home, just like other kids', and that's why I was surprised when my mom started talking about military school."

Ferrell's mother, Faye, served 22 years in the U.S. Army. She was a staff sergeant who served in Operation Desert Storm. It was in the Army where she met Cleavester Ferrell, who would serve 24 years in the Army, including two tours of duty in the Vietnam War. Clelin was the youngest of nine kids, and two of his brothers and an aunt also served in the military. It's where he saw himself going one day, until he became one of the top football players in the country, at a military school that he didn't want to attend.

"Nobody wants to go to military school," Ferrell said. "No young teenager wants to go to a school where it's all boys, and you're in there every day from sun up to sun down, with the dress code and all these rules, and you're taking military history and theology classes. But it definitely taught me discipline and integrity and got me in touch with my spirituality. It also taught me how to be a good teammate. You always hear that you will die in battle without good teamwork. Military school made me a better person, which in turn made me a better football player."

Ferrell had always thought he would go to the public high school in Richmond with his friends, but his mom had other ideas. Well, not ideas — that implies it was open for debate.

"I thought she was joking at first," Clelin said. "Then it became clear that I could cry and whine all I wanted to, but I was going to Benedictine."

"We just felt that he needed some structure," Faye told the Post and Courier in Charleston years ago. "My husband and I both coming from the military, we figured that he would get that. But, trust and believe me, he was resistant of it."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Faye stopped doing interviews years ago and declined this one, but it is clear that she thought her youngest son was a little rebellious.

"I thought I was cool," Ferrell said. "Cool doesn't last too long at military school."

After his son tried a couple challenges to the school's dress code, Cleavester went in to see Lilly, who is still coaching at the school and is now also the admissions director. Cleavester was very sick and two of his other sons took him in to see Lilly.

"He told me he wasn't going to be around much longer," Lilly said in a telephone interview. "He told me the kind of man he saw his son becoming, and he asked me to push him and to make sure he worked hard."

Cleavester never told Clelin about the talk.

"I didn't know about it," Clelin said. "I didn't know that it happened until my coach told me about it after my dad passed. My dad told him to look out for me, to watch out for me and made sure I stayed on the right path, to give me that father figure if I needed one. And he was. My coach was always in my corner and helped me develop into a man."

When they went fishing together, Cleavester would also tell his son to be an inspiration to other people. And in that meeting with Lilly, he enlisted some help.

Cleavester passed away in March 2012 and the entire junior varsity football team attended the funeral.

Clelin was touched by the gesture, and it drove home the idea of a football team as a family. That's something that Ferrell took with him to Clemson — especially after he tore his ACL his senior year in high school after he had verbally committed to the Tigers and they didn't back out of his scholarship offer.

Clemson defensive line coach Todd Bates didn't join the program until 2017. He remembers a sophomore knocking on his door.

"Clelin walked in and told me whatever I needed, I should let him know," Bates said in a telephone interview. "If there was a player that I needed him to get on, to let him know. I knew right away that he was a gifted player, a very hard worker and someone that put the team and the pursuit of winning above everything else. The other players and coaches really loved him and we were all thrilled that he went fourth in the draft. I think the Oakland Raiders fans are really in for a treat. They are going to love him, for the player and person that he is."

Mayock told Ferrell when he was drafted that he was going to be a key to turning the team around, both on the field and off, as far as his leadership presence in the locker room and his worth ethic "changing the culture" on the Raiders.

Ferrell has been working out with his new Raiders teammates for a few weeks now and Thursday, he tweeted out: "Man, I love this team!!!"

I asked him what sparked the tweet.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I can just feel it, that we're really starting to have a good core here," Ferrell said. "I know the other rookies, and I have met the veterans now. I just feel like we have the right guys, we just have to put everything together. We have to really put in the work to get out of it what we want. It starts with having the right mindset and attitude and setting goals for ourselves ...

"I like this group. I feel like we have really good guys in this locker room. I don't know what it was like before I got here, but it's been all good since I got here. I am just a rookie and I am trying to soak it all in."

And just like in military school, Ferrell wants to be pushed. By Raiders coaches and his veteran teammates.

"For me, coming from a military family, my mom always told me, 'Clelin, you've got to understand,'" Ferrell said last month, the day after he was drafted by the Raiders. "That drill sergeant who was training her for war, he was hard on her all the time but she knew that that drill sergeant loved her because he didn't want her to go out there and die on that battlefield. It's all about good relationships and just letting the people around you know that any type of leadership role as far as holding them accountable, it comes from a good place. You want for them what you want for yourself. That's the biggest thing. I'm all about us, I care about the people that I work with."

And he obviously cares about people, especially the people in his family, who have served this country. Ferrell said he will pay his respects on Memorial Day, but that he pays his respects every day.

In March, Ferrell was at an autograph signing at Haywood Mall in Greenville, S.C., when he spotted a man sitting on the floor with a camouflage backpack with a U.S. Army logo. He went over and sat next to him, and after a long talk, handed the man a purple Clemson jersey, the one the team has worn in the past on Military Appreciation Day.

Another fan that was there took a picture of the encounter and the image went viral on social media.

"I saw the picture and to be honest with you, I didn't feel like it was that special of a moment," Ferrell said. "I was just talking to somebody and giving them something they deserved. ... He had come up earlier and I saw his Army hat, and I thought about giving him the jersey then but forgot about it when I started signing for other people."

"And then I saw he was over there after I finished signing, and I went over to ask him a couple of questions. His father was in the military like mine. He had served in Afghanistan, like my brother did. I gave him the jersey, but I didn't feel like I was doing him a favor. I just felt like he was owed that. He was a big Clemson fan and he had sacrificed his life for our country."

"That jersey meant a lot to me and I hope it means a lot to him. Actually, from talking to him, I am pretty sure it does."

Netflix, Cheetos and running after practice: 24 hours with Raiders defensive tackle Johnathan Hankins

By Vic Tafur

Aug. 13, 2019

NAPA — I wouldn't call it a strut, and it's not a limp. It's somewhere in between, a mix of confidence and an acknowledgment to his body that he has put it through a lot and is going to take it nice and easy now.

Raiders defensive tackle Johnathan Hankins walks slowly but surely off the Raiders practice field in Napa. He is not one of the biggest stories of training camp — after all, Hankins is down to 320 pounds and new right tackle Trent Brown is about 385 — but he is a key player when it comes to improving on last season's 4-12 record. Both coach Jon Gruden and defensive coordinator Paul Guenther have called him the most improved player on the team.

The bar can be high, as Hankins, 27, was one of the best defensive tackles in the league in 2014. He had seven sacks and 51 tackles, and the Raiders are excited that the run stopper can get back to that level.

"I can. I can get back to that level," Hankins said. "We changed schemes with the Colts last year and when they cut me, I signed with the Raiders but had already missed training camp. I really didn't have my foot in the ground.

"I do this year, and they have me focused on getting upfield and penetrating."

Hankins was kind enough to let us in behind the scenes of his training camp with the Raiders. He filled us in on his entire day between the joint practices with the Rams last Wednesday and Thursday:

9:50 a.m. — The Raiders and Rams go at it at practice, with this session on Wednesday being a little more subdued than what will come Thursday. New linebacker Vontaze Burfict is directing traffic, and the defense looks like a road map as opposed to last season's abstract painting.

"I was always a fan of Paul Guenther when he was in Cincinnati," Hankins said. "He always had a very solid defensive line and he wanted to get that going last season here, but there were a lot of moving parts. This year, we're going to be a bright spot in this division and surprise a lot of people."

12:30 p.m. — Hankins gets treatment after practice, showers and then makes the short trek to lunch. He doesn't smile a lot these days because he has been on a meal plan since the start of spring.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I cut out all starch," Hankins said. "Potatoes ... no more mashed potatoes and rice anymore (sighs) ... no more bread. Just veggies and fish and protein. It's been tough, but it's definitely benefitted me."

The 6-foot-3 Hankins has lost seven pounds since working with a chef. His goal is to lose three more pounds and get down to 317, his playing weight his rookie season.

After a lunch of salmon, broccoli and asparagus, Hankins gets some more treatment.

"I get some maintenance on the body," Hankins said. "Hot tub, cold tub ... anything that is nagging, I get it worked on. Just trying to stay ahead of it."

2:45 p.m. — Unlike other players, Hankins can't take naps between practice and meetings.

"I won't wake up," he said.

So Hankins goes back to his hotel room and watches Netflix. He is currently getting up to speed on African wildlife.

"I have watched everything else on Netflix so I don't really know what to watch," he said.

Unlike most players, Hankins has his own room.

"This is my seventh year, and it's supposed to be for eighth-year guys and up, so I appreciate that," he said. "I don't have time for someone to be snoring or on the phone all night. I just want to settle down and relax ... Netflix and chill."

4:30 p.m. — There is no afternoon walkthrough Wednesday since the Rams are in town for the head-to-head practices, so Hankins hits the defensive line meeting. The Raiders players go over their mistakes from the morning practice.

New defensive line coach Brentson Buckner has been a hit so far.

"He is very detail-oriented," Hankins said. "He's definitely stressing that we use our hands more and better. He wants us to get penetration, he doesn't like to see guys playing on the line of scrimmage. He doesn't think you're effective that way."

That's been new for Hankins, who said he played a more reactionary technique his first five years in the NFL.

"Now we're just going at them and going through them," Hankins said.

6 p.m. — Chicken. Pesto. Zucchini. No pasta. No dessert.

At these moments, he will think fondly of his cheat days, when the Raiders are off (like this past Sunday).

"I cheat with Hot Cheetos and Dairy Queen," Hankins said. "I try not to go too crazy. Just one meal. The whole day will really set you back."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

7 p.m. — Team meeting, followed by unit meetings and individual meetings. At the first one, Gruden goes over the new offensive and defensive plays and a couple of rookies get up and sing every day.

"Maxx (Crosby) was by far the best," Hankins said. "And he didn't rap. He sang. Most of the rookies get booed. We don't have a lot of patience."

Other position groups have rookies go out and buy snacks or donuts. But not the defensive linemen.

"A lot of us have weight restrictions," Hankins said. "Only healthy snacks in the meeting room, so there aren't a lot of snacks in there."

At the individual meeting, Hankins goes over the plays for the next day's practice.

9:30 p.m. — Snack time. Cup of fruit. ...

(Hankins looks around.)

"Or I go to the store and get some Hot Cheetos," he said.

I thought that was only on cheat days ...

"Hey ... sometimes you just gotta do it," he said. "Just a $2 bag. There aren't a lot in there. The Cheetos people are trying to get over on us."

10 p.m. — Hankins calls his wife and then his parents, and watches some more Netflix before the lights are out at 11.

"This being my second year (with the Raiders), I have a pretty good grasp of the defense," Hankins said. "But I will get out the iPad and refresh a little bit every night before I go to sleep."

(There you go coaches, that makes up for the Cheetos.)

6:15 a.m. — The alarm sounds. Hankins is awake, and brushes his teeth, but doesn't really leave the bed for good for about an hour.

"It takes a while to get things going," he said.

7:30 a.m. — Hankins gets a big bowl of oatmeal, a shake and plate of egg whites. He is over omelets these days.

8 a.m. — More individual meetings. There is a special teams meeting earlier but Hankins can blow that off as he is only on the field-goal units. "Thank God I am not out there on the field for punt returns," he said.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

8:30 a.m. — Music time. Hankins has to be on the field in 30 minutes so he is playing either rap music or techno to get himself fired up. Eventually, the switch flips on, just like it did when he was 6 years old and first started playing football. His older brothers played, and Hankins always loved to run around with the ball.

But you have all heard every big man's lament, with the positions changing as the inches and pounds keep coming. The running back, in this case a young Hankins, becomes a tight end and then a middle linebacker and then a guard and then a defensive tackle.

Thankfully, Hankins took to life in the trenches pretty quickly.

"The thrill of just dominating the guy in front of you," Hankins said.

He never wanted to be an offensive lineman.

"It's funny, when you're growing up, all defensive linemen think that offensive linemen are soft and just punching bags," Hankins said. "Then I got to Ohio State and the NFL and realized that offensive linemen are some of the nastiest guys out there."

9:15 a.m. — Buckner leads the group through a lot of pre-practice drills. The Raiders have three second-year defensive linemen and two rookies, and when Buckner isn't hollering at them, Hankins is in their ear.

"I have Mo Hurst next to me in meeting rooms and P.J. Hall behind me, and I try to explain to them how to play certain blocks," Hankins said. "And that continues on the field. I am pretty good at playing the run, and the young guys want to know what I am looking for, what the keys are."

Hankins will go over backfield formations with those two and second-year defensive end Arden Key and have them try and "see the play before it even happens. Last year they were just running around."

Hall, at 6-feet, 310 pounds, is the strongest of the linemen and has some impressive lifting videos online. Hankins is not that impressed.

"His arms are so short that he doesn't have to lift the weight that high," Hankins said, laughing. "He's got built-in leverage."

Hall once squatted 700 pounds.

"There is no need for anyone to do that," Hankins said. "That's uncalled for."

9:50 a.m. — Practice starts, and while most players say they enjoy practicing against a different team because of the newness of the challenge, Hankins regards it as a break.

"Going against our offensive line is probably the toughest battle I have had since I have been in the NFL," he said. "Gabe Jackson and Richie Incognito are two of the best guards in the league and Rodney (Hudson) might be the best center. Trent Brown is huuuge. Kolton (Miller) ... I think the whole line goes 350."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Going against the Rams was like a vacation.

"The double-teams are not the same, they're not as heavy," Hankins said. "It feels different. It feels good not having 1,000 pounds on you."

Buckner pushes the players to get tired in practice so that they won't in games. So the coach runs the defensive linemen after practice.

"He ain't here to be your friend," Hankins said.

As Hankins, who didn't play in the preseason opener Saturday, gets ready for Thursday's game at Arizona, we'll let Buckner have the last word.

"Hankins is a big guy that can move," Buckner said. "I keep telling him not to let people tell him that he is a nose guard because he is big. Be a big guy that can move. Like Kevin Williams. Like Kris Jenkins. I challenged him, 'Don't be a nose guard, be a complete defensive tackle. He got himself in shape and is showing a lot of quickness and explosion.'"

"And he brings his hard hat every day. He is working and grinding and making sure the young guys are not slacking off."

WR/RS Dwayne Harris

Beyond the Gucci: How the Raiders' Dwayne Harris went from college quarterback to elite NFL special teamer

By Vic Tafur

Sept. 3, 2019

Let's clear up something from April 2. That was when the Raiders re-signed receiver/return specialist Dwayne Harris and he posed for the contract-signing picture with his two Yorkshire Terriers.

"OJ and Blue," Harris said. "Those are my guys, man."

Harris, OJ and Blue were all decked out in Gucci. But here's the thing: that wasn't planned. That just happened to be what they were all wearing that day.

"The only reason I brought them was I had to get them from the kennel before it closed," Harris said. "And I was already on my way here to sign my contract."

Don't hate the Terriers, hate the game. That's just how OJ and Blue roll.

"My dogs are always fresh," Harris said. "They have more clothes than I do. They have duffel bags of clothes. It's not all Gucci. They have a little bit of everything."

Harris is also on a nice roll in his unique role on the Raiders. For cutdown day has come and gone again, and Harris is always still standing. Wearing Gucci.

Harris only had six catches for 40 yards last season. But he never had to sweat making the 53-man roster, even with the Raiders having a lot of talented receivers at training camp last month.

The 5-foot-10, 215-pound Harris returns kicks, but that only scratches the surface of what he does.

"He's more than just a returner," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said at training camp. "He's an impact cover guy. I mean, I don't know what NextGen Stats says, but he drew nine or 10 penalties on special teams. Forget about the tackles he made, he was held nine or 10 times."

Harris, 31, may be all flash off the field, but on he is a lunch-pail special teamer, an elite one, who is always re-reading the rulebook to find ways he can help the Raiders win in the third phase of the game.

"You look at Dwayne and he has a little bit of a slow walk to him, and he wears big glasses," Raiders special teams coordinator Rich Bisaccia said. "If you're having a pickup basketball game, he is probably the last guy you're going to pick. ... And then, when you're done with the game, he has probably scored 33 points and had six rebounds and 10 assists."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's Cool Hand Luke."

Cool Hand Dwayne's glasses are Gucci. In fact, he said 95 percent of the stuff he rocks is Gucci. When teammates admire his clothes and ask for a handout, he says to come see him in the offseason.

"They gotta catch me in the spring," Harris said. "Spring cleaning. That's when I get rid of the old stuff."

Harris hooked up with Gucci in 2017 when he played for the New York Giants and broke his foot.

"I had a lot of free time, so every Friday I used to go to the Gucci store and just chill. See what new stuff was coming out, do a little shopping and we built up a relationship. They started sending me stuff ... and I wear it."

If you told Dwayne Harris as a kid that this would be his life now, he would not be surprised.

"I always knew I was going to go to the league," Harris said. "Always. Always. Growing up, my mom and dad was always like, 'You need to have a backup plan.' I was like, 'Nah, I am going to do the NFL thing.' Everybody that knew me knew that's what I was going to do."

Harris was a quarterback at Tucker High in Stone Mountain, Ga. A good enough one that he got a lot of scholarship offers and picked East Carolina.

"I was like Michael Vick," Harris said. "Yeah, you could say that. I ended up switching to receiver in college, because my odds were better of getting to the league and living out my dreams."

Harris didn't make the switch until the end of his freshman year.

"It was my decision," Harris said. "I was 5-foot-10. It would have been hard to make it as a quarterback ... back then. If I would have came out now, I would have been all right. So I made the switch after my freshman year."

The coaching staff tried Harris at running back first, then moved him to safety and finally put him at receiver.

"We had a practice one day and the coaches looked at each other and said we have to find him a spot because he was on the scout team and our defense couldn't tackle him," former East Carolina receivers coach and current offensive coordinator Donnie Kirkpatrick said in a phone interview last week. "He could have been a great running back but we already had Chris Johnson, and having Dwayne as a backup running back didn't really solve our problem. So we moved him to slot and kick returner, even tried some Wildcat at quarterback."

"Dwayne was our decathlon guy. He could do all the events really well."

There was a learning curve because Harris had never played receiver in his life.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I didn't know how to run routes," Harris said. "Because I had been a quarterback, it was easy to know what the quarterback was looking for, but it was hard to run the route. I didn't really know what I was doing. Luckily, I was a pretty good athlete."

The Pirates' best play was to throw Harris a quick pass and then have him make defenders miss.

In four years, Harris had 268 receptions for 3,001 yards and 20 touchdowns, with 86 rushes for 526 yards and six touchdowns, and 2,853 return yards and three touchdowns.

Harris was drafted in the sixth round by the Cowboys, realizing his lifelong dream of making it to the NFL.

"I just wanted to get my foot in the door," he said. "I was way down on the depth chart so I knew I was going to have to get mine on special teams. That will get me on the field and then I will stay in the league a long time."

The kick returning part came easy. The kick coverage, not so much.

"I didn't know to tackle people," Harris said. "I played on kickoff coverage once in college, and the other team ran it back for a touchdown. They never asked me to do that again. I mean, I was a quarterback growing up. Quarterbacks don't tackle people."

That's where Bisaccia enters our story. The current Raiders special teams coordinator became Harris' special teams coach with the Cowboys in 2013, but he had already fallen in love with Harris. Like, Bisaccia had a pick-up line and everything.

"I was with the Chargers and we were practicing against the Cowboys," Bisaccia said. "I told him after practice, 'Hey 17, if I had you, you would be playing now.' I knew he had played quarterback, and he was really strong and thick, and had a lot of different talents. ... The way that he moved, and the physicality that he played with ... you don't find many guys that can return kicks and punts and cover kicks and punts."

Bisaccia and Harris were together for two years in Dallas, and the coach helped shape the player who would make the Pro Bowl in 2016 with the Giants.

"I give all the credit to Rich," Harris said. "He came in and told me to play gunner. I told him I had never played that before. He told me to run down the field and tackle the guy with the ball. And then we did some tackling drills."

Running down the length of the field with 10 other guys while 11 are running toward you is sheer madness. What's going through Harris' mind as he runs and looks for the ball carrier?

"To be honest with you, I don't even know what I am thinking," Harris said. "Everything is moving so fast and you can't really dictate what the other team is going to do. I try and play off what they do. A lot of guys don't like to jump me because I'm physical at the line, so I don't really get a lot of quick jams."

"So I just run by them or if I have to, be more physical than they are. It's like playing in the backyard as a kid — don't let anybody touch you."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The adjustment to special teams star might have been tougher for Harris' family than it was for him.

"They always enjoyed watching me throw touchdown passes or making plays," Harris said. "They were shocked to see me running down the field and hitting people. But I love doing it, it's exciting to me to play kick coverage and return kicks, and it's become exciting to them as well."

Nothing was more unexpectedly exciting than Harris' touchdown against the Broncos in last year's home finale.

The Broncos' Isaac Yiadom tried to keep a punt out of the end zone and pushed the ball to the 1-yard line. Harris swooped in, picked it up and ran it back 99 yards down the sideline for the touchdown.

The rules stated that because Yiadom didn't have control of the ball when he pushed it, Harris could pick it up and run.

"I am a guy who looks for opportunities anyway I can get them, and I know all the rules that have anything to do with special teams," Harris said. "I had seen that play happen once before in Dallas and it was always in the back of my mind. Anytime I see a gunner go down and try and knock the ball back, I am always around the ball trying to pick it up."

"That guy didn't know the rules and hit the ball right to me. I picked it up and started running as fast as I could."

The Coliseum crowd was stunned, but Bisaccia said he was watching Harris the whole time and knew what Harris was thinking.

"He was getting in a position where he could get the ball with nobody around it," Bisaccia said, "and make the no-consequence play. Dwayne is really, really smart and very astute about the rules."

The Broncos touchdown wasn't even Bisaccia's favorite Harris play of the season.

"The one in the Kansas City game is the one no one talks about," he said. "He steps out of bounds and then steps back in to pick (the kickoff) up and the ball goes to the 40. Even the announcers called it a dumb play and that he got away with it."

"The reality is that it was an incredibly smart play with him knowing the rules and knowing that he could step out first and then step in with one foot and make the play."

You can see why Bisaccia wanted Harris badly when he joined Gruden's staff last year.

"I know he has been in the top-five in punt returns and he's been in the top-five in kickoff returns," Bisaccia said. "He's been a double-digit tackler for us and he drew 11 penalties. Add that up field-position wise and he is a very valuable member of our team."

Bisaccia said Harris is also a quiet leader.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"My time in this game is almost up," Harris said. "I probably have a couple more years, and I try and tell the younger players what I am seeing and why I do things a certain way. I enjoy passing on my techniques."

A lot of Harris' techniques and highlights are on Bisaccia's teaching tapes.

"Rich has been so important to my career," Harris said. "Developing me into the player that I am now. I never thought I would be playing special teams and going to the Pro Bowl for it. He showed me stuff in my game that I didn't even know I was doing and changed the way I play as a special teams player and as a returner."

Harris won't give the young players any of the new Gucci line, but he has offered some to Bisaccia.

"I told him I will not wear it," Bisaccia said, smiling. "He's all Gucci'd out for the both of us."

Want to play catch with an NFL player? Raiders safety Erik Harris is down

By Paul Gutierrez

December 18, 2019

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- Erik Harris has this routine, you see, and while the Oakland Raiders would love to see him replicate his two-pick outing from earlier this season come Sunday against Philip Rivers, Harris' habit has more to do with people not in uniform.

Harris, whose journey to starting NFL safety is something Homer (the Greek poet, not Simpson) would dig, comes out an hour before team stretch to play catch with fans. With an official NFL football, Harris spins it from the field to the seats for a few tosses before spying another fan, nodding in acknowledgement and then tossing him or her the pigskin. The whole exercise lasts about 20 minutes, but for the lucky fans who just had a catch with an NFL player, the experience lasts a lifetime.

Hey, Raider Nation, wanna have a catch?

"I just saw the joy in kids' faces," said Harris, who began the catch-and-throw routine while playing in the Canadian Football League with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. Watching his north-of-the-border coaches do it inspired him.

Growing up some 40 miles from the Baltimore Ravens' training camp site, Harris also remembered how he felt when a player would interact with him as a youngster.

"Knowing the joy it brought me, I'm all about experiences, not really materialistic things," Harris said. "If you share a special moment with somebody and be present in that moment, I think that can be a lot more than just something that costs money."

Plus, playing catch can never be a bad thing for a defensive back, right? Especially one with a team-leading three interceptions.

"It's kind of surprising; a lot of fans actually can throw the ball," he said. "Some fans can throw, some can't, so it's always good to work on a bad ball. Bad ball, good ball, it doesn't matter. So, it's just special to see everybody enjoy the moment, really."

And while the Raiders have not been enjoying much of late -- they dropped their fourth straight game Sunday to fall to 6-8, this one in particularly heartbreaking fashion on a last-minute touchdown by the Jacksonville Jaguars in the franchise's final game in Oakland -- Harris has not deviated from his path.

Because while he began the season as a backup and core special-teams player, season-ending injuries to rookie Johnathan Abram in the opener and Karl Joseph in Harris' tour de force against Rivers and the Los Angeles Chargers on Nov. 7 have thrust Harris into a starting role.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I think Erik Harris does an excellent job of making guys around him better," Raiders defensive coordinator Paul Guenther said of Harris, whose 63 total tackles rank second on the team to linebacker Tahir Whitehead's 98 stops. Harris has also played every defensive snap in nine of the Raiders' last 11 games and has eight passes defended thus far.

"He's like a coach out there," said Guenther. "He can see the formations, understand the leverages, what may be coming, alerting guys ... I think Erik does an excellent job back there for us and that goes understated."

Understated? To wit: Harris was a walk-on at Division II California University of Pennsylvania who went undrafted in 2012 and had no NFL rookie minicamp invites.

So he drove four-plus hours to Buffalo for a CFL tryout, eventually landing with the Tiger-Cats and spending three years there before signing with the New Orleans Saints in 2016. A torn ACL was another roadblock before the Raiders signed him in 2017.

So yeah, Harris has seen his share of misfortune and crooked paths to his dream.

"I wouldn't say it's a prove-them-wrong type mentality, it was just like, prove myself right," Harris said. "Prove what I always believed in and believed in myself and the people that actually believed in me. For them to put their support in me, and people to give me opportunities, I want to prove them right."

"I always play with a chip on my shoulder just because it's what fueled me and I just take pride in coming to work every day, just knowing where I came from, really."

Wait, a chip, you say?

Indeed, after college, Harris worked in an Utz potato chip factory in Hanover, Pennsylvania, lugging 50-pound bags of corn flower and stirring said corn flower in the mixer. In 11-hour shifts. In a 110-degree room.

Harris has also worked for UPS as a supervisor.

The job description he prefers, of course, is that of starting Raiders safety. And, in the immortal words of Pedro Martinez, while Rivers may have nine children, Harris was his daddy in Week 10.

Harris picked him off twice, returning one 59 yards and another 56 yards for a touchdown (he also had a game-sealing 30-yard pick-six at the Indianapolis Colts in Week 4). And Harris woulda, coulda, shoulda had two more interceptions against Rivers that night.

"Some fan photo-shopped Philip Rivers' [face] onto my youngest kid's head," Harris laughed. "That was pretty funny."

Jokes aside, what has the 29-year-old Harris, married with four children, proved as the Raiders prepare to face Rivers and the Chargers in Carson this weekend?

"That it's all about opportunity and being prepared for opportunity and when those times meet, if you're prepared for the opportunity, good things will happen," he said. "I feel I've proven that I do belong in this league, but at the same time I'm never satisfied."

Sounds like another good habit to have.

Why Raiders' Alec Ingold at Lambeau Field will bring goosebumps for many

By Jerry McDonald

October 17, 2019

Otis Chambers had finished three guided tours at one of the most sainted locales in NFL history but conceded his emotions were mixed with the thought of the Raiders playing at Lambeau Field.

Chambers is Green Bay, Wisconsin, through and through. The Packers, as well as the local school district where he worked for 34 years, are a big part of his life. As an athletic director at Bay Port High, Chambers saw every game Raiders rookie fullback Alec Ingold ever played before taking his retirement dream job at Lambeau.

Ingold was a star high school quarterback, honors student and three-sport athlete who never acted like the big man on campus. Few in the "920" area code will forget his exploits. And here comes Ingold in silver and black, taking on the beloved Packers.

"I'll be his No. 1 fan," Chambers said. "If he carries the ball, that crowd will explode."

The center of attention at Bay Port, Ingold is a grunt now, and proud of it. He's a fullback — a position nearly extinct in some offensive systems. Yet Ingold has gained some social media fame in the last two weeks through crushing blocks and maximum effort.

Ingold got a taste of it during the Raiders' bye week, when he went back to Green Bay and also visited former teammates in Madison, where he played fullback at Wisconsin.

"It's good to get back," Ingold said while sitting in front of his locker when the Raiders resumed practice following their bye week. "I'm excited to play in front of friends and family. It will be fun."

A 24-21 win over the Bears in London gave Ingold another taste of the spotlight as it included a cut-block of Khalil Mack for a Josh Jacobs touchdown and making tackle Akiem Hicks go backwards as if on roller skates. Ingold finished it off by leaving his feet like a flying squirrel for a lead block to get Jacobs in the end zone for the game-winning touchdown.

"It just happened," Ingold said. "Just saw a lot of guys on the ground and at that moment I was like, 'We've got to get Josh in the end zone here.' So I tried to get in somebody's way."

Ingold sounded almost relieved to put all the talk about his heroics behind him.

"It's been crazy hearing the outreach of people," Ingold said. "It was nice to get back to the facility after a bye week and say, 'OK, let's analyze this. Let's get better.' I honestly couldn't wait until today."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

In other words, back to business.

Ingold first caught Jon Gruden's eye at the Senior Bowl. Ingold played for Gruden's "North" team in Mobile, Ala., and during the game laid out Stanford linebacker Bobby Okereke near the sideline. Gruden, who goes to bed dreaming of fullbacks, tight ends and power football, enthusiastically greeted Ingold after the play.

Gruden has liked what he's seen from Ingold as a pro even more.

"He was really ticked off he didn't get drafted," Gruden said. "If I've done anything right since I've been here coaching the Raiders it was the recruiting call I made to Ingold."

It turns out a relationship Ingold formed with Jacobs during the NFL scouting combine had something to do with it as well.

"He's been huge. Besides the offensive line, he's the next biggest thing," Jacobs said. "I think I'm third in the whole process. I mean, from meeting him at the combine, for him deciding to come here because of the relationship we had there, it's definitely dope. I give him all the credit. He deserves it."

When Ingold wasn't drafted, Gruden picked up the phone, the Raiders quickly signed him to a contract and he beat out incumbent Keith Smith to make the 53-man roster.

The son of Pat Ingold, a legend in his own right in the Green Bay wrestling community, Alec took up the sport in his youth and was one of the top age-group wrestlers in the country by the seventh grade.

Ingold added football and baseball in high school, blossoming as a quarterback in a running/passing scheme and giving up baseball after his freshman year.

As a senior, Ingold rejoined the baseball team and earned all-league honors as a right fielder as if he'd never stopped playing. That came after he won the state 220-pound wrestling title as a senior, finishing unbeaten.

The mental and physical discipline of wrestling gave Ingold a fundamental baseline that carries through to this day.

"Some of the attributes of the sport, where you're constantly working with your balance, how to move people and stay in control lends itself to football really well," Pat Ingold said in a phone interview.

It helped that Ingold was a natural athlete who was bigger and faster than anyone else. Mike Frieder, the principal at Bay Port, will never forget the first time he saw Ingold play.

"I remember him coming into a game when he was a sophomore and he ran 95 yards for a touchdown," Frieder said. "Then there was a holding penalty. The next play he ran 97-and-a-half yards for a touchdown. You looked around and thought, 'I've never seen that before.'"

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Gary Westerman, the coach at Bay Port, described Ingold as the best of both worlds — a natural athlete who was good at anything he tried while at the same time never resting on that talent or acting as if he were anything other than one piece of a team puzzle.

"Alec was always about the team," Westerman said.

In 34 games over three seasons at Bay Port, Ingold rushed for 4,208 yards and scored 61 touchdowns and completed 60.5 percent of his passes for 2,838 yards and 28 touchdowns.

"He was a very good passer. He could spin it," Westerman said. "The last time I saw him he joked he couldn't remember the last time he did a three-step drop."

Ingold originally committed to Northern Illinois to play quarterback. That changed when Pittsburgh coach Paul Chryst saw Ingold play and immediately offered him a scholarship without specifying a position.

Then Chryst left Pittsburgh for Wisconsin, and Ingold had a chance to play in his home state on scholarship. He began as a linebacker and eventually switched to running back and fullback. A punishing short-yardage runner, Ingold had 17 rushing touchdowns and averaged a touchdown every 6.1 carries for his career.

Once Northern Illinois was out of the picture, Ingold was prepared for the possibility that his days as a quarterback were over.

"I made that decision when I went to college that I was just going to play football, wherever I could find a spot on the field," Ingold said. "That's kind of how that worked. Wisconsin came with a late offer and I became a selfless football player."

Ingold delivers the last line with a dry sense of humor, which was part of his makeup at Bay Port until it was time to go to work.

Quinn Pierner, a junior at Wisconsin who succeeded Ingold as the Bay Port quarterback and was his backup, said a change came over Ingold when it was time to get serious.

"He was happy go lucky and stuff before games, but when he hit the field or the weight room it was straight business," Pierner said. "Once in awhile he'd be kind of fiery, but it was more leading by example. He just kind of put his head down and worked and let his play do the talking."

Ingold admitted he missed playing quarterback initially.

"When you're used to touching the ball all the time and calling plays, you definitely miss the impact," Ingold said. "But more and more you get into your own role and you realize how important your job can be. I don't miss it anymore."

Raiders quarterback Derek Carr said of Ingold, "Violent, very physical . . . the film doesn't do him justice — and the film looks pretty good."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The Raiders have yet to throw Ingold a pass and he's rushed the ball only twice — both for first downs.

Yet Ingold relishes the fullback role to the point where he seems almost uncomfortable discussing his own success, much the same way his understated father almost needs to be coaxed into talking about his son's rise.

"I don't need to tell you the odds of making a professional team as a fullback without getting drafted probably weren't all that great," Pat Ingold said. "But he's always been a fighter, and that's one thing you're always going to get out of him is his best effort. To see him play professional football, it honestly is very surreal, a pinch-yourself moment. I mean, that's my son out there."

THE PLAYERS' TRIBUNE

People Say I Run Angry

By Josh Jacobs

April 25, 2019

I just kept running.

I didn't know what else to do. I was just walking up to the gas station with three of my friends when a car pulled up in front of us. One of the dudes inside said something. I didn't hear him. One of my friends said something back. I don't remember what. The car sped off. We kept on walking. Then we saw the same car loop back around.

The lights cut off first. That's when we started running.

Then came the gunshots.

We scattered. I was booking it down the sidewalk. Out of the four of us, the car chose to follow me. And the dudes inside just kept on shooting.

I broke off and jumped over a fence into somebody's backyard. I juked my way through a bunch of kids' toys and jumped another fence. I was trying to calculate how far I was from home when I realized ... I couldn't go home. These dudes were following me. And I didn't want to lead them to my house.

So I just kept running.

I ran for about 10 blocks. One gear. Nonstop. A hundred miles an hour. Faster than I've ever run in my life. Just crashing through backyards and changing directions until I couldn't hear any gunshots or car engines.

When I finally stopped, I had no idea where I was. I just remember it felt like all the air had been sucked out of my chest at once. Like I had been punched in the gut.

That was the first time I got shot at. I was in middle school. About 13 years old, if I remember it right. And I'll be honest ... I was scared, man.

But being scared isn't even the worst part.

The worst is when you get used to it.

When you hear gunshots, and you don't even run. When you see people fighting in the street, and you don't even look twice. When the spotlight from a helicopter shines through your bedroom window, and you just pull the shades down.

Because it's just another day in the life.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I was so relieved when I got home. Not only because I got there safe, but because I had a home to go to at all.

I grew up in Tulsa, Oklahoma. When I was in the fourth grade, my parents split up, and I went to live with my pops. He had just moved out of his apartment. He'd had another one lined up, but it wasn't ready yet. It was supposed to only take a couple of weeks, so we stayed with some relatives for a bit. But the apartment took longer than expected. When we had no family left to stay with and nowhere else to go, we slept in my dad's Suburban.

I would shower in the locker rooms after football practice, then my pops would pick me up and drive around to look for a spot on the side of the road to park for the night. Somewhere out of the way. I would lie down in the back seat and he would be up front. I remember he had a gun, and whenever he laid his seat back at night, he would always keep it on his chest with his hand on it. Just in case.

If he ever slept, I didn't see it. Every time I woke up — whether it was morning or the middle of the night — he was awake. Watching out. Protecting me.

We slept in that Suburban every night for maybe two weeks until the apartment was finally ready. We moved in, and a couple of months later, my dad won custody of my three brothers and my sister, and they moved in with us, too.

Then, my dad lost his job.

We eventually got kicked out of the apartment. Pops couldn't pay, and the landlord had somebody else lined up who was willing to pay more anyway. So that was it for us. For the next two years or so, we basically lived out of our backpacks, hopping from motel to motel. Every now and then my dad would snag an apartment, but it wouldn't last too long. And before we knew it, it was back to the motel.

On good days, we'd find a spot that had a continental breakfast where we could sneak enough fruit and bagels to last us a whole day. On bad days, we would eat rice and beans or ramen noodles. I was the king of white rice and ramen noodles, man. A five-star microwave chef. My dad used to buy them in big quantities so he could feed all of us. I'd cook for everybody. Some nights, when the food supply was really thin, my dad wouldn't eat. I would try to give him some of my food, but he wouldn't let me.

I didn't really understand it all at the time — the way we were living, the sacrifices my dad was making ... none of it. I just never looked at our life as a struggle. To me, it was just life. It was all I knew.

But now, looking back on it all, I understand.

I understand how difficult it was for my dad. How frustrating it must have been. And he never took those frustrations out on us. Even on the worst nights, when we didn't have enough food to eat or any clean clothes to wear to school the next day, we would still laugh together. We didn't have game nights or movie nights. Pops used to have us sing. We'd write poetry. Freestyle rap while the others beatboxed. My older brothers would always draw. He wanted us to express ourselves. To engage with each other.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Even when our stomachs were empty, we would spend all night laughing together, as a family.

I remember one night, when money was at its tightest, my dad told me that if he went out on the street and sold drugs, we wouldn't have to worry about money, or food, or a place to live anymore. There was plenty of money out there to be had.

But he said he would never do it, for two reasons. One, it was too risky. If he got arrested or sent to jail, there would be nobody to take care of us kids, and he might lose us. And that was out of the question.

And two ... he said that the easy way out usually isn't the right way. He said it's hard work and perseverance that gets rewarded, not shortcuts.

That's what he had been doing. Working hard. Persevering. Trying to do the right things, knowing — no ... hoping — that everything would work out.

Then, the summer before I went into the eighth grade, pops landed a pretty steady job. We left the motels behind and moved into a house — the one in the rough part of town with the gunshots and the street fights and the helicopters. Food was still hard to come by. Money was still tight. Life was still a struggle.

But we finally had a place to call home.

Football wasn't an escape. I didn't play to take out my frustrations, or to cope, or to keep off the streets.

I played because I loved it.

By my junior year in high school, I knew I had potential. I thought I could be pretty good. By my senior year, I knew I could be special.

My stats were so ridiculous that when my coach sent them in to the local newspaper each week, they wouldn't even print them. They didn't believe them. They thought my coach was padding my stats to make me look good. I sat back and watched as other kids with less impressive stats got their names in the paper and won all kinds of weekly awards.

I was getting nothing.

So my coach called up one of the reporters from the newspaper and told him to come down to McLain High School and watch me play in person. To come see for himself.

This was about halfway through my senior year. I was averaging around 300 rushing yards per game, but I still had no scholarship offers. I had zero stars on the recruiting websites.

I didn't just want to show that reporter what he had been missing. I wanted to show everybody.

I scored the first touchdown of the game on a 65-yard run. By the end of the night, I had run for 455 yards and six touchdowns. And I did it all on just 22 carries.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

It was the best game of my high school career.

My pops always preached that if you do the right things, everything else will work out. Control what you can control, and everything else will fall into place, he'd say.

So it was crazy to me that even after that huge game, it was still crickets on the recruiting front. By the end of the season, I had better stats than some of the dudes in my area getting scholarship offers. And we had basically played against the same competition.

Just doing the right things obviously wasn't working. I needed to do more.

But I didn't know what else to do. I couldn't afford football camps. My high school didn't have a history of big-time recruits, so college coaches rarely came to visit. We just weren't on their routes. And they don't usually go out of their way to see just one guy.

Then my dad got a phone call from a random dude down in Texas. He said his name was G. Smith. He works with high school kids to help them get recruited. He had stumbled upon my highlight tape while he was checking out some other recruits, and he was so impressed that he tracked me down and reached out.

"This is one of the best highlight tapes I've ever seen," he told my dad. "It's like 12 minutes of straight touchdowns ... how does he not have any offers?"

Coach Smith said he was going to help me get noticed. He told me to start a Twitter account and post my highlights. He would take it from there. And I don't know what he did ... but like a day or two after I started posting my highlights, my phone started ringing off the hook.

Wyoming, Missouri, New Mexico State, Purdue, Oklahoma ... so many schools.

Some of those phone calls turned into scholarship offers.

That's when I could finally breathe a sigh of relief. I had more than just some interest. I had actual offers. So no matter what, I was going to school somewhere — something not a lot of kids from my neighborhood get to do.

Wyoming was the first school to really show genuine interest in me. The first school to offer me. They were on me way before anybody else. Two weeks before signing day, it was basically a lock. I was going to Wyoming. Then Alabama showed up.

Ask anyone I grew up with ... Alabama was my favorite team. I had wanted to play there since middle school. So when they came into the fold, it was a wrap.

Everybody knows Alabama for being a football factory. For putting dudes in the NFL left and right. But I didn't look at it that way. I saw it as an opportunity to play against the most elite competition in college football, and to get a quality education at the same time. Where I'm from, kids don't get either of those opportunities. So that was all I was focused on. Getting to the NFL was the absolute furthest thing from my mind.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I honestly don't think I even considered the NFL as a possibility until the SEC championship game last year against Georgia.

I had been sick the whole week. Flu-like symptoms. That weak kind of sick where your back aches and you don't want to eat or stand up or even move.

I was at the tail end of it by the time the game came around, but I had missed a lot of practice time that week. I still couldn't eat. I was dehydrated. I was in rough shape. The trainers tried to hold me out.

But I told them I was playing.

I got one IV before the game, two more during and one after. Every time I came to the sideline, it felt like I was dying of thirst and I had no wind. So they had the IVs and an oxygen mask right there waiting for me.

I only got eight carries in the game. But I ran for 83 yards and two touchdowns.

Enough to win MVP.

That was my Jordan Flu Game, man. I came out of that one knowing that if I could be in that kind of condition and not just fight through it, but still ball out ... on that big of a stage, against a great defense like Georgia's ... then I have what it takes to play at the next level.

And if the Georgia game got me thinking about the NFL for the first time, the Oklahoma game basically punched my ticket. It felt like every time I touched the ball in that game, something special happened.

My favorite play — I think everybody's favorite play — was when I ran over the safety on my way to the end zone.

The thing I loved most about that play is what happened after. Because the next few guys who tried to tackle me ... they were easy targets, man. They were so worried about getting bulldozed that they were lunging at me. So I could lower the shoulder like I was gonna try and run them over, then hit them with a juke, and they'd go flying.

I love setting dudes up like that. It's a chess game for me. I want to keep the defense guessing. Keep them off balance.

And I think that Oklahoma game is proof that I'm versatile enough to do that.

People say I run angry.

I don't know. I guess I do. But I honestly don't think it's about how I run. It's about why I do it, and who I do it for.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I run for my pops, the man who sacrificed so much and worked so hard to provide for me and educate me. I run for my three-year-old son, Braxton, so he can have a father he's proud of, like I'm proud of mine. I run for my sister and my three brothers. I run for my teammates and my coaches. I run for everybody who has ever supported me, anyone who's ever doubted me, and for anyone out there living on white rice and ramen noodles. I run for anyone who's in a tough situation and feels like it's never going to end — that there's no light at the end of the tunnel.

I run to show them that there is.

Then, when I'm totally spent — when I'm on my last leg and I have absolutely nothing left to give ... I dig even deeper.

And I run for me.

Because I love it.

Because it's what I do.

That's the kind of player you're going to get if you draft me. Someone who loves the game of football. A hard worker who's totally dedicated to the team, and to winning. You'll get a fresh, healthy back, because I split carries at Alabama. They didn't use me up. So I'm a low-mileage guy who's ready to run up the odometer and shoulder the load.

But most of all, you'll get a player who is very appreciative.

I'm never going to forget the nights spent in the back of that Suburban. I'll never forget the motels. The gunshots. The helicopters. I know what it's like to be scared. To be hungry. To have nothing in my future but uncertainty.

So I'm never going to take the privilege of playing in the NFL for granted. I'm going to come in and sacrifice whatever is necessary to succeed. I'm gonna hustle. I'm gonna put the work in and do the right things, like my pops always said.

Everything else will fall into place.

THE ATHLETIC

Josh Jacobs' story: From the 'concrete rose' of North Tulsa to a Raiders' first-round selection

By Vic Tafur

May 14, 2019

The first time Josh Jacobs and his father said it to each other was when Josh was in the fourth grade and they were sleeping at night in their car.

They would say it often as Jacobs blazed a trail from the darkness in Tulsa to the NFL Draft two weeks ago. That Thursday night, when the Alabama running back got word that the Raiders were about to draft him in the first round, he looked to his dad and said it again.

This time he said it to make sure his dad wasn't going to cry.

"You good?" Josh said.

"I'm good," Marty Jacobs said. "You good?"

"I'm good," Josh said back.

The two men embraced and Jacobs took the stage in Nashville to begin the next chapter of what will surely be a movie at some point. After Jacobs shook commissioner Roger Goodell's hand, put on his Raiders hat and walked off, he showed Hall of Famer Deion Sanders the lining of his suit jacket.

It looked like a map at first, but it was a rendition of a road in Tulsa with a red flower coming out of it.

"It was very important for me," Jacobs said when I asked him about the jacket later that night. "It's a concrete rose. It has North Tulsa where I'm from and it was very important for me to pay homage to where I'm from, because with me ... it's like I have the city on my back. I give everybody back home faith and hope.

"I mean, I'm the first one to do it out of the school that I come from. I'm the first one to even go to college out of the school that I come from for sports, so it's just huge."

Jacobs is also the first one to do it after living as a kid night-to-night in his dad's maroon Chevy Suburban and later in motels.

"Where this kid has come from, there is something inside of him ... that I didn't go through as a young man," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said.

The Raiders drafted Jacobs 24th overall because he was the best running back in the draft and Gruden has long said he wanted a three-down back. On Monday, Jacobs and the other Raiders rookies were allowed to workout on the field with the veterans for the first time. He showed the cutting ability, fast-developing speed, power and soft hands that general manager Mike Mayock fell in love with at the College Football Playoff championship game in January.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But the 5-foot-10, 219-pound Jacobs offers a lot more than that. He is a special kid who turned to football as a youngster and gave everything he had to the game. And the game gave back.

"Football is kind of like my peace," Jacobs said the day after the draft. "It's like the one place I feel like I can do no wrong. Growing up and going through everything that I've been through — being homeless, living in hotels and stuff — football was always an outlet.

"That's what kind of drives me and that's where I found the love of the game and that's why I play with so much emotion."

Jacobs started playing youth football around the same time his father and mother separated in 2006. Marty fought for custody of the five kids, and rather than wait for a decision, Josh went with his dad. Josh didn't get along with his mother. (Marty would ultimately win custody of all five kids.)

Shortly after he joined his father, an apartment that Marty had lined up fell through. Money was very tight. So the two drove around every night for two weeks, looking for a safe-enough spot to park and get some sleep. Josh, at least, would sleep in the back seat. But he doesn't think his dad ever did close his eyes.

"I remember he had a gun, and whenever he laid his seat back at night, he would always keep it on his chest with his hand on it. Just in case," Jacobs wrote for The Players' Tribune last month. "If he ever slept, I didn't see it. Every time I woke up — whether it was morning or the middle of the night — he was awake. Watching out. Protecting me."

Josh said he always felt safe. His dad had him write poetry to combat the down time, and he said he didn't realize what he didn't have until he got to middle school and heard about how good the other kids had it.

His dad later lost his job and Jacobs and his four siblings lived from motel room to motel room until Marty found another one. Josh was the cook of the household.

"I was the king of white rice and ramen noodles, man," Jacobs wrote for The Players' Tribune. "A five-star microwave chef. My dad used to buy them in big quantities so he could feed all of us. I'd cook for everybody."

Marty would often skip meals because there wasn't enough, as he looked for more work and the family's next residence.

"I didn't really understand it all at the time," Josh Jacobs wrote. "The way we were living, the sacrifices my dad was making ... none of it. I just never looked at our life as a struggle. To me, it was just life. It was all I knew."

And he knew how to run by and through tackles on the football field. Jacobs grew, and ran faster and harder, just like his favorite player, Adrian Peterson. His senior year at McClain High, Jacobs lined up as the team's Wildcat quarterback and ran for 2,704 yards and 31 touchdowns, averaging 15 yards a carry.

Still, somehow, he wasn't on the map for recruiters. Jacobs had never been to any of the summer camps, and, like he said, his high school had no football history.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"The local newspapers thought I was making his stats up," retired McClain coach Jarvis Payne said in a telephone interview. "They were unbelievable."

Only Wyoming and New Mexico State offered scholarships. TCU wanted him as a cornerback and an assistant coach even told Jacobs that there were 1,000 other running backs like him.

That was when a recruiting coordinator and coach in Texas happened to see some highlights of Jacobs. Gerald Smith tracked down a number for Marty Jacobs and told him that his son needed a Twitter account to post his highlights on.

So Jacobs, with Payne's help, created an account. And Smith made sure other recruiters knew.

Two days later — yes, two — the offers started pouring in.

"The phone was ringing off the hook," Jacobs said.

Missouri, Purdue, Oklahoma. Soon, Alabama took notice.

"And once Alabama wants you, that's it," Jacobs said.

Jacobs went on to become part of a three-headed running attack at Alabama with Damien Harris and Antioch High alum Najee Harris.

(In an amazing footnote, Jacobs has never met Gerald Smith, though his dad did once.)

Jacobs helped the Crimson Tide win a national title in 2017 and he averaged 5.9 yards a carry his three seasons there. He also caught 30 passes last season. The Raiders told him they planned to draft him back in February.

"I never dreamed we would be in the position we're in now," Marty Jacobs told ESPN Radio two weeks ago. "Actually, when he was born I did have dreams about him playing in a big stadium, but I never really thought that meant anything. I just wanted him to be better than me ... I didn't know how we were going to do it, but I knew the kids were going to be safe with me. I had to protect their destinies. ..."

"We went through a lot. Josh was always strong and always positive."

Marty Jacobs declined an interview request last week and is working on a deal to sell the story rights. As for Josh, he and his 3-year-old son, Braxton, are preparing for their own adventure.

Jacobs even has his first commercial deal. After years of sleeping in the car and on hotel floors — he even slept on the floor his first year at Alabama because he was used to it — Jacobs is now a spokesman for Sleep Number beds.

"There is nothing like a good night's sleep in a comfortable bed," Jacobs said.

When his head hits the pillow every night, it all comes back to him. All the hard work and sacrifices. By him and his dad. Jacobs is still processing that he is a running back in the NFL.

"It's a lot of emotions," Jacobs said a day after the draft. "It's like everything hitting you at once. It's everything you've worked for, everything you've prayed for, everything for you've sweated for, cried for, everything. It's just finally coming to reality.

"The crazy thing about it is, you're happy in the moment, but then the next thing you think about is it's the beginning of everything ... so it's a lot of emotions."

Before Jacobs came out for the Raiders' rookie camp on May 3, his dad gave him a call to check on him and see if he was nervous.

"You good?"

"I'm good."

A Q&A with Kolton Miller: The Raiders' 2018 top pick has bulked up, healed up and is getting a house built in Vegas

By Vic Tafur

April 22, 2019

One of the things most Raiders fans ask me about is how the offseason went. Not mine. Kolton Miller's.

The rookie started all 16 games at left tackle last season, and while he struggled some, you have to attribute at least a little bit of that to playing with a bad knee the last 13 weeks of the season.

Plus, the 15th-overall draft pick was seen as a bit of a project coming in, one that would need to put on some more muscle and grow into his role as Derek Carr's blindside protector. Miller has done that the last four months and we sat down for 15 minutes last week to discuss his new-found power, what he learned last season and his big plans for not only next season but when the team moves to Las Vegas in 2020.

(Heads up: I have written several times that the Raiders are planning to keep Miller at left tackle and play free-agent signee Trent Brown on the right side. Coach Jon Gruden and general manager Mike Mayock both passed on the question when others asked several times, so I felt there was no need to put Miller on the spot and ask him here.)

Both the coaches and you said that you wanted to get stronger this offseason. Looks like mission accomplished. What have you been doing?

I have been training with Dan Jameson at Boss MMA in Roseville. I am close to 330 pounds right now and bench and my squat have gone up. I was throwing around 505 pounds in the back squat and benching 320 like it was nothing. I got a lot stronger.

Besides weights, we're doing movement drills and working on my footwork. I have been doing some boxing and some hip exercises as well. A little bit of everything.

Were you about 315 last year?

When I got drafted, I was 312. And then I got up to 320 when the season started and I lost some of that during the season.

This past week was the first week of offseason workouts here at the team facility. What was your first impression of Trent Brown? You feel small?

He is big. Really big. I don't think I have ever said that before. He is 6-9 and he is easily more than 360. We have talked a little bit but it's early still. Everyone is just getting acquainted and in meetings learning the offense.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

You lost a couple of veterans on that offensive line in Donald Penn and Kelechi Osemele. What did those guys leave you with?

Donald was a big help last year. Just having him on the sidelines during games and even at practices. If I messed something up, he would make sure I knew it and offer suggestions about what I could do to make it better. KO was great to have next to me. Guys would be scared to try to go inside against me. Both are hard workers. It's a shame they're gone but that's how the business works. I grew a lot with them last year and that should really help me this year.

When you look back at last season, do you remember the successes — you had some nice games against some top pass rushers — or the struggles more? Or is it the knee that you think of first?

It's all experience. That's the biggest thing. When you look at football compared to other sports ... in baseball, you're playing 162 games, basketball 82, but in football it's a limited amount of games, so for young guys you have to get that experience in and try to get as much 1-on-1 work on the side and in the offseason as you can.

The injury thing ... I have never had to deal with that, really, before. At UCLA, I didn't get hurt that much at all. Then last year, it was sort of a big deal. I think some guys would sit out, but I was just trying to manage it and adjust my schedule all week to get my knee ready for games. I just wanted to be a pro and keep competing,

It was a MCL sprain on your right knee, correct? All good now?

Yeah, Grade 2. I hurt it (Week 4) during the Browns game. KO got hurt that game too. There were occasions later in the season where it would be getting better and then it would get hit. And you're like, "Damnit!" So, I was working through that all season — and learning from it. That made me stronger mentally and should really help my game this year. ...

Toward the end of the season, that's when I felt better and I got used to it. I don't think it's ever going to be normal — you still feel a little bit of looseness — but it shouldn't affect my game. If anything, I have heard from vets — Lee (Smith) and Derek — that when you have the injury first it really sucks, but when you have that and if you are to get the same thing again, the healing process is a lot quicker. ...

A trainer said it's kind of like working with spaghetti. (Laughs) They have compared people who have had surgery for it and people who haven't and it ended up healing the same.

Being a rookie left tackle ... Gruden alluded to it a few times just how hard that is. How long did it take you to get comfortable last season?

Yeah. Everything was faster in college than high school. Now, you get to the NFL and everything is (snaps fingers repeatedly) super, super fast. Even once you get the play call and get set, it's even faster. I think the game will be a lot slower for me this season and I am diving deeper in my studies to help with that. Understanding the bigger picture and why things happen.

Like, how plays develop ...

Yeah, that and the defensive rotations, and what we can expect. What pressures come from different looks.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Who was the toughest guy you went against last year?

I would say Myles Garrett and Melvin Ingram. I would fight them the whole game and besides their power, they also have really good speed.

I know players take it game to game, and season to season, but do you have to look ahead a little bit, with the team moving to Las Vegas in 2020? Is that weird at all, or do you not even think about that yet?

Well, I am building a house in Vegas right now. Back in Henderson, about 10 minutes from the new facility. My mom is helping me with it. I am terrible at picking things out, and she has an eye for that kind of thing. We went down last weekend and had all the options picked out.

You make sure and get the man cave put in?

Yeah, it's a game room. I think it's by the pool. Gotta have a pool in Vegas. And a man cave. I am really excited about that house. It's going to be cool. But first things first.

TE Darren Waller

THE ATHLETIC

Football almost killed Darren Waller. Then, football saved Darren Waller

By Dan Pompei

Dec. 19, 2019

ALAMEDA, Calif. — The morning sun has yet to show itself, but Darren Waller has begun making light of his own.

“Ahhhhhhhhhh.”

Then a pause.

“Ohhhhhhhhhhh.”

Another pause.

“Mmmmmmmmmmm.”

Waller holds each chant for five seconds, listening to the sounds, focusing on the vibrations, detaching from feelings and thoughts. This goes on for 10 minutes or so.

“Before the day starts, you want to think your whole day through before you live it, or make a million decisions in your head that make you really anxious,” the Raiders tight end says. “With (chant meditation), I start my day at peace even if my day is full.”

Peace is essential to Waller, more so than it is to many because he hasn’t had it for most of his 27 years.

From the depths of addiction to the heights of achievement, from destroying himself to destroying defenses, Waller has traveled a path that is almost too incredible to be believed.

First, football almost killed him.

Then, football saved him.

Now, he wants to save others.

His story has three parts.

1. Football almost killed him

As a child of a stable, loving, two-parent family in a middle-class, mixed neighborhood in Cobb County, Atlanta, Waller wanted to impress others. He found one way to do that, probably the only way: playing football.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But he didn't love football. He loved math and science. He enjoyed testing himself mentally and was placed in advanced classes. He started playing piano at age 3 (his great-grandfather is accomplished jazz pianist Fats Waller) and was considered a prodigy.

"That went out the window because it wasn't cool," Waller says. "The other black kids I was hanging out with, I was kind of being made fun of because I talked too proper, or I dressed the way I dressed... People used to get on me that I wasn't black enough... So I went from (wanting) to do something with my mind and try to change the world, to just playing football."

He still didn't fit in, though. Lonely and depressed, he looked for a way to suppress his anxiety. When he was 16, he found what he was looking for in a medicine cabinet at a friend's house.

Waller began using Percocet, a pain killer that contains the narcotic Oxycodone. Over time, he also used alcohol, weed, opiates and cocaine. "I'd take anything I could get my hands on," he says. "If it could get me to a certain place I wanted to be, I was all in."

He went to Georgia Tech on a football scholarship as a wide receiver. More interested in getting high than getting in the end zone, Waller never came close to fulfilling his potential there.

There were two suspensions for failed drug tests and two attempts at rehab. A third failed drug test was supposed to result in expulsion. Waller says he was using daily, and drug tested every Tuesday. He is sure he failed more than two tests.

Why wasn't he expelled? "I feel like my senior year we had a really good team," he says. "I was still doing the same things I was doing the year before."

He estimates he failed tests in double digits in college, which is nothing compared to the number of tests he should have failed in the NFL. When Waller was drafted by the Ravens in the sixth round in 2015, he immediately went into the league's substance program because of his failed tests in college. The NFL tested him two to three times a week, year-round, no matter where he was. "I'm failing every single one of those," Waller says. "I wouldn't be surprised if it was 100 (failed tests) in the league."

When he was with the Ravens, using was "priority No. 1" for him. "I would be one of the last people in (the facility) in the morning and one of the first people to leave because I didn't want to really be there," Waller says. "Being in the building gave me anxiety."

He was living a secret life, or trying to. But he wasn't fooling anyone. Some of his teammates even facilitated his habit. "I figured out the guys who smoked weed and asked who they got it from, and they would give me phone numbers," he says. "Eventually, if I couldn't get (drugs)... I was down in some of the worst neighborhoods in Baltimore, driving through neighborhoods trying to find it."

Waller and another teammate would leave work, make their purchases, get high and play video games. "I never went anywhere, never wanted to be outside or be seen," he says. "I was in my own room, laying there, laying in the dark, closed blinds."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

His performances were reflective of his lifestyle. "When I got on the field, I had this voice in the back of my mind that said I didn't really respect myself," Waller says "I didn't have a lot of confidence in myself. When things got tough, and I had to make something happen, I'd just kind of freeze up or psych myself out."

Veteran tight end Ben Watson took an interest and kept telling Waller how good he could be. Coach John Harbaugh and then-general manager Ozzie Newsome appealed to him repeatedly, but in Waller's unreasonable state, he felt like they were attacking him. He shut them off.

Waller was suspended the first four games of the 2016 season for violating the substance abuse policy. Nothing changed after his first suspension, and the league suspended him the entire 2017 season.

On Aug. 11, 2017, Waller, already intoxicated from alcohol, took what he thought was 100 milligrams of Percocet. It actually was Fentanyl.

For five hours, Waller sat in his car in a parking lot not far from the Ravens facility. His head was spinning and his stomach churning. He couldn't move.

This was an overdose. This was rock bottom. This was just what Waller needed.

2. Football saved him

Waller eventually was able to drive himself back to his room after overdosing. He felt off for a couple of days, but never sought medical attention, and didn't tell anyone what happened for months.

During this period, he started to open up to his parents, Dorian and Charlena Waller. They opened up to him too, and told him of a history of addiction on both sides of the family. "That kind of lit a spark in me," Waller says. "And my love for them was renewed then."

Waller already was suspended, so the only representatives of the Ravens who were allowed to talk to him were player engagement director Harry Swayne and team psychologist Trice Bent-Goodley. They had been working on earning his trust for a long time, and it was working.

"They were never judgmental," he says. "They always somehow saw the good in me even when I couldn't see it in myself."

Waller listened when Swayne and Bent-Goodley, along with Oliver Walcott, his case manager from the NFL's substance abuse program, suggested he go to Borden Cottage at McLean Hospital in Camden, Maine.

About a month after overdosing, he checked in to Borden Cottage for a 30-day stay. Waller had a different attitude from when he went to rehab previously. And he was in a different kind of place from the rehab centers he had been in before.

Borden Cottage is on a hilltop overlooking 14 picturesque acres, and Penobscot Bay. The facility accommodates only eight patients at a time, and offers yoga, swimming, a fitness center with a personal trainer, bowling, an art studio, a music studio, a library and a theater room.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"It was incredible," Waller says. "From learning meditation to finally talking through and tapping into the pains of my past. There were painful moments, uncovering those things, revealing them, and seeing how ugly it made me on the inside. But as soon as I admitted it, I felt good and felt free. I wasn't carrying a thousand-pound weight on my back wherever I went."

Waller's stay at Borden Cottage cost north of $60,000. The NFL paid for everything.

When he was released, he returned to Georgia and took a job stocking shelves at Sprouts Farmers Market. At Waller's recovery meetings, his sponsor Charles helped him embrace the 12 steps that lead to the sunny side of the street. Charles also helped him heal the brokenness inside.

"He is a black man, perfect for me to be with and see there is no shame in thinking I'm not black enough," Waller says. "I'm black enough just by being strong and trying to change the course of my family by being clean and being honest with myself. That's what a man is in general. He helped me get over that. I was intimidated with black women. (I thought) a black woman would surely see I'm not black enough. He kind of helped me see I could date whoever I want or be around whoever I want."

In 2018, the Ravens gave Waller another chance he probably didn't deserve.

In practices, Ravens defenders couldn't cover him. But the team had three other quality tight ends they could trust. Waller was put on the practice squad.

Three days after Thanksgiving, the Ravens were finishing their warmups for a game against the Raiders at M&T Bank Stadium. Some players who didn't expect to play remained on the field to get a little work in. Raiders offensive coordinator Greg Olson hung around to watch Ravens backup quarterback Robert Griffin III. Griffin was throwing to Waller, who ran a deep go route into the end zone. Ravens cornerback Jimmy Smith, wearing earphones and in his own world, was plowed over by Waller.

Olson returned to the locker room and asked head coach Jon Gruden if he knew anything about Waller. "We don't have anyone on our team who looks like that guy or runs like him," Olson told Gruden.

After the game, Olson took a seat on the team plane next to Gruden, and Gruden told him, "We just signed the tight end you liked."

Soon after, Waller landed in California for the first time in his life. His playbook was in his hands when he walked into the office of Raiders tight ends coach Frank Smith. Smith, who has friends who have struggled with addiction, knew there were more important things than learning the playbook. He told him to put it away.

They went to meet the Raiders player engagement director, the team psychologist, and Alex Cable, the son of offensive line coach Tom Cable. Alex has helped other athletes with recovery and was able to help build a support system for Waller.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

They never talked about football that day. "It's about showing you care and connecting as a person before you ever teach them a play," Smith says. "I think that's why he felt he'd have a chance to excel here, because we care about the person more than the player."

Smith reached Waller in a way other coaches might not have been able to. He's the type of coach who gets to know his players' parents, and who has pictures of his players' children in the team meeting room. "Hate and anger take you only so far," Smith says. "Love and compassion and devotion will take you over the top."

Even Gruden, known for giving into gloom now and then, has been all sparkle with Waller. "He was always encouraging me from the day I got here," Waller says. "'We believe in you. You can do great things here.' Every time he talked to me. I never had a coach talk to me like that before."

Because Waller is the only tight end on the team who doesn't play special teams, he and Smith meet one-on-one several days a week. And the conversation usually isn't about football. "It is," Smith says, "a chance for us to be human."

Waller fits with the Raiders. "I felt that connection as soon as I came in," he says. "It was a sense of comfort, like I'm not just a weirdo coming in here all alone. ... It made it easier for me to transition and to want to do better because these people think highly of me and aren't holding my past over my head."

Olson says Waller is one of the most popular players — if not the most popular — on offense. The tight ends have dinner together at least once a week. Waller is part of a bible study group that meets on Mondays and includes quarterback Derek Carr.

"You know what's cool is he's very open during the bible study," Carr says. "I've been around some guys knowing they are going through some stuff, and they don't say anything. ... There have been times he's mentioned something, and I have a scripture or story that helped me and I give it to him."

Waller had a girlfriend last year, and he says he was not being faithful to her. He didn't feel right about it and admitted it during bible study. "(Carr) spoke some truths, (gave me) reasons to have confidence in myself and believe that God is trying to make me better," Waller says. "He made me realize I don't have to keep giving into temptation."

Waller thought he never wanted to become a father because he didn't want children who were cursed with his demons. Carr talked him through it, and Waller had a change of heart.

A relapse is not a worry, according to those who are close to Waller. But he is a work in progress.

He still feels loneliness at times. He lives his life differently from most of his single peers. His family members are on the other side of the country.

He was voted a Pro Bowl alternate this week, and he has 1,001 receiving yards, more than any tight end except Travis Kelce of the Chiefs. But Waller is not as confident as his achievements suggest he should be.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I spent almost 25 years of my life thinking I wasn't good enough," he says. "On the field, it was like, 'Don't drop this, don't drop this, don't drop this.' Instead of being like, 'I'm going to make this play.' There may be a day when I slip back to my old ways. If I drop one pass at practice and I'm just like, 'Man, what am I doing!' Before that would last for a few weeks. Now it may last for a few minutes, or maybe an hour. Then I'll come out of it."

Darren Waller, Oakland Raider, is very different from Darren Waller, Baltimore Raven. The Baltimore version of Waller did what was necessary to get by. The Oakland version of Waller immerses himself in football. He gets to the facility early and stays late. He watches more tape, asks more questions, stretches more, gets more massages, and takes more cold tubs.

It shows. Gruden says the 6-6, 266-pound Waller might be "the most impressive athlete that I've seen in this league," and he clearly expects greatness from him.

Waller doesn't play football to impress others anymore, which may be why he impresses so many. "Now it's like I'm tapped into the joy football brings, the challenge of it," he says. "Every day I have to be ready mentally, physically, emotionally, and spiritually to put myself into the game and not go back to that mindset. ... I look to have fun."

It isn't just that Waller is killing it on the field. His skin is clearer. His eyes are brighter. His posture is better. He is more engaging. His relationships with family members are better.

Waller feels a debt of gratitude to the NFL.

Where would he be without football?

"I think the same habits would be happening," he says. "And I'd still be going about my life thinking that was the way to have peace. I can't say I'd be clean if not for the NFL and the opportunity to go to rehab."

3. Now he wants to save others

"Today is Aug. 11," Waller said in the third episode of HBO's "Hard Knocks" last summer. "On the 12th, I'll be clean for two years."

"Hard Knocks" introduced Waller's struggle to many and made him aware of the power of his story. Gruden calls it "the greatest story in the game this year."

"Where he's come from ... a lot of people don't make it through that story," Carr says. "The fact that he's come up on the other side, hopefully that helps other people. It's not just about him. He can have a real impact on a lot of people."

Waller stood in front of the Raiders' rookies and spoke from the heart of where he has been. There is no interview he will turn down. He has aligned with a speaker's bureau so he can keep talking about it in the offseason.

"It reinforces why I'm doing it in my mind, what value it brings to my life," Waller says. "The more I speak it out loud, it lets me know I'm not living a lie."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Waller tries to go to two recovery meetings a week. He bounces from Alameda to Hayward to San Leandro and Castro Valley, deriving — and delivering — hope and strength from people like him.

He still is drug tested two to three times weekly and says he has not consumed drugs or alcohol since his overdose. He says he won't take anything stronger than an anti-inflammatory.

Waller's teammates, meanwhile, use addictive opioids and smoke weed. He sees it.

The first drug Waller used was Percocet, but he thinks marijuana is a gateway drug, "It leads you to being around certain people," he says. "It always ends up that high is not enough. You always feel you have to elevate it when you do it so much. That's why I feel it is a gateway drug."

He believes it can be OK for some, but not others. "If you can handle your day-to-day activities and manage them in a responsible manner while still doing it, by all means, use it if you feel it helps you," he says. "If it's something that takes you away from being responsible or takes you away from putting forth your best effort as far as work ethic, or if it gets in the way of family relationships, I feel you should re-evaluate."

In Waller's new life, there is less time for video games and Netflix. There is more time reading, listening to podcasts, and writing, recording and producing music.

The music on his albums, "Wall Street" and "Better Call Wall," is mostly rap, but his musical tastes have evolved. He used to be all rhyme, beats and turntabling. Now he's more piano, horns and strings.

"The artists I listened to growing up, I can't even listen to anymore," says Waller. "It's like having someone in my ear talking to me about using drugs all day, or getting money, or impressing people, or using women in a certain type of way. ... I'm filtering out things that aren't good for me."

Waller also is welcoming things that are good for him. "As soon as I started turning over my will and my life to God, things turned around," he says. "God has a bigger plan for me than I have for myself."

That plan includes a foundation, maybe opening recovery centers, or programs for kids that would try to change the meaning of what is cool. Life is happening fast for him, and he is sorting through the possibilities.

Las Vegas will be an interesting home for Waller when the Raiders move there in 2020. Known as the American city that most appeals to the dark side of the soul, Vegas offers temptation and trouble, in various forms, to anyone who seeks them.

Initially, Waller felt anxiety about becoming a resident of "Sin City." He has been there twice, but hardly remembers his visits because he blacked out for most of his time there.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But now he is thinking about Vegas as the place he is destined to be, a place he can make a compelling statement. "He's going to carry on this mission in a city that's known for debauchery, and he's going to be a beacon of light," Smith says. "He's going to help a tremendous amount of people once we get to Las Vegas."

Waller already has started helping people.

Steve Fowler and Waller knew each other from the neighborhood when they were kids. They didn't become friends until they connected when Waller was in Baltimore.

"Something drew me to him," says Fowler, who would stay up all weekend using cocaine and alcohol. "I feel now it was a spiritual thing."

After Waller emerged from Borden Cottage a new man, Fowler says he still was "so hopeless, spiraling in a hurry." Waller took him to Hilton Head in the summer of 2018.

"There was a light that was shining about him," Fowler says of that trip. "He was having a blast sober. ... It was a huge eye-opener. Probably a week later ... I rolled out of bed at 4 in the morning and wanted to kill myself. I called him. I told him what was going on. He talked me out of everything. He walked me through the whole day until I could get in the treatment facility later that afternoon."

Fowler says he now has been sober for more than 500 days. "If I hadn't built the relationship with him, I'd still be out there," Fowler says.

Finding the end zone is great for Waller. Finding more Fowlers would be better.

"There are people who are hiding and suffering in silence," he says. "If I can help them get over that, that's the biggest thing I can ever do, better than anything I can do on the field."

There is a peace about Darren Waller now.

It radiates to all those around him.

Darren Waller, a comeback story: How Raiders' TE is giving thanks for his second chance

By Jerry McDonald

Nov. 28, 2019

ALAMEDA — A year ago, Darren Waller was a recovering addict who was surprised to suddenly find himself with the Raiders.

Waller is still a recovering addict. He is ready and willing to deal with that affliction for the rest of his life. Waller has also become a sudden star, one of the best tight ends in the NFL, and the owner of a three-year contract extension worth a reported $9 million per season.

With five games remaining, Waller is third among NFL tight ends in receptions with 59 for (707 yards), trailing only Zach Ertz of Philadelphia (67) and Travis Kelce of Kansas City (63).

At 6-foot-6 and 266 pounds, Waller's physical gifts are evident and matched only by his inner resolve to work every day on conquering his demons and telling his story to help others. Years of alcohol and substance abuse began when Waller was 16 as he struggled to fit in at school.

A good student, Waller felt he was too much of a nerd to fit in with the athletes at school nor with the students in his advanced placement classes. He continued using through his college career at Georgia Tech and then as a sixth-round draft pick by the Baltimore Ravens.

The bottom arrived on Aug. 17, 2017, when Waller sat in his car for five hours after taking pills he later came to believe were laced with fentanyl. It was at that point he sought help. Waller has been sober ever since and tries to attend two self-help meetings per week.

"He's been astonishing," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said. "It's been a great story for young people. I know there's a lot of young guys out there, young people that have problems. What a source of strength."

With the holiday season underway, and this week marking the one-year anniversary of his new lease on life with the Raiders, Waller agreed to sit down and discuss his whirlwind year:

Q: A year ago on Nov. 25 was the Raiders-Ravens game in Baltimore. Where did you watch that game?

Waller: I was on the sidelines. I worked out before the game and I was in sweats on the sideline, watching the game.

Q: Did you know at the time the Raiders were interested? Walk me through how it happened.

Monday morning I was taking it to get it repaired. It was 8 a.m. and my agent texted me and said the Oakland Raiders are looking to claim you on their active roster. I was in shock, really. He said they're going to want to get you on a flight in the next few hours. I had just gotten a rental car. I was staying at my dad's sister's in Maryland so I wasn't paying any rent. I got them to get my car when it got repaired and I was on a flight by noon that day.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Q: When you were on the practice squad, had you thought about the possibility of being signed?

Waller: I was thinking towards the future a little bit. It wasn't taking up too much of my day. Just thinking about getting to a team and being reliable again. I wasn't thinking of a big contract out of the gate or being featured. It was just getting back into a building, working my way back up, whether it was on special teams or doing anything to show I could be reliable.

Q: When you walked in the building, what was the vibe you were getting?

Waller: They were introducing me to people they knew I would need out of the gate before we even got into the playbook. That was very welcoming to me, that they cared about me as a person. They could have just thrown that week's install at me and said, 'Good luck.' We got to the football eventually but first they made sure it was a priority they were setting me up with a good area for me in my personal life.

Q: When you think about everything that's happened in the past year ... your production, the new contract ... how do you wrap your head around it?

Waller: I still don't from time to time. Reflecting on it, you really can't make these things up. It's crazy. I guess it's a product of doing the right things and that God put me in situations I think he withheld from me before because I wasn't ready. It's hard to think how much can happen in a year. It definitely exceeded any kind of expectations I had.

Q: Holidays can be difficult for recovering addicts. Did you have some Thanksgivings in your past that weren't good?

Waller: There were Thanksgivings where it was just another day for me to drink as much as I could or get really high and just eat a whole bunch of food. I wasn't taking in the real essence of the holiday and what it really meant.

Q: Did you hide your problems on those holidays?

Waller: I guess I never really showed it. My behavior wasn't really off the wall or disturbing to people. Somehow I could always seemingly act normal, but I knew inside what I was doing and what I was feeling. My whole life at that point was just a complete fact of hiding things from everyone.

Q: Are holidays difficult for you now?

Waller: Not really. It'd be nice to be with my family. My family will be in Kansas City this weekend — my sister lives in Kansas — but it's not that tough anymore. Now I have reasons why I'm living the way I'm living. To go back to what I was doing, I'd go back to misery and struggle and confusion. I don't want to go back to that. It's not really hard for me.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Q: How did you determine it was time to get help?

Waller: When I overdosed in my car, that was enough at that point for me to say, OK, it's time to try something different, something new. It almost took death for me to say, now is a good time for me to change.

Q: You make this look easy and I know it's not ... is it still a daily struggle? Do you have urges to drink or use?

Waller: The urges to use are not there. But sometimes the loneliness can be there, the battles with confidence can be there. Just attacking the day with gratitude, having the right perspective and not having the perspective of complaining or being a victim. It can be hard. It's always a battle. But the urges to use or to go back to that aren't there anymore and I'm grateful for that. My daily life is about keeping my mind sharp and staying upbeat and staying positive.

Q: Do you go to meetings now to support others that are there or do they still help you?

Waller: It's both. I'll never know what I can say to someone there, or just saying hello to someone can do for them. There's always someone I've never met before or someone that's new that says something that resonates with me that I may not have been cognizant of. It's a mixture of both. It's a community of helping each other out.

Q: You've been sober since August of 2017 ... when you think about it's only been two years into the rest of your life ... so it's something you've got to maintain, isn't it?

Waller: It's day to day. There's a number of people I've met in meetings, they've had 27 years of recovery and are starting over and picked up the white chip. You can't ever feel too good about it. You're not immune to your life falling apart again and going back to it. I could have some tragedies hit me. There could be storms down the road I don't know about that could hit me and I don't know how I'd react to it. So it is possible for me to go back. So it's about staying up on it and not feeling, like, 'I got this. This is under control.'

Q: What does it feel like to know you've helped somebody with an addiction?

Waller: It makes me feel like I'm fulfilling my greatest purpose here on earth. That's the greatest feeling I can get, when someone reaches out and says, 'I wanted to get clean because of you.' That's happened a couple of times and it just made me freeze and think about what I really value on a day to day basis isn't as important as impacting the life of one other person. That's the greatest feeling I could get.

Q: What advice to you give to people in a similar situation?

Waller: I would say, no one else around you is going to be able to help you unless you're willing to help yourself. You have to want better for yourself. You deserve a life that's better for you, satisfying, that has joy in it. It will hurt in the beginning, but that pain will turn into satisfaction. You'll respect yourself more and everything you do down the road will align more with that respect you have for yourself. If you're living the way I was living, there's not a lot of self-respect going on there.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Q: What does the contract extension represent to you?

Waller: It represents that people can see I'm capable of being consistent over time. We can be irresponsible people, be people that can't be relied on, but turn that around and flip the script and be people that can be relied upon, give their best effort and people will know where their heart is at.

Q: What takes up your spare time now that you're doing positive things? I know music is important to you...

Waller: Reading, really. Right now, there's not too much time outside of that. Just talking on the phone to friends and family more than I ever have before. Listening to podcasts, things that keep my mind and my spirit full. I'm not really watching as much TV. I'm trying to control everything that I'm consuming where almost all of it is about my improvement.

Raiders' Darren Waller taking sobriety, life in NFL one day at a time

By Paul Gutierrez

Oct. 10, 2019

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- Darren Waller had just finished his early pregame warm-ups for the season opener and was headed for the tunnel to the Oakland Raiders locker room when a fan motioned to him.

"Hey," the fan, hanging over the railing, yelled, "I've got something for you."

Intrigued, Waller approached.

The nameless, faceless fan pulled something from his pocket and handed it to Waller, thanking him for putting his message out there on such a public platform as HBO's "Hard Knocks" series this summer. The object was a homemade "chip," a metal sobriety coin complete with the Raiders' logo, the words "To Thine Own Self Be True" and "Sober Nation," and the Roman numeral "II" to commemorate Waller's two years of being sober. A prayer of support was emblazoned on the back.

"It was just really cool that somebody went out of their way to have that made," said Waller, who keeps the coin in his backpack. "That was incredible. People that are fighting the same fight as us. It's a serious thing. It's a brotherhood. It's a sisterhood. We try to look out for one another, and that was just a small token of it. You learn how to be generous in recovery, so that was incredible."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The Raiders' tight end's story of addiction and recovery went viral when "Hard Knocks" cameras followed him to a meeting. He discussed the drugs he was hooked on -- "opiates, Oxy, pills, stuff like that, Xanax, cocaine" -- and how as a sixth-round draft pick of the Baltimore Ravens in 2015, he was limited to a combined 16 games since the start of the 2016 season due to failed drug tests.

Waller said he began taking pills as age 15.

"Sophomore year in high school," he said. "It was in a friend's medicine cabinet, and you like the feeling of it, you keep doing it, and for me, I wasn't as anxious, I wasn't worried about what everyone thought of me. It was a numbing tool. I don't want to feel all these things I'm feeling. That's how I started."

How bad did it get?

"I feel like if I were to continue down the same path, I probably wouldn't be alive, or I would be in jail or in a mental institution, probably," he said. "It was that bad."

Waller, who served a four-game suspension to start the 2016 season, was slapped with a year-long suspension by the NFL for the 2017 season.

"My life is completely out of control," Waller reflected. "I think I have willpower, but I really don't. I really need to use the tools necessary to get help. It was more so to save my life than to check off boxes for the league."

The day after his 25th birthday, on Sept. 14, 2017, Waller went to a four-day detox center in Boston. Then he went to Borden Cottage rehab center in Maine for a 30-day stay.

"That was a life-changing thing," he said.

Waller said the centers were presented and funded by the NFL.

When he walked out of Borden Cottage, football was not on his mind. He was grateful to the league for helping him, but he was not sure if he wanted to play again, especially in the high-stakes and fast-paced world of the NFL, if he wanted to maintain his peace.

It took a good six months for Waller to feel like he wanted to give the NFL another shot and stay clean.

Enter the Raiders. After being reinstated and spending most of the 2018 season on the Ravens' practice squad, Waller was signed to Oakland's 53-man roster on Nov. 26, 2018.

The converted receiver won the starting job in training camp.

"It's one of the great stories in football, one of the great things I've seen in my career. Really proud of him," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said of Waller. "So thrilled for him getting it together and being an honest, upfront guy and talking about it. Giving other young people the same enthusiasm to beat it. The same confidence that they can beat whatever addiction that you might have."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Raiders quarterback Derek Carr said he had "tears" in his eyes when he saw Waller's story on HBO.

"You know how many people that helped by being that vulnerable?" Carr said. "To see someone that vulnerable and that open ... imagine how many more people could get out, how many people we could help. To know that story and to watch this guy play on 'Monday Night Football' and make these crazy plays ... I mean, you have to root for that guy.

"I told him, 'Bro, you don't know how many people that story, your story, is going to bless and help and change their life. Maybe today they'll go and ask for help. Maybe tomorrow they finally realize, man, if he could do it, then I can do it.' ... It's a powerful thing, and I think that needs to be talked about more."

Waller entered the season with 18 catches for 178 yards and two touchdowns in 22 career games. Through the first five games this season, he has 37 receptions, which leads all NFL tight ends, for 359 yards.

He had 13 catches for 134 yards at Minnesota in Week 3.

"He's really a rookie playing tight end. He was a wide receiver in college," Gruden said. "He sat out football for a year. He leads the league in receiving right now at that position, and if you watch him block, I don't know if there's a better tight end in football, really."

Waller shakes his head at his lot. Things could be worse -- much worse.

And temptation is always around the corner. Waller tries to attend at least two substance-abuse recovery meetings per week.

"It's difficult, but it's easier now because I know, I feel like I have a purpose in my life," he said. "I feel like I live with an intention. Before, I didn't really know who I wanted to be or what I stood for or what I was trying to accomplish.

"I'm trying to change the course of generations in my family that have been having the same habits."

Why share his journey on so public a forum?

"Just to give the human aspect of it," Waller said. "People see us as superhumans, but we're far from that. I have regular, everyday struggles, like someone else would. There's life on the other side of what you're going through, and I feel like it would be a shame if I didn't share that because then people would go on suffering in silence. Just like I did. It's just ... paying it forward.

"I've come a long way, but at the end of the day, it's all about [stacking] days, and you go to meetings, and there's people in there with 20-something years. It's like, you're doing good things, but it's a lifelong commitment. Don't rest on it. Don't get complacent with it."

On the football field or in life.

Tafur: In England, Raiders' Darren Waller feels the connection to his legendary great-grandfather, Fats Waller

By Vic Tafur

Oct. 5, 2019

WATFORD, England — As Darren Waller walks alongside a garden in the English countryside, with the clouds overhead nearby but not threatening, one can almost hear the tinkling of a piano in the background.

The Raiders tight end is here, after practice Friday at The Grove, resting up and getting ready for his team's game in London on Sunday against the Chicago Bears. This, 80 years after his great-grandfather, famed jazz pianist Fats Waller, played at Empire Theatre in Finsbury Park, about 20 minutes down the road.

Fats is with his great-grandson today, as his face is tattooed on Darren's left calf. And Fats will be with Darren later, when he sits down in his hotel room to work on making some more beats. Waller, or D Wall as he goes by when he is not leading the Raiders with 33 catches and 320 yards, released an album, "Wall Street," on his 27th birthday last month.

"My great-grandfather is where I channeled making my own music from," Waller said.

Fats was always there, but Darren didn't really discover him until he was a teenager.

"I remember pictures around the house and my dad talking about him," Waller said, "but I never really took in the history of it until I was in college (at Georgia Tech), my sophomore year. I had a jazz history class in the summer, and the professor approached me the first day.

"He told me, 'You don't have to do anything in this class but make sure you pay attention. Learn, because this is your family and you need to take all this in.' And I saw all the work that my great-grandfather did in a short lifespan. And I have wanted to continue that path."

Long before the 6-foot-6 Waller was running by and reaching over players to make catches, his musical talents were on display.

He started playing piano at 3.

"Both he and my daughter really excelled at the piano," Dorian Waller, Darren's father and Fats' grandson, said in a phone interview. "My wife would joke that the talent skipped a generation, because those two would play the piano and people would wonder how they are playing it that fast.

"My grandma would always say that it was in their blood."

Dorian Waller said that his son really started listening to Fats and "discovering his heritage" about five years ago. He said his kids didn't really like jazz music when they were younger.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"It's amazing that Darren is in London, and his great-grandfather played there," Dorian Waller said. "I never met him, but my grandmother would tell us stories about all of his travels and adventures."

Darren remembers his favorite story about his great-grandfather.

"He was playing and then he got kidnapped," Waller said. "He thought he was being kidnapped and he was taken somewhere. They pulled the thing off his head and he was at a party for Al Capone. Capone had sent for him to play at his party. So Fats started playing, and after every song, Capone would stuff money in his pockets. And he played all night."

Fats Waller's "London Suite" album wasn't released until 1951 (eight years after his death), and on there is a song, "Ain't Misbehavin'," that particularly hits home for Darren.

Don't care to go
I'm home about eight
Just me and my radio
Ain't misbehavin'
I'm savin' my love for you*

Waller struggled with opiate and cocaine addiction when he first came into the league and was suspended twice for failing drug tests. Including for the entire 2017 season.

"I see the irony in that song, and where I am now," Waller said. "I was acting out of nature, trying to do things to please people or please myself. And I know now that I can't be moving like that anymore. I have a lot at stake, and a lot more to live for."

After he was a piano prodigy, Darren went on to play all the percussion instruments in the band in middle school.

"It never felt forced," he said. "It always felt like something I should pursue, and it became my favorite hobby."

His dad said he is proud of his son and plays "Wall Street" for his friends.

"It's pretty good," Dorian said. "They all like it. When Darren comes home during the offseason, he is always constantly making music. You can hear the beats ... you can play the drums and all the instruments through electronics, but you still need an ear for it."
Waller's athletic talents took a little while longer to flourish.

"When he first started playing PeeWee, he was like a statue," Dorian said. "But in a couple years, he was the best player on the field. And then started playing video games and was talking to his coaches about formations. One time, he told a coach that the play he called wouldn't work to the right, and I couldn't believe that he picked it up like that."
"But that was the kind of kid he was."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Waller's football prowess was documented on HBO's "Hard Knocks" series before the season, but that was not why he made such an impression nationally. His dad was proud of how open his son was about his struggles. Darren talked about how he was always high during his time with the Ravens, about how he "was a vegetable and didn't care about anything," and he took the production crew to an addiction meeting.

"It was great," Dorian said. "We have seen his development and how he has come out of a dark place to get to where he is now. A lot of people will hit us up about all the catches he is making on the Raiders, but we are more excited about what we saw on 'Hard Knocks.' He is helping young people who are suffering. They see him on other side, being open about it in the interviews, and talking about what he went through and is still going through.

"There was a lot of power in that. Darren is taking it day by day, and that's music to my ears."

Darren said he hears daily from people who watched the show.

"There have been a lot of people that have reached out to me and just relating," Waller said. "That's what makes me feel good the most about it. I am just glad I could put things in a human perspective. We have abilities as athletes, but at the end of the day, we're humans.

"My life was rough for a while, and a lot of people may have it rough at certain times. But that situation is only temporary, and if I can use my voice to communicate that to them and see that there is another side, a brighter side, to whatever they may be going through, then I feel that is a purpose of mine."

Waller and the Raiders arrived in London on Monday, after an eight-hour flight from Indianapolis. On Tuesday, Waller and three teammates took an hour bus ride to Royal Air Force Mildenhall to thank soldiers for their service.

The Raiders have community events practically every week on their off-days, and Waller has made it to every one this season.

"I feel that I have to give back," Waller said. "As far as recovery is concerned, one of the biggest things about it is service and giving to other people and not making it about what you can give to yourself. The week is pretty hectic usually, but any opportunity I have to do it, I will. What else would I be doing instead?"

Waller slept on the bus on the way there. But coming back, he took out his laptop and his headphones.

"The music has helped take him out of his dark place," Waller's father said. "He's found a place where he can channel all of those energies, and be able to have something focus on when he is off the field. Instead of being in a room looking at the ceiling.

"He doesn't have to go out and find his happiness through other people and other things. He has found it within himself."

Somewhere, Fats Waller is smiling. Actually, right there on his great-grandson's calf.

Thompson: Darren Waller celebrates his own personal victories in Raiders' season-opening win

By Marcus Thompson

Sept. 10, 2019

Darren Waller knew a bad game wasn't possible. Not this game. Not this night. Not after what he received.

He was headed off the field and down the tunnel before Monday night's game against Denver at the Coliseum. A fan got his attention and handed him something. It was a sobriety chip, a Raiders version, celebrating the two years clean and sober threshold he recently crossed. Waller had shared his story of overcoming addiction on the show "Hard Knocks." Now he got to feel the impact of his transparency.

"That had me lit before the game," Waller said, showing off his silver and black chip with a "II" on it. "Sent chills through me."

Something big happened on Monday night, perhaps lost in the hype of the Raiders' energetic 24-16 handling of the Broncos. Something bigger than football. Something profoundly inspirational.

Waller, who turns 27 on Friday, made his first start with the Raiders, and first in the NFL since November 2016. But that's not why the night was big for him.

He finished with seven receptions on eight targets, both team highs, and totaled 70 yards receiving — all career highs. But that's not why the game was so special.

Monday night was his debut. Not in the NFL, or with the Raiders, but as a new person in a big new role. It was the beginning of the next chapter of Waller's story. In this one, he's the starting tight end. In this one, he is reliable and trustworthy, maximizing his potential. In this one, he is giving hope instead of losing it.

He's gone from dependent upon alcohol and prescription drugs to being dependable on third downs. He went from stocking groceries at Sprouts in Atlanta to blocking lineman and running routes in Oakland. He went from not liking himself and getting so high as to feel invisible to loving himself and getting so hyped as to feel invincible.

Wins in football are great, but triumphs in life are even greater. Waller declared victory on Monday.

"I loved it. I think we all here, everybody, roots for Darren Waller," Derek Carr said. Having devoted his life to ministry, Carr livened up even more when he started talking about his new tight end. The magnitude was not lost on the quarterback.

"You know how many people that helps for him to be that vulnerable?" Carr said. "I said that's unbelievable. That blesses my life to see someone that vulnerable and that open. It wasn't hard for him. He was just talking (on 'Hard Knocks'), telling people his story. Imagine if everyone could open up like that, how many more people could get help, how many more people we can help.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

“To see him now transition to being a professional football player — not trying to get cut — he’s in professional football making plays on ‘Monday Night Football,’ starting tight end for the Oakland Raiders. I think that’s a powerful thing.”

It was Waller’s 23rd game since Baltimore drafted him out of Georgia Tech in the sixth round in 2016. But the previous 22 games were played with anxiety.

Monday was different. He noticed it. He felt it.

Anxiety tends to be about anticipating the future, being worried and concerned about what’s going to happen, what people are going to think, how things might go wrong. But Waller got to the spot he’s in by soaking in the now, by appreciating the present, investing in every moment and every decision.

That’s how “one day at a time works.” Waller said he knows it has become cliché. But he is evidence of its effectiveness. Being present and accountable every day, cherishing every moment and cognizant of how he’s feeling, has resulted in a responsible and productive man.

It hasn’t been two years clean and sober, but 730-plus days. Of giving his all. Of trying to do the right thing. Of considering others.

That’s a lot of victories, so it makes sense why his confidence is at an all-time high.

“I had like a calm that I never really had before playing football,” Waller said. “It was peace. I know I belong here. I know I can make something happen.”

It has also helped the amount of faith the Raiders have put in him. They said goodbye to Pro Bowl tight end Jared Cook because they believed in Waller. They handed him the starting job without even putting him through the pressure of being cut.

Second chances usually aren’t taken lightly for recovering addicts. Especially not Waller.

He remembers thinking he was going to die after swallowing pills he believed were laced with fentanyl in August 2017. He remembers being on Baltimore’s practice squad, hoping for an opportunity, before the Raiders added him to their roster.

To be given this chance?

“That’s all I need,” he said.

Waller’s speed was evident Monday. The former wide receiver lined up on the outside and blew past Broncos cornerback Isaac Yiadom for a 25-yard reception down the sidelines, putting the Raiders in the red zone on the opening drive.

But Waller also proved to be one of Carr’s favorite reads over the middle. The 6-foot-6, 255-pound tight end is a sizable target whose explosiveness keeps the defense off balance enough for him to curl and sit in the middle of the field.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Waller said Carr told Waller to win every route because he was coming to him. With no Antonio Brown, the complementary receivers become even more valuable. Waller took the advice from Carr seriously and their rapport got off to a strong start.

"We saw it all camp, the plays he's able to make and the guy he is," wide receiver Tyrell Williams said. "It's awesome to see guys like that have success. That's big. A lot of guys get the chance and they kind of mess it up. I can't imagine how he feels and how his family feels."

Adversity is sure to meet Waller on the field. The Broncos didn't prove much of a problem for the Raiders offense, despite being led by defensive guru Vic Fangio. But the day is coming when it will be tougher, when the struggle comes in earnest.

But that's what made Monday such a heartwarming night. Because Waller will be ready like he's never been. He will be present and accountable. He will be in the moment, feel it, appreciating whatever comes his way because he is truly alive.

"This just tells you what is possible," Waller said. "It's a life worth living."

THE ATHLETIC

Why Tyrell Williams' success with the Raiders has special meaning for his father: 'I get goosebumps all the time'

By Daniel Brown

Nov. 20, 2019

Like any proper gridiron-obsessed child of the '70s, young Ray Williams owned a Tudor Electric tabletop football set. This was long before the "Madden" video game offered users lifelike recreations of the action. The Tudor game, in contrast, featured generic figurines that rendered players the size of chess pieces and they vibrated erratically around a metal playing surface.

The game touted a "total team control base" that was nothing of the sort. Players were lucky if they could get their running back to head toward the proper end zone. Even the most demanding coaches had trouble getting their quarterback to stop spinning in circles.

It was heaven on earth.

"We would travel to each other's homes and play a league with electric football players," Williams said by phone last week. "We'd make locker rooms out of shoeboxes and we carried them around from house to house. We kept standings and things like that."

Because Ray grew up in Oakland, he always insisted that his team be the Raiders. In those days, the "Madden" rating meant having guys who actually played for John Madden. Ray painted his figurines silver and black and painstakingly added tiny numbers on their backs – No. 21 for Cliff Branch, No. 32 for Jack Tatum, No. 12 for Ken Stabler.

"I was a diehard," Williams explained.

When he got older and became a football star at Oakland Technical High and Laney College, Ray based his playing style on the menace in the Raiders secondary who wore No. 37.

"I was a pretty darn good corner," Ray said, "because everything I did, I mimicked Lester Hayes."

Ray Williams lives in Oregon now, but he still roots as hard as ever for the Raiders. These days his favorite player wears No. 16, the stealthily productive receiver.

Ray roots for Tyrell Williams.

Ray roots for his son.

"I get goosebumps all the time," he said. "I almost come to tears quite often when I'm down on the field to start the game. It just means so much to me that he's involved with the Raiders."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Yes, somehow the Raiders-loving, tabletop maestro from Oakland grew up, moved to the Pacific Northwest and raised a child who would play a key role in the Raiders' resurgence. Tyrell Williams leads the team in touchdown catches (five) and leads Raiders wideouts in yards (462) and yards per catch (15.4) despite missing two games because of plantar fasciitis.

Williams had a touchdown catch in each of his first five games to start the season, breaking the team record of four games in a row set by Mervyn Fernandez in 1989.

"I told him, 'You're beating out some of these guys I was watching when I was a little kid,'" Ray said. "This is crazy."

The storyline is surreal to Tyrell Williams, too. As one can imagine, his Take Your Father to Work days are a blast. Jon Gruden gave Ray an all-access pass during training camp, and it was as if Ray's inner child was placed upon an electric tabletop set to vibrate at full blast.

"I mean, every time he gets the opportunity to meet somebody, he takes that opportunity," Tyrell said, laughing. "He told me about all the guys he talked to — but it was, like, 15 guys!"

At first glance, this tale could be mistaken for a plucky underdog story. Scrappy kid gets ignored by recruiters, battles his way from rural Salem, Oregon, to a small Division II college, goes undrafted by the NFL — and somehow winds up as the No. 1 receiver for his dad's childhood team.

Don't be fooled. This ain't "Rudy."

"I was super lazy in high school," Tyrell Williams said, smiling wide while sitting at his locker after a practice last week.

For much of his early life, Williams' blessing and curse was that he was too good. His athletic gifts stifled his development. Playing at Cascade High in tiny (Pop. 1,199) Turner, Ore., the future 1,000-yard receiver was obviously the top athlete at his school. So he barely lifted a finger, let alone weights.

You can still see traces of his deceptive cool, even on the NFL field, where Williams seems to get open effortlessly. Against the Bengals last Sunday at the Coliseum, he had four catches, all of them sizeable gains — 24 yards, 20 yards, 21 yards, 17 yards. But on not one of those catches did he look as if he shifted out of third gear.

"It looks like he's gliding when he runs," running back Josh Jacobs marveled after the game. "But he's definitely a lot faster (than he looks). That's why he's still, I think, one of the most underrated receivers in the National Football League."

Among players with at least 150 receptions since 2015, Williams ranks third with 16.2 yards per catch. During that same span, no player has more TD catches of at least 75 yards (four). His longest reception this season with the Raiders so far picked up 46 yards.

Back at Cascade High, the self-described "lazy" kid glided his way to All-State 4A honors in three sports (football, basketball and track) during his senior year.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But his old coaches don't argue with Williams' self-scouting report. They loved him, but ...

"He didn't always work that hard. He didn't have to," said Mark Stevens, a Williams fan who coached the receiver when he was in seventh and eighth grade and then again as a senior. "He wasn't one to get on the horse and get after himself. He usually had to be poked and prodded. Same thing in the weight room."

Stevens, when asked if Williams looked destined for an NFL career back in those days, repeated his answer 13 times. No, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no, no.

Not even dad disputes the complacency label. Ray, a coach himself, was both super demanding and super supportive of his three athletic children. But by the time Tyrell reached Cascade, his dad was coaching at a different school and couldn't always keep tabs on his son's work habits.

"I stayed on his brother. And his brother worked pretty hard," Ray said. "But Tyrell knew that he was probably the best athlete on the field, and he just kind of went through the motions because he was tall and faster than most of the kids he was playing with."

Looking back, Tyrell Williams said, it wasn't a lack of motivation; it was a lack of competition. Internally, he was always aiming high, always trying to be the best, always dreaming of the NFL. As a little kid, he'd told his parents that he wanted to play professional football and was so intent on that job that even as he got older, he never bothered coming up with a Plan B.

The trouble was that being a big fish in a small pond fooled him into thinking that things were going swimmingly. He wanted to be the best, and he was — which seemed sufficient at the time.

Did he even lift weights?

"Nah," Williams said, sheepishly. "We had a P.E. class, but when everybody else was lifting I just kinda did my own thing."

The only place Williams felt challenged was within his own household: His older brother, RJ, was a tremendous athlete, as was his younger sister, Peighton. The siblings and their cousins turned every day into a domestic decathlon of their own invention.

"I spent my whole life just competing against them. In everything," Tyrell Williams said. "I hate losing. I used to throw fits when I was little if I lost anything. Just chasing them helped me."

There weren't too many RJs and Peightons in town, however, so Williams rarely had to tap into the fire. Stevens, his football coach, recalls seeing Tyrell's hidden competitive side emerge in an unlikely setting.

"We had some hellacious badminton matches," Stevens said, "and I will still not admit he ever beat me."

Division I recruiters had no interest in Williams, not in football and not even in badminton. His lack of dedication in the weight room was finally catching up with him. Oregon State told him he could be a preferred walk-on. That was as close as he got to a Pac-12 offer.

"I really got nervous about it. I wasn't getting recruited. Would I get an opportunity to play?" Williams said. "To go D-I, I think I would have had a better chance if I'd worked harder in high school. I was 6-2, 150 pounds. If I had put on weight and been a little bit more of a force."

Something fantastic happened to Williams at Western Oregon University. Something wonderful and inspiring and life-changing.

"I kind of got pushed around a little bit," he said.

The willowy receiver was no longer the best athlete on the field. Even at the Division II school, the only program to offer him a scholarship, teammates and opponents were stronger and more skilled. At long last, Williams would have to, you know, work and stuff. It helped that RJ Williams was at the school, too, and they continued to push each other.

To Tyrell's credit, he recognized quickly that he was overmatched at this new level and snapped into action. Arne Stapleton, who remains the Wolves' coach, still marvels at how readily Williams devoted himself to packing on muscle. By the end of Williams' redshirt sophomore year, when he blossomed as the Wolves' top receiver, Ferguson told Williams that he had a shot at the NFL.

"What I remember was how hard of a worker he was," Ferguson said by phone. "He was competitive, and he just kept getting better by leaps and bounds."

Williams got so strong, at 208 pounds, that he could finally run over defensive backs, too. "He'd have three or four trucks a game," Ferguson said.

Bulking up did nothing to slow down his long-legged stride. At a pro day in 2015, he ran a 4.42 40-yard dash and his 60-yard three-cone drill ranked higher than anyone clocked at the NFL scouting combine that year. This was a rare athlete for Western Oregon. Other than Williams, the only two other players the school has ever produced are tight end Kevin Boss and center Jason Slowey.

Trey Shimabukuro, the Western Oregon quarterback during Williams' time at the school, didn't need a stopwatch to know Williams "could flat-out fly," as he put it. Shimabukuro recalled by phone that Williams once got into a playful argument with the defensive backs over who was the fastest.

The speedsters decided to settle things right then with a 40-yard race.

"And it wasn't close," Shimabukuro said, still laughing. "Williams finished so far ahead of the other guys that he turned around at the end so he could taunt them a little bit as he crossed the finish line."

Those Western Oregon teammates, like future NFL foes, were fooled by Williams' easy-breezy running style.

"People watch film and they don't think I look fast on film. It's just the stride. I think it surprises a lot of guys, even to this day," he said. "You see a stride on film and it doesn't look that fast, but (with that style) you can gain ground pretty quick. It seems like I hold my speed pretty well, too. I probably get faster at 40, 60 yards."

Williams, despite going undrafted, achieved his dream of playing in a regular-season NFL game in 2015.

And by the next week, he was cut.

This was in 2015, with the San Diego Chargers, who signed Williams as an undrafted free agent. He played nine special teams snaps in Week 1 and was let go in Week 2 while the team was on the road in Cincinnati.

"I got emotional. I had no idea what happened," he said. "I thought, 'This is crazy.' I didn't know it could happen this quick."

But Chargers signed him to the practice squad the next day and, soon, Williams and his long strides started making up ground on the competition. By 2016, he had 69 catches for 1,059 yards and seven touchdown receptions.

The Raiders envisioned at least similar production when they signed him to a four-year, $44 million deal in March. In fact, offensive coordinator Greg Olson said earlier this season that during that brief period when it looked as if the Buffalo Bills had swung a deal for Antonio Brown, the Raiders zeroed in on Williams as their main man instead.

"We targeted him as a No. 1 wide receiver because we did not think after the Bills had signed AB that we would get him," Olson said. "We had targeted Tyrell to be our top guy."

And that, after lots of nuttiness, is how it eventually played out. Williams has blossomed as a sort of anti-AB. He's the low-maintenance, low-ego receiver who wouldn't create a stir if you gave him a blender. He's quiet, affable and has already rolled with a variety of roles. And along the way, Williams and his deceptively easy stride keeps fooling people, including his own quarterback.

"When you first start throwing him routes — him and Darren Waller are similar, they have such long strides — and it doesn't look like they are really trying that hard," Derek Carr said earlier this season.

"It's just effortless for them and the first couple balls you throw them are behind them. And you're like, 'That doesn't even make sense.' Then you turn the film on, and you see the kind of ground he's covering. That's where you can tell like, 'Man, that guy can move.'"

Williams can use his bulked-up body, too. Asked about his touchdown streak, Williams said while he was with the Chargers, tight end Antonio Gates taught him how to maximize his size advantage in the tight confines of the red zone. Of his five touchdowns this season, four are from 19 yards or less.

"He makes a lot of things go," Waller said of Williams after Sunday's victory. "He's a big playmaker on our red line, he catches the deep balls. He runs the intermediate routes. There's nothing he can't do."

"You have to stay on your toes as a DB. That's tough for them, that he's that big and can move in and out of breaks. Tyrell is always a problem."

Tyrell Williams goes back. He returns to Cascade High and tries to inspire youngsters to greater heights. He does not gloss over his own school days as an underachiever.

"It's helped me to look back: OK, I was lazy. But now I've worked hard, and I've seen the change between the two," he said. "So I try to be honest with them and tell them my story."

He sends another message to kids with every touchdown. For every score, he donates $1,000 to Stomp Out Bullying, a non-profit aimed at bullying, including the online variety.

"I'd seen so many stories on social media about kids that commit suicide, being bullied," he said. "It's just something that I thought was crazy. I saw some of it while I was growing up, too. But I can see that it's ramped up now because of social media. People are picking on people online. It's something that I definitely want to help with."

He is clearly connecting with his new community, as if he's been here all along. After signing with the Raiders in March, Williams drove over to his late grandmother's house in Oakland, a place he used to visit every summer. The house evoked some profound memories. On the night of Jan. 3, 2016, the Chargers hosted the Denver Broncos in the regular-season finale. Not long before kickoff, Ray told his son that his grandmother's health had taken a turn, that she might not make it much longer.

Tyrell responded by scoring an 80-yard touchdown that night, the first long touchdown of his career.

Maxine Williams died the next day.

"I knew that she wouldn't make it before I got back to Oakland to see her," Ray said of his mother. "That was a very emotional time for us."

Tyrell was born and raised in Oregon but there were other reasons that the house his father grew up in, about 15 minutes from the team's Alameda training facility, felt like home. Oakland is the place of his father. This is where his father's dreams used to live.

Ray Williams, unlike his son, had four Division I recruiters circling him as his playing career at Laney College came to a close. The defensive back who was inspired by Lester Hayes said he was a hard hitter who once went an entire season without giving up a touchdown pass.

But in his final regular-season game, he tore his ACL. Williams held off on surgery in a fruitless attempt to tough it out in a bowl game, delaying his timeline for recovery. "And so those scholarships offers went off the table," he says now.

Ray played briefly at the Oregon Institute of Technology before finding his football career would be better suited to the coaching ranks.

But his son found his way home, spinning a bit like those old gameboard pieces, whirling from Oregon to San Diego to Los Angeles and finally to back Oakland, the direction Ray wanted him to go all along.

"It's been a really big treat for all of us," Ray said. "We just love the fact that that he's back home, in my hometown, and playing with the Raiders."

"To see him doing as well as he has done — and as well as the team has done — has just been really, really cool."

Growing up in the East Bay, Ray used to dream of joining the Raiders family. As it turned out, his family joined the Raiders.

And the feeling he gets deep in his soul every Sunday has so much in common with the game he played for endless hours as a kid.

It's electric football.
