GAME PREVIEW

The Oakland Raiders return home for their final preseason game of the season at O.co Coliseum as they take on the Chicago Bears on Friday, August 23. Kickoff for the contest is set for 7:00 p.m. PT. Both teams come into the game with 1-1 records. The Raiders have beaten the Cowboys and fallen to the Saints, while Chicago has lost to Carolina and beaten San Diego.

Oakland is coming off a loss to New Orleans last week, 20-28. The Saints racked up 369 yards of total offense, including 202 passing yards by QB Drew Brees. Raiders QB Matt Flynn turned in a strong performance, completing 12-of-16 passes for 124 yards and a TD in the first half, while WR Denarius Moore hauled in his first TD reception of the preseason. On the defensive side, DE Jack Crawford led the way with five tackles, a sack and a fumble recovery.

The Bears defeated the San Diego Chargers last week at home, 33-28. Chicago's starters were paced by RB Matt Forte, who rushed for 74 yards on eight carries with a TD. Chicago's special teams also played a large part in the victory, led by rookie RB Michael Ford's 160 kickoff return yards. The Bears' defense stood tall as well, sacking San Diego quarterbacks four times and forcing four turnovers.

Following Friday's contest, the Raiders will finish up the preseason with a road trip to Seattle, while the Bears conclude their preseason slate with a home game vs. the Browns.

QUOTING ALLEN

"When you go back and look at specific things ... it's obviously never as good as you think it is, and it's never as bad as you think it is. We made a lot of mistakes in the game [vs. New Orleans] overall as a football team. But the good news is a lot of those things are correctable mistakes, and we're going to work hard on trying to correct those things." -- Raiders Head Coach Dennis Allen

THE HEAD COACHES

Raiders Head Coach Dennis Allen

When Dennis Allen became the 18th head coach in Raiders history on Jan. 30, 2012, he promised to field a tough, smart, disciplined and committed football team, noting that organizations win games in the National Football League by more than talent alone.

Allen, 40, is the NFL's youngest head coach, more than six months younger than the league's previously youngest coach, Pittsburgh's Mike Tomlin.

In 2012, his first year as a head coach at any level, Allen guided an Oakland team in transition, posting a 4-12 mark. The 2012 Raiders were defined by offensive, defensive and special teams units that improved throughout the season, laying a foundation for future success.

With 17 years of combined coaching experience at the college and professional levels, Allen enters his 12th NFL season. On six occasions during his 10 years as an NFL assistant, his team earned a playoff berth: 2002, 2004, 2006, 2009, 2010 and 2011. And four of those trips came after division championships: The NFC South with Atlanta in 2004 and New Orleans in both 2006 and 2009, and the AFC West with Denver in 2011.

His résumé also includes football's ultimate prize, a Super Bowl XLIV ring he earned by helping the Saints beat season MVP Peyton Manning, who threw for more than 4,500 yards with 33 touchdowns, and the Indianapolis Colts to conclude the 2009 campaign.

The NFL's second-youngest defensive coordinator when the Broncos hired him in 2011, he coordinated a defense that helped Denver parlay an AFC West crown into a Wild Card win and a date in the Divisional round. During his only year in Denver, despite starting three rookies most of the season, the Broncos improved 12 spots over 2010 in overall defensive ranking (from 32nd to 20th) and bettered their points allowed by eight spots (from 32nd to 24th).

Prior to joining the Broncos, Allen was an assistant coach for five seasons with New Orleans, first as assistant defensive line coach (2006-07), then as defensive backs coach (2008-10). Under Allen's direction in 2010, the Saints' secondary allowed an NFL-low 13 touchdown passes while ranking fourth in the NFL in net passing yards per game (193.9).

In 2009, Allen tutored a secondary that played a key role in helping the Saints to their first Super Bowl victory. His unit accounted for an NFL-high six interception returns for touchdowns and totaled 22 picks en route to their championship.

In 2008, his first year as secondary coach, Allen helped the Saints overcome season-ending injuries to both starting cornerbacks and contributed to a defense that held five opponents under 200 yards passing.

Allen assisted in tutoring the Saints' defensive line from 2006-07, helping defensive end Will Smith become a Pro Bowler in 2006 after posting 10½ sacks and forcing three fumbles.

He originally entered the NFL coaching ranks with Atlanta in 2002, spending four seasons with the Falcons as a defensive assistant. During his stint in Atlanta, the Falcons qualified for the playoffs twice—as a wild card in 2002 and as NFC South champs in 2004—and played in the NFC Championship in 2004.

Allen kicked off his football coaching career in 1996 as a graduate assistant at his alma mater, Texas A&M, where he was a four-year letterman as a safety. He worked with Aggies defensive backs for four seasons before coaching the secondary at the University of Tulsa from 2000-01.

Bears Head Coach Marc Trestman

Named the 14th head coach in Chicago Bears history on January 16, 2013, Marc Trestman joins the franchise with a champion head coaching pedigree and keen offensive expertise.

Over the previous five seasons as head coach in the Canadian Football League, Trestman led the Montreal Alouettes to back-to-back Grey Cup championships in 2009 and 2010 and was named the CFL's Coach of the Year in 2009. During his time in Montreal, Trestman compiled a 59-31 (.656) regular season record, which included four East Division titles and a 5-3 (.625) record in the playoffs.

Overall, in his 28 years coaching, Trestman has been a part of 19 winning seasons, 16 playoff appearances and three championship teams. Trestman has 17 years of coaching experience in the NFL, including eight as an offensive coordinator. During his time in the NFL, Trestman helped his teams to eight playoff appearances, two conference championship games and a Super Bowl appearance (XXXVII as offensive coordinator of the Raiders).

Trestman started his coaching career in 1981 at the University of Miami as a volunteer assistant while attending law school. He was named the school's quarterbacks coach in 1983 and helped direct the Hurricanes to their first-ever National Championship.

In 1985, Trestman got his first coaching experience in the NFL, under Pro Football Hall of Fame coach Bud Grant as the running backs coach of the Minnesota Vikings, a position he held for two seasons.

George Seifert named Trestman the 49ers offensive coordinator/quarterbacks coach in 1995 as he guided San Francisco to the No. 1 scoring offense (28.6 points per game) and passing attack (288.0 yards per game) and helped them rank second in total offense (380.4 YPG). A year later, San Francisco had the third best scoring offense (24.9 PPG) and ranked sixth in total offense (344.1 YPG). In 1995 Jerry Rice broke the NFL single-season record for receiving yards with 1,848, a mark that stood for 17 seasons.

Trestman was hired by Jon Gruden in 2001 to serve as a senior assistant on the Oakland Raiders staff before being promoted by new head coach Bill Callahan to offensive coordinator/quarterbacks coach a year later, holding the position for two seasons.

The 2002 Raiders led the NFL in total offense with 389.8 yards and 279.7 passing yards per game, finished second in scoring offense averaging 28.1 points per game and advanced to Super Bowl XXXVII, their first NFL title game appearance in 20 years. Quarterback Rich Gannon was named the NFL's MVP after throwing for 4,689 yards.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders — who began play in the American Football League in 1960 — enter their 53rd year of professional football competition, including the last 43 as a member of the National Football League.

In five memorable decades — the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the 2000s — the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these Decades of Dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL Championship, four American Football Conference Championships, three World Championships of Professional Football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 Championship Games, won or tied for 17 Division Championships, had 21 playoff seasons, finished 34 seasons at .500 or better and played in 40 postseason games.

Pro Football's Dynamic Organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s and have won the most games of any original AFL franchise.

The Silver and Black are the only AFC team — and one of just two NFL teams (Minnesota) — to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only two original AFL teams to have captured three World Championships of Professional Football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980.

In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four different head coaches and started four different quarterbacks.

The Raiders are the last AFC Western Division team to go to the Super Bowl.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have totally dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During those memorable 50 years in Oakland and Los Angeles, the Raiders have won 421 league games, tied 11 and lost only 330.

"Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raider organization during the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and now the new millennium as shown by their domination of pro football.

Nineteen of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Professional Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced five Pro Coaches of the Year.

In addition, 62 Pro Bowl players have made 180 Pro Bowl appearances representing the Silver and Black. In 1970, as the Raiders began their second decade of play, the merger between the AFL and NFL became a reality on the field. In the 1970 through 2012 period of interconference play, the Raiders have compiled a remarkable 92-69-1 record against present National Football Conference rivals.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 — "Monday Night Football." The Raiders total domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build an incredible 37-26-1 record in Monday night play. In the 43 years of this series, the Raiders are 15-8-0 in "Monday Night Football" games at home.

Through the decades — the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and now the 2000s — the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports.

TEAM NOTES

LOOKING AHEAD

The Raiders were 8-8 in 2010 and 8-8 in 2011, then finished a disappointing season in 2012. However, since the NFL expanded to a 16-game season in 1978, on 23 occasions, franchises have rebounded with a successful Year 4 (by reaching the playoffs and/or finishing with 10 or more wins). One of those teams, the 1998-2001 New England Patriots, took their lumps after changing head coaches like the Raiders in Year 3, then won the Super Bowl in Year 4.

NFL teams that finished 8-8 or better in consecutive years, then rebounded to reach playoffs or finish with 10-plus wins after setback season in Year 3, since 1978:

Team	Seasons	Year 1	Year 2	Year 3	Year 4

Of the team's 352 combined starts in 2012, 175 (49.7%) were made by players with four or fewer years of NFL experience. Going younger, 97 (27.9%) of those 352 starts were made by players with three or fewer years of NFL experience. Additionally, only 26 of the 90 players currently on the roster have more than four years experience in the league.

ROSTER TURNOVER

Since General Manager Reggie McKenzie took over the job on Jan. 10, 2012, Oakland's roster has undergone a major makeover. Of the 90 players currently on the squad, only 17 players were on the team during the 2011 season. Additionally, only K Sebastian Janikowski, the longest tenured Raider, has been with the Silver and Black for more than six seasons.

INDIVIDUAL NOTES

WOODSON RETURNS HOME

One of the most beloved players to ever put on the Silver and Black signed with the Raiders on May 22, 2013, returning him home to the team that drafted him with their first-round selection in the 1998 NFL Draft. After seven years with the Green Bay Packers, Woodson brings his Hall of Fame credentials back to the Raiders, solidifying a revamped secondary.

Woodson grew to fame at the University of Michigan, where he helped the Wolverines capture the 1997 Associated Press National Championship. His individual performance during the 1997 season earned him the Heisman Trophy, becoming the first predominantly defensive player ever to win the illustrious award. He was also honored with the Walter Camp Player of the Year, Jim Thorpe Award, Bronko Nagurski Award and Sporting News Player of the Year.

The fourth-overall selection by Al Davis in the 1998 NFL Draft made an immediate impact in the league, earning the Defensive Rookie of the Year and being selected to the Pro Bowl in each of his first four seasons (1998-2001). During his first stint with the Raiders, Woodson also earned first-team All-Pro accolades on three occasions (Associated Press in 1999, Sports Illustrated in 2000 and Sporting News and College & Pro Football Newsweekly in 2001).

After signing with the Packers prior to the 2006 season, Woodson continued to collect the hardware and add to his legacy. From 2006-12 with Green Bay, he was selected to four Pro Bowls (2008-11), two more first-team All-Pro selections (2009 and 2011) and the 2009 NFL Defensive Player of the Year. In addition to earning the highest honor a defensive player can achieve in a single season, Woodson followed up the 2009 campaign by helping the Packers win the Super Bowl in 2010.

All in all, the resume Woodson brings back to Oakland is impressive: The 1997 Heisman Trophy Award and National Championship in college, eight Pro Bowl selections, three first-team All-Pro selections, the NFL's 2009 Defensive Player of the Year award, four conference championship game appearances, two Super Bowl appearances and one Super Bowl championship. Charles Woodson has returned to the Silver and Black to write the next chapter.

A LEADER IN PICKS

DB Charles Woodson, who posted nine interceptions when he won the NFL's Defensive Player of the Year award in 2009, is among the NFL's active leaders with 55 interceptions. Woodson trails only Texans S Ed Reed on the list of active leaders.

Since 1995, only three players have won both the NFL's Defensive Rookie of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year awards in their career - Raiders DB Charles Woodson (1998 & 2009), Ravens OLB Terrell Suggs (2003 & 2011) and former Bears LB Brian Urlacher (2000 & 2005).

LONG-TERM THREAT

Remarkably, DB Charles Woodson has intercepted at least one pass in each of his first 15 NFL seasons. With a pick in 2013, Woodson will join an elite list of players to intercept a pass in at least 16-consecutive seasons.

WOODSON: QUICK HITS

- Woodson posted an interception touchdown in six-straight seasons (2006-11), becoming the first player in NFL history to do so. No other NFL player has accomplished the feat in more than four-consecutive seasons.
- In 2009, Woodson became the fourth player in NFL history (since sacks became an official statistic) to record at least nine interceptions and two sacks in a single season.
- Is the only player in NFL history to post at least seven interceptions and two sacks in back-to-back seasons.
- Became the first NFL player (since sacks became an official statistic) to record two interceptions, an interception touchdown, a sack and a fumble recovery in the same game when he posted all of those statistics on 11/26/09 at Det.

CLUTCH PORTER

With Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts trailing by a touchdown and driving late in Super Bowl XLIV, CB Tracy Porter, then a member of the New Orleans Saints, made one of the clutch plays in NFL history. Porter stepped in front of Manning pass intended for Reggie Wayne, then raced 74 yards for the championship-sealing score. Porter, who has three interception touchdowns with less than 3:30 remaining in the game and his team leading by one score or less in his career, is in his first season with Oakland.

LB Kevin Burnett

Kevin and Kaelin Burnett would become the first brothers to play in a regular season game in the history of the Raiders franchise should they do so in 2013. The Burnett brothers are also the only active siblings in the NFL on the same team. Kevin, who is eight years older than Kaelin, joined Oakland on March 18, 2013, following two seasons with the Miami Dolphins. Kevin was originally drafted by the Dallas Cowboys in 2005 and has appeared in 120 games over his first eight seasons. Kaelin originally signed with the Raiders as an undrafted free agent prior to the 2012 season. Kaelin spent the first 10 games of the 2012 season on the practice squad before being elevated to the 53-man roster for the final six games.

On January 1, 2012, QB Matt Flynn did something that neither legendary Packers QBs Bart Starr nor Brett Favre ever did. Raiders vs. Saints

Oakland Raiders lose to New Orleans Saints 28-20

Jerry McDonald

August 16, 2013

NEW ORLEANS -- If the Raiders were using their preseason game against the New Orleans Saints to gauge how far they have to go join the realm of the relevant, they learned a hard truth Friday night at the Mercedes-Benz Superdome.

The Saints were dominant on both sides of the ball en route to a 28-20 win before 72,122 fans, with the Raiders creeping back into the game with the help of their second-team defense against the New Orleans second-team offense.

As for the guys who likely will be lining up against the Indianapolis Colts on Sept. 8 in the regular-season opener, it was a step backward after an encouraging first preseason win against the Dallas Cowboys.

New Orleans jumped to a 23-0 first-half lead with Drew Brees completing 14 of 18 passes for 202 yards and a touchdown and the Saints defense sacking Raiders starter Matt Flynn five times.

"I don't know if we played well in any one of the three phases in the first half," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said.

The Saints scored on every possession with Brees at quarterback, with Seneca Wallace kneeling on the ball to end the half with New Orleans holding a 23-7 lead.

Brees threw a 16-yard touchdown pass to Kenny Stills, Mark Ingram scored on a 2-yard run, and Garrett Hartley kicked field goals of 53, 31, 30 and 28 yards. The defense chipped in with a safety when Will Herring stuffed Jamize Olawale in the end zone in the fourth quarter.

The Raiders scored on an 18-yard touchdown pass from Flynn to Denarius Moore late in the first half. A sack of Wallace by rookie David Bass resulted in a 1-yard return for a touchdown by Ryan Robinson, and a deflected interception by Jared Gaither set up a 46-yard field goal by Eddie Carmona that cut the Raiders' deficit to 23-17.

Oakland's final points came on a 50-yard field goal by Sebastian Janikowski that made the game cosmetically close at 23-20.

The Raiders came out of the game with two injuries Allen said "could potentially be significant." Tight end David Ausberry left in a sling with an injured shoulder, and cornerback Tracy Porter went out with a groin strain.

With New Orleans defensive coordinator Rob Ryan dialing up an array of fronts and blitzes, Flynn absorbed a beating and led the Raiders to just a single first down until the Saints backed off late in the half.

It was then that Flynn led the Raiders on an 11-play, 82-yard drive that resulted in his touchdown pass to Moore. Flynn was 12 of 16 for 124 yards.

"I think he was under duress most of the evening," Allen said. "(The Saints) brought a lot of pressure, and they did some different stuff than they did in the first preseason game."

Left tackle Alex Barron, playing in place of the injured Jared Veldheer, had his hands full with ex-Cal star Cameron Jordan, but Barron was hardly the only offender.

With Veldheer gone, guard Lucas Nix missing practice time because of injuries and Andre Gurode replacing the injured Mike Brisiel, practice sessions have been mostly mix and match.

Flynn was pleased with the way the Raiders punched in a late first-half touchdown but expected much better.

"We see so many different defenses and coverages and fronts we shouldn't be surprised by anything," Flynn said. "This is what these games are for, to get stuff like that, see it, and learn from it. The bottom line is we can't accept it and let it happen."

The defensive line, missing tackles Pat Sims and Vance Walker and end Lamarr Houston, was unable to put any pressure on Brees.

"They got the ball down the field too much on us. We've got to eliminate the explosive plays," Allen said. "You do that with rushing. You do that with coverage."

Middle linebacker Nick Roach said the Raiders were disappointed but not in a state of shock.

"It's not going to be the easiest thing world to get this thing going, but by no means are we shaken up just because they had some success against us," Roach said.

•Veldheer had surgery Friday to repair a torn left triceps, and general manager Reggie McKenzie said it was too early to set a timetable about a possible return.

"We probably won't know until the second week of rehab," McKenzie said.

•Running back Darren McFadden, who had 17 yards on five carries and was stuffed on a fourth-and-1 play, has an injured shoulder not believed to be serious.

•Backup quarterback Terrelle Pryor, who played in the third quarter, completed 1 of 5 passes for 9 yards and rushed for 15 yards before giving way to Matt McGloin in the fourth quarter.

•Other injured players included tackle John Wetzel (knee), cornerback Joselio Hanson (shoulder) and place-kicker Carmona (neck, leg). Wetzel's injury could be significant, further weakening offensive line depth.

Raiders feel sense of urgency after Saints loss

Vic Tafur

New Orleans --

The positive vibes of training camp don't die easy, not even when your first-team offense and defense get totally dominated for a half in the second preseason game.

The Raiders fell behind 23-0 to the Saints with about three minutes left in the first half, and it could have easily been 35-0.

The offensive and defensive lines struggled mightily, but the backups in the second half turned it into a more digestible 28-20 loss.

"We have to get better," linebacker Kevin Burnett said. "We held them on some plays and we gave up some big plays. Am I worried? No. Is it an urgent matter? Yes."

Oakland quarterback Matt Flynn was sacked five times and had happy feet until an 82-yard touchdown drive to close the first half. Before that drive, the Raiders were averaging 2.5 yards per play to the Saints' 8.7.

Like Burnett, Flynn tried to seem concerned, while not panicking, a fine line that players on a rebuilding team have to walk.

"We have a lot to learn from, and I am glad some of that is getting out of the way now," he said. "The difference between moving the ball and not moving the ball is just so small. We know we can do a lot better."

Neither Flynn nor backup Terrelle Pryor (1-for-5 for 9 yards) had any time in the pocket.

"Definitely some things we have to get cleaned up," left guard Lucas Nix said. "It was as much assignment as technique on our half."

Saints (and former Raiders) defensive coordinator Rob Ryan dialed up a lot of blitzes, and Oakland left tackle Alex Barron didn't fare well in his first start in place of injured Jared Veldheer.

The Raiders have had injuries at both guard spots (Nix has missed about 10 practices at training camp) and they need time in practice to give Flynn more time in games.

"You need to know how your partner, the guy next to you, is going to play and we need more time to mesh," Nix said.

Saints quarterback Drew Brees didn't need any more time, that's for sure. He had 12 seconds - yes, 12 - in the pocket on his 16-yard touchdown pass to Kenny Stills in the first quarter. Brees finished 14-of-18 for 202 yards and was touched only once, by defensive end Jason Hunter on a 56-yard pass.

The Raiders were going again without three-fourths of their starting defensive line, as end Lamarr Houston and tackles Pat Sims and Vance Walker were out with injuries.

"Once the bell rings, no one cares who is in the game and who is out," Burnett said. "Rush the passer."

The Raiders made the score respectable thanks to a sack by rookie defensive end David Bass that caused a fumble, which Ryan Robinson recovered in the end zone, and an interception by linebacker Omar Gaither.

It didn't totally hide the smell of the first half, but again ... it's only a preseason loss.

A team that is coming off a 4-12 record, and says it's competitive and not rebuilding, doesn't lose faith in mid-August.

"It's not going to be the easiest thing in the world to get this thing going," middle linebacker Nick Roach said. "We have things to build up off of, but by no means are we shaken up because they had some success against us."

Instant Replay: Saints score early and often, beat Raiders 28-20

Scott Bair

August 16, 2013

NEW ORLEANS – The Raiders first-team defense played well in last week's preseason opener. On Friday night, that unit couldn't have played worse.

There was little, if anything, to be proud of after getting gutted by Drew Brees and the New Orleans Saints in Friday's 28-20 preseason loss at the Superdome.

The Raiders failed a stern test during a first half played by the starting units, allowing Brees to pick them apart. The Saints scored on every drive, tallying 23 points the defense could do nothing to prevent.

The Raiders had no semblance of a pass rush – the team played without defensive end Lamarr Houston, which didn't help – giving Brees comfort and time to pick the secondary apart.

Case and point: On a 16-yard touchdown pass to Kenny Stills, Brees had an astonishing 12 seconds to throw.

Brees threw for 202 yards and a touchdown. After the first quarter, he was on pace to throw for a single-game NFL-record 588 yards.

Tracy Porter was beat several times before leaving with a groin injury. Sio Moore was invisible and end Jason Hunter was nowhere near the quarterback. Linebacker Kevin Burnett was a lone bright spot among the starting unit, but, all in all, it was a disastrous night for a revamped defense looking for signs of progress.

McFadden update: Running back Darren McFadden played a bit longer than he did last week. He has 17 yards on five carries, including a nine-yard scamper that was his best run of the preseason. He left in the second quarter and was replaced on the first team by Rashad Jennings.

For starters: Alex Barron had a rough day. Jared Veldheer's replacement at left tackle struggled blocking for the run and pass, and did little to help quarterback Matt Flynn run the offense.

His linemates weren't much better. Right guard Andre Gurode and right tackle Khalif Barnes had their share of miscues that kept the offense off kilter.

Flynn spent the first half on the run, operating out of an easily collapsible pocket. He was sacked five times and took several other big hits, but hung tough and finished a difficult half well.

Flynn's last throw was his best. He threw a perfect strike to receiver Denarius Moore, who hauled in the 18-yard touchdown pass.

Premium reserves: Defensive lineman Jack Crawford made a solid case for a roster spot. The second-year pro had a sack and a fumble recovery in the third quarter playing out of position on the interior line.

While he fared better against the Saints' second-team line, he showed improvement and the ability to help in a backup role.

Backup quarterback Terrelle Pryor didn't make progress in his second outing. While he operated under heavy pressure, the offense was disjointed with him under center and his decision-making seemed suspect.

Pryor made some careless throws and wasn't as effective running a read option the Saints were clearly prepared for. Pryor was just 1-for-5 passing for nine yards and ran four times for 15 yards.

Linebacker Omar Gaither intercepted a pass deflected by tackle Kurt Touma and looks like a capable backup to middle linebacker Nick Roach.

Rookie report: Receiver Brice Butler has improved his lot during camp. His ascending status was confirmed on Friday night, when he played well with the first unit. He had three catches for 38 yards playing through the third quarter.

Defensive end David Bass made a big play in the third quarter, forcing Saints quarterback Seneca Wallace to fumble on a sack flying off the edge. Fellow rookie Ryan Robinson recovered the fumble and returned it for a touchdown.

Quarterback Matt McGloin came back to Earth with a pedestrian effort in the fourth quarter, but remains ahead of fourth-round pick Tyler Wilson, who did not play against the Saints.

On the bubble: Defensive back Brandian Ross played well in the second half, and forced a fumble. He's fighting an uphill battle to make this roster, which is loaded at cornerback.

Taiwan Jones didn't help his cause. The converted running back was cited for a 38-yard pass interference penalty and got juiced covering a punt that turned into a solid return.

Injury update: Tight end David Ausberry injured his shoulder in the first quarter, landing awkwardly after making a nice reception, and did not return. Cornerback Tracy Porter left in the second quarter after hurting his groin.

Sitting it out: CB D.J. Hayden (hamstring) and OT Menelik Watson (calf), DE Lamarr Houston, LBs Miles Burris, and Kaluka Maiava, WR Jacoby Ford (knee), RB Latavius Murray, RG Mike Brisiel and DTs Pat Sims (hamstring) and Vance Walker did not play.

What's next: The Raiders will host the Chicago Bears on Aug. 23. It will mark the debut of first-round pick D.J. Hayden, who was cleared for full contact on Friday. The first unit will play the majority of this game, possibly as long as three quarters.

Raiders' Dennis Allen learned from Saints' Sean Payton

By Jerry McDonald

August 15, 2013

NEW ORLEANS -- Dennis Allen remembers sitting at a table at his first staff meeting as an assistant coach with the New Orleans Saints, listening to a voice that would define his future.

"One of the things Sean Payton says is, when you take this staff picture, I want to be able to look back on it 10, 15, 20 years from now and see where guys have gone on to have success, to be head coaches and coordinators," Allen said. "He's always been great about trying to promote his guys. It's something he takes great pride in."

While general manager Reggie McKenzie has restructured the Raiders' front office and personnel department using what he learned working for the Green Bay Packers, the on-field operation as structured by Allen in many ways mirrors New Orleans.

Allen returns to New Orleans, with Payton on the opposite sideline, when the Raiders visit the Saints at the Mercedes-Benz Superdome at 5 p.m. Friday.

Payton hired Allen off the staff of the Atlanta Falcons in 2006 as an assistant defensive line coach. Allen became defensive backs coach in 2008 and stayed there until he became defensive coordinator for the Denver Broncos with Payton's blessing in 2011.

Raiders safety Usama Young, who played for the Saints from 2008-10, can see the similarities between teams run by Payton and Allen.

"The tempo of the practices, the meetings, the way you prepared for things you never would have even considered, they're very much the same," Young said.

Allen said he indeed borrowed heavily from New Orleans, where he won a championship ring after the 2009 season with a 31-17 win over the Indianapolis Colts in Super Bowl XLIV.

"The way we practice, the way we meet, the schedule that we have, a lot of that comes from the time I had in New Orleans," Allen said. "We had a lot of success doing it that way. It's no different than growing up as a child. You develop a lot of your personality, your character, from the environment that you're in."

In much the way that Payton repeated some of the things he learned under Bill Parcells as a Dallas assistant, Allen is passing along things he learned from Payton.

"I catch myself a lot of times with the same demeanor, the same message, even the same delivery," Allen said. "You've got to be your own guy as the head coach, and coach to your own personality. But there are a lot of things I've seen him do as far as managing a team that I've tried to incorporate."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

With Payton being an offensive coach and Allen being a defensive coach, Young has been around Allen much more than he was ever around Payton.

"Sean would come in, draw a couple of things on the board, then he'd be off with the offense," Young said. "D.A., he's in the room with us scheming, adding things, drawing up things."

Allen said he stays in touch with Payton although not so much during training camp. When Payton was suspended last season for his role in the Saints' bounty scandal, he was prohibited from talking with anyone associated from an NFL team.

"He couldn't do anything with anybody, and that was tough, because he's obviously one of my mentors," Allen said.

New Orleans went 7-9 last season with Payton under suspension after winning 37 games the previous three seasons. Allen expects a return to form.

"I think you'll see a different New Orleans team this year with him back," Allen said.

Kawakami: Revamped Raiders a better fit for Dennis Allen's style

By Tim Kawakami
August 14, 2013

NAPA -- This is Dennis Allen's kind of Raiders team, which I know mostly because Allen keeps pointing it out.

He's not saying this is a tremendously talented team, because he's too smart to oversell his current squad of mostly unknown, unproven players.

And he's not critiquing last season's more recognizable bunch, though we can all make plausible conclusions from what he won't say about the 2012 Raiders' 4-12 swoon.

But Allen, starting his second season in the Raiders' massive reboot alongside general manager Reggie McKenzie, is much more in his element in this year's training camp surrounded by players who actually want to be here.

"I think your first year you're really trying to figure it out, OK?" Allen said in an interview after Tuesday afternoon's practice.

"There's a lot of things you deal with as a head coach that you never dealt with as a coordinator, you never dealt with as a position coach ...

"There's no question I feel a lot more comfortable in my role. And I think having the guys on this team that we have, I think, helps me in that."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

That's a twofold leap: Allen, the first-time head coach, now clearly understands the totality of his job (and there's no totality greater than inheriting the recent Raiders' mess); and that leads to the importance of gathering like-minded players.

Yes, it probably took longer than he and McKenzie thought it would take to get here, and this is just the start of the start.

In many ways -- new quarterback, new offensive coordinator, mostly an entirely new defense from 2012 -- this feels more like Year 1 in a startup than Year 2.

Still, Allen sees progress -- with his own coaching abilities, with his roster, and with the organization as a whole.

"What I'll say is, I like the players we have on this team," Allen said. "I like the way they come to work every day. I like their unselfishness.

"I like the fact that they want to come out to work every day and they want to try to get better.

"That's what I like about the 2013 Raiders."

For a lot of different reasons, he probably didn't feel much of that last season.

Instead, because of salary-cap constraints and the desire to keep the Raiders as competitive as possible (oops!), Allen had to slalom around the egos and declining production of veterans such as Rolando McClain, Richard Seymour, Tommy Kelly and Carson Palmer.

Now those players are gone. I would assume the woes of 2012 still linger in owner Mark Davis' memory, though.

So McKenzie and especially Allen are under the microscope this season, and Allen seems entirely fine with that.

"As I've moved forward, I've done a better job of trying to pick out who those guys are going to be that can help this team and lead this team and preach the same message that I'm preaching," Allen said.

What's left is a squad with expansion-level elements, especially after the rash of camp injuries that included Wednesday's devastating announcement that left tackle Jared Veldheer has a torn triceps and will be out for a while.

The Week 1 quarterback almost certainly will be journeyman Matt Flynn; other than tailback Darren McFadden and maybe safety Tyvon Branch, there isn't a prime-age star on this roster. "Me personally, I like our roster," Flynn said. "There's a lot of guys that have a lot of talent and probably some names that people have never heard of.

"But I truly believe that they will very soon."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Fact: This is not a quality roster. But a good coaching staff can do more and better things with a roster full of hungry, unproven players than the sludgy group the Raiders tried last year.

"Any time you come into a new situation, it's never exactly how you want it," Allen said. "So it's a process. And sometimes those processes take a little bit of time.

"It takes time to get everybody in place that kind of sees the same vision that you do."

At this year's training camp, Allen has turned toward a more collegiate atmosphere -- most notably, one practice determines whether the offense or defense gets to wear silver jerseys in the next.

The holdovers from last year have embraced it; Allen is quick to name defensive lineman Lamarr Houston and fullback Marcel Reece as returnees who have taken leadership roles this season. Allen also hired offensive coordinator Greg Olson to replace Greg Knapp and dump the zone-blocking scheme, and there were other key staff changes.

Again, this is much closer to Allen's kind of team, at least in attitude and philosophy. It's Allen's stamp on this franchise.

The Raiders probably won't win a lot of games, but they will have his stamp. They need his stamp.

If Allen's going to be on the hot seat in Year 2, he might as well do it his way. And I think Allen is the best shot the Raiders have right now.

Allen looking for new Raiders leaders

By Rael Enteen

June 3, 2013

ALAMEDA – The second-year regime of general manager Reggie McKenzie and Dennis Allen can only put the Raiders in position to succeed up to a certain point. McKenzie can load the roster with promising players and Allen can teach them how to make the most of their talent, but any franchise needs leaders to step up on the field, in practice and on Sundays.

"We're looking to identify who are those leaders going to be," Allen said after the Raiders started their third OTA session Monday. "Those are things that have got to come out of these OTAs, minicamp, when we get into training camp. On the good football teams the players take over, the locker room takes over."

More often than not, a team's starting quarterback fills that leadership role. Carson Palmer embraced that responsibility, but is now plying his trade with the Arizona Cardinals. Allen is preparing to start the season with Matt Flynn as his starting quarterback, but doesn't expect him to bark orders at teammates right away.

Allen acknowledged that Flynn has “some of those leadership skills,” but quickly moved on to single out running back Marcel Reece as a player he’s asked to be more vocal.

“That was one of our challenges to [Reece] this year,” Allen said. “We’ve got to identify guys on both sides of the ball that really can take that leadership role on, and it really comes down a lot to, I don’t know if I want to use the term peer pressure, but I mean that’s really what it is. It’s accountability to each other in the locker room, that you don’t want to let the guy next to you down.”

Running back Darren McFadden echoed Allen’s sentiments that Reece is more than qualified for the job.

“I love working with Marcel,” McFadden said. “We’re like best friends on and off the field. We’re just going out there trying to lead our offense and get everybody on the same page.”

The Raiders were not often on the same page during a 4-12 season in 2012. With so many new names on the roster this year, it’s even more imperative for the team to eliminate mental mistakes, something a team leader is usually responsible for enforcing.

Even though Flynn didn’t get an obvious vote of confidence from Allen, he believes he can develop into his own type of Raiders leader over time.

“When you look at guys who are leaders of the team and who are quarterbacks around the league, everybody has a different leadership style,” Flynn said. “Some guys are vocal, some guys are laid back, but there’s just a different style. If you’re going to become a leader, you need to find that niche, how you fit in to the system, fit in to the guys in the locker room, and just kind of go accordingly.”

Like Allen before him, Flynn tempered expectations about being able to lead the team in OTAs without ever stepping foot on the field together for a regular season game.

“That’s something that’s not going to come overnight,” Flynn said. “It starts coming when you get live bullets out there and you start getting into the dog days.”

Even if Reece embraces Allen’s challenge to step up as a leader and Flynn finds his voice as a field general, that’s only half the equation. The Raiders also need leadership on defense, something that was sorely lacking when Rolando McClain was still considered an every down middle linebacker.

Allen wouldn’t comment on the lack of leadership last year or acknowledge McClain as being part of the problem,

"I'm on to this year; I'm not really concerned with where we were last year," Allen said. "That's behind us. I'm worried about what we're going to do this year and how we're going to respond this year."

McClain's replacement, Nick Roach, is a player Allen has high hopes for.

"Nick's highly intelligent and he's athletic," Allen said. "He's done a nice job of being the quarterback of our defense. He's kind of taken on that role and really has a passion about leading that team."

While Roach is being groomed to run the defense from the middle of the field, the Raiders can also lean on veterans Charles Woodson and Andre Carter to help their younger players improve.

"I just think when you have experience like myself and Charles, the younger guys do listen and they want to have that same experience we have," Carter said. "For vets like ourselves, we want guys to play 6,7,8 years. The average career for an NFL player is three years. For me to play this long, and Charles also, is a testament that the strong will survive. So when we talk to the younger guys, we let them know, 'Hey, you can have this dream for as long as you want it but it's up to you to do the right thing.'"

Carter, a 13-year veteran out of Cal who has played for the San Francisco 49ers, Washington Redskins and New England Patriots before joining the Raiders last season, understands the importance of a middle linebacker, or 'Mike,' directing traffic.

"The Mike position is probably one of the key elements to having a good defense," Carter said. "He gets the communication to everyone, the defensive linemen, the cornerbacks, the safeties. If you don't have that you're not going to be successful. The Mike linebacker is definitely the engine of the defense so for [Roach] to be vocal is very vital because we need that on as well as off the field."

As Allen pointed out Monday, the Raiders still have 51 days until they start training camp. The need for an established leader is not dire yet. But as evidenced by McClain's tenure in Oakland, expecting a player to assume that role based solely on their position on the field is not a recipe for success.

DAVID AUSBERRY

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE

David Ausberry ready to take over as Raiders top tight end

By Levi Damien

Aug 1, 2013

David Ausberry is establishing himself as the starting tight end for the Raiders. He showed himself to be on the verge of breaking out last off-season before disappearing last season. Aside from one very memorable play (sorry, Kevin Burnett), he barely saw the field.

Ausberry took a backseat to fourth year tight end, Brandon Myers. But as a second tight end in an offense which focused on tight ends as much as the Raiders did, one would expect more than his 7 catches for 92 yards.

According to Dennis Allen, Ausberry's issues stem from the mental side of things.

"The concern with David Ausberry has nothing to do with physical ability," said Dennis Allen. "It's really a lot more about the mental aspect of the game, understanding how to play the tight end position. He's worked extremely hard. We always knew that he had receiving talent. Where he's improved the most is No. 1, assignments, he's been a lot better on his assignments. And No. 2 is his ability to block both in the running game and pass protection."

Ausberry has all the abilities necessary to be a very good tight end in this league. He shows it consistently in camp practices. Raiders fans have seen it in small doses in games as well. Now the job is his to lose and his transition from wide receiver, which he played in college, looks to be complete.

"It's much better than when I started playing tight end," said Ausberry. "There's still room for improvement, but the transition was a big one. It's a whole different world in the trenches. My blocking is better, but that's come with experience and a whole lot of reps."

The time is now for Ausberry. The team drafted two tight ends in the sixth round to provide some insurance but they didn't go out and sign a big name free agent to play tight end with the idea that he would be ready to step up and be the man.

ALEX BARRON

Alex Barron blazing a comeback trail with Raiders

Levi Damien

August 6, 2013

When the Raiders signed Alex Barron this off-season, most people were thinking he had no chance of making this team. After all, he hasn't played a down in the NFL for two seasons. Those players rarely are able to break back into the league. But thus far in camp, Alex Barron has looked every bit the former first round pick.

Dennis Allen has been pleasantly surprised in Barron's performance.

"I've been impressed with the things Alex Barron has done and that's been a nice surprise for us," said Allen. "He's a guy that's kind of getting that second chance and he's taking advantage of it. . . [He's] had a nice camp so far. I'm really anxious to see what a guy like that does when he gets into the preseason games, and see if what he's been doing out here on the practice field translates into the game."

The Raiders are the perfect team to give Barron that second chance. It has been a while since he had an opportunity like this.

After spending the first five seasons of his career as a fulltime starter with the Rams, things went downhill fast for this former 19th overall pick. In his final season in St Louis in 2009, his ten penalties for 50 yards was the most in the NFL. He spent one season the Cowboys appearing in 11 games with just one start. That was the last time he played in a regular season game.

Then he signed with the Saints in the off-season but suffered a knee injury and was placed on IR for the entire 2011 season. Last year, he tried out for the 49ers and left unsigned before being signed by the Seahawks. He would spend training camp in Seattle but be among the final roster cuts and receive no interest in his services last season.

By the time this off-season rolled around, Alex Barron was now not even an NFL afterthought -- he was not a thought at all.

We've all heard the saying with regard to the NFL; 'What have you done for me lately'. It's one of the more common phrases used to judge a player or coach. That is just as true for players who haven't played at all lately. Once they are away from football for more than a season, they're out of sight, out of mind.

"Once you're away (from the NFL) you kinda just sorta fade away," said Barron. "That's just kind of how the league is. Nothing I could do about it. Only thing I could do was keep working and keep waiting and that's pretty much all that was."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Come this off-season, this 30-year-old former everyday starting left tackle didn't receive a single invitation to work out for a team. The NFL had clearly moved on from him. If Barron was to get back into the eyes and minds of the NFL, he would have to make it happen.

"It was actually a pro day back at school," said Barron. "I had a little trouble getting workouts because I hadn't been in last season. . . So, I just took it upon myself knowing at my school there were gonna be a lot of coaches, head coaches, scouts, whatever the case was. I had nothing to lose. I was in shape and I had been working so it was like 'well, only thing I can do is show them what I got'."

The Raiders had scouts in attendance at that Florida State pro day. They were there to see the rookies along with right tackle Menelik Watson. But while they were impressed with Watson enough to make him their round two pick, Barron also caught their eye. Now in an odd twist of fate, Watson has been injured all camp and Barron has been taking his place and making a strong case of his own.

The Raiders have had Barron moving from back and forth from right and left tackle. He has been the primary backup on both sides behind Jared Veldheer and Khalif Barnes respectively. So, even when Watson does return to action, there will be a room for both of them.

Watching him dominate edge rushers in blocking drills and earn the respect of the coaches more each day makes one wonder if he can clean up his penalties, just how good he could be. He would certainly offer the team some security in case a starter were to be lost to injury. That's a great value to the rebuild effort in Oakland.

KEVIN BURNETT

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE

Kevin Burnett has an enormous chip on his shoulder

By Levi Damien

Aug 4, 2013

There are a total of 60 new players on this Raiders team. That's two thirds of the roster. By now we have figured out that there is a common thread among those 60 players Reggie McKenzie and Dennis Allen have added - they are all have something to prove - but I can say without a doubt none of them have a bigger chip on their shoulder than Kevin Burnett.

The former second round pick is entering his ninth season in the NFL and his fourth team. In the first four of those seasons - all in Dallas -- he started a total of 4 games. When he left the Cowboys and joined the Chargers, he saw the most starts he had in his career. He started 7 games in his first season there and all 16 games the following season.

So, by his sixth season in the league, he had finally shown enough to earn his place as the fulltime starter. Then he was not brought back.

He went to the Dolphins and started every game the past two seasons, raising his tackle numbers each the past three seasons including having over 100 tackles each of the past two. Then he was released. The team felt like they had found an upgrade with Raiders former linebacker, Philip Wheeler and Burnett was not in the plans.

So, it seems though he finally had become a fulltime starter, he still wasn't quite good enough. He was still a stopgap until something better came along. All throughout his career, he has struggled. Four years of toiling in obscurity, then four years of not 'he'll do for now' and now at age 30, he must deal with the age question.

These facts have come together to create one enormous chip on his shoulder.

"People say, 'Oh, he got this, he did this, he's sorry, he's this, he's that.'" Said Burnett. "My numbers have gone up every season, so...what's that a product of? You know, I've been on good football teams, had other people around me so it's not just that I'm on a sorry football team. The guy can play."

"The fact that I can do it all and the ability to play smart," Burnett said of his skill set. "Not a lot of football players play smart. Not a lot of players help themselves before the snap of the play and that's what I love about myself. Given the fact that everybody wants to say, 'He's getting older,' or 'He's this he's that. He sucks.' Whatever. I've had 200-tackle seasons back to back. So, it's all in the eye of the beholder."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Another common thread seems to be versatility. Jason Tarver does a lot of different things with this team's linebacking corps and Burnett can be found lining up at each outside linebacker position as well as inside linebacker at times. The changing alignments aside, the Raiders are severely depleted in camp due to injury. He is considered somewhat of a 'jack of all trades' even if his critics might add 'master of none'.

"In this league, you've got to be able to play every position. You've got to be able to play sam, mike, will, strong safety, free safety, defensive end because on any given play they can say, 'Flip it.' And then, when that happens, you gotta be able to run the defense. So, it helps to know where everybody's going, know what everybody's doing.

"Football is a game of versatility. It's built around how much you can do for your football team to help them win. So, it's not about what position you play because all that is, is a label. . . Football players put themselves in the best position to succeed. So do coaches. Now, it's about: what role am I going to fulfill on this particular play? What role am I going to ask this player to play at this particular point in time."

The unique position this NFL veteran is in compared to some of the other new Raiders is he has been a starter for three plus seasons. Most guys who feel like they have a lot to prove are unknowns or have toiled as a backup throughout their careers.

Burnett clearly needs no added incentive for him to play with a sense of urgency. But he can't speak for any of the other newly signed players on this team. Most of those players are on one-year deals (Burnett is on a two-year deal) and according to him, those deals were made with motivation in mind.

"If you look at the construction of this team, it's not by happenstance a lot of people are here on short-term deals," said Burnett. "See, what you do by doing that is you create a hungry football team. By creating a hungry football team, you're creating a team that plays with a sense of urgency, guys that are not complacent."

I would assume he doesn't include himself among that group which would need a short term deal to keep from being complacent. Disproving those who would slight or disrespect his abilities is clearly all the motivation he needs.

BRICE BUTLER

SACRAMENTO BEE

Rookie WR Brice Butler impresses Raiders

By Josh Dubow

August 12, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- Two long catches and a touchdown in his NFL exhibition debut earned Oakland Raiders receiver Brice Butler plenty of congratulatory messages from friends and family.

His response: Ignore it.

Because as a seventh-round pick with little college pedigree, Butler knows that he is just one bad practice or game from transforming from summertime revelation to struggling to make the 53-man roster.

"I don't try to let it get to me," Butler said. "It's just one game. I just have to keep working. If I play terrible nobody will remember last week. I just have to keep working."

That's just the reaction coach Dennis Allen wants Butler to have, saying that he hoped Butler wouldn't read all the glowing reviews from a game where he had an impressive 40-yard catch and run followed by a diving 30-yard touchdown catch on one attention-getting drive.

That kind of performance has vaulted Butler into the mix for a roster spot on a team still searching for dependable receiving options.

"Make no mistake about it; he's been a nice surprise," Allen said. "When you get a seventh-round draft pick like that who's really developed, that's a good thing to have. But at the same time, I don't want him reading too much of his press clippings and start feeling too good about himself.

He's still a rookie. He still has a long way to go, but he's off to a nice start."

Butler knows firsthand how quickly a player's position can change. A Super Prep All-American in high school in Georgia, Butler went to Southern California and had 20 catches his first year and was named to the Pac-10 all-freshman team.

But his playing time dwindled the next two years when he combined for just 21 catches and he ended up transferring to San Diego State for his senior year. He caught 24 passes for the Aztecs on a team that ranked 111th in the nation in pass attempts.

That journey is one reason why Butler is more focused on his mistakes from Friday night than his successes.

"I honestly don't think I played that good," he said. "Until those couple of plays on that one drive I didn't feel good about my play at all. I definitely have to work on it. Watching tape there was a lot of stuff I can work on. ... I definitely just have to build on it."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Butler has the advantage of getting some outside help from his father, Bobby, who played 12 years in the NFL as a cornerback for the Atlanta Falcons.

Bobby Butler can help his son on the intricacies of the NFL game from the perspective of someone who made a career stopping wide receivers.

"Defensively, he tells me what he sees when he watches me run routes or he watches me in the run game," Brice Butler said. "Offensively, he tells me what I should do to trigger different things from the corner and stuff like that. He's always been like that with me. When he realized I didn't want to play corner he has always been there on the side helping."

Butler is on a similar path to the one teammate Rod Streater followed last summer. Streater arrived as an undrafted free agent from Temple who had just 19 catches as a senior.

But he quickly caught the eyes of his coaches with his good hands and route-running and had 39 catches for 584 yards and three touchdowns as a rookie. Streater now has a starting role a year after making the team out of nowhere and is dispensing advice to younger players like Butler.

"We talk about it all the time," Streater said. "He was a blocking guy and had almost similar stats. We instantly connected. I told him, 'You just got to work and when you're on the field, college is done now. This is the NFL. You get a new chance.'"

Brice Butler looks to build on fast start with Oakland Raiders

By Steve Corkran

August 11, 2013

NAPA -- If wide receiver Brice Butler doesn't know about Ken-Yon Rambo, it's worth his time and effort to find out soon so that he can avoid a similar outcome to Rambo's once-promising Raiders career.

Like Butler, Rambo joined the Raiders as a seventh-round draft pick on a team with plenty of receiver depth. Butler also followed the trail blazed by Rambo by turning a late-game catch into a pivotal touchdown in his Raiders debut Friday night.

The key now is for Butler to build upon his fast start and not flame out the way Rambo did in 2001. The Raiders released Rambo at the end of training camp after his lone TD catch was his exhibition highlight. Butler still has plenty of time to bolster his stock.

"He's been a nice surprise," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said of Butler. Yet, what he has done so far is little more than a nice start in the overall scheme of things. It's imperative Butler not get complacent and make too much of his showing against the Dallas Cowboys, when Butler led all receivers with 70 yards on his two receptions.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"We'll make sure we keep our thumb on him, make sure he doesn't read too much of the good stuff (reporters are) going to write about him," Allen said.

Butler arrived from San Diego State via USC, the ninth of 10 players selected by the Raiders in the NFL draft in April.

He joined a crowded field of hopefuls that included undrafted rookies Greg Jenkins, Conner Vernon and Sam McGuffie and inexperienced players such as Travionte Session, Isaiah Williams and Juron Criner.

Making the leap from prospect to the opening-game, 53-man roster entails standing out during practice and games.

Denarius Moore did just that in 2011 and went from fifth-round draft pick to starting receiver. Rod Streater followed suit in 2012 in going from undrafted rookie to opening-day starter.

Now it's Butler who is surging to the head of the class and making a push for not only a roster spot but also meaningful playing time.

Streater said he and Butler bonded instantly because of their similar backgrounds, as well as their college stats.

Players in their situation have to be almost "perfect" to overcome the long odds, Streater added. They also have to put behind them stellar plays, solid practices and good games.

"You got to move on," Streater said. "The coaches want to see improvement every game, and the next game is the most important. You can't live off the past."

That already seems ingrained in Butler, who tired of all the praise from friends and family after the Cowboys game.

"I honestly don't think I played that good," Butler said. "Until those couple of plays on that one drive, I didn't feel good about my play at all. I definitely have to work on it. Watching tape, there was a lot of stuff I can work on."

Butler transferred to San Diego State after his junior season at USC when playing time dwindled. That experience prepared him for the tenuous existence of an NFL player.

"I can't focus on what the coaches are thinking or what the other players are doing," Butler said. "I've done that in the past, and it didn't really go well for me. So, I'm really just focusing on what ... I can do best for the team."

Having a father that played in the NFL for 12 seasons gives Butler an edge in that he has someone to speak with about the process.

Bobby Butler played cornerback for the Atlanta Falcons from 1981-92. Brice said his father passes along tips on what to look for from cornerbacks and how to gain an advantage.

Cornerback Taiwan Jones and linebacker Sio Moore suffered undisclosed injuries, and they weren't able to finish practice.

Gurode and Bergstrom got all the reps because Mike Brisiel and Lucas Nix didn't practice and weren't able to compete for job openings.

Allen said it's crucial for the Raiders to find five reliable offensive linemen as soon as possible, but it's more important to make the proper decisions before the regular-season opener.

ANDRE CARTER

Carter hopes to help Raiders pass rush

By Michael Wagaman

Aug 3, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- Andre Carter's training camp routine is a lot different from when the Oakland Raiders' defensive end entered the NFL more than a decade ago.

No more mornings of sleeping in or trotting out to practice without so much as a warm-up stretch. The 34-year-old pass rush specialist is up and on the field working out the kinks long before the day's workouts begin, joining fellow veteran Charles Woodson hours ahead of their teammates.

It's a regimen that has become even more vital to Carter these days.

Almost two years after suffering a ruptured quadriceps tendon in his left leg while with the New England Patriots, Carter is trying to maintain his spot on the Raiders defensive line after joining the team early in the 2012 season.

"It's funny the things you do to prepare for camp the older you get," Carter said. "I'm with Woodson getting warmed up a couple hours before practice. You wake up at 6:40 a.m., take a hot shower, loosen up a little bit, get the hips right. The body, to play for this long, has taken a beating."

Carter is entering his 13th NFL season and has 78½ sacks, eighth-most among active players. But the seventh overall pick in the 2001 draft is coming off a year in which he had only 19 tackles and 2½ sacks in 12 games.

Although he has had to take on an increased workload early in training camp while Lamarr Houston sits out practice because of an disclosed injury, Carter will likely be a third-down pass-rusher in Oakland's defense.

Houston attended practice Saturday but no timetable has been given for his return, leaving Carter to carry the load.

"Any time you have guys like Charles Woodson (and) Andre Carter ... they understand what it takes to be a championship-level football team," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "We expect them to go out and make plays for us, but part of their job description is to help some of these young guys not just learn what to do but how to do it and how to play the NFL game."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

How much Carter will be a part of the defensive line rotation once Houston returns remains uncertain. Houston is one of only two starters brought back from last year's team.

Oakland signed Jason Hunter in the offseason and drafted David Bass with one of its seventh-round draft picks. Hunter has been taking all the reps at left defensive end with the Raiders' first-team defense during training camp while Carter has been getting the majority of work on the right side.

"We have been on point as far as communication," Carter said. "You have to get the physical reps, that's the only way you're going to get better. But overall we've made great progression despite the changes. We all kind of feed off each other."

Carter is relishing this training camp more than most.

He was out of the NFL at this time a year ago after tearing the quadriceps tendon completely off the bone in his left leg. The injury required surgery and scared away most teams from pursuing Carter once he had recovered.

The Raiders brought him in for a pair of workouts before eventually signing him to a contract in September. He got off to a slow start but had 11 tackles and 1½ sacks over a three-game stretch last December.

Oakland re-signed Carter in April to a one-year deal worth $1 million in the hopes he can help a pass rush that generated just 25 sacks in 2012.

"Obviously, he can go into the rotation and play first and second down but I see him a little bit more as a third-down type of player," Allen said. "The great thing about Andre is that he's a pro so he's going to prepare himself for all situations."

JOSH CRIBBS

INSIDEBAYAREA.COM

Oakland Raiders' Josh Cribbs has a special niche

By Jerry McDonald

August 13, 2013

NAPA -- It began to dawn on Josh Cribbs when he was an undrafted rookie with the Cleveland Browns: Even if he was accustomed to being an offensive star, he could make a nice living as a special-teams player in the NFL.

Cribbs' special-teams coach at the time suggested he familiarize himself with the name Brian Mitchell. Mitchell, like Cribbs, was a college quarterback without the prototype NFL skill set. Mitchell had a 14-year career, primarily as a return specialist and special-teams player.

Cribbs recalled the exhibition game in which he raced downfield and made a tackle inside the 20-yard line.

"A guy who had returned kicks the previous year came up to me and said, 'You mean you can tackle, too?' "

Cribbs said. "He was basically like, 'Damn. I don't have a chance.' They released him. The more you can do, the more you have value to your team."

Cribbs gets most of his publicity for his kickoff return skills -- he shares the NFL record of eight returned for touchdowns with Leon Washington -- but is involved in every part of special teams.

He brings to special teams what Charles Woodson brings to the defense -- a veteran presence who has done it all, seen it all and is expected to not only make plays but also teach others how to make them.

Aside from returning kickoffs and punts and playing on coverage teams, Cribbs has become the upback or "personal protector" on the punt team. He has even worked recently as an emergency long snapper.

A record-setting quarterback at Kent State, Cribbs played some wide receiver and dabbled as a spread quarterback in Cleveland, all the time realizing that special teams paid the bills.

"I've seen all-time great players in this league come and go," Cribbs said. "I'm hoping to make my 10th season next year. I won't abandon special teams, and special teams won't abandon me."

Raiders coach Dennis Allen finds it appealing to have a player who isn't looking to use special teams as a steppingstone for a starting position on offense or defense.

"He understands his role is as a special-teams player first, and he embraces that role," Allen said.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Cribbs, 30, was released by the Browns following offseason knee surgery. He was a spectator through the Raiders' offseason but has been a regular participant in practice during training camp and is still following the lead of Mitchell, even if the two have never met.

Mitchell, now a radio talk show host in Washington, D.C., finished his career with 23,316 all-purpose yards -- second in the NFL to Jerry Rice (23,546 yards). He had 14,014 yards returning kicks and 4,999 yards returning punts, with the rest coming as a runner or receiver.

"People used to ask me if I was a starter and I'd say 'Yes, I'm the starting return specialist for the Washington Redskins,' " said Mitchell, who also played for Philadelphia and the New York Giants. "People just don't understand, and neither do a lot of players. I knew a lot of players were out of the game and making $50,000 while I was still playing and making $300,000."

Cribbs freely counsels his teammates and at times will step up to the grease board and provide analysis at the behest of special-teams coach Bobby April.

With Raiders players having playbooks on iPads, it has given Cribbs an extra tool to dispense information.

"It seems like every other day he's writing an email to the whole special-teams group to tell us something," long snapper Jon Condo said. "His message is always, 'If you've got questions, then ask. If you don't want to reply to this email, talk to me after a meeting. Don't be afraid to talk to me. Don't be afraid to get better.' "

MATT FLYNN

Matt Flynn relishes rare second chance

By Scott Bair

August 9, 2013

Matt Flynn understands that opportunities lost are rarely regained. Especially in the NFL. Especially following a failure so public.

The quarterback was a prized free agent in 2012, resting largely on the laurels of two outstanding starts in Green Bay. The game tape was good enough to woo several suitors, whom Flynn considered equally before choosing Seattle and the three-year, $26 million contract offered.

We know how this story goes. Flynn was the presumptive starter heading into camp, and lost out to an unheralded rookie.

That's the Cliffs Notes version. Additional, pertinent info: Turns out Russell Wilson is pretty darn good. Turns out Flynn had elbow troubles in training camp that hindered his effectiveness, which the team kept quiet. And, it turns out Flynn and Seahawks coach Pete Carroll won't be best friends forever.

All that is prelude to this. The Raiders gave Flynn another chance to start, albeit at a reduced rate with no future risk. There is no guaranteed money in next season's pay structure, so this is Flynn's best, and probably last chance to be a franchise quarterback.

"I came in here excited, feeling blessed to have this opportunity, a second opportunity really, to get a starting job in the NFL," Flynn said. "I came in here with the mentality that I am going to be that guy. You have to walk in with confidence and have a presence about yourself. You have to go in there and act like you're the guy."

There is less confidence he can be. Somehow, after throwing just nine regular-season passes in 2012, Flynn was downgraded from hot commodity to penny stock. Without a polished resume, his ability to be a full-time starter is in doubt. His arm strength has been questioned – and rightfully so – but Flynn throws short and intermediate passes of quality.

That's what he'll be asked to do in coordinator Greg Olson's offense, which is built around running back Darren McFadden. Flynn must be a game manager and team leader in this structure, which he's done well since becoming a Raider this offseason.

"He always seems to make the right play," McFadden said. "He's a great leader out there. He puts us in the right situations, and he hasn't turned the ball over many times in this camp. I'm looking forward to seeing him in a live game situation."

Raiders' Matt Flynn honed thick skin under Aaron Rodgers

By Jerry McDonald

Aug 7, 2013

NAPA -- Matt Flynn knows about doubters. When he makes his debut as the Raiders' starting quarterback Friday night, the skeptics will be out in force, both in the press box and the stands.

But before he ever got a chance to feel his own NFL scrutiny, Flynn got to witness a teammate deal with it on a much larger scale in Green Bay. When the rookie seventh-round pick arrived in 2008, Brett Favre was waffling on his decision to retire. That left prospective starter Aaron Rodgers in the middle of a maelstrom.

Favre was a three-time MVP and a franchise icon, and the team's decision to move ahead with Rodgers was unpopular. General manager Ted Thompson had drafted two quarterbacks, Brian Brohm out of Louisville in the second round, and Flynn out LSU in the seventh, to fight for the backup job.

"What Aaron went through was a circus," Flynn recalled. "There were all the questions from the media, people heckling him in the crowd. I don't think anybody else could have handled it any better than he did.

"I spent eight or nine hours a day with him, and you'd never have known what he was going through. There was never any sign of frustration."

Rodgers, who went on to win Super Bowl XLV and win a Most Valuable Player award, is a central figure to Flynn's story. When Flynn gracefully handled losing the starting job to rookie Russell Wilson last season in Seattle, where Flynn had signed as a free agent, it was a maturity learned from watching his close friend and mentor.

"He's handled himself well in some tough situations," Rodgers said in a phone interview from Green Bay. "He was a backup who knew he could play, got better, improved his skill set, learned how to prepare and did really well when he got the opportunity to play in a couple of games.

"It was a tough situation in Seattle, but he's got an opportunity in Oakland to do something great, and I'm really proud of him."

It hasn't taken Flynn long to establish himself as the clear No. 1 in training camp. The current backup, Terrelle Pryor, is still a work in progress. Meanwhile, fourth-round pick Tyler Wilson has struggled mightily.

But the doubters aren't going anywhere soon.

The Raiders' run of 10 consecutive non-winning seasons and Flynn's two-game body of work as an NFL starter led ESPN analyst Ron Jaworski to list Flynn 32nd among NFL quarterbacks.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

In his first start, Flynn completed 24 of 37 passes for 251 yards, three touchdowns and an interception in a 31-27 Packers loss to New England in 2010. Then, in the 2011 regular-season finale, he set franchise records by hitting 31 of 44 passes for 480 yards, six touchdowns and one interception in a 45-41 win over Detroit.

Still, Jaworski said film study reveals limitations in arm strength, and noted, "When I think of Flynn, I'm reminded of Bill Walsh and his strong belief that a good coach manipulates the play of his quarterback and his pass concepts and his play calling. That will have to be the case with Flynn in Oakland."

Toward that end, offensive coordinator Greg Olson has Flynn in an offense featuring a power running game and plenty of safe, ball-control throws.

While lacking the big arm of predecessor Carson Palmer, Flynn has shown ability to escape pressure and throw to a secondary receiver or scramble for first-down yardage.

Flynn's job will be to command the huddle, make the correct reads and spread the ball around. He began working with some of his receivers at Laney College shortly after being traded.

"He's got incredible physical and mental toughness," Rodgers said. "He really understands the game and how to use his ability to get the ball to his teammates in good positions. He's a gamer-type, and you've seen that when he's gotten a chance to play."

Flynn has surpassed expectations before. He didn't start at LSU until his senior year, after JaMarcus Russell declared for the draft as a junior. Flynn led the Tigers to the BCS national championship over Ohio State.

In Green Bay, Flynn beat out Brohm to be the backup, with coach Mike McCarthy lauding his instinct, disposition and leadership skills.

Pryor, who is getting a look in some specialty packages to take advantage of his elusiveness, has supporters among the Raiders fan base.

Flynn promises only to be himself, applying what he learned from Rodgers to his own situation. And he won't spend time worrying about the doubters.

"I'm not going to try and be somebody I'm not, and when I get an opportunity, I'll make the most of it," Flynn said.

Raiders' Matt Flynn: 'I believe I can be a franchise quarterback'

By Clark Judge

July 31, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- When I approached a scout at Oakland's practice, I asked him what he thought of the Raiders' new quarterback, Matt Flynn. He said he was smart and wouldn't take unnecessary risks, both of which he liked. But then he started to dissect Flynn's physical skills, and the conversation went south.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

He said he plays it too safe, won't throw outside the numbers, checks down too much and has only adequate arm strength.

"Is he," I interrupted, "anything more than a bridge to the next quarterback?"

"No," he answered.

Uh-oh.

If the Raiders are going to succeed, sooner or later they must settle on a quarterback. They've had 15 starters the past 10 seasons, with none lasting more than two consecutive years.

Flynn is the latest to give it a whirl, taking over for Carson Palmer, and most observers -- including our scout -- minimize his chances for success. Part of that is because they're not high on Flynn, and part is that they're not high on the Raiders -- believing they could be one of the worst teams in the NFL.

That doesn't exactly come as news to Flynn. He's heard it before, and he couldn't care less.

"I don't like to look at what's happened in the past," he said, "especially anything negative. I'm a very positive thinker. I like to think positive. I like to speak positively. And I believe that I can be a franchise quarterback.

"That's just me. It's inner confidence, believing what you can do. Other people may not think that, but there's no one that's going to tell me otherwise."

The Raiders support him, though let's be honest: They have no choice. Flynn's backup is Terrelle Pryor, and he's more a threat as a runner than a passer. Then there's fourth-round pick Tyler Wilson, and while he's raw there's a feeling he could emerge as the long-term hope.

So that leaves Flynn ... at least for now. There is no quarterback competition. Matt Flynn is the starter. But he's the starter because the Raiders couldn't work out a contractual settlement with Palmer, forcing them to look elsewhere. What they found was Flynn, and they have their fingers crossed.

"Carson is one of those guys who could throw the ball around," said GM Reggie McKenzie, "but in this offense, I think Matt Flynn will function probably a little better with what we're trying to do - as far as moving.

"Carson is the prototype pocket passer who can see down the field. Flynn is a little more active with his feet, a guy who hasn't proven yet to be the thrower [Palmer is]. But we're going to see what he can do."

What the quarterbacks here have done isn't much. There are four in camp with three combined NFL starts -- two by Flynn. That's one reason the Raiders are picked for last again in the AFC West. Another is that when you look down the roster, there aren't a lot of familiar names ... or, let's say, names you can trust.

Safety Charles Woodson is the exception. He's a seven-time All-Pro and former Defensive Player of the Year who returned after seven seasons in Green Bay where, it just so happens, he once was teamed with Matt Flynn. He knows what Flynn can do because he was there when Flynn carved up New England (a loss) and Detroit (a win), so he won't undersell the guy.

But when I asked about Flynn as a "franchise quarterback," Woodson tiptoed around the subject.

"I'm not going to take anything away from his confidence," he said. "That's what he's supposed to have. But what I know about Matt Flynn is that he's a poised quarterback. He's not going to get too rattled. That's the main thing you have to have as a quarterback, and he does.

"When you're 'the guy,' there's a different pressure. You have to have someone with strong nerves, and I believe he has that. He'll have some ups and downs this season, but I believe he'll be a guy who will be able to pull through it. ... and it will only make him better."

The question, of course, is: Will Matt Flynn make the Raiders better? They're thin at wide receiver. Their best tight end is a converted wide receiver. Running back Darren McFadden is special, but he's an injury waiting to happen. Their offensive line is little more than OK. And they're working on their third offensive coordinator in three years.

I think you get the picture: It's not an ideal situation for a young quarterback trying to lock down a future.

"Your general manager, Reggie McKenzie, said he likes being the underdog," I said. "How about you?"

"Yeah, absolutely," Flynn said. "People have doubted me on the football field my entire life. So I have plenty of chips on my shoulder. I look around at this team, and my feeling is you don't want to put too many chips on this team's shoulders ... because we have a lot of talent."

I don't know about that. What I do know is that Flynn and the Raiders believe they can and will surprise skeptics, with coach Dennis Allen vowing to "get this thing turned around." But this is a franchise that hasn't had a winning season since 2002 and now stakes its hopes on a quarterback with two career starts.

It's a gamble. But it's the Raiders.

"We have confidence in Matt Flynn," Allen said. "He understands how to play the game. He won a championship when he was in college. He's been a part of a championship team with the Green Bay Packers. The guy's won everywhere he's been.

"He's always had to come up and meet the challenge, and nobody's ever given him a chance. The chips have always been stacked against him, but somehow, some way he continues to beat the odds."

Somehow, some way, he'll have to do it again. Only this time, the odds against him just went up.

"When I look around this team," Flynn said, "and see these guys work on the field, in the classroom, in the weight room, it gets me excited. Because there are a lot of guys on this team that probably most people have never heard of before. But they will.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"This is a great opportunity, and I have to make the most of it. I've got to keep playing better -- play better every day -- and be 'that guy.' Because if I'm not the best quarterback on this team I won't be 'that guy' anymore."

LOS ANGELES TIMES

Raiders ready to give Matt Flynn his 'rare' moment

By Sam Farmer

July 26, 2013

NAPA, Calif., — For Matt Flynn, last season was a false start.

Flynn, who had been backup to Green Bay quarterback Aaron Rodgers, signed with Seattle during the 2012 off-season and was on track to start for the Seahawks. But Seattle selected Wisconsin's Russell Wilson in the third round of last year's draft, and the rookie phenom wound up claiming the starting job, making Flynn expendable.

Fast-forward a year, and Flynn again has a chance to be an NFL starter, now with the rebuilding Oakland Raiders. They acquired him in April for a couple of late-round draft picks.

"I've been given a second opportunity to come in and earn a starting job," Flynn said Friday after the first practice of Raiders training camp. "It's pretty rare, and I know that. I'm going to do everything in my power to take advantage of this, to have no regrets. Make it happen and not take it for granted."

Flynn, 28, who has started two games in five seasons as a pro, sat on a bench next to the team's outdoor weight area, and talked about his circuitous path to this point — from backing up future Raiders bust JaMarcus Russell at Louisiana State, to learning at the elbow of Rodgers in Green Bay, to watching Wilson rocket to stardom in Seattle.

By all appearances, the Raiders' starting job is Flynn's to lose, and his $6.5-million salary is guaranteed. The other quarterbacks on the roster are Terrelle Pryor, fourth-round pick Tyler Wilson — a promising rookie from Arkansas — and rookie free agent Matt McGloin. Flynn is getting most of the reps with the first-string offense, as opposed to last summer when he was anything from first- to third-string depending on the day.

"I can look back to the seventh grade, and I don't think I've had one year where I've had anything given to me, or a time when someone's said, 'Hey, the job's yours. Take it,'" Flynn said. "I've had to fight every year. My goal is to solidify myself somehow so I can take ownership, take leadership of the team, make the offense my own."

Most people don't expect much from the Raiders this season. They were 4-12 in 2012, and a staggering $49 million of their salary-cap space is devoted to players no longer on the roster. Neither of their top two draft picks — cornerback D.J. Hayden or tackle Menelik Watson — is healthy enough to practice at full speed.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The Raiders were ranked eighth in passing last season (and 28th in rushing) but that was with Carson Palmer at quarterback, and he's now with the Arizona Cardinals.

Coach Dennis Allen said the Raiders need to develop some consistency in their passing game, but added that Flynn "did some nice things, made some nice reads, made a couple really good throws today."

When Flynn was in Seattle, there was a stark contrast between his laid-back style and the effusive energy of Wilson, whose personality is closer to that of Coach Pete Carroll.

"I had to find a medium ground last year because I knew that Pete was high energy, all over the place in practice, and I knew he probably wanted that out of his quarterbacks a little bit," Flynn said. "But I still didn't want to be someone I wasn't."

"I think Russell and I had two different personalities. But I don't think any of that played a part in the decision. The bottom line was, Russell took hold of his opportunity and made the most of it."

Flynn's easygoing attitude is sometimes mistaken for apathy, he said, and not everyone responds well to that. Fans at LSU said it looked as if he didn't care, even when he was, say, lining up to go for it on fourth down against Florida in the fourth quarter. He said he simply shows his competitiveness in a different way.

"I feel like if the guys can look at me in the huddle and see a calm and collected face, that they're going to relax a little bit," he said.

"The way I look at it, leadership and being that guy is, don't be someone you're not. Don't be a hoorah guy jumping around and clapping your hands if you're not that guy. Makes you look desperate. Makes you look silly. That's not me."

When he was in Green Bay, Flynn took full advantage of his two starts. In the first, a Sunday night game at New England in 2010, he filled in for an injured Rodgers and threw for 251 yards and three touchdowns in a 31-27 loss. That got some attention.

Flynn notched his second start the next season, when the Packers had already clinched the top seeding in the NFC and a first-round bye in the playoffs. Flynn started the finale against Detroit, on a freezing day at Lambeau Field, and threw a team-record six touchdowns in a 45-41 shootout victory.

Just a week earlier, Rodgers had the first five-touchdown game of his career in a 35-21 victory over Chicago. He didn't get to bask in that glory too long, because his backup — and good friend — was about to eclipse him, if only for a game.

"When I threw five," Flynn recalled, "I come over to the sideline and sit down, and Aaron looks at me through the corner of his eye and shakes his head like, 'You little turd.' I was just laughing."

"The Lions go down the field and score again, and Aaron comes up to me, puts his arm around me and said, 'If you get a chance for six, you've got to take it.' I was like, that's cool."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The locker-room environment in Green Bay was a good one, Flynn said, with everyone giving everyone else a hard time. That was the case during his six-touchdown game too.

"The first half Aaron was on the microphone calling plays," Flynn said. "He was ripping on me. I'm on the field and he's ripping on me out there. He's just like, 'You look stupid out there,' or, 'Your shoe's untied.' There wasn't enough time to be doing that, but that's Aaron."

As the clock continues to tick on Flynn's career, the stakes are higher and the joking is over.

So far, Flynn is no flop as starting QB

By Josh Dubow

July 31, 2013

NAPA – Matt Flynn is solidifying his role as starting quarterback for the Raiders one year after losing that same job in training camp with the Seattle Seahawks.

Flynn entered camp with the inside track over Terrelle Pryor and rookie Tyler Wilson to replace Carson Palmer in Oakland and has done nothing in the first week to change that equation.

It's a far cry to what happened to Flynn a year ago in Seattle, where he went from coveted offseason free-agent acquisition with a $26 million contract to backing up a third-round pick in a matter of weeks at training camp.

With Russell Wilson set as starter in Seattle, Flynn was traded to the Raiders in the offseason and has done his best to hold onto this opportunity to start in the NFL.

"I took away a lot of things from Seattle last year," Flynn said Tuesday. "But the thing that I took away the most was that I want this even more now, even more this year."

"I'm blessed to have another opportunity at this, and I'll try to take advantage of it and do as much as I can to not let it get away from me."

Flynn has been the most impressive of the three quarterbacks so far in training camp with the most accurate arm, a good grasp of the offense and strong leadership on the field.

"I'm going in there and trying to be the best quarterback out here, trying to be the best quarterback for this team and help this team win as best I can," Flynn said. "I'm coming in here every day with my hard hat on, trying to prepare."

Flynn, a backup in college at LSU to former Raiders quarterback JaMarcus Russell, has started just two games in five seasons as a pro. But it's those brief appearances that are so intriguing.

As Aaron Rodgers' understudy in Green Bay, he threw for 251 yards and three touchdowns in a loss at New England late in the 2010 season. He then started the regular-season finale the next season, going 31 for 44 for 480 yards and six touchdown passes in a 45-41 win over Detroit.

That led to the contract from the Seahawks. But Flynn struggled in the second exhibition game last summer and missed the third with an elbow injury. By that point, Wilson passed him on the depth chart and Flynn was relegated to another year as a backup.

"To play quarterback in the NFL, to me, you have to be two things: You have to be smart and you have to be accurate," Flynn said. "Things on the field are going to come and you have to be able to do that as well, and I feel very confident in my ability to do that, but overall you have to be smart and accurate."

Flynn got another chance to prove that when the Raiders dealt a 2014 fifth-round pick and a conditional pick in 2015 to Seattle.

While coach Dennis Allen has stressed an open competition with Pryor and another rookie named Wilson – Tyler – nothing that has been seen so far in the offseason or camp indicates that Flynn won't be the starter when the season opens in Indianapolis.

"It's kind of playing out about like I expected. Matt Flynn has been pretty consistent," Allen said. "Those guys are doing exactly what we want them to do, keep competing and keep playing," he said. "Don't worry about the depth chart, just keep getting better."

Matt Flynn off to impressive start

"I'm going in there and trying to be the best quarterback out here, trying to be the best quarterback for this team and help this team win as best I can," Flynn said. "I'm coming in here every day with my hard hat on, trying to prepare."

Flynn, a backup in college at LSU to former Raiders quarterback JaMarcus Russell, has started just two games in five seasons as a pro. But it's those brief appearances that are so intriguing.

He threw for 251 yards and three touchdowns in a loss at New England in place of an injured Aaron Rodgers late in the 2010 season. He then started the regular-season finale the following season, going 31 for 44 for 480 yards and six touchdown passes in a 45-41 win over Detroit.

That led to the $26 million, three-year contract from the Seahawks. But Flynn struggled in the second exhibition game last summer and missed the third with an elbow injury. By that point Wilson passed him on the depth chart and Flynn was relegated to another year as a backup.

Despite winning a national championship at LSU and the impressive performances in his few chances in the NFL, Flynn still faces many doubters who question whether he has a strong enough arm to succeed in the pro game.

"To play quarterback in the NFL, to me, you have to be two things: You have to be smart and you have to be accurate," he said. "Things on the field are going to come and you have to be able to do that as well, and I feel very confident in my ability to do that, but overall you have to be smart and accurate."

Flynn got another chance to prove that when the Raiders dealt a 2014 fifth-round pick and a conditional pick in 2015 to Seattle.

While coach Dennis Allen has stressed an open competition at quarterback with Pryor and another rookie named Wilson -- Tyler -- nothing that has been seen so far in the offseason or camp indicates that Flynn won't be the starter when the season opens Sept. 8 in Indianapolis.

Flynn has gotten the vast majority of the time with the first-team offense so far and is earning the trust of his teammates.

"It's kind of playing out about like I expected. Matt Flynn has been pretty consistent," Allen said. "Those guys are doing exactly what we want them to do, keep competing and keep playing. Don't worry about the depth chart, just keep getting better."

Part of what has solidified Flynn's hold on the job is that neither Pryor nor Tyler Wilson has seized it the way Russell Wilson did a year ago.

Pryor, who provided a spark when he started the season finale last year, is still far too inconsistent throwing the ball but can be a dual threat as a scrambler or runner. Pryor has worked hard on improving his mechanics, spending the offseason working with former major league pitcher Tom House, who has also coached Tom Brady and Drew Brees.

"I found out that I was leaving my chest open a lot so it was making me late," Pryor said. "So when I was coming down to throw with my left arm, my right arm was saying it's time to go, the timing wasn't right. He kind of helped me with that. It's definitely helping shoot the ball a lot more and better. My thing looking in the mirror last year was I need to be more accurate."

Tyler Wilson is an intriguing prospect who was drafted in the fourth round out of Arkansas. But he is still adjusting to the NFL game as evidenced by one practice early in camp when he threw three interceptions in a stretch of four plays.

DJ HAYDEN

CSN BAY AREA

Hayden puts heart injury in past

By Paul Gutierrez

May 11, 2013

ALAMEDA -- The last time D.J. Hayden stepped on a football field? He almost died. A nondescript practice collision at Houston on Nov. 6 ruptured the inferior vena cava, a large vein that pumps blood from the lower part of the body into the heart and Hayden nearly bled out internally.

So forgive Hayden if he got a little reflective this weekend as he took part in his first NFL camp with the Raiders holding their three-day rookie camp at their facility.

"It felt like old times," Hayden said Saturday. "I did my usual routine. I came here, took a knee, said a little prayer then just went out there. It wasn't like it took me extra time to get ready. I just went out there and did what I did."

Drafted No. 12 overall by the Raiders, Hayden has been medically cleared to participate in everything the Raiders will do in camp. Including, it turns out, what Oakland drafted him to do -- break up passes.

Yes, it's early. It's a ridiculously small sample size after two non-contact practices to gauge what Hayden can and cannot do on an NFL field. But the fact that he is here at all is a small victory. To be the game-changing cover cornerback in the mold of such Raiders greats as Willie Brown, Lester Hayes, Mike Haynes, Charles Woodson and Nnamdi Asomugha is the eventual goal.

Big talk? Yes. But there's a reason general manager Reggie McKenzie and coach Dennis Allen would have taken him at No. 3 overall had they not found a suitable trade partner to move down.

So it was heartening, so to speak, to see Hayden flash across the field to break up a pass from Tyler Wilson to an unidentified tryout player on Saturday, Hayden seemingly beaten before stretching out to bat away the ball in stride.

It was as pretty as it was simple.

"It helps put me at ease," he said of the play. "As long as I keep making production, I feel like I can get better. Just make plays. When I made the little play I was happy. I should have caught it but there's always room for improvement.

"Corner's basically the same thing everywhere. The coverages aren't that hard. I think I'm picking it up pretty good. I'm just trying to soak in everything coach (Clayton) Lopez and coach (Johnnie) Lynn are trying to teach me. I'm just trying to soak it all in like a sponge."

Even as he is nursing a hamstring he strained during his Pro Day.

"So he's still not quite 100 percent from there but he's been out there, working through it," Allen said. "He made a nice play on the ball today. So I'm pleased with where D.J.'s at and, again, it's going to be a learning process.

"It's putting one foot in front of the other and I think when it comes time to play games this September, I think he'll be ready to roll."

Before then, though, will come tons of information to process. And intricacies to learn.

"I would just say getting used to not putting your hands on people down the field because in the NFL you have the 5-yard rule, so, just adjusting to that," Hayden said. "In college I used to kind of push people a little bit so I have to adjust to that."

He was not laughing.

He did smile, though, when I asked him if Brown, the Hall of Famer, had given him any pearls yet, though.

Hayden moved his hands in a quick-burst chopping, north-south motion.

"Yeah," Hayden said, "he told me to move my hands out of my break."

So, what kind corner does he profess himself to be -- off the ball or press?

"Probably a mixture of both," he said. "It all depends on the down and distance and the situation. Yeah, when I get up there I'm going to have to be more physical and re-route them, and then again when I'm at '7,' I've got to play off and I can't touch them. I've got to mirror them."

Talks of his injury, though, have been nonexistent thus far.

"I don't even think about it," he said. "The only time I think about is when somebody asks me. But when I'm on the field I don't think about that. I think about the play and I think about the coverage that I'm in. I put it past me."

If at least, for one weekend.

LAMARR HOUSTON

Lamarr Houston in spotlight for Oakland

By Bill Williamson

July 30, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- One of the players the Oakland Raiders will count on in this year of transition is defensive end Lamarr Houston.

Houston, a second-round draft pick in 2010, is moving away from being a young player to one of the most vital on the defense.

The versatile Houston will play right defensive end. He is expected to be the anchor of the defensive line. The team moved away from veterans Tommy Kelly and Richard Seymour. Houston will be the leader of the group.

Houston is also expected to help with the team's need for a pass-rush spark. Oakland was weak in that area last season and it did not add a reliable pass-rusher to the roster.

Houston is taking all of his responsibilities in stride. He said he understands a lot more will be expected from him, but he is not putting too much pressure on himself.

"It's a new era on the defensive front," Houston said. "But it's just not me. The line as a unit will work to help find a pass rush. It's a group thing."

Houston said the key for him will be to continue to work on his technique because it is different on the right side.

"It's an ongoing process," Houston said. "But technique is the key for me."

JASON HUNTER

INSIDEBAYAREA.COM

Oakland Raiders' Jason Hunter likes living on the edge

By Jerry McDonald

Aug 1, 2013

NAPA -- Living life on the edge as a defensive end isn't the most glamorous job in the NFL, but it suits Jason Hunter just fine.

The Raiders' starting left defensive end loves "setting the edge," a part of the game that doesn't carry with it the kind of fame and glory that comes from rushing the passer.

"Basically setting an edge is getting an extension on that tackle and knocking him back, that way it stops the line of scrimmage so the (running) back can't just get to the edge, and it forces him back inside to where the help is," Hunter said.

Setting edges has been an issue for a Raiders defense that has been run-challenged for the better part of the past decade. Right tackle Khalif Barnes, who has worked against Hunter throughout the offseason and training camp, thinks Hunter is more stout than his 6-foot-4, 270-pound build would suggest.

Offensive tackles blocking Hunter typically outweigh him by at least 30 pounds.

"He's thick, powerful, and he may look smaller, but he's very strong and has good hands," Barnes said.

In most cases, if Hunter has done his job, he hasn't made the tackle himself. Rather, he's set up an interior lineman or linebacker to make the hit.

"He's a guy who just tries to do his part," Barnes said. "If you try and do your part and then half of somebody else's, that takes away what you do by half. Do your part. It's a great mindset and the whole team needs to be like that."

Hunter's willingness to set the edge, as well as his work ethic and demeanor, are what led him back to general manager Reggie McKenzie and coach Dennis Allen.

McKenzie was a personnel executive in Green Bay when Hunter played with the Packers as an undrafted free agent out of Appalachian State from 2006 through 2008. When Allen was defensive coordinator in Denver in 2011, Hunter was a reserve defensive end, having played the season before in a 3-4 defense as an outside linebacker.

On a Raiders defensive line that too often has failed in terms of maintaining gaps and position despite having well-regarded talent, Hunter brings a reputation of carrying out his assignments with enthusiasm.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"Jason loves football, and he enjoys competing," Allen said. "He likes the physical aspect of the game where you're not begging Jason to come out here and want to play. You're not begging Jason to get the pads on."

Hunter was particularly excited to get the pads on this season after spending the 2012 season on injured reserve because of a torn triceps. It happened at a time when Hunter had ascended to a starting position under Jack Del Rio, who replaced Allen as defensive coordinator.

The timing could not have been worse.

"It really hurt me, man," Hunter said. "I thought I was having a real good training camp. It was hard, sitting at home, watching on TV and seeing all my peers from around the league playing games. It made me more focused to take care of my body, do the right things."

Newcomer Jennings takes sleep seriously

By Josh Dubow

August 14, 2013

NAPA – Rashad Jennings takes every precaution he can to keep his body in top shape necessary for an NFL running back.

He eats a gluten-free diet and sticks to organic foods. He stretches every night and has a regular routine of pilates, acupuncture, yoga and massage.

And when the long days at Oakland's training camp are over, instead of settling into a soft bed, the first-year Raider climbs into a hyperbaric oxygen chamber to sleep.

Jennings bought the oxygen chamber as a rookie instead of splurging for a car, thinking it would help keep him fresh and prolong his career.

He admits it "freaks" out some people at first, and the loud noise forced him into a single room in what he calls the "dungeon" of the team hotel at camp.

But Jennings is working on getting some converts, saying at least six teammates are waiting to try out the chamber next week.

"It's not an end-all be-all," Jennings said. "It's not like this is the biggest healer in the world type of thing, but it does heal you on a certain level. It speeds up the process. I love to practice, and I love to stay on the field. It keeps you healthy. Playing this game is important to me. The way I eat and take care of my body is pretty important."

The Raiders are counting on a healthy Jennings as the backup to Darren McFadden, who has never made it through any of his five NFL seasons without an injury.

Playing the role of a backup to a big-play back is something Jennings has plenty of experience doing. He served in that role behind Maurice Jones-Drew in Jacksonville to start his career.

"I tell people all the time there aren't any backups in this league," Jennings said. "The backups are at home. You got to prepare as the starter."

"It's too late to prepare when the opportunity presents itself. I'm a piece of a puzzle. When I'm called upon, I have to make sure I'm making my statement."

Jennings did a good job of that in the preseason opener Friday against Dallas, carrying nine times for 39 yards.

He broke loose for a 16-yard run on a read-option play with quarterback Terrelle Pryor and showed the ability to grind for tough yards, something the Raiders are looking for in McFadden's backup.

Jennings is working his way back from two disappointing seasons in Jacksonville.

After averaging more than five yards a carry in each of his first two seasons, Jennings missed the 2011 season because of a knee injury.

He then struggled mightily last season, averaging 2.8 yards per carry and becoming the 10th back with at least 100 carries to average fewer than three yards since 2000.

"It was a lot of things," Jennings said. "Looking at film, I could've done better, but it's all in the past whatever happened. It's a fresh start as a Raider, and that's what I'm out here to capitalize on."

Jennings entered camp in a competition with sixth-round pick Latavius Murray to be McFadden's backup and seems in position to get that job because of his experience and reliability.

Murray also showed some good signs in the preseason opener, carrying eight times for 29 yards. But he has missed time throughout camp with injuries, to coach Dennis Allen's dismay.

"Being available and being accountable are two things that we have to make sure we're able to be," Allen said.

Rashad Jennings offers Raiders injury protection

By Scott Bair

August 2, 2013

NAPA – Darren McFadden has been hurt in each of his five NFL seasons. That's why backup running backs are so vital to the Raiders offense.

Rashad Jennings was brought in to fill that role, and he certainly looks the part. The 6-foot-1, 231-pound veteran has a powerful rushing style that fits a revamped, Raiders blocking scheme based on gap creation and control.

Jennings has impressed in the early going and will get plenty of reps this preseason, time he'll use to carve out a larger role.

"Rashad's a big back, we want Rashad to play like a big back," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "Going into the preseason, we'll see if he can be that big physical presence that we expect him to be."

Positive results might earn him the title of short-yardage back, which will decrease punishment taken by McFadden over the course of the season. Jennings doesn't want to pigeonhole himself just yet.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Jennings hopes the running game is so effective that McFadden can't take all the carries given out. That happened at times in recent seasons, when the Raiders ran extremely well and Michael Bush emerged as a back complementary of McFadden's skill set.

"You act like the starter and you prepare as one," Jennings said. "In the NFL, there aren't any backups. The backups are the guys at home watching TV, because everyone on an NFL roster contributes."

Jennings will have his moments. How he'll fare as a feature back – only if McFadden gets hurt – remains in question.

He had that chance last season in Jacksonville, after Maurice Jones-Drew was lost for an extended period, and didn't capitalize. He averaged a paltry 2.8 yards per carry last season, and fared worse in games with higher carry counts.

Jennings found flaws in that season he believes are corrected for good.

"I put failure on my shoulders and give success to the team," Jennings said. "After looking at film of last season, there were a lot of things I could've done better. It's all in the past now. I'm a Raider this season and that's what I'm out here to capitalize on."

Sixth-round pick Latavius Murray has been out four practices with injuries, leaving Jennings to take reps behind McFadden. The fifth-year veteran used them to outshine the competition and prove he fits the offensive scheme.

"We're going to play downhill, physical football. I like that," Jennings said. "That's the kind I like to play and that's the kind of backfield that I fit. I'm glad to be a part of this group and a part of Raider Nation. I see real opportunity to run the football well here."

Oakland Raiders' Rashad Jennings has a healthy attitude

By Steve Corkran

Aug 3, 2013

NAPA -- When Rashad Jennings entered the league, he did what most rookies do when they get their first chunk of money. He indulged in a big-ticket purchase.

Instead of a house for his mother or a fancy car for himself, though, Jennings bought a hyperbaric chamber as a means of helping his body recover quicker and better from the rigors of football.

"I bought one in my rookie year instead of buying a car because I knew this was going to prolong my career," Jennings said.

Sure enough, the day Jennings arrived here for his first training camp with the Raiders, Jennings unloaded the hyperbaric chamber from his car and hauled it up to his hotel room.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The device allows Jennings to sleep in an oxygen-rich environment, which promotes healing of his body. He also is on a gluten-free diet, eats organic foods, stretches every night and delves in yoga, Pilates, acupuncture, whatever has the ability to give him an edge.

The 4-foot-by-9-foot sleeping chamber also tends to make a ton of noise. Hence, Jennings is going solo this year, whereas his teammates share a room with one other player.

In Jennings, the Raiders are confident that they found a back that can make some noise as a replacement for departed veteran Mike Goodson, who served as Darren McFadden's primary backup last season.

The jury is out, for Jennings averaged only 2.8 yards per carry for the Jacksonville Jaguars last season in becoming one of 10 backs since 2000 to average fewer than 3 yards per carry with at least 100 rushes.

Goodson averaged 6.3 last season, though on only 35 carries. He bolted for the New York Jets in free agency. Soon thereafter, the Raiders pounced on Jennings.

Jennings, 6-foot-1 and 231 pounds, views himself as a lead back, though he has spent his entire NFL career backing up Maurice Jones-Drew. He is competing for the backup spot in Oakland against the likes of Jeremy Stewart and rookie Latavius Murray.

"I see myself just as a complete back, day-in, day-out, getting better," Jennings said. "Never making the same mistakes twice. I'll let the geniuses figure out where to put me on the field."

In a recent practice, Jennings was on the field as a short-yardage back. He showed little difficulty in converting third-and-1 plays during the drill.

"He's done some good things for us," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "One of the challenges you have for Rashad is ... Rashad's a big back, we want Rashad to play like a big back. That will be something we're going to look at as we go into the preseason is him being that big physical presence that we expect him to be."

So far, Jennings is looking more like the back that averaged 5.2 yards and 5.5 his first two seasons, respectively.

In a strange way, Jennings and the Raiders are alike in that they can't wait to put last year behind them and recapture past glory.

"These fans don't deserve that," Jennings said of the team's negative perception. "This organization doesn't deserve it. The city doesn't deserve it. Nobody on this team thinks that's going to happen this year, and we're going out every single day, erasing what happened from yesterday and preparing and focusing on turning things around."

Taiwan Jones having fun, making plays at corner back

By Vic Tafur

August 11, 2013

Taiwan Jones is trying to pull off something as cool and rare as his name – switching from running back to cornerback, in the NFL.

Putting the ball on the ground will no longer be seen as a liability.

Jones has made some plays at the Raiders' training camp and in Friday's preseason opener, and is having fun making the coaches see him a whole new light.

"I was just excited to still be on the roster," said Jones, who had fumbling issues at practice last season and couldn't get on the field even when starter Darren McFadden and backup Mike Goodson were injured.

"I was kind of upset I couldn't show everybody what kind of running back I could be but I think it's a good thing as far as my career, said Jones, who finishes with four career carries for 36 yards. "It's going pretty good, and I am having fun."

The 2011 fourth-round pick has the size (6-foot, 194 pounds) and speed (4.33 40-yard dash) to pull this off.

"He's got that physical ability to play the game," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "There are still a lot of things that we have to get cleaned up. Just understating how to play the cornerback position from alignments, assignments and stuff like that.

"He's pretty solid on his assignments, but they're still just some details to the position that we have to continue to work with him on."

Allen said backup cornerback Chimdi Chekwa has also improved at what is a very crowded position. Veterans Tracy Porter and Mike Jenkins are penciled in as the starters, with first-round pick D.J. Hayden still not being cleared for contact after abdomen surgery. And Joselio Hanson and Phillip Adams are back from last season.

But Jones has a special gift that those guys don't have.

"Taiwan is exceptional on special teams," Allen said. "You watch the first kickoff of the game (Friday), and he goes down there and he's on the 10-yard line when the returner is just starting to return the ball, so that's something that you can't discount."

Jones, who missed Sunday's practice with a minor injury, showed his good pursuit skills on special teams last season, and it's not just natural instincts.

The Antioch native was given a scholarship to Eastern Washington to play cornerback, and didn't make the switch to running back until his sophomore season. Jones rushed for 1,742 yards to lead the Eagles to the NCAA FCS national championship his junior year, and then turned pro.

"A lot of my college coaches, they thought once I made it to the NFL that I would be converted to a corner," Jones said. "So, that's kind of my mindset and what I thought also. So, when I got drafted as running back, it came to me somewhat as a surprise."

He has had a handful of interceptions at camp, as he reacts well and has exceptional closing speed. The rest is getting used to what receivers are trying to do, and that comes from watching film and getting reps in practice.

"I am learning something new every day," Jones said. "I still have to work on my leverage and getting my eyes in the right places." Off the field, Jones has always looked at things from a positive perspective, even during a tough 2012 season.

"When you make your work fun, you can do a lot of great things," he said.

Besides Jones, linebackers Sio Moore and Keenan Clayton, running back Latavius Murray and WR Juron Criner also sat out Sunday with injuries from Friday's game.

"I don't expect those guys to miss a lot of time," Allen said.

Taiwan Jones working through tough position switch

By Scott Bair

August 5, 2013

NAPA – Taiwan Jones made an excellent play on a receiver he wasn't even covering. The Raiders cornerback saw Terrelle Pryor's pass directed away from his path, so he stopped in an instant, dove back and rendered the ball incomplete. It was a veteran move, a cagy breakup expected of a lifelong corner. Not bad for a novice.

Jones has been playing cornerback just a few months now, after the Raiders suggested he convert from running back. Jones was stuck down on the depth chart without hope of promotion, so head coach Dennis Allen asked him to man a position he hadn't played since high school.

Jones was a quality corner back in his youth, and never considered a switch at the professional level. In order to remain a Raider, Jones was willing to try anything.

"I'm still just happy to be on the roster," Jones said. "Whatever I can do to help the team and if I can help the team on defense then I'm willing to do it. I was kind of upset that I couldn't show everybody what kind of running back I could be, but I think it's a good thing as far as my career."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

It's incredibly difficult to learn a position while fighting for a roster spot. He's typically working with the third team, with players likely cut by September. Jones is an excellent special teams player, which could help him carve a niche while he develops as a corner.

"I will say this. It's a tough transition," coach Dennis Allen said. "He's been playing running back, and then all of a sudden we put him on the other side of the ball and start working him at corner, but I think he's doing a nice job. He is still behind, though.

"But the other thing I think you have to understand about Taiwan is, [that] Taiwan is probably one of the better special teams players in the league. I think that's always going to come down and be a factor when we start looking at the roster. I think special teams will be a big factor in that for him."

Allen sees potential in this position switch.

While technical aspects are being learned each day, Jones has the quick reaction time required to be a quality defensive back. His acrobatic pass breakup is proof of that.

"Playing corner feels really natural," Jones said. "But there are things working through. I do have to work on using my leverage to my advantage and getting my eyes in the right places. I need to keep progressing, but I feel like I'm getting there."

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE

Taiwan Jones proving cornerback was his natural position all along

By Levi Damien

August 5, 2013

One of the more difficult things to do for any player is to make a position change at the NFL level; especially when switching sides of the ball. Most players are drafted at a particular position and sink or swim at that same position and that's it.

Taiwan Jones was drafted by the Raiders to play running back, was informed that his best chance of making this Raiders team would be with a switch to cornerback. And thus he has been given the rare chance to prove he can do what few others have done. He's not squandering the opportunity.

"I was just excited to still be on a roster," said Jones. "Whatever I can do to help the team. If I can help the team on defense then I'm willing to do it. I was kind of upset I couldn't show everybody what kind of running back I could be but I think it's a good thing as far as my career."

Jones has been written off by most people. His seemingly peculiar position change appears from the outside like writing on the wall for the end of his career with the Raiders. But this is no ordinary position change. This one could actually be a switch to a position Jones was meant to play in the first place.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"A lot of my college coaches, they thought once I made it to the NFL that I would be converted to a corner," said Jones. "So, that's kind of my mindset and what I thought also. So, when I got drafted as a running back, it came to me somewhat as a surprise."

The reason he and his college coaches saw him as a corner is because he played both corner and running back in high school. His speed (4.33 40-yard dash) and physique (6-0, 194 pounds) are also more in line with that of a cornerback as well.

Even so, the third year back is coming off taking a two-year detour as a running back and has had to re-learn and recall his cornerback skills which he hadn't put into full use for quite some time. That transition back from offense to defense at the highest level is a long and difficult one.

Watching Jones in OTA's and minicamp and even the first few days of training camp, he was an afterthought. He wasn't making plays and the only time you saw him is when his man was catching the ball. Then suddenly, in the past few days, he began showing up on the radar. As of Sunday, his penchant for finding the ball and tracking receivers is officially no longer unnoticed.

"On defense it's all about reacting and that's one thing I'm pretty good at," said Jones. "It's coming pretty easy. I still got a lot of work to do though. . . Every day I'm learning something new. Some stuff I knew before and it's like 'Oh, ok now I get it, now I see what you're talking about'. Actually being out there getting the reps and being out there with the guys, I'm learning something every day."

For proof that Jones speaks the truth, you need only watch him in practice. Four days ago in practice, he had a terrible session in which he gave up three long passes including two in a row to Greg Jenkins for touchdowns.

The very next day he turned things around. He has had two interceptions in two days of practice working with the third team and today, with starters Tracy Porter and Mike Jenkins sitting out with injury, he was given an opportunity to work with the second team and impressed even still. He had a very nice pass defended in which he left his man on the outside to dive full extension in front of a Terrelle Pryor pass inside and knocked it down.

What it adds up to is some fresh competition at cornerback from an unlikely place. There is now some fierce competition for the final spot or two in the cornerback roster. Taiwan is earning the right to be viewed as a legitimate contender for that spot. And when you consider his dual threat as a special teams gunner, he might just be ahead of the pack for that spot. Didn't think you'd be hearing that at any point this camp, did ya?

After writing him off, you should probably go ahead and pencil him back in.

There can be only one

By Chris Kluwe

August 9, 2013

NAPA, Calif. — In the NFL, we all begin as rookies. We come in to a team with no idea what to expect, no idea who anyone really is, blind and unsure. The pressure is immense. Ninety men are on that team, and ultimately there's only room for 53. You are fighting for your livelihood, daily, against as many as five other people, depending on position.

That doesn't mean you can't be a human being.

I entered the league in 2005, as an undrafted free agent for the Seattle Seahawks. In minicamps, I was one of three punters. One was the incumbent from 2004 who'd had a shaky year, Donnie Jones. One was a seasoned veteran looking to prolong his career, Leo Araguz. I was the unproven kid with a big leg. We had what I would call an uneasy truce. We didn't try to actively sabotage each other, but we didn't try to help each other out, either. Conversations were slightly stilted, focusing mainly on banal topics like the weather, or what college we had attended. Punt drills were silent affairs of intense effort, the focus solely on ourselves.

Two weeks into minicamp, Donnie was cut. He tweaked his knee golfing, the team decided to drop him then and there, and suddenly it was me and Leo.

The pressure became even more intense. Our special teams coach, Bob Casullo, was loud, brash—a yeller. Mis-hit a punt and you'd hear about it, generally at around 90 decibels. Each day I found myself focusing on the same litany. Don't mess up. Outkick the other guy. Don't mess up. Every time I didn't hit a punt perfectly, I wondered if it would be my last day in Seattle. Will they cut me like they did the incumbent? Am I good enough to play in this league? Will I even make it to preseason? It was a month of fighting down the doubts, convincing myself I belonged, each and every day.

I made it to training camp, and, impossibly, the pressure increased. When you put on full pads, when you do full team sessions, it hits you: This is for real. Every rep counts, and you'll never get as many as you want. Hit a bad ball, and there's no taking it back. You can't ask for one more to try and end on a good note; there's simply not enough time. What you do in that limited practice segment defines who you are, and some days that definition is hard to face.

Leo and I continued our consensual silence. He would punt with the first team, I'd punt with the second, and again it would be us alone with our thoughts. In the NFL there's only space for one punter on a roster. We both knew one of us wasn't making it to the regular season. That knowledge formed the very bedrock of our interactions. How do you get to know someone you're trying to replace? Is it even possible? Obviously you're not going to help each other, right?

I made it to the final day of cuts, 75 down to 53. My roommate, a fullback named Jesse Lumsden, was cut a week earlier. Strained hip-flexor. He tried to play through it, to show the team he was tough. All it got him was no injury settlement. If you make it to the final cutdown, the day after the fourth preseason game is when they let you know your future. You're on the team, or you're looking for work. Veterans call the player personnel guy the Grim Reaper, and he carries a scythe labeled, "Coach wants to see you, and bring your playbook."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

I got a call from the Grim Reaper around 10 a.m.

He told me I had punted well during the preseason, but that they were going with the veteran guy. They thought he would be more consistent. They wanted me to stick around, though. They wanted to put me on the eight-man practice squad, a place for young, raw players to develop and get used to the intensity of the NFL.

I was elated. I still had a chance to win the job. It might take a little longer, but at least I was still in the building. I had shown something that made them think I would be a useful addition to the team at some point. All the pressure of minicamps, OTAs, the preseason—all worth it.

Funny thing about the practice squad, though. They have to cut you first, before putting you on it. You spend 24 hours on the waiver wire, during which any other team can put in a request. The catch is that another team can't claim you to stash on their practice squad; you have to go on the 53-man active roster. As a punter, for all intents and purposes, if someone claims you off the waiver wire, you are their starting punter for that week.

An hour after being cut by Seattle, on my way to put a down payment on an apartment for my wife and me, life changed. I got a phone call informing me I was now the starting punter for the Minnesota Vikings.

I thought I knew what pressure was.

Now it's eight years later. I'm in training camp with the Oakland Raiders, after the Vikings decided they wanted to go in a different direction last spring. The situation is eerily familiar to my first trial. Only for me it's ... the opposite.

There's a young punter in his second year, very strong leg, lots of potential, immensely talented, looking to earn a starting role for the first time in his career. There's an older veteran, going on his ninth year in the league, may not have quite the same booming leg strength he used to, but he can still kick. Still wants to prove he can play at an NFL level and prolong the dream a while longer.

This time, I'm Leo Araguz. Marquette King, a nice kid from Georgia, is Chris Kluwe.

When I first joined the Raiders, during minicamps and OTAs this year, I wasn't sure how I would handle it. In a lot of ways it's like being a rookie all over again, constantly trying to prove myself, ruining every wasted opportunity, every bad punt. I wasn't sure how I would interact with the young punter with the massive leg. After all, aren't we fighting for the same spot? There's room for one punter on the 53, after all.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The first couple days were awkward. Marquette and I said hello to each other in the locker room, talked about the weather, went outside and punted in silence. How could it not be awkward? We both knew the underlying foundation, the one unavoidable truth. It hung in the air like smog, an elephant staring at us from its perch in the corner. There can be only one.

After the third or fourth day, I did what might have been one of the hardest things I've ever done (outside of changing some particularly foul diapers). Marquette and I were out punting, and he was struggling with his drop. It kept falling to the inside, causing his leg to cross over and make his punts drag short and to the left. It's an easily correctable mistake, but a lot of the time you need someone else to point it out to you, especially if you're still refining your fundamentals. I could see him getting frustrated, hating the fact he was losing those oh-so-precious reps, squandering them on poor punts.

During a break between kicks, I walked over and told him what was happening, and how to fix it. He looked at me somewhat bemusedly, perhaps sensing some sort of mind game. I can't say that I blamed him. Why would a veteran, a guy fighting for the same spot, offer to make his competition better? Surely this had to be a trick, a ploy? (And don't call me Shirley.)

The next rep, he tried the change I had suggested—tuck his elbow in a little to keep the ball from falling inside—and he crushed the ball. And the next one. And the next one. Afterward he thanked me for the help, still not quite believing it. I was glad he trusted me enough to try the technique change, willing to listen to someone he knew might not have his best interests in mind.

Why did I help Marquette? Why did I knowingly lessen my own chances at winning the punting position for the Raiders? Why would I put his interests before my own?

Because I was Marquette, eight years ago, and no one helped me. No one offered to take a little of that pressure off my shoulders, encourage me that I had what it took to make it in the NFL, showed me the little tips and tricks that can be the difference between playing under the lights on Sunday and watching wistfully from home.

Am I upset at the uneasy truce I had with my veteran teammate when I was a rookie? No. I completely understand why things were the way they were. This is a business, after all, and an extremely competitive one. Offering help to a rookie might mean that the rookie takes your job. Far easier to simply take care of yourself, and let others sink or swim on their own. I made it on my own. Shouldn't Marquette do the same? When I see him punt well, it's easy to ask myself what in the hell I'm doing. He has a cannon for a leg, strength that I no longer have. We have evergreen trees here at our camp in Napa, and, depending where you stand on the field, you can see him punt the ball over the trees. When he hits a consistent set, I know I simply can't match him anymore in terms of raw distance or hang time. Time catches up with all of us, eventually.

Time also teaches us lessons.

I may not have the same ceiling as Marquette anymore, but I'm confident in my abilities. I know I can still punt in the NFL, still contribute to this team, and I refuse to watch someone struggle with a problem I know I can fix. Competing for a spot on an NFL roster doesn't have to be a zero-sum game. You see, there are 31 other teams out there. You're not just competing against each other. You're competing against every other punter out there, and the best 32 will end up playing on Sunday. That's how the NFL works. I think I'm one of the best 32 punters out there, and I also think Marquette can be one of the best 32. Whichever one of us ends up getting cut, I want that player to have the best chance possible at making another team. I want someone to get claimed off waivers, just like I was as a rookie. I want us both to succeed.

That's the other part of the NFL I'm trying to pass along to Marquette. Those other 31 teams? They're always watching. Always. There's a reason I ended up in Minnesota despite not having taken a snap with the Vikings for the entire preseason.

What you do in preseason games, during warmups, during practice, it all plays a part in your chance for success. Coaches and scouts and agents and GMs talk to each other. They know each other. The league is a very small world, and if you can play, everyone will find out. There will be a spot for you somewhere. It may not be the spot you originally envisioned, but the opportunity will come.

So we help each other at practice, offer words of encouragement, try to pick each other up when we're having a bad day. We play Call of Duty, and make jokes about the kickers, and talk about things other than the weather. I try to give Marquette as much of my knowledge as I can, the countless things I've picked up over my eight years. What to focus on in windy days (hold on to the ball a little bit longer to minimize any variation in your drop, and drive it into the wind when you kick it), for instance. The difference between the home run swing and the 95% swing for consistency, and why it's important to know both. The home run swing is great for distance and hang time, but you can't really control where the ball is going to go, and when coaches want you to kick directionally, making sure the ball goes where you want it to is very important. The benefit of taking care of your body while you're still young, so you don't have to deal with so many aches and pains when you're older; now that's something I really wish someone had told me about—ice baths don't feel great, but they're vital for recovering your legs.

Most importantly, we talk about the mental aspect of the game. Punting, just like any other position, is defined not only by your physical attributes, but also by how you apply them. I've been in pressure situations before. Most, I've kicked well in. Some, I haven't.

I try to let Marquette know that you have to be able to bounce back from a bad kick, you have to be able to shake it from your mind and focus on the next one.

If you get a bad snap, whether in practice or a game, you can't let it affect you. Push it out of your memory.

If you get those pre-game jitters, that's natural. Tamp them down and focus on your fundamentals, on looking at the ball, on making sure your drop is consistent and that you're not rushing your kick.

If you hit a good kick, great. Now forget about it, and get ready for the next one. Act like you've been out there before. Excitement is good; you should be proud of doing your job well. But if you're focused on the past, you're not going to do well in the present. Above all, be confident in yourself, no matter what.

What do I get out of being Marquette's confidant? The satisfaction of passing on what I know to someone else who can use it, if he wants to. The satisfaction of hopefully helping someone make it to the very exclusive club of active NFL players. The focus that teaching requires, knowing the fundamentals so well you can explain them to someone else. The focus that naturally makes your own form better because you're forced to consider what you're doing rather than take it for granted.

Is it still awkward sometimes? Yes. Some days that elephant creeps back into the room, especially after a poor practice. The pressure clamps down once more, the doubts resurface. I wonder what he thinks sometimes.

Why does this guy keep talking to me? Just leave me alone!

What if I'm not good enough?

And sometimes I can't help but think: Why am I helping this kid out? I should just focus on me.

This weekend the preseason games start. That will bring a whole new set of challenges, a whole new set of pressures. What you do under the lights is ultimately the only thing that counts, and reps are extremely limited there. What will our game-day demeanor be? Will we still help each other? Or will we retreat back into silence, every man for himself?

I don't know. I don't know if we're friends, if we can ever be friends ... if that's even possible given the harsh realities of the NFL. I don't know which one of us will make the team, or if either of us will. Nothing is guaranteed in the NFL, and I'd be a liar if I said I didn't think about life after football, if I didn't wonder whether this could be my last time stepping onto the field on Sundays. If this is it for me, I'll have other pursuits. I can write, do speaking engagements, get a teaching credential. But those are the late-night thoughts, ones I drive from my mind, because to wallow in them is to accept defeat, and that's one of the most important lessons I want to pass on to Marquette. Never listen to those doubts, because they'll sap every chance you have to succeed.

What do I know? I know that I am ultimately responsible for my actions. I know the type of person I want to be. I know, were the situations reversed, how I would want to be treated, because I was on the other side of the equation. I was the young rookie, competing with everything I had for a place on the 53. I know that I want to win my spot now because I am the best, competing against the best competition I could possibly find, not because I let a guy struggle when I could have easily helped him out. I know that in a violent sport, filled with uncertainty, I will eventually fail, but it will be my choice, my failure, not because I let someone else fail in my place.

Yes, Marquette and I are fighting for a job. Yes, there will be only one of us when the regular season starts.

That doesn't mean we can't act like human beings.

Oakland Raiders: Mastrud yet another tight end contender

By Jerry McDonald

August 13, 2013

NAPA -- The competition at tight end during Raiders training camp has taken an interesting turn of late with four-year veteran Jeron Mastrud getting work with the first team.

Mastrud, 25, played in 35 games over the past three seasons with the Miami Dolphins with five starts, giving him more NFL experience than any tight end on the roster.

Considering the Raiders want to be a power running team, one of Mastrud's strengths fits in nicely.

"I think he brings us a pretty good presence as an in-line blocker," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "That's one of the things we want to look at with him."

For what it's worth, the Raiders depth chart lists Mastrud (6-foot-5, 255 pounds) as No. 4 behind Richard Gordon, David Ausberry and Mychal Rivera and ahead of Nick Kasa and Brian Leonhardt.

But the Raiders are still determining what the best mix of players will be and Allen keeps hoping someone will step forward and play a leading role, much as Brandon Myers did last season when he caught a team-high 79 passes.

Mastrud liked the opportunity of playing for the Raiders because he had familiarity with line coach and assistant head coach Tony Sparano, who was his head coach with the Dolphins, and offensive coordinator Greg Olson, with whom Mastrud spent one training camp as an undrafted free agent out of Kansas State.

"It was a place that was really going through a process of change, of rebuilding," Mastrud said. "It's good to be part of a new look, something building for the future. I think we've got a good thing going here."

Mastrud was primarily a blocker in double-tight end sets for Miami, catching one pass for eight yards in 35 games. He has shown to be a capable receiver in camp, roughly along the lines of Gordon, who is also a punishing blocker.

Yet Mastrud resists being typecast as a blocking-only tight end.

"I take pride in (blocking) because it's something a tight end has to do, I feel like it can't be just receiving or just blocking," Mastrud said. "We all need to be multiple as a group because that's what makes your offense versatile, guys that can do a lot of things, it would be hard to stop."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Ausberry, a converted wide receiver, has grown into the tight end position and may have the most potential as a combination player who can both block and catch. Both Ausberry and Gordon were on the roster last season, competing with Myers in the preseason, but neither was much of a factor in the passing offense.

Rivera, at 243 pounds, has been complimented by Allen for his blocking, but does his best work as a pass receiver and the Raiders have some wrinkles in their offense that play to his strengths. He may be on the most secure ground of any player on the roster at his position.

Kasa, who played defensive end until his senior year at Colorado, is an intriguing project who missed virtually the entire offseason with a hamstring strain and has been playing catch-up. Leonhardt is an undrafted free agent from Bimidji State.

McFadden: 'You haven't seen the best at all'

By Nate Stuhlbarg

June 13, 2013

ALAMEDA -- When he's healthy, he's one of the best backs in the league. When he's healthy.

Since Oakland made Darren McFadden the fourth overall pick in the 2008 draft, he has started more than 10 games in a season only twice, never starting more than 13 games. Still, in 57 career NFL games, he boasts a 4.3 yards-per-carry average.

Raider Nation wants to know what the two-time Doak Walker Award winner from Arkansas did this offseason to prepare himself for the gruel of another NFL season.

"I worked out hard to get in the best shape I've ever been in since I got into the league," McFadden said Thursday. "That's my main thing -- being in great health and great shape."

To the naked eye, McFadden looks a bit sligher than his listed weight of 218 pounds.

"I wouldn't say smaller, just more trimmed up," McFadden clarified. "We weighed in and did body fat percentage, and it feels good to get into shape real good."

"I'm looking a lot better this year."

His physical preparedness is one thing, and it will be truly revealed when players don the pads for training camp, but more is being asked of McFadden in his sixth NFL season with the Raiders.

"One thing we have addressed with him a little bit, and it's something we've talked about, is a leadership role on the team, helping that locker room and I've seen him do a nice job in that regard," head coach Dennis Allen said.

It might surprise you that McFadden has only one 1,000-yard rushing season in five attempts. It might also surprise you that McFadden is still just 25 years old.

The young veteran acknowledged that his propensity to make light of situations and smile with teammates could have impacted his effectiveness as a leader in the past, and he's looking to change that.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"I'm trying to be more of a vocal leader, instead of just going out there and leading by example," said McFadden. "Last year, guys would like to talk a lot. It might have been at the wrong time when I was cracking jokes. I'm just being more of a vocal leader and leading for the younger guys."

As a leader, the team will look for McFadden to set the tone and establish a winning feel in the locker room. He's starting early.

"Guys not going to expect us to do anything," said McFadden, who is entering the final season of his six-year contract with Oakland. "But I'm sure we're going to surprise a lot of people this year."

If the Raiders' workhorse can stay healthy, they just might.

"You've seen a lot of glimpses," the running back said, "but I can promise you that you haven't seen the best of Darren McFadden at all."

Oakland Raiders' McFadden happy to be running downhill again

By Jerry McDonald
July 26, 2013

NAPA -- Darren McFadden took a handoff from Matt Flynn on Friday and with no hesitation hit a sliver of air between guard Lucas Nix and center Stefen Wisniewski at nearly full speed.

No defender laid a hand on McFadden until he was at least three yards downfield -- which is roughly what he averaged per carry in 2012 in a zone scheme ill-suited to his nature as a runner.

It was a simple running play in a non-padded practice on the first day of training camp, but illustrated nicely what McFadden does best. The zone scheme, which called on McFadden to move laterally before cutting back against the grain, helped drop his yards per carry to a career-low 3.3 yards.

"I love a downhill scheme, so I'm very confident about it," McFadden said. "I'll just be able to get out there and go downhill. That's one of my strong points."

For all the changes on the Oakland roster, the one constant was McFadden. Both coach Dennis Allen and general manager Reggie McKenzie went out of their way to talk him up in the offseason.

Allen's hiring of line coach Tony Sparano and offensive coordinator Greg Olson came in part because both had the right answer in terms of getting McFadden back to the form he displayed in 2010 and 2011 when Hue Jackson designed the offense and called the plays.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

It was Jackson who put in McFadden's favorite gap and power runs at the expense of the zone scheme preferred by Tom Cable. McFadden averaged 5.2 and 5.4 yards per carry in 20 games over those two seasons with 11 rushing touchdowns.

Asked what it feels like to have coaches who will cater to his talents, McFadden said, "It feels great. I feel like I'm a downill runner and that's something the coaches see also. By getting us in a gap scheme offense, they feel that suits me a lot more."

Allen liked what he saw of the re-tooled running game on the first day of practice.

"We ran the football well, the offensive line did a nice job, the backs did an excellent job of being able to run the football," Allen said. "That's something we're going to have to be able to do. Darren's one of our most explosive players and we've got to put him in position so that he can have success."

McKenzie has “no doubts” Raiders will be better this season

By Vic Tafur
July 26, 2013

You can tell by the smile on Raiders general manager Reggie McKenzie’s face that he’s heard all the preseason predictions and power rankings.

He was asked his thoughts on his team being picked at, or near, the bottom of the NFL. “I like being an underdog,” McKenzie said after the first training camp practice on Friday. “We have expectations here, and I know the thoughts outside of the Raiders wall. I am looking forward to September.”

McKenzie won’t make any predictions but “I do know we’ll play better than last season. I know we’ll be better. I have no doubts about that.”

The Raiders were 4-12 last season in his and coach Dennis Allen’s first year. What bar will McKenzie use to evaluate progress this year if not wins and losses?

“You know it when you see a good football team,” McKenzie said.

How close is Oakland to that?

“We’ll see,” he said. “We’re not too far.”

McKenzie was asked if he was curious to see how the new talent he’s put together — 57 of the 87 guys on the roster today weren’t in camp last year — gels in camp and the preseason.

“I’m not curious, I am eager, very eager,” McKenzie said. “I am excited to see how the new guys we added mesh and develop. And I want to see how the four new (assistant) coaches do. So far, it’s been good. ... I’m excited.”

McKenzie was happy to see first-round pick D.J. Hayden on the field Friday, after the cornerback missed the offseason workouts due to abdomen surgery.

“In the NFL, it’s all about having guys available,” McKenzie said. “You need your better players on the field to have a chance to win.”

Reggie McKenzie thinking about Raiders’ future

By CSN.com

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

April 8, 2013

2013 looks gloomy for the Oakland Raiders, but 2014 could be prosperous. They traded their starting quarterback, Carson Palmer. Their seven-time Pro Bowl punter, Shane Lechler, left town. Former first round picks Darrius Heyward-Bey (2009) and Rolando McClain (2010) are no longer with the team. And starters Philip Wheeler, Michael Huff and Desmond Bryant weren't brought back.

But it's all part of general manager Reggie McKenzie's plan, according to a story by Sports Illustrated.

By clearing all of those contracts, the Raiders are setting themselves up to have ample salary cap space next offseason. According to the report, the Raiders could have as much as $50 million in cap room next year.

McKenzie was asked if all the offseason losses and potential down year in 2013 has him worried about his job.

"I don't think along those lines. I just think of doing what's needed to make this team the best it can be long-term," McKenzie told SI's Peter King. "Mark (Davis) knew the cap part of this was going to be a two-year deal. Mark is not his father. He is allowing me to do this, and we talk about the process all the time. He's allowing me to do the job that needs to be done."

McKenzie had a message for Raiders fans fearful of a dismal 2013 season.

"But as far as taking our bruises now, I do want you to know we're in this to win this year. We will compete. This is not a throw-in-the-towel deal," McKenzie said.

McKenzie: 'I like being the underdog'

By Scott Bair

July 26, 2013

NAPA – Reggie McKenzie hears all.

The general manager knows his Raiders are ranked among the NFL's worst. He's heard grumblings about a lack of talent and that he's restructuring this franchise at a snail's pace. He's aware this season is supposed to go so poorly that McKenzie might have the first pick in next year's draft.

McKenzie knows what is being said, and respectfully disagrees with all of it.

His message during Friday's meeting with the media was a simple one: Go ahead. Count us down and out.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"I like being the underdog," McKenzie said. "We have our own expectations here, and I believe we'll reach them."

McKenzie didn't set a bar for wins or guaranteed success, yet he believes his Raiders are better in Phase Two of his master plan.

The first step was hiring a new coach in Dennis Allen last year. Since then he's tried to stock this roster with a hand tied behind his back, waiting for the team to escape salary-cap hell. In such a position, slow and steady is the only way to win a race.

McKenize overhauled the roster with low-profile acquisitions, especially on a defense that should have nine new starters, but believes this team is much better than last year's group.

"Without a doubt," McKenzie said. "That's what comes in time. When you get things going the way you want, good things happen. When you get your coach and you start adding the right players, things start to mesh together."

He believes this group will bond together during camp and emerge a more competitive team despite so many new faces.

"I'm not curious about this group, I'm eager," McKenzie said. "I'm eager and excited to see how they play during the regular season."

McKenzie thinks fans will see the improvement he sees, and believes his Raiders are on the verge of being a good football team.

"We'll see," he said. "It's not too far (away)."

SIO MOORE

Sio Moore fires out the games in Raiders debut

By Levi Damien

August 9, 2013

The Raiders preseason opener was a surreal experience for rookie Sio Moore. The young linebacker is a seemingly endless font of energy that began before the first whistle and while most of the other starters had left the game, he was still out there through the entire first half.

The man who changed his Twitter account address the moment he was drafted to @MrOaktown55 has been living the dream since the day he got that phone call from the Raiders. That level of excitement already had Raiders fans feeling better about the number 55.

During training camp he told me he was destined to come to the Raiders. The realization of it all landed shortly before taking the field today.

"I was sitting there talking to Nick Roach before the game and I was like 'I never saw this coming' you know ever in my life and now that I have the opportunity to do it... God is good, man." Said Moore.

He came out before the game for warm-ups and was seen pumping up the crowd every chance he got. Then when the Raiders won the toss and opted to receive, he was on the field with the return team, still running hot, jumping up and down and pumping his arms to amp up the crowd.

"The first play, I was kind of in a surreal moment," said Moore. "After a while you have to play ball."

Once the Raiders got the ball, a lapse in pass coverage resulted in a sack fumble and gave the Cowboy the ball. It meant, Moore's day on defense would begin sooner than expected and he was ready. On the second play from scrimmage, Tony Romo couldn't find anyone open and Moore kept fighting to get the sack.

"Man, it just helped being able to play, to tell you the honest truth," said Moore. "Mike Jenkins came up to me and was like 'Alignment. Know your assignment and the rest will happen as it comes.' I was just excited to be out there with the guys."

Offering some pass rush is exactly what the Raiders want from Sio. Dennis Allen said after the game, he intends to use Moore the same way he utilized Von Miller in Denver. That will have him with his hand in the dirt as much as he is upright and in coverage.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The 245 pound linebacker has to do the job of players that are typically at least 20 pounds heavier and face offensive linemen who outweigh him by over 50 pounds.

"Just really fundamentals and technique, man," said Moore of how he deals with the weight mismatch. "I would say having good hands. Being able to play with strong hands, it really makes a difference. But that's something that a lot of older guys - Dre, Lamarr - a lot of the older guys they've been working on with me day in and day out being able to play with strong hands."

Getting a sack on his second play of his first game is a fitting beginning to Sio's career in Oakland. And if he wasn't already fired up, that sack had him spontaneously combust.

"I just think you gotta hit the game with that same pace and you really gotta keep yourself high. I play with a lot of emotion and I really try to lay it out there on the line when I go out there and play. That's the same thing you're gonna get out of me each play. That's how I play the game."

You can't ask for a better first day in an NFL uniform than Sio Moore had today. In front of the home crowd, getting a sack on the second play, and leaving healthy.

"I just, before I left out the stadium, I played my grandmother's favorite song and it just put me in a really good place and I was just happy to be blessed to be in this situation."

I would say he's gonna sleep well tonight, but he'll have to come down from this high first and I'm not sure he's capable of that.

Life lessons have only strengthened Sio Moore

By Marcus Allen Krause

July 31, 2013

Sio Moore was given a second chance at life. Not everyone does, just look at yesterday's tragedy for an example of two athletes that weren't granted that luxury. Texas A&M redshirt freshman Polo Manukainiu and Utah incoming freshman recruit Gaius "Keio" Vaenuku lost their lives in a car crash yesterday. Sadly all we can do at moments like this is let them truly remind us of how lucky we are to be alive.

Sio doesn't need the reminder even if some of us do forget how lucky we are from time to time. No, Sio Moore already lives his life knowing how close it was to being taken away. He has used his near death experience as motivation, always remembering how just a shake of his head could have taken his life.

Moore's family is originally from Liberia, a country torn by a Civil War that got so bad that his parents migrated to the US in 1990. Ironically they took him from a true war zone in Liberia, to one that he put himself squarely in the middle of by associating with the wrong crowd.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Sio knows now that the people he was with were not who he belonged around. He was risking himself by being in the wrong places at the wrong times and it took a near death experience to awaken his inner warrior. He was just 14 and at a party that had just been shutdown. It was here where he had his moment of change. It came from a gunman firing at the back of his head as he fled for his life.

"I wasn't hanging around the right people," Moore told New Haven Register columnist Chip Malafronte "I was getting myself into situations I shouldn't have been in. It took a near-death event for me to realize the path I was going down was the wrong one."

"A bullet went right by my right ear and hit a car next to me," Moore said. "That haunted me for a good while. I kept thinking about it. What if I turned around at the wrong time? That bullet would have hit me in the head."

After that day Sio stopped hanging out with that crowd, he realized he must live better, and he uprooted himself on his own to make his desire for a better life a reality. He picked up the phone and he called his sister Tiplah Broadnax who is 19 years his senior and her husband Grady. He asked them if he could live with them, and then Sio promptly moved many miles away from where that speeding bullet almost took his life.

Our own Levi Damien recently interviewed Sio and he asked about that moment. Its easy to see what we all like so much about Moore when you read his response.

"Yeah, man. 100 percent. My life could have been changed multiple times. That was only once. I had Civil War broken out in 1990, I would have never came to the U.S. There are so many things that I'm thankful for, blessings and things around me."

Though the attempt at his life was plenty enough of a life changing event to change Sio deep within his soul, it would still not be all that he would face. Even after he made his way out of the life he was living and onto Connecticut University's football roster the fates would still test him more.

The new test would come at the expense of another young man who was cut down mercilessly and unjustly, though this was no accident like what took the lives of Polo and Keio. The test would come at the expense of a teammate, a leader of the Husky defense, and a friend who was succeeding at life in a way few are lucky enough to experience. The test would come at the expense of UConn DB Jasper Howard, who was stabbed to death in a senseless crime that happened on campus in 2009.

Now Sio Moore lives life to the absolute fullest. He carries a reminder of his friend Jasper with him everywhere, he has a tattoo in memory of him across his mid-section in the same area that Howard was stabbed in. Its another reminder of the pain he has gone through that has strengthened his resolve, the same as another tattoo that depicts his life without his father has.

Though those tattoos remind him of the pain he felt, there is also hope and love deeply involved in them. The hope in the tattoo of Jasper is the hope of honoring his lost friend, the hope of living his life in a way that would make Jasper proud. Its a reminder to never again take his life for granted, which is a hope that we could all use instilled in us.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The tattoo about his father has a man and a boy standing next to each other with a space between their reached out hands, which Sio says is to symbolize his non-relationship with his own dad. The hope is there though still because he plans on uniting the hands the day he has a child. The tattoo is there to remind himself to be a better father than the one he had, which is a hope that many people understand more than words can express.

Seeing the strength of Sio's commitment to life is what so many of us are drawn to. We don't know yet if he will be able to play in the NFL, but he gives every reason there is to believe he can. He is the change we need in this franchise and the hope we all have for the Raiders future. Its a lot of pressure but it feels right to put it on Moore's shoulders. After all, his life has shown that he is already a man that refuses to break.

GREG OLSON

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE

Raiders OC Greg Olson is a man of his word

Marcus Allen Krause

August 10, 2013

The result of the game yesterday against the Dallas Cowboys does not matter, how the players played does. There were a lot of miscues of course since there always are at this time of year but the overall experience was a good one. The thing that was most enjoyable will differ from person to person, but its fair to say that the improved offensive play calling was among the top nominees.

The difference was amazing between new Offensive Coordinator Greg Olson's offense and last year's system under former OC Greg Knapp. There felt like so much more potential for a big play in Olson's offense, especially considering this was just the first preseason game. The first game is always "vanilla" in the play calling and is focused more about the basic parts of the available playbook. It will only get more exciting as we progress to the regular season.

What was really exciting to see was how different the offenses built for QB's Matt Flynn and Terrelle Pryor were from each other. It verifies two things for us: One is that even if Flynn is the starter there will be plays for Pryor, and two is that Olson really does plan his offense around his players.

It proves that Olson really plans around his players because he was willing to make two different playbooks based off Flynn or Pryor playing. Most coaches would've had a fair amount of plays integrated into the playbook for each quarterback but this was beyond that. The offense was completely different when Pryor came in and was absolutely made for him. The bunched WR sets that Matt was using were gone and the Pistol offense was in with exciting results.

Going that drastic with his changes in play calling for Pryor also is what confirms that Terrelle will definitely see the field in 2013 even if its not as the starter or an injury replacement. Greg Olson would not have been willing to spend so much time with such a large amount of plays if he didn't plan on using them for sure this season. He built that offense to utilize his weapons so expect to see Pryor in the regular season without a doubt.

The drastic difference between the first quarter and the 2nd quarter offenses falls directly in line with what Greg Olson told us back in February.

"Those days (holding onto the same players for long periods of time) are somewhat over. So you've got to be able to be flexible and be able to adapt your system to the personnel that you have on that team on any given year. So, our job as a coaching staff will be to identify the skill set of the players, who are our best players, what do they do best, and how can we put them in position to be successful and do the things that they do best."

He said he plans around his players abilities and he backed those words up last night. It was a night and day difference between the plays for Flynn and Pryor but both were effective. The skillset of players like Marcel Reece, Darren McFadden, and Pryor were ignored last year but they won't be this year. That can only help this team get better.

Olson also said earlier this year that he planned on having plays this preseason specifically for Terrelle and he did. He is backing up his words here too with his actions which is a pleasant surprise to what was the recent norm in Oakland.

"We don't really quite yet know what Terrelle Pryor can do at this level but we have a pretty good feeling for what he is athletically, so there will be packages for both of them (speaking of Carson Palmer at the time) and we'll allow them to compete and we'll just be ready in either direction..."

Yep, he definitely backed that quote up too. We have all heard enough talk and now want to see the actions instead. Olson's grand opening was action packed, hopefully we will be able to say that about his tenure in Oakland in general.

Terrelle Pryor

Raiders' Terrelle Pryor rebuilds his image as a quarterback

Sam Farmer

August 11, 2013

NAPA, Calif. — Terrelle Pryor, the last draft pick made by Oakland Raiders owner Al Davis, can now make a remarkable admission for an NFL quarterback.

Until this year, he didn't really know how to throw a football.

That may be a little extreme. He thought he knew how to throw, and he could pick up a ball and wing it. But his body mechanics were so inefficient and his tosses were so scattershot, he said, he had no future in the pros.

"I look back on last year, and I just knew I wasn't ready," said Pryor, 23, entering his third NFL season and now an intriguing figure in the Raiders' quarterback mix, probably as a change-of-speed option to presumed starter Matt Flynn.

Determined to rebuild his motion, Pryor worked extensively with throwing specialist Tom House at USC this off-season, developing new timing and "unlocking" his upper body to improve his accuracy. House works with an array of NFL players — along with college and Major League Baseball players — among them quarterbacks Tom Brady and Drew Brees.

"I truly believe that after spending a month and a half with Tom, I can now sit back in the pocket and throw the ball," he said.

Pryor played well Friday in a 19-17 exhibition victory against Dallas, completing six of 10 passes for 88 yards, and running three times for 31 yards.

The pass that got away was a cross-body fling into the end zone six yards away that was picked off by Dallas' J.J. Wilcox. There appeared to be room for Pryor to score with his feet, but instead he tried to force a pass.

"I looked at the pictures and I could have easily ran it in, but I got greedy," Pryor said.

He disagreed with the notion that he wanted to throw for the score rather than run for it because he's determined to prove he can win with his arm, that he's not simply a one-dimensional read-option threat.

But Raiders Coach Dennis Allen said the next step in Pryor's maturation process is learning that sometimes he needs to listen to his instincts and make the play that unfolds before him, rather than reaching for that higher degree of difficulty.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"That's been one thing we've consistently talked to Terrelle about is in those situations, don't be afraid to use your legs," Allen said. "Don't be afraid to use your skill set. ... Not every play has to be a great play, not every play has to be a spectacular play."

That Pryor is even a consideration now is a significant achievement for him and means he has made big strides. He was very raw coming out of Ohio State, and many people expected him to switch positions in the NFL, becoming a receiver or tight end.

Pryor was selected by the Raiders in the third round of the 2011 supplemental draft. He chose to skip his senior season at Ohio State in the aftermath of a tattoo-for-memorabilia scandal that cost coach Jim Tressel his job.

Pryor's NFL career began under a dark cloud, with the league taking the unusual step of carrying over the NCAA's penalty and imposing a corresponding five-game suspension of its own. He ran a 40 in under 4.4 seconds for scouts, freakish for a player who stands 6 feet 4 and weighs 233 pounds.

He made his starting debut at the end of last season, taking over for the injured Carson Palmer in a finale against San Diego. Pryor showed flashes of promise in that game, throwing two touchdown passes despite completing only 46% of his passes — 13 of 28 — and running for another score. He proved he could get in and out of the huddle quickly, often a problem for young quarterbacks, and showed elements of leadership, at one point breaking up a fight on the field.

But it was the work he did this off-season, he believes, that will make him a more accurate, more dangerous player this season.

"We're going to continue to give him opportunities to showcase his skills," Allen said. "But right now, he's not there yet."

Pryor, for one, is confident he will be.

"I'm very honest with myself," he said. "Last year, I look back and I just know I wasn't ready. I didn't have the mind-set. I knew I wasn't ready in terms of mechanics. I was so far off."

"This year, I'm very confident. I'm confident in the huddle, getting the calls to the guys, saying the protections. And I truly believe that any time a route or concept is called, I can put the ball where I want."

CHARLES WOODSON

Oakland Raiders' Charles Woodson likes what he sees

By Jerry McDonald

July 26, 2013

NAPA -- Charles Woodson knows a thing or two about defensive football, having played for some extremely poor defenses in his first go-round in Oakland as well as a championship level unit in Green Bay.

After the Raiders first training camp practice Friday, Woodson said he likes what he sees and wonders if all the dire predictions for a poor Raiders season might be off base.

"When I look at the way we move around, I think we're going to be a fast-flowing defense," Woodson said. "I think that if you can have that on any team -- a team that's willing to sell out every play and get to the ball -- you're going to be in ballgames.

"Offensively, that will take care of itself. On our side of the ball I'm anxious for the season to start and get out there and show what we are. I feel really good about that."

After seven years in Green Bay, Woodson said it felt good to be back in Napa.

"It was a familiar feeling having been here a long time the first time around," Woodson said. "I was just anxious to get out and run around on the field here and have a little fun out there on the first day."

Woodson, 36, has no plans to use his veteran's status for days camp days off. To the contrary, he expects it will be the other way around.

"My age is not going to dictate whether I practice," Woodson said. "I'm going to take as many reps as I can . . . to stand on the sideline, that's not what I enjoy. I like being on the field. They're going to have to pull me off the field at times because I love being out there.

"This is a new defensive for me, new calls. I want to be out there getting the calls and the communication down."

Regarding Woodson's amount of practice reps, coach Dennis Allen said, "You've got to take each individual on a case-by-case basis, and Charles has played a lot of football at a really high level. I'm not worried about Charles Woodson. When it comes time to tee it up and play football, he's going to be ready to go."

Woodson, whose fans showed up en masse at the facility when he signed with the Raiders, was pleased to be back in his familiar No. 24.

"I got the jersey back in large part because of the fans," Woodson said. "A big thank you to the fans for that."

Tracy Porter, who wore No. 24 in the offseason while Woodson wore his college No. 2, expressed disappointment on his Twitter account Wednesday regarding having his number changed to No. 31. Porter was unavailable for comment Friday.

"Tracy and I have talked about it," Allen said. "At the end of the day, we're ready to move on and play football. That's the last of our challenges right now."

Woodson setting example in Oakland

By Bill Williamson

July 30, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- Charles Woodson is serving multiple roles in his second tenure with the Oakland Raiders.

Woodson, who played in Oakland from 1998-2005, will start at safety and will probably play more with the Raiders than any other team that was interested in him. Some contenders (including Denver) looked at Woodson, who was cut by Green Bay earlier this offseason, as a role player.

Woodson, 36, ultimately chose to return to Oakland. The Raiders were offering more money than the other teams. Less than week into training camp, Oakland coach Dennis Allen is thrilled the Raiders secured Woodson.

"He's what we expected him to be," Allen said. "He's filling a lot of roles. He's a special player and those types of guys bring a swagger to the field. We need that. He still runs around like he's 30."

Allen said he has been fortunate to work with superstar defensive backs in the past few years. He had Darren Sharper in New Orleans as the secondary coach. In 2011, he had Champ Bailey in Denver as the Broncos' defensive coordinator. Now, he has Woodson.

"It's fun to coach those special, type of guys," Allen said.

Allen said Woodson is a living example to the young players in Oakland's secondary.

"One of the reasons why Charles is here is to show the others guys how to work and what it takes," Allen said. "That is one of his most important roles here."

Raiders Observations: Woodson plans to be factor, not just mentor

By Clark Judge

July 31, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- In his 16th NFL season, Raiders defensive back Charles Woodson should have nothing to prove. He's won a Super Bowl. He was the league's Defensive Player of the Year. He's a seven-time All-Pro and an eight-time Pro Bowler.

In short, the guy's circled the bases.

Nevertheless, Woodson is on a mission this season, and that mission is to demonstrate he's something more than a mentor to young players and locker-room leader helping to build a foundation for a struggling team. Basically, it's to demonstrate he can and will be an impact player.

"So, odd as it is to say, you might have something to prove, right?" I asked him.

"I guess a little bit," he said. "But what people have said about me I don't believe. If I felt there was any truth to it I might feel I had to prove it.

"At the heart of me, I'm a football player. If I can't do anything else in life I can play football. Whether it's proving somebody wrong or whatever, I plan on coming out here and being a 'dog' on that football field."

Hiring Woodson was a smart move for a Raiders team in search of an identity. A check of this week's training camp roster revealed nearly 50 players in their first seasons with the club and close to 70 with no more than two years' time with Oakland. Inexperienced teams need veteran leadership, and Woodson is an ideal choice.

Except, he insisted, he's more than that.

"I believe what I'm going to give to the team will be more on the field," he said. "What people are saying that I lack as a player is just not the truth. I'm a heck of a football player, and I have a lot left to give ... and I plan on giving it all on the field."

The opportunity is there. The Raiders' secondary was a mess last season, with injured cornerbacks and safety Michael Huff having to switch positions. But there's a raft of new faces, including rookie D.J. Hayden, veterans Mike Jenkins and Tracy Porter and Woodson.

For that reason, Woodson believes the Raiders can be better -- far better -- than preseason projections that have them ranked at or near the bottom of the NFL.

"I read everything," he said. "So I read what people are saying. I think the important thing coach [Dennis] Allen said the other day is that we have enough on this team to do what we want to do, and I believe that.

"Some of the guys we have you really haven't heard or know about, but we've got some players. A good team can start with the defense, and, defensively I think we're going to be really strong. I believe we'll win games defensively, and that will carry us through the season."

He also believes he's not close to the end of his career. Yes, he missed nine games last season because of injury. Yes, he turns 37 in October. Yes, he went unwanted for months before the Raiders signed him in late May. But, no, retirement is nothing he thinks about.

"How long do you plan on playing?" I asked.

"As long as somebody lets me," he said. "I love it. I told the defense the other night that after 16 years I still love it -- just like the day I came in. My hope is that they love the game as much as I do."

Woodson likes changes in return to Oakland

By Paul Gutierrez

May 22, 2013

Charles Woodson caught wind of Raiders fans mobilizing via social media to greet him at the team's compound for his free-agent visit on Tuesday.

No doubt the turnout of about 200 helped sway his decision.

"I tell you, man, it was overwhelming," Woodson said on a conference call with Bay Area reporters Wednesday afternoon. "I think that if at any time I had ever forgotten what the love was like in Oakland, I was definitely reminded yesterday."

"I think it played a big part (in signing). I was actually scared of leaving the facility and not having a deal done," he added with a laugh. "I don't know if I would have made it out of there. But that was a big deal and seeing that kind of welcome, it definitely put me in the mindset it would be a good decision to make it happen."

Woodson, who turns 37 on Oct. 7, was the No. 4 overall draft pick of the Raiders in 1998 as the reigning Heisman Trophy winner. He spent his first eight years in the NFL playing cornerback for Oakland before leaving as a free agent in 2006 for Green Bay and winning a Super Bowl two years ago.

After the Packers released him in a cost-cutting move this offseason, he initially said he wanted to play for a contender, but instead came to choose the rebuilding Raiders over the likes of Denver, which offered him a contract. He also visited the 49ers.

Per reports, Woodson's deal with the Raiders is for one year with a max amount of $4.3 million and a base salary of $1.8 million.

"As the process rolled on, I knew I wanted to play football," he said. "If it was a team that wasn't quite there but still is a team that is looking on the up, then I was going to do it. And I feel like the Raiders are a team that's looking on the up."

Woodson said his familiarity with Raiders second-year general manager Reggie McKenzie from their time together in Green Bay and McKenzie's vision for Oakland sold him on the direction the team was heading.

Plus, the last time Woodson was in the Raiders' building, in 2005, was a lifetime ago in terms of regime change. The change in vibe, he said, was palpable.

"Having Reggie in there and having somebody that's really in that decision-making role other than Mr. Al Davis is definitely a different vibe," Woodson said. "It seems like there's more of a control, as far as what they're able to do and what they want to implement, as far as their team is concerned."

"I think it's a good vibe in there."

So what does Woodson, at 36-going-on-37 with a Hall of Fame resume that includes eight Pro Bowl selections, three first-team All Pro nods, an NFL defensive rookie of the year award as well as an NFL defensive player of the year honor bring to the Raiders' table?

"I'm a football player, man, so I'm just going to bring a lot of intensity," he said. "Somebody that's passionate about the game, and a guy that knows how to make plays. That's what I'm going to bring. I mean, I think when guys watch me play...that raises the level of other guys, because of the way I play the game."

"I'm going to bring that mindset, that mentality of the game...and have fun doing it."

Woodson figures to make the move to free safety full-time now, to "roam around and make plays," he said, and if that sounds familiar to Raiders fans, it should. It's what Rod Woodson did when he came to Oakland in 2002 and solidified a secondary that helped the Raiders reach the Super Bowl. It was also the last time the Raiders experienced a winning season.

The elder Woodson had already made the switch from corner to free safety before getting to Oakland but it was in that 2002 season when Rod Woodson had a career-high eight interceptions and returned two for touchdowns, including the memorable 98-yarder to swing the season at Denver on Monday Night Football.

Does C-Wood anticipate having similar success?

"I plan on having it," he said. "I wouldn't be out there trying to continue to play if I didn't think it was going to happen. I would have just retired if I thought I couldn't go out there and be the best player on the field."

Woodson, though, has broken his collarbone twice in the past three years. He said it's healed now, though, after missing nine games last year, saying it's "great."

That could also potentially describe the booty cornerback Tracy Porter stands to collect as he currently owns No. 24, the digits work by Woodson in his halcyon Raiders days. It's a jersey that is still among the most popular rocked by fans on gamedays at the Coliseum.

"We definitely have to have that conversation, though," Woodson said of Porter. "We haven't had it yet. Raider Nation has me back, but I don't know if they'll have me (fully) back without the '24' on my back."

Perhaps some cash and some wine (Woodson is the proprietor of a wine made in Napa) could convince Porter to make the switch? But the proximity to his off-the-field business had little to do with his decision to return to Oakland.

"Zero," Woodson said. "This was all about football. This was all about continuing my football career, and having an opportunity to go out there and help a team win. That was bottom line for me."

And keep in mind, Woodson was not signed to simply retire a Raider or to mentor the younger guys. Though he believes that is part of his role. Owner Mark Davis reiterated as much to CSNCalifornia.com earlier in the day.

"I try not to step on any coaches' toes," he said. "Whatever input I can give those guys, that's definitely what I'm going to do. And if I can be a help to them, and it's going to help us win, ultimately, then I have to do it."

Beyond being greeted by the adoring mass of fans, Woodson saw familiar faces on his tour of his first NFL home. Even if kicker Sebastian Janikowski is the only player remaining from Woodson's first tour with the Raiders. There were also equipment and film staff and who many think is the greatest cornerback in franchise history.

"It had been a while since I had seen Willie Brown and he's one of my favorite people, man, ever," Woodson said. "We always joke about who the real '24' is. So it was good to have that back-and-forth with him and get the deal done and then call him and say, 'Willie Brown, I'm coming back. The real 2-4 is coming back.'"

"It felt good to be in that building. It felt good."
