2013 SEASON REVIEW INFORMATION

For Immediate Release

SEASON OVERVIEW

OFFENSE: The Raiders' offense was led by two young quarterbacks seeing their first significant playing time in the NFL - QB Terrelle Pryor and QB Matt McGloin. Pryor started eight of the team's first nine games, while McGloin started six of the final seven. The young duo of Pryor (1,798 passing yards) and McGloin (1,547 passing yards) combined to throw for 3,345 yards on the year. The rushing attack was led by RB Rashad Jennings (733 yards) and Pryor (576), who set a franchise single-season record for rushing yards by a quarterback. Oakland's young receiving corps made strides in 2013, as second-year WR Rod Streater led the team with 60 receptions and 888 yards. WR Andre Holmes saw his first meaningful NFL action and burst onto the scene, hauling in 25 catches for 431 yards. The tight ends proved to be reliable for the Silver and Black, as TE Jeron Mastrud and rookie TE Mychal Rivera saw action in all 16 games, with Rivera leading the way with 38 catches for 407 yards. Oakland's offense was particularly potent early in games, totaling 41 points on their opening drives (fourth in the NFL) and scoring 89 points in the first quarter (tied for sixth).

DEFENSE: In the 2013 season opener, the Raiders started nine new starters on the defensive side of the ball, and when S Tyvon Branch went down with an injury in Week 2, that number grew to 10, signifying a major transition on defense. DE Lamarr Houston, one of two returning starters from 2012, had his best season as a pro and anchored the defense line, starting all 16 games and making 71 tackles (55 solo) with six sacks and two forced fumbles. The linebackers were led by veteran LBs Kevin Burnett and Nick Roach, with Roach setting career highs in tackles (152) and sacks (5.5). Rookie LB Sio Moore stepped in right away and made an impact, posting 55 tackles (33 solo) and 4.5 sacks on the year. The secondary was led by S Charles Woodson, who returned to the Silver and Black after seven seasons in Green Bay. Woodson had 133 tackles (88) solo with two sacks, one interception and one fumble return for a touchdown. As a unit, the defense held three opponents under 40 yards rushing in a game and to fewer than 2.0 yards per rush (Week 2 vs. Jac., Week 5 vs. SD and Week 8 vs. Pit.).

SPECIAL TEAMS: After winning the job in training camp, first-year P Marquette King had a big year, leading the league in gross punting average (48.9) and punts of 60-plus yards (10), while ranking sixth in punting yards (4,107). Special teams ace CB Taiwan Jones had a strong season for the unit, returning kicks (26 for 623 yards) and playing a key role on the coverage units, leading the team with 14 special teams tackles. K Sebastian Janikowski moved into second place on the Raiders' all-time games played list, as he has now appeared in 220 games in a Raiders uniform.

Following the 2,000 rushing yards the Raiders totaled during the 2013 season, they finished 12th in the league in rushing. The team was led by RB Rashad Jennings (733 yards) and QB Terrelle Pryor (576 yards). This season marked the 24th time in franchise history that the Raiders have rushed for at least 2,000 yards in a season.

This season, the Raiders proved that versatility can be be a big factor in the running game. With FB Marcel Reece's 123-yard performance in Week 14 at the Jets, Oakland became the first team since the 1978 Kansas City Chiefs to have four different players have a 100-yard rushing game in the same season. Additionally, they are just the fifth team to do it since 1960:

TEAM NOTES

STUFFING THE RUN

This season, Oakland's defense held up well against the run. After finishing 18th in the NFL a season ago in rushing yards allowed per game, the Raiders ended up ranking sixth in the AFC this season, allowing just 107.9 yards per game. Here is where the defense stacked up against the rest of the conference:

Rank	Team	Rushing Yds./Game	Rushing Yards	Attempts
1.	NY Jets	88.3	1,412	421
2.	Cincinnati	96.5	1,544	385
3.	Denver	101.6	1,626	420
4.	Baltimore	105.4	1,687	440
5.	San Diego	107.8	1,725	376
6.	Oakland	107.9	1,727	442
7.	Cleveland	111.3	1,781	462
8.	Tennessee	112.2	1,795	446
9.	Pittsburgh	115.6	1,849	433
10.	Kansas City	120.2	1,923	428

Since the Raiders returned to Oakland in 1995, the team has limited the opposition to less than two yards per carry in a game only 12 times, including three this year. The 1.8 yards per carry allowed vs. Jacksonville, the 1.9 allowed vs. San Diego and the 1.8 allowed vs. Pittsburgh were the third, fourth and fifth time in the last two seasons the Silver and Black have allowed an average of less than two yards per carry.

Date	Opponent	Rushing Yards	Attempts	Avg.

10/27/13	Pittsburgh	35	19	1.8
10/6/13	San Diego	36	19	1.9

With a revamped defense and under the guidance of defensive coordinator Jason Tarver, the Silver and Black limited their opponents to just 3.9 yards per carry in 2013. That number was good for fifth in the AFC.

MAKING IT COUNT

Oakland was able to make their red zone trips count in 2013, scoring touchdowns and maximizing their points. Of the 42 trips the Raiders took inside the opponent's 20-yard line, the Silver and Black scored touchdowns on 25 of them. Thirteen of the scores came on the ground, while 12 were through the passing game.

The Raiders finished 2013 scoring the fourth most points in the NFL on their opening possession. Here is where they stacked up:

Team	Points on Opening Poss.
Denver	62
Dallas	47
Tennessee	44
Oakland	41

Oakland also continued to score big throughout the first frame, as they tied for sixth in the NFL in first-quarter scoring.

In the season opener at Indianapolis, Oakland got out of the gates in a big way, outgaining the Colts by almost 100 yards, 372 to 274. Additionally, the Raiders rushed for 171 yards to the Colts' 127, and leading the way was QB Terrelle Pryor and his 112 rushing yards. Oakland's 372 total yards of offense was the second-best offensive output in a season opener since 2004. Here is where the Raiders' 372 yards ranks in the last 10 years.

OFFENSIVE ATTACK

In Week 9 vs. Philadelphia, the Raiders compiled 560 yards of total offense on the afternoon, the team's highest total output since 1968, when Oakland totaled 604 yards on 11/24 vs. Cincinnati. The 560 yards of offense rank third in team history, only behind 626 on 10/25/64 vs. Denver and the previously mentioned 604. Below is a look at the three games:

The 2013 Raiders surpassed the number of total sacks they had last season (25) without much of an issue. The 38 sacks were also spread around at a remarkable rate, with 15 different players registering a sack. Here is a look at who recorded a QB sack this year for Oakland:

The Raiders sacked Colts QB Andrew Luck four times in Week 1, pressuring him from all angles. Four different players recorded a sack in the game - including two defensive backs (S Tyvon Branch and CB Tracy Porter) - marking the second most sacks that Oakland has had in a season opener since 2004. Only in 2011, when the Raiders posted five sacks, has the team recorded more sacks in a season opener. The Raiders have also not had more than four players post sacks in a season opener in that time fame. Here is a look at the top three team sack performances in the last 10 season openers.

Year	Opponent	Team Sacks	Players
2011	at Den.	5	T.Kelly, R. Seymour (2), M. Shaughnessy
2013	at Ind.	4	T. Branch, L. Houston, J. Hunter, T. Porter
2009	vs. SD	3	G. Ellis, R. Seymour (2)

In Week 14 at the NY Jets, the Raiders started seven undrafted players on offense, including all of the skill positions. The last team to start that many undrafted players on offense was the Washington Redskins on 11/10/02 at Jacksonville. The seven undrafted players were: WR Andre Holmes, G Lucas Nix, TE Jeron Mastrud, WR Rod Streater, QB Matt McGloin, FB Marcel Reece and FB/RB Jamize Olawale.

From Weeks 10-14 this year, the Raiders were on the road a lot. Oakland made two separate trips to New York, one trip to Houston and another to Dallas. Over those five weeks, the Silver and Black traveled over 9,400 miles to play their opponents, not including the travel back to California.

On Nov. 28, the NFL announced that the Raiders would be playing the Miami Dolphins on Sept. 28, 2014 in London as part of the league's International Series. In addition to the Raiders-Dolphins game, the Jacksonville Jaguars will take on the Dallas Cowbys and the Atlanta Falcons will host the Detroit Lions next year at London's Wembley Stadium. Next season will mark the first time the NFL has played three regular season games in Europe, as the series started in 2007.

The Raiders have a number of individuals with an international background. 2013 second-round draft pick T Menelik Watson and third-round pick LB Sio Moore are the latest additions to an already global lineup.

TEAM/INDIVIDUAL NOTES

2013 HONORS

QB Matt McGloin

 Was named the Week 11 Pepsi Next NFL Rookie of the Week for his performance against the Houston Texans. McGloin was 18-of-32 for 197 yards with three touchdowns and no interceptions and a passer rating of 105.9.
 The game was also McGloin's first NFL start.

LB Sio Moore

Was named the Week 8 Pepsi Next NFL Rookie of the Week for his performance against the Pittsburgh Steelers. Moore totaled eight tackles (six solo) and 1.5 sacks vin the win.

FB Marcel Reece

- Was named to the 2014 Pro Bowl for the second-consecutive year.
- Was named to the 2013 Associated Press All-Pro second team.

S Charles Woodson

 Was named the Week 5 AFC Defensive Player of the Week for his performance vs. the San Diego Chargers. Woodson posted eight tackles (six solo), one interception and one fumble recovery, which he returned 25 yards for a touchdown in the victory.

BLOCKED KICKS

This season, Oakland was able to make a difference on special teams, blocking four kicks on the year. Below is a look at the four different kicks the Raiders blocked in 2013, all of which came at home:

2013 BLOCKED KICKS

Date	Opponent	Block

10/6	vs. SD	Field Goal; T. Porter
11/24	vs. Ten.	Punt; J. Stewart
12/29	vs. Den.	Punt; J. Olawale

GAMES WITH 4+ SACKS

In 2013, Oakland registered three games with at least four team sacks, compared to only one from 2012. Interestingly enough, the Raiders won two of the three games in which they had at least four sacks. Furthermore, both times the Silver and Black sacked the quarterback five times, they won the game. Here is a look at those games:

2013 GAMES WITH AT LEAST FOUR SACKS

DRASTIC DRIVES

In the Week 5 win vs. San Diego, Oakland had two drastically different drives in the first quarter that both led to TDs. After S Usama Young intercepted a Philip Rivers pass on the Chargers' opening drive, QB Terrelle Pryor connected with WR Rod Streater on the next play for a 44-yard TD. On the next possession, Pryor led a 13-play, 88-yard drive that ended when he connected with WR Denarius Moore for the score. The 0:08 drive was the Silver and Black's second shortest drive of the season, while the 8:08 drive was the year's longest. Here is a look at the two TD drives:

Plays	Time	Runs	Passes	TD Play
1	0:08	0	1	Streater 44-yard pass from Pryor
13	8:08	6	7	Moore two-yard pass from Pryor

THE LEAD BACK

Since 2012, FB Marcel Reece has totaled 1,316 yards (489 rushing, 827 receiving). The two-time Pro Bowler has become a dynamic weapon in the Raiders' offense since joining the team in 2009, and his 1,316 total yards over the last two seasons are the most among primary fullbacks in the league.

NAIIRI F TRAIIRI F

Since 2009, the RB/FB combination of RB Darren McFadden and FB Marcel Reece has been lethal out of the backfield when it comes to picking up big yards through the air. Reece, who leads the NFL during this time in average yards per reception among active RBs and FBs, averages 10.7 yards per catch and McFadden, who is ninth, averages 8.7.

IENNINGS STEPPING UP

In Week 4 vs. Washington, RB Rashad Jennings had one of the best all-around days in recent memory. In the first quarter, Jennings broke through the left side of the offensive line to block a punt that was recovered in the end zone for a touchdown. Later in the game, filling in for an injured RB Darren McFadden, Jennings produced 116 total yards of offense (45 rushing, 71 receiving). Jennings is the only person this season to amass over 100 yards of total offense and block a punt in the same game.

In the month of November, RB Rashad Jennings was the NFL's most productive offense player. Jennings led the league when it comes to total yards, posting 596 (448 rushing, 148 receiving). Here is a look at where he stacked up against the rest of the league and his numbers during the month, the best stretch of his five-year career:

WOODSON RETURNS HOME

One of the most beloved players to ever put on the Silver and Black signed with the Raiders on May 22, 2013, returning him home to the team that drafted him with their first-round selection in the 1998 NFL Draft. After seven years with the Green Bay Packers, Woodson brings his Hall of Fame credentials back to the Raiders, solidifying a revamped secondary.

Woodson grew to fame at the University of Michigan, where he helped the Wolverines capture the 1997 Associated Press National Championship. His individual performance during the 1997 season earned him the Heisman Trophy, becoming the first predominantly defensive player ever to win the illustrious award. He was also honored with the Walter Camp Player of the Year, Jim Thorpe Award, Bronko Nagurski Award and Sporting News Player of the Year.

The fourth-overall selection by Al Davis in the 1998 NFL Draft made an immediate impact in the league, earning the Defensive Rookie of the Year and being selected to the Pro Bowl in each of his first four seasons (1998-2001). During his first stint with the Raiders, Woodson also earned first-team All-Pro accolades on three occasions (Associated Press in 1999, Sports Illustrated in 2000 and Sporting News and College & Pro Football Newsweekly in 2001).

After signing with the Packers prior to the 2006 season, Woodson continued to collect the hardware and add to his legacy. From 2006-12 with Green Bay, he was selected to four Pro Bowls (2008-11), two more first-team All-Pro selections (2009 and 2011) and the 2009 NFL Defensive Player of the Year. In addition to earning the highest honor a defensive player can achieve in a single season, Woodson followed up the 2009 campaign by helping the Packers win the Super Bowl in 2010.

All in all, the resume Woodson brings back to Oakland is impressive: The 1997 Heisman Trophy Award and National Championship in college, eight Pro Bowl selections, three first-team All-Pro selections, the NFL's 2009 Defensive Player of the Year award, four conference championship game appearances, two Super Bowl appearances and one Super Bowl championship. Charles Woodson has returned to the Silver and Black to write the next chapter.

A I FADER IN PICKS

S Charles Woodson, who posted nine interceptions when he won the NFL's Defensive Player of the Year award in 2009, is among the NFL's active leaders with 56 interceptions. Woodson trails only Jets S Ed Reed on the list of active leaders.

 Since 1995, only three players have won both the NFL's Defensive Rookie of the Year and Defensive Player of the Year awards in their career - Raiders S Charles Woodson (1998 & 2009), Ravens OLB Terrell Suggs (2003 & 2011) and former Bears LB Brian Urlacher (2000 & 2005).

WOODSON: OUICK HITS

- Woodson posted an interception touchdown in six-straight seasons (2006-11), becoming the first player in NFL history to do so. No other NFL player has accomplished the feat in more than four-consecutive seasons.
- In 2009, Woodson became the fourth player in NFL history (since sacks became an official statistic) to record at least nine interceptions and two sacks in a single season.
- Is the only player in NFL history to post at least seven interceptions and two sacks in back-to-back seasons.
- Became the first NFL player (since sacks became an official statistic) to record two interceptions, an interception touchdown, a sack and a fumble recovery in the same game when he posted all of those statistics on 11/26/09 at Det.

BRANCH ON THE ST

S Tyvon Branch has been one the most consistent Raiders over the last four seasons. Branch enjoyed a breakout year in 2009, posting 124 tackles in his first season as a starter, leading all DBs in that category. Branch followed it up by leading Oakland in tackles for 2010 and 2011. Additionally, Branch set a career high in 2012 with 146 tackles, good for second on the team. Branch was placed on the Reserve/Injured list on Dec. 14.

CLUTCH PORT

With Peyton Manning and the Indianapolis Colts trailing by a touchdown and driving late in Super Bowl XLIV, CB Tracy Porter, then a member of the New Orleans Saints, made one of the clutch plays in NFL history. Porter stepped in front of Manning pass intended for Reggie Wayne, then raced 74 yards for the championship-sealing score. Porter, who has three interception touchdowns with less than 3:30 remaining in the game and his team leading by one score or less in his career, is in his first season in Oakland.

Porter made NFL history on 11/10/13 when he recorded a pick-six against Eli Manning, making him the only player to record a pick-six against both Manning brothers, Peyton and Eli. Porter intercepted Eli in the second guarter and returned it 43 yards for the score, giving the Raiders the lead.

The Raiders' first-round selection (No. 12 overall) in the 2013 NFL Draft, CB DJ Hayden has come a long way. After suffering a life-threatening injury to his heart last November, Hayden played a major role in Oakland's defensive makeover. On the season. Hayden has now recorded 29 tackles and two PD. In the Week 5 win vs. San Diego, Hayden hauled in his first NFL interception, picking off Philip Rivers in the end zone to stop a potential Chargers scoring drive. He was placed on IR on Nov. 20.

LB Sio Moore, the Raiders third-round selection in the 2013 NFL Draft emerged onto the scene in his rookie season. Moore, who played in 15 games and started 11, and was named the NFL Pepsi Next Rookie of the Week for his eight-tackle, 1.5sack performance on 10/27 vs. Pit. Here is a look at Moore's season:

Since he entered the league in 2010, DE Lamarr Houston has terrorized quarterbacks. He has 16 sacks in his career and is currently moving his way up the Raiders' all-time sack list and finished with six in 2013. Here is a look at the Silver and Black's all-time list:

The Raiders signed LB Nick Roach as an unrestricted free agent on March 13, 2013 after he spent his first six seasons with the Chicago Bears. Roach was the catalyst for a makeover on the defensive side of the ball for the Silver and Black, helping lead the team to the 13th-overall ranking in the league when it came to stopping the run. Bringing that experience to

Oakland, here is what Roach has done over the last five years, and a look at how he set a career high in tackles this year:

2011	16	61	26
2012	16	84	37
2013	16	152	92

In Week 11's win over the Houston Texans, Roach intercepted a pass for the first time in his seven-year career. Oakland made good on Roach's takeaway, as QB Matt McGloin found WR Rod Streater on the very next play for a 16-yard touchdown.

RKOMER BACKERS

LB Kevin Burnett

Kevin and Kaelin Burnett became the first brothers to play in a regular season game in the history of the Raiders franchise in Week 1 at Indianapolis. The Burnett brothers are also the only active siblings in the NFL on the same team. Kevin, who is eight years older than Kaelin, joined Oakland on March 18, 2013, following two seasons with the Miami Dolphins. Kevin was originally drafted by the Dallas Cowboys in 2005 and has appeared in 136 games over his nine seasons. Kaelin originally signed with the Raiders as an undrafted free agent prior to the 2012 season. Kaelin spent the first 10 games of the 2012 season on the practice squad before being elevated to the 53-man roster for the final six games.

LB Kaelin Burnett

RB Darren McFadden has rushed for 100 or more vards 13 times in his career and the Raiders have posted an 11-2 record in those games. The Raiders have won seven-straight games in which McFadden has eclipsed the 100-yard mark, and have not dropped such a decision since Dec. 12, 2010, at Jackson-

On Thanksgiving Day in Dallas, WR Andre Holmes had the breakthrough game he had been waiting for since he entered the league in 2011. Against the Cowboys, who Holmes played for from 2011-12, the third-year wide receiver posted 136 yards on seven receptions. Coming into the game, he only had five catches for 76 yards in his career. Holmes' 136 receiving yards are the most of any Raiders receiver over the last two years and the fourth-best total since 2010. Here is where his day ranks on the franchise list over the last two years.

As one of the team's most dynamic players, CB Taiwan Jones has had a large impact. Playing a key role on one of the best special teams units in the NFL, Jones plays as a gunner on the punting unit and features as the team's primary kickoff returner. Jones leads the team in special teams tackles and is constantly around the returner if he doesn't.

DYNAMIC PRYOR

Making just his second career start, QB Terrelle Pryor electrified in the 2013 season opener at Indianapolis. Pryor combined for 329 total yards of offense (217 passing, 112 rushing) and led the Raiders to one of the best offensive outputs the team has had in the last 10 years. Pryor's 112 rushing yards were a franchise record for rushing yards by a quarterback in a single game. Pryor broke the previous record of 85 set by Rich Gannon on 10/8/00. His 217 passing yards were also the most by an Oakland quarterback since Carson Palmer threw for 273 on 12/6/12. Below is a look at where Pryor's day on the ground stacks up against other QB rushing totals from the last three-plus seasons.

Pryor showed his dynamic nature this season. Not only did Pryor throw for 1,798 yards and seven TDs, he rushed for 576 yards, which finished second in the NFL amongst QBs. Here is where Pryor finished up in rushing yards by a QB.

In addition to finishing second in the league amongst QBs in rushing, Pryor also led the entire NFL in yards per carry. After averaging 9.4 yards per carry in Week 9 vs. Philadelphia, Pryor averaged 6.9 yards per carry - over one yard per carry better than any other player. Here is a look at the leaders:

QB Terrelle Pryor has already found himself in the Raiders' record books with just 10 NFL starts unders his belt. Pryor surpassed the previously-held record for rushing yards by a Raiders QB in a single game three different times in 2013. The previous mark of 85 rushing yards was held by Rich Gannon. ING ONTO

On 11/17/13 at Houston, undrafted rookie QB Matt McGloin burst onto the NFL scene. With his performance, McGloin became the first undrafted rookie with three or more touchdown passes in his first NFL start since 1987. Additionally, since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger, the only other rookie quarterback to throw at least three touchdowns without throwing an interception in his first NFL start was Todd Marinovich in 1991, who also played for the Raiders. McGloin was named the Pepsi Rookie of the Week for his effort. Here is a look at those McGloin and Marinovich's performance from those two games:

Player	Game	Passing	Yards	TDs	INTs
Matt McGloin	11/17/13 at Hou.	18-of-32	197	3	0
Todd Marinovich	12/22/91 vs. KC	23-of-40	243	3	0

When McGloin took over as the Raiders' starter in Week 11, the Raiders became one of the better teams in the league in terms of downfield passing. From Week 11-15, McGloin completed more passes of 25-or-more yards than any other quarterback in the league.

DENNIS ALLEN

FORT-WORTH STAR TELEGRAM

Growing up in Hurst, Oakland Raiders coach Dennis Allen knew his calling

By Charean Williams November 27, 2013

OAKLAND, Calif. — Long before he became the youngest head coach in the NFL, Dennis Allen was — in a football sense — the oldest kid on his second-grade team. Grady and Kay Allen knew coaching ran through their son's blood by the way he lined up his teammates in the Colleyville Youth Football Association, giving them specific instructions on what to do.

"That's really what he was always good at," Kay Allen said from her home in Hurst. "He's just always had an instinct for it, knowing where to be and what to do. He was like that coach on the field from the start."

Allen's first official coaching job came just before his 24th birthday when he returned to Texas A&M as a graduate assistant after his playing career ended. The Oakland Raiders hired him as the franchise's 18th head coach 15 years later, when Allen was only 39.

Allen is the first NFL head coach in the league's post-1970 modern era bred in Tarrant County. Bo McMillin, from Fort Worth North Side High School, coached the Lions and Eagles from 1948-51.

Today Allen will coach the Raiders in Tarrant County against the Dallas Cowboys at AT&T Stadium.

He was born in Georgia but started kindergarten in Hurst after the family's move in 1977. Allen played in the Mid-Cities PeeWee and Mid-Cities Little Dribblers Leagues, attended Shady Oaks Elementary and became a multisport star at Bedford Junior High and L.D. Bell High School.

Allen never wanted to be a fireman, a policeman or even a doctor, like his older brother, Geoff, ended up becoming. Instead, Dennis declared in junior high that coaching was his future, a calling he wonders whether his now-deceased father regrets not heeding.

Grady Allen, who died last December of a heart attack at age 66, went into the industrial chemical business after retiring from the NFL. But he always found time to help coach his children's teams, a passion that rubbed off on Dennis.

"I think it's important for all players to know who they are," Dennis said at the Raiders' training facility. "I think sometimes players don't recognize who they are. They think they're something they're not. I knew I wasn't the biggest. I wasn't the strongest. I certainly wasn't the fastest. But I thought I could be smartest. I would use my football smarts to try to help other people. I always took pride in being a little bit of a coach on the field, even when I was real little. For whatever reason, it came natural to me. It probably came more natural than 10 times 10 or 7 times 9. I still don't know if I know those answers.

"I just always looked up to my coaches, and I love sports. When you can't play anymore, how else are you going to be involved in athletics? Coaching, I thought, was a great avenue for me."

Like father, like son

Grady Allen played defensive end for A&M from 1965-67. He earned All-Southwest Conference honors in '67 when the Aggies won the conference title and upset Alabama in the Cotton Bowl. Grady, who won the prestigious Aggie Heart Award as a senior, continued his career for five seasons with the Atlanta Falcons.

While growing up, Dennis imagined his father's career akin to that of Hall of Famer Dick Butkus. The truth is: Grady's intangibles turned him into an overachiever. He was a part-time linebacker and a core special teams player, with no starts in 59 NFL games and two career interceptions.

"He was a guy you'd look at and think there's no way he'd ever play," said Ralph Smith, Grady's position coach at A&M who now runs the Fort Worth office for Bourland & Leverich Supply Co. "He was a tremendous high school athlete — an old, rugged East Texas boy — but he was slow and always had knee problems. I've told people I could outrun Grady backward. But he just kept beating the ones out we brought in. He just had a knack, which is the same thing Dennis had."

Dennis, Geoff and their younger sister, Ann Marie, grew up with sports. The four-bedroom residence bears scratches from the sock baseball and Nerf basketball games played in the family room while a Cowboys, Rangers or some other game on TV provided background noise. They used a basketball goal in the driveway and a neighbor's vacant lot to take their games outside.

The family's social activities revolved around sports, too, with Grady and Kay never missing an organized game.

Dennis' favorite sport was whatever season it was. He once scored 63 points in a Little Dribblers game. His mom remembers the unassisted triple play he turned in Little League. It was big news one field day at Bedford Junior High when he was beaten out in a foot race. He was a catcher in baseball, a safety in football and a forward in soccer.

Dennis lettered in three sports in high school, but as the Class 5A state defensive player of the year in 1990 when he had 10 interceptions, eight forced fumbles and 107 tackles, he followed his father to A&M on a football scholarship.

"He had great instincts, but he also had all the tools to make the plays," said Tim Edwards, Bell's head coach from 1977-96. "He had enough speed, enough size, but I think one of the biggest things was he was just hostile. He was the opposite of what he was in the classroom and off the field. When he'd get there, he'd light you up."

Coach DA

It was in college that Aggies defensive back Michael Hendricks started calling Allen by his initials — DA — a nickname that has stuck.

Allen, a safety, started the final 21 games of his career on the Aggies' Wrecking Crew defense. The Aggies finished in the NCAA's top five in total defense in 1994-95 while posting a 19-3-1 record. Most Aggies remember Allen for his fourth-quarter interception against Texas in 1993 that iced an 18-9 victory.

A&M coach R.C. Slocum saw the coaching potential in Allen soon after he arrived on campus.

"He was more than a player," said Slocum, who was 123-47-2 in his 14 seasons at A&M. "He was like a coach on the field. Dennis always showed a little more maturity than the average player. He'd come up to the office and watch tape, studying it like a coach."

After failing to catch on with the Buffalo Bills as an undrafted rookie free agent in 1996, Allen returned to A&M to begin coaching. He spent four years helping with the Aggies' defensive backs as a low-level assistant before Keith Burns, a 1979 L.D. Bell graduate, hired Allen as the secondary coach at the University of Tulsa.

Allen moved up the ranks quickly — two seasons at Tulsa, four with the Atlanta Falcons and five with the New Orleans Saints — before the Denver Broncos hired him as defensive coordinator.

"There's a presence that comes with Dennis that is that of confidence," New Orleans Saints coach Sean Payton said. "... Dennis is and was very highly thought of while he was here and was on track to be a coordinator here. Those plans never work out, though. Those guys get hired very quickly. Dennis got an opportunity to go [to Denver], and so it's not surprising to see the position he's in now — that of a head coach. I think the world of him and a lot of his ability."

Allen doesn't regularly wear his Aggie Ring or his Super Bowl ring from the 2009 Saints, but both mean a lot to him. They represent the two places he "grew up" as a football coach.

White knight

After only one season as the Broncos defensive coordinator in 2011, Allen earned interviews with St. Louis and Oakland. The Raiders offered him their head coaching job, and Allen didn't hesitate even though Oakland's last winning season came in its 2002 Super Bowl season.

"I was aware of what the challenges would be coming in," said Allen, who is 8-19. "Now, maybe to what depth the challenges were, I don't know if I fully understood that, but I knew what the challenges were coming in here. I have never been afraid to step up to a challenge.

"I went to New Orleans after Hurricane Katrina, and that team was 3-13 and had been displaced and everything's chaotic. I was like, 'Let's roll up our sleeves and go to work.' That's kind of the way I've approached this. Just roll up my sleeves and go to work and try to do the best I can and keep these guys motivated, try to teach them, try to have a team that's going to be tough, smart, disciplined, and we've made a lot of progress in that area.

"We haven't won as many games as I would have liked to have won, but I see a lot of great signs of where this thing is going, and it's heading in a positive direction."

The Raiders have started three quarterbacks this season and six in three seasons. Their biggest-name players are aging safety Charles Woodson, who is in his second stint with the Raiders, and longtime kicker Sebastian Janikowski, leaving Allen as the face of the franchise.

Raiders safety Usama Young, who had Allen as his position coach for three seasons in New Orleans, calls Allen the "general" and the "captain."

"He's positive. He's intuitive. He challenges you," Young said. "He's a players' coach. He takes care of his guys. He's always been that guy who understands where we're coming from. He's got so much knowledge of the game. I respect him. He went through some rough times in New Orleans, and we won a Super Bowl. ... He definitely has what it takes to win here."

On this day, the team's white knight is dressed in all black — sweat pants, a Raiders sweatshirt, a visor with a red Sharpie attached and sunglasses atop his head. Allen, though, presents the picture of cool, with not a hint of sweat.

Allen not only inherited his father's rugged good looks — a modern-day John Wayne as former Bell coach Edwards portrays him — but also Grady's demeanor. He said his dad was "cut-and-dry, black-and-white, this-is-kind-of-the-way-it-is," but also a "big teddy bear." Dennis admits he just as easily could be describing himself with those words.

"I think he should have been a coach," Dennis said, "and, because of that, everything I did, I wanted to try to make him proud. He was a guy who really didn't show his emotions on the outside. Yet, you always knew. Within the family, there was a lot of love, a lot of caring, a lot of emotion."

Allen grew up 16 miles from Texas Stadium, watching another coach he admired. Dennis' sideline persona sometimes reminds Geoff Allen of Tom Landry.

"I think Dennis is pretty cool all the time," said Geoff, the division chief for Pediatric Critical Care Medicine and the medical director of the Pediatric Intensive Care Unit at Children's Mercy Hospital in Kansas City.

"He's got a little fire in his belly, but he doesn't get all bent out of shape if things don't flow exactly the way he wants it to. He rolls with that and adapts to what he needs to adapt to. But you're never going to see him wear that outfit Landry did. I don't think he could pull that off."

Raiders' Dennis Allen learned from Saints' Sean Payton

By Jerry McDonald Aug. 15, 2013

NEW ORLEANS -- Dennis Allen remembers sitting at a table at his first staff meeting as an assistant coach with the New Orleans Saints, listening to a voice that would define his future.

"One of the things Sean Payton says is, when you take this staff picture, I want to be able to look back on it 10, 15, 20 years from now and see where guys have gone on to have success, to be head coaches and coordinators," Allen said. "He's always been great about trying to promote his guys. It's something he takes great pride in."

While general manager Reggie McKenzie has restructured the Raiders' front office and personnel department using what he learned working for the Green Bay Packers, the on-field operation as structured by Allen in many ways mirrors New Orleans.

Allen returns to New Orleans, with Payton on the opposite sideline, when the Raiders visit the Saints at the Mercedes-Benz Superdome at 5 p.m. Friday.

Payton hired Allen off the staff of the Atlanta Falcons in 2006 as an assistant defensive line coach. Allen became defensive backs coach in 2008 and stayed there until he became defensive coordinator for the Denver Broncos with Payton's blessing in 2011.

Raiders safety Usama Young, who played for the Saints from 2008-10, can see the similarities between teams run by Payton and Allen.

"The tempo of the practices, the meetings, the way you prepared for things you never would have even considered, they're very much the same," Young said.

Allen said he indeed borrowed heavily from New Orleans, where he won a championship ring after the 2009 season with a 31-17 win over the Indianapolis Colts in Super Bowl XLIV.

"The way we practice, the way we meet, the schedule that we have, a lot of that comes from the time I had in New Orleans," Allen said. "We had a lot of success doing it that way. It's no different than growing up as a child. You develop a lot of your personality, your character, from the environment that you're in."

In much the way that Payton repeated some of the things he learned under Bill Parcells as a Dallas assistant, Allen is passing along things he learned from Payton.

"I catch myself a lot of times with the same demeanor, the same message, even the same delivery," Allen said. "You've got to be your own guy as the head coach, and coach to your own personality. But there are a lot of things I've seen him do as far as managing a team that I've tried to incorporate."

With Payton being an offensive coach and Allen being a defensive coach, Young has been around Allen much more than he was ever around Payton.

"Sean would come in, draw a couple of things on the board, then he'd be off with the offense," Young said. "D.A., he's in the room with us scheming, adding things, drawing up things."

Allen said he stays in touch with Payton although not so much during training camp. When Payton was suspended last season for his role in the Saints' bounty scandal, he was prohibited from talking with anyone associated from an NFL team.

"He couldn't do anything with anybody, and that was tough, because he's obviously one of my mentors," Allen said.

New Orleans went 7-9 last season with Payton under suspension after winning 37 games the previous three seasons. Allen expects a return to form.

"I think you'll see a different New Orleans team this year with him back," Allen said.

Kawakami: Revamped Raiders a better fit for Dennis Allen's style

By Tim Kawakami August 14, 2013

NAPA -- This is Dennis Allen's kind of Raiders team, which I know mostly because Allen keeps pointing it out.

He's not saying this is a tremendously talented team, because he's too smart to oversell his current squad of mostly unknown, unproven players.

And he's not critiquing last season's more recognizable bunch, though we can all make plausible conclusions from what he won't say about the 2012 Raiders' 4-12 swoon.

But Allen, starting his second season in the Raiders' massive reboot alongside general manager Reggie McKenzie, is much more in his element in this year's training camp surrounded by players who actually want to be here.

"I think your first year you're really trying to figure it out, OK?" Allen said in an interview after Tuesday afternoon's practice.

"There's a lot of things you deal with as a head coach that you never dealt with as a coordinator, you never dealt with as a position coach ...

"There's no question I feel a lot more comfortable in my role. And I think having the guys on this team that we have, I think, helps me in that."

That's a twofold leap: Allen, the first-time head coach, now clearly understands the totality of his job (and there's no totality greater than inheriting the recent Raiders' mess); and that leads to the importance of gathering like-minded players.

Yes, it probably took longer than he and McKenzie thought it would take to get here, and this is just the start of the start.

In many ways -- new quarterback, new offensive coordinator, mostly an entirely new defense from 2012 -- this feels more like Year 1 in a startup than Year 2.

Still, Allen sees progress -- with his own coaching abilities, with his roster, and with the organization as a whole.

"What I'll say is, I like the players we have on this team," Allen said. "I like the way they come to work every day. I like their unselfishness.

"I like the fact that they want to come out to work every day and they want to try to get better.

"That's what I like about the 2013 Raiders."

For a lot of different reasons, he probably didn't feel much of that last season.

Instead, because of salary-cap constraints and the desire to keep the Raiders as competitive as possible (oops!), Allen had to slalom around the egos and declining production of veterans such as Rolando McClain, Richard Seymour, Tommy Kelly and Carson Palmer.

Now those players are gone. I would assume the woes of 2012 still linger in owner Mark Davis' memory, though.

So McKenzie and especially Allen are under the microscope this season, and Allen seems entirely fine with that.

"As I've moved forward, I've done a better job of trying to pick out who those guys are going to be that can help this team and lead this team and preach the same message that I'm preaching," Allen said.

What's left is a squad with expansion-level elements, especially after the rash of camp injuries that included Wednesday's devastating announcement that left tackle Jared Veldheer has a torn triceps and will be out for a while.

The Week 1 quarterback almost certainly will be journeyman Matt Flynn; other than tailback Darren McFadden and maybe safety Tyvon Branch, there isn't a prime-age star on this roster. "Me personally, I like our roster," Flynn said. "There's a lot of guys that have a lot of talent and probably some names that people have never heard of.

"But I truly believe that they will very soon."

Fact: This is not a quality roster. But a good coaching staff can do more and better things with a roster full of hungry, unproven players than the sludgy group the Raiders tried last year.

"Any time you come into a new situation, it's never exactly how you want it," Allen said. "So it's a process. And sometimes those processes take a little bit of time.

"It takes time to get everybody in place that kind of sees the same vision that you do."

At this year's training camp, Allen has turned toward a more collegiate atmosphere -- most notably, one practice determines whether the offense or defense gets to wear silver jerseys in the next.

The holdovers from last year have embraced it; Allen is quick to name defensive lineman Lamarr Houston and fullback Marcel Reece as returnees who have taken leadership roles this season. Allen also hired offensive coordinator Greg Olson to replace Greg Knapp and dump the zone-blocking scheme, and there were other key staff changes.

Again, this is much closer to Allen's kind of team, at least in attitude and philosophy. It's Allen's stamp on this franchise.

The Raiders probably won't win a lot of games, but they will have his stamp. They need his stamp.

If Allen's going to be on the hot seat in Year 2, he might as well do it his way. And I think Allen is the best shot the Raiders have right now.

KEVIN BURNETT

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders' older Burnett pushes the younger

By Vic Tafur September 4, 2013

Kaelin Burnett was an undrafted rookie at the Raiders' training camp last year, talking to his brother on the phone. Kevin, then 29 and almost seven years older, was a starting linebacker for the Miami Dolphins.

"We were talking about how great it would be if we could ever be on the same team," Kaelin said. "Kev said you never know what will happen, and the next year, voila, we're on the same team. ... Dreams do come true."

Kaelin, also a linebacker, has wanted to be like his brother his whole life, and in Sunday's opener, they both will run out of the tunnel in Indianapolis wearing silver and black. Kevin, signed as a free agent, will start; Kaelin is a backup.

They are the 73rd set of brothers to play for the same team in the same season, according to the Pro Football Hall of Fame, and the first to do so for the Raiders.

They will have to buy a lot of tickets for family members this season, but Kaelin said the sticker shock will be well worth it.

"He's the reason I played ball when I was younger," said Kaelin, who grew up in the Los Angeles area. " 'My big brother plays football. I am going to play football, too. My big brother plays linebacker. I am going to play linebacker, too.' "

Kaelin didn't make the cut initially last season, but was placed on the Raiders' practice squad before being called up for the last six games. This year, he wasn't really sweating cut-down day Saturday. He was pretty confident based on how he played this preseason, and so was his family.

"My family felt I did way better this preseason than last preseason," Kaelin said. "They felt I looked the part."

They should know. Older brother Kevin has been an NFL linebacker for eight seasons, and a pretty good, underrated one. Playing for the Cowboys, Chargers and Dolphins, Burnett has made 49 straight starts, and his 311 tackles since 2010 rank 17th in the NFL.

"Kevin's done a nice job," head coach Dennis Allen said. "I think he's an athletic linebacker. I think he fills a leadership role for us on defense, and we expect big things out of Kevin."

And, as you can expect, big brother expects big things out of his little brother. Kevin is often yelling at Kaelin during plays.

"I love it," Kaelin said. "He's helping me with everything, picking up on little keys. ... It's just great having your big brother here looking after you."

Kevin's pretty tough on him, right?

"Yeah, ever since I was young," Kaelin said, "so I am used to it by now." Well ...

"It's hard for him to take," Kevin said, "and hard for him to accept at times. I'm yelling at him while a play is going on, and then after the play, and it bothers him to some extent."

Kaelin has gotten a lot better, improving his hand-placement and pad-level techniques and getting off blocks. But not too quickly.

"Sometimes, I get too hyped up," Kaelin said. "I need to extend them first, use my eyes and see where the play is going and then get to the ball. Body control."

Allen said that Kaelin's "a guy that can run. He's still got a lot of developing that he needs to do, but he has a chance to develop."

Kaelin thinks he got better this preseason, and Kevin agrees.

"He's coming along," Kevin said. "I can't ask anything more of him. He is eager to learn and he wants to be good. He wants to be 100 percent on his assignments. Now it's just doing it over and over again."

When they leave the team facility at night, Kevin lists the things that Kaelin did wrong that day, so Kaelin can come in the next day and address them.

"I don't want to be a repeat-mistake offender," Kaelin said.

But, yes, there are times Kaelin doesn't want to hear what Kevin is saying. Because Kaelin not only grew up wanting to be like his brother, but he wanted to be better.

"It's very competitive, I must say," Kaelin said after a big sigh. "I love competing. We try to keep the smack-talking level down, but I feel like I am going to be a better player than him.

"He always tells me, 'Know your role. I am the big brother.' But I feel like in a few years, teams are going to have to look out for me."

Let you in on a little secret: Kevin wants Kaelin to be better than he is, too.

"I want him to be the best Burnett linebacker," Kevin Burnett. "It's not about who's better than who, it's about reaching your potential. "If his potential is better than (mine), I am going to help him reach that."

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE

Kevin Burnett has an enormous chip on his shoulder

By Levi Damien Aug. 4, 2013

There are a total of 60 new players on this Raiders team. That's two thirds of the roster. By now we have figured out that there is a common thread among those 60 players Reggie McKenzie and Dennis Allen have added - they are all have something to prove - but I can say without a doubt none of them have a bigger chip on their shoulder than Kevin Burnett.

The former second round pick is entering his ninth season in the NFL and his fourth team. In the first four of those seasons - all in Dallas -- he started a total of 4 games. When he left the Cowboys and joined the Chargers, he saw the most starts he had in his career. He started 7 games in his first season there and all 16 games the following season.

So, by his sixth season in the league, he had finally shown enough to earn his place as the fulltime starter. Then he was not brought back.

He went to the Dolphins and started every game the past two seasons, raising his tackle numbers each the past three seasons including having over 100 tackles each of the past two. Then he was released. The team felt like they had found an upgrade with Raiders former linebacker, Philip Wheeler and Burnett was not in the plans.

So, it seems though he finally had become a fulltime starter, he still wasn't quite good enough. He was still a stopgap until something better came along. All throughout his career, he has struggled. Four years of toiling in obscurity, then four years of not 'he'll do for now' and now at age 30, he must deal with the age question.

These facts have come together to create one enormous chip on his shoulder.

"People say, 'Oh, he got this, he did this, he's sorry, he's this, he's that." Said Burnett. "My numbers have gone up every season, so...what's that a product of? You know, I've been on good football teams, had other people around me so it's not just that I'm on a sorry football team. The guy can play."

"The fact that I can do it all and the ability to play smart," Burnett said of his skill set. "Not a lot of football players play smart. Not a lot of players help themselves before the snap of the play and that's what I love about myself. Given the fact that everybody wants to say, 'He's getting older,' or 'He's this he's that. He sucks.' Whatever. I've had 200-tackle seasons back to back. So, it's all in the eye of the beholder."

Another common thread seems to be versatility. Jason Tarver does a lot of different things with this team's linebacking corps and Burnett can be found lining up at each outside linebacker position as well as inside linebacker at times. The changing alignments aside, the Raiders are severely depleted in camp due to injury. He is considered somewhat of a 'jack of all trades" even if his critics might add 'master of none'.

"In this league, you've got to be able to play every position. You've got to be able to play sam, mike, will, strong safety, free safety, defensive end because on any given play they can say, 'Flip it.' And then, when that happens, you gotta be able to run the defense. So, it helps to know where everybody's going, know what everybody's doing.

"Football is a game of versatility. It's built around how much you can do for your football team to help them win. So, it's not about what position you play because all that is, is a label. . . Football players put themselves in the best position to succeed. So do coaches. Now, it's about: what role am I going to fulfill on this particular play? What role am I going to ask this player to play at this particular point in time."

The unique position this NFL veteran is in compared to some of the other new Raiders is he has been a starter for three plus seasons. Most guys who feel like they have a lot to prove are unknowns or have toiled as a backup throughout their careers.

Burnett clearly needs no added incentive for him to play with a sense of urgency. But he can't speak for any of the other newly signed players on this team. Most of those players are on one-year deals (Burnett is on a two-year deal) and according to him, those deals were made with motivation in mind.

"If you look at the construction of this team, it's not by happenstance a lot of people are here on short-term deals," said Burnett. "See, what you do by doing that is you create a hungry football team. By creating a hungry football team, you're creating a team that plays with a sense of urgency, guys that are not complacent."

I would assume he doesn't include himself among that group which would need a short term deal to keep from being complacent. Disproving those who would slight or disrespect his abilities is clearly all the motivation he needs.

BRICE BUTLER

Rookie WR Brice Butler impresses Raiders

By Josh Dubow Aug. 12, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- Two long catches and a touchdown in his NFL exhibition debut earned Oakland Raiders receiver Brice Butler plenty of congratulatory messages from friends and family.

His response: Ignore it.

Because as a seventh-round pick with little college pedigree, Butler knows that he is just one bad practice or game from transforming from summertime revelation to struggling to make the 53-man roster.

"I don't try to let it get to me," Butler said. "It's just one game. I just have to keep working. If I play terrible nobody will remember last week. I just have to keep working."

That's just the reaction coach Dennis Allen wants Butler to have, saying that he hoped Butler wouldn't read all the glowing reviews from a game where he had an impressive 40-yard catch and run followed by a diving 30-yard touchdown catch on one attention-getting drive.

That kind of performance has vaulted Butler into the mix for a roster spot on a team still searching for dependable receiving options.

"Make no mistake about it; he's been a nice surprise," Allen said. "When you get a seventh-round draft pick like that who's really developed, that's a good thing to have. But at the same time, I don't want him reading too much of his press clippings and start feeling too good about himself.

He's still a rookie. He still has a long way to go, but he's off to a nice start."

Butler knows firsthand how quickly a player's position can change. A Super Prep All-American in high school in Georgia, Butler went to Southern California and had 20 catches his first year and was named to the Pac-10 all-freshman team.

But his playing time dwindled the next two years when he combined for just 21 catches and he ended up transferring to San Diego State for his senior year. He caught 24 passes for the Aztecs on a team that ranked 111th in the nation in pass attempts.

That journey is one reason why Butler is more focused on his mistakes from Friday night than his successes.

"I honestly don't think I played that good," he said. "Until those couple of plays on that one drive I didn't feel good about my play at all. I definitely have to work on it. Watching tape there was a lot of stuff I can work on. ... I definitely just have to build on it."

Butler has the advantage of getting some outside help from his father, Bobby, who played 12 years in the NFL as a cornerback for the Atlanta Falcons.

Bobby Butler can help his son on the intricacies of the NFL game from the perspective of someone who made a career stopping wide receivers.

"Defensively, he tells me what he sees when he watches me run routes or he watches me in the run game," Brice Butler said. "Offensively, he tells me what I should do to trigger different things from the corner and stuff like that. He's always been like that with me. When he realized I didn't want to play corner he has always been there on the side helping."

Butler is on a similar path to the one teammate Rod Streater followed last summer. Streater arrived as an undrafted free agent from Temple who had just 19 catches as a senior.

But he quickly caught the eyes of his coaches with his good hands and route-running and had 39 catches for 584 yards and three touchdowns as a rookie. Streater now has a starting role a year after making the team out of nowhere and is dispensing advice to younger players like Butler.

"We talk about it all the time," Streater said. "He was a blocking guy and had almost similar stats. We instantly connected. I told him, 'You just got to work and when you're on the field, college is done now. This is the NFL. You get a new chance.'"

DI HAYDEN

THE MONDAY MORNING OUARTERBACK

DJ Hayden's Heart is in the Game

By Robert Klemko Sept. 10, 2013

INDIANAPOLIS—Tori Hayden had a son, and she raised him as a single parent. She dropped out of college to do it. He chose football, and she didn't worry about the potential for broken bones or a bruised brain; she was just happy he wasn't selling drugs or buying them. Football helped raise him, drove him to college, and then it nearly killed him. He's got an 18-inch scar running down the center of his chest to prove it. But he refused to quit on football, and 10 months after his heart nearly gave out on him, Tori's son is playing against the biggest, fastest men she has ever seen in person.

Sitting in Section 137, Row 4, Seat 8 at Lucas Oil Stadium on Sunday afternoon, D.J. Hayden's mom squirmed as the rookie cornerback chosen in the first round of April's NFL draft made his regular-season pro debut. He entered the game on Oakland's first defensive drive. She could tell it was him by the way he walked across the field, the way he stood, the way he crouched in position.

"Oh Lord," she whispered, covering her mouth with her hands. "They're gonna throw at him because he just got out there."

Maybe you know the story: Hayden was polishing off a stellar senior season at the University of Houston when one day at a November practice a teammate's knee struck his chest, tearing the inferior vena cava—the major vein that cycles blood from the lower body to the heart. Most commonly the result of high-speed vehicle collisions, the injury proves fatal for 95% of those afflicted, according to the university's team doctor.

But Hayden lived—it helps that football teams have medical staff immediately at hand; Houston's medical trainer acted quickly to get Hayden into an ambulance and to a hospital—and after recovering he was cleared to play football. He was drafted by the Raiders, who many believe gambled with the 12th overall pick. Hayden had an impressive resume on tape, and glowing character endorsements—he was voted a near-unanimous team caption as a senior after only one year in the program, and he finished his degree in sociology while rehabbing the injury in the spring —but several teams took him off their draft boards for medical reasons alone. Plus, even if he was physically OK, could he ever be the player he once was? The Raiders had their concerns too, holding Hayden out of full contact until two weeks ago in the third preseason game, against the Bears. That day, Tori was so nervous for her son's first play that she reached down and dug her fingernails into the leg of the understanding stranger sitting next to her. On Sunday she was still nervous, but less so. Wearing an autographed, black No. 25 jersey, Tori predicted the play when the Raiders trotted out their nickel package on the first drive.

"That's what the Bears did," she said. "Go right at the rookie."

And Colts quarterback Andrew Luck did just that, hitting Darrius Heyward-Bey on a crossing route just before Hayden got hands on him to drag the receiver down after a 16-yard gain. "I knew it," she said.

Tori was once what you might call a helicopter mom. Born in Kentucky, she dropped out of Prairie View A&M in Texas upon having D.J. She moved to Houston with him and was working for a an energy company in town when D.J. went to college, and when word got to her from a coach that her son was slipping academically and showing up late to one of his classes as a junior-college transfer, she came to the lecture hall at UH to confront him. Yet when Hayden was faced with a life-altering decision—whether to continue playing football after emergency heart surgery and six days in critical condition—she stepped back and let him decide.

"I wasn't completely fine with him coming back, but I told myself he's a grown man and he can make decisions for himself," she says. "He knows his body, he knows his limitations and he's always made good decisions, so I just felt like he could make it on his own without me."

But she kept watching, and worrying. She's cautious about asking him about his health; after seeing how confident he's become, she doesn't want to project her fears and concerns onto him.

But they were evident as Tori watched each snap from her stadium seat, eyes fixed upon D.J., hoping only that he doesn't get hurt.

After Heyward-Bey's first down, the rest of the game was more encouraging for Tori, her uncle and Hayden's agent, Graylan Crain, sitting side by side. With eight more defensive opportunities in the first half, Hayden shut down his opposite numbers—T.Y. Hilton and Heyward-Bey—and Luck didn't look his way. On two punt returns he was the jammer across from the punt team's gunner, but the 23-year-old forgot he was allowed to jam the hopeful tackler.

"At first I just let him run, and ran with him," he said later. "I realized that I could put my hands on him. I put my hands on him and I think I did good."

By halftime Tori was alarmed by the speed and ferocity of play, shrieking as Colts linebacker Erik Walden clawed for a forced fumble. "They're too rough out there!"

But she grew more confident in D.J.—his play and his personal safety—as the game wore on. By the third quarter she watched the Raiders as a whole, with an eye on her son. "Now I just want him to get an interception," she said. "That's a drastic change, isn't it?"

The Raiders led as late as the fourth quarter behind an inspired performance by the defensive line and quarterback Terrelle Pryor. With less than 10 minutes to play, the Colts faced 3rd-and-2 at their own 42 as Hayden lined up across from six-time Pro Bowl receiver Reggie Wayne.

Hayden says he knew what was coming: Luck zipped a slant to Wayne, and Hayden closed fast, making contact with Wayne as the ball arrived and nearly swatting it away. He jumped to his feet in celebration, only to realize a moment later that Wayne had caught the ball for a first down.

That, he says, was his 'Welcome to the NFL' moment.

"I thought I broke it up, but he caught it," he says. "I thought it was good coverage. I've got to work on finishing the play."

The Colts went on to score the game-winning touchdown on the drive, Luck scrambling 19 yards past Hayden (who was in man coverage on Heyward-Bey, with his back turned to the QB—he's No. 25 in the video below) and the rest of the Raiders for a 21-17 lead. Pryor threw an interception in the final seconds at the goal line, ensuring a Colts victory. Hayden went without a breakup or a big hit on a par with his tackle of Matt Forte in his preseason debut—a torquing, slamming takedown that he says was the most contact he'd endured since the injury. This time around he played more than 25 snaps, the majority on defense as an outside corner in nickel. He was targeted three times, giving up up three catches for 37 yards and making the tackle each time.

"I wasn't really nervous at all," he said afterward. "I feel normal. I was just happy to be back out there doing my thing."

After the game Hayden dressed in the black slacks and shirt he bought at Men's Wearhouse before the preseason and the black and white blazer he picked up at Express, and shared a hug with his mother, who waited on the other side of a hip-high metal barrier separating family and friends from players as they made way to the team bus. She asked him how it felt: "Like a football game," he replied, bluntly. Head coach Dennis Allen stopped by, hugged Tori, shook hands with her uncle and agent, and offered his congratulations and encouragement to Hayden. Fellow Raiders rookie Sio Moore stopped by too, reminding DJ of his third-down gaffe.

"Next time, see the play before you celebrate," he said, grinning.

Moore and DJ have become close, rooming together on the road and in training camp and now sharing an apartment. While DJ sends mostly one-word answers to regular texters such as his agents and his mom, he has opened up to Moore recently. The linebacker is convinced DJ has mentally overcome nearly dying less than a year ago. Like a shark-bite victim who returns to surfing, Hayden felt he had no choice but to dive back in.

"People assume he's nervous," Moore says, "but he just goes out there with a mentality to play ball. Had he been like that, nervous, that would hold you back. We've had conversations; he's good. He just wants to stop talking about it."

In the media, sure, Hayden answers obligatory questions about the injury with curt-yet-polite one-liners. In postgame locker rooms he prefers to put on a shirt before facing the media, so as not to draw attention to the scar running down the middle of his chest. But at home with Moore he walks around shirtless, and on fishing trips too; not showing off, but not hiding either.

"He wears it with pride," Moore says of the scar. "It's not something he's ashamed of or doesn't like. It's a badge. Whenever he wakes, and especially when we go out on the field, he remembers what it took for him to get here."

CSN BAY AREA

Hayden puts heart injury in past

By Paul Gutierrez May 11, 2013

ALAMEDA -- The last time D.J. Hayden stepped on a football field? He almost died. A nondescript practice collision at Houston on Nov. 6 ruptured the inferior vena cava, a large vein that pumps blood from the lower part of the body into the heart and Hayden nearly bled out internally.

So forgive Hayden if he got a little reflective this weekend as he took part in his first NFL camp with the Raiders holding their three-day rookie camp at their facility.

"It felt like old times," Hayden said Saturday. "I did my usual routine. I came here, took a knee, said a little prayer then just went out there. It wasn't like it took me extra time to get ready. I just went out there and did what I did."

Drafted No. 12 overall by the Raiders, Hayden has been medically cleared to participate in everything the Raiders will do in camp. Including, it turns out, what Oakland drafted him to do --break up passes.

Yes, it's early. It's a ridiculously small sample size after two non-contact practices to gauge what Hayden can and cannot do on an NFL field. But the fact that he is here at all is a small victory. To be the game-changing cover cornerback in the mold of such Raiders greats as Willie Brown, Lester Hayes, Mike Haynes, Charles Woodson and Nnamdi Asomugha is the eventual goal. Big talk? Yes. But there's a reason general manager Reggie McKenzie and coach Dennis Allen would have taken him at No. 3 overall had they not found a suitable trade partner to move down.

So it was heartening, so to speak, to see Hayden flash across the field to break up a pass from Tyler Wilson to an unidentified tryout player on Saturday, Hayden seemingly beaten before stretching out to bat away the ball in stride.

It was as pretty as it was simple.

"It helps put me at ease," he said of the play. "As long as I keep making production, I feel like I can get better. Just make plays. When I made the little play I was happy. I should have caught it but there's always room for improvement.

"Corner's basically the same thing everywhere. The coverages aren't that hard. I think I'm picking it up pretty good. I'm just trying to soak in everything coach (Clayton) Lopez and coach (Johnnie) Lynn are trying to teach me. I'm just trying to soak it all in like a sponge."

Even as he is nursing a hamstring he strained during his Pro Day.

"So he's still not quite 100 percent from there but he's been out there, working through it," Allen said. "He made a nice play on the ball today. So I'm pleased with where D.J.'s at and, again, it's going to be a learning process.

"It's putting one foot in front of the other and I think when it comes time to play games this September, I think he'll be ready to roll."

Before then, though, will come tons of information to process. And intricacies to learn.

"I would just say getting used to not putting your hands on people down the field because in the NFL you have the 5-yard rule, so, just adjusting to that," Hayden said. "In college I used to kind of push people a little bit so I have to adjust to that."

He was not laughing.

He did smile, though, when I asked him if Brown, the Hall of Famer, had given him any pearls yet, though.

Hayden moved his hands in a quick-burst chopping, north-south motion.

"Yeah," Hayden said, "he told me to move my hands out of my break."

So, what kind corner does he profess himself to be -- off the ball or press?

"Probably a mixture of both," he said. "It all depends on the down and distance and the situation. Yeah, when I get up there I'm going to have to be more physical and re-route them, and then again when I'm at '7,' I've got to play off and I can't touch them. I've got to mirror them."

Talks of his injury, though, have been nonexistent thus far.

"I don't even think about it," he said. "The only time I think about is when somebody asks me. But when I'm on the field I don't think about that. I think about the play and I think about the coverage that I'm in. I put it past me."

If at least, for one weekend.

LAMARR HOUSTON

Raiders' Houston no longer 'little brother'

By Paul Gutierrez September 6, 2013

ALAMEDA, Calif. - How different will the Oakland Raiders' defense look Sunday?

Consider: Besides there being nine new starters, Lamarr Houston, who is making the switch from left defensive end to the right side, will be the only Raiders defensive player who had a sack last season with Oakland.

Yes, the Raiders had 25 sacks as a team last year, which ranked 31st in the NFL, and Houston tied for the team lead with four. Linebacker Miles Burris, who is on the reserve/physically unable to perform list, added 1.5 sacks. And that's it.

It's no surprise, then, that much is expected this season of Houston, who was voted a team captain along with fullback Marcel Reece and long-snapper Jon Condo.

"Lamarr was a guy that, going into this season, we kind of pegged as a guy that we wanted to be a leader for this team," said Raiders coach Dennis Allen. "He began to take a little bit of that role at the end of last year, and I think he's continued to improve in that regard as we've gone through the offseason and training camp.

"I think he'll continue to develop as a leader for this football team as we go forward."

Selected in the second round of the 2010 draft, Houston immediately made a mark with numerous training camp scraps. But he seemed soft-spoken off the field.

"When I was younger, I had (Richard) Seymour and Tommy (Kelly) here, so I thought I was going to be 'little brother' forever," Houston said with a roaring laugh. "Nah, but as the years have gone by, I could see myself being a captain now. A lot of my teammates respect me and it means a lot to me -- and I'm going to do the best I can to fulfill this role for this team."

So what, exactly, does being tabbed a captain mean to Houston?

"It means it's a lot of responsibility, a lot of respect," he said. "It's a big role to play. It means you're a leader. You basically represent the team when you're a captain, so it's a great honor. But it's more about the team."

And still, there are questions about Houston's skill set, and how it translates to the more pass-rush-emphasized right side.

At 6-feet-3, 300 pounds, Houston is not your stereotypical edge rusher, nor is he a bull-rusher.

"To be honest, I think my skill set fits perfect," he said. "Pass-rushing is about technique; it's not about who's the fastest or who's the strongest. I've been working on that a lot this offseason and it's been showing up in this preseason a little bit and in training camp, so I'm just going to try and build on that and do whatever I can to get better at playing on that right end."

SACRAMENTO BEE

Raiders seek leadership, sacks from Lamarr Houston

By Josh Dubow Sept. 5, 2013

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- Lamarr Houston's time in the shadows of the Oakland Raiders defensive line is over.

After spending his first three seasons as the young guy on a veteran line dominated by Richard Seymour and Tommy Kelly, Houston is being counted on to lead Oakland's front.

He has moved from left defensive end to the right side, where he is being counted on as the primary pass rusher on a defense that has no proven player when it comes to getting to the quarterback.

He has also stepped into the leadership void on a defense that will have nine new starters from last season.

"Fortunately I was here with Seymour and Tommy and they taught me a lot," Houston said. "I've been learning and I'm still learning. But being one of the older guys on the line, I just feel it's my job to help the other guys to come along and get toward the vision we want as a team."

The Raiders overhauled their defense after it struggled a year ago in the first season under defensive-minded head coach Dennis Allen and coordinator Jason Tarver. Seymour, Kelly, Rolando McClain and Michael Huff were all cut. Philip Wheeler, Matt Shaughnessy and Desmond Bryant were among those who left in free agency.

In total, the players who won't be on the active roster for Sunday's opener against the Indianapolis Colts accounted for 79 percent of the defensive snaps a year ago.

"He's running that show there up front," Tarver said. "We're excited about what he's doing. He's the one that's running that group and he does a good job with it."

As much as the Raiders need leadership, they really need a pass rush from Houston. The entire defensive roster accounted for just 16 sacks in the NFL last year and lacks a proven pass rusher.

Houston rushed the passer from the left side more than 90 percent of the time last season, according to game-tracking by the Website Pro Football Focus.

"He's demonstrated that he's got the best ability as a rusher," Allen said. "He's a little bit more of a power rusher than he is a speed rusher. But I really think he's a guy that can help getting some pressure on the quarterback."

He was rated the 15th best 4-3 defensive end at pressuring the passer with four sacks, 14 quarterback hits and 35 quarterback hurries. His production picked up as the season went along with 25 of his 53 pressures and three of his sacks coming in the final five games.

He will be counted on to be the team's primary pass rusher to disrupt the opposing quarterback from the blind side.

"Everybody takes pride in getting the quarterback down," he said. "That's one of Al Davis' most famous quotes. Take the quarterback down in the first couple of plays and take him down hard. As a D-lineman I pride myself on trying to get to the quarterback."

Houston has been at his best early in his career as an edge-setting defensive end in the run game. He has just 10 career sacks and is more of a power rusher than a typical speed guy who beats tackles around the edge to get to the quarterback.

After cutting veteran pass rusher Andre Carter to get down to the 53-man roster limit, the current Raiders defense has no proven pass rusher.

The Raiders need an upgrade from the pass rush after having a franchise-low 25 sacks a year ago if this defense is going to be able to slow down opposing offenses.

"I want to be a complete player," Houston said. "Some of the best guys who ever played on the D-line did a pretty good job of both stopping the run and sacking the quarterback. Guys like Deacon Jones, Reggie White, John Randle. I think it's important to be the total player."

IASON HUNTER

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders' Jason Hunter makes most of opportunity

By Vic Tafur Sept. 12, 2013

When Raiders defensive end Jason Hunter was 12, his dad brought home a couple of pet fish for him and his brother. They didn't name the fish, because there is nothing cute and nameable about piranhas.

His dad would put in 30 feeder fish and the brothers would watch the fireworks, but not from too close.

"It was cool to watch them attack them and eat them all in five or 10 minutes," Hunter said. "It was scary to feed them because they were so ready to attack, but it was fun."

Hunter and the rest of the Raiders' defense made like piranhas in the last 2 1/2 quarters against the Colts on Sunday, but were goldfish early in spotting Andrew Luck 14 points in the 21-17 loss.

Hunter, a 30-year-old free-agent acquisition, had a sack, a quarterback hit and two hurries, and Oakland had four sacks to tie a season high from last year, when the Raiders tied a franchise-low with 25.

There are nine new starters on defense, and Hunter is encouraged at how quickly they've come together.

"We fly around to the ball and we're mentally tough, and I love that about our group," Hunter said. "We play violent."

That's what "jumped out on tape" to Jacksonville head coach Gus Bradley, whose team travels to face Oakland on Sunday.

"They play hard," Bradley said. "It's quite a challenge to have the number of new guys they have on defense and to mesh them together and to perform at that level; high effort and you didn't see any bumps, you didn't see any miscommunication issues."

When Hunter is not chasing quarterbacks on third down, he is setting the edge on first and second down. He has to knock back the offensive tackle, help contain the play and not let the running back get outside of him.

"It's tough because your instincts are to try to make every play," said Hunter, who has 12 career sacks. "But when you peek inside, that's when the play may go outside. You just have to trust that the man next to you is going to make the play."

Though many of the Raiders missed time in training camp, Hunter was out there for every practice, flying under the radar. Just like the Appalachian State alum has done for his entire seven-year, four-team career.

"Being an undrafted guy from a small school, that kind of follows me," Hunter said. "I have to do things extra hard and outwork my competition so that I get some looks and people can notice me."

Raiders general manager Reggie McKenzie, then with the Packers' front office, noticed the 6-foot-4, 270-pound defensive lineman when Green Bay signed the undrafted free agent in 2006. And Oakland head coach Dennis Allen was impressed in 2011, when he was the Broncos' defensive coordinator and Hunter played all 16 games, including two starts.

"He likes the physical aspect of the game and he's one of those guys that you're not begging Jason to come out here and play," Allen said. "You're not begging Jason to get the pads on. He's a guy that has that sort of lunch-pail mentality, just goes to work every day and does his job."

When he was a kid, Hunter planned to be punching in and punching out every day as a major-league-baseball player, but a bus crash in junior high ended that dream. The driver fell asleep and Hunter's left hand was badly injured. It affected his ability to grip the bat, and then a growth spurt caught his Fayetteville, N.C., football coach's attention. The rest is history.

Pretty good history, like in college when Hunter returned a fumble 15 yards for a touchdown to give Appalachian State a 21-16 win over Northern Iowa in the 2005 NCAA Division I-AA championship game.

Undrafted, he played three years for the Packers, one for the Lions and the two for the Broncos when he seemed poised for a breakthrough season in Denver in 2012. New defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio called Hunter "a rugged defensive lineman" and said "every day he brings it with passion."

Hunter had cracked the starting line before he tore his triceps after the first preseason game and was ruled out for the season.

"That was the toughest thing, doing all that work to get where I wanted to be and then getting hurt," he said. "But that's the name of the game, overcoming adversity."

Unless, of course, you're a feeder fish.

Oakland Raiders' Jason Hunter likes living on the edgeBy Jerry McDonald

Aug 1, 2013

NAPA -- Living life on the edge as a defensive end isn't the most glamorous job in the NFL, but it suits Jason Hunter just fine.

The Raiders' starting left defensive end loves "setting the edge," a part of the game that doesn't carry with it the kind of fame and glory that comes from rushing the passer.

"Basically setting an edge is getting an extension on that tackle and knocking him back, that way it stops the line of scrimmage so the (running) back can't just get to the edge, and it forces him back inside to where the help is," Hunter said.

Setting edges has been an issue for a Raiders defense that has been run-challenged for the better part of the past decade. Right tackle Khalif Barnes, who has worked against Hunter throughout the offseason and training camp, thinks Hunter is more stout than his 6-foot-4, 270-pound build would suggest.

Offensive tackles blocking Hunter typically outweigh him by at least 30 pounds.

"He's thick, powerful, and he may look smaller, but he's very strong and has good hands," Barnes said.

In most cases, if Hunter has done his job, he hasn't made the tackle himself. Rather, he's set up an interior lineman or linebacker to make the hit.

"He's a guy who just tries to do his part," Barnes said. "If you try and do your part and then half of somebody else's, that takes away what you do by half. Do your part. It's a great mindset and the whole team needs to be like that."

Hunter's willingness to set the edge, as well as his work ethic and demeanor, are what led him back to general manager Reggie McKenzie and coach Dennis Allen.

McKenzie was a personnel executive in Green Bay when Hunter played with the Packers as an undrafted free agent out of Appalachian State from 2006 through 2008. When Allen was defensive coordinator in Denver in 2011, Hunter was a reserve defensive end, having played the season before in a 3-4 defense as an outside linebacker.

On a Raiders defensive line that too often has failed in terms of maintaining gaps and position despite having well-regarded talent, Hunter brings a reputation of carrying out his assignments with enthusiasm.

"Jason loves football, and he enjoys competing," Allen said. "He likes the physical aspect of the game where you're not begging Jason to come out here and want to play. You're not begging Jason to get the pads on."

Hunter was particularly excited to get the pads on this season after spending the 2012 season on injured reserve because of a torn triceps. It happened at a time when Hunter had ascended to a starting position under Jack Del Rio, who replaced Allen as defensive coordinator.

The timing could not have been worse.

"It really hurt me, man," Hunter said."I thought I was having a real good training camp. It was hard, sitting at home, watching on TV and seeing all my peers from around the league playing games. It made me more focused to take care of my body, do the right things."

RASHAD JENNINGS

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP (OAKLAND TRIBUNE, CC TIMES, SI MERCURY NEWS)

Raiders' Rashad Jennings shines as McFadden's fill-in

By Steve Corkran Sept. 29, 2013

Such was the case Sunday, when Jennings was called upon to fill in for running back Darren McFadden, who suffered a hamstring injury early in the first half of the Raiders' 24-14 loss to Washington.

"The quote that always sticks with me, and I always share with people is, 'When opportunity presents itself, it's too late to prepare for it,'" Jennings said. "So, you always got to see yourself as the guy."

Jennings was "the guy" on several levels Sunday, standing out in a game in which the Raiders squandered a 14-0 lead, surrendered seven sacks and allowed a struggling Washington team to get its first victory in four games.

He made his presence felt from the outset, before McFadden suffered his injury and Jennings touched the ball on offense for the first of 23 times.

Jennings burst through the line and blocked a Sav Rocca punt that teammate Jeremy Stewart recovered in the end zone for a Raiders touchdown.

"Ever since I met the cat, since (offseason) camp, all he does is show up and work," left offensive tackle Khalif Barnes said. "Whatever role they ask him to do, he does it. So, that doesn't surprise me at all."

The Raiders signed Jennings this past offseason ostensibly as a replacement for running back Mike Goodson, who departed to the Jets via free agency.

In Jennings, they landed a veteran back who has the versatility to make a difference in several capacities. All of those were on display Sunday.

Several times Jennings came close to blocking Rocca's punts. When he wasn't playing special teams, Jennings was accounting for 116 of Oakland's 298 yards offense.

He rushed 15 times for 45 yards and caught all eight passes thrown his way by Matt Flynn for 71 yards. By comparison, he touched the ball only nine times in Oakland's first three games.

"He went in there and ran the ball hard," coach Dennis Allen said. "He did an admirable job of filling in for McFadden."

Allen preaches the next-man-up philosophy, meaning when someone goes down with injury, the backup has to be ready to perform on short notice.

Jennings grew accustomed to that role during his four seasons as the primary backup to Maurice Jones-Drew in Jacksonville.

"It's the mentality that you should have," Jennings said. "There aren't any say, per se, backups in the NFL. Those are the guys that are at home. Wherever they put me ... I'm going to do whatever I can to help us win a football game."

He came close Sunday. Barnes said the Raiders are plenty confident with Jennings playing a prominent role in the offense.

"He may not have the household name of an Adrian Peterson or Darren, but he runs hard like them," Barnes said. "I'll play with that guy any day of the week."

Newcomer Jennings takes sleep seriously

By Josh Dubow August 14, 2013

NAPA – Rashad Jennings takes every precaution he can to keep his body in top shape necessary for an NFL running back.

He eats a gluten-free diet and sticks to organic foods. He stretches every night and has a regular routine of pilates, acupuncture, yoga and massage.

And when the long days at Oakland's training camp are over, instead of settling into a soft bed, the first-year Raider climbs into a hyperbaric oxygen chamber to sleep.

Jennings bought the oxygen chamber as a rookie instead of splurging for a car, thinking it would help keep him fresh and prolong his career.

He admits it "freaks" out some people at first, and the loud noise forced him into a single room in what he calls the "dungeon" of the team hotel at camp.

But Jennings is working on getting some converts, saying at least six teammates are waiting to try out the chamber next week.

"It's not an end-all be-all," Jennings said. "It's not like this is the biggest healer in the world type of thing, but it does heal you on a certain level. It speeds up the process. I love to practice, and I love to stay on the field. It keeps you healthy. Playing this game is important to me. The way I eat and take care of my body is pretty important."

The Raiders are counting on a healthy Jennings as the backup to Darren McFadden, who has never made it through any of his five NFL seasons without an injury.

Playing the role of a backup to a big-play back is something Jennings has plenty of experience doing. He served in that role behind Maurice Jones-Drew in Jacksonville to start his career.

"I tell people all the time there aren't any backups in this league," Jennings said. "The backups are at home. You got to prepare as the starter.

"It's too late to prepare when the opportunity presents itself. I'm a piece of a puzzle. When I'm called upon, I have to make sure I'm making my statement."

Jennings did a good job of that in the preseason opener Friday against Dallas, carrying nine times for 39 yards.

He broke loose for a 16-yard run on a read-option play with quarterback Terrelle Pryor and showed the ability to grind for tough yards, something the Raiders are looking for in McFadden's backup.

Jennings is working his way back from two disappointing seasons in Jacksonville. After averaging more than five yards a carry in each of his first two seasons, Jennings missed the 2011 season because of a knee injury.

He then struggled mightily last season, averaging 2.8 yards per carry and becoming the 10th back with at least 100 carries to average fewer than three yards since 2000.

"It was a lot of things," Jennings said. "Looking at film, I could've done better, but it's all in the past whatever happened. It's a fresh start as a Raider, and that's what I'm out here to capitalize on."

Jennings entered camp in a competition with sixth-round pick Latavius Murray to be McFadden's backup and seems in position to get that job because of his experience and reliability.

Murray also showed some good signs in the preseason opener, carrying eight times for 29 yards. But he has missed time throughout camp with injuries, to coach Dennis Allen's dismay.

"Being available and being accountable are two things that we have to make sure we're able to be," Allen said.

TAIWAN JONES

Taiwan Jones carving niche at 'gunner'By Paul Gutierrez
Oct. 16, 2013

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- Taiwan Jones, drafted to be a speedy change-of-pace back for Darren McFadden in 2011 before being converted to cornerback this offseason, has found a home on special teams.

And he's made being a gunner on the Raiders' punt-coverage teams somewhat fashionable.

"I think Taiwan Jones, if he's not the best special-teams player in the league, he's one of the best in the league," said Raiders coach Dennis Allen. "He's a difference-maker in all of our coverage units.

"The type of speed that he's got, his willingness to go down and create contact and make tackles ... those are the things that you have to have and I think he's done an outstanding job."

Besides disrupting punt returners, often while being double-teamed, Jones has also flashed his world-class speed. On a trick play against Washington, he took the direct snap from Jon Condo after the Raiders shifted into a formation out of a punt with Jacoby Ford just off center. Jones then sped off for a 19-yard gain and a first down.

And, yes, while there was satisfaction in bursting down the left sideline on that play, his main job description is to blow up punt returns. And the way he's been playing the position of late -- he has five tackles on the season, including two at Kansas City last weekend -- he is getting satisfaction out of it.

"I have a lot of pleasure," he said. "I'm having fun out there. Being a gunner, it's one of those positions where it's not too much scheming; it's just man on man, mano y mano out there, and whoever has the most effort out there is going to win. That's one thing I enjoy."

Sunday, he limited Dexter McCluster to a 1-yard punt return off a Marquette King 50-yard punt in the third quarter before stopping McCluster for a 7-yard gain on a 51-yard King punt in the fourth.

"You've got to watch film," Jones said. "You've got to learn other team's tendencies, key into some of the clues they give you and use them to your advantage."

Jones said his goal is to make the Pro Bowl as a special-teamer.

"I'm shooting to be the best at what I'm doing right now," he said.

Allen obviously believes Jones is coming through on that promise.

"It means a lot because when you're putting it out on the field every day," Jones said, "it's good to see your head coach notice that."

Jones is making it easy for Allen, and opponents, to notice.

SF CHRONICLE

Taiwan Jones having fun, making plays at corner back

By Vic Tafur Aug. 11, 2013

Taiwan Jones is trying to pull off something as cool and rare as his name – switching from running back to cornerback, in the NFL.

Putting the ball on the ground will no longer be seen as a liability.

Jones has made some plays at the Raiders' training camp and in Friday's preseason opener, and is having fun making the coaches see him a whole new light.

"I was just excited to still be on the roster," said Jones, who had fumbling issues at practice last season and couldn't get on the field even when starter Darren McFadden and backup Mike Goodson were injured.

"I was kind of upset I couldn't show everybody what kind of running back I could be but I think it's a good thing as far as my career, said Jones, who finishes with four career carries for 36 yards. "It's going pretty good, and I am having fun."

The 2011 fourth-round pick has the size (6-foot, 194 pounds) and speed (4.33 40-yard dash) to pull this off.

"He's got that physical ability to play the game," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "There are still a lot of things that we have to get cleaned up. Just understating how to play the cornerback position from alignments, assignments and stuff like that.

"He's pretty solid on his assignments, but they're still just some details to the position that we have to continue to work with him on."

Allen said backup cornerback Chimdi Chekwa has also improved at what is a very crowded position. Veterans Tracy Porter and Mike Jenkins are penciled in as the starters, with first-round pick D.J. Hayden still not being cleared for contact after abdomen surgery. And Joselio Hanson and Phillip Adams are back from last season.

But Jones has a special gift that those guys don't have.

"Taiwan is exceptional on special teams," Allen said. "You watch the first kickoff of the game (Friday), and he goes down there and he's on the 10-yard line when the returner is just starting to return the ball, so that's something that you can't discount."

Jones, who missed Sunday's practice with a minor injury, showed his good pursuit skills on special teams last season, and it's not just natural instincts.

The Antioch native was given a scholarship to Eastern Washington to play cornerback, and didn't make the switch to running back until his sophomore season. Jones rushed for 1,742 yards to lead the Eagles to the NCAA FCS national championship his junior year, and then turned pro.

"A lot of my college coaches, they thought once I made it to the NFL that I would be converted to a corner," Jones said. "So, that's kind of my mindset and what I thought also. So, when I got drafted as running back, it came to me somewhat as a surprise."

He has had a handful of interceptions at camp, as he reacts well and has exceptional closing speed. The rest is getting used to what receivers are trying to do, and that comes from watching film and getting reps in practice.

"I am learning something new every day," Jones said. "I still have to work on my leverage and getting my eyes in the right places." Off the field, Jones has always looked at things from a positive perspective, even during a tough 2012 season.

"When you make your work fun, you can do a lot of great things," he said.

Oakland Raiders' McFadden happy to be running downhill again

By Jerry McDonald Jul. 26, 2013

NAPA -- Darren McFadden took a handoff from Matt Flynn on Friday and with no hesitation hit a sliver of air between guard Lucas Nix and center Stefen Wisniewski at nearly full speed.

No defender laid a hand on McFadden until he was at least three yards downfield -- which is roughly what he averaged per carry in 2012 in a zone scheme ill-suited to his nature as a runner.

It was a simple running play in a non-padded practice on the first day of training camp, but illustrated nicely what McFadden does best. The zone scheme, which called on McFadden to move laterally before cutting back against the grain, helped drop his yards per carry to a careerlow 3.3 yards.

"I love a downhill scheme, so I'm very confident about it," McFadden said. " I'll just be able to get out there and go downhill. That's one of my strong points.

For all the changes on the Oakland roster, the one constant was McFadden. Both coach Dennis Allen and general manager Reggie McKenzie went out of their way to talk him up in the offseason.

Allen's hiring of line coach Tony Sparano and offensive coordinator Greg Olson came in part because both had the right answer in terms of getting McFadden back to the form he displayed in 2010 and 2011 when Hue Jackson designed the offense and called the plays.

It was Jackson who put in McFadden's favorite gap and power runs at the expense of the zone scheme preferred by Tom Cable. McFadden averaged 5.2 and 5.4 yards per carry in 20 games over those two seasons with 11 rushing touchdowns.

Asked what it feels like to have coaches who will cater to his talents, McFadden said, "It feels great. I feel like I'm a downhill runner and that's something the coaches see also. By getting us in a gap scheme offense, they feel that suits me a lot more."

Allen liked what he saw of the re-tooled running game on the first day of practice.

"We ran the football well, the offensive line did a nice job, the backs did an excellent job of being able to run the football," Allen said. "That's something we're going to have to be able to do. Darren's one of our most explosive players and we've got to put him in position so that he can have success."

Motivated McFadden 'owes Raiders fantastic season'

By Scott Bair September 5, 2013

Darren McFadden hears you talking.

The Raiders feature running back knows you call him injury prone. He knows you think his best football is behind him.

That's okay. Everyone's entitled to an opinion. It won't change the way he plays football.

He takes the negativity, bottles it up and turns it into fuel.

"I feel I've shown glimpses of what I can do," McFadden said, "but I still think my best football is ahead of me."

McFadden has reason to believe a career year is upon him. He's in the best shape of his life. He's working in a downhill, gap-control running scheme that suits his rushing style.

It's tailor-made for McFadden, a fact not lost on the former first-round pick.

"The organization has shown tremendous faith in me, and I'm very grateful for that," McFadden said. "I feel like it shows real faith in me and in this offense as a whole. They clearly have confidence in my ability and what I can do in a downhill running scheme.

I'm so excited to be able to run in this type of offense again. I feel like I owe the Raiders a fantastic season."

McFadden can only do that by staying healthy. He's been hurt in each professional season, making durability the biggest knock on this undeniable talent.

McFadden doesn't like being called injury prone. Hates it in fact. But he doesn't let it psyche him out.

"I just let it roll off my back," McFadden said. "But, at the same time, you can't help but think about it. I don't want to be known or thought of as injury prone, but I have gotten hurt. It's not going to change how I play the game. If I get hurt, then I get hurt. Those things happen. I'm going to play hard."

McFadden is also going to play fast. He has the speed of a less weathered back, the strength of a short-yardage back and the agility of a big-play maker.

Fans haven't seen that because McFadden has been extremely limited during a preseason where health is the only concern. Coaches have.

"I see the speed, I see that from Darren McFadden," Raiders offensive coordinator Greg Olson said. "We haven't gotten into any real live performance where he's going to go in an carry it 20 times a game but I don't see wear and tear on this running back, I don't see a decline in speed.

"We'll get a chance to see when the regular season gets going but we still believe that we have a real fine running back."

McFadden didn't live up to that billing last season. He averaged a career-worst 3.3 yards per carry and scored just three touchdowns. Then-coordinator Greg Kanpp's zone-blocking became the scapegoat for such a performance, especially after McFadden averaged 5.3 yards per carry in the two previous seasons.

The scheme was a source of aggravation for McFadden and the offense. He admits the season wore on his psyche.

McFadden enters this season with renewed optimism about this team.

"I think we're being underestimated," McFadden said. "We're better than most people think. I think we'll win some games and prove some of our doubters wrong."

McFadden is speaking for the Raiders and himself. He considers this the most important season of his career. A second straight bomb will kill his street cred and his earning power.

He enters a contract year looking for one more big payday. He prefers his checks signed by a Davis. If he doesn't perform, that won't happen. If he doesn't perform well, a long-term contract is out of the cards, maybe forever.

"It's going to enhance your motivation. How could it not?" McFadden said. "It's in the back of your head, but I'm still focused on football. I know that, if I take care of business on the field, everything else will fall in line."

This training camp hasn't lined up perfectly. His best blocker, left tackle Jared Veldheer, is lost until midseason. The interior line is in flux and Menelik Watson is playing out of position. Despite a radical change in scheme, the stars haven't aligned.

Having quarterback Terrelle Pryor should take some pressure off McFadden and the run game, but the world still knows No. 20 is gettin' the rock. While Pryor steals headlines, McFadden's the real marquee player. Without him, the offense can't survive.

McFadden is ready, willing and able to shoulder such responsibility.

"I feel as good as I ever have," McFadden said. "I'm 26 years old, but I still feel young. I feel like it shows when I'm on the field. I can still go out and fly around and make big plays. I'm always going to give my team maximum effort. I go all out on every play."

MATT McGLOIN

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP (OAKLAND TRIBUNE, CC TIMES, SI MERCURY NEWS)

Raiders' Matt McGloin helped Penn State program rally

By Jerry McDonald Nov. 21, 2013

ALAMEDA -- In the wake of Penn State's Jerry Sandusky scandal, the football program had been put through the wringer: scholarship and financial penalties, bowl game bans, transfers galore. No one gave the once-storied Nittany Lions any chance for success.

In other words, it was a situation made for Raiders rookie quarterback Matt McGloin.

"It played right into his underdog story," said Penn State tackle Eric Shrive, a college and high school teammate of McGloin's in Scranton, Pa. "We knew we were in a tough situation, but we weren't going to be anybody's charity case.

"People didn't think we were any good, and Matt was going out there to prove he was the best quarterback in the Big Ten."

McGloin led the Nittany Lions to an 8-4 record under coach Bill O'Brien to help keep the program afloat.

Tennessee Titans coach Mike Munchak, a Penn State alum raised in Scranton, praised McGloin in a conference call for "being a big part in holding that place together in one of the biggest years in Penn State history."

A year later, McGloin is attempting to resuscitate the fortunes in Oakland with a franchise on its 15th starting quarterback since 2004.

In leading the Raiders to a 28-23 win over Houston, and throwing three touchdown passes in his starting debut, McGloin surprised just about everybody except those who have witnessed his magic before in Scranton or State College, Pa.

The quarterback who wasn't invited to the NFL scouting combine and not selected in the draft gets another shot Sunday when the Raiders (4-6) face the Titans (4-6) at O.co Coliseum in a battle between two teams on the outer fringe of the wild-card race.

"The mindset I've always had is that I never took a back seat to anybody," McGloin said. "I really don't look at who is ahead of me on the depth chart or behind me. I figure each day is a chance to get better, improve as a leader. Now that I'm starting, that hasn't changed."

McGloin beat out an incumbent quarterback as a sophomore at West Scranton High, beating a Crestwood team with a 25-game win streak in his varsity debut. He would go on to win two district championships. He was also the star of the baseball and basketball teams, serving as a pitcher, infielder and point guard.

"He was the guy throwing the touchdown pass, making the big shot or hitting the home run, and his attitude was always the same," Shrive said. "He had that chip on his shoulder where he'd think, "You don't think I'm good enough? Then just watch.' "

At 6-foot-1, McGloin was considered a Division I-AA prospect at best and was under the radar in part because of Raiders teammate Terrelle Pryor, who was the nation's top recruit and played in the same state at Jeannette High.

While Penn State awaited word on Pryor (who eventually went to Ohio State), McGloin accepted an invitation as a preferred walk-on.

McGloin's father, Paul McGloin, asked Matt what he would do if Pryor came to Penn State.

"He said, 'I'd wish him luck,' " Paul McGloin Sr. said, "then I'll go out there and show people what I can do.' "

Other more decorated quarterbacks came and went, but it was McGloin who ended up a two-year starter, completing 57.4 percent of his passes for 6,390 yards and 46 touchdowns.

McGloin's performance against Houston enhanced his legend in Scranton, a blue collar community that supports its own with a fervor bordering on fanatical.

When Scranton native Gerry McNamara played basketball at Syracuse, it took 50 buses to bring the town's well-wishers to the Carrier Dome for his senior night in 2006. Two of the kids on the bus were Shrive and McGloin, later high school and college teammates.

Paul and Cathy McGloin have owned and operated a Main Street Floral shop in Scranton for 34 years. All week, people have honked, waved and come in to the shop to talk about Matt.

During a meal at a diner on Mike Munchak Way in Scranton, Cathy McGloin said in a phone interview the community reaction has been overwhelming.

"It's been crazy," Cathy McGloin said. "People stop us in church and the grocery store. Everybody is waving, beeping the horn. Two nice people just stopped to say congratulations to my son. This is what Scranton's all about."

The McGloins opened their doors to as many friends as they could cram into their house to watch the Raiders-Texans game on NFL Ticket.

"Everyone was screaming, kissing, giving high-fives, jumping up and down," Cathy McGloin said.

Paul McGloin said Matt owes much of his competitive nature to his older brothers, Paul Jr. and John. Each brother is separated by seven years, with Paul Jr. old enough at 14 to change his baby brother's diapers when Matt was born.

The brothers never took it easy on Matt.

"My mother used to yell at us all the time, 'Can't you let him win just once?' " John McGloin said. "We'd say, 'Absolutely not. He's never going to learn if you think that way.' "

Said Paul McGloin Jr.: "I used to say he was competitive to a fault. If I beat him in basketball, he wouldn't talk to me for a few hours."

The McGloin brothers still send Matt near-daily reminders about dedication and focus.

"He's to the point now where he'll sass back and answer, "Hey, I'm working! You don't need to tell me that,' "John McGloin said.

Paul McGloin Jr., a scout for the New York Yankees, has talked often with Matt about his mental approach and said, "I don't think he steps back and looks at the magnitude of the situation and what it means."

Raiders center Stefen Wisniewski played with McGloin for three years at Penn State and said he's the same guy in an NFL huddle as he was in college.

"He was always so confident -- so confident we joked about how confident he was," Wisniewski said. "That's the way he handles himself. Players love him. He's everything you want in a quarterback."

McKenzie: 'I like being the underdog'

By Scott Bair Jul. 26, 2013

NAPA - Reggie McKenzie hears all.

The general manager knows his Raiders are ranked among the NFL's worst. He's heard grumblings about a lack of talent and that he's restructuring this franchise at a snail's pace. He's aware this season is supposed to go so poorly that McKenzie might have the first pick in next year's draft.

McKenzie knows what is being said, and respectfully disagrees with all of it.

His message during Friday's meeting with the media was a simple one: Go ahead. Count us down and out.

"I like being the underdog," McKenzie said. "We have our own expectations here, and I believe we'll reach them."

McKenzie didn't set a bar for wins or guaranteed success, yet he believes his Raiders are better in Phase Two of his master plan.

The first step was hiring a new coach in Dennis Allen last year. Since then he's tried to stock this roster with a hand tied behind his back, waiting for the team to escape salary-cap hell. In such a position, slow and steady is the only way to win a race.

McKenize overhauled the roster with low-profile acquisitions, especially on a defense that should have nine new starters, but believes this team is much better than last year's group.

"Without a doubt," McKenzie said. "That's what comes in time. When you get things going the way you want, good things happen. When you get your coach and you start adding the right players, things start to mesh together."

He believes this group will bond together during camp and emerge a more competitive team despite so many new faces.

"I'm not curious about this group, I'm eager," McKenzie said. "I'm eager and excited to see how they play during the regular season."

McKenzie thinks fans will see the improvement he sees, and believes his Raiders are on the verge of being a good football team.

"We'll see," he said. "It's not too far (away).

DENARIUS MOORE

BAY AREA NEWS GOUP (OAKLAND TRIBUNE, CC TIMES, SI MERCURY NEWS)

Oakland Raiders receiver Denarius Moore finally beginning to emergeBy Jerry McDonald
Oct.11, 2013

ALAMEDA -- Raiders receiver Denarius Moore hadn't seen anything like it since his days as a youth in Tatum, Texas.

He worked his way to the back of the end zone, saw quarterback Terrelle Pryor rolling to his right, then could scarcely believe his eyes as Pryor gave him a nod indicating he wanted Moore to drift to his right.

The result was a 2-yard touchdown pass in a victory over the San Diego Chargers last week.

"Last time I did that was playing in my backyard," Moore said this week.

In his third year out of Tennessee, Moore might be on the verge of producing in the NFL as he did in his backyard. He has 15 receptions for 274 yards and two touchdowns in his past three games, the most productive hree-game stretch of his career.

"It all comes back to just playing football, something we've done since we were 6 years old," Moore said.

When the Raiders visit the Kansas City Chiefs on Sunday, Moore will face one of the NFL's top secondaries, with three outstanding cornerbacks in Brandon Flowers, Sean Smith and Marcus Cooper.

"Seems like every game they're right there with the wide receivers, and they put themselves in the running game, too, coming up and making tackles," Moore said.

Toward that end, Raiders wide receivers and defensive backs were given boxing gloves urging them to win one-on-one battles this week with the following message taped to their locker:

"Will you fight on the line of scrimmage this week?"

Getting Moore to fight with a passion to match his ability has been something coaches have been working on since he arrived.

"He can be as good as he wants to be," former Raiders quarterback Carson Palmer said last season.

In late August, offensive coordinator Greg Olson, when talking about Moore's maturity, said he needed to be more of a self-starter, although he later said he was talking about the offense as a whole.

Moore has been the Raiders' best playmaking receiver since he set foot in training camp as a fifth-round draft pick. In 33 games and 29 starts, Moore has 104 receptions for 1,676 yards and 15 touchdowns.

Yet the M.O. for the player whom teammates call "D-Moe" has a propensity to be almost invisible for stretches, with the occasional dropped pass or blown route.

In his senior season at Tennessee, Moore was the only player among NCAA Division I programs to have two games with 200 yards receiving, yet he didn't reach 1,000 yards for the season.

In a league where 1,000-yard seasons by receivers are routine -- there were 20 in the NFL last season -- the Raiders haven't had one since Randy Moss had 1,005 in 2005.

Moore represents the best hope for the Raiders to break that spell, provided he avoids the dry spells.

At a position where bravado is commonplace and requests for the ball are routine, Moore is more introverted by nature.

Getting him to understand his ability and attack not only the ball but also the way he conducts his business has been a goal of the coaching staff.

"The big thing is just having the confidence to go out and play, and when the opportunities come your way, make the play when you have the opportunity,"

Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "He's done a better job of that in the last three weeks. Hopefully he'll continue to grow."

SIO MOORE

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE (SB NATION.COM)

Life lessons have only strengthened Sio Moore

By Marcus Allen Krause July 31, 2013

Sio Moore was given a second chance at life. Not everyone does, just look at yesterdays tragedy for an example of two athletes that weren't granted that luxery. Texas A&M redshirt freshman Polo Manukainiu and Utah incoming freshman recruit Gaius "Keio" Vaenuku lost their lives in a car crash yesterday. Sadly all we can do at moments like this is let them truly remind us of how lucky we are to be alive.

Sio doesn't need the reminder even if some of us do forget how lucky we are from time to time. No, Sio Moore already lives his life knowing how close it was to being taken away. He has used his near death experience as motivation, always remembering how just a shake of his head could have taken his life.

Moore's family is originally from Liberia, a country torn by a Civil War that got so bad that his parents migrated to the US in 1990. Ironically they took him from a true war zone in Liberia, to one that he put himself squarely in the middle of by associating with the wrong crowd.

Sio knows now that the people he was with were not who he belonged around. He was risking himself by being in the wrong places at the wrong times and it took a near death experience to awaken his inner warrior. He was just 14 and at a party that had just been shutdown. It was here where he had his moment of change. It came from a gunman firing at the back of his head as he fled for his life.

"I wasn't hanging around the right people," Moore told New Haven Register columnist Chip Malafronte "I was getting myself into situations I shouldn't have been in. It took a near-death event for me to realize the path I was going down was the wrong one."

"A bullet went right by my right ear and hit a car next to me," Moore said. "That haunted me for a good while. I kept thinking about it. What if I turned around at the wrong time? That bullet would have hit me in the head."

After that day Sio stopped hanging out with that crowd, he realized he must live better, and he uprooted himself on his own to make his desire for a better life a reality. He picked up the phone and he called his sister Tiplah Broadnax who is 19 years his senior and her husband Grady. He asked them if he could live with them, and then Sio promptly moved many miles away from where that speeding bullet almost took his life.

Our own Levi Damien recently interviewed Sio and he asked about that moment. It's easy to see what we all like so much about Moore when you read his response.

"Yeah, man. 100 percent. My life could have been changed multiple times. That was only once. I had Civil War broken out in 1990, I would have never came to the U.S. There are so many things that I'm thankful for, blessings and things around me."

Though the attempt at his life was plenty enough of a life changing event to change Sio deep within his soul, it would still not be all that he would face. Even after he made his way out of the life he was living and onto Connecticut University's football roster the fates would still test him more.

The new test would come at the expense of another young man who was cut down mercilessly and unjustly, though this was no accident like what took the lives of Polo and Keio. The test would come at the expense of a teammate, a leader of the Husky defense, and a friend who was succeeding at life in a way few are lucky enough to experience. The test would come at the expense of UConn DB Jasper Howard, who was stabbed to death in a senseless crime that happened on campus in 2009.

Now Sio Moore lives life to the absolute fullest. He carries a reminder of his friend Jasper with him everywhere, he has a tattoo in memory of him across his mid-section in the same area that Howard was stabbed in. It's another reminder of the pain he has gone through that has strengthened his resolve, the same as another tattoo that depicts his life without his father has.

Though those tattoos remind him of the pain he felt, there is also hope and love deeply involved in them. The hope in the tattoo of Jasper is the hope of honoring his lost friend, the hope of living his life in a way that would make Jasper proud. It's a reminder to never again take his life for granted, which is a hope that we could all use instilled in us.

The tattoo about his father has a man and a boy standing next to each other with a space between their reached out hands, which Sio says is to symbolize his non-relationship with his own dad. The hope is there though still because he plans on uniting the hands the day he has a child. The tattoo is there to remind himself to be a better father than the one he had, which is a hope that many people understand more than words can express.

Seeing the strength of Sio's commitment to life is what so many of us are drawn to. We don't know yet if he will be able to play in the NFL, but he gives every reason there is to believe he can. He is the change we need in this franchise and the hope we all have for the Raiders future. It's a lot of pressure but it feels right to put it on Moore's shoulders. After all, his life has shown that he is already a man that refuses to break.

GREG OLSON

SILVER AND BLACK PRIDE (SBNATION.COM)

Raiders OC Greg Olson is a man of his word By Marcus Allen Krause Aug. 10, 2013

The result of the game yesterday against the Dallas Cowboys does not matter, how the players played does. There were a lot of miscues of course since there always are at this time of year but the overall experience was a good one. The thing that was most enjoyable will differ from person to person, but it's fair to say that the improved offensive playcalling was among the top nominees.

The difference was amazing between new Offensive Coordinator Greg Olson's offense and last year's system under former OC Greg Knapp. There felt like so much more potential for a big play in Olson's offense, especially considering this was just the first preseason game. The first game is always "vanilla" in the playcalling and is focused more about the basic parts of the available playbook. It will only get more exciting as we progress to the regular season.

What was really exciting to see was how different the offenses built for QB's Matt Flynn and Terrelle Pryor were from each other. It verifies two things for us: One is that even if Flynn is the starter there will be plays for Pryor, and two is that Olson really does plan his offense around his players.

It proves that Olson really plans around his players because he was willing to make two different playbooks based off Flynn or Pryor playing. Most coaches would've had a fair amount of plays intigrated into the playbook for each quarterback but this was beyond that. The offense was completely different when Pryor came in and was absolutely made for him. The bunched WR sets that Matt was using were gone and the Pistol offense was in with exciting results.

Going that drastic with his changes in playcalling for Pryor also is what confirms that Terrelle will definitely see the field in 2013 even if it's not as the starter or an injury replacement. Greg Olson would not have been willing to spend so much time with such a large amount of plays if he didn't plan on using them for sure this season. He built that offense to utilize his weapons so expect to see Pryor in the regular season without a doubt.

The drastic difference between the first quarter and the 2nd quarter offenses falls directly in line with what Greg Olson told us back in February.

"Those days (holding onto the same players for long periods of time) are somewhat over. So you've got to be able to be flexible and be able to adapt your system to the personnel that you have on that team on any given year. So, our job as a coaching staff will be to identify the skill set of the players, who are our best players, what do they do best, and how can we put them in position to be successful and do the things that they do best."

He said he plans around his players abilities and he backed those words up last night. It was a night and day difference between the plays for Flynn and Pryor but both were effective. The skillset of players like Marcel Reece, Darren McFadden, and Pryor were ignored last year but they won't be this year. That can only help this team get better.

Olson also said earlier this year that he planned on having plays this preseason specifically for Terrelle and he did. He is backing up his words here too with his actions which is a pleasent surprise to what was the recent norm in Oakland.

"We don't really quite yet know what Terrelle Pryor can do at this level but we have a pretty good feeling for what he is athletically, so there will be packages for both of them (speaking of Carson Palmer at the time) and we'll allow them to compete and we'll just be ready in either direction..."

Yep, he definitely backed that quote up too. We have all heard enough talk and now want to see the actions instead. Olson's grand opening was action packed, hopefully we will be able to say that about his tenure in Oakland in general.

TERRELLE PRYOR

For Pryor, challenge of being first-time starter extends beyond field

By Jim Trotter Nov. 14, 2013

It's midday of an October Friday, and with the Raiders in their bye week after losing four of their first six games, many players have left town to recharge and regroup. Quarterback Terrelle Pryor isn't among them. He's spent this morning at the team's training facility in Alameda, Calif., devouring digital cut-ups for things to work on, most notably not drifting in the pocket when taking snaps from shotgun formations.

Despite showing promise over the first half of the season -- his 58.9 completion percentage tops that of Andrew Luck, Tom Brady and Eli Manning, for instance, and his 63 rushing yards per game lead all quarterbacks -- he has been sloppy as times, especially in the previous Sunday's 24-7 loss at Kansas City. So he grabs a football and corrals quarterbacks coach John DeFillipo and prepares to head out back to an empty practice field, only to receive word from GM Reggie McKenzie that the impromptu session was impermissible because it would violate the collective bargaining agreement, which requires players to have four consecutive off days during the bye week.

Undeterred, Pryor tucks the ball and relocates to an off-site field where he practices his drops until his quads burn and sweat beads roll down his face. Then he slides into his sleek black Mercedes coupe and heads to his townhouse at the end of a cul-de-sac in the Oakland Hills. The view is spectacular. From the living room he can see the Bay Bridge to the right, and past it, San Francisco, partially hidden by a low marine layer. In the valley below sits antiquated O.co Coliseum, where he plays home games and two weeks prior led a stunning late-night upset of the Chargers, in which he completed 18-of- 23 passes for 221 yards, two scores and a 135.7 passer rating.

But football is the last thing on this 24-year-old's mind right now; his body is tired, his head sleepy. He has put in more practice hours and taken more game snaps in the first six weeks of 2013 than he did in his first two years combined, when he was a backup. He wants to nap as he unfolds his 6-foot-4, 233-pound frame over a white leather chair, but he's unable to do so because punter Marquette King, a close friend, and marketing manager Tyler Acevedos are visiting. A national media outlet also is calling repeatedly in hopes of setting up a photo shoot the next day, and two other journalists from another national magazine are waiting to conduct a previously scheduled interview.

Such are the blessings and curses of being a starting quarterback in the NFL. For Pryor, who entered the league as a third-round supplemental draft choice in 2011, his time was basically his own his first two seasons. He was third on the depth chart, which meant he was basically invisible to coaches, whose time was spent preparing the starter and, to a lesser extent, the backup each week. But that changed before the season opener, when Pryor beat out Matt Flynn for the starting job. After doing only a handful of interviews each of his first two seasons, he received 50-75 requests in the first week he was formally named the starter. His life has not been the same since.

Over the first eight weeks of the season Pryor provided SI with a behind-the-scenes glimpse of what young quarterbacks face when becoming a full-time starter for the first time. Talents such as Andrew Luck, Robert Griffin III and Russell Wilson made it look easy last year, when they led their clubs to the playoffs as rookies. But the challenges are significant. The most notable for Pryor were learning to manage his time and outsiders' expectations; establishing himself as a leader; and dealing with adversity.

If Pryor didn't realize the responsibility that comes with being the face of a franchise beforehand, he did early in the season when a fan approached him. Like most who run into the former Ohio State star around town, the fan just wanted to say hello and offer a few words of encouragement. But this time was different because the fan became overly emotional. Tears ran down his face as he thanked Pryor for bringing hope to a franchise that has not had a winning season since 2002. Pryor didn't know how to respond. This was deeper than football. He knew the pain of losing a game, but seeing someone who had lost hope -- and now rediscovered it -- was a sobering lesson that he was accountable not only to his teammates and coaches, but also a fan base starved for success.

Pryor smiled and hugged the fan. Football players often are erroneously viewed as brutes who lack compassion, but the exchange clearly resonated with Pryor. Since leaving Ohio State a year early after being suspended for receiving improper benefits, he has become more spiritual and appreciative of friends and supporters. It's common for him to tell friends to text him when they get home so he knows that they've arrived safely. He is similarly concerned when it comes to his team, which he's learned leads to physical and mental fatigue.

That wasn't an issue his first two seasons, when he was the forgotten man as the No. 3 QB. He knew there was virtually no chance of playing on Sundays, so he would arrive at the Raiders' headquarters shortly before the first meeting and head home almost immediately after the last one. He worked hard in between, but when the work day was over he often was home by 3:30 or 4 p.m., stretched out on the couch, watching a movie or fiddling with a Madden controller. "I figured, 'Hey, if they don't want me to play ...'" said Pryor, who now can be found at the facility from 5:30 a.m. to 8:30 p.m.

The "office" has become a sanctuary for Pryor, who has become a target since moving into the starting lineup. People want to greet him, take a picture, get an autograph. Now, if he's in the mood for relative privacy, for a dinner without interruption, as he was three nights before a Week 4 game against Washington, he'll drive 20 miles east, through the Caldecott Tunnel, to the less intrusive suburb of Walnut Creek. But even there he's not entirely safe. His waiter at an upscale steak house gets tongue-tied discussing the specials because, he says, he's a huge Raiders fan; his mom even worked at a popular sports bar frequented by Raiders fans.

The reality is that there's no place for Pryor to hide, not even in his own locker room. Quarterbacks face more scrutiny than any other player. He's the person who sets the tone for the team, and how he handles a difficult situation --a loss, an injury, a locker room issue -- could have a ripple effect. If he is lackadaisical in his approach, others might be as well. If he takes short cuts, they might too.

That lesson was driven home early this season after Pryor was late for an offensive meeting because, well, he needed a few extra minutes in the bathroom. Irritated by this, offensive coordinator Greg Olson let him have it. Olson, who is liked and respected by his players, demands accountability from them. In this instance he reminded Pryor that everything he does has consequences, good or bad. If the starting quarterback doesn't think it's important to be at a meeting on time, regardless of the reason, then why would someone else?

Now, Pryor says he's so aware of Olson's words that he hesitates to hit the head even when he has the urge.

In most organizational models, the quarterback sits at the top of the pyramid when it comes to players. He's the guy who sets the tone and holds others accountable. But if you're Pryor, and you've had only one start coming into this season, how do you lead when all you've done for two years is follow? How do you make your voice ring resoundingly when for two years your role was to be seen and not heard?

"There's a respect factor involved," Pryor said. "I like to challenge everyone on the team, not just the offense. But in the beginning I couldn't do that because -- imagine that you're [defensive end] Lamarr Houston and you're a solid player, been in the league four years, one of the team captains, you've got respect in the game, and I come up to you and say, 'Hey, pick up practice.' You would look at me sideways and smirk. But if you earn your way and you get a little respect and you go up to him and say that same thing, it's different. He'll respond."

But how best to do that? Working hard and making plays are definite requirements, but there's so much more to being someone who commands respect in and outside the locker room. Lamonte Winston, the Raiders' Director of Player Engagement, has been instrumental in helping to develop Pryor as a leader. He studies him during practice and games and meets with him weekly to discuss the necessary characteristics of being an effective leader. Their early talks dealt with being a professional and managing the media. Look reporters in the eyes, Winston said. Keep your head up. If you've got a baseball cap on, raise the bill so people can see your face, he said. He reminded Pryor that the media were there to see and hear him, so don't act like it's an imposition to be there. Engage them.

Later their conversations turned to things that happened in the game. Winston can recall an early-season matchup in which Pryor was upset about something that happened on the field and vented as he came to the sideline. The rant didn't stop there, however. Pryor kept venting for everyone to hear. The next week Winston informed him that the behavior would push away teammates instead of unifying them. Pryor took the words to heart and has since been much more conscious of his words and actions in the heat of the battle.

"Terrelle is a very conscientious young man," Winston said. "He wants to do well. He wants to be really, really good. The thing he had to learn was that when you sit in the captain's chair as a quarterback, all eyes are on you. There's a default look that we all have when you think nobody is looking at you, and he didn't know that he had that. I said, 'How you carry yourself is important.' It's an unwritten part of the job, but it's there. If you don't play well, you should have the same confidence and look and approach to folks as when you do play well. We have to assume our responsibility. People want to see the consistency in your personality. That's the development of a great leader. Once Terrelle understands something from a trusted source, he'll do whatever it takes to change."

Pryor now has earned the right to have his voice heard in practice and meetings. He has no reservations about speaking up or speaking out. In practice, when the tempo is lacking, or he sees an offensive lineman dragging and sucking air, he'll sprint downfield after a handoff even if the play doesn't call for him to do so. Then he'll hustle back to the huddle, showing his teammates that he's willing to do more than what's asked of him. That he's holding himself accountable.

"I try to pick guys up and make them play to a level of expectation," he said. "I feel like I have a connection with everyone on the team, that I can challenge them without them taking it wrong. I challenge them to be great."

After a Week 1 loss to Indianapolis, which concluded with him throwing an interception at the Colts' six-yard line in the final minute with the Raiders trailing by four, Pryor was more angry than disappointed. He felt he had lost the game not by throwing the pick, but by taking a 16-yard sack two plays earlier, on first-and-goal from the 8. When told afterward that Indy's coaches were effusive in their praise of him, he said: "Tell them they won't beat me again. ... They got lucky."

Cocky or confident, it was just the right tone for a team seeking a return to relevance. If he didn't believe it, why should his teammates?

Winston thinks it's working, and he points to the reception Pryor received two weeks later when, after sitting out Wednesday and Thursday practices while recovering from a concussion, he returned to the field on Friday. Offensive linemen stopped what they were doing and approached the QB. It was a sign that they not only cared about him, but they trusted him as the guy to lead Oakland back to respectability.

"It was so awesome that I brought it up to him later," Winston said. "I wanted him to understand what had happened. That was a huge moment. When nobody was looking, when it was just him and his offensive line, there was that bonding moment. How great was that?"

It's a harsh reality of the NFL: First-rounders and high-price free agents traditionally get more time to work through their struggles because their teams have made significant investments in them. But when you're someone like Pryor, a third- round supplemental pick who early on had the stigma of the Ohio State scandal attached to his back, your opportunities aren't usually as plentiful. A few bad performances, an injury and -- who knows?

Pryor was reminded of this on the evening of Oct. 5, while communicating with fans on Instagram. He had played reasonably well in the Raiders' first three games -- a close loss to Indy, a win over Jacksonville and a loss at high-powered Denver -- but now fans were asking him about the Raiders' reported interest in QB Josh Freeman, who had been released by Tampa Bay two days earlier. Pryor was blind-sided.

"When I heard about it, I'm like, 'Geez, I haven't played terribly,' " Pryor said the following night after an impressive showing in the win over San Diego. "The two losses -- Indianapolis and Denver, are two of the top teams in the league. I was thinking, Maybe they [the fans] don't like me."

Pryor smiled as he said it, but McKenzie, who was not with the team when Pryor was drafted, wasn't joking when he said after the San Diego victory that his job is to assemble the best 53-man roster possible, then let players compete for playing time. In the Raiders' eyes, Pryor remains raw, particularly as a passer. That's not surprising considering he averaged just 159 pass attempts over his three seasons at Ohio State. Pryor's strength always has been his dynamic running ability, and the hope in Oakland is that he will one day complement that with an improved passing game.

In the meantime, they remain non-committal on him longterm (he's in Year 3 of a four-year rookie deal). They need to see more plays like this one against the Chargers: Midway through the fourth quarter, San Diego had cut Oakland's 24-3 lead to a touchdown. The Chargers had momentum and the Raiders faced 3rd-and-14 at their own 41; a defensive stop would've given San Diego great field position for a potential tying score. Instead, Pryor eluded a would-be sack in the pocket, sprinted to his right and lasered a 19-yard completion to Brice Butler. Four plays later, Sebastian Janikowski kicked a 50-yard field goal for a comfortable two-score lead.

Still, it's games like the following week's loss at Kansas City that give Oakland pause. There, Pryor was sacked nine times and threw three interceptions, one more than he accumulated in his first four games combined. The QB easily could've pointed to his third-string center and left tackle or to his reserve right/left guard, but Pryor put the performance on his own shoulders. He missed protection calls at times and forced plays at others.

"We were down 14-7 and we were getting first downs, but every time we got near the 50 we had to punt," he said. "Their quarterback, Alex Smith, was managing the game better than me, checking down and moving the chains. So, I was like, I've got to make something happen. I've got to make something happen. I've got guys who look up to me as a leader, and they're saying they need me to make a play. I got caught up in that trap and tried to do more than I should have."

Raiders coach Dennis Allen has said on multiple occasions that one of the things he likes about Pryor is his ability to learn from his mistakes, and the first-year starter's words suggest the coach is on to something. "I truly believe [we were] meant to run into Kansas City this early so I could learn and understand situations," Pryor said. "Managing the game is going to come up at important times. I don't know when or where, but I know it will be important."

The words proved prophetic following the bye, when the Raiders held off the Steelers after building a 21-3 lead. But the past two weeks have involved more learning and more growing pains, first a 49-20 loss to the Eagles and a 24-20 defeat against the Giants. Pryor struggled against Philadelphia and failed to finish the game because of a knee injury. It wasn't the first time he had dealt with adversity, and it won't be the last. (Pryor faces another challenge this week as the knee injury suffered against the Eagles continues to plague him.) The unanswered question is, how will he handle it? Before finally taking a nap during the bye week, he addressed the ups and downs of being a young starting quarterback as follows:

"I'm enjoying the process of getting better," he said. "I know I'm not the greatest, but I kind of amuse myself in my mind by acting like I am. That's how you've got to be. That's the first step to achieving your goal. There are so many things you have to deal with as a young quarterback that if you don't believe in yourself, who will?

Terrelle Pryor living for the now

By Paul Gutierrez Oct. 3, 2013

ALAMEDA, Calif. -- From Bobby Layne to Fran Tarkenton to Jim Zorn to Randall Cunningham to Michael Vick, the fear for running quarterbacks was that they unnecessarily put themselves in harm's way.

Try telling that to this new breed of zone-read-option quarterbacks, such as Cam Newton, Robert Griffin III, Russell Wilson, Colin Kaepernick and, yes, even Terrelle Pryor.

By the time Pryor takes the field Sunday night under the lights of the O.co Coliseum for the Oakland Raiders, it will have been 13 days since he last took a hard hit. The concussion-causing helmet-to-helmet blow from Denver linebacker Wesley Woodyard came on a quarterback draw and blitz and kept Pryor on the sideline for last weekend's winnable game against Washington, a game Oakland lost 24-14.

So now, as he prepares to start against the San Diego Chargers, might the Raiders dial back some of Pryor's designed runs, knowing what happened the last time he ran the ball?

"If you start trying to limit the things that he does, I think you decrease his effectiveness," said Raiders coach Dennis Allen. "You have to let him be the quarterback that he is and let him make plays."

Pryor, despite missing a series in Denver and the entire Washington game, is still the Raiders' second-leading rusher, with 198 yards on 26 carries.

With Darren McFadden missing practice Wednesday with his strained right hamstring, the Chargers might be able to key more on Pryor as a running threat. Still, Pryor said he would not be playing if he did not feel ready.

"I believe I'm 100 percent right now. I feel normal," said Pryor, who was medically cleared to play against Washington but was held out by the Raiders as a precaution. He is showing no symptoms now and will start against the Chargers.

"Whatever is going to happen is going to happen," he said. "That's how I live for now. I just try to make the right decisions and the smart decisions and be a smart person and player. Obviously, if there's three guys coming cramming down on me, I don't want to challenge all three of those guys, so get down. Just be myself and play football. That's how I have to play."

LOS ANGELES TIMES

Raiders' Terrelle Pryor rebuilds his image as a quarterback

By Sam Farmer Aug. 11, 2013

NAPA, Calif. — Terrelle Pryor, the last draft pick made by Oakland Raiders owner Al Davis, can now make a remarkable admission for an NFL quarterback.

Until this year, he didn't really know how to throw a football.

That may be a little extreme. He thought he knew how to throw, and he could pick up a ball and wing it. But his body mechanics were so inefficient and his tosses were so scattershot, he said, he had no future in the pros.

"I look back on last year, and I just knew I wasn't ready," said Pryor, 23, entering his third NFL season and now an intriguing figure in the Raiders' quarterback mix, probably as a change-of-speed option to presumed starter Matt Flynn.

Determined to rebuild his motion, Pryor worked extensively with throwing specialist Tom House at USC this off-season, developing new timing and "unlocking" his upper body to improve his accuracy. House works with an array of NFL players — along with college and Major League Baseball players — among them quarterbacks Tom Brady and Drew Brees.

"I truly believe that after spending a month and a half with Tom, I can now sit back in the pocket and throw the ball," he said.

Pryor played well Friday in a 19-17 exhibition victory against Dallas, completing six of 10 passes for 88 yards, and running three times for 31 yards.

The pass that got away was a cross-body fling into the end zone six yards away that was picked off by Dallas' J.J. Wilcox. There appeared to be room for Pryor to score with his feet, but instead he tried to force a pass.

"I looked at the pictures and I could have easily ran it in, but I got greedy," Pryor said.

He disagreed with the notion that he wanted to throw for the score rather than run for it because he's determined to prove he can win with his arm, that he's not simply a one-dimensional readoption threat.

But Raiders Coach Dennis Allen said the next step in Pryor's maturation process is learning that sometimes he needs to listen to his instincts and make the play that unfolds before him, rather than reaching for that higher degree of difficulty.

"That's been one thing we've consistently talked to Terrelle about is in those situations, don't be afraid to use your legs," Allen said. "Don't be afraid to use your skill set. ... Not every play has to be a great play, not every play has to be a spectacular play."

That Pryor is even a consideration now is a significant achievement for him and means he has made big strides. He was very raw coming out of Ohio State, and many people expected him to switch positions in the NFL, becoming a receiver or tight end.

Pryor was selected by the Raiders in the third round of the 2011 supplemental draft. He chose to skip his senior season at Ohio State in the aftermath of a tattoo-for-memorabilia scandal that cost coach Jim Tressel his job.

Pryor's NFL career began under a dark cloud, with the league taking the unusual step of carrying over the NCAA's penalty and imposing a corresponding five-game suspension of its own. He ran a 40 in under 4.4 seconds for scouts, freakish for a player who stands 6 feet 4 and weighs 233 pounds.

He made his starting debut at the end of last season, taking over for the injured Carson Palmer in a finale against San Diego. Pryor showed flashes of promise in that game, throwing two touchdown passes despite completing only 46% of his passes — 13 of 28 — and running for another score. He proved he could get in and out of the huddle quickly, often a problem for young quarterbacks, and showed elements of leadership, at one point breaking up a fight on the field.

But it was the work he did this off-season, he believes, that will make him a more accurate, more dangerous player this season.

"We're going to continue to give him opportunities to showcase his skills," Allen said. "But right now, he's not there yet."

Pryor, for one, is confident he will be.

"I'm very honest with myself," he said. "Last year, I look back and I just know I wasn't ready. I didn't have the mind-set. I knew I wasn't ready in terms of mechanics. I was so far off.

"This year, I'm very confident. I'm confident in the huddle, getting the calls to the guys, saying the protections. And I truly believe that any time a route or concept is called, I can put the ball where I want."

Raiders' Marcel Reece not looking for leading role

By Jerry McDonald Dec. 11, 2013

ALAMEDA -- Chances are Marcel Reece will again recede into the background with leading rusher Rashad Jennings having recovered from a concussion.

Having played in less than half of the Raiders' offensive snaps this season, Reece by necessity was on the field for all but two snaps in a 37-27 loss to the New York Jets.

The result was 19 carries, a career high 123 yards rushing, acknowledgment of a job well done and likely an immediate future of being shuttled on and off the field depending on the down, distance and play call when the Raiders play the Kansas City Chiefs on Sunday at O.co Coliseum.

Yet Reece has no illusions of morphing from versatile fullback to lead tailback.

"I don't worry about that, I don't think about that," Reece said Wednesday. "The two initials next to your name on the roster mean nothing. I don't worry about my position. I just worry about making plays for my team and helping us win.

"Whatever these coaches need me to do, whatever my team needs me to do, I'm going to do it."

When the Raiders needed Reece to do everything against the Jets, he was up to the task, with the highlight being a 63- yard touchdown run that jump-started a sagging offense.

"He had to carry a load," Jennings said. "He had to block and run deep routes and churn out tough yards. He had a big run through an arm tackle before showing his speed."

A college wide receiver at Washington, Reece retains those skills in a 6-foot-1, 255-pound frame to go along with reasonable success running from scrimmage despite minimal work as a lead runner.

Reece did have a four-game stretch last season where he rushed 54 times for 261 yards when Darren McFadden and Mike Goodson were out with injuries, then carried only four times in the last four games of the season when they were healthy.

With McFadden missing practice Wednesday with an ankle injury and not likely to face the Chiefs, Reece will spell Jennings as the lead runner.

"When he has gone into the game, he has had some success," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "He's a pretty patient runner, has pretty decent vision. I thought he did a great job on the long run of being able to hit the hole and split the seam. He probably doesn't have that explosive, breakaway type of speed, but nobody was catching him."

If Reece has any thoughts on gaining a rhythm as a runner with more work, he hides them by putting up a team-first front.

"I don't really think about it as an individual," Reece said. "It is important for us to get into rhythm as an offense, to stay on schedule. To get three, four yards on first down, to keep things manageable on third down so they can't get into those abstract blitzes. Our playbook opens up. As an individual you really don't think about it."

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders' Roach masters art of leading the defense

By Vic Tafur Nov. 2, 2013

Nick Roach grew up drawing pictures and went on to earn a degree in art theory and practice at Northwestern. He's always working on a sketch in his mind, and the one of his budding football career is finally ready to hang on the wall. Seven years along, the last details and shadings are becoming clear as he leads a resurgent Raiders defense.

Oakland, which hosts Philadelphia (3-5) Sunday, is a surprising 3-4 largely on the back of its defense. Safety Charles Woodson is the one star, but the other pistons have been firing pretty well, too - and Roach, the once-undrafted middle linebacker, is the fuel and air. Roach calls the plays, and he is adept at both run defense and pass coverage.

"He is the leader of the defense," defensive end Lamarr Houston said. "He runs the whole machine. He is the guy behind the curtains, and he never shies away from it."

The Raiders, sixth in the NFL in run defense, have held three opponents under 40 yards rushing after doing that just four times in the previous 10 seasons. Oakland also blitzes often and from everywhere, and already has 21 sacks after having 25 all of last season.

The biggest difference is Roach - and the guy he replaced. Rolando McClain, the Raiders' first-round pick in 2010, was supposed to be everything Roach is now, only in a bigger package. But McClain struggled on the field and was often in trouble off it. The Raiders have 10 new starters on defense now, and the one holdover, Houston, acknowledged the importance of the McClain-to-Roach transition.

"It is different, it is," Houston said. "That was the point of them going out and getting guys that will fit in and do what they're supposed to, understand what they're supposed to do and how they're supposed to do it.

"That's a testimony to (general manager) Reggie McKenzie and (coach) Dennis Allen as to how they put this team together."

Roach got a four-year contract on a defense largely consisting of one-year free agents. He wasn't daunted by the task of strangers coming together to play defense, taking a direct, humble, hardworking approach at training camp. Roach admitted his mistakes and implored teammates to grow together.

"Defense isn't about how many guys have been together before," Roach said. "It's just if guys have played good football before. Guys wanted to win, and that was the foundation."

Roach has spent seven years building his own foundation, going from an undrafted player out of Northwestern to the Chargers' practice squad in 2007 before getting picked up by the Bears.

He was a backup, an outside linebacker and a middle linebacker when Brian Urlacher was hurt.

Then he packed up the RV and headed west when Oakland signed him this offseason.

McKenzie, Allen and defensive coordinator Jason Tarver loved Roach's understated approach, intelligence and underrated playmaking ability. The one question mark was if Roach was, at 6-foot-1, 234 pounds, a bit undersized for a middle linebacker, but Tarver shook his head.

"Undersized is one thing, and the ability to get off the block is another," Tarver said. "Nick knows how to use his hands and has long arms for his body.

"You can look at the guys I was around before, Patrick Willis and NaVorro Bowman - Nick is a little bit lighter than those guys, but they're similar in arm length so they can shed and get off blocks."

Roach was a running back in high school, and can still find the open space as a linebacker.

"He's been a pleasant surprise," former Eagles scout and radio analyst John Middlekauf said. "He was a demon on special teams when we used to play the Bears, and now he is a consistent, efficient tackler."

Roach has a team-high 39 tackles, according to Pro Football Focus, to go along with a sack, eight quarterback hurries and two forced fumbles.

"We put a lot on him," Allen said. "He's accepted that challenge, and I think he's been an outstanding player for us."

Roach at the middle of revival of Raiders' D

By Paul Gutierrez November 22, 2013

ALAMEDA, Calif. – The improvement of the Oakland Raiders' defense has been as stunning as it has been rebuilt.

With 10 new starters, the Raiders just a few weeks ago had the 10th-ranked defense in the NFL (the anomaly that was the blowout loss to Philadelphia has them at No. 17 overall now), and they currently have the No. 6 rushing defense. Last year, Oakland was 18th against the run.

At the center of this Raiders revival is their new middle linebacker, Nick Roach. A year after Oakland finally gave up on a failed first-round draft pick in Rolando McClain, Roach has been a model of consistency. And calm.

"Nick is amazing in how fast he can go to the next play," Raiders defensive coordinator Jason Tarver said. "He's just onto the next play. He will align guys and use his rules.

"The guys that can focus in the moment like that are special, and he's special that way. He can just flush whatever has happened [and] go onto the next play, which allows you to do those things. It really does."

Roach spent his first six seasons with the Chicago Bears, where he was primarily a strongside linebacker. He signed a free-agent deal with the Raiders in March and moved to the middle, and he now leads the team with 68 tackles (48 solo) and has two sacks.

Perhaps more impressive is the fact that he has yet to come off the field, having played all 688 snaps this season, per Pro Football Focus.

Roach shrugged.

"I feel like that's just part of the job description," he said. "I wouldn't like to come off the field at any point. I realize that it's a blessing to be able to play all the snaps because things happen that are out of your control all the time. So hopefully I've been able to take advantage of it to the fullest so far."

There have been no complaints.

"Beyond being a good player, Nick's a good person," said rookie linebacker Sio Moore. "I think that's what correlates to his field play and, really, how he prepares, how he goes about his business on the field. I sit next to him every day, so I try and take something from him every day.

"He doesn't say much. He just goes out there and is effective."

Indeed. In last week's win over the Houston Texans, Roach got his first career interception when he picked off Case Keenum with about four minutes to go in the first quarter. The takeaway set the Raiders up at the Texans' 16-yard line, and one play later, Matt McGloin hit Rod Streater for a touchdown and a 14-0 lead.

"Every dog has his day," Roach said. "I'll put it that way."

Especially if said dog plays every snap.

Jason Tarver uses passion to vault Raiders' no-name defense

By Scott Bair November 1, 2013

Jason Tarver has never been more popular, a product of being famous and infamous at the same time.

The Raiders defensive coordinator has received praise for vaulting a no-name defense (save Charles Woodson, of course) into the NFL's top 10. His inventive blitz schemes have helped exceed expectations as the Raiders push for a .500 record Sunday against the Philadelphia Eagles.

Oh, and he may have flipped off some game officials. And was caught on camera. He now has a commemorative hashtag on Twitter. There may or may not be T-shirts.

#Tarvering is just a fad. His defensive scheme is not. Neither is his passion for the game or his desire to win or his defense's faith in the Tarver way.

While a momentary lapse in judgment wasn't condoned, those who know him best didn't vilify it.

"The only thing I'll say is I think he's done an outstanding job with this defense," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said a day after the incident. "I think he's a fiery and emotional guy, and I think our players have really taken to that. I think they've embraced that type of attitude, and I think he's got the defense playing at a high level right now."

Allen said it best. Tarver coaches with passion. His defense plays with it.

The often-wacky, never-dull, always-engaging 39-year old Bay Area native drives his players to do so. The man many call the "mad scientist" – Tarver has a master's degree in molecular biology and biochemistry. True story. And he wouldn't have it any other way.

"I think that D.A. [Dennis Allen] gave me a great compliment Monday when he said that I coach with passion," Tarver said after Thursday's practice. "If you're going to do anything in life, you want to be the best. Why limit yourself?

"That's what we talk to the players about. We say, 'You guys can run and you're smart and you love this game, so if you love this game why limit yourself? Why say, 'I can't do that,' ever?"

Pundits said the Raiders wouldn't be able to keep up on defense. Not with nine (now 10) new starters. Not without young star power. Not with so much dead money spent on castaways.

The Raiders ignored all that. They kept their heads down and worked and grew and learned to play as one. Now they're showered with compliments. The Raiders are 10th in total defense and sixth against the run. They have 11 takeaways in five games. They have 21 sacks from 14 different defenders.

That's part personnel, part belief in the scheme.

"J.T. gives everybody confidence that they can make a play," linebacker Sio Moore said. "If you buy in and work hard, he'll you in position to make a game-changing moment."

That's the message given to his charges, with aforementioned numbers to support it.

"There are no perfect calls; there's only perfect execution," Tarver said. "That's how we approach it. We say, 'Hey look, do your job. Do your job, and do it with that kind of passion.' If you're not doing it with passion, you're going to hear about it, but there are very few of our guys who are that way.

"That's why we're thankful to (general manager Reggie McKenzie and Allen) for who they brought in and who they keep bringing in, because these guys want to be great. Greatness is not one thing. It sure as heck doesn't have to do with me. I don't cross that white line. I don't play. My job is just to put them in position to make plays."

Tarver gets excited when they do. Raw passion comes out in practice and occasionally on the sidelines, where he has to rein himself in. He failed to do so when cornerback Mike Jenkins was improperly flagged against Pittsburgh for striking a defenseless receiver. A middle finger came flying out, an act of frustration normally dealt with in other ways.

"Well, you better have just an outlet (for the emotion)," Tarver said. "I'll quickly take a deep breath or say something, and then you go to the next play. I mean, that's what happens, so that's it. You've got to let it go. You breathe; you go to the next play."

Tarver finds solace in the film room, where it's crystal clear he's doing something right.

That was evident after Jenkins sniffed out a screen pass in the first quarter of Sunday's game versus Pittsburgh and made a terrific open-field tackle that forced a punt. Before Jenkins could get up, the entire defense mobbed him in celebration.

Tarver watched that play again and loved everything about it. Great read, flawless execution and, most importantly, everybody reveled in a job well done.

"That moment is what it's all about," Tarver said. "When we put on our black jerseys, that's what we want to do. We want every guy to be on the screen at the end of every play and enjoy the heck out of playing football."

Raiders' mad scientist of defense: Tarver has Oakland on upswing

By Jerry McDonald October 21, 2013

Jason Tarver recalls meeting with 49ers general manager Bill Walsh, coach Steve Mariucci and front office executive Bill McPherson in 2001, hoping to get a job as a low-level assistant coach.

His résumé included a master's degree in biochemistry and molecular biology and an award bestowed by the UCLA chemistry department for distinguished teaching in biochemistry.

All which of made Walsh wonder why Tarver was sitting at the table.

"The first thing he asked me was, 'Why don't you go out and invent something?' " Tarver said.

A dozen years later, Tarver, in his second season as defensive coordinator, has helped reinvent the way the Raiders play defense.

Quarterbacks Philip Rivers of San Diego and Alex Smith of Kansas City came out of games against the Raiders talking about the confusing array of blitzes and alignments thrown their way.

Long a four-man rush team with press coverage influenced by the late Al Davis, the Raiders under Tarver and coach Dennis Allen are mixing coverages, blitzing often and seldom showing the same thing twice.

There are 10 new starters, none of whom were big-ticket items in the offseason but have the shared trait of being enthusiastic workers who believe in team defense.

Of the 16 sacks generated by the Raiders, Lamarr Houston has the most at three, and the remaining 13 are divided among 11 players.

Opponents are averaging 22 points per game and 99.0 yards per game rushing, with only the Denver Broncos and Peyton Manning putting up the kind of points (37) and yardage (536) the Raiders have given up far too often in the last 10 years.

The Raiders are faster, are better tacklers and playing smarter than at any time in recent memory, and Allen credits Tarver with allowing his unit to play as fast as possible.

"He's really smart, and he's able to take something that might seem complicated and make it as simple as he can for the players," Allen said.

Free safety Charles Woodson, aware of Tarver's advanced education, has a mental picture of his coach in the role of a scientist.

"A lab coat, glasses, pens in his pocket," Woodson said. "I can see the whole thing."

Tarver, 39, who chose coaching over medical school, doesn't see his career path as unusual. Chemistry, like coaching, is about applying rules and logic to solve problems.

"You don't know how that weird-shaped brown ball and 22 pieces are going to move," Tarver said. "It's the ultimate puzzle -- a human puzzle."

In truth, for as good as Tarver was in his studies at Pleasanton's Foothill High, Santa Clara University and graduate school at UCLA, his passion was always football.

A safety at Foothill for coach Matt Sweeney, Tarver immediately took to scouting and preparation, which made up for what he lacked in pure athletic ability.

"He was just so off-the-charts smart," Sweeney said. "He was a 17-year-old that really could have been hanging out with 40-year-olds. Sometimes you win because of a certain number of guys who are behind the scenes acting like a coach with his classmates. That was Jason."

As a senior, Tarver blew out his anterior cruciate ligament, and according to Sweeney, "played his whole senior year without an ACL. He just put on a brace and lived with it."

Still living with it, as it turns out. Tarver had arthroscopic knee surgery last Thursday and was back in the office watching film by midafternoon.

Tarver's father is a research chemist at Lawrence Livermore Laboratory, while his mother, sister and brother are all educators.

"We didn't talk about if we were going to college," Tarver said. "It was about where and when you would go to college."

Jon Evans, a Foothill teacher and assistant football coach who was a close friend of Tarver's brother James, spent much of his youth at the Tarver home. On the court where they lived, pickup football and basketball games were daily occurrences, with Jason doing most of the organizing.

Although Tarver was an "A" student, Evans can't remember a time when he saw him doing homework.

"He was always working on football and studying Coach Sweeney's game plans," Evans said. "I don't think he had to spend a lot of time to get straight A's. I don't think he was challenged academically until he got to college."

Tarver was a biochemistry major at Santa Clara but played football at West Valley College in Saratoga after Santa Clara dropped football. He worked for a year as an assistant coach at West Valley and caught the coaching bug, which he took with him to UCLA -- where Tarver worked as a graduate assistant coach and eventually as an instructor while getting his master's degree.

"I would finish with spring ball, throw a lab coat over my football coaching stuff and literally run across campus to teach a four-hour lab, and I loved it," Tarver said.

Raiders running backs coach Kelly Skipper, then the offensive coordinator at UCLA, said Tarver was immediately identified as an "out of the box thinker" who absorbed everything he could on both sides of the ball. The coaching staff was both amazed and amused at Tarver's workload and surprised that he seemed like a fairly normal person.

"The thing about him is here's a guy with that kind of intellect, and he relates to people so well," Skipper said. "He's not off in his own little world. I think that's what makes him a pretty good coach, because he can talk to players. He can talk to anyone, at any level."

When Tarver interviewed with the 49ers to be a quality control assistant, he talked for $3\frac{1}{2}$ hours with Walsh, Mariucci and McPherson, got the job, and remained on the 49ers staff through the tenures of Mariucci, Dennis Erickson, Mike Nolan and Mike Singletary, coaching both offense and defense.

Tarver was hired by David Shaw to be co-defensive coordinator at Stanford before moving on to the Raiders last season.

His coaching style is best described as relentlessly positive, and players appreciate the freedom to make their own adjustments within the system.

"He doesn't coach any robots," cornerback Tracy Porter said. "He calls the play, and if you see something different and make the play, he's all for it."

Said linebacker Sio Moore: "He allows you to just go, and gives everybody the confidence to make a play. Once you understand a piece of his brain, what he's trying to do, it makes things less complex. It makes it easy."

CHARLES WOODSON

CSN BAY AREA

'Old man' Woodson drives Raiders defense

By Scott Bair September 17, 2013

The Raiders were seven yards from wasting a near-perfect start, and Charles Woodson could sense disappointment wearing on the huddle. The Jaguars marched right downfield, with little sign of slowing before pay dirt.

This defense -- this team -- needed a pick-me-up. The veteran free safety knew words wouldn't work. Actions would speak louder.

Maurice Jones-Drew ran left toward the pylon, and Woodson was presented with an opportunity. He could pursue him toward the goal line and push him out of bounds just in time.

Woodson went with Option B. D.J. Hayden was getting manhandled by a blocker twice his size, creating a bubble for Jones-Drew that could only be popped from the top.

Woodson took flight, sailing over left tackle Eugene Monroe completely horizontal. He hit Jones-Drew unaware, knocking him out of bounds after a 3-yard gain.

The crowd went nuts. So did the Raiders defense. Woodson drew a wry smile with one thought in mind. Mission accomplished.

Woodson killed the Jaguars momentum -- they settled for a field goal -- energized a sulking defense and got the Raiders back on track in their 19-9 win over Jacksonville. In short, the 36-year old did his job.

"That was a critical play in the game and a big momentum builder for us," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "You could feel the enthusiasm of the whole stadium when he made that play on Maurice Jones-Drew.

"Charles has been a heck of a football player for us. He's been a great leader for us. He's been everything that we had hoped for and anticipated when we brought him here."

The Raiders needed a veteran to mentor a young team in transition in the locker room and on the field. The 36-year old's wisdom and his status as a Bay Area icon ensured the former. It was uncertain how much the old man had left.

The NFL wasn't so sure. A humbling free agent tour expressed that. The Green Bay Packers thanked him for seven excellent years and moved on. The Denver Broncos wouldn't offer a dime in guaranteed money. The San Francisco 49ers took a pass.

The Raiders made him feel welcome, wanted. They gave him a real chance, and Woodson has rewarded them with excellent play at retirement age.

"All I hear these days now is 'old man,'" Woodson said. "Like I told these guys when I first got here, man, I love playing football. Those kinds of plays, like the one from Sunday, are second nature. As long as I'm out there on the field, that's the kind of effort I'm going to give."

That's the effort Woodson expects from others. He hopes unspoken peer pressure brings out the best in these Raiders.

Woodson's leadership gives the Raiders faith they can survive without a talent like Tyvon Branch. His play within a strong secondary gives the team a puncher's chance on Monday night against quarterback Peyton Manning and the Broncos.

That's because Woodson has made more than one big play. He led the team with six tackles last week and had three the week before. He can rush the passer, but is generally the last line of defense on passing downs. By doing so well, it gives coordinator Jason Tarver the confidence to blitz defensive backs without feeling vulnerable in the passing game.

Woodson is happy in this place, and in awe of the fan response that prompted him to re-sign with the team that drafted him.

The defense was announced before Sunday's home opener and, cheers reached a crescendo at No. 24. A few quarters later, Woodson eclipsed himself with that awesome, flying strike.

"It was one of those sellout plays that you need during the course of a game that hopefully can turn the tide and give you some momentum," Woodson said. "That's what I love to do."

SPORTS ILLUSTRATED

Candid Charles Woodson out to prove the doubters wrong

By Jim Trotter August 20, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- Raiders safety Charles Woodson doesn't believe in taking the scenic route. He wants to get from Point A to Point B as quickly as possible, not only on the football field but also in conversation. Consider his response when asked whether he pays attention to reports that his game has slipped in recent years.

Many players would respond with verbal detours. They'd rather give out the password to their bank account than publicly acknowledge an outsider's criticism. Not Woodson, who is returning to his Oakland roots after seven seasons with the Packers. He goes straight at the subject as if it were an unprotected quarterback and he was coming on a blindside blitz.

"I read all of it," the 16-year veteran says, smiling. "Basically they say I can't do it. They say I haven't been getting it done for the last three years. I've read a lot of things like that -- that I've been declining every year, which is funny because I was just All-Pro two years ago.

"But it's all good because when I turn on the film or I look at me on the football field, no one plays faster than me. You can go ask coaches in Green Bay, as far as how I played before breaking my collarbone last year. Ask them who played faster than me, and I don't think they would say anybody. Maybe Clay Matthews -- Clay is a bad boy. But, nah. All the stuff they're saying just ain't true."

Woodson is not alone in his determination to prove himself a still-viable force. The Raiders, one year after allowing the third-most offensive points in the NFL, could end up fielding as many as nine new defensive starters, each of whom was given up on by his former club. The unit might look like the Land of Misfit Players to some outsiders, but within the locker room the focus is on opportunity.

"The organization brought in some hungry guys," says Woodson, who turns 37 in October. "They're guys who signed one-year or two-year deals who can come out here, show out, then next year be looking at something [more lucrative] here or elsewhere."

Even in a league where roster turnover is common, what the Raiders have done is eye-popping. According to Football Outsiders, it's only the second time in the modern era that a team has changed as many as nine primary defensive starters in one year. The only other time it was done was in 2002, by ... the Raiders, who also made nine changes.

That Oakland team advanced to the Super Bowl (where it was routed by the Bucs), but no one is expecting the past to be prologue. The Raiders haven't had a winning season in 10 years, and one Las Vegas sports book lists their over/under at 5.5 victories. To even have a shot at that figure, the defense must be better than it was a year ago, when it surrendered 18 touchdowns on the ground (which tied for third-most in the league), 28 scores through the air (more than all but seven other teams) and managed just 25 sacks (second-fewest in the league).

Enter tackles Pat Sims and Vance Walker, end Jason Hunter, linebackers Nick Roach, Kevin Burnett and Kaluka Maiava, cornerbacks Mike Jenkins and Tracy Porter and Woodson. The Raiders also used a first-round pick on cornerback D.J. Hayden and a third-rounder on linebacker Sio Moore, both of whom could challenge for starting jobs as rookies.

The issue is how best to turn nine new starters into a cohesive unit. "The challenge is these guys really understanding ways that guys are going to play the game and really get a feel for what everybody else is seeing on the football field," says coach Dennis Allen. "It's really about getting 11 guys to play together and understand what their role is within the scheme. The thing we've got is that we have some veteran players, who understand how to do the job. The bad thing with that sometimes is that guys can be set in their ways. The good thing is, this is a group of guys that is eager and willing to do it the Raider way. That's why I like this team."

What Allen also likes is the players' willingness to practice. It was a struggle at times last season to get some veterans to consider practice as important as he did in his first year as a head coach. In fact, there were times early in training camp when newcomers could be seen grimacing from aches and bruises, strains and sprains, yet they refused to leave the field.

Defensive coordinator Jason Tarver, meanwhile, is pleased to have a group of veterans who are capable of making adjustments on the fly. "You can talk to them about subtle things and you can talk to them about major things," he says. "It's not too big for them. The personalities are big, too. Roach is smart, a little bit funny, he wants to do it right, and he likes solving things in the moment. Communicating with those players is really what you love about coaching."

Coaches are also enamored of talented veterans who are motivated, such as Woodson. He commands your attention when he's on the field. There is a suddenness when he breaks on the ball that few players possess. Woodson makes the game look easy even when it's difficult, as the rookie Hayden has learned. As Hayden walked off the field after a recent practice, sweat pouring down his face, multiple sets of shoulder pads and helmets in his hands, he shook his head at what he had just witnessed from Woodson.

"I couldn't even believe it," Hayden said. "I don't even think he was sweating. He's just so smooth."

"I told him I'm a machine," says Woodson, who breaks into a deep laugh.

One thing Woodson won't laugh about is his desire to show he's still a defensive force. And once again he gets straight to the point. "I ain't going to lie, it's kind of hurtful to have people taking shots at you for whatever reason, or just because you're 35, 36 or going on 37," he says. "But it's all good. I read it and put in my mental bank."

Like his new teammates, he hopes to collect interest beginning in Week 1.

Raiders: Woodson's homecoming shows he's here to play

By Steve Corkran Sept. 16, 2013

OAKLAND — There's a belief by some that Raiders owner Mark Davis signed safety Charles Woodson just to sell more tickets to home games and jerseys with Woodson's name on them. That's true, in part. Yet, it's also a fact that Woodson isn't your ordinary 36-year old, and he brings more to the equation than selling power.

"The scary thing about it is, I watch him on film and in practice every day and the guy's still got it," Raiders veteran offensive tackle Khalif Barnes said a short time after the Raiders beat the Jacksonville Jaguars 19-9 at the Coliseum in Woodson's first regular-season home game since he signed with the Raiders in the offseason.

"It's not like he's old and can't move. The dude can still play. It's crazy actually. He's a machine. I don't know how he does it after 17 years."

Plenty of thirtysomethings still can play, but how many of them can fly through the air, literally, with the greatest of ease and make perhaps the play of the day?

Woodson showed doubters about his ability to play at a high level just how much he has left Sunday, when he left his feet and launched himself shoulder height toward Jaguars running back Maurice Jones-Drew in the second quarter.

Woodson scored a direct hit, just as Jones-Drew pointed himself toward the Raiders goal line, and dragged down Jones-Drew at the 3-yard line. The Jaguars settled for a field goal two plays later.

"It don't matter, man," Woodson said of his heroics. "I'm just flying over a building in a single bound."

Raiders coach Dennis Allen called the play "huge" and said it helped the Raiders shift momentum.

"Any time you see a guy like Charles Woodson who has played as long as he has and the way he can play at the level that he's played," Allen said, "for him to make an effort play like that really gives the whole team and the defense in particular a lot of momentum. It was a great play."

Woodson's also making a huge impression on his teammates, especially the younger ones. Rookie cornerback D.J. Hayden didn't see Woodson's high-flying acrobatics. Just the same, he said, he draws inspiration from a player the Raiders selected in the first round of the 1998 NFL draft.

"It's motivation," Hayden said of Woodson's play. "If he can do it, anyone of us can do it. ... Hopefully a little bit of him rubs off on me."

Through two games so far, the Raiders defense allowed only 30 points, or slightly more than what the Raiders allowed per game last season, when Woodson was wrapping up his Green Bay Packers career.

Call it the Woodson Effect? Call it whatever you want, Woodson said, but there's a feeling that the Raiders are on to something meaningful defensively.

"We're onto playing good, hard football," Woodson said, "and that's all we can really ask of everybody. (Sunday), for the most part, we did our job as a team collectively. We beat a team I felt like we were supposed to beat and that's a step in the right direction."

Of course, Barnes would say in a lighter moment, Woodson might need a cane to take that step.

"He could play another two or three years if he wants to," Barnes said. "He's the true definition of a guy that does it because he loves to, because he really doesn't have to. It's plays like that, man, there's not a lot of guys in this room that would put their body through that."

Poole: Charles Woodson is a new man

By Monte Poole Aug. 19, 2013

Charles Woodson sailed into Oakland in 1998, a fascinating bundle of talent and energy, playing fast and living faster. He was famous, newly wealthy in the land of temptation. He partied hard, sometimes without regard for professional obligation.

Young Charles lived to dance along the edge of the cliff. Why not? It was fun. What could be better than inventing new angles from which to burn the proverbial candle?

All the while, C-Wood was a premier cornerback and the best pure football player on the most accomplished Raiders teams since the 1980s.

The Woodson that rejoined the Raiders on May 22, after seven seasons in Green Bay, is 36 years old and has moved to free safety. He brings instincts and ball skills, as well as grown-man wisdom and focus as sharp as an arrow's tip. He plays smart, lives smarter. His is among the most dramatic maturation processes in recent sports history.

And, still, at an age when most have faded, he's the best pure player on the roster.

"His quickness is still there, and I still see his love of the game," says Willie Brown, the Raiders Hall of Famer who has known Woodson since '98 and speaks with him often. "I wouldn't be surprised if Charles makes All-Pro this year at free safety. All we have to do is put a pretty good defense in front of him and let him go."

The root of Woodson's maturation is Charles himself. He was bright enough to acknowledge the cracks in his personal mirror and cast his eyes within -- and strong enough to respond in a way that has set an example for the jock living on the edge.

Woodson always has accepted responsibility, no matter how it reflected upon him. He had won the Heisman Trophy at Michigan -- the first primarily defensive player to do so -- and was drafted fourth overall by Oakland. He was an instant celebrity and embraced the life that came with it.

He was arrested in 2000 for DUI in Michigan. He was arrested in 2004 for refusing to get out of a woman's car at 4:20 a.m. He missed at least one curfew, resulting in suspension, and he was infamous for daydreaming or snoozing during meetings. Teammates were left to wonder if he was hung over or just indifferent to commitment.

Meanwhile, the Raiders reached the playoffs in three consecutive seasons (2000-02), and C-Wood went to four consecutive Pro Bowls (1998-01).

Such success only contributed to Woodson's belief that his active night life did not and would not impede his play. When so many talented athletes were falling over the cliff -- including former Raiders teammates Barret Robbins, Andre Rison and Darrell Russell -- Charles was having it both ways.

"I was kind of wild," says Woodson, whose primary road dogs were Charlie Garner and Rison. "I enjoyed myself as a young man. I was moving 100 miles per hour -- on and off the field. I was young, had plenty of money. I was here with a great group of guys, and a lot of us ran fast. We had fun, but we put it down when we got on the field.

"That part of it has slowed down a great deal."

The turnaround began in 2006, when the Raiders allowed him to test free agency and Woodson was greeted with funereal silence. With a history of injuries and a poor work ethic, Woodson at age 29 was perceived as damaged goods.

Pause. Reflect for a minute and consider how great Woodson was despite himself. How fantastic might he be if he truly applied himself?

Staring into the abyss and vowing rededication, Woodson finally received an offer. It came from the Packers. The Packers! Why on earth would Charles Woodson take his talents to the league's smallest and most isolated outpost?

After initial reluctance, Woodson signed with Green Bay not because he wanted to be there but because it was May and, frankly, there was no other reasonable option.

"I would say Green Bay was great for Charles," says Nnamdi Asomugha, who spent three seasons as Woodson's teammate in Oakland and still is a close friend.

Feeling dismissed and perhaps sensing he had cheated himself, Woodson eventually immersed himself in football. He studied film, listened to his coaches, made a concerted effort to tap every drop of his vast potential.

Raising his bar and that of those around him, Charles became a true leader. He also improved as a player, earning four more Pro Bowl selections and being honored in 2009 as the Defensive Player of the Year. Woodson the following season was the driving force behind Green Bay's Super Bowl championship.

"It worked out," Woodson says now. "I talk about how I slowed down, well, I moved to an environment that was that way. Green Bay is a blue-collar community, and it's all about the Packers. I was able to go there, slow down and focus on the game."

Woodson not only dived into football but also became a more responsible citizen. He made a $2 million donation to a Children and Women's hospital at his alma mater in 2009. Friends credit his joy to familial bonds; Charles and his wife, April, have two young sons, Charles Jr. and Chase.

"When you have a lot of money and you're single, you can do a lot of wild and crazy things -which he did," Brown says of Woodson. "He had millions in his pocket, and he had a good time. Having two kids and a good wife will slow you down."

Hall of Famer Rod Woodson, who spent two years alongside Charles in Oakland, has seen the growth and offers his amateur analysis.

"He needed to kind of get through adolescence, so to speak, while was with the Raiders," Rod Woodson says. "After he got to Green Bay, he finally matured. He matured outside of football. Before players mature on the field, they have to mature outside the field and I think he did that first, and then his play level just increased and he even got better."

Charles had gone to the brink, almost as far as Ben Roethlisberger but not nearly as far as Michael Irvin or J.R. Rider or Mike Tyson. What's remarkable is that Charles stopped, spun and flourished in midcareer. He went to Wisconsin in '06 in danger of derailing his career and left in '13 with Hall of Fame credentials and attributes worthy of adulation.

"The beauty of who Charles has become as a person is that he's so positive and happy," Asomugha says. "I talk to him all the time, and he's so encouraging. That's what you want from a leader, from a guy you looked at as a mentor and a guy you have so much respect for a lot of things he has done."

Woodson's last few years in Oakland, with the team spiraling down after the Super Bowl loss in February 2003, were filled with frustration. His arrival this year is nothing less than refreshing. And very, very welcome.

"I just continue to fall in love with the game," Woodson says. "As a young player, I never looked this far ahead. I never thought about how long I was going to play."

Season No. 16 is on the horizon. Woodson has a $1.8 million one-year contract that, with incentives, could reach $4 million. He also has the respect and confidence of those around him, from general manager Reggie McKenzie (who was with the Packers when Woodson signed there) to coach Dennis Allen to his teammates.

"When he comes out here and practices, he gives his all," strong safety Tyvon Branch says. "For the young guys to see a guy like him, somebody who has played a trillion and eight years getting after it, it just rubs off on them."

Playmaking leadership is what the Raiders want and need -- and hope they get -- from Woodson. It's his specialty. He stood at the cliff and came back to tap himself and his teammates, to be there for those who need him and those who might themselves someday dance along the edge.

Woodson setting example in Oakland

By Bill Williamson Jul. 30, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- Charles Woodson is serving multiple roles in his second tenure with the Oakland Raiders.

Woodson, who played in Oakland from 1998-2005, will start at safety and will probably play more with the Raiders than any other team that was interested in him. Some contenders (including Denver) looked at Woodson, who was cut by Green Bay earlier this offseason, as a role player.

Woodson, 36, ultimately chose to return to Oakland. The Raiders were offering more money than the other teams. Less than week into training camp, Oakland coach Dennis Allen is thrilled the Raiders secured Woodson.

'He's what we expected him to be," Allen said. "He's filling a lot of roles. He's a special player and those types of guys bring a swagger to the field. We need that. He still runs around like he's 30."

Allen said he has been fortunate to work with superstar defensive backs in the past few years. He had Darren Sharper in New Orleans as the secondary coach. In 2011, he had Champ Bailey in Denver as the Broncos' defensive coordinator. Now, he has Woodson.

"It's fun to coach those special, type of guys," Allen said.

Allen said Woodson is a living example to the young players in Oakland's secondary.

"One of the reasons why Charles is here is to show the others guys how to work and what it takes," Allen said. "That is one of his most important roles here."

Raiders Observations: Woodson plans to be factor, not just mentor

By Clark Judge Jul. 31, 2013

NAPA, Calif. -- In his 16th NFL season, Raiders defensive back Charles Woodson should have nothing to prove. He's won a Super Bowl. He was the league's Defensive Player of the Year. He's a seven-time All-Pro and an eight-time Pro Bowler.

In short, the guy's circled the bases.

Nevertheless, Woodson is on a mission this season, and that mission is to demonstrate he's something more than a mentor to young players and locker-room leader helping to build a foundation for a struggling team. Basically, it's to demonstrate he can and will be an impact player.

"So, odd as it is to say, you might have something to prove, right?" I asked him.

"I guess a little bit," he said. "But what people have said about me I don't believe. If I felt there was any truth to it I might feel I had to prove it.

"At the heart of me, I'm a football player. If I can't do anything else in life I can play football. Whether it's proving somebody wrong or whatever, I plan on coming out here and being a 'dog' on that football field."

Hiring Woodson was a smart move for a Raiders team in search of an identity. A check of this week's training camp roster revealed nearly 50 players in their first seasons with the club and close to 70 with no more than two years' time with Oakland. Inexperienced teams need veteran leadership, and Woodson is an ideal choice.

Except, he insisted, he's more than that.

"I believe what I'm going to give to the team will be more on the field," he said. "What people are saying that I lack as a player is just not the truth. I'm a heck of a football player, and I have a lot left to give ... and I plan on giving it all on the field."

The opportunity is there. The Raiders' secondary was a mess last season, with injured cornerbacks and safety Michael Huff having to switch positions. But there's a raft of new faces, including rookie D.J. Hayden, veterans Mike Jenkins and Tracy Porter and Woodson.

For that reason, Woodson believes the Raiders can be better -- far better -- than preseason projections that have them ranked at or near the bottom of the NFL.

"I read everything," he said. "So I read what people are saying. I think the important thing coach [Dennis] Allen said the other day is that we have enough on this team to do what we want to do, and I believe that.

"Some of the guys we have you really haven't heard or know about, but we've got some players. A good team can start with the defense, and, defensively I think we're going to be really strong. I believe we'll win games defensively, and that will carry us through the season."

He also believes he's not close to the end of his career. Yes, he missed nine games last season because of injury. Yes, he turns 37 in October. Yes, he went unwanted for months before the Raiders signed him in late May. But, no, retirement is nothing he thinks about.

"How long do you plan on playing?" I asked.

"As long as somebody lets me," he said. "I love it. I told the defense the other night that after 16 years I still love it -- just like the day I came in. My hope is that they love the game as much as I do."

CSN BAY AREA

Woodson likes changes in return to Oakland

By Paul Gutierrez May 22, 2013

Charles Woodson caught wind of Raiders fans mobilizing via social media to greet him at the team's compound for his free-agent visit on Tuesday.

No doubt the turnout of about 200 helped sway his decision.

"I tell you, man, it was overwhelming," Woodson said on a conference call with Bay Area reporters Wednesday afternoon. "I think that if at any time I had ever forgotten what the love was like in Oakland, I was definitely reminded yesterday.

"I think it played a big part (in signing). I was actually scared of leaving the facility and not having a deal done," he added with a laugh. "I don't know if I would have made it out of there. But that was a big deal and seeing that kind of welcome, it definitely put me in the mindset it would be a good decision to make it happen."

Woodson, who turns 37 on Oct. 7, was the No. 4 overall draft pick of the Raiders in 1998 as the reigning Heisman Trophy winner. He spent his first eight years in the NFL playing cornerback for Oakland before leaving as a free agent in 2006 for Green Bay and winning a Super Bowl two years ago.

After the Packers released him in a cost-cutting move this offseason, he initially said he wanted to play for a contender, but instead came to choose the rebuilding Raiders over the likes of Denver, which offered him a contract. He also visited the 49ers.

Per reports, Woodson's deal with the Raiders is for one year with a max amount of $4.3 million and a base salary of $1.8 million.

"As the process rolled on, I knew I wanted to play football," he said. "If it was a team that wasn't quite there but still is a team that is looking on the up, then I was going to do it. And I feel like the Raiders are a team that's looking on the up."

Woodson said his familiarity with Raiders second-year general manager Reggie McKenzie from their time together in Green Bay and McKenzie's vision for Oakland sold him on the direction the team was heading.

Plus, the last time Woodson was in the Raiders' building, in 2005, was a lifetime ago in terms of regime change. The change in vibe, he said, was palpable.

"Having Reggie in there and having somebody that's really in that decision-making role other than Mr. Al Davis is definitely a different vibe," Woodson said. "It seems like there's more of a control, as far as what they're able to do and what they want to implement, as far as their team is concerned.

"I think it's a good vibe in there."

So what does Woodson, at 36-going-on-37 with a Hall of Fame resume that includes eight Pro Bowl selections, three first-team All Pro nods, an NFL defensive rookie of the year award as well as an NFL defensive player of the year honor bring to the Raiders' table?

"I'm a football player, man, so I'm just going to bring a lot of intensity," he said. "Somebody that's passionate about the game, and a guy that knows how to make plays. That's what I'm going to bring. I mean, I think when guys watch me play...that raises the level of other guys, because of the way I play the game.

"I'm going to bring that mindset, that mentality of the game...and have fun doing it."

Woodson figures to make the move to free safety full-time now, to "roam around and make plays," he said, and if that sounds familiar to Raiders fans, it should. It's what Rod Woodson did when he came to Oakland in 2002 and solidified a secondary that helped the Raiders reach the Super Bowl. It was also the last time the Raiders experienced a winning season.

The elder Woodson had already made the switch from corner to free safety before getting to Oakland but it was in that 2002 season when Rod Woodson had a career-high eight interceptions and returned two for touchdowns, including the memorable 98-yarder to swing the season at Denver on Monday Night Football.

Does C-Wood anticipate having similar success?

"I plan on having it," he said. "I wouldn't be out there trying to continue to play if I didn't think it was going to happen. I would have just retired if I thought I couldn't go out there and be the best player on the field."

Woodson, though, has broken his collarbone twice in the past three years. He said it's healed now, though, after missing nine games last year, saying it's "great."

That could also potentially describe the booty cornerback Tracy Porter stands to collect as he currently owns No. 24, the digits work by Woodson in his halcyon Raiders days. It's a jersey that is still among the most popular rocked by fans on gamedays at the Coliseum.

"We definitely have to have that conversation, though," Woodson said of Porter. "We haven't had it yet. Raider Nation has me back, but I don't know if they'll have me (fully) back without the '24' on my back."

Perhaps some cash and some wine (Woodson is the proprietor of a wine made in Napa) could convince Porter to make the switch? But the proximity to his off-the-field business had little to do with his decision to return to Oakland.

"Zero," Woodson said. "This was all about football. This was all about continuing my football career, and having an opportunity to go out there and help a team win. That was bottom line for me."

And keep in mind, Woodson was not signed to simply retire a Raider or to mentor the younger guys. Though he believes that is part of his role. Owner Mark Davis reiterated as much to CSNCalifornia.com earlier in the day.

"I try not to step on any coaches' toes," he said. "Whatever input I can give those guys, that's definitely what I'm going to do. And if I can be a help to them, and it's going to help us win, ultimately, then I have to do it."

Beyond being greeted by the adoring mass of fans, Woodson saw familiar faces on his tour of his first NFL home. Even if kicker Sebastian Janikowski is the only player remaining from Woodson's first tour with the Raiders. There were also equipment and film staff and who many think is the greatest cornerback in franchise history.

"It had been a while since I had seen Willie Brown and he's one of my favorite people, man, ever," Woodson said. "We always joke about who the real '24' is. So it was good to have that back-and-forth with him and get the deal done and then call him and say, 'Willie Brown, I'm coming back. The real 2-4 is coming back.'

"It felt good to be in that building. It felt good."
