10:00 AM (PT)

U.S. Bank Stadium

1220 HARBOR BAY PARKWAY / ALAMEDA, CA / 94502 / RAIDERS.COM

GAME PREVIEW

The Oakland Raiders will hit the road in Week 3 to face the NFC North's Minnesota Vikings. The club leaves the Bay Area following a two-game homestand against AFC West opponents. The Raiders currently hold a 9-5 lead in the all-time regular season series against the Vikings, with each team winning two games apiece over their last four matchups. Kickoff is set for 10:00 a.m. PT this Sunday at U.S. Bank Stadium, as the team begins their 49-day stretch away from the Oakland-Alameda County Coliseum and the first of four contests against the NFC North this season.

The Raiders fell to the Kansas City Chiefs in Week 2 by a score of 10-28 after jumping out to an early 10-point lead. Not lost in the defeat was QB Derek Carr surpassing Hall of Fame QB Ken Stabler for most passing yards in franchise history, as Carr threw for 198 on the day and stands at 19,196 for his career through his first 80 contests. WR Tyrell Williams added his second receiving TD of the season, finishing with five receptions for 46 yards. TE Darren Waller led the team in receptions for the second consecutive week while also pacing the team with 63 receiving yards, becoming just the third Raiders tight end since 1986 (Todd Christensen - 1986, Brandon Myers - 2012) to record at least 50 receiving yards in each of the first two weeks of a season. On defense, DE Benson Mayowa tallied 1.5 sacks and another forced fumble. Mayowa became the first Raiders player to record at least one sack and one forced fumble in each of the first two games of the season since sacks became an official statistic in 1982, while also becoming just the seventh defensive player league wide to do so since 2010.

The Vikings enter Week 3 with a record of 1-1 after defeating the Atlanta Falcons in Week 1 and falling to the Green Bay Packers on the road this past Sunday. Following the Week 3 tilt, the Silver and Black will travel to Indianapolis in Week 4 before making the trip across the pond for a home contest against the Chicago Bears in Week 5. The Vikings will be on the road for two consecutive weeks when they face the Bears in Week 4 followed by a trip to the Big Apple against the New York Giants in Week 5.

HEAD COACHING MATCHUP

JON GRUDEN

Jon Gruden returned as head coach of the Oakland Raiders on Jan. 9, 2018, welcoming back one of the most respected and successful coaches in the storied history of the Silver and Black. Gruden, who was first introduced as head coach of the Raiders over 20 years ago, served four seasons with the Raiders from 1998-2001.

Gruden has compiled a 100-94 (.515) regular season mark as a head coach with the Raiders and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (2002-08), and a 5-4 record (.556) in postseason contests, which includes a victory in Super Bowl XXXVII.

In his first season back on the sideline in 2018, Gruden oversaw the development of quarterback Derek Carr, who established career single-season highs in completions (381), passing yards (4,049) and completion percentage (68.9). Carr also piloted three fourth quarter/overtime game-winning drives on the season and set a franchise record by throwing 332 consecutive passes without an interception, a streak that covered 10 games.

The youngest head coach in the NFL at age 34 upon his initial hire by Raiders Owner Al Davis in 1998, Gruden posted a 38-26 record (.594) and led the Silver and Black to back-to-back AFC West titles in 2000 and 2001. He guided the Raiders to an AFC Championship Game appearance in 2000, a campaign in which the Raiders set a franchise record with 479 points and led the NFL in rushing (154.4 avg.).

In all, Gruden-led teams have claimed five division championships and have recorded six seasons with nine-or-more wins. As a head coach, he has seen 22 different players combine for 40 Pro Bowl selections. In addition, Rich Gannon was tabbed for the Maxwell Club's Bert Bell Award as the league's Most Valuable Player in 2000 and four players who Gruden tutored as a head coach have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame: Jerry Rice (2010), Warren Sapp (2013), Derrick Brooks (2014) and Tim Brown (2015).

Gruden spent seven seasons as head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, finishing his time there as the winningest coach in franchise history by compiling a 57-55 (.509) regular-season record, while leading the Buccaneers to three division titles and a 3-2 mark in the postseason, including a Super Bowl XXXVII victory, becoming the youngest head coach in NFL history to win a Super Bowl.

Prior to beginning his initial tenure in Oakland, Gruden was a seven-year NFL assistant, helping his teams qualify for the playoffs five times. Gruden spent three seasons (1995-97) as offensive coordinator for the Philadelphia Eagles. He was the NFL's youngest offensive coordinator at age 31.

Before joining Philadelphia, Gruden worked for three years at Green Bay from 1992-94. He served as an offensive assistant to head coach Mike Holmgren in 1992 and spent the 1993 and 1994 seasons as Green Bay's wide receivers coach. Gruden worked as offensive assistant to head coach George Seifert with the San Francisco 49ers in 1990.

Born August 17, 1963 in Sandusky, Ohio, Gruden attended South Bend (Ind.) Clay High School and was a three-year letterman at quarterback at the University of Dayton, graduating in 1985 with a degree in communications. Gruden and his wife, Cindy, a former University of Tennessee cheerleader, have three sons, Deuce, who is in his first season as an assistant strength and conditioning coach for the Silver and Black, Michael and Jayson.

MIKE ZIMMER

Mike Zimmer enters his 6th season as Vikings Head Coach in 2019. Zimmer has notched 48 wins including playoffs in his 5 seasons leading the team with a pair of NFC North titles and playoff appearances.

Zimmer was hired as the 9th head coach in Vikings history on Jan. 15, 2014. A veteran defensive coordinator, Zimmer is in his 26th season on an NFL sideline in 2019. In his NFL tenure, Zimmer has been a part of 13 playoff teams and teams that have won 9 Division titles. He coached the Cowboys DBs when Dallas won Super Bowl XXX over Pittsburgh after the 1995 season.

The 2018 Vikings finished a game out of the playoffs but had a talented core that represents the future of the club all post career-best seasons. Danielle Hunter led the team and tied for 4th in the NFL with 14.5 sacks and earned his 1st career Pro Bowl berth. Adam Thielen earned his 2nd Pro Bowl berth and set a career-high with 113 catches for 1,373 yards and teamed with fellow WR Stefon Diggs' 102 catches and 1,021 yards to be the 1st duo in Vikings history to each post 100+ receptions in a season. Newly acquired QB Kirk Cousins threw for the 2nd-most yards (4,298), 2nd-highest completion % (70.1) and 4th-best passer rating (99.7) in Vikings history in his first season with the club while starting all 16 games. Joining in the Pro Bowl honors were Harrison Smith and Anthony Barr, the 4th consecutive honor for each player.

The 2017 Vikings were highlighted by a #1 ranking in total defense was the 1st time the Vikings have achieved the feat since the 1993 season and a testament to Zimmer's scheme and teaching since he inherited the #31 defense in the NFL when he took over as head coach in 2014. The 2017 Vikings ranked 2nd in franchise history for wins in a regular season with 13, trailing only the 15-1 club in 1998. The 2016 Viking battled injuries and adversity throughout the season to finish 8-8 while plugging new talents into the offense, an opportunistic defense with a knack for takeaways (27) and a special teams group posted 3 TDs (2 PR, 1 KOR).

In his 2nd season leading the Vikings in 2015, Zimmer piloted the club to an NFC North title and a Wild Card Playoff berth. The team played clean, smart football down the stretch and won 3 in a row to end the regular season, capturing the division crown at Green Bay and taking the title from the 4-time defending NFC North champs. The Vikings 11-5 mark tied for the 2nd-best record since 2000 and gave the Vikings their 1st North crown since 2009. The 2014 Vikings turned to Bridgewater to start 12 games of his rookie season, and he responded with a 6-6 record, going 3-2 in his final 5 starts, and set virtually every franchise record for a rookie QB.

Zimmer's arrival in Cincinnati for the 2008 season signaled a franchise turnaround on the defensive side of the ball. The Bengals notched top-10 defensive rankings in 2009, '11, '12 and '13 after only cracking the NFL's top 10 once in 18 seasons prior to Zimmer joining the team.

Zimmer played QB and later LB at Illinois State, earning a degree in physical education. He has 3 children - son, Adam, and daughters, Corri and Marki. Vikki Zimmer, Mike's wife of 27 years, passed away in Cincinnati on Oct. 8, 2009. The Pro Football Writers of America recognized Zimmer overcoming the tragedy by voting him the winner of the Halas Award for the season, an annual award presented to the individual in the NFL that overcame the most adversity to succeed. The Zimmer family awards scholarships to deserving students through the Mike Zimmer Foundation, which also hosts an annual football camp for youth and a fund-raising golf tournament.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders — who began play in the American Football League in 1960 — enter their 60th year of professional football competition, including the last 49 as a member of the National Football League.

In six memorable decades — the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and 2010s — the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three world championships of professional football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 22 playoff seasons, finished 35 seasons at .500 or better and played in 44 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s.

The Silver and Black are the only AFC team — and one of just two NFL teams (Minnesota) — to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only three original AFL teams to have captured three world championships of professional football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980.

In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

With four postseason victories, the Raiders were the first of the AFC West teams to win multiple postseason contests in the new millennium by six years.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During the memorable 59 years in Oakland and Los Angeles, the Raiders have won 467 league games, tied 11 and lost 424.

"Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization during the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium as shown by their domination of pro football.

More than 20 of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced six Coaches of the Year.

In addition, 71 Pro Bowl players have earned 202 Pro Bowl selections representing the Silver and Black. In 1970, as the Raiders began their second decade of play, the merger between the AFL and NFL became a reality on the field. In the 1970 through 2012 period of interconference play, the Raiders compiled a remarkable 92-77-1 record against present National Football Conference rivals.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 — "Monday Night Football." The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build a 40-29-1 record in Monday night play. In the 50 years of this series, the Raiders are 18-9-0 in "Monday Night Football" games at home.

Through the decades — the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and now the 2010s — the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports.

Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

MIKE MAYOCK

THE GENERAL MANAGER

Mike Mayock was named General Manager of the Oakland Raiders on Dec. 31, 2018, becoming just the third general manager in Raiders franchise history. Mayock previously served as an Emmy-nominated analyst and draft expert for the NFL Network and handled color commentary duties in the broadcast booth for both college and NFL games before joining the Silver and Black.

Mayock has already applied his expertise in player evaluation to provide his own stamp on the Raiders' roster. Mayock strengthened the roster in the early free agency period, agreeing to terms with tackle Trent Brown and wide receiver Tyrell Williams, while adding versatile defensive back Lamarcus Joyner on the defensive side of the ball.

In his first NFL Draft at the helm, Mayock and Head Coach Jon Gruden used four picks among the top-40 players selected to assemble a group of "foundational" standouts. The Raiders selected defensive lineman Clelin Ferrell from Clemson with the fourth-overall pick before adding Alabama running back Josh Jacobs and Mississippi State safety Johnathan Abram with late first-round selections. Mayock executed two trades on the draft's second day to move back to the 40th-overall spot, selecting Clemson defensive back Trayvon Mullen and netting additional fourth and fifth-round picks. The Raiders were involved in five draft-day trades in total, trading up in the fifth round to pick Clemson wide receiver Hunter Renfrow, helping complete a draft haul that earned plaudits from around the NFL.

Prior to assembling talent for the Raiders, Mayock's NFL Draft analysis had been one of the most respected voices among media, NFL front office personnel and team scouting departments. His expertise featured within the NFL Network's extensive coverage of the NFL Draft, including the show "Path To The Draft," as well as the network's exclusive coverage of the NFL Scouting Combine and the Reese's Senior Bowl.

Outside of the studio, Mayock served as the television analyst for the Philadelphia Eagles' preseason games since 2015. He also served as a game analyst for NFL Network's broadcasts of the Senior Bowl and East-West Allstar game, as well as preseason analyst for the Minnesota Vikings for several seasons.

In 2010, Mayock became the color commentator for NBC's coverage of Notre Dame football, teaming with play-by-play announcer Tom Hammond. In January 2011, he teamed with Hammond to call NBC's broadcast of the NFC Wild Card playoff game between the New Orleans Saints and the Seattle Seahawks. The following year, he called an AFC Wild Card contest featuring the Cincinnati Bengals and the Houston Texans.

Mayock teamed with Brad Nessler to call the NFL Network's Thursday Night Football package from 2011-2013. Prior to joining NFL Network, Mayock served as a college football analyst for ABC Sports (2001-03), Fox Sports Net (2000), and CBS Sports (1996-99). He also covered the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament as a reporter for CBS (1997-99). From 1993-95, Mayock worked on ESPN's coverage of the Canadian Football League.

A 10th-round pick in the 1981 NFL Draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers, Mayock then played for the New York Giants from 1982-83. He is a member of the Boston College Hall of Fame, where he captained both the football and baseball teams. Mayock graduated from Boston College in 1980.

Mayock and his wife Amanda reside in Alameda and have four children (Leigh, Michael, Mackenzie and Jack).

- On Thursdays, the Raiders are 10-11 all-time, including a 3-4 record on Thanksgiving Day.

MILES AND MILES

Factoring in two trips to the Eastern Time Zone and four to the Central Time Zone, the Raiders will once again travel more miles in the NFL this season than any other club. Oakland will log approximately 32,000 miles in 2019, approximately 300 more miles than their 31,732 miles traveled in 2018 and over 1,000 more than their 30,889 miles in 2017. Additionally, the Raiders are the only team in the NFL that will surpass 30,000 miles traveled in 2019.

The team's total of over 32,000 miles traveled exceeds the combined total of the Buffalo Bills, New York Giants and New York Jets' total of approximately 23,500 miles. During the club's 49-day stretch without playing in Oakland, the team will travel approximately 21,300 miles, more than 22 NFL teams will travel for the entire 2019 campaign. The Raiders also have the longest non-international road trip of the season, as they are set to travel just over 5,100 miles roundtrip to play the New York Jets in Week 12.

KEEP YOUR CARR CLEAN

In 2016, the Raiders posted a league-best 18 sacks allowed, the fewest by the club since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger. With 24 sacks surrendered in 2017, the unit tied for the third-fewest sacks given up league wide. In Week 1 of the 2019 campaign, the Raiders made a statement, surrendering zero sacks or hits against the Denver Broncos' well-renowned defensive front. It marked just the third time since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger that the Raiders have held their opponent to zero sacks in the season opener.

BIG ADDITION

In the 2019 free agency period, the Raiders bolstered their offensive line, adding Super Bowl Champion, 6-foot-8, 380-pound offensive tackle Trent Brown into the mix of an already talented group of lineman up front. The addition of Brown gives the Raiders starting front five that averages a height of 6-foot-5 and weight of 336 pounds. Brown has started in 46 of his 49 total appearances in his career and has started in all three postseason contests. Last season, Brown was part of an offensive line that surrendered just one sack in the postseason during the team's Super Bowl run. According to Pro Football Focus, Brown gave up just three sacks in 744 pass-blocking snaps last season. In the postseason, Brown gave up just four pressures and no sacks in 127 pass-blocking situation over the course of the team's three playoff contests.

ANCHORING THE LINE

Since arriving to the club in 2015, C Rodney Hudson has been an integral part of the Raiders success upfront. Dating back to his arrival, the offensive line has surrendered just 130 total sacks, the fifth-fewest allowed in the NFL during that span.

----- NFL SACKS SURRENDERED SINCE 2015 -----

To put it in perspective, no other center with at least 1,000 snaps this season allowed fewer than eight hurries. Hudson led all centers in 2018 with a pass-blocking efficiency of 99.6.

Since his arrival, Hudson has surrendered just one sack since Week 1 of 2015 (2,678 snaps), per PFF. The Raiders also added C Jordan Devey in free agency this past offseason, who ranked second in the NFL in 2018 with a pass-blocking efficiency grade of 99.4, giving the Raiders a 1-2 ranked tandem in the aforementioned category.

Mo Sacks, Mo Problems

A disruptive force in just his rookie season, Hurst's four sacks in 2018 ranked tied for 10th among all rookie defenders. Dating back to 1993, Hurst's three sacks through Week 10 were tied for fifth-most among defenders drafted in the fifth round or later. Since 2013, no rookie defender drafted in the fifth round or later has compiled more sacks through their first 10 games. Shown below is a chart of top rookie performers from the 2018 season.

----- 2018 ROOKIE SACK LEADERS -----

On top of that, only one true defensive tackle in club history has recorded more sacks in his rookie campaign than Hurst (Scott Davis, 5.5, 1988), as his four sacks are the most by a rookie defensive tackle since Tommy Kelly's four in 2004.

DEREK CARR

THROWING FOR SIX

Carr has enjoyed one of the most prolific starts to a career in NFL history, especially when it comes to finding the end zone. His 53 TDs rank second most by any NFL player through his first two seasons, trailing only Dan Marino (68). And although his 2016 season was cut short due to injury, he continued his stellar start to his career by throwing 28 more TDs in his third season. His 124 TDs are also 11th-most in the NFL since 2014.

Carr crossed the 100-touchdown barrier just 60 games into his NFL career, the quickest to reach 100 passing scores in Raiders history. By doing so in his first four seasons, Carr joined Dan Marino, Peyton Manning, Andrew Luck and Russell Wilson as the only quarterbacks in NFL history to toss 100 touchdowns through their first four seasons in the league.

ALL-TIME TOUCHDOWN LIST

Now in Year 6, Carr ranks highly among the Raider greats in many statistical categories. With two touchdowns in last season's Week 11 tilt, Carr climbed the list in another one of those categories, as he passed Rich Gannon for the third on the team's list for most passing touchdowns.

JOSH JACOBS

JOSH JACOBS

With the 24th overall selection in the 2019 NFL Draft, the Oakland Raiders selected RB Josh Jacobs to be their bell-cow back out of the University of Alabama. After earning the starting role at the conclusion of his first training camp, Jacobs made his rookie debut on Monday Night Football at home against the Denver Broncos.

With 23 carries for 85 yards and two rushing scores, while adding one reception for 28 yards, Jacobs became the first player since LaDainian Tomlinson (2001) to tally two rushing TDs and 100 yards from scrimmage in his rookie debut. Jacobs also became the first player in franchise history to score two rushing TDs in his NFL debut. He is currently tied for the NFL lead in rushing TDs and ranks eighth in rushing yards with 85 yards. His 85 yards on the ground ranks third in franchise history among all rookies in their NFL debut.

SPECIAL TEAMS

ALL-TIME RAIDER

In his first season with the Silver and Black, K Daniel Carlson made it one to remember. After a disappointing start to his career as a fifth-round selection by the Minnesota Vikings, Carlson joined the Raiders, refueled and poised, ahead of Week 8 on the team's Bye Week. The rookie out of Auburn appeared in 10 contests for the team, making 16-of-17 field goals for a 94.1 field goal percentage to mark a new franchise record in just his inaugural season in the National Football League. Carlson connected on all 18 extra point attempts last season and earned AFC Special Teams Player of the Week honors in Week 11.

Among kickers with at least 15 attempts in 2018, Carlson's 94.1 field goal percentage with the Raiders ranked fourth across the NFL. Among kickers with at least 15 PATs, Carlson was one of just four to finish with a perfect percentage, finishing 18/18 with the Raiders in 2018.

CLUTCH CARLSON

In Week 11 of the campaign, Carlson earned his first career game-winner and AFC Special Teams Player of the Week Award when he booted a 35-yard field goal through the uprights as time expired to defeat the Cardinals, 23-21. It marks the team's second such award of the season en route to three overall. Carlson's stat line from his 'special' day can be found below.

Stat line: Connected on all three FG attempts from 49, 21 and 35 yards out, while booting four of his five kickoffs into the end zone for touchbacks and making both PATs

- His 35-yard FG as time expired was his first career game-winner
  - His FG was one of just two game-winning kicks with time expiring among AFC teams in Week 11
- His 49-yard FG was a career long
- His three FG makes tied for second-most in the NFL and tied for first in the AFC in Week 11
- His 11 points scored tied for fourth-most among kickers in Week 11 and tied for first among AFC kickers
  - His 11 points scored marked a new career high
- His 80% touchback percentage on kickoffs ranks fifth in the NFL and second in the AFC in Week 11

CONNECTING FROM DEEP

Carlson was fantastic for the Raiders in 2018, and perfect in some aspects. In just his first season in the league, Carlson was perfect from 50 yards and beyond.

Carlson was good one field goals from 50 yards on three different times this season, while connecting on eight-of-nine field goals from at least 40 yards out.

In 2018, there were 25 kickers who attempted at least three field goals from 50 yards and beyond, but only two of them were perfect on each of their attempts: Daniel Carlson and Chandler Catanzaro.

Harris' performances that earned him two Special Teams Player of the Week awards are highlighted below.

AFC SPECIAL TEAMS PLAYER OF THE WEEK - WEEK 16, 2018

Stat line: Recorded two punt returns for 106 yards including one touchdown, two kickoff returns for 46 yards and one special teams tackle.

Raiders' defense isn't as bad as it looked against Chiefs — honest

By Jerry McDonald

September 16, 2019

ALAMEDA — Despite the ridiculous amount of yardage put up by Kansas City quarterback Patrick Mahomes in the second quarter, perhaps the Raiders' defense isn't as bad as it looked.

That's the Raiders' story Monday and they're sticking to it they day after a 28-10 loss to the Kansas City Chiefs at the Coliseum.

"When you see us and we're matching one-on-one against those guys we did well," slot corner Lamarcus Joyner said. "But when we did a few different things where they kind of schemed us to make us communicate they got big chunk plays. Anybody can turn on the film and look at us going man to man with that speed that they have. They only scored those big touchdowns in zone coverages. It's something we have to get better at."

The Raiders gave up 443 yards passing to Mahomes Sunday at the Coliseum, with 278 of those coming in a 28-0 second-quarter explosion that decided the game.

On the other hand, the Chiefs had three scoreless quarters, although some of that in the second half can be attributed to coach Andy Reid dialing things back a bit with the game in hand.

As gaudy as Mahomes' numbers were, the Raiders have demonstrated they can be a younger, faster, better tackling defense than they've been in recent years.

"I think we're getting better. We have some more speed. I thought we made some great one-on-one tackles yesterday," coach Jon Gruden said at his weekly press conference. "That's the thing about the Chiefs — they make you defend every blade of grass. Laterally, with the (run-pass options) and jet sweep threats, and vertically. This kid Mahomes can drop bombs on you from all over the field."

The Raiders have the look of a solid run defense, another area that has been lacking since seemingly forever. The Raiders rank fifth in the NFL at 63 yards per game and fifth in yards per carry at 2.8. That's huge going in to a Week 3 game in Minnesota against the Vikings, whose running back Dalvin Cook leads the NFL in rushing with 265 yards.

Even in a pass-happy era of football, run defense is considered a staple of good overall defense and it usually leads to good things. What Mahomes did with an offense that rushed 22 times for 31 yards was unusual.

Linebacker Nick Morrow, asked what he would have thought going in to the game if the Chiefs were bottled up to that extent on the ground, replied, "I would have liked our chances a lot — and I would have said they wouldn't score more than 10 points. But they did."

With the Raiders doing their job up front against the run, Joyner said it's incumbent upon the secondary to get its issues worked out.

"That young D-line we have, (Vontaze) Burfict in the middle, Tahir (Whitehead), those guys do a really good job getting to the ball," Joyner said. "Now we know as a secondary we just have to master our techniques and fundamentals in practice, knowing we can hang our hats on the D-line and linebackers stopping the run. Now the games are going to be on us."

INCOGNITO RETURNS, JACKSON GETTING CLOSE?

Left guard Richie Incognito was back in the building, having served a two-week suspension under the NFL's personal conduct policy. He politely declined comment and said he'd talk later in the week. Gruden was glad to have him back, and also said right guard Gabe Jackson is making strides from an MCL strain on Aug. 8 during training camp.

"That's a big plus for us," Gruden said of Incognito's return. "And Gabe Jackson by the way is getting better every single day. I don't think he'll play this week but he's getting closer and closer to returning. So to have Richie back gives us a jolt and hopefully sooner than later we'll get Gabe back as well." Left guard Richie Incognito has served a two-game suspension and was back with the Raiders Sunday. Initial estimates were the Jackson would likely miss at least a quarter of the season and possibly return in London against the Chicago Bears on Oct. 6. The Raiders are in Minnesota Sunday and then Indianapolis the following week.

CALLING ON ARDEN

Arden Key played extensively as a rookie because of a lack of depth, and the hope was he'd emerge as a pass rush threat this season with fewer snaps and an off-season of work. Through two games, it hasn't worked out that way. He's played 54 snaps in two games and doesn't have a sack and not much in the way of pressure, either. Gruden said the Raiders deployed their front in a way to slow the Chiefs' run and it may have detracted from the pass rush. But he also said he wanted more and needed more from Key.

"We've got to get more out of Arden. I've said that for long enough," Gruden said. "Arden, if you're listening, we've got to get you going. He's a good player. He's had a good training camp. He's healthy . . . but Arden's going to get home, Arden's going to take off hopefully soon."

IN SEARCH OF GRANT

Wide receiver Ryan Grant played 49 snaps and was targeted five times with one catch for minus-2 yards. He also had a false start. Hunter Renfrow also played 49 snaps and had four catches for 30 yards but also had a drop and a false start.

"We've got to do a better job of winning when it's one-on-one," Gruden said. "We had some problems with the footing yesterday. I think Hunter Renfrow fell down four or five times, slipped. Certainly we've got to get more out of Ryan Grant and we've got to game plan better. We'll start right there."

TAKING SHOTS

The Raiders had little downfield success against Kansas City other than a 43-yard pass interference call on the Chiefs that set up the lone touchdown. Not throwing downfield enough has been an occasional criticism of Carr, who had 23 completions in 38 attempts but only 198 yards against the Chiefs.

The Raiders didn't have nearly the down-and-distance advantage as in Week 1 against Denver, which goes a long way toward Gruden calling a more aggressive game.

“We called a couple other shots and obviously the ball didn’t go down the field,” Gruden said. “We did try to stay aggressive. We did fall behind terribly in the down and distance and Chris Jones and (Frank) Clark don’t let you hold it a long time. There were a number of blitzes we had to pick up. It was a little more challenging than just calling up shots.”

INJURY UPDATE

Right tackle Trent Brown (knee) didn’t finish the game and will be evaluated. Others who came out hurting — although none are believed to be serious — include wide receiver Tyrell Williams (hip pointer), running back Josh Jacobs (groin) and return specialist Dwayne Harris (ankle).

Raiders blitzed by Chiefs in second quarter, lose 28-10

By Matt Kawahara

Sept. 15, 2019

For three quarters on Sunday, the Raiders’ defense held a high-octane Chiefs offense mostly in check.

In the other quarter, Kansas City ran wild.

The Raiders took a 10-point lead into the second quarter only to be left gazing into the vapor trail left by the Chiefs, who scored 28 points in just more than 14 minutes en route to a 28-10 win at the Coliseum.

“We ran into a buzz saw for about seven minutes today,” Raiders head coach Jon Gruden said.

It ripped through what looked like a promising early defensive strategy. The Raiders began the game asking four cornerbacks — Gareon Conley, Daryl Worley, Lamarcus Joyner and Trayvon Mullen — to go against the Chiefs’ speedy receiving options with a single safety providing help over the top.

The Chiefs totaled 39 yards in the first quarter. But on the first play on the second quarter, quarterback and reigning MVP Patrick Mahomes found receiver Demarcus Robinson for a 44-yard touchdown.

It ignited a quarter in which the Chiefs totaled 287 yards, as Mahomes completed 12 of 17 passes for 278 yards and four touchdowns.

“We had one breakdown in coverage, but a couple of those were just incredible throws and catches also,” Gruden said. “We didn’t get enough pressure. We let Mahomes move around back there and cock his arm. When he gets an opportunity to do that, he can drop them in there no matter where they are.”

Mahomes in the quarter had touchdown passes of 44 and 39 yards to Robinson, 42 yards to receiver Mecole Hardman and 27 yards to tight end Travis Kelce. According to the Associated Press, Mahomes is the first player to throw for 278 or more yards in one quarter since Drew Brees in 2008.

“We were just hitting on the plays,” Mahomes said. “It was the same game plan, and we called the same plays. We hit a lot of them in the second quarter.”

Joyner said the Raiders' defensive lapses were "a communication thing."

"I think the guys in this room, when you look at the one-on-one matchups, we won for the most part," Joyner said. "They had two plays that we gave to them by miscommunications."

On the Chiefs' first touchdown, Robinson lined up against and ran past Joyner, who held out his arms in question as though he thought he had coverage help.

Hardman's 42-yard score, on a 3rd-and-20, also came with Joyner lined up over him. Hardman pulled away from Joyner, then worked to the inside of deep safety Curtis Riley to get open.

Asked after the game what the miscommunications on defense were, Joyner declined specifics.

3 notables

DE Benson Mayowa: He had 1.5 sacks and has 3.5 in two games. The Raiders' individual sacks leader last season, Maurice Hurst, had four.

RB Josh Jacobs: The rookie had a 51-yard run and averaged 8.3 yards on his 12 rush attempts.

WR Demarcus Robinson: The Chiefs' wideout had six catches for 172 yards, an average of 28.7 yards per reception.

"That's something we have to talk about as a group," Joyner said. "We had a game plan and, like I said, miscommunications. That's something in-house that we have to correct."

Kelce's touchdown catch over safety Karl Joseph capped a five-play, 94-yard drive. After the Raiders then went three-and-out, the Chiefs got the ball back with 47 seconds before halftime. They needed seven seconds to score, with Robinson beating Conley deep.

"I think some of it was on us," Joseph said. "Some of it they had the right play call in the right situation. It was a little bit of both."

Joseph said the Raiders "had a great game plan" and the Chiefs "made some changes and were able to get into some of our coverages."

Mahomes was sacked twice in the second half but had plenty of time in the second quarter to change the game.

"You have to blame the coaches for that," Gruden said. "We got to him a couple of times, but not consistently enough. They do a great job offensively with all the empty-backfield sets ... And Mahomes can reset and throw the ball from any platform I've ever seen. It's a combination of a great young quarterback with a scheme that really suits him. And we've got to do a better job as well."

Raiders takeaways: What we learned in 28-10 Week 2 loss to Chiefs

By Scott Bair

Sept. 15, 2019

OAKLAND – The Raiders opened this season with a two-game homestand. They won't return to Oakland Coliseum until Nov. 3, with five straight contests played outside the East Bay.

The Raiders have four traditional road games and a home game given to London against Chicago, a difficult stretch that could define their entire season.

Oakland enters the five-game stretch at .500 after expected results. They beat Denver to open the campaign and got beat 28-10 by the vastly superior Kansas City Chiefs on Sunday afternoon.

The Raiders were overmatched in this one, as you'd expect. They beat a bad Broncos team, as you'd expect. That leaves the real Raiders somewhere in between those extremes, with a long road stretch to establish firmer standing within the league and the conference.

Here are three takeaways from Sunday's loss:

Chiefs provide harsh reality check

The Raiders were riding high after a big Monday night victory over the Denver Broncos. They understood the Broncos are rebuilding and weren't a super tough test, but they controlled that contest and gained confidence from its results.

Kansas City brought the Silver and Black to earth on Sunday with a thrashing that showed how much work's left ahead in terms of execution and talent acquisition.

The Raiders got faster this offseason, but still can't keep up with Kansas City. The Chiefs skill players could form world-class track team, and those guys roasted the Raiders secondary throughout a game-changing second quarter.

The Raiders got more offensive firepower, but couldn't keep up with Kansas City's scoring bursts. Tyrell Williams was just okay and Darren Waller wasn't targeted enough.

The pass rush was still nowhere to be found, and there isn't enough receiving prowess outside the pass catchers previously mentioned.

Most competition is easier than the Chiefs, and the Raiders could hang tough with them, but it won't help contend with the Kansas City, the unquestioned class of the AFC West.

Hot start squandered

The Raiders jumped out to a two-score lead early in the first quarter, and looked poised to upset the juggernaut Chiefs. They had a solid offensive game plan, churned out chunk yards and were flying to the ball on defense.

One blown coverage turned the tide. Demarcus Robinson was wide open on a 44-yard touchdown drive that started a Kansas City surge that lasted through halftime.

The Raiders offense struggled moving the chains and Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes kept striking deep while scoring 28 unanswered points. He had 313 yards and three touchdowns in the first half. Yeah. You read that right. The first freaking half.

The Raiders secondary had no answers for Robinson or tight end and noted Raider killer Travis Kelce, as Kansas City scored at will while establishing a three-score lead.

Josh Jacobs is the real deal

It was difficult, but we found a bright light in Sunday's disappointment. Rookie running back Josh Jacobs looked smooth and savvy as advertised, proving worthy of the featured role given to him during his rookie year.

The first-round draft pick was especially good on a 51-yard scamper that started inside and broke out down the right sideline. He showed great vision and burst, with a physical finishing move that gained some extra yards.

There's a major dropoff between him and the other Raiders backs, and Jacobs probably should've seen more than the 12 touches he got in this contest. He gained 99 yards in this game, and has the talent required to pace an offense and control a game with steady runs.

Sunday's game poked holes in other aspects of the Raiders offense, but Jacobs stood tall in an otherwise disappointed effort.

Raiders fall 28-10 to red-hot Mahomes and Chiefs

By Myles Simmons

Sept. 15, 2019

OAKLAND, Calif. — The Raiders held a 10-0 lead after the first quarter, but the rest of Sunday's game belonged to quarterback Patrick Mahomes and the Kansas City Chiefs. He threw four touchdown passes in the second quarter, and the Chiefs beat the Raiders 28-10.

Mahomes recorded 278 yards passing in that quarter — a Chiefs franchise record — and the most passing yards in a quarter since Saints quarterback Drew Brees threw for 294 against the Atlanta Falcons in 2008.

"We ran into a buzz saw for about seven minutes today," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said.

While Kansas City did score three of its touchdowns within the last six minutes of the second quarter, the onslaught began with the period's first snap. On that play, Mahomes threw a 44-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Demarcus Robinson, who was wide open down the left sideline.

After that score and a Raiders punt, the Chiefs went 94 yards in 14 plays, scoring on a 42-yard touchdown pass from Mahomes to wide receiver Mecole Hardman. On that drive, first-round pick Clelin Ferrell committed a neutral-zone infraction on third-and-4 to give the Chiefs a free first down. The Chiefs scored their TD on third-and-20.

Kansas City's third touchdown of the quarter came on a 27-yard pass from Mahomes to tight end Travis Kelce on a second-and-17 play. Then, after a Raiders three-and-out, Mahomes took one play to hit Robinson for a 39-yard touchdown with 40 seconds left in the first half.

"He was making plays, making throws down the field," cornerback Daryl Worley said. "We've just got to be better in those types of situations."

"It's a combination of a great young quarterback with a scheme that really suits him," Gruden said. "We have to do a better job as well."

With the Chiefs failing to score again, the Raiders had opportunities to cut into the lead. But quarterback Derek Carr — who surpassed quarterback Ken Stabler to become the all-time franchise passing leader on Sunday — threw a pair of interceptions to end any threat.

Rookie running back Josh Jacobs started his team's first possession of the third quarter with a 51-yard run. On first-and-goal from the 4, Carr fired a high pass to Tyrell Williams in the end zone. But cornerback Bashaud Breeland broke away from Williams' route and made an easy interception.

Carr said the turnover resulted from a miscommunication between him and Williams. Carr said he signaled for Williams to run a fade route, initially stopping short of saying Williams missed the signal. But Carr confirmed that was the case when answering another question.

"We were just on a different page," Carr said.

Carr took real issue with the second interception. On second-and-7 from the Oakland 47, wide receiver Ryan Grant was flagged for offensive pass interference after running into Chiefs safety Tyrann Mathieu. The Chiefs declined the penalty, since cornerback Charvarius Ward caught Carr's pass intended for Grant, ending the Raiders' drive.

Carr intimated that Grant may have caught the pass if he had not been interfered with by Mathieu. "They tackled our receiver, yet it's a penalty on us," Carr said.

"This is changing outcomes of a football game, right? That shouldn't happen. That blows my mind. When things like that happen, I get a little upset."

The Raiders never had another serious scoring threat, with the Chiefs using an 11-play drive to run out the last 6:25 of the fourth quarter.

Before the second-quarter gloom and doom, the Raiders scored on their first two possessions. Carr connected with tight end Derek Carrier and Williams for a pair of big gains before Daniel Carlson kicked a 28-yard field goal. Then the Raiders took advantage of a 43-yard defensive pass interference penalty to score their sole touchdown, a 4-yard pass from Carr to Williams.

But after that, the Raiders could never find a consistent rhythm on offense — their final points coming with 4:46 left in the first quarter.

Raiders' defense torched by Mahomes in 2nd-quarter barrage

By Josh Dubow

Sept. 15, 2019

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Adding speed to the defense to match up with Kansas City's dynamic playmakers was a priority this offseason for the Oakland Raiders.

For one dizzying stretch in the second quarter the improved defense couldn't catch up, leading to four long touchdown passes by Patrick Mahomes that sent Oakland to a 28-10 loss to Kansas City on Sunday.

"He was the MVP for a reason," Raiders cornerback Daryl Worley said. "He made some hell of a (good) throws. We've got to be better in situations like that and be able to make those plays on the ball."

The Raiders started fast, forcing punts on the opening two drives for the first scoreless opening quarter of Mahomes' 19 career starts. They finished OK by keeping the Chiefs off the scoreboard in the second half for the first time in Mahomes' career as well.

The second quarter was a thing of nightmares as Chiefs receivers burned past defenders, exploited blown coverages and capitalized when Mahomes was able to extend plays in the pocket.

It added up to 278 yards passing — the most in any quarter in nearly 11 years — the four touchdowns, and one stretch that included five straight attempts that went for at least 27 yards. Three of those went for touchdowns.

"We had a breakdown in one coverage, I know that, but a couple of those were just incredible throws and catches also," coach Jon Gruden said. "You have to tip your hat to them. We didn't get enough pressure. We let Mahomes move around back there, cock his arm. And when he gets an opportunity to do that he can drop them in there no matter where they are."

The breakdown came on the first touchdown when Demarcus Robinson sped through the secondary and was all alone for a 44-yard score on the first play in the second quarter.

Kansas City didn't slow down from there, scoring on two straight drives of more than 90 yards, with Mahomes finding rookie Mecole Hardman on a 42-yards strike and Travis Kelce on a 27-yarder that made it 21-10.

The Raiders then went three-and-out late in the half, setting the stage for the fourth TD on a 39-yard pass from Mahomes to Robinson, who thrived as the Oakland defense paid more attention to Kelce and Sammy Watkins with speedster Tyreek Hill out with an injury.

“He’s got a great arm and they’ve got a lot of weapons. Up front, we have to get home,” rookie defensive end Maxx Crosby said. “That’s basically it. The back end can only hold up for so long. We just have to keep getting pressure. They had a second quarter where they started throwing the ball deep and they won some 50-50 balls. That’s on us up front. We’ve got to get home.”

The poor defensive quarter was even more costly because the offense stalled after scoring 10 points on the opening two drives. Derek Carr looked crisp early, leading the Raiders to a field goal and then throwing a 4-yard TD pass to Tyrell Williams on the second drive to make it 10-0.

The Raiders didn’t score again, gaining two first downs on four drives during the Kansas City barrage, and then throwing two interceptions in the third quarter to end any comeback attempt.

“There was a time when we couldn’t get a first down and they jumped up on us, and then that changes a whole bunch of stuff,” Carr said.

HC Jon Gruden

THE ATHLETIC

What's your favorite Jon Gruden story? Players, coaches share

By Greg Auman

Aug. 6, 2019

HBO's "Hard Knocks" show is following the Oakland Raiders this summer, and it premieres tonight. In anticipation of what's sure to be some entertaining television, thanks in no small part to head coach Jon Gruden, we reached out to former coaches, players and colleagues from all steps of his career.

The question was simple: What's your favorite Jon Gruden story? And from his earliest days in coaching, even his modest playing days in college, to his long run on "Monday Night Football," the answers didn't disappoint.

Dayton coach: Gruden saw this coming as a backup QB at Dayton

Gruden played one year of football at Muskingum University in Ohio, then transferred to Dayton, where he had an unremarkable career as a backup quarterback for then-head coach Mike Kelly, now an assistant to the athletic director. Kelly estimates he's introduced Gruden 50 times at Flyers events and various Hall of Fame presentations over the years. Even 30-plus years later, Kelly remembers that Gruden had a very clear vision of what was ahead.

Jon was and still is, obviously, a very goal-oriented person, somewhat of a perfectionist in everything he did. Sometimes it got him into trouble. Not in a bad way, but he put so much pressure on himself that I couldn't get him to relax.

I would sit down with each one of our athletes, twice a year, and we go through their goals and objectives. What do you want to do today? What do you want to do this week? This month? This year? And after they graduate, I sit down with them. One of the questions I'd ask seniors who were leaving was, "What are you going to be doing 10 years from now?" Tell me exactly where you're going to be and what you're going to be doing.

Jon was sitting across from me, one on one in my office. He stood up, pointed his finger at me, and he says "Coach, I don't know what I'm going to be doing 10 years from now, but by the age of 40, I'm going to be the head football coach at Michigan." I thought "Oh, my gosh, this little guy, he's struggling to play at little old Dayton. How in the world is he going to be the head coach at Michigan?" End of story, at the age of 39, I won't name the university, but he turns down a major, major university — says "I'm very good where I'm at." The bottom line is he's goal-oriented, stayed on his track, had his goals in order and knew what he had to do. And, by golly, he did it.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The other story I always enjoy telling is he comes into my office his junior year (while) he's fighting to get playing time as a quarterback. I've heard him say he was the backup to the backup as a quarterback. He said, "Coach, I'm a pretty good punt returner." I'd never looked at him as a punt returner; he was a quarterback. I told him I thought he was all-state, the No. 1 punt returner in the state of Indiana. He said, "I was pretty darn good, and I'd like to have a crack at that back there."

I looked at him, stared at him, and said, "You want to go into coaching, right?" He said, "Yes, sir." I said, "When one of your quarterbacks wants to be a punt returner, what are you going to do? Are you going to stick your quarterback out there as your punt returner?" He didn't say a word, stood up, turned around and walked back out the door. In other words, "Right, Coach. I don't think it's a good idea."

Bill Maskill: Gruden got $15,000 and a room at the Drury Inn

Gruden's first full-time coaching job was in 1988 at Division II Southeast Missouri State, about two hours south of St. Louis in Cape Girardeau. Maskill, who still coaches at Midwestern State, hired Gruden and, when Gruden left, replaced him a year later with future Lions head coach and longtime NFL coordinator Marty Mornhinweg.

It was my first head-coaching job, and I inherited a staff, but one coach left the day I got there. My AD says, "You can hire a quarterbacks coach for $15,000." Another character involved in this was a guy by the name of Gary Horton, who was more instrumental in Jon's progress going up the ladder than anybody knows. Gary and I worked together at Arizona State in '78-'79. I called him, and he's going to all these different colleges, seeing all these coaches, and I say "Do you have anybody? I'm looking for a good, young quarterbacks coach." He says "I've got the guy for you."

It's my first job. I didn't know what the hell I was doing. I called his high school coach, called his Dayton coach, made enough calls to find out about Jon. What sold me is Gary tells me, "If you don't hire him, you'll wish you would have. He's going places." So Jon's in Knoxville, he's probably two and a half hours from Nashville, and it's another two and a half hours from Nashville to Cape Girardeau. So a five-to-six-hour drive, with a time difference, we're an hour earlier. I get to the office at 7 in the morning, and Jon is sitting on the steps, waiting for me for his first interview. I said, "What time did you get here?" and he said, "About 6:50." So he had to leave at about midnight to get there. You know, he doesn't sleep. He's one of those guys. That struck me quite a bit.

This is spring practice now, and I tell him we can put him on salary July 1 for $15,000, but in the meantime, all I can do is get you a motel room at the Drury Inn. He says, "OK, I'll do it." He goes back home, packs his bag, comes back. We put him up at the Drury, so he's getting a free breakfast there, and he coaches spring ball. During spring ball, he wrote up after every practice, graded the quarterbacks, the receivers, the tight ends and the running backs, all by himself. Jon did all that, put it on a grid sheet, made comments. We all stayed late, but he stayed later than most of us and got to the office earlier. That's impressive, and then when we got done with spring ball, to get some money just to live because we weren't paying him anything, he started working for a carpet company, tearing up carpet.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

He made the sacrifices to go. Jon and I aren't close. I haven't talked to him in forever, but he reminded me of myself at that age. He had all the answers. He knew everything. Which is what everybody does when they're young coaches and they don't realize other people have knowledge. Jon has surpassed whatever I've done. Everybody asks if I knew Jon could be where he is today, and at that age, I really didn't know. I knew he was a worker, knew he was dedicated, knew he had passion. I was a hardass in my first job, and he was a hardass. We went back and forth, but he brought a lot to the table.

Everybody's running the I-formation, and Jon comes in with three wide receivers, which we hadn't done. Even though he wasn't the coordinator and he wasn't ready to be the coordinator, he had a lot of impact as to what we were doing. He coached the quarterbacks like a defensive line coach. He was hard on those guys. He was 24. They loved him.

I really wished we could have been closer than we are today. He obviously has a wealth of knowledge, knows the game inside and out, is a workaholic and has been very successful.

Harris, the former Pitt and Stanford coach, was the offensive coordinator at Tennessee in 1986 when Gruden got his first coaching job as a graduate assistant with the Vols. He'd later hire Gruden in 1989 as his tight ends coach at Pacific, which shut down its program in 1995.

Gary Horton contacted me about Jon coming down from Dayton for an interview at Tennessee. I said, "Sure, have him come down." He came down and he was dressed Midwest style vs. Southern/Tennessee style, almost like he had high heels on, really high shoes. He was all dressed up — sportcoat — and he was looking good. We teased him later about not being the tallest guy in the world. Neither am I.

Jon has an amazing ability to see and remember. Even at that young age, amazing. One thing I remember is Daryl Dickey had been our quarterback when we won the Sugar Bowl (in January 1986), beat Miami when they were No. 2 in the nation. We beat them 35-7 and Daryl was the MVP. Jon had gone off and gotten a full-time job (at Southeast Missouri State), and Daryl had been a GA, was helping me coach the quarterbacks.

Jon and his wife-to-be Cindy came to our final game (in 1988). It was so funny because Jon had been away for a year, and Daryl, who sat next to me in the press box, knowing how astute Jon is at helping, gave Jon his seat. "Hey, Coach, you sit here." Daryl gets out of the way, offers to get Cokes or waters or whatever we were drinking. Jon took over as my eyes in the sky, and it was like he'd never missed a day. It was amazing. Really impressive for being away for a year, to come back and act like it was the next day. Jon's very, very smart. He might make you think he's not, but he's very smart, very quick, great memory, great eyes, great recall, everything. He moved out of SEMO's offense and right back into our offense — terminology and everything — and did an unbelievable job in the press box. I was shocked.

At University of the Pacific, he was my tight ends coach. I thought it would be the best opportunity for him to learn offensive line play with tight ends as part of the run game and part of the passing game. He didn't like that initially. He wanted to coach receivers. I was coaching the quarterbacks, so he knew that wasn't an option. It was a good upbringing for him. Maybe someday he'll admit it. I don't know.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

We opened at (Pitt). The first pass we ever threw to a guy Jon Gruden coached, hit him right in the butt. Guy didn't even turn around. Our quarterback, who Jon recruited, hit the tight end right in the butt, never turned around. That was Jon's inaugural event in major college football.

George Seifert: Gruden learned from the best

Gruden's first NFL job was as an entry-level offensive assistant with the San Francisco 49ers in 1990, working on the staff of George Seifert, who had won a Super Bowl in his first year as head coach a year earlier. The Niners opened the year 10-0, finished 14-2 as division champs and lost in the NFC Championship Game to a Giants team that would win the Super Bowl a week later.

Anybody that was involved with the organization, particularly coaches, were impressed by how Coach Gruden always worked so hard to continue to gain knowledge about the sport. We had a particularly talented offensive line coach in Bobb McKittrick, and each time you'd pass Bobb McKittrick's meeting room as he was meeting with his offensive linemen, Jon was always in that meeting, involved in that meeting somehow.

He studied the offensive line blocking schemes that were utilized at that time as much or more than anyone I ever remembered. One of the reasons for the success of our offense was the ability of Bobb McKittrick to turn a fellow that might have been an average player — Bobb could coach him up, you might say, and turn that man into a talented offensive lineman.

(Gruden) made quite an impression on Mike Holmgren when Mike was an assistant on our staff at the time, and that's the reason they worked together for a period, along with Ray Rhodes. I'm totally retired and live in a different world right now than does Jon, but he's doing a fine job, and I look forward to following his success.

Ty Detmer: Don't forget Two Jet Flanker Drive

Gruden spent another six years as an NFL assistant, with the Packers and Holmgren from 1992-94, then with the Eagles as Rhodes' offensive coordinator from 1995-97. At both stops, he worked with former Heisman Trophy-winning quarterback Ty Detmer, who helped the Eagles to a 10-6 record and a playoff appearance in 1996.

His energy sticks out to me. Always the first guy in the building, and he would always tell us stories about going through the tollbooth from Jersey to Philly at 3:30 in the morning. He was one of those guys who didn't sleep a lot during the season.

In Green Bay, he was a quality-control coach the first year, helped with the receivers, but I can remember him coming by in minicamp, and he's grilling me as we're in stretch: "Give me a formation for Two Jet Flanker Drive." He was that type of guy, always compiling film of plays he saw and he liked, even at that time. Then he became the receiver coach and had a lot of passion with those guys. He was football, 24 hours a day.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

That first stint in Green Bay, working his way up, Ray knew the football mind he had, the work he put in, so when he got the head coaching job, he felt real comfortable taking him to Philly as the offensive coordinator. You could tell a difference, whereas as a quality-control (coach), you're not as likely to be as vocal with the leadership qualities. When I got to Philly, you saw how he commanded the room and had the respect of the guys. You could see the difference and how he'd grown into that. I didn't have the opportunity to play for him as a head coach, but as a coordinator in Philly, he pretty much had the run of the offense.

I heard when he got to Tampa, some of the play calls were pretty lengthy (1:40 mark here), even more so than in Philly. I remember seeing a clip of Chris (Simms) and feeling bad for him. He kind of let him have it, but that was just his way of letting you know, "You've got to learn this stuff." That first minicamp, you're trying to remember everything, and they're throwing everything at you to shellshock you into studying more. People might think he's putting on a show, but that's just how he is — all the time.

Tyrone Wheatley: An ugly jersey number, a great run in Oakland

Gruden was only 33 when he became head coach of the Oakland Raiders, and after two 8-8 seasons, they won back-to-back division titles in 2000-01. A big, physical running back, Wheatley, after four seasons with the Giants, had his best years with Gruden, rushing for a combined 1,982 yards and 17 touchdowns in 1999-2000, all while wearing No. 47, a nontraditional number for a running back. Now 47 years old, Wheatley is in his first season as head coach at Morgan State.

He was very instrumental in my development as a player. He was always after me. His whole thing was, "You've got to grow! You can't just run two or three plays, Wee-Wee. You have to grow."

My very, very first time I met Gruden, I was leaving Miami, and I worked out for Oakland. He came out and said, "I have to see this guy Wheatley. I have to see what he's about." I ran my 40 and said, "I want to stay here and see what you're about. I'm not going on my next visit." He says "OK. But I tell you this: You better be prepared." I go in the locker room to get my equipment, and the equipment guy gives me (jersey number) 47. He says, "Listen, this is all we have. Once we make the cuts, we'll give you another jersey."

Gruden goes: "Make some cuts? Hell, he might be the next guy getting cut. Don't get too comfortable." I said, "Up until this point, I haven't been comfortable. My career has been ugly." And he says "Yeah, well, you're ugly." I said, "If that's the case, I'm keeping 47." He says, "Aw, shit, don't take that ugly number." I told him, "Just because you don't like it, I'm keeping it." So that was the birth of 47. People always ask me, "Why in the world would you wear 47?" That was the reason 47 came about. It was ugly, and I kept it. I made it work for me, work for the Raiders. I love the guy, man. He's a good dude and he means a lot to me.

Jay Gruden: Big brother was competitive at a young age

Jay Gruden followed in his brother's footsteps in becoming an NFL head coach with the Washington Redskins, and he got his NFL start as an assistant on Jon's staff with the Buccaneers. His Redskins have finished third in their division in each of the last three years. If they can both keep their jobs, the brothers' teams will face off during the 2021 season in Las Vegas.

Well, he's always been really competitive. I played on one of his baseball teams when I was 9 and he was 12. It was 0-0, there was a guy on first and second, two outs in the last inning. I was playing second base as a 9-year-old, and a guy hit a ground ball right to me, and it went right through my legs, and we lost the game. So he let me have it then, as a little 9-year-old. He got on me pretty good. He's always been very competitive.

A strong work ethic, strong desire to win at every level ever since he was a little kid, up into high school and college. Heck, in high school he had a bad neck injury and was able to overcome that and continued to play football. He's been very passionate and very competitive about the game of football. He used to battle fans when my dad coached at Notre Dame when the fans would talk bad about him, and he would go to war with these guys (laughter). He's just a very competitive guy. He just loves the game.

MNF's Jay Rothman: 'I want you to help make me great'

After Gruden was fired by the Bucs, he found another career in the broadcast booth on "Monday Night Football," with a successful nine-year run before he returned to the NFL with the Raiders last year. Rothman, who is the lead producer for "MNF" and helped hire Gruden in 2009, also produced 60 episodes of his "Gruden's QB Camp" series with top draft prospects from 2010-17.

I think about the very first meeting we had at the Gramercy Tavern (in Manhattan) when we recruited him to come to "Monday Night Football." This will be my 29th season producing football, and he made me better. He made our whole group better. We thought we loved the game, thought we knew the game, but he took that to a far greater level. His passion was infectious, (he) was a natural on TV, so much fun to work with, worked his ass off, total ball-buster. He was all of that, and I miss him.

We had a three-hour lunch recruiting him to "Monday Night Football," and he gave me his cell phone number on a napkin. I met outside the restaurant with other ESPN executives and said, "We've got to sign this guy." We had a very short deadline in which to sign him, and we all agreed we were going to make a run. I wound up taking a taxi back to Penn Station to take the Amtrak back to Connecticut, and I literally was going down the escalator, and he texted me. He said, "Would you mind coming back and having a few beers with me?" So I went back up the escalator, went back over, and his agent sat at the end of the bar drinking Ketel One, and Jon and I had a bunch of beers and spent another few hours together.

The one thing he said to me was, "I want you to help make me great." I'll never forget it. He said, "Al Davis tore my ass to shreds. There's nothing you can say that will hurt my feelings. I want you to make me the best that there ever, ever was." That was like a game-changer for me, because it opened it up. Producers in general, depending on the talent they have, can be ginger or whatever it might be. He opened the floodgates for us to have a relationship. A week before training camp, he texted me a picture of him and Cindy at the Gramercy Tavern.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

They were not thrilled to be chosen to do “Hard Knocks.” And I’m being mild there: They were not happy about it, very vocal about that. Having said that, Jon’s not stupid. He and I spoke the night it was announced. He knows he needs to win. They were 4-12 and there’s pressure to win, and that’s his A-number-1 focus, I know that. Having said that, he has such a creative mind, so I’m excited to see the wrinkles he brings to “Hard Knocks.” One that I’ll bet you my house, my wife and children on will be how he integrates the alumni into the practice that inevitably will be on the show. He has such an unbelievable respect for the history of the Raiders. Them being around is very important to him. You’re going to see Jerry Rice and Tim Brown breaking the huddle with Derek Carr and Antonio Brown. It’s very important to him that the players know the roots and history for today’s Raiders.

GM Mike Mayock

Mayock and Gruden's mirror images in football philosophy began with burgers and beer

By Jerry McDonald

August 22, 2019

A few days before the 2009 draft, a room full of assorted NFL Network employees met for a production meeting in New York.

There was much to discuss, but it wasn't long before Mike Mayock and Jon Gruden were doing all the talking.

Mayock had been a draft analyst for the network since 2003. Gruden had just hit the open market after being fired as coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

The two first met in Philadelphia in the mid-1990s, when Gruden was offensive coordinator of the Eagles and Mayock was working in commercial real estate but beginning a transition to broadcasting. They began communicating often about anything and everything to do with football.

But it wasn't until they were paired on the 2009 draft telecast that Gruden and Mayock discovered how much alike they were.

"It was pretty much just Jon and I doing the talking," Mayock said. "It was funny. They're asking us questions, and we'd segue into all kinds of things. I'd say something, and then he'd play off it. I felt an energy. There were 40 people in the room but just two of us talking ball."

Yet Gruden and Mayock weren't all talked out. When Mayock returned to his hotel room, his phone rang.

"It was Jon. He said, 'You think we could go find a place to have a beer and a burger?'" Mayock said.

The two met in the lobby and over cheeseburgers and cold beer began to break down a sport that has been the love of their lives other than their own families.

"We see the world similarly," Gruden said.

Both were born into football families. Gruden's father, Jim, spent his life in football, coaching in high school, college and the NFL until moving into personnel. He was working as a scout with the 49ers and helped Jon get an entry level position in the NFL.

Mayock's father, Mike Sr., played football at Villanova and was a football coach for 40 years. Mayock describes his father as a strong, silent disciplinarian who told players the truth.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

When Mayock played four seasons of football at the Haverford School in Pennsylvania, he was coached by his father, who never cut his son a break.

"I probably ran more sprints than anyone in the history of the program," Mayock said.

Mayock went on to play at Boston College and, like his father, was drafted by the Pittsburgh Steelers, although knee troubles forced him out of football.

Both made the most of their early positions in pro football. One of Gruden's responsibilities as a go-fer for the 49ers was to help Steve Young learn the playbook as he competed with Joe Montana.

Mayock, who was cut by the Steelers, joined the New York Giants in 1982 and as a rookie was given the job of making sure Lawrence Taylor was awake for meetings.

The world, according to Gruden and Mayock, has a 100-yard field and 53-man rosters. It values size, speed, intelligence and above all else a love for football. The topics open for discussion are endless, even over beers and burgers.

"We were getting deeper and deeper into philosophies and team-building, and I swear, it's like we're checking each other out, trying to figure out what we believe in, what we don't believe in," Mayock said.

Gruden's time with the NFL Network was brief, as he was hired by ESPN to do "Monday Night Football." But the two kept in touch. A future collaboration was never discussed, as Mayock's draft expertise dominated the NFL Network's coverage to the point where he'd had opportunities with NFL teams to work in personnel departments.

Mayock's work caught the eye of late Raiders owner Al Davis, who flew him in for an interview. Davis' interviews were lengthy and draining, as he attempted to extract as much information as possible in addition to learning about the person he was interrogating.

"I spent 10 hours in a room with Al Davis by myself," Mayock said. "We just bounced from topic to topic. The guy's memory for football people and events was off the charts, and you had to be on top of your game for 10 straight hours, which is exhausting."

Mayock wasn't hired, but last December he heard again from the Raiders, who were looking for a replacement for Reggie McKenzie. Mayock met the club in Kansas City, where the Raiders were finishing the regular season against the Chiefs.

Like the NFL Network production meeting, there were other people in the room, but most of the talking was done by Gruden and Mayock.

Gruden, who'd had his own interviews with Al Davis, employed a similar tactic. He tried to keep Mayock off-balance. After exchanging pleasantries, Gruden opened a folder, looked at it, and fired off his first question:

"Mike, you're 60 years old, born on Aug. 14, 1958. You're an old dude. Why do you want to do this?"

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Mayock's reply?

"Jon, you were born Aug. 17, five years later. You're not that young."

They both laughed, then proceeded to cover a myriad of issues and philosophies about talent, team-building and what makes winning football.

"Even though there were several people in the room, for the most part it was Jon and I going back and forth," Mayock said. "I think he was trying to drill down philosophically and see if we were a fit."

"We have a very similar big picture and a very similar tiny picture what the criteria of each individual player is we're looking for," Gruden said.

While known as borderline obsessive when it comes to film and preparation, even Gruden is impressed with Mayock's passion for the sport.

"He's just a high-energy guy. He beats to a different drum," Gruden said. "He loves to study tape. He loves to have one-on-one interaction with coaches and players. He'll study anything — Canadian Football League film, the league that played this spring. He just loves it."

Mike Mayock on the 2019 Draft, and Building the Raiders in the Mayock-Gruden Image

By Albert Breer

May 6, 2019

Someone raised an interesting point last week, and I honestly can't remember who it was, but the gist was simple: Maybe if Mike Mayock was still at NFL Network, we'd have a different opinion on Clelin Ferrell going fourth overall.

It's a fair point, too. How the football-watching public perceives a prospect is shaped largely by the media, and the Raiders GM carried a big stick in that arena after two decades of breaking the draft down on TV. So when we talked on Thursday, I had to ask the new exec, with whom I worked for six years, how he'd have reacted to Ferrell at 4 if he was on a set in Nashville rather than in a war room in Northern California.

"I don't think I would've been as surprised as a lot of the world," Mayock said, with a laugh. "At the end of the day, people act like the thought wouldn't occur to me to trade down and still get Cle. He was our guy, OK? And whether we got him at 4, 8, 10, it didn't matter. He was gonna be our guy."

"He's a foundation player. And even more importantly, he's a three-down defensive end who can stick his hand in the dirt and play on run downs and pass downs. He's not a guy who's going to be a designated pass-rusher. He's in there on every snap. And he's gonna set the tone for us, as far as these young guys are concerned. I couldn't wait to get to that pick."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

In my final “rumors” column that went up about three hours before the draft started, we did connect the Raiders to Ferrell. That was based on a couple tips I’d gotten. But, full disclosure, I didn’t think there was a chance they’d take him at 4, nor did the teams picking around them. In the end? I underestimated just how vital building around the right kind of guy—“our guy”—was going to be. I think most teams did, too.

So if there’s one thing that marks Mayock’s first class, that’s it, without question.

And here’s the thing: Mayock wasn’t even hiding it. He actually explained the “our guy” idea, repeatedly, before the draft. But saying it and driving it home like the Raiders did are two different things. And did Mayock ever drive it home, first with Ferrell, then with Alabama RB Josh Jacobs, then with Mississippi State S Johnathan Abram, then with Clemson CB Trayvon Mullen, and you get the picture.

Message sent. Message received. Over and over again.

“I felt like the entire draft was important that way,” Mayock said. “We had four of the first 35 picks, and I think if you look at those four picks, all of those guys share traits. They have a passion and a love for the game, and you can see it the way that they play. I think we were consistent throughout the draft, and I think we sent a message that Jon [Gruden] and I believe in. “Yeah, Cle was very important, but we felt like the consistency of the entire draft was just as important.”

The good news for Raiders fans, in my mind—there’s a lot of rhyme and reason to what Mayock and Gruden are doing. I don’t know if it’ll work or not. No one really does.

But this plan, which Mayock took me through, does make some sense.

So how does Mayock know that he’d have approached the Ferrell pick differently from most analysts if he were on TV for it? Because in the fall, he was preparing for the draft as if that was just where he’d be—which is when he first got smitten with the two-time First Team All-American. Which, in turn, is to say he actually knows what he would have said, for a fact.

“If you remember when Chris Long got drafted by St. Louis, he was the second pick, and when they drafted him, I knew the kind of player they were getting,” Mayock said. “Now, they were never able to successfully bring other guys around him, but Chris Long played his butt off every snap of every game, he set a physical edge in the run game, he got his 7, 8, 9, 10 sacks, and he energizes a locker room.

“He’s what I call a glue player. I looked at Ferrell back in September and October, and I watched three or four tapes and at the bottom of my notes, I wrote ‘glue/Chris Long.’ That’s the kind of guy, to me, who has more value than you can even put a number on. Chris hung in there, ended up in New England, gets a Super Bowl, goes to Philadelphia, gets another. Chris Long’s a glue guy. And I think Cle is also.”

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

So that, in a way, connects where Mayock was in the fall—watching kids on tape from his home in Philly—to where he wound up in the spring. But a lot happened in the time in between. And that's why, in the wake of his first draft with Gruden, as they assembled a class in their image of what a Raider will be, I figured it would make sense to double back with Mayock now and fill in a bunch of the blanks.

Here, then, is the New World of Mike Mayock four months in, according to the man himself.

The biggest adjustment. When I asked Mayock for his biggest blind spot, he didn't hesitate for a second. It was in pro scouting. And his responsibility in that area only grew when Raiders pro scouting director Dave Vandernat was fired in January. So really, while Mayock was hired for his work on the college side, the time from his start date to the March 13 open of free agency became a dead sprint through unfamiliar territory.

"I had to put aside everything else and just gear up with Jon on free agency," Mayock said. "The thing that was really intriguing, there was more of a volume of work that had to be done—by position, by free agent. And the only way you could do that was by watching tape. Jon and I and [director of football research] David Razzano and Jon's staff had to grind it pretty hard to get ready for free agency."

As they did that, the Raiders' cap people, led by Tom Delaney, worked to benchmark the market for every player, which didn't do a ton to settle nerves. "The fear of the unknown for me was, 'Wow, we're talking about spending 20, 30, 40, 50 million dollars, a lot of it guaranteed, on these guys,'" Mayock said. "We needed to get it right."

And just as quickly as a free-agent class headed by Trent Brown, Lamarcus Joyner and Tyrell Williams came together, it was over. "I just couldn't believe how quickly deals were getting done the day of free agency," Mayock said. "I just was like, 'Oh my god.' We took Trent Brown off the market immediately. And you look around the league and you're like, 'Wow, three-quarters of our board is already gone!'"

The relationship with Gruden. With all the work that needed to be done, and the game of catch-up being played, you might imagine that Mayock was keeping long hours. And as has been well documented, Gruden has always kept long hours. Over time, that's where they bonded.

"The first month I was here, I was walking in the building and it's 5:30 in the morning, and Jon's already in there watching film, and I start watching film in my office," Mayock said. "And after a few days, it's, 'This is crazy, why am I over here watching film and he's over there?' So I just started grabbing my coffee and going over there, and he and I would sit down and watch film.

"It was a really good lesson for me to see how he watches film, because everybody watches it a little differently. And Jon's got just miles and miles and miles of cutups that he's had his whole career. He can pull up cutups from 20 years ago just by clicking a button. The volume of work he does is mind-boggling. And I respect that."

It was there, in the wee hours, that the more conservative Mayock and more aggressive Gruden worked to find common philosophical ground. There and ...

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The National Championship Game. A week after he was hired, Mayock made his first public appearance in a work setting, donning a Raiders parka at the national title game in nearby Santa Clara. That night, he saw two of his three first-round picks [Ferrell and Jacobs], and his second- [Mullen] and fifth-rounders [Hunter Renfrow] live. And as you might've guessed, that night was important.

"I felt it on the field before the game, these were the two best college programs in the country and have been for several years now," Mayock said. "And when you walk around on the field before the game and watch these guys warm up, and you do your body types, you're taking notes—they look like two NFL teams. I said it to somebody, I don't remember who, and I remember thinking to myself, 'Man, if you just draft from these two teams, you're gonna do well, forget the rest of the country.'

"I didn't consciously set out to make that happen. But we got more and more impressed with these Clemson kids, as we met them, as people. We loved the Alabama tailback. And it worked out pretty well from our perspective."

An underlying factor here, that Mayock affirmed in our talk: If you're trying to build a certain championship atmosphere, it doesn't hurt to have kids from the likes of Alabama and Clemson.

The scouts. This is where Mayock raised his voice a little. The Raiders dismissed scouting chief Joey Clinkscales and Vandernat shortly after the season, and knew more changes would come post-draft. And yes, Mayock did send scouts home a week before the draft to close the circle. But he told me only three of those guys were actually let go. A bunch of them are back at work now.

"I never fired any of them. I didn't. I sent them home," Mayock said. "Listen to me, I sent them home, and I fired zero of them until the day after the draft. And then I notified a couple guys [that they were let go]. End of story. Nobody follows the story. Nobody cares. Everybody just wanted to report that Mayock sent everybody home."

And while the idea that Mayock banished people had a totalitarian feel to it, the GM was actually very quick, in our conversation, to credit the work of assistant player personnel director Trey Scott and scouting coordinator Teddy Atlas. The latter, in fact, was "directly responsible" for the team's seventh-round pick, Prairie View pass-rusher Quinton Bell, according to Mayock.

"When the rest of the league was hoping to sign him as a free agent, Teddy was at his pro day," Mayock said. "He was a converted wide receiver who went to defensive end at Prairie View. And Teddy kept this kid alive for me. And he ends up being 6'4", 240, ran 4.44, played one year at defensive end. The bottom line is those two guys helped me immensely throughout this whole process."

The coolest part of the draft. I'll let Mayock take this one.

"There were two things," he said. "One is just the absolute joy that Jon Gruden has talking to the players on that phone call. I mean, I'm telling you, he couldn't wait to get on the phone. And his joy and true excitement in welcoming these players to the team was awesome. I got excited and almost emotional just watching him do it.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"That's one, and I think the other one is, we moved down a couple times in the second round, we moved from 35 to 38 to 40, and picked up a couple extra picks, and were able to keep our guy, Trayvon Mullen, who we wanted all along. Jon and I were connected on that. We were sweating through every pick, and it ended up working out. I think both of us really enjoyed that process."

So now his first draft is in the books, and Mayock has turned the page and is working on getting a few hires done to fill out his staff. But allowing himself one last look in the rear-view mirror, the TV-guy-turned-GM remembered sitting on the North team bus en route to the Senior Bowl on Jan. 26.

"This is just for the Senior Bowl game, and I'm sitting there across from Jon [who was coaching the North], going, 'OK! This is real, we're about to go play a game,'" Mayock said. "Even though it was the Senior Bowl, you feel some skin in the game."

And they did have some skin in that game, in the end. Four guys who played that afternoon were drafted by the Raiders (Abram, Renfrow, Isaiah Johnson and Foster Moreau), and three others were signed by the team as college free agents (Te'von Coney, Alec Ingold, Keelan Doss).

As was the case with the national title game, Mayock got a chance to see those kids up close, and that really does matter to him, for the same reason he sees getting his next set of hires right as vital, and values what he got in Ferrell and company in the draft. He hasn't been working for teams the last 20 years, but he's seen enough good ones to know what it takes, beyond what a stopwatch can tell him.

"My whole goal, my whole belief, is that people change circumstances," Mayock said. "Not buildings, not anything else—it's people. It's the draft picks you bring in, it's your coaching staff, it's your scouting staff. And I'm excited about where we're headed. I'm excited about the people we're bringing in to this building. And I think everybody sees the opportunity and the energy that's going on with the Raiders."

By everybody, I'm thinking he didn't mean the rest of us—those people who sat there just a little stunned with what he did with his first pick. And besides, in any other year, we might have understood it a little better.

S Johnathan Abram

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Fatherhood drives Raiders rookie safety Johnathan Abram

By Matt Kawahara

June 16, 2019

At a news conference in late April, the three players selected by the Raiders in the first round of this year's draft were asked to describe what motivates them.

Johnathan Abram, the 27th overall pick out of Mississippi State, spoke last.

"For me, I have a daughter," Abram said. "She has helped me gain another sense of purpose for why I tick, what makes me get up in the morning."

For Abram, whose daughter Harlee turned 2 in May, Father's Day invites both celebration and reflection. Abram and his wife, Bri'Anna, originally conceived twins. A second daughter, Halle, was stillborn.

"I think about it all the time," Abram said last week. "There's supposed to be two rather than one. We think about it quite often."

Johnathan and Bri'Anna share a hometown of Columbia, Miss., and began dating, Bri'Anna said, after she'd already finished high school.

Abram was still at East Marion High School, where he played baseball in addition to safety and quarterback for the football team. He committed to play football at Georgia and when he moved there in 2015, Bri'Anna, who'd just finished nursing school, moved as well.

"I'll tell you something about me — I'm a huge football fan," Bri'Anna Abram said by phone last week. "I'm his biggest critic, even to this day. Even if he had a good game I would literally sit in the stands and count missed tackles and stuff."

"He came from a very small (high) school. I don't know if he thought he had the opportunity to even get this far coming from this small school. He surprised a lot of people."

Abram transferred after his freshman season at Georgia to Jones College in Ellisville, Miss., and then — after a season as the country's top-rated junior college safety — to Mississippi State.

In January 2017, Bri'Anna learned she was pregnant with twins. Johnathan had already started at Mississippi State so Bri'Anna, living a few hours away in Hattiesburg, "kept him updated on appointments."

Around 16 weeks, Bri'Anna said, she learned the twins were girls. At 18 weeks, an appointment revealed "growth restriction" in one of the girls, Halle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Twin-to-Twin Transfusion Syndrome, or TTTS, according to Johns Hopkins Medicine, is a rare condition that occurs in pregnancies when twins share one placenta and a network of blood vessels. It can result in an imbalance in blood exchange, leaving one twin with less blood and the risk of malnourishment and the other at risk of heart complications from overwork.

"It's a rare situation," Abram said. "A lot of people end up losing both twins."

Bri'Anna wasn't diagnosed with TTTS at the 18-week appointment, as the twins didn't show all the symptoms. At 24 weeks, though, an appointment revealed Halle had lost amniotic fluid. Bri'Anna transferred to a hospital in Cincinnati, where she was diagnosed with TTTS. Johnathan later met her there.

Bri'Anna said an ultrasound showed Halle starting to go into heart failure. Harlee was also experiencing heart distress, as "she was trying to work for both of them at that point." Doctors suggested a laser ablation, a surgery aimed at correcting the blood-sharing imbalance.

"It was a risk that we would lose one or both," Bri'Anna said. "So we were like, we're going to try whatever they suggest for us to at least try to save one."

"After the surgery, the doctor checked me. She thought my water broke, but it was actually the rest of the amniotic fluid. Probably a couple hours later, that's when Halle passed away."

Harlee was born about a week later, on May 21, 2017.

"We tried to save both," Abram said. "We had to lose one to save one."

Born about three months premature, Harlee spent two months in a newborn intensive care unit. Abram said she pulled out her own breathing and feeding tubes before being released.

"She's a character," Abram said. "She's probably one of the most fun people to be around. She is super-funny. I call her a copycat. She does every single thing she sees me and my wife do."

"She is like Johnathan," Bri'Anna said. "I'm more laid-back, chill. Her and John are like fireballs. She loves him. She follows him around like a little puppy. She wants to do whatever her daddy is doing. ... Any time he has to be on his own or something and leave, she flips out. She wants to be with John."

Johnathan and Bri'Anna were married in May 2018, before his final season at Mississippi State. The Raiders, who praised the 6-foot safety's physicality and tackling in college, have raved this spring about his early grasp of their defense. In a revealing move, they assigned Abram No. 24, previously worn by Hall of Fame defensive back Charles Woodson.

Bri'Anna and Harlee moved to the Bay Area last month, as Abram, who is projected to start as a rookie for the Raiders, participated in his first NFL offseason program.

"It just makes the entire situation better to get to go home to my daughter every day, to get to go home to my wife," Abram said. "It just makes it feel more like home."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"You have to have your own self-motivation. But to have a child depending on me ... to be able to go out every single day and make sure she has a better life than I had, that's probably my biggest thing. I want to create more opportunities for her to see the world and experience things I didn't experience growing up."

Bri'Anna said she's continuing her nursing studies and eventually plans to focus on one of two areas — pediatric or surgical.

"I'm very grateful for Harlee," Bri'Anna said. "She's taught me a lot just with perseverance and how strong she is. And she doesn't even know that yet."

"She kind of matured and changed both us. Some parents, kids change their lives for the greater good. I think she did that for both of us."

T Trent Brown

THE ATHLETIC

The greatest underdog: Trent Brown never celebrated his big contract because the Raiders' tackle wants more

By Vic Tafur

September 12, 2019

When the ball is snapped, Trent Brown has to get back quickly. If you aren't watching it happen, you wouldn't think that a 6-foot-8, 375-pound wall could move that fast.

But he can, and All-Pro Broncos pass rusher Von Miller is coming at him fast, trying to get past the Raiders right tackle Monday night to bury quarterback Derek Carr.

Brown backs off the line of scrimmage and gets set, establishing some balance before the tornado tries to blow through.

"Our get-off is just as important as the pass rusher's," Brown said. "Then once you're set, it's all about hand placement."

It's strangely evident watching Brown why he got a bad rap at Florida, only starting 11 out of 23 games before being drafted in the seventh round in 2015.

Because he makes it look easy. Way too easy.

Brown's 36-inch arms are outstretched and his hands are on Miller now, guiding him to the right. What comes next against other pass rushers is usually a combination of hand moves and brute strength that simply dismisses them, left on the side of the curb like the weekly trash.

But Miller is not other pass rushers. He is likely going to the Hall of Fame one day, so he is still churning his legs and coming after Carr.

Brown now uses his eyes to see what Miller is trying to do next and to look out for other trouble brewing in his area. He lowers a little into a good position and holds off Miller, with his feet and large anchor moving to stay in front of him.

"You have to be ready so you can take on power rushes and speed pushes," Brown said.

Brown held Miller without so much as a quarterback pressure in the 24-16 win in the season-opener. Carr may have felt Miller's breath in his vicinity once or twice, but the giant bouncer was always there, too. Carr had a great night, completing 22 of 26 darts, and Brown was a big reason why.

While receiver Antonio Brown stole all the headlines this offseason, he was never the Raiders' biggest or most important acquisition. That would be the other Brown. That was clear for viewers who tuned in Monday and saw why the Raiders made Trent Brown, 26, the highest-paid offensive lineman in NFL history.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Brown is the best kind of team leader, one who leads pass rushers away from his quarterback and one who leads running backs into the freshly carved-out open field.

The Raiders gave Brown a four-year, $66 million contract in April, with $36.75 million guaranteed, and then, in something that had to make the 49ers wince, Brown came to the Raiders' training camp in July in even better shape. You see, the 49ers were the ones who drafted Brown and then traded him away a year and a half ago because they weren't certain that he could be counted on to stay at 380 pounds. You know, more money, more food, more problems.

But hit the fast forward button, and Brown is putting on daily clinics on how to play tackle. Against Miller, at practices and even after practices, as he stays and works with the team's younger linemen.

Brown worked out for five and a half weeks this offseason with offensive line development consultant Duke Manyweather rather than take a long vacation to celebrate the new contract.

Did he at least have a party?

"No," he said.

Why not?

"I want more."

More what?

"Everything," Brown said. "I want more rings. I want another huge-ass contract. I want anything I can get out of this game, and I have to give my all to get it back."

Raiders defensive line coach Brentson Buckner knew Brown was very good, but he was speechless sometimes at camp in Napa watching Brown hone his craft.

And Buckner is usually loud.

"Trent is a big guy that can move," Buckner said at training camp. "Normally you get a big guy with slow feet that can't move, or you get a tall guy, not as heavy, who has good feet. He's got it all. He's long-armed and he is so cerebral with it, he is so smooth. Everything looks effortless with him."

Buckner played 12 years as a defensive lineman in the NFL and has been coaching the last six, and doesn't recall seeing anyone like Brown.

"I coached against him in San Fran, but now, seeing him work every day, I am like, 'Wow.' This guy is a different breed. You don't get many 380-something pound guys with ballerina feet that still got the strength to knock you off the ball."

Miller has been a fan of Brown's since they tangled at joint 49ers and Broncos practices in 2016.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's one of the best tackles in the game," Miller said last week in a conference call. "I've been a huge fan of Trent for a long time. I love the guy. He's tall, he's big, he's quick."

Brown has even been an honorary offensive lineman at Miller's offseason pass-rusher summits.

On Monday, Brown schooled Miller again (he also held him without a pressure in a 2016 game). He has handled all the top sack artists.

"If you watch tapes of Trent over the years," guard Gabe Jackson said at camp, "he gets guys that aren't supposed to be got."

Manyweather was a fired-up observer on Monday.

Brown went to Frisco, Texas, early this summer after Manyweather had given Brown an invitation and "a detailed scouting report with things that I saw as weaknesses," Manyweather said in a telephone interview.

"I just wanted to get stronger and work on my balance in the positions I had to be in," Brown said. "I feel better and stronger."

That is scary, Manyweather said.

"There is not a more massive human being in terms of length and girth and muscle," Manyweather said. "He is as big as they come, but the quickness and the ability to bait with his hands ... and the reason he makes it look so easy at times is his feet. Trent has really, really good footwork. Trent is always in position."

"Add in his length, size, power and his hand usage and it makes for a long day for any edge rusher lining up against him."

Brown is definitely not shy about spending his money on fancy clothes, size-18 shoes and an oversized shiny watch. The good thing is, he doesn't have to worry about blowing his fortune on his posse. There are no hangers-on, and the reason is simple.

"No one expected me to do this," Brown said. "I was always the underdog, even as a kid. Always flew under the radar. My posse is my family. And a couple of friends. That's it."

Brown lost a member of the small support group Monday, as Brown's best friend, Neiron Ball, passed away. The former Gators and Raiders linebacker had been in a medically-induced coma for the past year after an eight-year battle with a rare congenital condition called arteriovenous malformation (where the brain's blood vessels get tangled up).

Brown had dedicated his Super Bowl win with the Patriots in February to Ball, after sobbing the morning of the game over him. And on Wednesday, Brown said he plays every week for his old college roommate.

Brown was wearing a pendant with a picture of Ball and said his friend "is an angel now. He was always an angel."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Brown's father, Reginald, played basketball overseas in China before becoming a police officer, and his mother, Tiffany, was a high school volleyball player who went on to be a teacher.

"You can't be raised by those two and not have a strong work ethic," Brown said. "Not possible."

(In fact, his parents refuse to stop working, even though Brown secured the bag.)

Trent Brown was a basketball player like his dad as a kid until he decided that "basketball was soft." He grew up in Albany, Ga. — playing on youth teams 2-3 years older than he was because of his size — and focused his energy on being a running back and then a quarterback until high school. That's when, as a freshman, he was told that the services of a 6-2, 250-pound quarterback were not needed.

"It's been left tackle or right tackle ever since," Brown said.

He spent two years at Georgia Military College before transferring to Florida. That he woke up every day at 5:30 a.m. and wore a uniform somehow eluded NFL scouts who questioned Brown's work ethic.

"People also mistake the chill," Brown said.

It's a nice turn of the story that Brown has returned to the Bay Area as a much bigger star after the 49ers traded him away in 2018. He used to be mad about it but says the 49ers "blessed me by trading me to the Patriots."

Brown went from being an unsure rookie in 2015 to someone whose confidence shot up after he played in the final five games that season.

"It clicked," Brown said. "Whoever lined up in front of me, I was trying to whoop their ass. And then when I did, it made me want to whoop the next one."

He learned by watching veteran tackle Joe Staley, who compared Brown's potential to that of Jonathan Ogden. Brown saw that his footwork was already good enough and he worked hard on improving his hand use.

"I think coming into the league a lot of guys aren't ready — the veterans are way better at using their hands," Brown said. "That was something I really had to work on."

The work got more demanding after he was traded (along with a fifth-round pick) to the Patriots for a third-rounder after the 49ers used their first-round pick on his replacement, right tackle Mike McGlinchey.

"You can just feel it, the energy when you walk in that building," Brown said. "They expect greatness and you got to do great things and that's why they're in the Super Bowl year in and year out."

It was not a smooth transition, as the Patriots wanted to see more technique, more tempo and less getting by on your freakish athletic ability.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He picked it up quickly and was unbeatable in pass pro," Patriots guard Shaq Mason said in a telephone interview. "I think everybody was surprised how good he was in the running game. He is so big and quick, he was just moving people out of the way."

Brown allowed only three sacks during the regular season, according to Pro Football Focus, and then pitched a shutout during the postseason.

The Patriots wanted to re-sign Brown, but the Raiders coming off a season in which they allowed 52 sacks, practically gave him a blank check in the opening minutes of free agency.

Brown said he felt like he was "finally appreciated."

Brown said he always worked hard, in college at Florida and with the 49ers and Patriots, but some people just didn't notice.

"My personality and my work ethic have been misconceived," Brown said. "Lot of people didn't understand me. I'm not a rah-rah guy. I am chill guy, laid back. I am not going to be a vocal leader, I am just going to do what I have to do, come to work, get better and win."

It's an underdog story, which is good since Brown has a website at officialTB77.com that sells shirts and hoodies that say, "TB77 Greatest Underdog."

"It explains itself," Brown said. "Greatest underdog. Those two words explain me to the T. I was drafted in the seventh round and now I'm the highest-paid offensive lineman in NFL history. That's a testament to the work and just the way I go about my everyday life, how I treat people and how I sow good seeds and I'm reaping the harvest of my work."

And how he doesn't coast now that he, his parents and his two kids born in the last two years, are set for life.

"He came in every day with a chip on his shoulder, and it was hard to figure out why," Manyweather said. "He finds things to be pissed off about, and not in a way that will distract him but in a motivational way. I don't think money is a motivator for him."

"He will look at stuff like his 'Madden' rating and wonder why he is not up there. And then hit the gym. He wants to be the best. Some people aren't satisfied and don't do shit about it, but he brought it every day. ... You could make the argument that his best football is still ahead of him."

Brown might think about that when he lights his candles and meditates, with some blues or gospel music in the background. And he might think about the past as well.

Back in 2015, when Brown only played five games as a rookie for the 49ers, what if someone had told him that four years later he would have a Super Bowl ring and be the highest-paid tackle in the NFL? Would he have believed it?

"I would have believed him," Brown said. "I always believed it about myself."

Beezy & Weezy: Why becoming a Raider is a heart-tugger for Trent Brown

By Jerry McDonald

March 20, 2019

ALAMEDA — Trent Brown stood in the middle of a Super Bowl celebration last month in a state of euphoria and sadness. As confetti fell inside Atlanta's Mercedes-Benz Stadium, the New England Patriot's tackle kissed the Lombardi Trophy and said, "Weezy, that was for you."

Neiron Ball, aka "Weezy," was unaware of his best friend's tribute after the Patriots defeated the Los Angeles Rams 13-3. Ball, a former Raiders linebacker, is in a coma at a long-term care facility in Georgia after an aneurysm burst in his brain Sept. 16.

It has been an emotional six months for Brown, who last week signed with the Raiders for the richest contract ever for an offensive lineman.

Moments after meeting local reporters to discuss the signing of a four-year deal with a guarantee of more than $36 million, Brown spoke about his friendship with Ball.

"I call him a walking angel, a true soldier who will never give in," said Brown, whose friend dubbed him "Beezy."

Ball, 26, was diagnosed eight years ago while playing at the University of Florida with a rare, congenital condition called arteriovenous malformation (AVM), in which the brain's blood vessels get tangled and rupture.

Physicians thought the condition had been corrected after a radiation treatment, but Ball suffered an episode last fall that left him in a medically induced coma.

Brown, starting his second game as the Patriots' left tackle that September day, expected to see his friend afterward in Jacksonville, Florida. The Florida teammates had made plans the day before the game.

Exhausted after a 31-20 defeat in 97-degree heat, Brown was sitting on a table getting rehydrated with intravenous fluids when his cell phone rang. It was Ball's brother.

"I'll never forget it as long as I live," said Brown, who was traded last year by the 49ers. "He told me Neiron was throwing up and then unresponsive. I was like, 'I know Neiron. He's going to shake this.' I just knew he would be out of that state by now, but here we are."

NiQuae White, 16 years older than Neiron, said her brother is out of intensive care, "progressing," and the family hopes he will eventually move to a rehabilitation facility. Family members are not providing many of the medical details to protect Ball's privacy.

Neiron's life was in doubt from the start. NiQuae, whose mother Johanna White was undergoing treatment for the autoimmune disease lupus, described her brother's life as a miracle.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"My mother was having chemotherapy when she found out she was pregnant and doctors advised her to terminate the pregnancy," NiQuae said. "She said, 'I'm done taking the chemo. I'm going to have this baby and the baby is going to be healthy.' "

Neiron Ball arrived on Aug. 20, 1992. Although six weeks premature, he weighed 9 pounds. For 12 days, Ball remained in the hospital with a heart murmur.

Life didn't get any easier for the child. When Ball was 6, Johanna White had a fatal heart attack on Mother's Day. Within two years, Neiron's father Ronnie Ball was diagnosed with lung cancer and died after a seizure, an episode the son witnessed.

Raised by his grandmother and other relatives in Jackson, Georgia, Ball developed into a top-flight football player. In 2010, he earned a scholarship at Florida and played in 13 games as a freshman.

After the season Ball, then 18, saw physicians when he felt pain in his neck and head. They identified the condition as an AVM, which can leave victims paralyzed and is sometimes fatal. But Ball recovered and was cleared to play in 2012.

"I went from a very serious brain injury to being able to play in a year," Ball told this news organization in 2015. "After it happened, I wasn't even thinking about playing. But I just kept getting better. I felt blessed."

His trials were not over. Ball had a potentially career-ending knee injury as a college senior that needed microfracture surgery. Ball said that after conquering the AVM, knee surgery didn't seem like much of an obstacle.

"If you know his full life story, everything he's been through during his time on earth, that's why to me he's a walking angel," Brown said. "He's not done and I will do my best to finish whatever I can for him."

As the story goes, the college roommates were engaged in some good-natured banter when Brown said his buddy called him "Beezy." The big lineman countered with "Weezy," and the monikers stuck. So did the friendship.

White, the oldest of five siblings, considers Brown, 25, her adopted brother.

"I can honestly say they're closer to one another than their own siblings," she said of Ball and Brown. "And they love their siblings. It was like a puzzle piece that fit perfectly."

Fate brought Brown and Ball even closer during the third day of the 2015 NFL draft.

The Raiders took Ball in the fifth round with the 161st pick after the linebacker had an excellent Pro Day to show scouts he'd recovered from knee surgery. Two rounds later, the 49ers drafted Brown at No. 244.

Ball was elated, while Brown was disappointed he didn't go higher but eager for his NFL opportunity.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Best of all, Weezy and Beezy, neither of whom had been to California, were headed to the Bay Area.

"We were right across the bay so we probably saw each other once a week," Brown said. "He'd be sleeping at my house or I'd be sleeping at his. We talked just about every day."

As a rookie, Ball impressed Jack Del Rio's staff with his special teams play. His athleticism was so apparent he became the starting weakside linebacker in the season's fifth week, logging 36 snaps. But in his second start, Ball had a non-contact knee injury after 18 snaps that ended his season — and career. He struggled through the 2016 preseason, but was placed on injured reserve and did not return.

Brown, meanwhile, played sparingly for the 49ers. The largest player in the NFL at 6-foot-8, 380 pounds, Brown made five appearances with two starts.

"They were basically out there by themselves," said White, the sister. "They made it their business to see one another when they weren't training, and to pick up the phone to vent, share secrets and advise each other. I think they know more about each other than anyone else could possibly know."

Through it all, Ball's disposition remained relentlessly positive, a smile rarely leaving his face. Ball befriended the family of a 10-year-old boy who had suffered paralysis as a result of an AVM and attended an awareness fundraising walk organized by the Aneurysm and AVM Foundation. He was an inspiration to those whose conditions up to that point had a far more serious outcome.

All of which makes the current situation more painful. The family has said only in a statement in September: "We believed Neiron's AVM was obliterated. That doesn't seem to be the case as he developed an aneurysm that burst. His family asks for continued prayers."

Beezy, meanwhile, carries on. He made trips from Boston to Georgia to see his best friend during the season, and shed some tears in solitude as the reality sunk in about joining Ball's Raiders. To NiQuae White, Brown's landing spot in free agency made perfect sense.

"Wow, look at this — God is sending you to finish what our baby brother started," White said. "You're doing what Neiron wanted."

"Trying to help the Raiders be great."

QB Derek Carr

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP

Derek Carr nearly quit football for preacher's life before rookie season with Raiders

By Jerry McDonald

Sept. 3, 2019

"God sent the Raiders quarterback, of all people. The Raiders. I sent that dude. A little dude out of Fresno, California. I sent him to be the Raiders quarterback so that maybe people would listen to him. Who else do I have to send to tell you the truth?" — Derek Carr addressing a gathering during a sermon entitled "Holy Fire" at Brave Church in San Ramon on July 7

SAN RAMON — Something was nagging at Derek Carr, and it wasn't as simple as trying to learn the nuances of an NFL offense for the first time.

Having just arrived at training camp in 2014, the second-round pick out of Fresno State was realizing a vision he'd been chasing since he'd tagged along with his older brother David, the former No. 1 overall pick of the Houston Texans, 12 years earlier.

Being an NFL quarterback is all Derek Carr ever dreamed about. He was a prodigy who was watching game film, and comprehending it, by age 10. Although he didn't know it yet, the second-round pick was about to be anointed a rookie NFL starter because of that readiness that was all too apparent.

And just as suddenly as that dream was about to begin, the pang in Carr's gut was growing more undeniable. As he lifted weights in the makeshift field house behind the Napa Valley Marriott, nothing could soothe his soul. A guy about to be handed the keys to an NFL offense as a rookie was looking for something more that he didn't completely understand.

And how could he?

"In my heart, I'd never had this feeling where I was so overcome with my thoughts that I was like, 'I can't do anything right now,'" Carr said as he sat at a table in the lounge of an East Bay hotel. "The thought was, 'You need to stop playing football and preach.'"

Carr didn't hesitate to speak back at his inner voice. "I'm thinking, 'I've dreamed of being an NFL quarterback my whole life, so chill out.'"

But chilling was easier said than done for the restless rookie. Carr was soon knocking at the door of Dennis Allen, telling his head coach he was considering walking away from the sport before ever participating in a single padded practice.

"He didn't take it too great, obviously," Carr said with a chuckle. "He didn't even know what to say to me."

Although veteran Matt Schaub had been signed as a free agent, Carr's work in the offseason had made it clear he would be ready to play as a rookie.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Some 13 years earlier, running back Napoleon Kaufman, a talented former first-round draft pick, retired after six seasons to devote his life to ministry. The Raiders signed Charlie Garner and moved on.

This was different. Carr had formed an instant bond with his teammates. His arm made Schaub's look like a pop gun. Carr was smart, mature and more game-ready than anyone had realized. The Raiders were convinced they'd gotten a franchise quarterback at No. 36 overall to go along with linebacker Khalil Mack at No. 5.

With a franchise quarterback and an elite pass rusher in the fold, things were looking up. Only now a big part of the equation was in question.

What ensued was an ultra-secret period of damage control. Allen quickly sent a text to offensive coordinator Greg Olson, urging him to talk with his quarterback.

While Olson is reluctant to delve into specifics of private conversations, this much is known: Olson urged Carr not to say anything until he'd thought it through. Derek said his parents were on their way to Napa and were going to bring him home. They knew of Derek's intention to walk away and were on board.

Carr's grandfather on his mother's side was a preacher. Sheryl Carr had told Derek she was sure one of her three sons would be a preacher, and now it was on the verge of becoming a reality.

Then-Raiders general manager Reggie McKenzie, along with Olson, tried to reason with Carr. As a devout Christian himself, McKenzie's words carried some weight. He told Carr he was walking away from probably $60 or $70 million down the road. Carr said he didn't care about the money.

Football, McKenzie and Olson reasoned, would give Carr a bigger platform from which to preach and reach people. Carr remained non-committal, but promised not to tell anyone about his decision until he was sure.

Only a few people knew of Carr's crisis of conscience — his immediate family, Allen, Olson, McKenzie, owner Mark Davis and one member of the media relations staff.

Carr missed a day of meetings while he soul-searched. The direction of the franchise, as well as the future of those who put themselves out on a limb by drafting this future cornerstone quarterback, not a preacher, hung in the balance.

"Oley told me, 'Go spend time with your family. No matter what you decide, I love you, man. I'm here for you — love that guy,'" Carr said. "Reggie McKenzie was the same way."

Carr talked it over with his family after they arrived in Napa. He prayed on it, and ultimately came to a decision.

"It wasn't my time yet," Carr said of walking away from his NFL dream. "It was cool to know I believed in something so much."

Five years later, as the second year of Jon Gruden's return unfolds, Carr says retirement from football is the furthest thing from his mind.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

He's become increasingly active as a preacher, not only at Brave Church in San Ramon but other Christian churches as well. But that off-field pursuit ends as soon as training camp begins.

With his near change of heart as a rookie far in the past, he says God and family and football — in that order — are in proper balance. Even if he played well into his 30s, Carr now understands that there is plenty of time for his next career.

There is no clock winding down.

* * *

It's the first week of July, and the 8 a.m. crowd has filed out of the church auditorium on a sunny day, with another capacity crowd of approximately 350 making its way in to hear Derek Carr deliver a 10 a.m. sermon entitled "Holy Fire."

Carr already spoke at the first service, and waits in a side room with his wife, Heather, and infant son, Deakon, as the room begins to fill up once again.

The atmosphere is relaxed and casual. Suits and ties are scarce, giving way to Tommy Bahama shirts and cargo shorts. There's one man in a No. 4 Carr jersey and two teenagers in gym shorts who appear to be headed to a basketball camp after the service.

Seated in the third row are Raiders coach Jon Gruden, who is seeing Carr preach for the first time in person, and his wife, Cindy.

A five-piece band, some wearing backwards ball caps and t-shirts, plays soft rock gospel, with the crowd clapping in rhythm.

Samuel Laws, the pastor at San Ramon's Brave Church, takes the microphone and tells the crowd of upcoming events before introducing the special guest, who receives loud applause.

Carr, wearing a short-sleeved collared shirt and jeans, takes the microphone. He speaks to the gathering rather than at them. There is no fire, brimstone or solemn warnings about failing to heed God's word.

Rather than requesting people to silence their cell phones, Carr tells the crowd they can reference Google to find scripture relevant to his talk.

It's a relaxed and honest tour de force. Carr is in many ways the same kid who drove his mom crazy because he approached strangers in the grocery store with a disarming friendly sincerity. His delivery is easy, natural and sincere, whether you believe in the message he's delivering or not.

"I want to tell you some stories. You guys like stories, right?," Carr said. "And none of them are about football today, I'm sorry. If you want to hear football stories you could leave now ... or if you're a 49er fan you can leave."

Laughter and applause ensue, and Carr, with a perfect sense of timing, reminds them of the obvious.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I'm just kidding," he said.

Carr's 45-minute talk is mostly preaching, part testimony of his own experiences and, yes, he does manage to work a little bit of football in now and then.

Gruden, talking in the parking lot after the service, said he was so impressed with what he heard that he and Cindy will consider making Brave their regular church.

"Derek is what he says he is — No. 1, he's a man of faith; No. 2, he's a family man, and third is football." Gruden said. "And he's put forth as much effort as any man could possibly put forth in those three areas."

* * *

Carr got serious about Christianity after a "big man on campus" period in college where he became a major partier. His behavior resulted in a letter from his eventual wife Heather, who told him "You're not the man I thought you were."

His father Rodger, mother Sheryl and older brothers David and Darren also had their say.

Derek decided to begin living the life he had professed to lead and gradually began searching for more.

"You can be on the right path, but still realize something is missing," Carr said.

The more Carr spoke before church groups, the more he simply began recounting his daily thoughts which come from reading his Bible and applying those lessons to the world around him. He easily mixes in life stories from family and football and is unafraid to discuss his own vulnerabilities and insecurities.

Carr's previous engagement at Brave came in late January, shortly after he challenged ESPN host Max Kellerman and co-host Stephen A. Smith to a fight in a UFC Octagon. Kellerman had said on the air that Carr "didn't look like he wanted it."

He saw it on his phone while working out, fired off a retort, and instantly regretted it.

"Not the brightest move by me," Carr said. "I saw instantly it was going to blow up. They were talking about it for four days."

So Carr included his social media mistake with the gathering and told them God had already fought the important battles.

The notion of Carr being "soft" because of his Christianity provokes a laugh. He played threw a broken finger on his throwing hand in 2016, had his season ended by a broken fibula that same year. In 2017, Carr missed just one game with three fractured transverse processes in his back.

"When I put my helmet on, I'm ultra competitive, talking trash," Carr said. "Tough, gritty, those are things that have been in me since I was a little kid. I have two big brothers. I had to be. None of that changes what I believe, or what goes on in my heart."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Perspective allows Carr to push aside talk of it being a crucial year for his Raiders career and that he could be playing for his job in 2020.

Despite plenty of speculation last spring that the team would consider drafting eventual No. 1 overall draft pick Kyler Murray and possibly part ways with Carr, instead he goes into this season with his $19.9 salary for 2019 guaranteed.

Carr realizes when a team goes 4-12, the quarterback takes the heat. Even after posting career bests in completion percentage (68.9), passing yards (4,049) and yards per attempt (7.3) and posting a QB rating (93.9) that trailed only his 2016 season that had people talking MVP before he suffered a broken fibula headed into the playoffs.

Somehow, Carr made it through 16 games of 2018 while being sacked 51 times behind a patchwork offensive line. The Kellermans and Smiths of the world point to moments where he's too timid, makes questionable decisions with the ball for a veteran QB, throws short of the stake on big downs too often. They point to a QBR rating that puts him at 27 among NFL quarterbacks.

If there is a whisper of discontent among teammates, it's been well hidden. Kelechi Osemele, traded to the New York Jets, recently called Carr one of the best teammates he ever had.

Defensive tackle Justin Ellis entered the league with Carr and has watched the progression as closely as anyone.

"He has evolved as a player — the longer you're in it, the smarter you are," Ellis said. "He's always been the guy who he is to this day. But now, it's his team. When he was young, he was a rookie trying to take his role. But now he knows he's one of the main guys, he walks with it, he leads by example."

Running back Jalen Richard, also a Christian, believes Carr's faith is a key component to his leadership. The positivity and focus on doing things right sets the proper tone and pushes those around him.

"He's a nice model to have around you, a family man, does everything the right way," Richard said. "When you've got a guy like that, who has so much faith, no matter what's going on, that picks up your faith and makes you start to search for faith in yourself."

Is his QB soft? Richard laughs.

"He wants us to go hurt somebody — but not really hurt 'em. But it's a battle," he said. "It's a battle when you're fighting for Christ. You do battles every day. The devil is continuously throwing his little darts at you and you've got to put on that armor of Christ. He's talked about that before, putting on the full armor of Christ. He's still a battler."

Ultimately, Carr will be judged by the Raiders' improvement in the win-loss department. With a much better supporting cast on both sides of the ball and having a year of Gruden's system under his belt, even a brutal six-week road stretch will be no excuse for anything resembling 4-12.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Carr understands this on some level, but has too much faith in his coaching staff and teammates to verbalize the possibility of failure. Being negative in public isn't a part of his makeup. He plans on being the Raiders quarterback in 2020 in Las Vegas. There, Carr will find a new Christian community while also being involved with Brave Church and making regular visits.

"I believe God has given me talents and abilities to be my very best and work harder than anybody else," Carr said. "I feel like I'm doing it for a higher purpose than just money, a higher purpose than fame.

"There's a quote, and it's not scripture, it's from Steve Prefontaine, the runner, who said, 'To give anything less than your best is to sacrifice the gift.' I've taken that to heart. I believe to give anything less than my best is to sacrifice the gift that God has given me."

Raiders' Derek Carr finds peace, hardened exterior after tough offseason

By Scott Bair

Aug. 7, 2019

NAPA – Derek Carr has done everything possible to be the perfect face of this Raiders franchise. The team's unquestioned starting quarterback says the right things, acts the right way. He's never, ever critical, toeing the company line. He smiles for every picture and signs every autograph.

He is, by every measure, a model NFL citizen.

That hasn't stopped some from hating him. That's a hard truth for an admitted people pleaser, who has tried and tried to turn the naysayers around. Resistance, it seems, is futile.

"I have tried so hard. I feel like I have tried to do this whole NFL quarterback thing right," Carr said last week in a one-on-one interview with NBC Sports California. "It's not an act. It's just who I am. I thought that's what people would want. What I've realized is that you can't please everybody. That has been hard for me. That's really hard for me, to be honest with you."

No quarterback's approval rating sits at 100. Some casual fans and hot-take analysts even dislike guys with several Super Bowl rings. Those without the hardware prove far easier targets, especially after signing nine-figure contracts.

That's why Derek Carr often echoes this mantra: "Ignore the praise and the criticism, because neither matter."

It turns out that's easier said than done. Carr heard outside noise a little clearer this offseason, elevating from "barely audible" to the annoying buzz of a gnat that you swat and swat but can't shoo away.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

That led to an experience that hardened Carr's outlook and outfitted him for training camp in new, diamond-plated armor -- coated in Teflon.

"What I've realized is all that talk, all that is said doesn't matter," Carr said. "Honestly, that clicked for me. That click happened this offseason."

Jan. 23 to be specific. That's when Carr fired back at ESPN's "First Take," challenging the show's hosts Max Kellerman and Stephen A. Smith to a UFC fight.

Kellerman essentially questioned Carr's heart -- characterizing him as too willing to tap out. Carr can handle it if someone attacks his 32-46 overall record as a starter, his injury troubles or even his throw selections. But going after his drive to play the game and his toughness was a personal affront that garnered a response.

It was a misstep that gave the Kellerman's comments a larger platform and turned a one-off segment into a several-day story. It prompted one blog after another to detail every part of the exchange, giving the story legs that ran right through the mud.

The unsavory experience taught him a valuable lesson -- one that forced him to go somewhat against his personality type.

He's working through this training camp with outside-noise canceling headphones and an unshakable core belief that he's a darn good quarterback. He is supremely confident in his ability, his upgraded supporting cast and his scheme knowledge working with head coach Jon Gruden.

Nothing said will shake that.

"I've really grown a lot in not caring what anyone else thinks," Carr said. "For so long, I wanted to please everybody. That's my personality. I came into this NFL experience with several goals. I was going to work my tail off and treat the media with respect. I'm going to treat my opponents with the same kind of respect. I'm going to try and do everything right. Somewhere along that course, some people decided that they don't like me. That was hard for me, because I was trying to do my best and produce and do things that haven't been done here in a long time. You sit back after all that and understand fully that it's all about winning."

Carr hasn't won enough. He won't excuse his record, but let's be honest. The man has weathered some storms.

Head coach Dennis Allen got fired four games into Carr's rookie year. Tony Sparano never had his interim tag removed. The Raiders rebuilt into a highly competitive team under Jack Del Rio, but Carr's third head coach wasn't allowed to rebound after 2017's disappointment.

Then came Gruden -- owner Mark Davis' dream hire -- finally offering the schematic and coaching stability Carr hasn't had during his NFL career.

Continuity didn't create calm seas. Stories about Gruden and Carr being oil and water popped up before the two began working together, and grew louder this spring as the Raiders wine and dined top NFL-draft-eligible quarterbacks.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Carr remained silent during all that pre-draft speculation, trusting what Gruden said about him remaining the Raiders quarterback. He places great trust in Gruden and has enjoyed working with him and within his offensive scheme.

"I don't know why people come at our relationship so much," Carr said. "What people don't know is that we're super close. We're going to live next to each other (in Nevada next year). There must be something going on that's all right. For us, at first when we started hearing it, we couldn't figure it out ... We finally got to a place where, even if they don't like us, let's keep growing and keeping doing our thing."

Carr believes that Gruden elevated his game last year, 4-12 record be damned. Carr set career marks in passing yards and yards per attempt, despite being frequently chided as a check-down artist. His interception percentage was only lower in 2016 -- when the Raiders were awesome and he was a legitimate MVP candidate. Those 2018 numbers are more impressive coming with an offensive line hindered by injuries and inexperience and a group of skill players lacking speed.

Carr did what was asked of him last season, but the 4-12 record is what gets remembered. So do some unflattering moments, including a fourth-down-and-forever check down and a few ill-timed interceptions in the end zone.

He understands and respects that, knowing he must win more and more often, but doesn't believe the year's experience should be cast aside or cement anyone's belief he isn't a quality NFL signal-caller.

"Last year was some of the best I've played quarterback since I've been in the NFL, but we didn't win 12 games," he said. "When you're the same face for the last six years and everyone else is gone, people don't have anyone else to point at. They think, 'it's got to be that guy.' He's the constant. I was also the constant when we were winning, but that's being quarterback in the NFL. You get a lot of blame. You get a lot of credit. It's part of the deal.

"For me, I know who I am. My coaches know what I can do. My teammates know what I can do. If they believe in me, then let's roll."

Carr is ready to roll into the regular season with Antonio Brown, Tyrell Williams and Darren Waller in the pattern, Josh Jacobs in the backfield and Trent Brown and Kolton Miller protecting his flank.

Those weapons and another year in Gruden's scheme has Carr believing a monster year is on the way.

"I haven't played as good a football as I have in this training camp and this offseason," Carr said. "I'm the best version of myself right now. Some of the best football I ever played was last year, and I feel like I'm just going up.

"When Coach Gruden got here, it was a fresh restart. He told me, 'you're a rookie again. Let's build this thing.' He said, 'it may be tough at first, but let's grow this thing.' We get to this year and we're ready to do it now."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Carr will tune out the adulation that would come with a return to glory, now knowing how the milk can turn sour with a few poor results.

While Carr's exterior has hardened, he's still the same guy at his core, willing to offer kindness to strangers.

That was clear after Saturday's practice, while spending a rare camp moment with his family.

Travis Raefield, a Concord resident with Down syndrome wanted to meet his favorite Raider and was introduced to Carr. Raefield showed off his Special Olympics jersey with the No. 4 in honor of Carr, and got an autograph and an extended conversation with his idol.

This wasn't a scheduled photo opp. "Hard Knocks" cameras were nowhere near the exchange. It was just a genuine human moment that made Raefield's month and reminded Carr why he'll never close himself off to the fan base just to avoid a vocal few.

"I've never been out (in public) and run into someone who criticizes me," Carr said. "Everywhere I go, at a game or a practice or wherever, everyone loves our team and supports me. I haven't run into a Raider fan where it's the other. I'm sure there are a few people out there who aren't fans of mine. But the support I get from Raiders fans is so positive. They say, 'thanks for doing it right.' Those moments confirm, 'just continue to be yourself.'"

DE Maxx Crosby

ESPN.COM

Why the Raiders just had to pick 'Mad Maxx'

By Paul Gutierrez

May 14, 2019

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- To Oakland Raiders owner Mark Davis, there was something familiar about the way Maxx Crosby moved around the field, disrupting opposing offenses on game tape.

A long torso with long arms and long legs. A whirling dervish with a chip on the shoulder and a motor that never stopped.

Yes, Davis, who has been around the Raiders since his late father Al came aboard in 1963, saw a little Mad Stork in the Eastern Michigan Eagle.

That would be Ted Hendricks, a Hall of Famer and three-time Super Bowl champion with the Raiders, whose physical attributes are similar to Crosby's.

"Long, lanky, tall," Davis told ESPN.com. "I remember being very excited about seeing him on film and wondering about the competition [he faced]."

"But saying somebody is Ted Hendricks? That's tough. I've always said, if I had one guy to start a team, it would probably be Ted Hendricks. Remember, until we got Ted, we couldn't get over the hump in conference championship games. We got him in 1975 and then we broke through that wall. He's one of just [six] players to play on all three [Raiders] Super Bowl champs. Ted dominated one whole side of the field."

Davis took a breath, fast-forwarded from the late 1970s and early '80s to last month's NFL draft, in which the Raiders used their first of three fourth-round draft picks, No. 106 overall, on Crosby, and then exhaled.

"On tape, he does look good," Davis said. "I just wondered about the competition."

Crosby played defensive end in the the Mid-American Conference at Eastern Michigan and received only one scholarship offer out of high school. He has gone from Ypsilanti to being a third-day draft pick and comparisons to a Pro Football Hall of Famer. No pressure, kid. None at all.

"It's an honor," Crosby said at the start of the Raiders' rookie minicamp. "He's a legend. It's kind of crazy just seeing all the feedback. It's been mostly positive and fans here in Oakland are die-hards. It's an honor to be here, to play for such a legendary organization and I can't wait to go put it out on the field."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Even Hendricks reached out on Twitter to welcome Crosby to the Raiders.

Still, Hendricks was more of a hybrid outside linebacker/defensive end at 6-foot-7, 220 pounds, while the 6-foot-5, 255-pound Crosby is a pure defensive end.

Crosby racked up 18.5 sacks and eight forced fumbles during his final two college seasons and addresses a specific need for a Raiders team that had a league-low 13 sacks last season.

So long as he adds some bulk to his long frame.

"He plays every snap like his hair is on fire, that's No. 1," said general manager Mike Mayock, who first told of Davis comparing Crosby and Hendricks in a Sirius XM radio interview. "No. 2, he has length. No. 3, he ran in the 4.6's, low 4.6's -- so he has some twitch. He has length, he has twitch. He has a great motor. What he doesn't have yet is power. He doesn't have strength yet, and he needs to develop that."

Introducing, then, Raiders strength and conditioning assistant and world class power lifter Deuce Gruden. Yes, coach Jon Gruden's son.

"When I got on the phone with [Crosby], I told him that his future was going to be dependent on a Gruden, but not the one he thought," Mayock said. "It's going to be Deuce. I wanted him to get philosophically connected at the hip with Deuce because he has to get stronger. But I love his tape because he plays his ass off on every play."

Crosby needs more than fast hands.

"They just want me to get stronger," he said of the Raiders. "I don't think weight is the biggest issue. I'm around 255 right now. I just have to keep getting stronger and I have all summer to do that. I'm going to do everything I can to make that happen."

Crosby is one of three defensive ends the Raiders drafted, along with No. 4 overall pick Clelin Ferrell and seventh-rounder Quinton Bell, who made the unusual switch from wide receiver to edge rusher as a college senior.

He is also one of six defensive players in the Raiders' nine-player draft class.

Yeah, there was a need. More than few holes for Oakland to fill.

"He's 'Mad Maxx,'" Jon Gruden said with a snarl. "He comes off the ball repeatedly with great effort. I like that relentless style he plays with. He's gotten bigger and stronger every year that he's played and some of his second effort production is what stands out the most, but he really tested well at the combine."

"He's got real big upside and I think he's got a real big role model to learn from in our first-round pick [Ferrell]."

Crosby and Ferrell hit it off at the combine and reunited in Oakland.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I've played in a 4-2-5 and [the Raiders] run a 4-3, so it's kind of similar, but new techniques and all that, it's going to take a little bit of time to just get adjusted and get the movements down," Crosby said.

"It's still football at the end of the day and we're playing defensive end. We're supposed to get sacks. That's why they pay us, so I just have to get after the quarterback, and the same with everybody else on the D-line."

Now that sounds like something Hendricks might say, and Davis would approve of going forward.

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP

How 'Mad Maxx' Crosby went from one college offer to Raiders wild card

By Matt Schneidman

May 7, 2019

The first time Maxx Crosby met with his coaches at Eastern Michigan, he stunned them.

Not with his quick twitch off the line. Not with his knack for leaving quarterbacks on the ground. Not with a ferocity that earned him the nickname "Mad Maxx."

Chris Creighton was stunned because it was June, and just five months prior the EMU head coach had watched Crosby play high school basketball weighing around 250 pounds. Now Crosby sat in front of Creighton on Eastern Michigan's campus, 40 pounds lighter, forced to explain himself.

"We were definitely concerned," Creighton said. "It was way past just shedding weight. It was like, 'What have you been doing?' ... He was just rail thin."

Crosby had felt hampered by "baby fat" left over from a growth spurt the year prior. He wanted to lose it, then replace it with muscle in college, but he went overboard trying to slim down.

"I kind of got carried away a little bit," Crosby told the Bay Area News Group. "I got a little too thin, just from running and doing all that stuff."

Creighton planned to redshirt Crosby even before he lost all that weight, but the freshman still required a physical transformation if he ever wanted to make a name for himself as a 6-foot-5 pass rusher filled with potential.

Thus began Crosby's evolution, one that's taken him from a 210-pounder who only Eastern Michigan offered out of a high school football hotbed to the wild card of this Raiders draft class. He's an intriguing 255-pound edge rusher taken in the fourth round who Jon Gruden will count on to help transform the NFL's worst pass rush, just like he transformed his own body to get to this point.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's 'Mad Maxx'," Gruden said with a smirk. "He comes off the ball repeatedly with great effort. I like that relentless style he plays with. He's gotten bigger and stronger every year that he's played and some of his second effort production is what stands out the most, but he really tested well at the combine. He's got real big upside."

Crosby stands at the podium at Raiders headquarters on Day 1 of his new job, smile across his face and black flat-brimmed hat turned backward on his head. He's asked about meeting Deuce Gruden, Jon's son and Raiders strength assistant who will help Crosby add even more muscle. He's asked about the pressure of helping lift an anemic pass rush from the depths of the NFL. He's asked about Raiders owner Mark Davis telling general manager Mike Mayock that he sees legendary Raiders linebacker Ted Hendricks in Crosby.

So how, especially coming from Colleyville Heritage High School in the highly recruited Dallas Fort-Worth area, did a player now basking in the NFL limelight and drawing Ted Hendricks comparisons receive just one college offer?

Maybe it's because at a lanky 6-foot-5, Crosby played out of position at linebacker until switching to defensive end for his senior season. There he showcased his craftiness in shedding blocks, his speed in disrupting backfields and that lankiness in wrapping up quarterbacks, but those highlights came too late for other schools to offer. Eastern Michigan remained his only option, and as a freshman redshirt he won Scout Team Player of the Year. That's "a pretty big deal," Creighton said. EMU coaches started to realize how lucky they were having no competition for Crosby's college choice. Now if only he could add that weight again.

He tallied only 1.5 sacks and 5.5 tackles for loss his first year playing in 2016, then skyrocketed to 11 sacks and 16.5 tackles for loss in 2017 en route to earning team MVP and First-Team All-Mid-American Conference honors. Ben Needham took over as Eastern Michigan's defensive line coach before the 2018 season, and upon first watching Crosby's film he saw a player he thought could make the NFL.

When he learned Crosby's only offer came from EMU, Needham was stunned, just like his colleagues when the pass rusher now blossoming into an NFL hopeful around 240 pounds first arrived on campus.

"Especially coming out of Texas," Needham said. "Sometimes you hear those stories about Iowa, always has a guy who played six-man football and nobody came to his school and so that was his only offer. That you can kind of understand. This guy's from the DFW area and that's about the most recruited place in the world."

Hoping to expand his arsenal before his redshirt junior season, Crosby consulted defensive line specialist Brandon Jordan, who's based in the Dallas area. While training with Jordan, Crosby worked with NFL veteran Damon Harrison, now a Detroit Lions defensive tackle and one of the best run-stoppers in the league. Jordan saw in Crosby an effective pass rusher, but a run defender needing improvement.

Harrison's early reaction to Crosby? "Man, he's gonna be special."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Rounding out his repertoire with Jordan and Harrison led to a productive 2018 season in which Crosby improved defending the run, his sack numbers dipping slightly with opponents more aware of his pass-rushing prowess but his tackles for loss still rising.

To motivate his defensive line, Needham awarded points for plays that didn't necessarily appear in the box score, like finishing a play unblocked or executing a tackle with proper form. Sometimes blowing up a play earned a point, too. As Crosby put it, "just the baddest dude on the field" got rewarded.

Each week the player with the most points received a figurine of Ebros the Assassin, a grim reaper wielding a scythe in one hand and flashing a middle finger on the other.

"He won it certainly more than anybody else in our room," Needham said of Crosby, who registered 19 tackles for loss, 7.5 sacks, four forced fumbles and an interception returned for a touchdown in 2018.

Crosby earned First-Team All-MAC honors again. He wanted to probe his NFL prospects, and scouts advised he return to school since he wasn't projected to be a first- or second-round pick and he was still too light. Crosby listened to their advice, but entered the draft anyway.

He added 15 pounds to reach 255, then among edge rushers at the combine finished 10th with a 4.66-second 40 time, second in the three-cone drill at 6.89 seconds, second in the 20-yard shuttle at 4.13 seconds and tied for sixth in the vertical jump at 36 inches.

Though Crosby still weighed less than the Raiders preferred, how he used that physique impressed them enough. They used their first of three fourth-round picks on him at No. 106 overall. Their first four selections came from Clemson, Alabama, Mississippi State and Clemson again. Then...Eastern Michigan.

"He'll make his body do what they want and need for him to do," Creighton said. "I'm not concerned about that at all."

Now at the beginning of his professional career, Crosby faces similar demands from his superiors as he did starting his college career.

"He has length, he has twitch, he has a great motor. What he doesn't have yet is power," Mayock said. "He doesn't have strength yet, and he needs to develop that. When I got on the phone with him, I told him that his future was going to be dependent on a Gruden, but not the one he thought. It's going to be Deuce. I wanted him to get philosophically connected at the hip with Deuce because he has to get stronger. But I love his tape because he plays his ass off on every play."

All Crosby has to do aside from pack on muscle is help improve the league's worst pass rush, one that tallied only 13 sacks last year, fewest in a single season since the 2008 Chiefs finished with 10. Those who've worked closest with him, however, think he can do it.

"His motor, the way he moves, his get-off, his speed and the way he listens and picks up everything, he has the total package with him," Jordan said. "... He's a dominant pass rusher. I can see him going there on third down and dominating on third down."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Crosby may not start, as that responsibility is likely to be shouldered by second-year defensive end Arden Key and 2019 first-rounder Clelin Ferrell. The lights will shine brightest on those two first, then maybe next on veteran defensive end Benson Mayowa, who signed with the Raiders as a free agent after tallying four sacks with the Cardinals in 2018.

Crosby is no stranger to waiting his turn, though, as he did waiting to be recruited, then waiting to play in college, then waiting to hear his name called on Day 3 of the draft. But when Crosby does get on the field, whenever and however that chance comes, the Raiders hope he's a player 31 teams wish they hadn't passed on.

'It was a surreal moment': Keelan Doss lives out his childhood dream in Raiders' preseason opener

By Vic Tafur

Aug. 10, 2019

The first time Keelan Doss scored at Oakland Coliseum, he was in sixth grade. His Pop Warner team was playing at halftime of an Oakland Raiders game. The then-running back from Alameda broke a long run and scored easily.

Doss remembers standing in the end zone that day and thinking, "If I could do this one day as an Oakland Raider, that would be awesome."

Fast-forward to Saturday night, when Doss, now a wide receiver, caught a 3-yard, third-quarter pass from Nathan Peterman in the Raiders' preseason opener, a 14-3 win over the Rams.

"It was a surreal moment when it happened," Doss said. "But I gotta move on it and prepare for next week."

The UC Davis product at least enjoyed the moment Saturday night, with more than 100 family members and friends on hand. In fact, all of the Raiders wide receivers had a pretty good night, even with starters Antonio Brown and Tyrell Williams not playing. J.J. Nelson pretended he was still in Napa and caught a 38-yarder, Ryan Grant had three catches and showed he is not conceding the slot position to rookie Hunter Renfrow, and 2018 preseason star Keon Hatcher caught two passes for 45 yards. Marcell Ateman and Jordan Lasley also had first-down catches.

"I think (the wide receiver group) is incredible," said Peterman, who won over some fans with a 50-yard run. "We've got guys that can flat out fly out there and have great ball skills. Everybody's making plays."

Quarterback Mike Glennon, who started in place of Derek Carr, agreed.

"It's a really deep group and there's going to be some tough decisions to be made," he said. "I think a lot of guys put some good tape out there today, and I'm sure that's a good problem to have."

The Raiders led wire to wire in the last preseason game ever in Oakland as DeAndré Washington scored on a 7-yard touchdown run on the Raiders' first possession. Glennon was sharp for the most part (17 of 25 for 200 yards) but threw two awful interceptions that Raiders coach Jon Gruden will remind him of numerous times before the next preseason game Thursday.

"Both quarterbacks, in their opening possessions, had beautiful touchdown drives," Gruden said. "That's what we want. We want the quarterback to take control of the game and get us on schedule. ... Mike had two interceptions. The one in the end zone can't happen. He got fooled on the other one."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The Raiders' defense was fine, thanks to Rams third-string quarterback Brandon Allen, who struggled, playing most of the game. Arden Key picked up a sack, and rookie cornerback Trayvon Mullen broke up a pass, but there was some bad news as rookie defensive end Maxx Crosby broke his hand. (The Athletic learned of the injury after Gruden addressed the media, and Crosby was not available for comment.)

"I thought Arden Key had a good game," Gruden said. "He made a lot of plays. Credit to him, too. He played a lot of football tonight. I thought he stood out."

Key played the whole game because defensive ends Josh Mauro and Benson Mayowa had the night off. Key probably would have played until the sun came up to get that sack, though, after getting only one last season.

"It felt great to hit the quarterback," Key said. "Get the first one out of the way early."

Key set up his second-quarter sack by bull-rushing Rams tackle Bobby Evans the entire first quarter.

"Then I gave him the double hands," Key said. "First quarter ... bull, bull, bull. Then I put a little finesse on him."

As for Brown, Gruden finally broke his silence on the wide receiver's foot injury, as well as his problems with the league-mandated helmet. Brown had a grievance hearing with the league about the helmet on Friday, and ESPN reported Brown has threatened to not play again if he can't wear his old helmet. (The league said it's outdated, but the new model apparently affects Brown's vision.)

Gruden hopes Brown is back in Napa for training camp when the team returns Monday.

"There have been a lot of reports out there — I can't say that I agree with all of them," Gruden said. "But I support this guy. I think that's what needs to be said. This foot injury wasn't his fault. This was a total accident. It really wasn't his fault. It's a serious injury, I know some people are smarting at it. But it's really not a laughing matter."

Brown reportedly sustained frostbite on his feet after not wearing the right footwear when he went into a cryogenic chamber. Neither Brown nor the Raiders have verified that.

"And the helmet thing is a personal matter to him," Gruden said. "He has a strong feeling about what he's worn on his head, and we're supporting him. We understand the league's position as well, so we're in a tough spot. And we hope Antonio is back here soon because he is exciting to be around. I have some plays for him, and I hope we can start calling them."

"I have a feeling that he would play with no helmet, that's how much he loves to play. But I am not going to put words in anybody's mouth. We're going to support him, and whatever his decision is, we'll stand by it. But we're confident that he is going to be a huge factor for the Raiders for years to come."

Raiders' Keelan Doss carries 'chip on my shoulder' from draft snub

By Matt Kawahara

Aug. 9, 2019

Receiver Keelan Doss did not hear his name called among the 254 players selected in this year's NFL draft.

Only after the final round, Doss said, did his phone start ringing, with teams wanting to sign him as an undrafted free agent.

"I want to say close to 20" teams, said Doss, the receiver from Alameda High School and UC Davis. "I was like, 'Well, I wish y'all would've drafted me. I would feel a lot better.'"

Doss still "had a good feeling," though, from his week at the Senior Bowl playing for the Raiders coaching staff and Jon Gruden — who reached out "right when (the draft) was over."

"As soon as he called me, I knew exactly where I wanted to go," Doss said recently at Raiders training camp in Napa. "And that was here."

As a result, when the Raiders host the Los Angeles Rams in their preseason opener at the Coliseum on Saturday, Doss will suit up for his first NFL experience minutes from where he grew up.

The Raiders are expected to rest most of their starters for the game after evaluating them in two joint practices with the Rams during the week. Instead, Gruden said the Raiders plan to use the game to "take a look at some young players — some guys that need the opportunity."

That includes Doss, who is competing for a spot in a crowded receiver group and whom Gruden has said will "play a lot in these preseason games."

"He's playing three positions and is making some difficult catches against very good defenders," Gruden said this week. "He's in the mix. ... He'll get a great opportunity."

The Raiders, who opened last season with six receivers on their 53-man roster, have 12 in camp. Antonio Brown, who has missed most of camp, and Tyrell Williams are projected as their top two receivers. Rookie Hunter Renfrow has taken most of the first-team reps at slot receiver, while Dwayne Harris doubles as a return specialist.

J.J. Nelson, Ryan Grant, Marcell Ateman and Keon Hatcher are among the other receivers jockeying for the final spots with Doss, who has experienced rookie swings in his first NFL training camp.

In one early practice, Doss made a highlight-reel catch by going into a full-extension dive on a deep pass from Mike Glennon. That same day, Doss dropped a routine pass near the sideline. Quarterback Derek Carr later said the key for Doss is consistency.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I think we've seen him make some spectacular catches," Carr said. "I think the thing for Keelan — and with any rookie, this is not a knock on Keelan — is the simple plays. He drops a ball on the sideline, all he's trying to do is get the ball and make the next play. His mind-set is right. I think as the game settles down for him, it's just making the simple play."

As a junior at UC Davis in 2017, Doss led all FBS and FCS players by averaging 136.3 receiving yards per game (115 catches, 1,499 yards). While some expected Doss to declare early for the draft, he opted to return for his senior season and helped lead UC Davis to an FCS playoff berth.

Doss said that going undrafted was "definitely frustrating." For perspective, though, he need only look at the top of the Raiders' receiver depth chart.

Brown, a sixth-round draft pick by the Steelers in 2010, is a four-time All-Pro selection and the only receiver in NFL history with six consecutive seasons of 100-plus catches and 1,000-plus receiving yards. Williams was signed as an undrafted free agent by the Chargers out of Western Oregon in 2015. The Raiders signed him to a four-year, $47 million contract in March.

Gruden recently said he's partial to players who "come up the hard way, with a chip on their shoulder." Doss, recalling his draft-day experience, said he fits that description.

"I'm never going to live that down, as far as the chip on my shoulder or that feeling inside me," Doss said. "I'm sure if you ask A.B., he'll feel like he should've gone first round. You ask Tyrell, I bet he'll say he should've gotten drafted. What makes those players great in my opinion is they come out with a purpose and chip on their shoulder, and that's kind of what I thrive on as well."

DE Clelin Ferrell

Raiders draftee Clelin Ferrell explains why he hates being called 'rookie'

By Jerry McDonald

August 21, 2019

The Raiders surprised some people by taking Clelin Ferrell at No. 4 in the NFL Draft.

Not that the Ted Hendricks Award winner wasn't a great player for national champion Clemson. It's just that most people pegged him as a mid-to-late first-round pick since Khalil Mack, for example, had gone No. 5 overall.

Ferrell, the youngest of nine kids, sat down to discuss the term "rookie," criticism over how high he was drafted and the pressure to live up to Mack's legacy.

You don't like being called a rookie. How come?

My coaches don't like it, either. It's just a mindset. For me, it's all about proving yourself to your teammates. That term has a connotation of having an excuse for why you might be doing bad. I don't want nobody to make no excuses for me. If I mess up, if I'm not doing well, then that's on me.

You want to be a leader right off the bat. Today at practice both Jon Gruden and Mike Mayock came up to you for a few words before practice. Isn't that a lot to put on your shoulders?

Nah, the biggest thing is just being me. Being a leader isn't just being the most vocal guy or being the guy in the room that tells people what to do. In my room, with my group of guys, I feel like being a leader is helping to empower others. We've got a lot of guys that haven't been leaders before. It's really for me to empower other guys and motivate other guys to be a leader and hold me accountable.

You grew up with two parents with military backgrounds. Do you feel that makes you a leader?

It had an effect because I see the type of leaders my parents were. But though they both were in the military, it wasn't really that much of a military-type atmosphere growing up. I would say more so, my mom sending me to a military high school (Benedictine College Prep in Richmond, Virginia) to learn the different traits and assets of what being a leader really means. It's not just about hearing a drill sergeant yelling at you. It's about motivating others and helping each other focus on maintaining a common goal. As far as growing up, my parents treated me like a normal kid.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

You were the youngest of nine kids...

One of nine, right. It's hard to really keep your eyes on all the kids. I was the baby, so everybody felt like I was kind of spoiled a little bit. I don't. My brothers and sisters were hard on me.

Did you hate military school?

I hated it my first two years. I literally was about to be at the school protesting the military. But coming into that high school, I would say internally I didn't have a lot of discipline as a man. I was a bit rebellious, kind of wanted to be with my boys from the neighborhood. But I really learned about integrity and character and being disciplined, and it helped me to grow up, Any time a kid's got to grow up, it's hard for them.

What do you say when people say, "Ferrell is pretty good, but not at No. 4. It's too high"?

I don't say nothing. I had that in college, where you hear the talk, good and bad about somebody. But you can never listen to it. The biggest thing is after this season you won't be able to tell if I was worth the pick whether I have a good or bad year. Come back to me 10 years from now, at the end of my career, and tell me if I was worth it.

You're the highest defensive pick here since Khalil Mack at No. 5 in 2014. And also a defensive end. Think Raider fans are going to look at that?

I hope not. I'm not Khalil Mack, but Khalil Mack isn't me. We can't be each other. He brings things to the table, and so do I. Respect to a great, great player. A guy I looked up to coming out of high school and college. He's on a completely different team, and I'm just focused on the Raiders now. So I hope Raiders fans welcome me with open arms.

The Raiders had just 13 sacks last season. Coaches have been reminding the defense about it. Does that motivate you?

Hell yeah, that's motivating. We're trying to shatter that number. The best part about that is that this group didn't get 13 sacks last year. It was last year's group. But this D-line hasn't proved anything yet, and we've got a lot to prove and have set high goals for ourselves.

Your family watches you closely from afar. Did you get a good review from them after the Rams game?

My brothers definitely got on me about making more plays. They want me running to the ball more. And they were wondering why I wasn't in on special teams. I told them I didn't know why coach didn't put me out there because I've been playing them in practice.

Military upbringing taught Raiders' draft pick Clelin Ferrell about leadership, sacrifice and teamwork

By Vic Tafur

May 27, 2019

Clelin Ferrell didn't know about his dad's visit until after his father had passed away. Clelin was a freshman at Benedictine College Preparatory, a private military academy in Richmond, Va., when his dad died after a bout with lung cancer. And shortly after that is when he heard about his dad's talk with Benedictine football coach Greg Lilly.

It was about pushing his son to stay on the right path.

Ferrell, now the top 2019 draft pick of the Raiders, is being looked to by coach Jon Gruden and general manager Mike Mayock to not only make plays at defensive end but also to quickly develop into a leader. It was something he demonstrated in helping win two national championships at Clemson, and something he became at Benedictine.

"Military school definitely shaped who I am as a person," Ferrell said in a telephone interview on Thursday. "I always had a love and respect for the military because of my mom and dad's service, but our house wasn't that strict like everyone thinks. It was a laid-back home, just like other kids', and that's why I was surprised when my mom started talking about military school."

Ferrell's mother, Faye, served 22 years in the U.S. Army. She was a staff sergeant who served in Operation Desert Storm. It was in the Army where she met Cleavester Ferrell, who would serve 24 years in the Army, including two tours of duty in the Vietnam War. Clelin was the youngest of nine kids, and two of his brothers and an aunt also served in the military. It's where he saw himself going one day, until he became one of the top football players in the country, at a military school that he didn't want to attend.

"Nobody wants to go to military school," Ferrell said. "No young teenager wants to go to a school where it's all boys, and you're in there every day from sun up to sun down, with the dress code and all these rules, and you're taking military history and theology classes. But it definitely taught me discipline and integrity and got me in touch with my spirituality. It also taught me how to be a good teammate. You always hear that you will die in battle without good teamwork. Military school made me a better person, which in turn made me a better football player."

Ferrell had always thought he would go to the public high school in Richmond with his friends, but his mom had other ideas. Well, not ideas — that implies it was open for debate.

"I thought she was joking at first," Clelin said. "Then it became clear that I could cry and whine all I wanted to, but I was going to Benedictine."

"We just felt that he needed some structure," Faye told the Post and Courier in Charleston years ago. "My husband and I both coming from the military, we figured that he would get that. But, trust and believe me, he was resistant of it."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Faye stopped doing interviews years ago and declined this one, but it is clear that she thought her youngest son was a little rebellious.

"I thought I was cool," Ferrell said. "Cool doesn't last too long at military school."

After his son tried a couple challenges to the school's dress code, Cleavester went in to see Lilly, who is still coaching at the school and is now also the admissions director. Cleavester was very sick and two of his other sons took him in to see Lilly.

"He told me he wasn't going to be around much longer," Lilly said in a telephone interview. "He told me the kind of man he saw his son becoming, and he asked me to push him and to make sure he worked hard."

Cleavester never told Clelin about the talk.

"I didn't know about it," Clelin said. "I didn't know that it happened until my coach told me about it after my dad passed. My dad told him to look out for me, to watch out for me and made sure I stayed on the right path, to give me that father figure if I needed one. And he was. My coach was always in my corner and helped me develop into a man."

When they went fishing together, Cleavester would also tell his son to be an inspiration to other people. And in that meeting with Lilly, he enlisted some help.

Cleavester passed away in March 2012 and the entire junior varsity football team attended the funeral.

Clelin was touched by the gesture, and it drove home the idea of a football team as a family. That's something that Ferrell took with him to Clemson — especially after he tore his ACL his senior year in high school after he had verbally committed to the Tigers and they didn't back out of his scholarship offer.

Clemson defensive line coach Todd Bates didn't join the program until 2017. He remembers a sophomore knocking on his door.

"Clelin walked in and told me whatever I needed, I should let him know," Bates said in a telephone interview. "If there was a player that I needed him to get on, to let him know. I knew right away that he was a gifted player, a very hard worker and someone that put the team and the pursuit of winning above everything else. The other players and coaches really loved him and we were all thrilled that he went fourth in the draft. I think the Oakland Raiders fans are really in for a treat. They are going to love him, for the player and person that he is."

Mayock told Ferrell when he was drafted that he was going to be a key to turning the team around, both on the field and off, as far as his leadership presence in the locker room and his worth ethic "changing the culture" on the Raiders.

Ferrell has been working out with his new Raiders teammates for a few weeks now and Thursday, he tweeted out: "Man, I love this team!!!"

I asked him what sparked the tweet.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I can just feel it, that we're really starting to have a good core here," Ferrell said. "I know the other rookies, and I have met the veterans now. I just feel like we have the right guys, we just have to put everything together. We have to really put in the work to get out of it what we want. It starts with having the right mindset and attitude and setting goals for ourselves ...

"I like this group. I feel like we have really good guys in this locker room. I don't know what it was like before I got here, but it's been all good since I got here. I am just a rookie and I am trying to soak it all in."

And just like in military school, Ferrell wants to be pushed. By Raiders coaches and his veteran teammates.

"For me, coming from a military family, my mom always told me, 'Clelin, you've got to understand,'" Ferrell said last month, the day after he was drafted by the Raiders. "That drill sergeant who was training her for war, he was hard on her all the time but she knew that that drill sergeant loved her because he didn't want her to go out there and die on that battlefield. It's all about good relationships and just letting the people around you know that any type of leadership role as far as holding them accountable, it comes from a good place. You want for them what you want for yourself. That's the biggest thing. I'm all about us, I care about the people that I work with."

And he obviously cares about people, especially the people in his family, who have served this country. Ferrell said he will pay his respects on Memorial Day, but that he pays his respects every day.

In March, Ferrell was at an autograph signing at Haywood Mall in Greenville, S.C., when he spotted a man sitting on the floor with a camouflage backpack with a U.S. Army logo. He went over and sat next to him, and after a long talk, handed the man a purple Clemson jersey, the one the team has worn in the past on Military Appreciation Day.

Another fan that was there took a picture of the encounter and the image went viral on social media.

"I saw the picture and to be honest with you, I didn't feel like it was that special of a moment," Ferrell said. "I was just talking to somebody and giving them something they deserved. ... He had come up earlier and I saw his Army hat, and I thought about giving him the jersey then but forgot about it when I started signing for other people."

"And then I saw he was over there after I finished signing, and I went over to ask him a couple of questions. His father was in the military like mine. He had served in Afghanistan, like my brother did. I gave him the jersey, but I didn't feel like I was doing him a favor. I just felt like he was owed that. He was a big Clemson fan and he had sacrificed his life for our country."

"That jersey meant a lot to me and I hope it means a lot to him. Actually, from talking to him, I am pretty sure it does."

Netflix, Cheetos and running after practice: 24 hours with Raiders defensive tackle Johnathan Hankins

By Vic Tafur

Aug. 13, 2019

NAPA — I wouldn't call it a strut, and it's not a limp. It's somewhere in between, a mix of confidence and an acknowledgment to his body that he has put it through a lot and is going to take it nice and easy now.

Raiders defensive tackle Johnathan Hankins walks slowly but surely off the Raiders practice field in Napa. He is not one of the biggest stories of training camp — after all, Hankins is down to 320 pounds and new right tackle Trent Brown is about 385 — but he is a key player when it comes to improving on last season's 4-12 record. Both coach Jon Gruden and defensive coordinator Paul Guenther have called him the most improved player on the team.

The bar can be high, as Hankins, 27, was one of the best defensive tackles in the league in 2014. He had seven sacks and 51 tackles, and the Raiders are excited that the run stopper can get back to that level.

"I can. I can get back to that level," Hankins said. "We changed schemes with the Colts last year and when they cut me, I signed with the Raiders but had already missed training camp. I really didn't have my foot in the ground.

"I do this year, and they have me focused on getting upfield and penetrating."

Hankins was kind enough to let us in behind the scenes of his training camp with the Raiders. He filled us in on his entire day between the joint practices with the Rams last Wednesday and Thursday:

9:50 a.m. — The Raiders and Rams go at it at practice, with this session on Wednesday being a little more subdued than what will come Thursday. New linebacker Vontaze Burfict is directing traffic, and the defense looks like a road map as opposed to last season's abstract painting.

"I was always a fan of Paul Guenther when he was in Cincinnati," Hankins said. "He always had a very solid defensive line and he wanted to get that going last season here, but there were a lot of moving parts. This year, we're going to be a bright spot in this division and surprise a lot of people."

12:30 p.m. — Hankins gets treatment after practice, showers and then makes the short trek to lunch. He doesn't smile a lot these days because he has been on a meal plan since the start of spring.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I cut out all starch," Hankins said. "Potatoes ... no more mashed potatoes and rice anymore (sighs) ... no more bread. Just veggies and fish and protein. It's been tough, but it's definitely benefitted me."

The 6-foot-3 Hankins has lost seven pounds since working with a chef. His goal is to lose three more pounds and get down to 317, his playing weight his rookie season.

After a lunch of salmon, broccoli and asparagus, Hankins gets some more treatment.

"I get some maintenance on the body," Hankins said. "Hot tub, cold tub ... anything that is nagging, I get it worked on. Just trying to stay ahead of it."

2:45 p.m. — Unlike other players, Hankins can't take naps between practice and meetings.

"I won't wake up," he said.

So Hankins goes back to his hotel room and watches Netflix. He is currently getting up to speed on African wildlife.

"I have watched everything else on Netflix so I don't really know what to watch," he said.

Unlike most players, Hankins has his own room.

"This is my seventh year, and it's supposed to be for eighth-year guys and up, so I appreciate that," he said. "I don't have time for someone to be snoring or on the phone all night. I just want to settle down and relax ... Netflix and chill."

4:30 p.m. — There is no afternoon walkthrough Wednesday since the Rams are in town for the head-to-head practices, so Hankins hits the defensive line meeting. The Raiders players go over their mistakes from the morning practice.

New defensive line coach Brentson Buckner has been a hit so far.

"He is very detail-oriented," Hankins said. "He's definitely stressing that we use our hands more and better. He wants us to get penetration, he doesn't like to see guys playing on the line of scrimmage. He doesn't think you're effective that way."

That's been new for Hankins, who said he played a more reactionary technique his first five years in the NFL.

"Now we're just going at them and going through them," Hankins said.

6 p.m. — Chicken. Pesto. Zucchini. No pasta. No dessert.

At these moments, he will think fondly of his cheat days, when the Raiders are off (like this past Sunday).

"I cheat with Hot Cheetos and Dairy Queen," Hankins said. "I try not to go too crazy. Just one meal. The whole day will really set you back."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

7 p.m. — Team meeting, followed by unit meetings and individual meetings. At the first one, Gruden goes over the new offensive and defensive plays and a couple of rookies get up and sing every day.

"Maxx (Crosby) was by far the best," Hankins said. "And he didn't rap. He sang. Most of the rookies get booed. We don't have a lot of patience."

Other position groups have rookies go out and buy snacks or donuts. But not the defensive linemen.

"A lot of us have weight restrictions," Hankins said. "Only healthy snacks in the meeting room, so there aren't a lot of snacks in there."

At the individual meeting, Hankins goes over the plays for the next day's practice.

9:30 p.m. — Snack time. Cup of fruit. ...

(Hankins looks around.)

"Or I go to the store and get some Hot Cheetos," he said.

I thought that was only on cheat days ...

"Hey ... sometimes you just gotta do it," he said. "Just a $2 bag. There aren't a lot in there. The Cheetos people are trying to get over on us."

10 p.m. — Hankins calls his wife and then his parents, and watches some more Netflix before the lights are out at 11.

"This being my second year (with the Raiders), I have a pretty good grasp of the defense," Hankins said. "But I will get out the iPad and refresh a little bit every night before I go to sleep."

6:15 a.m. — The alarm sounds. Hankins is awake, and brushes his teeth, but doesn't really leave the bed for good for about an hour.

7:30 a.m. — Hankins gets a big bowl of oatmeal, a shake and plate of egg whites. He is over omelets these days.

8 a.m. — More individual meetings. There is a special teams meeting earlier but Hankins can blow that off as he is only on the field-goal units. "Thank God I am not out there on the field for punt returns," he said.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

8:30 a.m. — Music time. Hankins has to be on the field in 30 minutes so he is playing either rap music or techno to get himself fired up. Eventually, the switch flips on, just like it did when he was 6 years old and first started playing football. His older brothers played, and Hankins always loved to run around with the ball.

But you have all heard every big man's lament, with the positions changing as the inches and pounds keep coming. The running back, in this case a young Hankins, becomes a tight end and then a middle linebacker and then a guard and then a defensive tackle.

Thankfully, Hankins took to life in the trenches pretty quickly.

"The thrill of just dominating the guy in front of you," Hankins said.

He never wanted to be an offensive lineman.

"It's funny, when you're growing up, all defensive linemen think that offensive linemen are soft and just punching bags," Hankins said. "Then I got to Ohio State and the NFL and realized that offensive linemen are some of the nastiest guys out there."

9:15 a.m. — Buckner leads the group through a lot of pre-practice drills. The Raiders have three second-year defensive linemen and two rookies, and when Buckner isn't hollering at them, Hankins is in their ear.

"I have Mo Hurst next to me in meeting rooms and P.J. Hall behind me, and I try to explain to them how to play certain blocks," Hankins said. "And that continues on the field. I am pretty good at playing the run, and the young guys want to know what I am looking for, what the keys are."

Hankins will go over backfield formations with those two and second-year defensive end Arden Key and have them try and "see the play before it even happens. Last year they were just running around."

Hall, at 6-feet, 310 pounds, is the strongest of the linemen and has some impressive lifting videos online. Hankins is not that impressed.

"His arms are so short that he doesn't have to lift the weight that high," Hankins said, laughing. "He's got built-in leverage."

Hall once squatted 700 pounds.

"There is no need for anyone to do that," Hankins said. "That's uncalled for."

9:50 a.m. — Practice starts, and while most players say they enjoy practicing against a different team because of the newness of the challenge, Hankins regards it as a break.

"Going against our offensive line is probably the toughest battle I have had since I have been in the NFL," he said. "Gabe Jackson and Richie Incognito are two of the best guards in the league and Rodney (Hudson) might be the best center. Trent Brown is huuuge. Kolton (Miller) ... I think the whole line goes 350."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Going against the Rams was like a vacation.

"The double-teams are not the same, they're not as heavy," Hankins said. "It feels different. It feels good not having 1,000 pounds on you."

Buckner pushes the players to get tired in practice so that they won't in games. So the coach runs the defensive linemen after practice.

"He ain't here to be your friend," Hankins said.

As Hankins, who didn't play in the preseason opener Saturday, gets ready for Thursday's game at Arizona, we'll let Buckner have the last word.

"Hankins is a big guy that can move," Buckner said. "I keep telling him not to let people tell him that he is a nose guard because he is big. Be a big guy that can move. Like Kevin Williams. Like Kris Jenkins. I challenged him, 'Don't be a nose guard, be a complete defensive tackle. He got himself in shape and is showing a lot of quickness and explosion.'

"And he brings his hard hat every day. He is working and grinding and making sure the young guys are not slacking off."

WR/RS Dwayne Harris

THE ATHLETIC

Beyond the Gucci: How the Raiders' Dwayne Harris went from college quarterback to elite NFL special teamer

By Vic Tafur

Sept. 3, 2019

Let's clear up something from April 2. That was when the Raiders re-signed receiver/return specialist Dwayne Harris and he posed for the contract-signing picture with his two Yorkshire Terriers.

"OJ and Blue," Harris said. "Those are my guys, man."

Harris, OJ and Blue were all decked out in Gucci. But here's the thing: that wasn't planned. That just happened to be what they were all wearing that day.

"The only reason I brought them was I had to get them from the kennel before it closed," Harris said. "And I was already on my way here to sign my contract."

Don't hate the Terriers, hate the game. That's just how OJ and Blue roll.

"My dogs are always fresh," Harris said. "They have more clothes than I do. They have duffel bags of clothes. It's not all Gucci. They have a little bit of everything."

Harris is also on a nice roll in his unique role on the Raiders. For cutdown day has come and gone again, and Harris is always still standing. Wearing Gucci.

Harris only had six catches for 40 yards last season. But he never had to sweat making the 53-man roster, even with the Raiders having a lot of talented receivers at training camp last month.

The 5-foot-10, 215-pound Harris returns kicks, but that only scratches the surface of what he does.

"He's more than just a returner," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said at training camp. "He's an impact cover guy. I mean, I don't know what NextGen Stats says, but he drew nine or 10 penalties on special teams. Forget about the tackles he made, he was held nine or 10 times."

Harris, 31, may be all flash off the field, but on he is a lunch-pail special teamer, an elite one, who is always re-reading the rulebook to find ways he can help the Raiders win in the third phase of the game.

"You look at Dwayne and he has a little bit of a slow walk to him, and he wears big glasses," Raiders special teams coordinator Rich Bisaccia said. "If you're having a pickup basketball game, he is probably the last guy you're going to pick. ... And then, when you're done with the game, he has probably scored 33 points and had six rebounds and 10 assists."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He's Cool Hand Luke."

Cool Hand Dwayne's glasses are Gucci. In fact, he said 95 percent of the stuff he rocks is Gucci. When teammates admire his clothes and ask for a handout, he says to come see him in the offseason.

"They gotta catch me in the spring," Harris said. "Spring cleaning. That's when I get rid of the old stuff."

Harris hooked up with Gucci in 2017 when he played for the New York Giants and broke his foot.

"I had a lot of free time, so every Friday I used to go to the Gucci store and just chill. See what new stuff was coming out, do a little shopping and we built up a relationship. They started sending me stuff ... and I wear it."

If you told Dwayne Harris as a kid that this would be his life now, he would not be surprised.

"I always knew I was going to go to the league," Harris said. "Always. Always. Growing up, my mom and dad was always like, 'You need to have a backup plan.' I was like, 'Nah, I am going to do the NFL thing.' Everybody that knew me knew that's what I was going to do."

Harris was a quarterback at Tucker High in Stone Mountain, Ga. A good enough one that he got a lot of scholarship offers and picked East Carolina.

"I was like Michael Vick," Harris said. "Yeah, you could say that. I ended up switching to receiver in college, because my odds were better of getting to the league and living out my dreams."

Harris didn't make the switch until the end of his freshman year.

"It was my decision," Harris said. "I was 5-foot-10. It would have been hard to make it as a quarterback ... back then. If I would have came out now, I would have been all right. So I made the switch after my freshman year."

The coaching staff tried Harris at running back first, then moved him to safety and finally put him at receiver.

"We had a practice one day and the coaches looked at each other and said we have to find him a spot because he was on the scout team and our defense couldn't tackle him," former East Carolina receivers coach and current offensive coordinator Donnie Kirkpatrick said in a phone interview last week. "He could have been a great running back but we already had Chris Johnson, and having Dwayne as a backup running back didn't really solve our problem. So we moved him to slot and kick returner, even tried some Wildcat at quarterback."

"Dwayne was our decathlon guy. He could do all the events really well."

There was a learning curve because Harris had never played receiver in his life.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"I didn't know how to run routes," Harris said. "Because I had been a quarterback, it was easy to know what the quarterback was looking for, but it was hard to run the route. I didn't really know what I was doing. Luckily, I was a pretty good athlete."

The Pirates' best play was to throw Harris a quick pass and then have him make defenders miss.

In four years, Harris had 268 receptions for 3,001 yards and 20 touchdowns, with 86 rushes for 526 yards and six touchdowns, and 2,853 return yards and three touchdowns.

Harris was drafted in the sixth round by the Cowboys, realizing his lifelong dream of making it to the NFL.

"I just wanted to get my foot in the door," he said. "I was way down on the depth chart so I knew I was going to have to get mine on special teams. That will get me on the field and then I will stay in the league a long time."

The kick returning part came easy. The kick coverage, not so much.

"I didn't know to tackle people," Harris said. "I played on kickoff coverage once in college, and the other team ran it back for a touchdown. They never asked me to do that again. I mean, I was a quarterback growing up. Quarterbacks don't tackle people."

That's where Bisaccia enters our story. The current Raiders special teams coordinator became Harris' special teams coach with the Cowboys in 2013, but he had already fallen in love with Harris. Like, Bisaccia had a pick-up line and everything.

"I was with the Chargers and we were practicing against the Cowboys," Bisaccia said. "I told him after practice, 'Hey 17, if I had you, you would be playing now.' I knew he had played quarterback, and he was really strong and thick, and had a lot of different talents. ... The way that he moved, and the physicality that he played with ... you don't find many guys that can return kicks and punts and cover kicks and punts."

Bisaccia and Harris were together for two years in Dallas, and the coach helped shape the player who would make the Pro Bowl in 2016 with the Giants.

"I give all the credit to Rich," Harris said. "He came in and told me to play gunner. I told him I had never played that before. He told me to run down the field and tackle the guy with the ball. And then we did some tackling drills."

Running down the length of the field with 10 other guys while 11 are running toward you is sheer madness. What's going through Harris' mind as he runs and looks for the ball carrier?

"To be honest with you, I don't even know what I am thinking," Harris said. "Everything is moving so fast and you can't really dictate what the other team is going to do. I try and play off what they do. A lot of guys don't like to jump me because I'm physical at the line, so I don't really get a lot of quick jams."

"So I just run by them or if I have to, be more physical than they are. It's like playing in the backyard as a kid — don't let anybody touch you."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

The adjustment to special teams star might have been tougher for Harris' family than it was for him.

"They always enjoyed watching me throw touchdown passes or making plays," Harris said. "They were shocked to see me running down the field and hitting people. But I love doing it, it's exciting to me to play kick coverage and return kicks, and it's become exciting to them as well."

Nothing was more unexpectedly exciting than Harris' touchdown against the Broncos in last year's home finale.

The Broncos' Isaac Yiadom tried to keep a punt out of the end zone and pushed the ball to the 1-yard line. Harris swooped in, picked it up and ran it back 99 yards down the sideline for the touchdown.

The rules stated that because Yiadom didn't have control of the ball when he pushed it, Harris could pick it up and run.

"I am a guy who looks for opportunities anyway I can get them, and I know all the rules that have anything to do with special teams," Harris said. "I had seen that play happen once before in Dallas and it was always in the back of my mind. Anytime I see a gunner go down and try and knock the ball back, I am always around the ball trying to pick it up."

"That guy didn't know the rules and hit the ball right to me. I picked it up and started running as fast as I could."

The Coliseum crowd was stunned, but Bisaccia said he was watching Harris the whole time and knew what Harris was thinking.

"He was getting in a position where he could get the ball with nobody around it," Bisaccia said, "and make the no-consequence play. Dwayne is really, really smart and very astute about the rules."

The Broncos touchdown wasn't even Bisaccia's favorite Harris play of the season.

"The one in the Kansas City game is the one no one talks about," he said. "He steps out of bounds and then steps back in to pick (the kickoff) up and the ball goes to the 40. Even the announcers called it a dumb play and that he got away with it."

"The reality is that it was an incredibly smart play with him knowing the rules and knowing that he could step out first and then step in with one foot and make the play."

You can see why Bisaccia wanted Harris badly when he joined Gruden's staff last year.

"I know he has been in the top-five in punt returns and he's been in the top-five in kickoff returns," Bisaccia said. "He's been a double-digit tackler for us and he drew 11 penalties. Add that up field-position wise and he is a very valuable member of our team."

Bisaccia said Harris is also a quiet leader.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"My time in this game is almost up," Harris said. "I probably have a couple more years, and I try and tell the younger players what I am seeing and why I do things a certain way. I enjoy passing on my techniques."

A lot of Harris' techniques and highlights are on Bisaccia's teaching tapes.

"Rich has been so important to my career," Harris said. "Developing me into the player that I am now. I never thought I would be playing special teams and going to the Pro Bowl for it. He showed me stuff in my game that I didn't even know I was doing and changed the way I play as a special teams player and as a returner."

Harris won't give the young players any of the new Gucci line, but he has offered some to Bisaccia.

"I told him I will not wear it," Bisaccia said, smiling. "He's all Gucci'd out for the both of us."

RB Josh Jacobs

THE PLAYERS' TRIBUNE

People Say I Run Angry

By Josh Jacobs

April 25, 2019

I just kept running.

I didn't know what else to do. I was just walking up to the gas station with three of my friends when a car pulled up in front of us. One of the dudes inside said something. I didn't hear him. One of my friends said something back. I don't remember what. The car sped off. We kept on walking. Then we saw the same car loop back around.

The lights cut off first. That's when we started running.

Then came the gunshots.

We scattered. I was booking it down the sidewalk. Out of the four of us, the car chose to follow me. And the dudes inside just kept on shooting.

I broke off and jumped over a fence into somebody's backyard. I juked my way through a bunch of kids' toys and jumped another fence. I was trying to calculate how far I was from home when I realized ... I couldn't go home. These dudes were following me. And I didn't want to lead them to my house.

So I just kept running.

I ran for about 10 blocks. One gear. Nonstop. A hundred miles an hour. Faster than I've ever run in my life. Just crashing through backyards and changing directions until I couldn't hear any gunshots or car engines.

When I finally stopped, I had no idea where I was. I just remember it felt like all the air had been sucked out of my chest at once. Like I had been punched in the gut.

That was the first time I got shot at. I was in middle school. About 13 years old, if I remember it right. And I'll be honest ... I was scared, man.

But being scared isn't even the worst part.

The worst is when you get used to it.

When you hear gunshots, and you don't even run. When you see people fighting in the street, and you don't even look twice. When the spotlight from a helicopter shines through your bedroom window, and you just pull the shades down.

Because it's just another day in the life.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I was so relieved when I got home. Not only because I got there safe, but because I had a home to go to at all.

I grew up in Tulsa, Oklahoma. When I was in the fourth grade, my parents split up, and I went to live with my pops. He had just moved out of his apartment. He'd had another one lined up, but it wasn't ready yet. It was supposed to only take a couple of weeks, so we stayed with some relatives for a bit. But the apartment took longer than expected. When we had no family left to stay with and nowhere else to go, we slept in my dad's Suburban.

I would shower in the locker rooms after football practice, then my pops would pick me up and drive around to look for a spot on the side of the road to park for the night. Somewhere out of the way. I would lie down in the back seat and he would be up front. I remember he had a gun, and whenever he laid his seat back at night, he would always keep it on his chest with his hand on it. Just in case.

If he ever slept, I didn't see it. Every time I woke up — whether it was morning or the middle of the night — he was awake. Watching out. Protecting me.

We slept in that Suburban every night for maybe two weeks until the apartment was finally ready. We moved in, and a couple of months later, my dad won custody of my three brothers and my sister, and they moved in with us, too.

Then, my dad lost his job.

We eventually got kicked out of the apartment. Pops couldn't pay, and the landlord had somebody else lined up who was willing to pay more anyway. So that was it for us. For the next two years or so, we basically lived out of our backpacks, hopping from motel to motel. Every now and then my dad would snag an apartment, but it wouldn't last too long. And before we knew it, it was back to the motel.

On good days, we'd find a spot that had a continental breakfast where we could sneak enough fruit and bagels to last us a whole day. On bad days, we would eat rice and beans or ramen noodles. I was the king of white rice and ramen noodles, man. A five-star microwave chef. My dad used to buy them in big quantities so he could feed all of us. I'd cook for everybody. Some nights, when the food supply was really thin, my dad wouldn't eat. I would try to give him some of my food, but he wouldn't let me.

I didn't really understand it all at the time — the way we were living, the sacrifices my dad was making ... none of it. I just never looked at our life as a struggle. To me, it was just life. It was all I knew.

But now, looking back on it all, I understand.

I understand how difficult it was for my dad. How frustrating it must have been. And he never took those frustrations out on us. Even on the worst nights, when we didn't have enough food to eat or any clean clothes to wear to school the next day, we would still laugh together. We didn't have game nights or movie nights. Pops used to have us sing. We'd write poetry. Freestyle rap while the others beatboxed. My older brothers would always draw. He wanted us to express ourselves. To engage with each other.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Even when our stomachs were empty, we would spend all night laughing together, as a family.

I remember one night, when money was at its tightest, my dad told me that if he went out on the street and sold drugs, we wouldn't have to worry about money, or food, or a place to live anymore. There was plenty of money out there to be had.

But he said he would never do it, for two reasons. One, it was too risky. If he got arrested or sent to jail, there would be nobody to take care of us kids, and he might lose us. And that was out of the question.

And two ... he said that the easy way out usually isn't the right way. He said it's hard work and perseverance that gets rewarded, not shortcuts.

That's what he had been doing. Working hard. Persevering. Trying to do the right things, knowing — no ... hoping — that everything would work out.

Then, the summer before I went into the eighth grade, pops landed a pretty steady job. We left the motels behind and moved into a house — the one in the rough part of town with the gunshots and the street fights and the helicopters. Food was still hard to come by. Money was still tight. Life was still a struggle.

But we finally had a place to call home.

Football wasn't an escape. I didn't play to take out my frustrations, or to cope, or to keep off the streets.

I played because I loved it.

By my junior year in high school, I knew I had potential. I thought I could be pretty good. By my senior year, I knew I could be special.

My stats were so ridiculous that when my coach sent them in to the local newspaper each week, they wouldn't even print them. They didn't believe them. They thought my coach was padding my stats to make me look good. I sat back and watched as other kids with less impressive stats got their names in the paper and won all kinds of weekly awards.

I was getting nothing.

So my coach called up one of the reporters from the newspaper and told him to come down to McLain High School and watch me play in person. To come see for himself.

This was about halfway through my senior year. I was averaging around 300 rushing yards per game, but I still had no scholarship offers. I had zero stars on the recruiting websites.

I didn't just want to show that reporter what he had been missing. I wanted to show everybody.

I scored the first touchdown of the game on a 65-yard run. By the end of the night, I had run for 455 yards and six touchdowns. And I did it all on just 22 carries.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

It was the best game of my high school career.

My pops always preached that if you do the right things, everything else will work out. Control what you can control, and everything else will fall into place, he'd say.

So it was crazy to me that even after that huge game, it was still crickets on the recruiting front. By the end of the season, I had better stats than some of the dudes in my area getting scholarship offers. And we had basically played against the same competition.

Just doing the right things obviously wasn't working. I needed to do more.

But I didn't know what else to do. I couldn't afford football camps. My high school didn't have a history of big-time recruits, so college coaches rarely came to visit. We just weren't on their routes. And they don't usually go out of their way to see just one guy.

Then my dad got a phone call from a random dude down in Texas. He said his name was G. Smith. He works with high school kids to help them get recruited. He had stumbled upon my highlight tape while he was checking out some other recruits, and he was so impressed that he tracked me down and reached out.

"This is one of the best highlight tapes I've ever seen," he told my dad. "It's like 12 minutes of straight touchdowns ... how does he not have any offers?"

Coach Smith said he was going to help me get noticed. He told me to start a Twitter account and post my highlights. He would take it from there. And I don't know what he did ... but like a day or two after I started posting my highlights, my phone started ringing off the hook.

Wyoming, Missouri, New Mexico State, Purdue, Oklahoma ... so many schools.

Some of those phone calls turned into scholarship offers.

That's when I could finally breathe a sigh of relief. I had more than just some interest. I had actual offers. So no matter what, I was going to school somewhere — something not a lot of kids from my neighborhood get to do.

Wyoming was the first school to really show genuine interest in me. The first school to offer me. They were on me way before anybody else. Two weeks before signing day, it was basically a lock. I was going to Wyoming. Then Alabama showed up.

Ask anyone I grew up with ... Alabama was my favorite team. I had wanted to play there since middle school. So when they came into the fold, it was a wrap.

Everybody knows Alabama for being a football factory. For putting dudes in the NFL left and right. But I didn't look at it that way. I saw it as an opportunity to play against the most elite competition in college football, and to get a quality education at the same time. Where I'm from, kids don't get either of those opportunities. So that was all I was focused on. Getting to the NFL was the absolute furthest thing from my mind.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I honestly don't think I even considered the NFL as a possibility until the SEC championship game last year against Georgia.

I had been sick the whole week. Flu-like symptoms. That weak kind of sick where your back aches and you don't want to eat or stand up or even move.

I was at the tail end of it by the time the game came around, but I had missed a lot of practice time that week. I still couldn't eat. I was dehydrated. I was in rough shape. The trainers tried to hold me out.

But I told them I was playing.

I got one IV before the game, two more during and one after. Every time I came to the sideline, it felt like I was dying of thirst and I had no wind. So they had the IVs and an oxygen mask right there waiting for me.

I only got eight carries in the game. But I ran for 83 yards and two touchdowns.

Enough to win MVP.

That was my Jordan Flu Game, man. I came out of that one knowing that if I could be in that kind of condition and not just fight through it, but still ball out ... on that big of a stage, against a great defense like Georgia's ... then I have what it takes to play at the next level.

And if the Georgia game got me thinking about the NFL for the first time, the Oklahoma game basically punched my ticket. It felt like every time I touched the ball in that game, something special happened.

My favorite play — I think everybody's favorite play — was when I ran over the safety on my way to the end zone.

The thing I loved most about that play is what happened after. Because the next few guys who tried to tackle me ... they were easy targets, man. They were so worried about getting bulldozed that they were lunging at me. So I could lower the shoulder like I was gonna try and run them over, then hit them with a juke, and they'd go flying.

I love setting dudes up like that. It's a chess game for me. I want to keep the defense guessing. Keep them off balance.

And I think that Oklahoma game is proof that I'm versatile enough to do that.

People say I run angry.

I don't know. I guess I do. But I honestly don't think it's about how I run. It's about why I do it, and who I do it for.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

I run for my pops, the man who sacrificed so much and worked so hard to provide for me and educate me. I run for my three-year-old son, Braxton, so he can have a father he's proud of, like I'm proud of mine. I run for my sister and my three brothers. I run for my teammates and my coaches. I run for everybody who has ever supported me, anyone who's ever doubted me, and for anyone out there living on white rice and ramen noodles. I run for anyone who's in a tough situation and feels like it's never going to end — that there's no light at the end of the tunnel.

I run to show them that there is.

Then, when I'm totally spent — when I'm on my last leg and I have absolutely nothing left to give ... I dig even deeper.

And I run for me.

Because I love it.

Because it's what I do.

That's the kind of player you're going to get if you draft me. Someone who loves the game of football. A hard worker who's totally dedicated to the team, and to winning. You'll get a fresh, healthy back, because I split carries at Alabama. They didn't use me up. So I'm a low-mileage guy who's ready to run up the odometer and shoulder the load.

But most of all, you'll get a player who is very appreciative.

I'm never going to forget the nights spent in the back of that Suburban. I'll never forget the motels. The gunshots. The helicopters. I know what it's like to be scared. To be hungry. To have nothing in my future but uncertainty.

So I'm never going to take the privilege of playing in the NFL for granted. I'm going to come in and sacrifice whatever is necessary to succeed. I'm gonna hustle. I'm gonna put the work in and do the right things, like my pops always said.

Everything else will fall into place.

THE ATHLETIC

Josh Jacobs' story: From the 'concrete rose' of North Tulsa to a Raiders' first-round selection

By Vic Tafur

May 14, 2019

The first time Josh Jacobs and his father said it to each other was when Josh was in the fourth grade and they were sleeping at night in their car.

They would say it often as Jacobs blazed a trail from the darkness in Tulsa to the NFL Draft two weeks ago. That Thursday night, when the Alabama running back got word that the Raiders were about to draft him in the first round, he looked to his dad and said it again.

This time he said it to make sure his dad wasn't going to cry.

"You good?" Josh said.

"I'm good," Marty Jacobs said. "You good?"

"I'm good," Josh said back.

The two men embraced and Jacobs took the stage in Nashville to begin the next chapter of what will surely be a movie at some point. After Jacobs shook commissioner Roger Goodell's hand, put on his Raiders hat and walked off, he showed Hall of Famer Deion Sanders the lining of his suit jacket.

It looked like a map at first, but it was a rendition of a road in Tulsa with a red flower coming out of it.

"It was very important for me," Jacobs said when I asked him about the jacket later that night. "It's a concrete rose. It has North Tulsa where I'm from and it was very important for me to pay homage to where I'm from, because with me ... it's like I have the city on my back. I give everybody back home faith and hope.

"I mean, I'm the first one to do it out of the school that I come from. I'm the first one to even go to college out of the school that I come from for sports, so it's just huge."

Jacobs is also the first one to do it after living as a kid night-to-night in his dad's maroon Chevy Suburban and later in motels.

"Where this kid has come from, there is something inside of him ... that I didn't go through as a young man," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said.

The Raiders drafted Jacobs 24th overall because he was the best running back in the draft and Gruden has long said he wanted a three-down back. On Monday, Jacobs and the other Raiders rookies were allowed to workout on the field with the veterans for the first time. He showed the cutting ability, fast-developing speed, power and soft hands that general manager Mike Mayock fell in love with at the College Football Playoff championship game in January.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

But the 5-foot-10, 219-pound Jacobs offers a lot more than that. He is a special kid who turned to football as a youngster and gave everything he had to the game. And the game gave back.

"Football is kind of like my peace," Jacobs said the day after the draft. "It's like the one place I feel like I can do no wrong. Growing up and going through everything that I've been through — being homeless, living in hotels and stuff — football was always an outlet.

"That's what kind of drives me and that's where I found the love of the game and that's why I play with so much emotion."

Jacobs started playing youth football around the same time his father and mother separated in 2006. Marty fought for custody of the five kids, and rather than wait for a decision, Josh went with his dad. Josh didn't get along with his mother. (Marty would ultimately win custody of all five kids.)

Shortly after he joined his father, an apartment that Marty had lined up fell through. Money was very tight. So the two drove around every night for two weeks, looking for a safe-enough spot to park and get some sleep. Josh, at least, would sleep in the back seat. But he doesn't think his dad ever did close his eyes.

"I remember he had a gun, and whenever he laid his seat back at night, he would always keep it on his chest with his hand on it. Just in case," Jacobs wrote for The Players' Tribune last month. "If he ever slept, I didn't see it. Every time I woke up — whether it was morning or the middle of the night — he was awake. Watching out. Protecting me."

Josh said he always felt safe. His dad had him write poetry to combat the down time, and he said he didn't realize what he didn't have until he got to middle school and heard about how good the other kids had it.

His dad later lost his job and Jacobs and his four siblings lived from motel room to motel room until Marty found another one. Josh was the cook of the household.

"I was the king of white rice and ramen noodles, man," Jacobs wrote for The Players' Tribune. "A five-star microwave chef. My dad used to buy them in big quantities so he could feed all of us. I'd cook for everybody."

Marty would often skip meals because there wasn't enough, as he looked for more work and the family's next residence.

"I didn't really understand it all at the time," Josh Jacobs wrote. "The way we were living, the sacrifices my dad was making ... none of it. I just never looked at our life as a struggle. To me, it was just life. It was all I knew."

And he knew how to run by and through tackles on the football field. Jacobs grew, and ran faster and harder, just like his favorite player, Adrian Peterson. His senior year at McClain High, Jacobs lined up as the team's Wildcat quarterback and ran for 2,704 yards and 31 touchdowns, averaging 15 yards a carry.

Still, somehow, he wasn't on the map for recruiters. Jacobs had never been to any of the summer camps, and, like he said, his high school had no football history.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"The local newspapers thought I was making his stats up," retired McClain coach Jarvis Payne said in a telephone interview. "They were unbelievable."

Only Wyoming and New Mexico State offered scholarships. TCU wanted him as a cornerback and an assistant coach even told Jacobs that there were 1,000 other running backs like him.

That was when a recruiting coordinator and coach in Texas happened to see some highlights of Jacobs. Gerald Smith tracked down a number for Marty Jacobs and told him that his son needed a Twitter account to post his highlights on.

So Jacobs, with Payne's help, created an account. And Smith made sure other recruiters knew.

Two days later — yes, two — the offers started pouring in.

"The phone was ringing off the hook," Jacobs said.

Missouri, Purdue, Oklahoma. Soon, Alabama took notice.

"And once Alabama wants you, that's it," Jacobs said.

Jacobs went on to become part of a three-headed running attack at Alabama with Damien Harris and Antioch High alum Najee Harris.

(In an amazing footnote, Jacobs has never met Gerald Smith, though his dad did once.)

Jacobs helped the Crimson Tide win a national title in 2017 and he averaged 5.9 yards a carry his three seasons there. He also caught 30 passes last season. The Raiders told him they planned to draft him back in February.

"I never dreamed we would be in the position we're in now," Marty Jacobs told ESPN Radio two weeks ago. "Actually, when he was born I did have dreams about him playing in a big stadium, but I never really thought that meant anything. I just wanted him to be better than me ... I didn't know how we were going to do it, but I knew the kids were going to be safe with me. I had to protect their destinies. ..."

"We went through a lot. Josh was always strong and always positive."

Marty Jacobs declined an interview request last week and is working on a deal to sell the story rights. As for Josh, he and his 3-year-old son, Braxton, are preparing for their own adventure.

Jacobs even has his first commercial deal. After years of sleeping in the car and on hotel floors — he even slept on the floor his first year at Alabama because he was used to it — Jacobs is now a spokesman for Sleep Number beds.

"There is nothing like a good night's sleep in a comfortable bed," Jacobs said.

When his head hits the pillow every night, it all comes back to him. All the hard work and sacrifices. By him and his dad. Jacobs is still processing that he is a running back in the NFL.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"It's a lot of emotions," Jacobs said a day after the draft. "It's like everything hitting you at once. It's everything you've worked for, everything you've prayed for, everything for you've sweated for, cried for, everything. It's just finally coming to reality.

"The crazy thing about it is, you're happy in the moment, but then the next thing you think about is it's the beginning of everything ... so it's a lot of emotions."

Before Jacobs came out for the Raiders' rookie camp on May 3, his dad gave him a call to check on him and see if he was nervous.

"You good?"

"I'm good."

OL Andre James

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders rookie Andre James draws inspiration from late father

By Matt Kawahara

Aug. 13, 2019

Andre James, the Raiders' rookie offensive lineman, is carrying something intangible through his first summer in the NFL.

The memory of his father, Marcus, who died from cancer in October during James' final year at UCLA.

"This whole preseason," James said Sunday, "I think about him every time I go out and play."

James, a college tackle who is playing center with the Raiders, started his last 32 consecutive games at UCLA, a number that hints at the resolve it required.

In 2016, James started UCLA's final seven games at right tackle in place of Kolton Miller, the Raiders' first-round pick in 2018 and now their left tackle, who had broken his leg. James remained at right tackle the following year with Miller returning and moving to the left side. In August 2017, James learned his father had been diagnosed with testicular cancer.

"Andre, he's always a level-headed guy," Miller said. "I was there through the process of when his dad was battling it. (James) didn't let that affect him. I don't think he expected his father to lose the battle. I think he always stayed positive. And it always showed on the field."

At the top of James' Twitter profile is a tribute to his father, whom he calls "the strongest man I've ever met." In a 2017 story in the Los Angeles Times, James referred to his father, a former junior college linebacker who ran a gym near Salt Lake City, as "my inspiration."

James, who grew up in Herriman, Utah, told the Times: "I dedicate everything to him because he made me what I am today with all the training and stuff he's helped me put in."

Marcus James died Oct. 15. After spending time with family, Andre started UCLA's game on Oct. 20, a 31-30 win over Arizona.

"He was all about looking at stuff in a positive way," James said after practice Sunday. "I went out there and I put that on for him because I know that's what he wanted me to do. It was for him and my family to go out there and just put it on the line for him. I still do that today."

Since signing with the Raiders as an undrafted free agent in May, James has impressed coaches with his handling of a difficult position change.

At 6-foot-4 and 300 pounds, James says he figured he would play an interior-line position in the NFL. Still, he paused when asked to recall his last time playing center before the Raiders asked him to move there this spring.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"Uh, never," James said, grinning. "Third grade, maybe. I played a little center in third grade."

As for the advice he has received from offensive line coach Tom Cable and other centers: "Snap first," he said. "Snap first and do your job second."

James said he had "a few bad snaps here and there" during spring workouts but said: "I feel like I've really come along with it." He has made a point in position meetings to sit next to starting center Rodney Hudson, who is renowned for his study habits and grasp of schemes.

"One of the biggest aspects of making the switch to center is you're really like the quarterback of the O-line," James said. "You're making the call, the snap and then also doing your job of blocking. Just (Hudson's) preparation, and the keys that he teaches me, it's helped out a lot."

Miller described James' move from tackle to center as "crazy from a mental standpoint."

"It was rough at first, I don't think it was easy," Miller said. "But he's really learned and grown into that position. He's still growing. I think as long as you have this sort of room — a positive learning room, guys that push you, especially one of the best at center teaching you — I think he'll do great."

Back in Napa, Gruden referred to James as "one of the best stories" in Raiders camp.

"This kid has the size, the mobility and the traits that a lot of centers have that are successful," Gruden said. "And a lot of players come into pro football and transition from tackle to guard or guard to center. This kid's done a great job."

It's unclear whether James will crack the Raiders' 53-man roster, though Gruden has said there are several undrafted rookies pushing for jobs. As one, James figures to play in the Raiders' last preseason game Thursday in Seattle. If so, he'll draw inspiration from his father.

"Every time I step in or I'm about to go in a game, I think about ... the lessons he taught me in his life," James said. "I know he's (out) there looking at me. And I hope he's proud of me."

S Dallin Leavitt

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP

Out of nowhere: How Dallin Leavitt made the Raiders 53-man roster

By Jerry McDonald

September 7, 2019

ALAMEDA — It turns out the best scouting report on Dallin Leavitt belongs to none other than Dallin Leavitt.

"I'm the dude nobody talks about, nobody sees, nobody cares about," Leavitt said this week. "Then you turn on the film and it's, 'Who's that?'"

That sums up how the 25-year-old Raiders' safety from Utah State made the leap from a practice squad player and late-season promotion in 2018 to the 53-man roster on a considerably more talented team. It happened under the cover of "Hard Knocks," a celebrated rookie class and all things Antonio Brown.

To the outside world, Leavitt was stealth.

Throughout daily training camp press sessions with coaches and players, Leavitt's name never came up. No one asked about him, nor were there any unsolicited votes of confidence. Every year, local media members put together their 53-man rosters near the final cutdown. Leavitt's name was on none of them.

Being overlooked is something Leavitt relishes as much as a one-on-one shot at a runner through the A-gap. Anthony Newman, his defensive coach at Central Catholic High in Portland, Ore., saw it first hand.

"I preach that to him all the time," Newman said in a phone interview. "You don't have to talk to anybody about what you're going to do. Show them what you're going to do."

If Newman's name seems vaguely familiar, it should. He was a starting strong safety for the Raiders in 1998-99, which happened to be Jon Gruden's first two seasons as a head coach. They would be the last two seasons of a 12-year NFL career. Newman played under John Robinson and Chuck Knox with the Rams, Jim Mora and Mike Ditka with the Saints and counts Gruden as the best coach he ever had.

He was delighted when Leavitt ended up with the Raiders.

"I knew Gruden would love him," Newman said. "Gruden was my coach and I know the type of player Gruden likes. And he's the type."

Julius "Juice" Brown, the defensive backs coach at Utah State when Leavitt was there, said being overlooked is part of what makes him tick.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

"He loves to be counted out. He loves for people to doubt him," said Brown, now the defensive backs coach at Texas Tech. "He lived for the big moment to play against good players and good teams. That's when he really shined the most."

Where Leavitt made his mark with the Raiders is on special teams, something he did in college so often Brown would try and find times to remove him from the game to give him a break at safety.

Coach Rich Bisaccia has taken to cuing up some of Leavitt's greatest hits for teammates to watch.

"He's taking on two guys, spinning off of them and making the tackle," quarterback Derek Carr said. "He's taking on three guys, spinning off them, throwing somebody and making a tackle. He's forcing people out of bounds. He's taking people out of their lanes."

Carr said Leavitt reminds him of longtime Pro Bowl safety Eric Weddle and is adept at disguising coverages in practice to push the quarterback to be better.

"He's like, 'Hey, whatever you need Derek. Whatever the team needs,' " Carr said. "He's that way 100 percent. It's no surprise why he made it."

Newman is the one who moved Leavitt to safety from linebacker in high school. Leavitt's father was a linebacker at Brigham Young. Newman admits he saw "a little of myself" in the way Leavitt played and saw him as a safety.

"My dad played linebacker, so when it comes to physicality, the tackling, the hand placement, I knew all that because pops taught me growing up," Leavitt said. "But when it came to the coverage part, the route concepts, my eyes, that's where coach Newman helped me take those first steps."

Leavitt began at BYU, transferring to Utah State as a junior. It was there Brown taught him about tendencies and how to watch film properly.

Undrafted upon leaving Utah State, Leavitt initially gained no traction toward playing in the NFL. He tried out with the Raiders at their rookie minicamp but wasn't immediately signed. Leavitt told his wife Josie he'd give it two more weeks before moving on with his life when the Raiders called on May 14.

Leavitt didn't make the roster, but did enough to make the practice squad. He wasn't promoted until Christmas Eve and played in the last two games of the season.

His path was duly noted by training camp roommate Erik Harris, a fellow safety whose path to the NFL included a torn ACL, the Canadian Football League and working in a potato chip factory.

"I think a lot of times people get caught up in the hype, the name and the college guys go to," Harris said. "It comes down to how you play ball and you've got to show up when you step on the grass. That's what he did."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Gruden said the Raiders had “gotten calls” on Leavitt during the exhibition season and didn’t want to lose him.

“He’s a great special teams player. It starts right there. You put the special teams tape on, which few people do these days, Leavitt shows up big time,” Gruden said. “He’s developed into a versatile safety, can play free or string, in the post or in the box. He’s a good open field tackler.” Which is why Leavitt, according to Newman, never flew under the radar when it came to opponents.

“Everyone was scared of Dallin, afraid he was going to take somebody’s head off,” Newman said. “He’s that type of player. He was feisty and he wanted to hit you,”

Off the field, Leavitt projects a different persona. The aggression is left on the field, and faith takes over. When it came time for the final roster cutdown, Leavitt was nervous but serene with regard to the effort he put forth — even if no one from the outside had any idea of his chances.

“I told my wife, I trust God, and I know I’ve done everything I can possibly do,” Leavitt said. “God was going to put me in the place I need to be.”

T Kolton Miller

THE ATHLETIC

A Q&A with Kolton Miller: The Raiders' 2018 top pick has bulked up, healed up and is getting a house built in Vegas

By Vic Tafur

April 22, 2019

One of the things most Raiders fans ask me about is how the offseason went. Not mine. Kolton Miller's.

The rookie started all 16 games at left tackle last season, and while he struggled some, you have to attribute at least a little bit of that to playing with a bad knee the last 13 weeks of the season.

Plus, the 15th-overall draft pick was seen as a bit of a project coming in, one that would need to put on some more muscle and grow into his role as Derek Carr's blindside protector. Miller has done that the last four months and we sat down for 15 minutes last week to discuss his new-found power, what he learned last season and his big plans for not only next season but when the team moves to Las Vegas in 2020.

(Heads up: I have written several times that the Raiders are planning to keep Miller at left tackle and play free-agent signee Trent Brown on the right side. Coach Jon Gruden and general manager Mike Mayock both passed on the question when others asked several times, so I felt there was no need to put Miller on the spot and ask him here.)

Both the coaches and you said that you wanted to get stronger this offseason. Looks like mission accomplished. What have you been doing?

I have been training with Dan Jameson at Boss MMA in Roseville. I am close to 330 pounds right now and bench and my squat have gone up. I was throwing around 505 pounds in the back squat and benching 320 like it was nothing. I got a lot stronger.

Besides weights, we're doing movement drills and working on my footwork. I have been doing some boxing and some hip exercises as well. A little bit of everything.

Were you about 315 last year?

When I got drafted, I was 312. And then I got up to 320 when the season started and I lost some of that during the season.

This past week was the first week of offseason workouts here at the team facility. What was your first impression of Trent Brown? You feel small?

He is big. Really big. I don't think I have ever said that before. He is 6-9 and he is easily more than 360. We have talked a little bit but it's early still. Everyone is just getting acquainted and in meetings learning the offense.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

You lost a couple of veterans on that offensive line in Donald Penn and Kelechi Osemele. What did those guys leave you with?

Donald was a big help last year. Just having him on the sidelines during games and even at practices. If I messed something up, he would make sure I knew it and offer suggestions about what I could do to make it better. KO was great to have next to me. Guys would be scared to try to go inside against me. Both are hard workers. It's a shame they're gone but that's how the business works. I grew a lot with them last year and that should really help me this year.

When you look back at last season, do you remember the successes — you had some nice games against some top pass rushers — or the struggles more? Or is it the knee that you think of first?

It's all experience. That's the biggest thing. When you look at football compared to other sports ... in baseball, you're playing 162 games, basketball 82, but in football it's a limited amount of games, so for young guys you have to get that experience in and try to get as much 1-on-1 work on the side and in the offseason as you can.

The injury thing ... I have never had to deal with that, really, before. At UCLA, I didn't get hurt that much at all. Then last year, it was sort of a big deal. I think some guys would sit out, but I was just trying to manage it and adjust my schedule all week to get my knee ready for games. I just wanted to be a pro and keep competing,

It was a MCL sprain on your right knee, correct? All good now?

Yeah, Grade 2. I hurt it (Week 4) during the Browns game. KO got hurt that game too. There were occasions later in the season where it would be getting better and then it would get hit. And you're like, "Damnit!" So, I was working through that all season — and learning from it. That made me stronger mentally and should really help my game this year. ...

Toward the end of the season, that's when I felt better and I got used to it. I don't think it's ever going to be normal — you still feel a little bit of looseness — but it shouldn't affect my game. If anything, I have heard from vets — Lee (Smith) and Derek — that when you have the injury first it really sucks, but when you have that and if you are to get the same thing again, the healing process is a lot quicker. ...

A trainer said it's kind of like working with spaghetti. (Laughs) They have compared people who have had surgery for it and people who haven't and it ended up healing the same.

Being a rookie left tackle ... Gruden alluded to it a few times just how hard that is. How long did it take you to get comfortable last season?

Yeah. Everything was faster in college than high school. Now, you get to the NFL and everything is (snaps fingers repeatedly) super, super fast. Even once you get the play call and get set, it's even faster. I think the game will be a lot slower for me this season and I am diving deeper in my studies to help with that. Understanding the bigger picture and why things happen.

Like, how plays develop ...

Yeah, that and the defensive rotations, and what we can expect. What pressures come from different looks.

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Who was the toughest guy you went against last year?

I would say Myles Garrett and Melvin Ingram. I would fight them the whole game and besides their power, they also have really good speed.

I know players take it game to game, and season to season, but do you have to look ahead a little bit, with the team moving to Las Vegas in 2020? Is that weird at all, or do you not even think about that yet?

Well, I am building a house in Vegas right now. Back in Henderson, about 10 minutes from the new facility. My mom is helping me with it. I am terrible at picking things out, and she has an eye for that kind of thing. We went down last weekend and had all the options picked out.

You make sure and get the man cave put in?

Yeah, it's a game room. I think it's by the pool. Gotta have a pool in Vegas. And a man cave. I am really excited about that house. It's going to be cool. But first things first.

WR Tyrell Williams

NBC SPORTS BAY AREA

Raiders' Tyrell Williams returns to 'second home,' fulfills father's dream

By Scott Bair

Aug. 10, 2019

OAKLAND -- Tyrell Williams agreed to terms on a four-year contract with the Raiders this offseason, an exciting moment that initially existed only in the abstract.

Formally signing it brought about a emotional, unexpected reality check.

He was joining a Raiders franchise steeped in tradition he knew all too well, and that meant something to the Williams family.

Tyrell's father Ray Williams is Oakland born and bred, a former Oakland Tech and Laney College cornerback. He is a proud, card-carrying citizen of Raider Nation who told his children all about Lester Hayes and Mike Haynes and George Atkinson, about Kenny Stabler and Cliff Branch and Fred Biletnikoff.

That isn't why Tyrell Williams chose the Silver and Black. The money was right. So was the scheme fit and fellow skill players and the quarterback.

Tyrell thought it cool how the stars aligned, but didn't realize how much playing in here would mean until he showed up to sign his contract.

That's when childhood memories came flooding back.

"I have been out to Oakland a bunch of times visiting my grandmother's house every summer," Williams said. "When I signed, I went driving by that house, which is 15 minutes away from the facility, and saw places where I used to play with my cousins. It just made me feel at home. I'm not from Oakland, but this place is familiar and important to me. It's like a second home, and it will be so great to play in front of my family. It has been awesome."

Williams isn't expected to play in Saturday's preseason opener against the L.A. Rams, but his second-home debut will come soon enough.

Ray Williams already can't wait for that day, the moment he sees his son run onto the Oakland Coliseum turf wearing his favorite colors. The time leading up to that day has been something special, one that has reinforced a strong bond between father and son.

Ray Williams has been in Napa most of training camp, rocking an all-access pass that allows him to roam the practice field and experience Tyrell's first Napa summer up close and personal. "It's so surreal," Ray Williams said. "I don't take a single second for granted. I am loving this whole experience, and seeing how well Tyrell is doing. I pinch myself every single day seeing my son playing for the Silver and Black. It's incredible."

OAKLAND RAIDERS FEATURE CLIPS

Tyrell is fitting in well with head coach Jon Gruden and quarterback Derek Carr. He's proving far more than a big-bodied deep threat. He has deceptive sprinter's speed using long, effortless strides, and has been proficient creating quick separation on short and intermediate routes. He has been the alpha receiver with Antonio Brown sidelined, and will be a major part of this Raiders attack.

Ray Williams believes the Raiders are getting Tyrell's best, and he should know. He coached Tyrell and his older brother R.J. in youth football and a Cascade High school just outside Salem, Ore. He has seen Williams evolve from youth quarterback to standout high school and college receiver. And, even now that Tyrell's ability rivals the NFL's top tier, Ray Williams still watches his son play through a coaches lens.

"I just can't help myself," Ray Williams said. "When he's out there and I'm pulling for him to succeed, I still see the game that way. I'm critiquing and watching and taking mental notes. And, playing defensive back, I think about how he's being covered from the other side."

Ray brings a defensive back's perspective and a coaches' eye to Tyrell's work, but he also knows when being a supportive dad is most important.

Williams is an established NFL player now, but he entered the league as an undrafted free agent with the Chargers out of small-school Western Oregon University. There was no guarantee Williams would make the 53-man roster in San Diego, and the uncertainty can wear on anyone trying to realize a dream.

"My dad has always come to my training camps," Tyrell said. "It was really helpful to me as a rookie, to have somebody there when things aren't really going your way. That really helps you out."

Ray was there for so many of important talks during that 2015 training camp, and knew how hard Tyrell fought to make the team despite coming in without draft status and pedigree. That's why one phone call made this grown man cry.

"We were headed to a wedding in Medford, Ore.," Ray Williams said. "We were at the hotel and I got a call in the afternoon, and he said, 'Dad, I'm on the 53.' I just went crazy. You could've heard me through the entire hotel. I was just losing my mind. It was the best, best feeling."

Tyrell credits his father, and his older brother and former teammate R.J. – the brothers played two years together in high school and college -- for pushing him to be his best, work hard and realize vast potential.

That helped Williams through a rookie camp's anxiety, and was the foundation upon which he has become an established and respected NFL receiver.

Williams believes this season will be his best, and that he'll help bring his father's favorite team back to prominence. The opportunity to do so in his second home of Oakland, is one neither father nor son will take for granted.

"Each year he has gotten better and better, and now he's ready to play a big role for the Raiders," Ray Williams said. "I think this is going to be an amazing year."
