CHARGERS AT RAIDERS

The Los Angeles Chargers (4-5) make the short trek north to play the division rival Oakland Raiders (4-4) on Thursday, Nov. 7. Kickoff is scheduled for 5:20 p.m. PT, from RingCentral Coliseum. Joe Buck, Troy Aikman, Erin Andrews and Kristina Pink have the call on FOX/NFL Network while Matt "Money" Smith, Daniel Jeremiah and Shannon Farren will bring the action on KFI-AM 640. Mario Solis and Jorge Villanueva will present the game in Spanish on KFWB-AM 980. Hannah Storm and Andrea Kremer team up for the Amazon Prime Video broadcast.

The Raiders hold a 62-54-2 regular season advantage and are 31-27-1 against the Bolts at home. The Chargers have swept the season series the last two years, outscoring the Raiders, 93-42, over that span. In the last meeting in Oakland last season, the Bolts secured a 20-6 victory. Melvin Gordon amassed 165 yards from scrimmage on the strength of a 66-yard touchdown reception while Philip Rivers threw for two scores, including an 11-yard strike to Keenan Allen. Isaac Rochell posted a career-best 1.5 sacks.

The Chargers recorded their second straight win in impressive fashion as they downed the Green Bay Packers, 26-11. Michael Badgley made his season debut and booted four field goals while Gordon rushed for two scores and eclipsed 100 total yards. Mike Williams tallied his first career 100-yard receiving game with a game-high 111 yards. Joey Bosa and Melvin Ingram both registered 1.5 sacks to help limit a Packers attack to 184 total yards.

The Raiders returned home to down the Detroit Lions, 31-24. Derek Carr connected with rookie Hunter Renfrow with just over two minutes remaining to seal the victory. Rookie Josh Jacobs rushed for 120 yards and two scores while Carr threw for 289 yards and two touchdowns.

Philip Rivers enters Week 10 leading the NFL with 2,609 yards passing. Joey Bosa has totaled 8.5 sacks to rank tied for fourth in the league on the strength of 5.5 sacks in his last three outings. The Chargers are the only team in the league to have two players in the top-10 in catches as Austin Ekeler (6th) has caught 55 passes to lead all running backs in the NFL while Keenan Allen (7th) closely follows with 54 receptions. Ty Long ranks second in the NFL with 48.2 yards per punt.

The Chargers will stay in the division and play the Kansas City Chiefs on Monday Night Football in Mexico City. The two teams will clash on Nov. 18 at Estadio Azteca.

BY THE NUMBERS

5.5 Since Week 7, Joey Bosa leads the NFL with 5.5 sacks. He has totaled more than one sack in three straight contests and enters Week 10 with 8.5 sacks. His single season-high is 12.5 sacks in 2017.

55 Austin Ekeler leads all running backs in the NFL with 55 receptions. That total ranks sixth in the league. His 15 receptions in Week 5 against the Denver Broncos paces the NFL in a single game.

2,609 Philip Rivers enters Week 10 with a league-high 2,609 yards passing. That total is the fifth most of his career through the first nine games of a season and the most for the signal-caller since 2015.

BREAKING DOWN THE 2019 SCHEDULE

The Chargers opponents in 2019 posted a 105-101-3 (.510) regular season record in 2018. Four of the teams on the schedule made the postseason and seven of the teams had a .500 or better record. The Chargers finished second in the AFC West and were 4-2 against divisional foes. The Bolts made their first playoff appearance since 2013.

	SERIES BREAKDOWN	2018 RECORD	NOTES
	ALL-TIME: 17-10-0 HOME: 6-6-0 AWAY: 11-4-0 LAST: W, 30-24 OT - 2019 at Chargers	OVERALL: 10-6-0 HOME: 6-2-0 AWAY: 4-4-0 POSTSEASON: Divisional Round	For the first time since 2013, Los Angeles will host Indianapolis. It will mark the second-ever season opener the team has played against the Colts. The Bolts have an all-time record of 16-10 against the Colts, including wins in four of the last six matchups.
	ALL-TIME: 7-5-0 HOME: 5-0-0 AWAY: 2-5-0 LAST: L, 13-10 - 2019 at Lions	OVERALL: 6-10-0 HOME: 3-5-0 AWAY: 3-5-0 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Chargers face Detroit for the first time since 2015. Los Angeles has won seven of the last eight against the Lions, including a 51-14 win at home in 2007. The Chargers have posted 30-plus points in each of the past two home games against Detroit.
	ALL-TIME: 5-2-0 HOME: 2-2-0 AWAY: 3-0-0 LAST: L, 27-20 - 2019 at Chargers	OVERALL: 11-5-0 HOME: 6-2-0 AWAY: 5-3-0 POSTSEASON: Wild Card Round	The Week 3 matchup will be just the seventh between the two teams. The Chargers eclipsed 400-plus yards in three of the past six matchups with the Dolphins, including a 30-14 home win in 2015 that saw a 311-yard and three-touchdown performance by Philip Rivers.
	ALL-TIME: 52-67-1 HOME: 34-26-0 AWAY: 18-41-1 LAST: L, 20-13 - 2019 vs. Broncos	OVERALL: 6-10-0 HOME: 3-5 AWAY: 3-5 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Chargers split the season series against the Broncos for the third consecutive season. Both teams won on the road with the Bolts earning a 23-9 victory in Denver. The win in Mile High was the first for the Chargers since 2013. Mike Williams scored his 10th total TD of the season in the winning effort.
	ALL-TIME: 10-24-0 HOME: 6-9-0 AWAY: 4-15-0 LAST: L, 24-17- 2019 at Chargers	OVERALL: 9-6-1 HOME: 5-3-0 AWAY: 4-3-1 POSTSEASON: N/A	For the second time in as many seasons, the Chargers and Steelers will square off on Sunday Night Football. It marks the first time the Chargers will play the same team on Sunday Night in consecutive seasons since facing both Indianapolis and New England in 2007 and 2008 on Sunday Night Football.
	ALL-TIME: 28-18-1 HOME: 18-5-1 AWAY: 10-17-0 LAST: L, 23-20 - 2019 at Titans	OVERALL: 9-7-0 HOME: 6-2-0 AWAY: 3-5-0 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Bolts play the Titans for the second time in as many seasons and the third time in the last four years. Los Angeles is on a two-game winning streak and has won 10 of the last 11 contests against Tennessee. The Chargers have eclipsed 30 points when playing the Titans in six of the last nine games.
	ALL-TIME: 6-7-0 HOME: 4-3-0 AWAY: 2-4-0 LAST: W, 17-16 - 2019 at Bears	OVERALL: 12-4-0 HOME: 7-1-0 AWAY: 5-3-0 POSTSEASON: Wild Card Round	Los Angeles plays against Chicago for the 13th time in history and the sixth on the road. To start the all-time series, the Bolts won the first three games and four of the first five. In their most recent win against the Bears, the team held Chicago to 202 yards of offense and three points in a 14-3 victory.
	ALL-TIME: 2-10-0 HOME: 1-6-0 AWAY: 1-4-0 LAST: W, 26-11 - 2019 at Chargers	OVERALL: 6-9-1 HOME: 5-2-1 AWAY: 1-7-0 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Bolts square off against Green Bay for just the 12th time in history. The last three contests were decided by seven points. In the most recent game of the series at Green Bay in 2015, quarterback Philip Rivers set team marks for attempts (65), completions (43) and passing yards (503).
	ALL-TIME: 54-63-2 HOME: 27-32-1 AWAY: 27-31-1 LAST: W 20-6 - 2018 at Raiders	OVERALL: 4-12-0 HOME: 3-5-0 AWAY: 1-7-0 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Chargers swept the season series for the second-straight year, holding Oakland to just 16 total points in the two contests. Melvin Gordon totaled 285 yards in the two games in 2018. The four-game winning streak against the division rival is the longest for the Bolts since a 13-game streak (2003-09).
	ALL-TIME: 56-61-1 HOME: 32-26-1 AWAY: 24-35-0 LAST: W, 29-28 - 2018 at Chiefs	OVERALL: 12-4-0 HOME: 7-1-0 AWAY: 5-3-0 POSTSEASON: AFC Top Seed	The Chargers snapped a nine-game losing streak in dramatic fashion, erasing a 28-14 fourth quarter deficit to beat the division foe Chiefs, 29-28. The victory marked the first time the teams split the season series since 2011. Mike Williams caught the TD with four seconds left and then secured the 2-pt try.
	ALL-TIME: 7-3-0 HOME: 4-0-0 AWAY: 3-3-0 LAST: L, 20-17 (OT) - 2017 at Jaguars	OVERALL: 5-11-0 HOME: 3-5-0 AWAY: 2-6-0 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Chargers will fly to Florida's most populated city for the second time in the tenure of Head Coach Anthony Lynn. Los Angeles looks to improve on its 7-3 record against the Jaguars and the team's average margin of victory in those seven wins is 18.4 points.
	ALL-TIME: 6-6-0 HOME: 3-1-0 AWAY: 3-5-0 LAST: L, 31-14 - 2015 at Vikings	OVERALL: 8-7-1 HOME: 5-3-0 AWAY: 3-4-1 POSTSEASON: N/A	The Week 15 matchup will mark only the third home game for the Bolts against Minnesota since 1981. It is scheduled to be the second matchup on Sunday Night Football for the Bolts in 2019, which would mark the first season with multiple Sunday Night contests since having three in 2008.

THE HEAD COACHES

Anthony Lynn is in his third season as a head coach in the National Football League after serving as Buffalo's interim in Week 17 of the 2016 season. In just his second season, Lynn led the Chargers to their first playoff appearance since 2013 and their best record since 2009 by posting a 12-4 mark. The Chargers led the NFL with seven Pro Bowl selections and were a resilient squad, winning eight-straight road contests. For his efforts in 2018, Lynn was recognized by the Fritz Pollard Alliance with the Paul "Tank" Younger Award and was later tabbed the Coach of the Year by the Los Angeles Sports Council. In his first season at the helm in Los Angeles, Lynn rallied the team after an 0-4 start to win nine of the final 12 games, including six of the last seven contests. The Chargers finished 9-7 and just missed out on a playoff berth due to a tiebreaker. The nine wins over the 12-game span was the best mark since the team won the last 11 games of the 2009 season. The five-straight home wins were also the best run on home turf since that 2009 season. Lynn put his imprint on the team in year one. The Bolts turned the ball over just 15 times in 2017 to rank tied for fourth in the NFL after a season in which they were dead last with 35 turnovers. The offensive line led the league in the least amount of sacks allowed with 18. The Chargers haven't led the league in the least amount of sacks allowed since in the AFL in 1968. In two seasons in Los Angeles, Lynn has compiled a 21-11 regular season record.

Jon Gruden returned as head coach of the Oakland Raiders on Jan. 9, 2018, welcoming back one of the most respected and successful coaches in the storied history of the Silver and Black. Gruden, who was first introduced as head coach of the Raiders over 20 years ago, served four seasons with the Raiders from 1998-2001. The naming of Gruden marked his return to coaching after spending nearly a decade in broadcasting, including color analyst duties on the Monday Night Football franchise from 2009-2017. Gruden compiled a 95-81 (.540) regular season mark in 11 seasons as a head coach with the Raiders and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (2002-08), and a 5-4 record (.556) in postseason contests, which includes a victory in Super Bowl XXXVII. The youngest head coach in the NFL at age 34 upon his initial hire by Raiders Owner Al Davis in 1998, Gruden posted a 38-26 record (.594) and led the Silver and Black to back-to-back AFC West titles in 2000 and 2001. He guided the Raiders to an AFC Championship Game appearance in 2000, a campaign in which the Raiders set a franchise record with 479 points and led the NFL in rushing (154.4 avg.). The Raiders ranked in the top-seven in total offense in three of Gruden's four seasons in Oakland, including the top-three in rushing twice and the top-seven in passing once. Defensively, Gruden's units twice ranked among the league's top-10 in total defense, including the fifth-overall rush defense in 2000 and two top-nine finishes in passing defense.

NOTABLE PERFORMANCES vs. RAIDERS

- On Oct. 22, 1961, the Chargers held Oakland to 58 total yards. It's still the best defensive performance in franchise history. Earlier that same year on Sept. 17, the Bolts held the Raiders to 106 yards, which is the fourth-best defensive performance in franchise history.
- On Sept. 17, 1961, the Chargers posted a 44-0 win over the Raiders. It is the second-greatest margin of victory in a game in team history.
- In 2012, Melvin Ingram made his NFL debut at Oakland. That day, he ended the Raiders' first series with a forced fumble and later he played a key role in an aborted play that resulted in a 25-yard loss, leading to a punt and a touchdown on the Chargers' ensuing possession for a 10-3 lead. Late in the fourth quarter, his onside kick recovery sealed the Bolts' 22-14 victory. Ingram then had a team and season-high four special teams tackles in the 2012 season finale vs. Oakland.
- On Oct. 25, 2015, Philip Rivers passed for 336 yards against Oakland to tie a team record with his fourth straight 300-yard game.
- On Oct. 12, 2014, Rivers passed for 313 yards and three touchdowns in a 31-28 win at Oakland.
- In 2013, Philip Rivers passed for 411 yards at Oakland to become the first quarterback in team history with back-to-back 400-yard games. It was his team-record third 400-yard game of the season and the sixth of his career, tying Dan Fouts for most in team history. Rivers threw the 201st and 202nd touchdown passes of his career that same day to pass John Hadl (201) for second in team history. In the team's second meeting of the season at home, Rivers threw a TD pass in his 19th-straight game, tying Hadl (1966-67) for the third-longest streak in team history.
- In 2010, Rivers passed for 431 yards at Oakland, which at the time was ninth in team history. It included a career-high 290 in the first half.
- In 2009, Rivers led the game-winning touchdown drive of 89 yards in nine plays over the final 2:30 at Oakland. He went 6-of-7 for 79 yards on the game-winning drive.
- In 2006, Rivers made his first-career start at Oakland on ESPN's Monday Night Football and he led the Chargers to a 27-0 win.
- Rivers has led the Chargers to five fourth-quarter comeback wins over the Raiders, including 11/26/06 (trailed 14-7 and won 21-14), 9/28/08 (trailed 15-3 and won 28-18), 9/14/09 (trailed 20-17 and won 24-20), 10/12/14 (trailed 21-28 and won 31-28) and 10/15/17 (trailed 14-16 and won 17-16).
- In 26 career games vs. Oakland, Rivers has completed 540 of 836 (64.6 pct.) for 6,617 yards with 45 touchdowns and 19 interceptions for a 97.4 career rating vs. Oakland. The Chargers are 18-8 in those 26 games.
- In the 2017 season finale, Rivers was 28-for-37 (75.7 pct.) for 387 yards and three touchdowns. He posted a rating of 135.8, the highest of his career against the division opponent.
- Rivers threw for 339 yards and posted a rating of 143.4 in the 2018 victory.
- Joey Bosa made his NFL debut against the Raiders on Oct. 9, 2016. The first-round pick recorded two sacks and had three TFLs in his inaugural pro game.
- Brandon Mebane recorded his first career interception in the Oct. 9, 2016 game.
- Melvin Gordon hauled in a then career-high nine receptions and made the sixth TD catch of his career (fourth of the season) in the first meeting of 2017. His 67 receiving yards on the day were also a career high at the time of the game. He also added two scores for the fifth time in his career.
- Keenan Allen broke the teams' single-season catch record by hauling in nine receptions to finish with 102 on the year in 2017. He added 133 yards and a score in the season-finale win.

Los Angeles Chargers

With six more catches by WR Keenan Allen and five by RB Austin Ekeler, can have the first pair of Chargers teammates with 60-plus catches each in a single season since 2015 (Keenan Allen had 67, Danny Woodhead had 80).

WR Keenan Allen

Needs three touchdown catches to tie WR Malcom Floyd (34) for No. 10 in Chargers history.

Needs a 100-yard performance to reach 24 for his career, which would tie TE Kellen Winslow for the second-most in team history.

Needs 137 receiving yards to become the seventh player to reach 6,000 career receiving yards in team history.

DE Joey Bosa

Needs 1.5 sacks to post four-straight multi-sack games. It would tie for the longest streak in team annals (LB Billy Ray Smith). It would also tie for the fourth-longest streak in NFL history, and the first such streak since 2013.

Needs 1.5 sacks to reach 38.5 for his career, which would move him into sole possession of No. 8 in Chargers history. It would also give him his third season with double-digit sacks.

Needs three sacks to become the eighth player in team annals to reach 40 sacks for his career.

LB Jatavis Brown

Will reach 50 career games played on Thursday.

RB Austin Ekeler

Needs five catches to reach 126 for his career, which would pass Don Woods for No. 10 in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs 25 receiving yards to pass Chuck Muncie (1,237) for No. 9 in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs a touchdown catch to tie Gary Anderson and Ronnie Harmon with 12 career receiving touchdowns for the fourth-most in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs two touchdown catches to tie Danny Woodhead with 13 career receiving touchdowns for the third-most in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs 108 scrimmage yards to reach 959, setting a single-season career high.

Needs 149 scrimmage yards to reach 1,000 on the season.

RB Melvin Gordon III

Needs 66 rushing yards to pass RB Natrone Means (3,885) for No. 5 in Chargers history.

Needs a touchdown run to reach 32 for his career and break a tie with RB Marion Butts for No. 5 in team annals.

Needs four catches to reach 200 for his career.

Needs 47 receiving yards to reach 1,690 for his career, which would pass Keith Lincoln for No. 5 in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs a touchdown catch to tie Gary Anderson and Ronnie Harmon with 12 career receiving touchdowns for the fourth-most in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs two touchdown catches to tie Danny Woodhead with 13 career receiving touchdowns for the third-most in Chargers history among running backs.

Needs 105 yards from scrimmage to pass Ronnie Harmon (5,567) for No. 3 in team annals among running backs.

TE Virgil Green

CB Casey Hayward Jr.

Needs an interception to reach 23 for his career, which would tie for the fourth-most in the NFL since he entered the league in 2012. It would also give him 14 since joining the Bolts in 2016, tying for the third-most over that span.

TE Hunter Henry

Needs three receptions to pass Jacque MacKinnon (112) for No. 8 in team history by a tight end.

DE Melvin Ingram III

Will reach 100 career games played on Thursday.

Needs two sacks to reach 46.5 for his career, putting him into the top five in team history past DE Raylee Johnson (46.0).

Needs three sacks to reach 47.5 for his career and pass LB Junior Seau (47.0) for No. 4 in Chargers history.

RB Justin Jackson

Needs 58 rushing yards to set a single-season career high, topping last year's mark of 206 yards for the season.

S Rayshawn Jenkins

Will reach 40 career games played on Thursday.

DB Desmond King II

Needs an interception return for a touchdown for the third of his career to tie S Eric Weddle and DB Joe Beauchamp for No. 4 in team annals.

- It would make him just the fourth player in NFL history to have a pick-six and a punt return touchdown in multiple seasons (and the only one of those players that was not a first-round selection).
- He would also become the ninth player in NFL history with a pick-six in each of his first three seasons, and the first since CB Dominique Rodgers-Cromartie did so from 2008-10.

Needs 1.5 sacks to reach 8.0 for his career, which would be good for the second-most by a Chargers defensive back in history.

Needs a punt return for a touchdown for the third of his career, making him the fourth player in history with multiple punt return touchdowns while with the Bolts.

NT Brandon Mebane

QB Philip Rivers

Needs 391 passing yards to reach 3,000 for the season, which would give him 14 consecutive seasons with at least 3,000 yards. It would tie for the fourth-longest streak in NFL history.

With a passer rating above 120, will have eclipsed that mark in 50 career games, becoming the fourth player in NFL history to do so.

With a passer rating above 130, will have eclipsed that mark in 30 career games, becoming the fourth player in NFL history to do so.

G/T Michael Schofield III

Will reach 70 career games played and can reach 60 career starts on Thursday.

T Sam Tevi

Will reach 40 career games played on Thursday.

WR Mike Williams

Needs 135 receiving yards to reach 665 on the year and set a single-season career high.

2019 POTENTIAL MILESTONES

Los Angeles Chargers

With a playoff berth, the Chargers will have appeared in the postseason 20 times since being founded in 1960.

With five wins, the Chargers will reach 160 total wins since realignment in 2002. Only New England, Pittsburgh, Indianapolis and Green Bay have eclipsed that mark over that span.

WR Keenan Allen

Needs 20 catches to pass Hall of Fame WR Lance Alworth (493) for No. 5 in franchise history.

Needs 26 receptions to be the fifth player in history to reach 500 career catches in a Chargers uniform.

Needs 270 receiving yards to pass WR Wes Chandler (6,132) for No. 6 in Chargers history.

With two 100-yard receiving games, would reach 25 for his career to move into second in Chargers history.

K Michael Badgley

Made 93.8 percent (15-of-16) of his field goal attempts as a rookie, and could set an NFL record for best field goal percentage by a kicker with at least 25 attempts over the first two seasons of a career (Baltimore„s Justin Tucker, 91.9 percent).

RB Austin Ekeler

Needs 236 receiving yards to pass Danny Woodhead (1,429) for the most in team history by an undrafted running back. It would also give him the seventh-most receiving yards among all running backs in Chargers history.

Needs three touchdown catches to pass Woodhead (13) for the most in team history by an undrafted running back. It would also tie him with Keith Lincoln for the second-most touchdown catches among all running backs in Chargers history.

Needs four touchdown catches to have nine on the season, which would set a single-season team record among running backs. It would be the most by an NFL running back in a single season since 2001.

Needs five touchdown catches to pass Dan Reeves (15) for the most in NFL history among undrafted running backs through the first three seasons of his career. It would also bring him past Hall of Fame RB LaDainian Tomlinson (15) for the most receiving touchdowns among all running backs in Chargers history.

RB Melvin Gordon III

Needs 39 rushing attempts to reach 1,000 for his career.

Needs 53 rushing attempts to pass RB Natrone Means (1,013) for No. 4 in team annals.

Needs 55 rushing attempts to pass RB Paul Lowe (1,015) for No. 3 in Chargers history.

Needs 71 rushing attempts to pass RB Marion Butts (1,031) for No. 2 in franchise history.

Needs 242 rushing yards to pass RB Ryan Mathews (4,061) for No. 4 in Chargers history.

Needs five touchdown catches to reach 16 for his career, which would pass Hall of Fame RB LaDainian Tomlinson for the most by a running back in Chargers history.

TE Hunter Henry

Needs 349 receiving yards to pass Eric Sievers (1,793) for No. 8 among tight ends in team history.

With six touchdown catches, would become the sixth tight end in Chargers history to reach 20 for his career.

DE Melvin Ingram III

Needs 5.5 sacks to become the fourth Charger in history to reach 50 career sacks with the club.

QB Philip Rivers

Needs 120 completions to pass New York Giants QB Eli Manning for No. 6 in NFL history.

Needs to throw 14 touchdown passes to reach 400 for his career to become the sixth player in league annals to eclipse that mark.

Needs three games with at least three-plus touchdowns to become the seventh player in NFL history to have at least 60 for his career.

WR Mike Williams

ALLEN A DAY'S WORK

LIVIN' ON A TEAR

With career years in 2017 and '18, Allen earned back-to-back Pro Bowl recognition as one the top receivers in football. Since 2017, he ranks No. 3 in the NFL in receptions and fifth in receiving yards.

NFL Rankings, 2017-Present

COMEBACK KID

Allen earned Comeback Player of the Year honors in 2017 after setting a single-season franchise mark with 102 catches while ranking No. 2 in team history with 1,393 receiving yards – the first season for a Chargers receiver with at least 1,300 yards since 1980. He followed it up in 2018 a 97-catch season, giving Allen two of the three best receiving seasons in team annals.

UNBELIEVABLY UNDRAFTED

Ekeler has become one of the top undrafted receiving running backs early in his career, bringing in 11 scoring grabs since 2017. He became the first undrafted RB in the common draft era (since 1967) to register three receiving scores in each of his first three pro seasons. Ekeler also ranks second in NFL history among undrafted running backs over their first three seasons.

RIVERS' RECORD BREAKING DAY VS. ARIZONA

Rivers' 25 consecutive completions are the most by a quarterback in a single game in NFL history and are tied with Ryan Tannehill (25 consecutive completions from Weeks 6-7 in 2015) for the most consecutive passes completed at any point in league history. Washington's Mark Brunell previously held the record for the most consecutive completions to begin a game, completing his first 22 passes against Houston on September 24, 2006.

Rivers' 96.6 completion percentage is the highest by a quarterback in a single game in league annals (minimum 20 attempts), surpassing the previous high of 92.3 percent (24 of 26 passing) set by Pro Football Hall of Famer Kurt Warner against Jacksonville on September 20, 2009.

HEAD COACH ANTHONY LYNN

On Jan. 13, 2017, the Los Angeles Chargers named Anthony Lynn the 16th head coach in franchise history and the first African-American head coach in team annals. Lynn joined the Chargers after spending the 2015-16 seasons with the Buffalo Bills as the assistant head coach, running backs coach and holding the positions of offensive coordinator and interim head coach.

In just his second season, Lynn led the Chargers to their first playoff appearance since 2013 and their best record since 2009 by posting a 12-4 mark. The Chargers led the NFL with seven Pro Bowl selections and were a resilient squad, winning eight-straight road contests. For his efforts in 2018, Lynn was recognized by the Fritz Pollard Alliance with the Paul "Tank" Younger Award and was later tabbed the Coach of the Year by the Los Angeles Sports Council.

In his first season at the helm in Los Angeles, Lynn rallied the team after an 0-4 start to win nine of the final 12 games, including six of the last seven contests. The Chargers finished 9-7 and just missed out on a playoff berth due to a tiebreaker. The nine wins over the 12-game span was the best mark since the team won the last 11 games of the 2009 season. The five-straight home wins were also the best run on home turf since that 2009 season.

Lynn put his imprint on the team in year one. The Bolts turned the ball over just 15 times in 2017 to rank tied for fourth in the NFL after a season in which they were dead last with 35 turnovers. The offensive line led the league in the least amount of sacks allowed with 18. The Chargers haven't led the league in the least amount of sacks allowed since in the AFL in 1968. In two seasons in Los Angeles, Lynn has compiled a 21-11 regular season record.

A native of Celina, Texas, some 40 miles north of Dallas, Lynn was an All-Southwest Conference running back as a collegian at Texas Tech, where he rushed for 1,911 yards and 17 touchdowns on 481 carries. That helped him earn a ticket to the NFL where he signed with the New York Giants as an undrafted free agent in 1992. After being released by the Giants, Lynn signed with Denver in 1993 and appeared in 13 games for the Broncos. In 1994, he suffered a broken leg and spent the year on injured reserve. Lynn moved on to the Bay Area in 1995, spending two seasons with the San Francisco 49ers (1995-96) before concluding his career in Denver (1997-99) where he won back-to-back Super Bowl championships (XXXII and XXXIII) with the Broncos. Lynn hung up his cleats after the '99 season, having played in 83 career games.

Lynn jumped right into the coaching ranks in 2000, spending three seasons (2000-02) with the Broncos as an offensive assistant and assistant to special teams. In 2003, he landed his first full-time position gig as the running backs coach for the Jacksonville Jaguars (2003-04). That was followed by similar positions with the Dallas Cowboys (2005-06), Cleveland Browns (2007-08), New York Jets (2009-14) and Bills (2015-16). Lynn carried the additional title of assistant head coach in New York in 2014 and with the Bills for his two seasons there.

Lynn spent the last two seasons (2015-16) with the Bills, including the final 14 games of the 2016 season as their offensive coordinator and the final game of the year as their interim head coach. The Bills led the NFL in both of Lynn's seasons in both rushing yards (2,630 in 2016 and 2,432 in 2015) and rushing touchdowns (29 in 2016 and 19, tie in 2015). The Bills also led the League in average yards per carry (5.3 in 2016 and 4.8, tie in 2015) in each of his two seasons in Upstate New York. More impressively, at his last two coaching stops (New York and Buffalo), his teams combined to rush for 18,218 yards during that span (2009-16), the most combined yards in the NFL over that time period. Also in Week 16 of the 2016 season, as offensive coordinator for the Bills, Lynn led the offense to a franchise-record 589 total yards. The 589 total yards were the second-most in a single game in the NFL that season.

Lynn is married to Stacey Bell Lynn. He has two children, son, D'Anton, and daughter, Danielle. Stacey is a news anchor at WNBC in New York City. D'Anton played football collegiately at Penn State and professionally with the New York Jets and the Canadian Football League's Hamilton Tiger-Cats and currently is the assistant defensive backs coach for the Houston Texans. Danielle studied at the University of Oklahoma and earned her master's degree at the University of North Texas. She currently is the COO of The Lynn Family Foundation and the Process Improvement Specialist at Southwest Hospital in Dallas.

In the spring of 2018, Lynn completed his college degree after leaving school for the NFL. Despite being in his first year as a head coach, Lynn received his degree in interdisciplinary studies from UNLV.

GENERAL MANAGER TOM TELESCO

With a keen eye for acquiring talented players, Tom Telesco serves his seventh season as General Manager of the Chargers in 2019.

Telesco was hired by the Chargers in January 2013. Forty-years-old at the time of his hiring, he became the youngest general manager in team history. Telesco immediately helped the Chargers return to the playoffs in 2013 with a roster that featured 25 players who joined the team prior to or during the season.

His first draft featured 2013 Pepsi Next NFL Rookie of the Year Keenan Allen. In 2017, Allen went on to break the Chargers' single-season receptions record and posted the second-most receiving yards in team history en route to being named the NFL Comeback Player of the Year and earning his first Pro Bowl nod.

Over his six years with the organization, Telesco has drafted four pro bowlers in the first round in Jason Verrett, Melvin Gordon, Joey Bosa and Derwin James.

Telesco also has a proven track record with undrafted free agents. His finds have been highlighted by running back Austin Ekeler out of Western State, Pro Bowl special teamer Adrian Phillips, deep-threat and 1,000-yard receiver Tyrell Williams out of Western Oregon and special teams stalwart Nick Dzubnar from Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo.

On top of his draft choices, Telesco has brought in some of the top free agent talents in the NFL. Casey Hayward has blossomed into one of the top corners in the league, making back-to-back Pro Bowls in 2016-17 while offensive tackle Russell Okung and center Mike Pouncey made the Pro Bowl in their first seasons with the team. His signings also include defensive tackle Brandon Mebane, wide receiver/punt returner Travis Benjamin and his latest being three-time Pro Bowl linebacker Thomas Davis in 2019.

A native of Buffalo, N.Y., Telesco prepped at St. Francis High School in Athol Springs, N.Y. Days prior to Super Bowl XLVIII in January 2014, which was co-hosted by New York and New Jersey, Telesco was recognized for their accomplishments on the floor of the New York State Senate by Senator Timothy Kennedy.

After graduating from St. Francis, Telesco played wide receiver at John Carroll University in Ohio. He was a starter on the Blue Streaks' 1994 Ohio Athletic Conference Championship team, and two of his teammates at John Carroll were Chris and Brian Polian, sons of Bill Polian, a 2015 inductee into the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

While attending John Carroll, Telesco spent four summers (1991-94) as a training camp intern with the Buffalo Bills. At that time, the elder Polian was the Bills' general manager. Polian left Buffalo for Carolina in 1994 and after Telesco graduated from John Carroll with a degree in business management in 1995, Polian hired him to work in the Panthers' scouting department. In 1998, Telesco and Polian moved on to Indianapolis, where Telesco would spend his next 15 NFL seasons as a college scout, pro scout, director of pro scouting, director of player personnel and vice president of football operations. He worked in Indianapolis during Peyton Manning's entire career with the Colts and later part of the team that brought Andrew Luck to the Colts with the first pick of the 2012 NFL Draft. Telesco also was involved in Colts drafts that featured four-time Pro Bowl running back Edgerrin James, five-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Reggie Wayne, Dwight Freeney, a seven-time Pro Bowler as a Colt and two-time Pro Bowl selection, and 2007 NFL Defensive Player of the Year Bob Sanders.

Telesco's tenure in Indianapolis was one of the most successful eras in Colts history. They played in two Super Bowls, including a victory over Chicago in Super Bowl XLI. From 1998-2012, the Colts won 154 regular-season games, eight division titles and they appeared in the playoffs 12 times. Indianapolis set an NFL record with 12 or more wins in seven consecutive seasons and they won an NFL-record 23-straight regular-season games during the 2008-09 seasons. Their 115 regular-season wins from 2000-09 set an NFL record for wins in a decade.

In 2015 and this past year in 2018, Telesco was invited to be a speaker at the NFL's Career Development Symposium in Arizona. The program, attended by nearly 70 coaches and front office executives, was designed to engage aspiring head coach and general manager candidates. Telesco was one of only two active general managers invited to address participants at the symposium. He is also the co-chairman of the NFL General Manager Advisory Committee.

Telesco and his wife, Larah, have a daughter, Elena, and two sons, Thomas and Nicholas.

Tom Telesco's Experience
1995-96 – Scouting Assistant, Carolina Panthers
1997 – Area Scout, Carolina Panthers
1998-00 – Area Scout, Indianapolis Colts
2001-03 – Pro Scout, Indianapolis Colts

Tom Telesco's Experience
2012 – V.P. of Football Operations, Indianapolis Colts
2013-19 – General Manager, Los Angeles Chargers

WEEK 1 RECAP - CHARGERS 30, COLTS 24 (OT)

Austin Ekeler has been a solid backup to Melvin Gordon in the Los Angeles Chargers' backfield the past two seasons, but he hasn't gotten much attention while sitting behind one of the top rushers in the league.

Ekeler isn't going to be overlooked any longer after his performance on Sunday as the Chargers defeated the Indianapolis Colts 30-24 in overtime.

With Gordon holding out for a new contract, Ekeler had a career-best 154 yards from scrimmage. He also scored three touchdowns, including the winner on a 7-yard run with 5:01 remaining in overtime to cap off an eight-play, 75-yard drive.

The Chargers' running game was effective, averaging six yards per carry with four rushes over 10 yards. Justin Jackson had six carries for 57 yards, with most of his work coming in the first half.

Rivers, who made his 209th consecutive start to pass Peyton Manning for the third-longest streak among NFL QBs, completed 25 of 34 passes for 333 yards. It was the fifth time Rivers has thrown three or more TD passes in an opener.

Ekeler opened the scoring with a 1-yard reception in the first quarter. He then went 55 yards on a screen pass on Los Angeles' first drive of the third quarter to extend its lead to 24-9. Ekeler shed attempted tackles by Darius Leonard and Pierre Desir before motoring up the right sideline.

Indianapolis responded with 15 straight points to force overtime. Marlon Mack, who had 25 carries for 174 yards, brought the Colts within 24-16 with a career-long 63-yard scamper up the left sideline midway through the third quarter.

They tied it with 48 seconds remaining when Jacoby Brissett hit T.Y. Hilton for their second scoring connection of the day. Hilton caught the ball at the Chargers 19, made Adrian Phillips miss and then extended the ball over the pylon before going out of bounds. The Colts tied it when Mack ran it in on the 2-point conversion.

Allen had 10 receptions for 123 yards, including a 28-yard touchdown in the second quarter on which he outmuscled Rock Ya-Sin in the end zone. Rivers stepped up in the pocket and lofted it up so Allen could make a play on a 50-50 ball.

WEEK 2 RECAP - LIONS 13, CHARGERS 10

Despite Austin Ekeler's second consecutive strong performance and a strong showing by their run defense, the Los Angeles Chargers lost to the Detroit Lions, 13-10, in Week 2.

Ekeler, who caught the game-winning touchdown in overtime in Week 1 against the Colts, followed up his 154-total yard performance with 133 total yards Sunday, including a touchdown where the 5-foot-9 running back jumped over four Lions defenders.

Ekeler, in tandem with Justin Jackson who had 59 yards rushing on seven carries total, created problems for the Lions defense. But their performance was not flawless, as Ekeler fumbled the ball at the Lions' 1-yard line midway through the third quarter.

Ekeler wasn't the only Charger racking up yards, as quarterback Philip Rivers connected with wide receiver Keenan Allen all afternoon to the tune of eight receptions for 98 yards.

One of those plays came in the closing moments of the first half when Rivers threw deep to a diving Mike Williams for a 47-yard completion, setting up a 39-yard Ty Long field goal with time expiring in the half.

Williams, who didn't practice Wednesday or Thursday and was a game-time decision for Sunday's game, had three receptions for 83 yards.

The Chargers had multiple opportunities to extend their lead, but holding penalties called back touchdowns from Ekeler and Jackson in the third quarter.

After the Chargers defense limited the Lions to six points through the first three quarters thanks to interceptions from Casey Hayward Jr. and Rayshawn Jenkins, Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford connected with Kenny Golladay for a 31-yard touchdown to take the lead in the fourth quarter.

The Chargers only allowed 94 yards rushing and 3.4 yards per carry on the afternoon.

Linebacker Thomas Davis Sr. led the defense with 12 tackles, upping the 36-year-old's total to 26. It marked the first time Davis Sr. has had back-to-back games with 10-plus tackles since 2015.

WEEK 3 RECAP - TEXANS 27, CHARGERS 20

The Los Angeles Chargers lost to the Houston Texans Sunday, 27-20, despite a monster game from Keenan Allen, who recorded two touchdowns and a career-high 183 yards receiving on thirteen receptions.

On the Texans' first drive of the afternoon, Desmond King recovered a fumble by Texans quarterback Deshaun Watson and ran it 13 yards to Houston's 15-yard line.

Three plays and 15 yards later, the Chargers scored the first points of the game on a 7-yard touchdown pass from Philip Rivers to Allen with 9:41 left in the first quarter.

On the Chargers' next possession, Long's 34-yard field goal extended the Bolts' lead to 10-0 with 10:36 remaining in the second quarter. The kick capped a 15-play, 72-yard drive that took 8:21 off the clock.

The Texans responded with a quick scoring drive, moving the ball 75 yards on five plays in 2:21. Watson's touchdown pass to Daniel Fells and the ensuing extra point cut the Chargers lead to 10-7 with 8:11 to go in the second quarter.

Then, in shotgun formation, Rivers found Allen who made a diving defender miss at the 8-yard line and ran the ball into the end zone for a 12-yard touchdown, the veteran receiver's second score of the game.

With time expiring in the half, Texans kicker Ka'imi Fairbairn's 56-yard field goal attempt missed wide right, keeping the score, 17-7, at the half.

Midway through the third quarter, Texans running back Carlos Hyde ran three yards for a touchdown on the play after a 30-yard pass from Watson to Will Fuller. The Fairbairn extra point trimmed the Houston deficit to 17-14.

The Chargers advanced to the Texans 29 on the ensuing drive before Houston recovered a Rivers fumble.

With 1:19 left in the third, Houston took its first lead of the game on a 15-yard pass from Watson to Jordan Akins, followed by a Fairbairn extra point. Watson completed 25 of 34 passes for 351 yards, three touchdowns and zero interceptions.

The next score of the game came at the 9:53 mark of the fourth quarter, with Watson escaping a sack and again finding Akins, who ran into the end zone for a 53-yard touchdown, extending the Texans lead to 27-17. Akins finished with 73 yards receiving and his first two career touchdowns.

On the next possession, Rivers efficiently led the Chargers down the field, highlighted by a 34-yard pass to Allen.

The six-play, 50-yard drive took just 2:26 and ended in a Long 43-yarder that put the Bolts within a touchdown, 27-20 with 7:19 left to play.

Rivers then led the Chargers to the Texans 24, but they could not convert on 4th and 14, ending their comeback effort.

WEEK 4 RECAP - CHARGERS 30, DOLPHINS 10

The Los Angeles Chargers defeated the Miami Dolphins, 30-10, at Hard Rock Stadium Sunday, thanks to two touchdowns and 310 yards passing from Philip Rivers on 24-of-30 and two touchdowns and 122 scrimmage yards for running back Austin Ekeler.

After allowing Dolphins quarterback Josh Rosen to complete 12 of 16 passes for 159 yards and a touchdown in the first half, the Bolts defense shut him down, giving up just 21 yards passing the rest of the way and intercepting the second-year signal caller.

On the first drive of the game, Rivers engineered a nine-play, 49-yard drive that culminated in a 44-yard field goal from punter Ty Long with 10:21 remaining in the first quarter. Long, handling kicking duties in place of the injured Michael Badgley for the fourth consecutive week, scored 12 points and was perfect on the day, drilling three field goals and three extra points.

On the ensuing Dolphins possession, Rosen completed all four of his passes for 75 yards passing, the last of which a 34-yard touchdown strike to wide receiver Devante Parker at the 6:32 mark in the first quarter. After the extra point by Jason Sanders, the Dolphins took their first lead of the season, 7-3.

The Dolphins responded with a 12-play, 67-yard drive that resulted in a 30-yard Sanders field goal, tying the game at 10 with 11:15 remaining in the second quarter.

On the next Bolts drive, Rivers found Ekeler for an 18-yard touchdown pass with 50 seconds remaining in the half. Ekeler caught the ball near the left sideline and ran it about 15 yards into the end zone.

On third and four on the Dolphins' first drive of the second half, veteran linebacker Thomas Davis, in his 15th NFL season, and rookie defensive tackle Jerry Tillery collaborated to sack Rosen, resulting in a Dolphins punt. It was Tillery's first career regular season half sack in the NFL after he recorded eight in his final year at Notre Dame and one during the Chargers preseason.

The next Chargers possession, a 16-play, 66-yard drive, took 10:33 off the clock and culminated in a successful 45-yarder by Long, extending the L.A. lead to 20-10 with 1:33 to play in the third quarter.

On the next Miami drive, cornerback Michael Davis managed to stay inbounds to secure his first career NFL interception after missing the past two weeks due to injury.

This led to a 51-yard field goal by Long with 7:32 remaining in the game, lengthening the Chargers lead to 30-10.

WEEK 5 RECAP - BRONCOS 20, CHARGERS 13

The Los Angeles Chargers' comeback attempt against the Denver Broncos fell short, as L.A. lost, 20-13, in its first divisional game of the season. The Bolts scored 10 unanswered points to come within a touchdown, but it wasn't enough to overcome the Broncos' early 17-point advantage.

On their first drive of the game, the Broncos took a 7-0 lead after a 4-yard touchdown run by running back Phillip Lindsay and an extra point by Brandon McManus. Lindsay rushed for 114 yards on 15 carries in the game, also recording 33 yards receiving. The opening drive totaled 75 yards on seven plays and took just 3:54 to complete.

After the Chargers failed to score on their opening possession, the Broncos scored their second touchdown on as many drives, courtesy of a 70-yard pass from quarterback Joe Flacco to wide receiver Courtland Sutton, who finished with 92 yards receiving on four catches. After the successful extra point, Denver led 14-0 with 4:58 to play in the first quarter.

On the ensuing Broncos possession, McManus was accurate on a 40-yard field goal, increasing the Denver advantage to 17-0 with 5:22 remaining in the first half. The field goal capped an eight-play, 40-yard drive.

After the Bolts went three-and-out to start the second half, they forced the Broncos to punt for the first time of the afternoon.

On the next Denver possession, the Chargers forced a three-and-out for the first time in the game, with the play of the drive being a sack by first-round pick defensive tackle Jerry Tillery on second down.

The Chargers forced a three-and-out for a second consecutive defensive stand. On fourth down, defensive back Desmond King returned the punt 68 yards into the end zone to put the Bolts on the board.

On the following Broncos drive, a third-down sack by defensive end Joey Bosa set up a 54-yard field goal by McManus, which hooked wide left, keeping the score 17-7 in favor of Denver.

The Chargers then marched down the field in just 2:08, with their four-play, 29-yard drive culminating in a successful 45-yard field goal by McLaughlin, the first made field goal of his NFL career. This cut the Bolts deficit to a single score at 17-10, with 6:52 remaining on the game clock.

The Bolts then marched down the field for a successful 32-yard kick by McLaughlin with 15 seconds left, but Los Angeles failed to recover the onside kick, ending the Chargers' comeback hopes.

WEEK 6 RECAP - STEELERS 24, CHARGERS 17

The Los Angeles Chargers lost to the Pittsburgh Steelers by just a touchdown, 24-17, on Sunday night at home, despite scoring the final 17 points of the game.

On the first play of the game, Philip Rivers found Hunter Henry for a 19-yard reception, the tight end's first catch since injuring his knee in a Week 1 victory over the Colts. Henry caught eight passes on nine targets for 100 yards receiving and two touchdowns on the night.

The pass also marked Rivers' 4,652nd completion, moving the veteran past injured Steelers quarterback Ben Roethlisberger for sole possession of seventh place in all-time completions. The drive ended in a punt, however.

On the ensuing Bolts drive, Rivers fumbled on an attempted backward pass that Steelers linebacker Devin Bush recovered and ran nine yards for a touchdown. After an extra point, the Steelers led 7-0 with 11:01 remaining in the first quarter.

The next Chargers possession was interrupted by a Bush interception on a deflected pass. Seven plays and 40 yards later, the Steelers scored a touchdown on a 12-yard run by running back James Conner. The extra point increased Pittsburgh's advantage to 14-0 with 4:29 to play in the first.

The Steelers put together a 14-play, 86-yard drive on their next drive, which culminated in a 26-yard touchdown pass from Devlin Hodges to James Conner. Chris Boswell's extra point extended the Pittsburgh lead to 21-0 with 6:34 left in the first half.

The Bolts responded with a long drive of their own that featured two consecutive receptions by Mike Williams that went for first downs.

On the first drive of the second half, the Steelers had first and goal on the Chargers' 2-yard line, but L.A. made a strong goal-line stand, limiting Pittsburgh to a 20-yard Boswell field goal. The possession took 6:48 off the clock and brought the score to 24-0 with 8:12 remaining in the third quarter.

Los Angeles got on the board with a 38-yard field goal by McLaughlin with 14:04 to play in the game. The kick concluded an 11-play, 71-yard drive.

On the next possession, Rayshawn Jenkins picked off Hodges for the Miami product's second interception of the season. After intercepting the pass, Jenkins ran the ball eight yards to the Chargers' 30-yard line.

Rivers then engineered an efficient 10-play, 70-yard drive that took just 3:23 and resulted in a 5-yard Hunter Henry touchdown reception.

The Chargers marched down and compiled another efficient scoring drive, advancing 79 yards on eight plays in 2:24. The culminating play was a 10-yard pass from Rivers to Henry for the tight end's second touchdown of the game with 1:29 left to play.

WEEK 7 RECAP - TITANS 23, CHARGERS 20

The Los Angeles Chargers fell to the Tennessee Titans, 23-20, Sunday, despite having two opportunities for a go-ahead touchdown on the Titans' 1-yard line in the final minute.

Tennessee kicker Cody Parkey attempted his first field goal as a Titan, hitting a 45-yarder with 6:06 to play in the first quarter. The drive spanned nine plays and 42 yards and gave Tennessee a 3-0 advantage.

On the ensuing Chargers drive, four plays later, kicker Chase McLaughlin's 29-yard field goal evened the score, 3-3, with two seconds left in the opening quarter.

The Chargers then put together a 94-yard drive ending with a 1-yard touchdown pass to the left from Rivers to a wide-open Melvin Gordon.

The Titans then responded with an efficient eight-play, 86-yard scoring drive that culminated in an 8-yard bullet-pass touchdown from Tannehill to wide receiver Corey Davis. Parkey's extra point knotted the game at 10 apiece with 26 seconds to go in the half.

The Titans took the lead on their next possession, a 14-play, 85-yard drive that spanned 7:09 and ended in a 5-yard touchdown pass from Tannehill to wide receiver Tajae Sharpe in the back of the end zone. After Parker doinked the extra point off of the right upright, Tennessee held a 16-10 advantage over Los Angeles with 13:11 to play in the contest.

The Bolts responded with a career-long 50-yard field goal by McLaughlin with 10:59 on the game clock.

The Titans then put together a seven-play, 75-yard drive, culminating in an 11-yard Derrick Henry touchdown run to the left with 6:39 remaining in the game. Parkey's successful extra point extended the Tennessee lead to 23-13. To go with his touchdown, Henry ran for 90 yards on 22 carries Sunday.

Just five plays later, Austin Ekeler, lined up out-wide to the right, stutter-stepped and beat his defender for a 41-yard touchdown reception on a perfect pass from Rivers.

On fourth and inches near midfield, the Titans went for it on a Tannehill sneak and failed to convert.

With 2:39 left in the game and trailing by a field goal, the Bolts took over possession.

On a third and four, Rivers found Williams for a first-down conversion that put the Chargers into field-goal range.

On the next play, the Bolts quarterback hit Ekeler for 19 yards to move the ball to the Titans' 16-yard line.

Rivers connected with Ekeler, who was tackled a half-yard shy of the end zone. After a false start, Gordon was initially ruled to have scored a touchdown, but the call was overturned.

Gordon then fumbled to end the Bolts' hopes of a victory.

WEEK 8 RECAP - CHARGERS 17, BEARS 16

The Chargers beat the Chicago Bears, 17-16, Sunday as Eddie Piñeiro missed a field goal with time expiring, his second missed field goal of the game.

On the ensuing Chargers possession, Philip Rivers was intercepted by cornerback Kyle Fuller, with the Bears taking over at L.A.'s 24. Chicago advanced to the 4-yard line, but did not get any farther, settling for a successful 22-yarder by Piñeiro with 14:45 left in the second quarter.

The next time the Bears got into the red zone, advancing to the Chargers' 9-yard line, the Bolts defense made Chicago settle for a field goal again. Piñeiro's successful 25-yarder made the score 6-0 with 4:16 to go in the half.

On the Bolts' next drive, Rivers found wide receiver Mike Williams for a 19-yard connection, moving the ball to the Bears' 19 yard-line. Melvin Gordon then scored the Chargers' first points of the day on a 19-yard touchdown run, culminating a four-play, 75-yard drive.

The Bears advanced all the way to the Chargers' 1-yard-line on their next possession, but the Bolts made another goal-line stand. Running out of time, Bears quarterback Mitchell Trubisky spiked the ball with one second left. Piñeiro then converted a 19-yard field goal with time expiring, giving the Bears a 9-7 halftime lead.

On the Bears' first drive of the second half, running back David Montgomery scored a 4-yard rushing touchdown with 8:08 to go in the third quarter. After Piñeiro nailed the extra point, the Bears led 16-7.

Rivers then engineered a 14-play, 73-yard scoring drive that took 7:29. The possession culminated in a successful 20-yard field goal by McLaughlin, cutting the Bolts deficit to 16-10 with 42 seconds left in the third quarter.

Four plays later, defensive tackle Damion Square forced a Trubisky fumble that was recovered by Melvin Ingram in the defensive end's first game back from injury.

On third down for the Bolts, Rivers' 11-yard pass to tight end Hunter Henry fell inches shy of a first down, forcing the Chargers to punt.

Trubisky then evaded pressure and ran for 12 yards to advance his team to the Bolts' 21. The Bears then kneeled to set up a game-winning field goal with time expiring. However, Piñeiro missed the 41-yard attempt with no time on the clock, preserving a 17-16 Bolts victory.

WEEK 9 RECAP - CHARGERS 26, PACKERS 11

The Chargers defeated the Green Bay Packers, 26-11, leading wire-to-wire against a team that entered with a 7-1 record and limiting their opponents to 184 total yards. Defensive ends Joey Bosa and Melvin Ingram combined for three sacks and six QB hits, and Michael Badgley went 4-for-5 from field goal range in his season debut.

Philip Rivers was efficient, and the Chargers' running game was impressive, racking up 159 yards and two touchdowns on 38 carries.

To open the game, the Chargers picked up six first downs, advancing 84 yards on 15 plays. The 8:04 drive culminated in a 29-yard field goal by Badgley, the kicker's first of the season since returning from a groin injury. The kick gave the Chargers a 3-0 lead with 7:00 left in the first quarter.

Badgley turned the next drive into three more points by nailing a 40-yard field goal, his second field goal of the contest. The five-play, 37-yard drive ended with the Bolts leading 6-0 with 1:09 remaining in the opening quarter.

The Bolts then forced a Packers punt for the fourth-consecutive time in the game, which led to another productive Chargers possession. The 13-play, 76-yard drive was capped by Badgley's third field goal of the game, a 34-yarder, with time expiring in the half.

The Chargers then put together another scoring drive, featuring a highlight-reel 16-yard run by Melvin Gordon, in which he hurdled a defender. Gordon finished with 80 yards rushing on 20 carries and two scores.

The eight-play, 52-yard possession culminated in a fourth successful field goal by Badgley, giving the Bolts a 12-0 advantage with 9:46 left in the third quarter.

Later, linebacker Drue Tranquill blocked Packers punter J.K. Scott's punt, which allowed the Bolts to start their drive at the Green Bay 27.

It took six plays for the Chargers to score their first touchdown of the afternoon, a 1-yard run by Gordon with 3:56 to go in the quarter.

The ten-play, 75-yard possession took 5:14 off the clock and ended in Gordon's second-consecutive touchdown of the game, another 1-yard score. The play came on fourth down, with Chargers head coach Anthony Lynn electing to go for the touchdown.

Badgley converted the extra point to increase the Chargers' lead to 23 points at 26-3 with 10:32 remaining in the contest.

LOS ANGELES CHARGERS

All hail the NFL's coolest jersey: Chargers embrace powder blues

By Eric Williams & Alden Gonzalez

LOS ANGELES -- Powder blue -- or baby blue, or light blue, or basically anything that resides on that side of the palette -- is Casey Hayward's favorite color.

Through his first three seasons with the Chargers, the Pro Bowl cornerback spoke out often about his desire to wear the organization's old powder blue uniforms more frequently. When the Los Angeles Chargers announced that they would make those throwbacks their primaries for the 2019 season, Hayward was among the most elated.

Speaking with noticeable passion this summer, he said: "Maybe because it's so soft. That blue, it's so soft. So it's not too heavy on the eye. And it's light. You can look up -- it's sky blue right now -- and it just reminds you of it."

That soft blue, with the white pants adorned with yellow lightning bolts, will debut at the Miami Dolphins on Sunday and will be worn six times overall. That includes four times at home, making 2019 the first time the powder blues have been the primary home uniform since the 1970s. Chargers fans, previously in San Diego and more recently in Los Angeles, have spent years clamoring for them. But the uniforms have long been revered, enough so that the NFL Network named them the best uniform of all time in 2012.

When the announcement was made in April, Chargers president of football operations John Spanos expected minimal traction. He wound up hearing from East Coast friends he hadn't spoken to in decades. A hype video developed by the Chargers' social media department went viral.

Other teams, namely the former Houston Oilers and current Tennessee Titans, have made use of a lighter shade of blue. But Paul Lukas, a noted uniform expert who writes for Sports Illustrated, believes "there really is no other team that owns that color the way the Chargers have always owned it."

"It just resonates with people," he said. "It just feels timeless and perfect."

Keenan Allen, the Chargers' 27-year-old wide receiver, is something of a throwback collector. He estimates he owns roughly 100 old jerseys, split between the NBA and the NFL. Allen is among an entire generation of young adults who helped spark a throwback craze that has dominated the culture in recent years, a love that prompted the Chargers -- and, last year, the Rams -- to revert to the past in hopes of ingratiating themselves with the L.A. market.

"There was a simplicity to them that a lot of people find appealing and endearing," Lukas said. "And also, time has a way of smoothing out some of the rough edges."

'Electric' look embodies Chargers' history

The Chargers began wearing the powder blue uniforms during the franchise's inaugural season in Los Angeles in 1960, and continued to wear them in San Diego when they began playing games at Balboa Park.

They represent some of the most successful teams in franchise history. Led by Hall of Fame receiver Lance Alworth, the Chargers went to the AFL title game five times during the 1960s, winning it all in 1963 before joining the NFL with the 1970 merger.

"They're historic," longtime San Diego Union-Tribune columnist Nick Canepa, a native San Diegan who started covering the Chargers in 1982, said of the powder blues. "That's what the AFL team wore. That was their look. They were unique."

Hall of Fame quarterback Dan Fouts was on the final Chargers team to wear the powder blues as its primary uniform during his first season in the pros in 1973 before the franchise switched to royal blue. He has a decidedly old-school opinion about the powder blues.

"As players we wear what they throw in our locker," Fouts said. "We're more concerned about those other jerseys on the other side of the ball."

However, Fouts also understands what the popular jersey means to the history of the franchise as it continues to try to gain a foothold in its new L.A. home.

"It's nice to see them back," Fouts said. "Fans have always voted them as one of the best uniforms, if not the best, but winning really brings you the recognition that you need."

The Chargers went away from the powder blues for the 1974 season but brought them back as an alternate jersey in 1994, during the NFL's 75th anniversary season. Since then, the Chargers are 20-16 when wearing the retro jerseys, including 4-0 under current coach Anthony Lynn.

"It was really about having understood the history and tradition of when they wore powder blues," Hall of Fame running back LaDainian Tomlinson said. "So every time you put those things on, you knew it was special, you wanted to play your best and it was just a little something extra."

Bobby Rubio is a Pixar story artist and San Diego native who's been a fan of the team since the 1970s. Rubio posts a drawing each week of his beloved team crushing its opponent via Twitter.

"I was pretty excited because they are the best-looking uniforms in the NFL," Rubio said about the powder blues. "I personally like the navy blues because I think they look more menacing and they remind of the LT (LaDainian Tomlinson) years. I can see why people like the powder blues. They're beautiful uniforms. If I had to pick, my choice would be the navy blues.

"But if the L.A. Chargers are trying to invoke an L.A. feeling, they are similar colors to UCLA."

Former Chargers center Nick Hardwick said the iconic jerseys provided an extra boost.

"We always felt like we looked really -- and it's funny to use this word -- electric," Hardwick said. "We felt like we looked better than anybody else in the NFL. And the change that they made with the yellow face mask to go with the powder blue, oh my goodness. That is so fire.

"You want to look sweet on the field, to put your jersey on and go, 'Yes, this is right.' It's like a businessman going to a really important meeting, he wants to feel like nobody looks better than me in this room, and those guys are going to have that feeling. They're going to have the sweetest jerseys in the league."

Eight other NFL teams list a darker shade of blue among their primary colors. The Chargers were among them. If nothing else, switching to throwbacks will help them stand out during a time when it has become so easy for them to fade into the background.

"Having a nationally recognized jersey just helps your brand -- period," Chargers president of business operations A.G. Spanos said. "Any time you play in something that's so recognizable, so distinguishable, it helps you."

The question is how the uniform might help the Chargers gain traction within the Los Angeles market. Next season, their fourth back in L.A, the Chargers will move into an opulent new stadium they will share with a Rams team that is more popular.

The Chargers' gains have thus far been minimal, despite that 12-win season in 2018. They're still the team this market didn't want, the one that plays in a tiny stadium often overrun by opposing fans.

The powder blues dominated the bleachers during camp. With four open practices left earlier this summer, the Chargers had already "well surpassed" last year's merchandise sales for all of training camp, according to a team official.

Hayward said "fans will definitely be excited" about the throwbacks because, among other things, they'll offer a connection point to the players many grew up rooting for.

But can it help the Chargers get noticed?

"Nah, I don't think the jerseys will do that," sixth-year defensive back Adrian Phillips said. "The main way to get fans is to win -- but jerseys will definitely be a nice accent. They see those jerseys, they see that powder blue on the field -- they won't help us get more fans, but the fans will love them."

San Diegans bitter about uniform change

Brady Phelps, a San Diego sports commentator who hosts the "Zero Chance" podcast, summed up how many former Chargers fans in his city felt when the powder blue announcement came earlier this year.

"Going to the powder blues felt like adding salt to the wound," Phelps said. "It just felt like that extra punch in the gut when you already took the team, and now the thing we wanted for all of these years -- we would get in flashes for Sunday night football games or Monday Night Football and get excited -- [Spanos] gives that to L.A. when they so clearly didn't want the team there. L.A. doesn't even realize the gift they were given with these powder blues."

Canepa said that when owner Alex Spanos bought the team in 1984, he worked to create a new identity for the franchise with navy blue uniforms, which debuted in 1985.

"People wanted the powder blues," Canepa said. "They'd used them a couple times a year. When they'd go to the powder blues, Chris Berman would hold up the powder blue uniforms on TV, saying they're the best in the world.

"The way I look at it, it's just another slap in the face because they never did it here. It was almost a spite thing. People in town wanted them. They (Chargers ownership) didn't. But I'm not surprised. I thought they would go with the powders all along now that they moved the team."

Even Tomlinson can relate to how fans in San Diego feel about the change, having played most of his career in that city.

"Me and the fans in San Diego have something in common, because I feel the same way," Tomlinson said. "I look at it this way: I will never be a Los Angeles Charger player. My history is with the San Diego Chargers. So with that, I have to be able to say this is the Los Angeles Chargers era. I can't be mad about it. For these guys like Derwin James, this is their era, and they deserve to have more than we have."

Hardwick believes it's time to move on.

"The decisions that they're making now have nothing to do with the past, and it should be taken that way," Hardwick said. "They decided that these jerseys are going to garner some eyeballs and let's move forward with it. I don't think it has anything to do really with San Diego. It was a great decision because those jerseys are awesome."

SoFi Stadium: Naming rights sold for Los Angeles' new arena

By Greg Beacham
The Associated Press
September 15, 2019

LOS ANGELES — SoFi Stadium is the name of the palatial new home of the Los Angeles Rams and the Los Angeles Chargers.

The growing personal finance company formally known as Social Finance has reached a 20-year agreement for the naming rights to the multibillion-dollar stadium complex in Inglewood, California, the teams announced Sunday.

SoFi Stadium is on schedule to open next summer in Hollywood Park ahead of the 2020 season for Los Angeles' two NFL teams. One season later, the stadium will host the Super Bowl.

SoFi was only founded in 2011, but the Bay Area-based online lending startup has grown rapidly into a prominent financial services business particularly successful among people refinancing student loan debt. Led by CEO Anthony Noto, a former NFL executive, and fresh off a $500 million round of equity financing led by Qatar's sovereign wealth fund in May, SoFi bought the naming rights to reap extraordinary exposure from the world's most prominent new stadium.

"It was something that really took a while for us to convince them that we were the right partner, and really gain the confidence that we could make that long-term commitment," Noto told The Associated Press. "We're super excited to have got to this point. They're building something that's unprecedented, and I think the impact it could have (on SoFi) will be equally unprecedented."

The 70,000-seat stadium is the centerpiece of a 298-acre complex developed by Rams owner Stan Kroenke and shared by owner Dean Spanos' Chargers. Along with the 2022 Super Bowl, the arena also will host the 2023 College Football Playoff national championship game, an annual college football bowl game, and the opening and closing ceremonies of the 2028 Olympics.

With SoFi's name out front, the entire complex will have a prominent role in the future of the NFL and the Los Angeles metroplex.

"It's one of these forward-thinking companies," Spanos told the AP. "It's in the forefront of innovation in their industry. That's something and somebody we want to be associated with as our stadium takes on that same sort of energy, because it's something that nobody has ever done before. I think what Stan has built here and done here, in his creativity with this whole development, this probably is going to redefine this area of Los Angeles for the next century. It's going to be something that LA is going to be very proud to have."

Spanos and Rams chief operating officer Kevin Demoff are both pleased by the addition of a young, technologically savvy partner with the naming rights deal.

"When Stan started to imagine what sports and entertainment district at Hollywood Park to be, he wanted to find not only world-class partners, but innovative partners," Demoff told the AP. "He wanted to bring someone unique to the table that hadn't been there before, and I think SoFi is a terrific partner because under Anthony's leadership, you can see their vision for financial technology, for changing banking and loans, and really that process of putting the customer first is very similar to what we want to do at the stadium. I think it's a unique fit for what we believe will be the greatest stadium in the world."

Kroenke and Demoff also were pleased by the compact, alliterative name for such an expansive project, Demoff said.

"SoFi Stadium — I'm a fan of alliteration, so I love it," Demoff said. "That may be very 10th-grade English of me, but I think it's a very natural-sounding name."

Noto has a personal connection to the stadium and to its primary sport: The former Goldman Sachs partner also is the former chief financial officer of the NFL, and he worked on the league's groundwork efforts a decade ago to return to the Los Angeles market. After he became the chief operating officer of Twitter in 2014, Noto worked on its agreement to stream NFL games on the platform.

"I really had a front-row seat on seeing the impact (the NFL) could have on a business like ours," Noto said. "It's a small component of our overall marketing budget and our overall spending budget, but the benefit we get from reallocating the investment into this from other things is magnitudes greater."

SoFi recently has partnered with sports brands ranging from college basketball conference tournaments to the U.S. Open tennis tournament and the X Games. Noto said SoFi aggregated the audiences that saw their combined sponsorship efforts in 2018 and came up with about 15 million unique viewers for the entire year.

That's roughly the same amount of exposure they'll get from one prime-time NFL game in SoFi Stadium, Noto said.

Noto praised his former boss, NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell, for this culmination of the league's years of patient planning for a return to the nation's second-largest market.

"It's a result of Roger's vision back in 2008 and '09 when he established he wanted the LA market to be not just another stadium, but to be this iconic destination," Noto said. "Stan and Dean are bringing it to life in a way that no one could truly comprehend when Roger laid out the vision."

Along with the name, SoFi members will have their own lounge inside the stadium, and the company will stage additional events and seminars at the complex.

The money from a naming rights deal typically offsets construction costs, and Kroenke's project is expected to cost more than $5 billion. The Hollywood Park project already sold separate naming rights last month to American Airlines for a year-round performance venue and stadium entrance area.

Los Angeles Chargers To Debut Chargers LUX Premium Membership Program For 2020 Season

The Los Angeles Chargers move into the new state-of-the-art Los Angeles Stadium at Hollywood Park beginning with the 2020 NFL season. While fans anxiously await the Chargers' new residence after relocating from San Diego two years ago, suite owners will be extra excited and incentivized as the organization debuts Chargers LUX to coincide with the venue's debut.

Chargers LUX is a premium membership program that connects suite owners to the Los Angeles lifestyle through exclusive access to high-end hospitality, business and entertainment benefits year round at no additional cost.

"The Chargers are an organization that is committed to delivering the best experience to the L.A. Chargers family and that extends beyond game day," said A.G. Spanos, Chargers president of business operations. "The experience for our suite holders is going to be unparalleled and we want that to continue year round outside of game day, which is why we created Chargers LUX."

Membership includes access to Spring Place, Velocity Black concierge service and The Private Suite terminal at Los Angeles International Airport (LAX).

Located in Beverly Hills, Spring Place is a workspace and private membership club for the city's visionaries and entrepreneurs to work, socialize and relax; resident membership is $1,250 per month. Velocity Black is a members club and concierge service for high-end experiences, travel, dining and accommodation; its concierge service guarantees a response within one minute. Membership fees to this invitation-only service cost $2,800 per year. The Private Suite at LAX is a new gate into LAX where members pay up to $4,500 annually to benefit from expedited security, await their departure in comfort and style in personal suites, and are driven directly to their aircraft when it's time to take off.

"Customers want more than just a seat," said Steven Ziff, Chargers chief marketing officer. "We really needed to extend the value to something that's never been offered."

"People nowadays want more for their money; they want more value and they expect it," Spanos added. "L.A. is such a competitive marketplace, so we knew we had to be innovative and we believe this program is really first in class and unparalleled. The companies we chose to partner with are the best in class of L.A."

Currently only available to 2020 suite owners, who are paying between $97,000 to $200,000 for their suite, Chargers LUX will eventually feature a tiered system as it expands to include the rest of the team's fan base, including club suites and other premium properties while incorporating various other partners accordingly.

"We strongly believe in the concept of membership and allowing our fans to get 365-day benefits beyond that seat on game day," Ziff said. "We really want that relationship with those fans to be an annual one, knowing we're going to create wonderful events and experiences along the way while adding benefits into those memberships as well."

Inspired by the benefits and perks of the invitation-only American Express Centurion Black Card, Spanos and Ziff believe Chargers LUX will be a game changer in the sports and hospitality industry.

"It applies pressure to other teams in every market to really ramp up the way they look at their customers and really cater a more customized and tailored approach from their partners to season ticket holders," Ziff said. "Every customer deserves a personalized journey and experience from their club.

"We're trying to set a high bar for ourselves to make sure we treat our customers the way they're meant to be treated, which is the best."

Chargers Grant Make-A-Wish for Henry Wat

By Hayley Elwood

Last November, Henry Wat had an opportunity to visit Hoag Performance Center after he submitted a writing assignment in school describing his best day ever which was a hypothetical 75-0 Los Angeles Chargers victory.

But over the weekend, Wat, who suffers from Duchenne's Muscular Dystrophy, truly had his "best day ever."

It was then that the Chargers and Make-A-Wish Foundation made his dream of meeting Bolts legend and Hall of Fame quarterback, Dan Fouts, and watching him call a Chargers game come true.

"It's everything that I could have wished for my kid that (we) couldn't provide for him ourselves," Kristin Wat, Henry's mom said. "We try and make our kids' wishes happen to the best of our ability, but an event like today, and Monday's practice, and all of the warm invitations and friendships that have come from the Chargers and Make-A-Wish are things I never could have provided for my own kid. I'm just over the moon with excitement for him."

"It was special for me and surprising, too," Fouts said. "The family support he has and the Make-A-Wish Foundation (is great). My hat's off to the Chargers for making it all happen. It was a win-win situation for everyone. I hope he had a good time and I think he did."

On Monday, Henry and his family were invited to the team's night practice of training camp. It was there that Philip Rivers surprised Wat with a custom jersey and tickets to Sunday's game.

"Just to see him smile so much and enjoy himself in this environment, he's so comfortable and really takes the Chargers so personally," Kristin mentioned. "He really gets emotionally involved when the game starts."

Kristin said Henry's love for the Chargers stemmed from playing Madden with his brothers. As Irvine residents, the Bolts are always on television in-season, but playing Madden, and selecting the Chargers as his team, allowed Henry to truly learn the intricacies of the game from the players to positions to plays.

From there, he's become the family's football pundit, keeping a keen eye and knowledge of what the Chargers do on the field in real life.

"He can't tell me what we got him for Christmas, but he can tell me what plays were made during the game against the Kansas City Chiefs and who scored the two-point conversion," Kristin recalled.

But as much as he knows about the current team, Henry also knows about Chargers legends like Fouts. His wish surprised his parents – they didn't know he knew of the Hall of Famer!

After enjoying pregame views from the field with his family and meeting players like Joey Bosa, the Wats went up to the broadcast booth. Fouts then surprised Henry with a gift bag, which included a figurine of himself, a hat from the Pro Football Hall of Fame amongst other items, and even season tickets to watch the Bolts in 2019.

While the whole day, and even week, was emotional, it was a truly unforgettable experience for not only Henry, but his family as well.

"He deserves it," she continued. "He's a really sweet, quiet kid who doesn't ask for these things. He doesn't particularly like the attention, but he's loving this."

Chargers Champions Awards Over $200,000 in Grants to San Diego Schools

By Hayley Elwood

In addition to an expansive commitment to supporting both Orange and Los Angeles County area students – to date nearly 25,000 local youth have been impacted by Chargers community activations/donations – the Chargers have continued the organization's long-running Chargers Champions program in the San Diego community, providing more than $200,000 in funding to eight area schools in the past year alone.

Since its inception two decades ago, Chargers Champions has provided more than $6 million to assist schools, teachers and students. Schools apply on their own for funding that can go towards physical fitness, nutrition or athletic programs on their campuses.

Many of the schools who were awarded grants in 2018 are located in underserved communities where the team's donations can truly make a difference.

"We are a school that is 100-percent free or reduced lunch," mentioned Kelcie Butcher, Athletic Director for Crawford High School, which received $60,000 towards weight room equipment. "That means my families are focused on putting food on the table and keeping a roof over their heads. The ability for my kids to have extra time and money to possibly have a gym membership isn't really in the cards. Their workouts need to happen at school if they're going to happen at all."

Lewis Middle School was granted $30,000 towards a new indoor fitness room. According to the school's principal, Brad Callahan, out of the 1,100 students, 43% of them live in poverty. The funding they received from the Chargers Foundation will allow them to cater to different groups of students to measure fitness levels in P.E. classes. It will also be used for workouts outside of P.E. classes.

"What we have in there is just an empty room, and I had a vision and now my dream came true," mentioned Rodney Lowe, Lewis' P.E. coach who wrote the grant. "(My dream is) to fill it with equipment and what we plan on doing is circuit-style training. We envision filling it up with all kinds of types of workouts; from weights to cardiovascular (and) agility (workouts). Our goal is to get them in great shape and expose them to every kind of workout we can."

Butcher described the equipment in her school's weight room as extremely outdated. With that said, the funding provided will help her bring completely new and updated equipment into the room and in turn, up the morale of the students at her school.

"The last time it was re-outfitted was in the late '90s, so it was filled with tons of machines and things like that," she said. "We're going back to basics with benches where you can do a multitude of exercises on them. We're also bringing in TRX and some weighted balls and hand weights so it's not going to just be a football (weight) room. Everybody can go in, get a workout and feel good about themselves and focus on their health…. I can see the change in spirit when (the students) have the opportunity to have nice things."

The impact the Chargers Champions program has on these schools, as Lowe and Butcher attested, forever changes their athletics programs in that the donation not only impacts this current crop of students, but classes of students for years to come.

"Chargers Champions is actually just one way the team is still active in San Diego," mentioned Kimberley Layton, Chargers Vice President – External Affairs. "Besides continuing to provide donations and other support to charities in San Diego, our Coach of the Week program, which has been selecting a high school football coach each week for 20 years and donating $1,000 to their football program, is still happening every Friday in-season. And kids all over San Diego County can still participate in our Junior Chargers Training Camps thanks to our decades-long partnership with STAR/PAL."

"It's wonderful," Lowe remarked. "When they moved, I was heartbroken just looking at their (impact) in the community and being afraid of them cutting their ties. I was afraid we weren't going to be able to still apply for the Chargers Champions grant. But when I found out about (the Chargers continuing) the program via email, I went for it. I'm glad they still have ties in the community. It means a lot to me."

"We would not have this had it not been for Chargers Champions," Butcher added. "Our weight room probably would have stayed like this for the next 15 or 20 years. There's no opportunity for a program like ours to ever make a purchase like that. I've written grants in the past and things like that, and when you have a grant and a successful organization that's willing to help you, that's the time that you are able to do things like that. But there are groups few and far between that are supporting schools like this…. The more people realize that investing in our youth is the key to making changes, it's good."

Column: Chargers aren't the only NFL team that rents

By Arash Markazi
Los Angeles Times
August 7, 2019

The same tweets and comments come rolling in like clockwork every time a picture, video or story is posted calling the Los Angeles Stadium at Hollywood Park the future home of the Rams and Chargers.

Variations of "it's the home of the Rams; the Chargers are just renters" come flooding in from Rams fans and former Chargers fans in San Diego.

It's understandable. Rams fans don't want their team to share the stadium and former Chargers fans in San Diego will never understand why the team would leave their home of 56 years to be an afterthought in the crowded Los Angeles sports landscape.

The problem with calling the Chargers renters and needling them with chants of "pay your rent" is that they aren't alone. There are only four teams in the NFL that own and operate the stadiums they play in.

When the Chargers called San Diego home, they had a lease agreement to play at Qualcomm Stadium, which is owned and operated by the city of San Diego. The Chargers were never the stadium's lone tenants, sharing it at various times with San Diego State and the San Diego Padres.

Some of the most iconic stadiums in the league aren't owned by the teams that play there. The Dallas Cowboys play at AT&T Stadium, which is nicknamed "Jerry World" after Cowboys owner Jerry Jones. However, the stadium is owned by the city of Arlington and the Cowboys pay $2 million per season in rent. The Chicago Bears pay $6.3 million annually to play at Soldier Field, which is owned by the Chicago Park District. The Green Bay Packers pay almost $1 million annually to play at Lambeau Field, which is owned by the city of Green Bay and the Brown County Pro Football Stadium District.

Every team in the NFL, except for the Miami Dolphins, New England Patriots, Washington Redskins and Carolina Panthers, is technically a renter when it comes to its home stadium.

When the Los Angeles Stadium at Hollywood Park opens next year, it will be owned by Stadco LA LLC, a third party controlled by Rams owner Stan Kroenke. Chargers ownership holds an interest in the company as well.

While much has been made of the Chargers paying $1 per year to rent the stadium, the Rams will be paying the same amount.

While Kroenke controls Stadco LA LLC, the Chargers are more partners than tenants in the stadium. Each team is paying $200 million from their NFL G4 loan toward the stadium's construction. Each team will keep its local revenue from the stadium, which includes money from tickets, parking, concessions and other game-day-related sponsorship and advertising deals. Each team will get an 18.75% cut from naming rights deals and jointly sold suites and personal seat licenses. And the stadium will have equal-sized home locker rooms for each of the teams.

The Rams and Chargers were both present Tuesday for the stadium's first naming rights deal, as the plaza in between the stadium and performance center was announced as American Airlines Plaza. As part of the deal, American Airlines became the official airline of both the Rams and Chargers and airline officials said their company would have prominent branding during Rams and Chargers game days. Expect similar equal partnerships later this year when naming rights deals are announced for the 70,000-seat stadium and the 6,000-seat performance center.

"The partners that come into this building will share an official designation with both teams, and I think that's right," Rams chief operating officer Kevin Demoff said. "We're partners in this stadium and we're partners in making the NFL as strong as possible in Los Angeles.

"We want to make L.A. a true NFL city with the L.A. Rams on the NFC side and the L.A. Chargers on the AFC side, and hopefully in 2022 we'll be the first teams to host and play in the same Super Bowl."

When Fred Maas, the Chargers' chief of staff, shows off renderings of the stadium, there's a massive Chargers logo on the canopy of the stadium, Chargers logos on the 70,000-square-foot Oculus display that will hang from the roof, Chargers logos on the field and on the televisions in suites and concourses. It looks like the home of the Chargers. There's no sign of the Rams, who have similar renderings of their home games.

"New York having one stadium for the Jets and Giants was a great experiment and opportunity for us to learn," Maas said. "… There will be no doubt that this will be the home of the Chargers when we have a home game."

The divide will come on days the NFL isn't playing there.

Kroenke will get all non-NFL revenues and the Chargers will not have a role in the mixed-use development planned on the 298-acre site.

Kroenke could make everything outside the stadium Rams-centric and ignore the Chargers, but the plan is to make the development a neutral destination.

"There's a tremendous amount of collaboration that's going into the stadium, the naming rights and the founding partners," said A.G. Spanos, Chargers president of business operations, . "Those partnerships are done in collaboration with both teams and we're really working together to make this the best stadium in the NFL."

Los Angeles Chargers Donate $10,000 to High School Football Team That Lost Equipment in Fire

By Carmen DiPippo

August 7, 2019

A Los Angeles area high school football team didn't know if playing in the upcoming football season would be possible after a fire destroyed their equipment shed — but with help from the Chargers, they'll be back on the field this fall as usual.

On July 17, Magnolia High School in Anaheim, California, lost all of their football equipment in a storage fire, according to a social media video from the Los Angeles Chargers.

"We had a regular practice on a Wednesday and two hours later I got calls from players that our athletic equipment shed was on fire. Our equipment was gone and we were a month away from starting [the] season," Desmond Hernandez, Magnolia High School football head coach, said in the clip.

After hearing the devastating news, the Chargers knew they had to do something to make sure the team could play.

Magnolia High School isn't just any Orange County school, especially for Chargers broadcaster Hank Bauer. He's an alumni, giving the team an extra-special connection.

"That's my high school, in Orange County. For the Chargers to reach out and do something, that's really special," Bauer said in the video.

This past Sunday, the pro athletes had the Magnolia High School team at training camp in Costa Mesa, where they presented the team with a surprise $10,000 check, CBS Los Angeles reported.

"High school football is very close to my heart. I love the local kids here and what it does for you guys," Chargers General Manager Tom Telesco told the young players during the visit.

Chargers defensive end Joey Bosa walked over to surprise the teenagers, who were in awe as they slapped hands with the star player.

Along with being able to tag Bosa on their Instagram photos, the players will have new football equipment for the upcoming season. The Chargers presented the team with a $10,000 check that will be used to replace the athletic equipment that was lost in a fire last month.

"They're teenagers, so they try to act really cool a lot of times," said Hernandez, the third-year coach for the Sentinels. "But to see them just embrace being a young boy watching superstars, they loved it."

A week ago, Hernandez was unsure how they'll make it through the season without sleds, step-over bags, shields and speed and agility equipment. All of it was lost in the storage building that caught fire on July 17.

Hernandez asked for donations a few days after. He received a lump sum from the Chargers, and now the Sentinels can have peace of mind before opening the season on Aug. 23 against Godinez Fundamental at Glover Stadium.

"When we first heard about it we wanted to learn a little bit more," said Heather Birdsall, the Chargers' director of community partnerships. "So we reached out to the head coach and wanted to help in any way that we can. We found out what equipment they were missing because of the fire and wanted to make them whole again. Wanted to help them get ready for the season."

The Chargers partnered with Shock Doctor, a sports equipment company, to provide relief for Magnolia High. The fire also affected the soccer, track and field and cheer programs.

The Magnolia High football team had planned to be at the Chargers' training camp as guests of Bauer, but the players weren't aware of the donation.

"These boys have been mentally tough throughout this whole process," Hernandez said. "So thankful for the Chargers for even thinking about us, for even inviting us and then to help us recover from the fire has been a blessing."

Chargers surprise Magnolia High with $10,000 donation to replace equipment lost in fire

The players waited and had no idea why. Everyone was present, including head coach Desmond Hernandez and former Chargers running back Hank Bauer, an alumni of the Anaheim public school.

Chargers making progress in battle to win over fans in Los Angeles

By Arash Markazi
Los Angeles Times
April 29, 2019

Daniel Lay isn't an actor. It may seem odd to introduce someone like that, but when you're talking about a Chargers fan in Los Angeles it's important to point that out to people in San Diego and elsewhere around the country who seem convinced anyone posing as a Chargers fan in public must be from central casting.

Lay is a 38-year-old senior solutions architect from Hawthorne and a Chargers season-ticket holder. He was in high school when the Rams and Raiders left town in 1995 and adopted the Chargers after attending UC San Diego. He was among the thousands of Chargers fans who filled the Santa Monica Pier last week for the Chargers draft party.

Lay wasn't sure what to expect with the NFL draft starting at 5 p.m. on Thursday and the Chargers holding the 28th pick, but was pleasantly surprised when he saw a line of Chargers fans down the pier waiting to get in an hour before the draft started.

"I think what surprised me about the draft party was the turnout was so good ex-fans tried to proclaim there was a conspiracy and that [everyone] in attendance were paid actors," Lay said. "The last time they made such an accusation was when many of them noticed loud chants for the Chargers on televised games, and instead of just acknowledging that the fans are there they demanded that the NFL commissioner investigate the Chargers for pumping in fake crowd noise at their games."

The Chargers realize they're in an uphill battle to win over Los Angeles football fans. They were the second NFL team to move into a market still learning how to support one after having none for 21 years. They were as synonymous with San Diego as the Gaslamp Quarter for 56 years, but moved north two years ago and announced they would "Fight for L.A."

While L.A. shrugged; San Diego mourned.

Caught in the middle of a heartbroken city and an apathetic new home were Chargers fans. They were innocent bystanders who had nothing to do with the move but became vilified by former fans for supporting Chargers owner Dean Spanos and mocked by others for being such a small contingent that they couldn't fill a 27,000-seat soccer stadium. Some, like Lay, were fans before the move and stuck around; others decided to support the new team in town after not having a local NFL squad for more than two decades.

"I wanted to be a fan of the team that would have the least fans at the start because I really wanted to be a part of something that started from the ground up," said Josh Albrekston, a 40-year old radiologist who lives in Los Angeles. "And I knew the Rams had a fan base here, so if the Chargers moved here I was going to be a Charger fan. So I was walking my dog at 7:55 a.m. on Jan 12 on the corner of Wilshire and Hope when I saw the Charger tweet saying they were moving and I bolted up."

Lay predicted support for the Chargers would only grow when they move into the new stadium in Inglewood with the Rams in 2020.

"When I went to the Coliseum last year to see the Chargers-Rams game, I was impressed by how many Chargers fans were there," he said. "It became immediately clear to me that the cheaper seats in a larger venue played a substantial role in the decision of fans to attend, so I believe more affordable tickets will lead to better turnout in the new stadium."

While the Rams are coming off a Super Bowl appearance last season, both teams have been fairly even on the field recently. Since Oct. 2, 2017, the Rams are 23-9, the Chargers 22-8. There may not be much of a disparity in their records, but that's not the case when it comes to ticket prices in their new home. While the Chargers will feature more than 26,000 seats priced between $50 and $90 per ticket, plus a personal seat license fee of $100, the least expensive Rams seat license will be 10 times that.

"The second they announced the PSL prices everybody I knew went from 'I might not be able to afford them' to 'I got an extra for my dad, wife, girlfriend, kids, whoever,' " Albrekston said. "There are a ton of Charger fans who would come to games if the tickets were cheaper instead of $200 at [Dignity Health Sports Park]. I absolutely believe the ticket prices will lead to more Charger fans."

TOM TELESCO

By one major measure, Chargers GM Tom Telesco is among the drafting elite

By Rich Hammond
The Athletic
April 23, 2019

COSTA MESA, Calif. — Chargers general manager Tom Telesco didn't intend to be particularly profound when he said, "A human judging another human is very difficult to do."

Telesco spoke in the context of this week's NFL Draft, about the challenges of deploying a team of executives, scouts and coaches to project the viability of hundreds of college prospects.

He's not wrong about that, nor is Telesco incorrect when he frowns upon the idea of critiquing a particular draft class. There are too many variables, Telesco said, and the only true measure of success comes when finger sizes are collected for Super Bowl rings. But that won't stop this human from judging another human.

Telesco, now in the final stages of preparation for his seventh draft as Chargers GM, passes the test. That doesn't need to be confirmed here. The Spanos family did enough last month, when it signed Telesco to a multi-year contract extension and cemented his surprising status as one of the longest-tenured GMs in the league.

"We hired him for a reason," said John Spanos, the Chargers' director of football operations. "He had conviction in his philosophy of how you build a team and how you run the draft and free agency, but in particular the draft. We've been thrilled with how we've prepared since Tom has been here, in regards to how we set the draft board, how we scout the country, how we set the area maps. There's a saying, that the process brings you to the players, and I think Tom has really brought an outstanding process."

Job security is good, and surely Telesco welcomes it, because the lifespan of a goldfish is longer than that of the average NFL general manager. Drafting well — and increasingly well — has allowed Telesco some peace of mind.

How to judge a draft class? It's not easy. The average class includes seven players. How many, in order for the class to be declared a success, must become starters? All-Pro selections? Pro Bowl players? Franchise cornerstones? That's completely subjective, but by at least one measure, Telesco should be included in the top tier among his peers, if not at the top.

Starting in 2013, three months after Telesco succeeded A.J. Smith as GM, the Chargers have a six-year streak of drafting a player who has made the NFL's All-Pro and/or Pro Bowl teams. Club members are Keenan Allen (2013 draft), Jason Verrett (2014), Melvin Gordon (2015), Joey Bosa (2016), Desmond King (2017) and Derwin James (2018). Then there's Adrian Phillips, another Telesco success story, who signed as a undrafted free agent in 2014 and made the All-Pro and Pro Bowl teams last season.

"We just don't grade our draft classes," Telesco said. "We don't do a lot of assessment. It really comes down to wins and losses. Can you make the playoffs? How many playoff wins can you have? Can you win a championship? That's really how we're all looked at. Not so much by what your draft classes are."

True, but games and championships aren't won without strong players, and for six consecutive years, the Chargers have have drafted a player who already has received league-wide recognition. The only other team with a current streak is Cleveland, with a three-year draft run of Pro Bowlers Joe Schobert (2016), Myles Garrett (2017) and Denzel Ward (2018). The Chargers' streak actually extends to seven years, because they drafted two-time Pro Bowler Melvin Ingram in 2012.

Over Telesco's six-draft span (2013-18), only four teams have drafted more All-Pro/Pro-Bowl players than the Chargers: Chicago (8), Kansas City (8), Atlanta (7) and Dallas (7). None have a streak close to the Chargers' six-year run, and while using the All-Pro and Pro Bowl teams as measuring sticks might not be perfect, it seems fair enough, given that players, coaches, fans and media vote for those designations.

How does this set Telesco apart? Chicago GM Ryan Pace has had excellent draft success, but he's only been around since 2015. The Chiefs also have employed two GMs in that span, and two of their star draftees, Marcus Peters and Kareem Hunt, already have been dropped with little or no return. Dallas' "general manager" is owner Jerry Jones, so a straight-line comparison is difficult there. Atlanta's Thomas Dimitroff has been in his role since 2008 and, in terms of draft and on-field consistency, is the king here, but Telesco belongs in the conversation.

Clearly, this isn't the only model. New England coach/GM/czar Bill Belichick has gone five consecutive years without drafting and developing a homegrown player who has received national recognition. The last one was 2013 second-round pick Jamie Collins, who made the Pro Bowl as a linebacker in 2015. How much did the Patriots think of that? Less than a year later, they traded him.

That's because the Patriots operate under a different model. They have Tom Brady, A Few Other Guys, and Everyone Else. Almost all players in the second and third categories are expendable, and Belichick doesn't shy from significant roster turnover. It works, to a shocking extent, and has spawned the term The Patriot Way, which tends to nauseate fans outside the greater Boston area.

Telesco and the Chargers are different. From the jump, they've preached drafting and improvement. Over the past couple years, they've wisely picked their spots to add outside free agents — Russell Okung, Casey Hayward, Mike Pouncey — but much of the focus (and future salary-cap room) is dedicated to young players already on the roster. Allen got a big contract extension in 2016. Ingram got one in 2017. Gordon will get one soon, Telesco indicated this week. The Chargers reportedly picked up the fifth-year option on Bosa's contract Tuesday, and he will need a new deal after 2020.

So a team that chooses the Chargers' path — a smart one given the volatility of the free-agent market and the possibility of high-impact mistakes — must do well in the draft. Based on the class-by-class evaluations that Telesco eschews, he seems to be doing well.

Telesco was only 40 years old when the Chargers tabbed him as their GM after his long run (1998-2013) with the Indianapolis Colts as an area scout, pro scout, director of pro scouting and, for his final seven seasons, as the team's director of player personnel.

Telesco's first Chargers draft included a big third-round hit with Allen, but relative first- and second-round duds in D.J. Fluker and Manti Te'o, respectively. Things actually got worse in 2014 (other than signing the undrafted Phillips). Verrett, that year's first-round pick, made the Pro Bowl in 2015 but then dealt with a devastating series of injuries and played only five games for the Chargers from 2016-18. (Verrett signed with San Francisco last month.) Of the five other players in that 2014 class, four got released before the end of the 2016 season.

Since then, the Chargers seem to have figured things out. Of the 21 players drafted from 2015-17, 13 have started at least 10 games for the Chargers, and 17 have started at least one game. That group already includes a 1,000-yard rusher in Gordon, a fifth-round revelation in King and players (Bosa, Hunter Henry and Denzel Perryman) who perhaps have yet to reach their full potential because of injuries.

It typically takes a while for a draft class to bear fruit, but the Chargers' group from a year ago already looks solid. James already is a star linebacker, while Uchenna Nwosu, Justin Jones, Scott Quessenberry and Justin Jackson all played in at least 13 games last season.

The scenario is a bit different this week. By virtue of their first playoff victory in 10 years, the Chargers aren't scheduled to draft until No. 28 overall on Thursday. The ability to draft a surer-fire first-round pick isn't there this time, certainly not in the way James fell into the Chargers' laps at No. 17 last year.

More likely, this could be a draft for need. This week, Telesco praised the depth of the pool of draft-eligible defensive linemen and hey, look at that, the Chargers just happen to need a defensive tackle, given that one of those spots currently is manned by 34-year-old Brandon Mebane. Not surprisingly, Telesco would not tip his hand and even downplayed the idea that the Chargers would draft for need in the first round. Linebacker and offensive-line positions also might be addressed.

"At (No.) 28 it's a little bit different," Telesco said. "More than likely, there isn't going to be four, five or six players there that are potential difference-makers, where we can choose maybe who is the best fit for us or fill a need. More than likely, that player is going to be a player that we really like. It could be a position where we don't have an immediate need."

Telesco, fairly directly, dismissed the idea the Chargers might look to draft an eventual replacement for quarterback Philip Rivers, which narrows things a bit but perhaps increases the possibility that the Chargers might trade out of the first round. Quarterbacks are popular near the end of the first round because of the possibility of a fifth-year contract option, and Telesco said the Chargers typically only have 15 to 18 prospects ranked as players with first-round potential. Perhaps one will fall to No. 28, or perhaps there will be a trade.

That call is in Telesco's hands, and the Chargers seem increasingly comfortable with that. Telesco, like any good leader, often deflects attention and praise to his scouts and fellow executives, but someone has to sit in the big chair, and other than members of the Spanos family — owner Dean and president of football operations John — nobody has a more prominent seat on the football side than Telesco.

John Spanos grinned this week when he said it felt like yesterday when he interviewed Telesco. Now, Telesco already holds some league seniority. Among GMs who don't also hold another title — specifically owner or coach — Telesco's six years put him in seventh place, behind Dimitroff (hired in 2008), New Orleans' Mickey Loomis, Seattle's John Schneider and Washington's Bruce Allen (2010), and the Rams' Les Snead and Minnesota's Rick Spielman (2012).

Telesco already has signed three contracts with the Chargers: his initial deal in 2013, a three-year extension in 2015, and his newest deal, last month, which kicks in after this season and runs for an unknown number of years.

"I believe that continuity and stability are two very important things," John Spanos said, "in regards to running a successful football team. Continuity is something that sometimes can get overlooked in the world we live in today, where people want changes and they want them now. Continuity is very important.

"On top of that, I think Tom's performance clearly has shown that he is very deserving of the extension, and we're very happy with the job he's done, not just from the standpoint of wins and losses, but also the stuff that people don't see behind the scenes, with the details of the process and how hardworking he is, and his integrity. He's an honest and hardworking team member."

With the draft set to begin Thursday, Telesco's work essentially is done. He joked that he needed to pull back, for risk of "talking myself out of" rankings and decisions he made through careful work with his staff.

There's probably not much need for concern. Given Telesco's recent history, the Chargers likely will end up with a solid class, even if that type of praise seems to make him a bit uncomfortable.

"You're only as good as your next draft class, to be honest with you," Telesco said.

ANTHONY LYNN

Chargers coach found his 'game-changer' not on gridiron but in Africa

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- In the picture, Anthony Lynn sits at a desk, surrounded by smiling faces of children he had previously seen only in his dreams. Lynn said at that moment, he felt a deep appreciation for the simple things in life.

"You always have enough," the Los Angeles Chargers' head coach said, recalling the moment. "Even when you think you don't, you have enough. And there's always a way to figure it out and be successful. I saw a group of people do more with less than any people in my life. We think we have all of these needs, and they are really just wants."

Lynn said his eight-day trip to rural Tanzania, in East Africa, earlier this year altered his perspective on life. Through the help of proceeds donated from his newly created Lynn Family Foundation, Lynn, his wife, Stacey, and his children -- son D'Anton and daughter Danielle -- - traveled to Tanzania to help open a school for 300 children of the Masai Tribe in kindergarten through third grade.

At the heart of Lynn's desire to serve is a loving mother, Betty Jackson, now retired and volunteering at elementary schools in Celina, Texas, a small town 40 miles north of Dallas.

"My mother has been a giver all her life," Lynn said. "I just watched her as a kid growing up, the things she did and how she helped her community, her church. I have a passion to serve and to give. I can't take any credit for that; I was raised that way, and that's how I feel."

Lynn's foundation partnered with good friend Ravi Reddy, head of the nonprofit Privilege 2 Serve. Lynn and Reddy played football against each other in college, Lynn at Texas Tech and Reddy at Texas.

The two reconnected as neighbors in New York when Lynn worked as the running backs coach for the New York Jets. Lynn leaned on Reddy's experience performing charity work in Tanzania, and Reddy introduced Lynn to the Tanzanian village in need of a new school.

The trip to Africa was a first for the Lynn and his family. Lynn said they intend to go back in the near future.

"I think it's important now that we've established this foundation to carry on that legacy," Danielle Lynn said. "We want to show that this isn't just giving, that this is who we are. This is instilled in us, and we really value helping other people, seeing what we can do for people and helping them reach their full potential."

Lynn and his family participated in a ceremony performed by the tribe to bless the new building, listened to native songs performed by schoolchildren during the opening ceremony and toured the facility.

"People say this and you always hear it -- it's life-changing because there's poverty here, there's no doubt. But it's just different there," Stacey Lynn said. "We have so many opportunities here that we take for granted that they just don't have there. So to go there and see how people live, and the conditions they live in -- they don't even have clean water in many cases -- it is just humbling.

"It makes you thankful, and it makes you step back and reflect. So it really has changed my perspective on the little things that I take for granted, and I think Anthony would say the same thing. And the thing about it is they are so joyful for people that don't have a lot. They're just joyful, like they're just content because that's what they know."

The Chargers' leader on the field moves to the beat of his own drum. He likes to listen to country music, dabbles in interior design and golf in his spare time but remains laser focused on directing the Chargers to franchise's first Super Bowl championship.

After a 0-4 start, Lynn led the Chargers to a 9-7 record in his first season in 2017, just missing the playoffs. The Bolts improved to 12-4 last season, losing to the eventual Super Bowl champion New England Patriots in the divisional round of the playoffs.

So far this season, the Chargers are scuffling at 2-4 but are looking to rebound on the road Sunday against the Tennessee Titans.

"He's done a great job," Chargers defensive tackle Isaac Rochell said. "A lot of it has to do with how long he played in the NFL, and his understanding of what it means to be a player. There's a lot of carryover with him now as a coach, and how he treats us and how he treats his staff."

Added Chargers defensive coordinator Gus Bradley: "He just does a really good job with the team. There are no real highs or lows. They know what they're getting every time that they come in the building, and that hasn't changed from when we were 0-4 to start [2017] or when we were on a roll last year. I think that's what you appreciate about him, is consistency."

Along with his toughness, Lynn's ability to be brutally honest yet supportive won over this team, establishing a culture of accountability.

"Anyone who comes across him knows that he is the most blunt person you will ever meet," Danielle Lynn said. "He tells you just how it is, he does not sugarcoat things, which is why I think a lot of people love him. How he feels is what he says.

"I think that creates respect for him. He comes off as a bit intimidating, but when you really get to know him, he's just one of the most caring, gracious people ever."

Added Stacey Lynn: "He's funny. He's quiet. He's very thoughtful, sometimes to the point of frustration. I think he can overthink things. He has a certain way he likes things. He's very orderly."

Lynn says he likes all kinds of music, but developed his love of country music growing up in Celina. He's good friends with Toby Keith, whom he got to know through going to concerts

Lynn wears boots, but no cowboy hat, to the concerts. Kenny Chesney's "The Boys of Fall" video was shot in Celina, and D'Anton Lynn -- an assistant secondary coach with the Houston Texans -- appears in the video, playing football on the field.

"Toby and Rex are from Oklahoma, so those guys were pretty cool, and I started going to his concerts in New York," Lynn said. "I kind of stood out (laughs). I was the only brother there. So Toby said, 'Three years in a row you're the only brother there, you're holding it down for me.' So we started hanging out in his trailer before he goes on stage and afterwards. We just got to know each other. He loves football. We could talk football all day."

Count running back Melvin Gordon as someone who was unaware of Lynn's outside interests.

"I didn't even know he liked country music," said a smiling Gordon, who also has a couple country songs on his playlist. "I thought that was due to the O-linemen and Phil [Philip Rivers], not because of Coach. ... I like how he's really firm and stands on what he believes, regardless of who the player is -- it doesn't matter. If he feels like it should be a certain way, then he sticks to his guns.

"I like that because sometimes you can have big-name players and they say something, and a coach will kind of feel intimidated and kind of change like, 'OK, maybe you're right.' But he's like, 'Nah, this is what I feel is right.' And I kind of like that. He's his own man."

An avid golfer, Lynn participated in the annual American Century Celebrity Golf Championship in Lake Tahoe for the first time soon after returning from Tanzania, finishing 81st overall.

However, the life-changing trip to Tanzania still stands out for Lynn in a summer he'll never forget.

"Over there it's life or death," Lynn said. "Every day, their backs are against the wall. I think sometimes that we take some things for granted -- I know I do. I try not to do that as much anymore.

"I was glad that my kids were there with me so that they could experience some of that. Just, clean water and things like that are a challenge for people over there -- and just going to school."

On a trip to Africa this summer — a journey that required nearly 20 hours in the air — Anthony Lynn did what coaches do whenever they have time.

He worried about his team.

Lynn dissected the Chargers' roster over and over, checking to see where improvement was needed.

Coming home, he found himself worrying a little less.

"I was like, man, we got all we need," Lynn said. "We got all we need. Let's just get this thing done. I had a little different perspective."

Seeing things he'd never seen before altered the way Lynn sees everything.

He spent a week and a half in northern Tanzania, calling it "definitely a game-changer," in what Lynn described as "the bush," opening a school his foundation helped fund.

"It was a very impactful experience both ways," he said. "They were grateful for what we were doing for them, and we were grateful for just being in their presence. I don't think I've ever been around a group of people that has done more with less."

The facility, which houses kindergarten through third grade, i s the first school for many of the 350 or so children attending.

In fact, the opening was delayed a day because — communicating through interpreters — Lynn had to convince the adults that their kids would be better off seeking an education than going to work.

"Little kids there … everyone's working," he said. "I mean, they're all employees. With sticks, cattle-herding and goat-herding. Stuff like that. The people were worried about who was going to do all the work that needs to be done each day.

"We finally got enough buy-in to open the school. I think when they actually saw the kids come to school and the joy those kids showed from sitting in a classroom, sitting at a desk, then they just fell in love with the place."

Shortly after he arrived in Tanzania, Lynn was told that the plan was to begin each school day at 10 a.m.

The time sounded a little late to a football lifer, one so disciplined that he re-committed himself to finishing his college degree and walked in a commencement ceremony at Nevada-Las Vegas last spring at age 49.

Lynn suggested that opening at least a couple hours sooner each day would be more appropriate. That's when he was told the lions feed from 6 a.m. to 9 a.m.

"These kids aren't down the street or around the block," Lynn said. "They're walking two and three miles to get to school. Little ones. When I heard that, I said, 'If you want to open it up at noon, I don't care.'

"That was crazy. Just stuff like that that you don't think about. I was scared to death half the time, just being in that environment they're in every day. There are no street lights. When it's dark, it's pitch black. You always wonder what's watching you. You're out there with wild animals. You're out there with some big cats. Not little cats, big cats."

At one point, Lynn asked if he could have a gun and a holster — "That's not foreign to me; I'm from Dallas," he said, smiling — but he was assured that was unnecessary.

The logistics required to open the school included setting up transportation for the students. Where buses are used here, there it will be tractors and donkeys.

"Every day, for certain people, it's like a life-or-death situation," Lynn continued. "Every single day. You forget that civilization starts with water, preferably clean water.

"Things like that I've never thought twice about. Now, I'm watching ladies walk five miles for a five-gallon bucket of water. These people, they're so resilient it's incredible."

Lynn made the trip with his wife, Stacey, and two grown children, D'Anton and Danielle.

Together, they make up the core of the Lynn Family Foundation, the name selected for what originally was going to be called the Stacey and Anthony Lynn Foundation.

As the endeavor moved closer to becoming reality, Lynn realized the charity work should include his whole family. Along with other projects, the foundation was the lead donor for the school.

"We didn't go over there to change the culture or anything like that," Lynn said. "We went there to add education to it. I feel like that's what we did and will continue to do."

His vision is to one day expand the school through grade 12. Lynn said he hopes to add an athletics program. A well to ensure clean water already is being constructed.

"This was not a one-trip deal," he said. "I'll be making this trip the next couple years, just to make sure the school is up and running right. We're committed to the people there. We need to be."

For Anthony Lynn, Lessons from Tanzania are Fresh Entering Training Camp

Tanzania was the final destination, but the mental layovers in Oakland, Denver and Kansas City were unavoidable.

"There were some matchups there that I was a little concerned about. … There were some needs and wants that I had written down. [But] coming back on the plane? I didn't look at it one time. I was like, 'We're good. We've got everything we need.'"

The purpose of Lynn's trip to East Africa was to open a K-3 school for 300 children of the Maasai Tribe. Through the Lynn Family Foundation – in partnership with Privilege 2 Serve – food, water and an education will now be available to children currently living in unspeakably "impoverished conditions."

"This is three, four hours from civilization let alone 10,000 miles away in Africa," said Ravi Reddy, the head of Privilege 2 Serve.

Perspective can be powerful. Lynn explained how sports has shaped the way he views life. His eight-day trip abroad, witnessing the day-to-day life of the Maasai, showed him the parallels to sports.

When young children's school hours need to be adjusted to avoid lion-feeding hours, a 14-point deficit in a football game doesn't seem so catastrophic. Not having access to clean water to drink or shower with is a far more difficult hardship than anything that may take place on a football field.

As the 2019 Los Angeles Chargers open training camp Thursday, these lessons from Tanzania will inevitably arise throughout the course of a 16-game season.

"I saw the toughness – the grit – and it was like your back's against the wall every day over there," Lynn said. "Sometimes it's life and death, and when you practice that from the time you're born all the way up, can you imagine the toughness and resiliency that that builds and develops in a person?"

Don't be comfortable

Entering his third season as the Chargers' head coach, Lynn sees a roster, front office and coaching staff that's undergone little turnover. Since an 0-4 start in 2017, Los Angeles has a 21-7 record during the regular season, including a road playoff victory last season in Baltimore.

With familiar surroundings, it's easy to get comfortable – a word Lynn doesn't like.

"You're going to have to do some things you haven't done before to get to where you want to go," he said.

Lynn has never rested on his laurels. In two years, the platform he's earned as an NFL head coach has been used as a tool to serve and inspire others.

He and his wife, Stacey Bell, started their foundation in April 2019. Fundraising is one thing, but Lynn said it was important for him to commit to seeing the Tanzania project in action this offseason.

"It was intense because I wasn't in my environment," Lynn said. "I was out of my environment. I wasn't comfortable at all. My head was always on a swivel. … When I say life and death, there are some real things going on over there. It's real."

Despite the unfamiliarity, Lynn instantly connected with the people of the Maasai.

"Anthony's people skills that bring out the best in each player were evident in Africa," Reddy said. "He treated the [adults] like coaches and the kids like players, getting to know them [and] motivating them according to their strengths and weaknesses."

Lynn is of the belief that greatness can come from being uncomfortable. Off the field, his impact in East Africa is just beginning.

The newly built school will eventually serve K-12 children. Perhaps the next great doctor, teacher or scientist emerges thanks to the educational opportunities that didn't exist before the Lynn Family Foundation and Privilege 2 Serve.

As Lynn's focus shifts to football, he'll tell the team there are things they can control that don't cost money or require talent. Focus, effort and preparation are just a few.

But during the peaks and valleys of an NFL season, difficult situations will arise. Adversity is inevitable. When it strikes, the head coach has a natural offseason parallel to draw from.

"There's going to come a time where something's going to remind me of what took place in Africa, and we're going to have that conversation," Lynn said. "I don't know when that's going to be, but I'm sure it's going to come. It's going to happen at some point."

It's the Heart of the NFL Offseason, and Anthony Lynn Is Making the Most of It

Anthony Lynn stood at the back of a primary school classroom last week, 10 time zones and nearly 10,000 miles away from Los Angeles. Dozens of children, who are part of the Maasai tribe in east Africa, filled the room in front of him, seated at wooden desks and wearing new green, yellow and blue-colored school uniforms. They clapped their hands and performed a song in their language, as a thank you to their visitors.

"Just being in the classroom with the kids was the best part of the trip," Lynn says, over the phone from Tanzania. "These kids are so appreciative and positive. Their circumstances are not all that great, but they are finding ways to thrive."

The week of July 4 is the quietest one in the NFL calendar, when coaches, players and team employees scatter for down time before training camps open and the next season is afoot. But this week's MMQB begins in another part of the world. Instead of vacation, the Chargers head coach spent his summer break in a way that he hopes will have a long-lasting impact: Opening a school in northern Tanzania that he and his wife, NBC New York news anchor Stacey Bell, helped make a reality.

When Lynn was a player on the Broncos' back-to-back Super Bowl teams in the 90s, he remembers teammate Terrell Davis returning from a trip to Africa and describing the impact it had on him—but this would be Lynn's first visit to the continent. He knew he'd have plenty of time on his flights, a 12.5-hour haul from New York to Dubai followed by a seven-hour connection to the Kilimanjaro airport, to prepare for the days ahead. But before leaving the United States nine days ago, the last itinerary Lynn had looked at was for the Chargers' training camp and practice schedule. He wasn't sure what to expect, beyond the instructions to pack light and avoid the dark blue and black clothing that can attract certain insects.

Lenjani is a rural community in the Maasai region of Tanzania, a three-hour drive southeast of the city of Arusha. There, at a new one-story school with gray walls and a red roof, about 300 boys and girls in grades K-3 will start classes this week, the first opportunity to go to school for many of these children. They'll eat two protein-rich meals per day in a dining hall dedicated to the lead donor that helped make the construction of this school possible: the Lynn Family Foundation.

"We are not here to change their culture or anything like that," Lynn says. "These are strong people, with a lot of qualities I wish I saw more of. They don't take anything for granted, and they have to really work hard to get what they want out of life. If you add education to that, they have a chance to do something really special."

The chance to provide these kids an education was the reason Lynn and Bell gave their time and a significant personal donation to this project, spearheaded by their friend and former neighbor, Ravi Reddy. They met Reddy several years ago living in Long Island City in Queens, N.Y., while Lynn was an assistant coach for the New York Jets. Reddy, a former linebacker for the University of Texas, had worked on humanitarian projects in different countries around the world before starting his own non-profit, Privilege 2 Serve. Three years ago, Reddy teamed up with Africa's Promise Village, an organization working to empower vulnerable communities in Tanzania through education, with the goal of building a school.

The Maasai people, who live in northern Tanzania and southern Kenya, follow a traditional lifestyle centered on herding goats and cattle. Recently the hotter weather and unpredictable rain as a result of climate change, as well as the loss of land to national parks and reserves, have presented new challenges to sustaining a way of life that has remained unchanged for centuries. The construction of this school in Lenjani, on 50 acres of land secured through an agreement with the Maasai, aims to change the equation by offering kids a path forward through education that was not previously available in this rural area.

"These kids were getting pushed into the workforce as early as possible, growing up without education at all," Lynn says. "It was sad, because where do your hopes and dreams come from if you don't have that? How do you know if you like science until you take a science class? When I learned about the situation, I felt like I had to get involved."

Lynn and Bell traveled to Tanzania with Reddy and his wife, Robyn, and Lynn's two children, D'Anton, an assistant secondary coach for the Texans, and Danielle, who works in health administration. With the help of Lynn and Bell's contribution, construction on the school began last year. And during the break in the NFL calendar, Lynn had the chance to help open the school and see firsthand the community it will serve. They originally planned to stay in tents during this portion of their eight-day trip, but for security reasons, stayed in old government lodging a short distance away from Lenjani.

Lynn met with the four teachers they hired, who speak both Maasai and English, and sat down with local leaders, including the Lenjani chief. They plan to expand the school so they can serve more students, adding a middle school and high school—"We are not done," Lynn says—but that requires buy-in from the local community, since older kids are counted on to shepherd cattle and contribute to the agricultural lifestyle. Lynn visited parents in their homes, explaining through a translator the ways that their children will be able to contribute to their community if they receive an education. They also worked on logistics like helping kids get into the routine of going to school and setting up transportation, which will include donkeys and tractors pulling carts. School begins at 10 a.m. each day, Reddy says, because the lions feed from 6 to 9 a.m. “These are things I never would have known if I didn’t come over here,” Lynn says.

Before they arrived in Lenjani, they spent half a day at the Intel School boarding school that serves orphaned and disadvantaged kids in Arusha. It's been open for nearly 20 years, and has been something of a blueprint for how to run a successful school in Tanzania, sharing curriculum ideas and operational advice. The Intel School students have mastered three languages, and Lynn stopped by a science class where a primary student was called upon to explain to the visitors that they were learning about the different systems of the human body.

Toward the end of their trip, they headed to a safari lodge in the Serengeti, where they met a hotel employee who is a member of the Maasai tribe. Lynn says she told them she didn’t have the chance to attend school until she was 11, when a group like theirs came in and built a school near her village. Now an adult, she’s working at the hotel and trying to save enough money to go to college.

“She told us she wants to go back and pay it forward. That’s what we want,” Lynn says. “You know, you go somewhere, and you expect to help people and have an impact, and they end up having an impact on you. Their resiliency, their toughness, their attitude, their smiles. You see it and experience it, and it makes you appreciate what you really have.”

The school in Lenjani is one of several initiatives supported by the Lynn Family Foundation, which Lynn and Bell created earlier this year to expand their charitable work. The foundation launched with a golf outing in Texas last month (the Chargers were presenting sponsors), which went toward supporting Young Warriors, a mentoring program for fatherless boys that is expanding to Dallas, and Hugs Café, an organization based in Lynn’s hometown of McKinney, Texas, which trains and employs adults with special needs. (Lynn’s niece, Marty, who suffered a serious brain injury in the car accident that took the life of Lynn’s sister, Tabitha, 19 years ago, is part of this program.)

Last year, when Lynn completed his bachelor’s degree at age 49, he talked to his players about not being defined only by football and using the free time built into the NFL offseason to pursue endeavors outside of the game. This year, he’s set another example. When the Chargers re-convene in Orange County in a few weeks, he plans to tell his players about some of his experiences in Tanzania. The energy he felt standing at the back of that classroom, watching the room full of new students singing proudly, is something he wants to bring back to California.

“I always try to take life experiences and use them in football terms,” Lynn says. “A lot of times, when you can help develop these young men into better men, they will also become better football players. It’s something we will talk about: Doing more with less, and having the right attitude. When you have the grit and toughness that I have seen here in Tanzania, and you put positivity behind that, you can do whatever you want to do.”

Anthony Lynn stood at the back of a primary school classroom last week, 10 time zones and nearly 10,000 miles away from Los Angeles. Dozens of children, who are part of the Maasai tribe in east Africa, filled the room in front of him, seated at wooden desks and wearing new green, yellow and blue-colored school uniforms. They clapped their hands and performed a song in their language, as a thank you to their visitors.

Three days in the jungles of East Africa.

Sleeping in a tent.

Anthony Lynn is still trying to wrap his mind around his family’s itinerary.

“I thought they were joking the first time they said, ‘You’re going to be in a tent,’ ” the Los Angeles Chargers coach said with a laugh during a phone interview with Yahoo Sports. “But no.”

There were more warnings, too.

Pack light. And ditch the dark-colored clothing to avoid attracting insects — a problematic directive for someone with a propensity for overpacking and whose wardrobe consists solely of black and blue attire.

“I need to go get a smaller piece of luggage and see if I can make this work,” he said, laughing again.

Lynn, his wife, NBC New York news anchor Stacey Bell, and Lynn’s two adult children are heading to Tanzania on Saturday to see their plan come to fruition: The completion of a K-7 school they’re helping to fund.

The visit — which includes a 16-hour flight — is the culmination of nearly a decade of first dreaming and then planning to make the world a better place. Lynn and his family plan to visit the school and meet its students before a library is dedicated to the Lynn Family Foundation.

“This is exactly what he saw us doing as a couple and as a family,” Bell said, in a separate phone interview. “I think it’s part of his vision coming to life. Once we get there and meet the students and see the school and see the conditions, I think that’s when it’ll really hit us that, ‘Wow, we are a part of something bigger.’

“…I hope these students look at us and see themselves,” Bell added. "And even though we’re from America and we’ve had opportunities that they couldn’t even fathom, hopefully they look at us and think, ‘If they’re doing this, then when I grow up, I need to figure out how to pay it forward.’ ”

The driving force behind their involvement with the project was their mutual friend, Ravi Reddy, a commercial contractor and former University of Texas football player who played against Lynn in college when Lynn was at Texas Tech. The couple became close when they relocated to Long Island City, Queens, after Lynn joined the New York Jets’ coaching staff in 2009. And over weekend cookouts and chill sessions on Reddy’s balcony overlooking the East River, the two men, and their future wives, talked endlessly about everyday life and their passion for philanthropy.

And when it was clear that a school in Tanzania could be more than just a pipedream, Lynn and his wife didn’t hesitate to get involved.

JUST THE BEGINNING

The couples came together in the spirit of friendship, sharing meals, laughs and heartfelt dreams for the future.

Picturesque views of the Manhattan skyline were the backdrop for countless barbecues and conversations that would last for hours. And eventually, it would serve as the birthplace for their lofty philanthropic endeavor.

“You just never know,” Lynn said, less than 48 hours before he, Bell, his son D’Anton (a current defensive assistant for the Houston Texans) and his daughter Danielle were due at the airport. “Some kid that goes through that school may end up having a big influence on that country and may have a direct impact on our country. Maybe not for us, but maybe our grandkids.

“We believe in education. We believe everything starts with education. And this is an area that really needed it.”

Reddy, who founded the nonprofit P2Serve, and his wife had long been involved in charitable projects overseas, Lynn said. But there was one area in particular that Reddy was determined to build a school in: the rural Simanjiro village of Linjani, in the Maasai region of Tanzania. With limited educational resources in the remote area, male students often have few options besides joining the military. Young girls often end up being victims of the sex trade.

In 2016, Reddy teamed up with Africa’s Promise Village and CommonThreadz, two nonprofits that aim to help vulnerable children and orphans in African communities, to help build a school. Headlines pertaining to Lynn’s involvement with the project have been somewhat bit misleading, however.

“No, I didn’t go over with them and hammer a two-by-four and all,” quipped the Chargers coach. “That’s not gonna happen.”

Instead, Lynn and his wife raised and pledged a “substantial” donation at a June 2018 gala fundraiser in Austin, Texas, to fund the completion of the school.

But this is only the beginning.

“What we want is a K-12,” Lynn said. “That’s our goal.”

Added Bell: “This won’t be a one-time thing. As long as we’re financially-able to do this, we want to be a part of it.”

A PRIVILEGE TO SERVE

Before their 2011 wedding, the couple each recorded interviews about the other person and their remarks were later showed at the wedding reception.

Bell now considers them “corny,” but those video keepsakes highlight one of the strongest bonds between her and Lynn: A desire to help those in need.

“I was working with a scholarship fund in Cleveland at the time,” said Bell, “and he said something to the effect of: ‘I like the fact that she wants to give back and help these students. And I think we can work together and make a big difference in the world.’ … He’s always thought in big terms like that.”

It’s the way Lynn’s mother, Betty Jackson, raised him to be.

She always has been the type to give people “the clothes off her back if you needed it. Giving has been a big part of my family, where I grew up,” said the Chargers coach, who fulfilled his promise to his mother by graduating with his college degree in May 2018, 25 years after he left Texas Tech to pursue an NFL career that included two Super Bowls.

“It’s always been a privilege to serve and give in my household. And that’s one of the things that attracted me to Stacey early on in the dating game: Her willingness to give and serve and try to have an impact, especially on young women.”

Lynn has been a longtime supporter of various charities across the United States, including “Young Warriors,” a mentoring program for fatherless boys; Hugs Café in McKinney, Texas, which employs special-needs adults and teaches them job skills; Summer Night Lights, a program in LA. that provides meaningful programming to 32 parks across the region, in at-risk neighborhoods; and Athletes in Action, which brings coaches and players together through sports and faith.

The school in Tanzania is just an extension of the charitable work Lynn and his wife have done domestically for years. Yet, some have questioned their decision to help people less fortunate overseas.

Said Lynn: “One of the things that kind of pissed me off a little bit: The people that came up to me saying, ‘Hey man, we think what you’re doing is great thing, but we have a lot of poverty and needs in our own country. Did you ever think of doing it here?’ Well, No. 1, I’ve been doing it here all my damn life. And No. 2, I’ve been working since I was 13 years old … so, I’ve built a lot of schools in this country with my tax dollars.

“I’ve done a lot here, but for people to question, ‘Why Tanzania?’ ‘Why abroad?,’ that just kind of ticked me off a bit. Serving people and charity, it has no boundaries, it has no borders.”

AFRICA-BOUND

As he sat on the balcony of his New Jersey apartment overlooking the Hudson River Thursday afternoon, Lynn took inventory of everything still left on his to-do list.

At the conclusion of the Chargers’ minicamp schedule, he returned to Dallas to visit family and friends before hosting a two-day charity golf outing and reception in Grapevine, Texas, earlier this week. After those five or six days, he flew to the Tri-State area for a few days before the family's six-day trip in Tanzania.

The 16-hour flight doesn’t bother him, not after four separate visits to Japan, and trips to Australia and Barcelona. But it’s the sleeping accommodations and the dress code that had him somewhat anxious.

“They specifically said, ‘When you travel, try not to wear black and blue,’” Lynn said. “So I’m like, ‘My goodness! I have no clothes!’ ”

He also couldn’t help but reflect on the journey to this point — a journey that began years ago on the opposite edge of Manhattan.

“We used to talk about these things all the time,” Lynn said of the hours he and Bell spent at Reddy’s Long Island City apartment. “…But it wasn’t until we sat and talked about the situation over there, and he showed me pictures — I even saw some video. And I was like, ‘God dang, there’s no way I can walk away from that deal.’

“But the very thought really developed on top of his balcony, overlooking the skyline of Manhattan on the East River. We talked about a lot of things on that balcony.”

SHANE STEICHEN

Who is Shane Steichen? Coaches from his past weigh in, plus a Melvin Gordon update and tacos

By Daniel Popper
The Athletic
November 1, 2019

Who is Shane Steichen? Let’s start with the basics.

He is 34 years old, and he is the Chargers’ new offensive coordinator.

He will call plays Sunday against the Packers for the first time in his NFL coaching career, which began in 2011 when then-Chargers head coach Norv Turner hired him as a defensive assistant.

He replaces Ken Whisenhunt, a friend and mentor.

He played high school football at Oak Ridge High School in El Dorado Hills, Calif., where he was a quarterback.

He went on to play QB at UNLV under former USC and Rams head coach John Robinson. He stayed there four years (2003-06), playing for Mike Sanford in his final two seasons.

Steichen was an offensive assistant at Louisville when Turner called and told him he had a job for him on defense. “I said, ‘I’ll be there tomorrow,’” Steichen recalled. “I got in my car and I drove across the country. I was fired up.”

He spent two seasons as an NFL assistant with the Chargers before following Turner to Cleveland, where, after being fired as the Bolts’ head coach, Turner was hired as the offensive coordinator on Rob Chudzinski’s staff.

Steichen returned to the Chargers in 2014 and has been with the team since. He served as an offensive quality control coach in 2014 and 2015, and he worked closely with Frank Reich, then the Chargers’ offensive coordinator. Steichen was promoted to quarterbacks coach in 2016 during Mike McCoy’s final season as the Chargers’ head coach. Steichen remained in that role when Anthony Lynn took over in 2017, working closely with Philip Rivers, and he kept that job until Monday when the Chargers relieved Whisenhunt of his duties.

Now, let’s dig a little deeper.

The Chargers, more than anything, are looking for a spark to ignite a flailing offense. Through eight weeks, they are averaging two offensive touchdowns per game. Only seven teams are averaging fewer. They’ve failed to top 40 rushing yards in four straight games, becoming the first team in the Super Bowl era to do so. During that span, they’ve averaged 26 minutes and 31 seconds of possession per game. That’s the sixth-lowest mark over the past four weeks.

They hope Steichen can change this trend.

“There was no flow, there was no rhythm,” Lynn said of the offense under Whisenhunt.

Steichen has no experience calling plays at the NFL level. But as backup quarterback Tyrod Taylor said, “Everyone has to start somewhere.” No one knew Sean McVay would revolutionize the league until Washington gave him an opportunity.

Surprisingly, though, Steichen first mentioned his high school coach, Chris Jones, when asked for his biggest coaching influence.

“He was awesome,” Steichen said. “We had a great relationship.”

Jones saw the news of Whisenhunt’s firing on Twitter on Monday night. He immediately texted Steichen and asked if he would be calling plays. Steichen confirmed he would be.

“This has been right up his alley since he was the young kid,” Jones said in a phone interview this week.

The Chargers think very highly of Steichen.

“He’s young, he’s innovative, he has a lot of juice,” Lynn said. “I think the players are going to respond to Shane. He’s a good communicator.”

So do offensive coaches around the league, both those who have worked with him and those who have not.

The Chargers won’t be changing their system. That’s unrealistic at this stage of the season. But what can change is how the game plans and concepts are communicated to the players.

There’s a reason Lynn referenced Steichen’s communication skills.

“It’s the most important thing,” running back Austin Ekeler said. “The coaches don’t play. They’re not on the field. We play. So if we don’t know the game plan, then that communication wasn’t there for whatever reason, they failed as coaches. For them to even be a decent coach, you have to be able to communicate to your players what the game plan is.”

The pace of the offense also could change.

The Chargers implemented a tempo, no-huddle offense in the third quarter of Sunday's win over the Bears and found some success, driving 73 yards on 14 plays to set up a field goal.

Taylor said he expects to see more of that this week with Steichen at the helm. And that goes back to finding the "rhythm" and "flow" Lynn believes was missing with Whisenhunt.

"A change of speed for us, as far as tempo-wise, I think will definitely be beneficial for us," Taylor said. "Some of the games we've started slow or just took a while to get going. I think the tempo that's doing some of our core things can definitely help us out as far as execution goes."

The Chargers also like that Steichen played quarterback in college, and they believe he is a natural leader.

According to Jones, that started when Steichen was a freshman in high school.

"He was the epitome of a leader," Jones said. "Everything you want — hard work, do it right, competitor. He was awesome that way, and he had the respect of everybody around him, just because that's who he was in every facet of his life."

"He understands the idea of work," Jones added. "He comes from a blue-collar family that's rock solid, and he's had to work for everything that he's got in his life."

Robinson, meanwhile, learned of Steichen's promotion when I called him this week.

"Fabulous," the 84-year-old said in between excited chuckles.

Robinson said he used to attend Chargers practices when Steichen was an assistant.

"I thought he was going to be a really successful coach," he said. "And it's come true."

Jones remembers when Robinson was recruiting Steichen to UNLV.

"Not everyone knew and understood who John Robinson was," Jones said. "But Shane did."

Lynn made it clear that the offense is Steichen's to run. "It's going to be his baby," Lynn said.

Lynn, who last called plays for the Bills in 2016, will be involved in a supervisor-type role. And offensive line coach Pat Meyer also will play a part as the run-game coordinator.

But this is Shane Steichen's show.

"Shane is prepared for this," Jones said.

Lessons from 2016

Steichen is in a difficult position, taking over as a first-time play-caller for a 3-5 team that really can't afford to lose many more games if it hopes to have a shot at the postseason.

But the positive is that other people in the Chargers' building endured a very similar situation with the Bills in 2016.

Those Bills fired offensive coordinator Greg Roman after two games. Lynn, who started the season as Buffalo's running backs coach, took over as the play-caller for the next 13 games before serving as interim head coach for the finale. The Bills let go of head coach Rex Ryan with one game left in the season.

Taylor was the starting quarterback for that Bills team, and Ryan Groy, whom the Chargers signed in early October, started seven games at center for Buffalo in 2016.

Lynn was asked what advice he gave to Steichen, based on his experiences with that Bills team. "Simplify," Lynn replied. "Cut back, simplify and let these young men play fast and physical, and know what the hell they're doing."

Groy said he saw some of that with the Bills in 2016. "We cut down the verbiage a lot," Groy said.

Taylor said that simplification allowed the Bills to play with more tempo.

"I think it just allows you to play fast," Taylor said. "It allows you to go out and play with the tempo, get in and out of the huddle faster, and I think that's the main thing, is it allows you go out there and play faster."

Taylor believes that situation with the Bills can be "helpful" for Steichen. He had a brief conversation with Steichen this week about the 2016 Bills team.

"We're definitely in a good space with him calling plays," Taylor said. "Of course, it's going to take a collective effort. It's his first time doing it. It's going to be all-in. Everybody has to do their part. And ultimately, we have to go out there and execute, regardless."

GEORGE STEWART

Want to make the Chargers' final roster? Earn this man's trust

By Gilbert Manzano
Orange County Register
August 28, 2019

COSTA MESA — George Stewart rarely leads a dull special teams meeting. In his deep voice that resembles actor James Earl Jones, Stewart shares countless stories from his coaching career that spans over three decades.

Jerry Rice, arguably the greatest wide receiver of all time, attended Stewart's meetings in San Francisco, not just for laughs, but because he wanted to improve even in an area he wasn't a part of on Sundays.

Stewart, the Chargers' special teams coordinator, reminds his players to not settle, but he understands not everyone is Jerry Rice. But if you're good enough to make an NFL roster, there's always has an opportunity to move up, and it often starts with special teams.

"Coach Stew has been coaching longer than I've been living," said Chargers safety Adrian Phillips, who earned Pro Bowl and All-Pro honors last season as a special teamer. "He has a new story every day and it's never the same story you heard before.

"Just hearing about guys no one gave a chance to make the team. On offense and defense they might not be up to par, but you get them on special teams, now it's their show. Just hearing those stories. He has countless guys like that."

Stewart is entering his 31st season as an NFL coach, with 17 of those years spent as a wide receivers coach for the 49ers, Atlanta Falcons and Minnesota Vikings.

He coached Rice, Terrell Owens, Randy Moss, Roddy White, Percy Harvin and Sidney Rice. Owens asked Stewart to introduce him at his Hall of Fame ceremony last year.

With a résumé like that, you would think it's safe to say "Coach Stew" is known as a wide receivers coach. Chargers coach Anthony Lynn disagreed.

"You better do your homework," Lynn said. "Coach Stew is known for special teams."

Stewart's first 11 years were as a special teams coach with the Pittsburgh Steelers, Tampa Bay Buccaneers and with the 49ers before moving to wide receivers. San Francisco was where a young Lynn proved he belonged in the NFL by contributing as a special teams captain for Stewart and the 49ers in 1995 and 1996. Lynn went on to win two Super Bowls with the Denver Broncos.

"I knew when Anthony was a player he was going to be a coach," Stewart said, "because he wrote everything down. Took every coaching detail."

Stewart and Lynn will return to the Bay Area for Thursday's preseason finale against the 49ers at Levi's Stadium. They'll be looking for players to step up on special teams the way Phillips and running back Austin Ekeler did in recent years to earn a roster spot, and the way Lynn did for Stewart years ago.

With safety Derwin James sidelined after foot surgery, and running back Melvin Gordon absent amid a contract dispute, Phillips and Ekeler will likely move into starting roles to open the regular season, leaving two spots available on special teams.

The Chargers have to trim their 90-man roster to 53 by Saturday's 1 p.m. cutdown deadline.

Thursday is the final opportunity to stand out for roster bubble players such as safeties Roderic Teamer and Adarius Pickett (UCLA), running backs Troymaine Pope and Detrez Newsome, defensive ends Anthony Lanier and Chris Peace, quarterbacks Cardale Jones and Easton Stick, and wide receivers Artavis Scott and Andre Patton.

"I'm hoping some of these guys make it a really tough decision for us," Lynn said. "That's what we want."

The Chargers have had a makeover on special teams since Stewart took over in 2017. Some questioned Lynn's decision to hire Stewart because he was coming off a long layoff as a special teams coach.

Since the hiring of Stewart, the Chargers have produced two All-Pros – Phillips and punt returner Desmond King – and found a reliable kicker in Michael Badgley after years of turmoil at the position.

"It was like riding a bicycle," Stewart said about returning to special teams. "We have improved our football team. We go from the worst, 32nd, when I took it over. The worst special teams in the National Football League to ninth in two years.

"I coached everything, but if I had an expertise, something to hang my hat on, it would be the kicking game."

The Chargers have also made changes at punter, long snapper and holder. Ty Long is the frontrunner to take over the punting and holding duties this season. Cole Mazza is in line to replace longtime long snapper Mike Windt, who was released this month after nine years with the team.

"Special teams, I believe, improved tremendously when the kicking settled down, No. 1, but that whole operation from the time I got here has changed," Lynn said. "I look forward to special teams being an advantage for us this year."

It wouldn't be a surprise if King's role on special teams was reduced because he's such a valuable player on defense. He's regarded as one of the best slot cornerbacks in the NFL, but he could see some time at safety with James sidelined.

That will provide an avenue for Pope to crack the roster even behind a deep running back group. Pope returned a punt for a touchdown in Week 2 of the preseason against the New Orleans Saints and has impressed Lynn, who called him a consistent playmaker.

But that doesn't mean King will bow out as a punt returner. He wants to do it, and that's one of Stewart's three requirements to playing special teams for him.

He wants commitment, care and trust.

"Can I trust you?" Stewart asked.

He and Lynn will find out Thursday night which players they can trust to be on the 53-man roster.

RON MILUS

Ron Milus: Leader of the JackBoyz

By Chris Hayre

May 22, 2019

In each of the last six seasons as the Chargers' defensive backs coach, Milus has had at least one representative from his unit make a Pro Bowl or All-Pro Team. Safeties Derwin James and Adrian Phillips, and cornerback Desmond King were the latest to reach this feat. Cornerback Casey Hayward did it from 2017-18.

Milus has transformed undrafted free agents Michael Davis and Trevor Williams into bonafide NFL corners. Since 2017, the duo has started a combined 31 games opposite Hayward.

Milus' first instinct is to deflect praise to a front office responsible for bringing in the talent.

"I think we have to give credit to [General Manager] Tom Telesco and the scouting department," Milus said. "They were the guys who saw these guys and said, 'OK, they fit what we're trying to do. They have the traits that the defense needs.'"

For optimal success, the traits that these players possess must be molded; the players need to be showered with the necessary confidence and discipline to perform as a cohesive unit; and the unit has to be bigger than any one individual. That's all been in Milus' job description over the last 19 years in the NFL.

Entering year No. 20, he'll lead a collection of rookies, UDFAs, late-round draft picks and Pro Bowlers known as the JackBoyz – a confident, vocal, in-your-face group of defensive backs whose infectious enthusiasm permeates the roster and fan base.

Under Defensive Coordinator Gus Bradley, the even-keeled Milus is at the controls.

"I'll be honest with you, I'm a little more subdued in my personal life than when we start this football thing," he said.

ENERGY

"If you see us, everybody's got their own handshake," James said. "Coach Milo's got a handshake with every player. So, he's really into it."

The 55-year-old Milus looks at it as an opportunity to generate energy before his unit gets into any sort of drill work. He wants his players to enter practice with a positive mindset.

Milus also has a plan to maintain that enthusiasm throughout the course of the day.

"I know one thing that we talked about when I first got here is that, 'If we get an interception at practice, everyone's coming off the sideline – including the coach,'" he said.

You practice how you play. The group celebrations that fans see in the end zone during games are simulated during the week. What started with just the defensive backs has morphed into other position groups – even quarterback Philip Rivers – getting into the mix.

Milus likened it to the Golden State Warriors. Once Steph Curry hits a three, Klay Thompson's going to want to do the same. The momentum starts to roll, and then Draymond Green drains a three-ball. The onslaught becomes too much for the opposition to handle.

Threes are INTs in the NFL. Milus wants his players to think about what they're going to do when they pick the quarterback. He wants to see the ball.

"At the end of the day, what are we here to do? We're here to try to intercept the ball – JackBoyz – and it's hard to do, so we need to celebrate our accomplishments."

DISCIPLINE

"Bend your knees! Bend your knees!"

"I know he's just trying to keep me connected to my vision," said Jenkins of Milus. "That's kind of cool to have a coach like that."

Milus' mission is to create a relationship with his players that includes a simple understanding: He has their best interests at heart. That may include some blunt coaching.

Every player reacts differently. Milus explained some guys need more prodding, while others would benefit more with an arm on the shoulder coming off the field.

Davis is an example of a player who's reacted positively to the tough love, though it may not have started that way. As a rookie, Davis would get into a funk when Milus got on him. Fast forward to season three, and Milus believes Davis has improved as much as anybody due to a work ethic that matches his height, weight and speed.

Davis and Williams didn't hear their names called on draft day, but that doesn't mean they couldn't play. Milus pointed specifically to Williams as a player who went from an unknown to a 15-game starter in 2017.

To reach that tipping point of his pro career, Williams had to put his trust in Milus.

"He's going to keep you disciplined, keep you at it and just make sure you're doing all the little things," Williams said. "He's very particular in what he wants, but it helps us have pride in ourselves and in our game, and at the end of the day, we all want the same outcome."

Even the elite are nudged to greater heights. James was a first-team All-Pro and Pro Bowl starter his rookie season. Milus sees more, and James is appreciative.

"He's meant a lot to me," James said. "We go at it a lot, and he challenges me and pushes me. He doesn't let me settle for being average."

"I know he's just trying to keep me connected to my vision. That's kind of cool to have a coach like that."

ACCOUNTABILITY

Third-year cornerback Desmond King is more than comfortable paying it forward.

Last week, Milus said King was on the field instructing UDFAs on how to play the nickel position. It goes back to what Head Coach Anthony Lynn said Monday about coaching the veterans to coach the rookies.

"That's exactly how we get better," Milus said.

King is climbing the ladder to a leadership role, but Milus named three players who currently fill that on-field position: James, Phillips and Hayward.

Entering his fourth season with the Chargers, Hayward has started 46 games and collected a team-high 11 interceptions. Milus calls him the galvanizing presence of the group.

Then there's Phillips, another undrafted free agent who's fought adversity to propel himself into an impact contributor. According to Milus, Phillips is the walking definition of preparation.

Williams recalled when Milus would use Phillips as an example of what a bubble player can ultimately become.

"I always remember during our rookie minicamps, he always talks about the older guys," Williams said. "He always talks about Adrian Phillips. He would always just say, 'We don't know who's going to make the team, but it's going to be somebody in the secondary. It's going to be somebody in our room.'"

Finally, Milus is counting on James to be even more of a leader in 2019. He describes the second-year safety as someone who "loves practice" and "practices the right way."

The 22-year-old has embraced the added responsibility, something his position coach has taken note of.

"Derwin has grown so much in this last year," Milus said. "He feels comfortable. He'll mention to a guy who's maybe a five- or six-year pro, 'Hey, that's not up to our standard.' And I think that's important, too."

FAMILY

Each Thursday during the regular season, a member of the secondary is tasked with catering in food for the group when they watch film.

"Go back when you sat with your family on Sundays and you broke bread with your family on Sundays," Milus said. "Everybody had to be there and that was a time for your family to get closer."

Milus described the weekly sessions as less barking and more collaboration. It's a laid-back environment where players can exchange ideas and build bonds that extend into the offseason.

"They'll take DB trips together, just little things like that just to bring the group closer together," Milus said.

Thursdays included, Milus said he walks into Hoag Performance Center every day with a smile on his face. There's never a moment of dread when the DBs room opens; he's in charge of a group of men who want what's best for the team and each other.

Their sacrifice and willingness to be coached, all while maintaining a level of vigor that's felt throughout the building may sound like it's above and beyond.

KEENAN ALLEN

Chargers' Keenan Allen continues to be overlooked after back-to-back prolific seasons

By Gilbert Manzano
Orange County Register
July 27, 2019

SANTA ANA — The street race cars made thunderous sounds, each one louder than the previous, as drivers accelerated following a stop sign near the field at Calvary Chapel High. But the Fast and Furious spectacle didn't grab the attention of the 200 youngsters sitting in front of Chargers wide receiver Keenan Allen last week.

They were absorbing Allen's opening words for his youth football camp. Allen didn't raise his voice to compete with the loud engines. He already had their attention. No need to alter what was working. No wasted steps. Efficient and effective. The same instructions in his route-running handbook.

And if the boys and girls of ages 6 to 16 really wanted to see a sports car, Allen had something better parked a few yards away — a white Lamborghini that would likely take first in a winner-take-all race against the colorful vehicles.

But the car crew was safe. Allen prefers to challenge NFL cornerbacks, and he's pretty good at making them look silly.

"There's no one better to learn from in the league," said Rocco Scarfone, a close friend of Allen. "It's what he does. He's an elite route runner and I don't care what Madden says. He's an elite route runner."

Allen went viral this month for his video rant against "Madden NFL 20," which gave the two-time Pro Bowl wideout a rating of 89 and many other questionable numbers regarding his route running. Allen vowed to not play the latest version of the popular video game.

"I haven't been (an 89) since like rookie season," said Allen, as his voice cracked in disbelief. "What's up? And I ain't get worse. I feel like I was consistent. They hating on me. It's all good.

"I'm still on strike with Madden. Still won't be played."

NFL players being unhappy with their Madden ratings is nothing new. But when it comes to Allen and rankings, he's often overlooked.

He's known as a top wide receiver, but he's not being mentioned in the same category as Odell Beckham Jr., Antonio Brown, Julio Jones and DeAndre Hopkins. Allen is tired of the disrespect.

Allen spent the offseason calling out pundits on social media. He frequently went after Pro Football Focus and many other outlets that didn't include him at the top of its wide receiver rankings. No one was safe. Not even Le'Veon Bell's music and the Kansas City Chiefs' secondary.

Allen made headlines after his brutally honest review of the running back's rap song and nonchalant assessment of the Chiefs' secondary, which struggled last season.

"We just looked at their DB group and I'll just leave it at that," Allen said in April.

Allen, 27, believes he's being overlooked because he's not as popular as the other star wide receivers.

"Because I only got like 240,000 followers (on Instagram)," he said.

To compare, Beckham has 13.4 million followers and Brown has 3.3 million. From the 12 wide receivers ranked ahead of Allen on Madden, nearly all of them double his Instagram following.

"I'm not sure why," Chargers wide receiver Mike Williams said about Allen being overlooked. "I feel like he's one of the best in this league at what he do, and I feel like he go out there and prove it every year."

Scarfone, who was Allen's quarterback at Northern Guilford High in Greensboro, North Carolina, said Allen is being penalized for his past injuries. Allen only played eight games in 2015 and one in 2016 after tearing his ACL in the season-opener against Kansas City (Chiefs fans were quick to remind him about it on social media after Allen's dig at the defensive backs).

But Allen hasn't missed a game the past two seasons, and has recorded 199 catches and 2,589 receiving yards during that time span.

"I think some of it has to do with his injuries," Scarfone, 27, said. "I think people are still holding that against him, which is unfair to him, and also I don't think the Chargers get the national coverage that others teams do. I think they're kinda overlooked right now.

"As bad as it is to say, I feel like most people have been focusing on the Rams in L.A. and people are overlooking the Chargers right now, and I think it has affected him and his popularity nationwide."

The irony about Allen calling out his naysayers, it's likely increased his notoriety nationally and in Los Angeles. The Rams have three good wide receivers in Brandin Cooks, Robert Woods and Cooper Kupp, but none received the type of face-time Allen had on talk shows this offseason.

Going viral and creating headlines are fine in the offseason, but Allen wants to continue making plays on the field for his seventh NFL season to prove his doubters wrong.

"Not even just to prove something because they don't think I'm that good, but because that's how I am," Allen said. "I like proving myself. I like coming out every day, being consistent, getting better every time and showing them that I can't be guarded."

MICHAEL BADGLEY

How confident is Michael Badgley? Chargers kicker shows up to camp with a mullet

By Jeff Miller
Los Angeles Times
July 27, 2019

A certain level of self-assurance is required to successfully convert 15 of 16 field goal attempts — and Michael Badgley is coming off the most accurate single season ever for a Chargers kicker.

One of his makes was another team record — for distance — a 59-yarder. When the playoffs arrived, Badgley made five more field goals in a victory over Baltimore. Yes, that performance also was a franchise-best, for a postseason game.

It takes a lot of inner certainty to do what Badgley did during the 2018 season. And takes a lot more to do what he did Monday.

"I'm hyped for him," said defensive lineman Isaac Rochell, one of Badgley's best friends on the team. "He'll live up to what the expectation of a mullet lifestyle is. He's a beast."

Regarded these days as less of a 'do and more of a don't, the mullet was Badgley's preferred hairstyle for a time in college.

The fans in attendance began shouting for a return of the mullet, and Badgley promised them he would bring it back. That's why he arrived for the start of training camp looking nearly as dated as a leather helmet.

"It's just for fun," Badgley said Saturday. "A lot of the guys on the team have had a good laugh out of it. Once you step on the field, it's all business anyway. I don't think a haircut is going to change my mindset."

The Chargers definitely believe in Badgley, who last season brought calm to a position that had been tumbling wildly end-over-end. He is the only pure kicker in camp, with punter Ty Long also capable of hitting field goals and extra points.

The job security has Badgley in a place vastly different from where he was just a year ago. After signing with Indianapolis as an undrafted free agent, he reported to a team that already employed Adam Vinatieri, the NFL's all-time leading scorer.

You go into it thinking, 'I'm going to give it everything I have to make them notice me, make them think I can kick in the NFL,' " Badgley said. "But, at the end of the day, it's Adam Vinatieri."

The Colts released Badgley following the preseason. He signed with the Chargers in October when Caleb Sturgis was injured.

Badgley suddenly was walking into a locker room in which he knew no one, his new teammates knowing him only as the seventh player who would attempt a kick for the team in less than a season and a half.

"It's almost like they're looking right through you," Badgley recalled. " 'Here comes another kicker. What's he going to do?' As they should. I don't blame them."

When Sturgis returned, he struggled to the point where the Chargers switched permanently to Badgley, who then started making all that history.

He quickly went from having a name no one knew to having multiple nicknames: "Money Badger" and "Money Bags."

After practice the past two days, Badgley signed autographs for numerous screaming fans and posed for several selfies.

He appeared to genuinely appreciate the opportunity to embrace the noise coming from Chargers fans who, given the team's past kicking woes, more often had screamed something other than their affection.

"I always tell myself, 'It's not going to last forever,' " Badgley said. "You remember being a kid, looking over fences trying to get an autograph, whether it's a baseball game or football game.

"It's one of those feelings where I remember how it felt and you want to be able to go over there and do it for them now. You have to enjoy every aspect of this game. Why not?"

"I think he's creating a brand," Rochell said. "He's bringing the mullet back. I think he is everything that a mullet should be."

"Jersey Confidence" Abounds in Michael Badgley

Rewind to last spring and he was an undrafted rookie trying to cut his teeth with the Indianapolis Colts. But while Badgley's story is well-known to Chargers fans at this point – from being waived by Indy to making team history with the Bolts in his first season in the league – what may not be known is the cool confidence that the kicker carries himself with.

Or as Special Teams Coordinator/Assistant Head Coach George Stewart calls it, "Jersey confidence."

"(It's that,) 'just give me the ball' (mentality)," Stewart said. "He's a great kicker. His mental approach is outstanding. That's one thing that I like about him."

"I'm just a kid from New Jersey!" Badgley explained. "But, (confidence) is just one of the things that come with the position you play. You go out there, and a lot of the guys are counting on you to do your job. There's just a certain way you like to go about it and I have fun with it."

Fun may be one of the best ways to describe Badgley's rookie season with the Chargers. He had the most efficient season in team history in 2018, making 93.8 percent of his field goal attempts, marking the best single season field goal percentage with at least 15 attempts.

And oh yeah, he booted a 59-yard field goal in the team's Week 14 win over the Cincinnati Bengals, marking the longest made field goal in franchise history. Ask Stewart and he'll tell you there were other plans for that kick before Badgley came in and stated his case.

"That 59-yard field goal…we were going to punt the football," Stewart reflected. "We were going to punt it and pin them, then Michael (says), 'Coach, I got it.' I believe my kickers. I had Gary Anderson when I was a young coach. Gary will probably be a Hall of Famer. I was a young coach and he was a veteran guy…. When they tell you that they can kick the football and make those type of field goals, I have the confidence that they can do it because that's what we're on the football team for. (Badgley) has done a great job of making those kicks. We're very fortunate to have him."

Part of what gives Stewart confidence in Badgley is the assurance the kicker has in himself. Although he's only 23, Badgley carries himself with the type of gravitas seen by those who have been in the league for a number of years.

"He's a pro's pro to be a young player. He was coached very well in college at Miami. For us to have a chance to get him — it's just everything about him. He's kind of like Tiger Woods — you know with that standard operating procedure that Tiger Woods has. He's looking at the football, he's looking at the spot, he's looking at the wind conditions. Everything that you look for in a kicker, he does those things."

But ask Badgley where he learned to carry himself that way, and he'll tell you along with college and admiring other athletes from afar, it was his time spent around Adam Vinatieri with the Colts last spring that proved most beneficial.

It's what he learned during that time that paid dividends for him and the Chargers last season and now, beyond.

"You learn a lot just from watching him walk around the facility," Badgley mentioned. "It's something you always try to model your game after certain role models; guys like (Vinatieri) and Derek Jeter. Guys who carry themselves like that who I try to (emulate) at a professional level."

MICHAEL DAVIS

It was, for some Chargers observers, the most stunning moment of the 2019 draft.

For defensive tackle Justin Jones, it was confirmation that what he had heard about teammate Michael Davis was indeed true.

"I knew Mike spoke some kind of other language," Jones said. "I did not know it was Spanish."

When the Chargers' pick in the fourth round arrived in April, the television coverage cut to Mexico City, where Davis, a cornerback entering his third season, was standing with his family.

"Bienvenido a L.A.," he said.

"A lot of people on the team had no idea," Davis said Sunday. "Most of the [defensive backs] knew I speak Spanish, but they didn't know I could speak it that fluently."

When he rejoined his teammates in the Chargers' offseason program, several of them said they thought he was only boasting about being bilingual and had doubted his claim.

With the team set to play Kansas City in Mexico City on Nov. 18, Davis' ability to communicate in Spanish will be more popular than ever among the Chargers.

"He's gonna be our tour guide, for sure," Jones said. " 'You tell me what's on the menu, I'm going to order from there and then you tell them what I want.' That's how we're gonna do things."

Davis' mother is Mexican and his father is African American. His mom, Ana Martinez, taught him Spanish from as far back as he can recall.

As a young child, he would spend months at a time in Mexico. Later on, he would visit relatives there every Christmas.

"People see the color of my skin and think I'm just an African American," said Davis, who, on his dad's side, also has some Native American. "They don't expect Spanish to start coming out."

The Chargers' visit in November will give Davis an opportunity to see his grandparents, who live about 90 minutes outside Mexico City. He described himself as being "super fired up" when he found out about the trip.

Even better, there's a chance Davis could be a major contributor by that point. He is battling Trevor Williams for a starting cornerback job on a defense that has an opportunity to be quite stout.

"He has always had the speed, but I think his technique is catching up to his speed," defensive coordinator Gus Bradley said of Davis, who made the Chargers as an undrafted free agent. "He's starting to do it and having success with it, so it breeds confidence with him."

Davis took over midway through last season after Williams returned from an injury and struggled. He started nine games and had 43 tackles.

What he failed to do, and still hasn't done since his senior season at Brigham Young, was intercept a pass. He did, however, drop four balls that were within his grasp.

"Interceptions are big money," Davis said. "It's key for a defense to have interceptions. Interceptions can define a player. Getting the ball out, scoring, that's what we preach. I do want to get my interceptions back."

The Chargers were middle of the road with 13 interceptions and 20 takeaways in 2018. They had a turnover differential of only one, which tied for 15th out of 32 teams.

Creating more turnovers was a theme throughout the offseason program and continues to be a theme, with the first exhibition game coming Thursday in Arizona.

Davis said he thinks about those four missed pickoffs "everyday" and envisions himself intercepting a pass as soon as he wakes up each morning.

"The ball's money," he said. "You have to grab the money."

THOMAS DAVIS SR.

Veteran Thomas Davis brings wisdom and leadership to Chargers

He is entering his 15th season in a league that traditionally chews up tendons and bones and players much sooner than that.

Thomas Davis participated in his only Super Bowl to date with a broken arm. He has had the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee repaired three times, doctors harvesting a slice of his hamstring and bits of both his patellar tendons in order to put the joint back together.

The man is 36.

"When the Chargers signed a 36-year-old linebacker, I'm sure a lot of people were displeased," Davis said. "For me, it was all about coming in and proving my worth, proving I have a lot left. I want to make them proud I'm on this team."

After just one training camp, the Chargers are genuinely bursting over the most significant piece they added in a rather quiet offseason.

They have marveled at Davis' leadership. They have praised his commitment. They have gushed over his ability to blur past them in pursuit of the ball.

Over and over, for months now.

And here's the interesting thing: Davis is certain those three torn ACLs — each a threat to his career — have allowed him to extend it.

"I think that definitely has given me some time on the back end," he said. "I'm a 15-year player right now, but I don't have the pounding of a 15-year guy. I'm trying to take advantage of that."

Over three seasons — from 2009 to 2011 — Davis appeared in only nine games because of his knee. Otherwise, in his other 11 seasons, he has been the precise opposite of injury prone, missing five games because of injury.

Though Davis' knee was once delicate, the rest of him never has stopped being dependable.

"He's a freak of an athlete," said Chris Harris, the Chargers' assistant defensive backs coach and a former teammate of Davis. "He's a freak of a human being too. When he committed to coming back after the third ACL, I knew he'd be fine."

Davis called Harris soon after the Chargers offered him a free-agent deal in March. It took Harris mere seconds to begin selling the team and the situation, both quite foreign to Davis, who had played his entire career in Carolina.

Harris knew how well his good friend would fit into a locker room that Chargers management has tried so hard to build on a foundation of maturity and responsibility.

He also knew the Chargers could use a linebacker of Davis' stature, particularly coming off a season with so many linebacker injuries that the team was forced to try to stop Tom Brady by scattering defensive backs all over the field.

"He has great genes, of course, so he has to thank his mom and dad," Harris said. "But he's also a true professional. He knows how to take care of his body. To watch him now is quite amazing. I wish I could still do what he's doing."

Davis isn't Brady when it comes to avocado ice cream and organically grown legumes. He said he "free eats," which means he eats "pretty much whatever I like."

After Davis' introductory news conference in March, there was an audible gleeful reaction from both Davis and his wife, Kelly, when they found out Southern California has Chick-fil-A.

And he has never stopped consuming football. He is so gifted athletically that as a rookie in 2005, Davis wore No. 47 for the Panthers and played strong safety.

At 6 feet 1 and 235 pounds, linebacker has long since been woven into his DNA. So too has been leadership, Chargers safety Derwin James admitting, "I thought I was a leader until I met him."

James called Davis "a watchdog" because he misses nothing that happens on the field. Defensive end Joey Bosa said Davis has called him out for not hustling to the sidelines. Linebacker Kyzir White called Davis "an extra coach."

The Chargers added all this when they signed Davis. And so much more.

On a mantel back in North Carolina sit trophies for the following awards: the Call to Courage, for displaying character through adversity and triumph; the Bart Starr, for exemplifying outstanding character and leadership, and the Tony Dungy Uncommon, which Davis earned for his work with underprivileged kids.

There's also a statue depicting one of the NFL's all-time greats. The Walter Payton Man of the Year Award recognizes outstanding community service, as well as excellence on the field.

Davis won his Walter Payton in 2014. When he discusses his off-the-field work and his Defending Dreams Foundation — to encourage the development of students — he always uses the words "us" and "we."

"Thomas is like that big brother that you want to fight, but you know you can't," linebacker Denzel Perryman said. "He has been sharing a lot of knowledge. Every day, I'm learning something from him, whether it's football or life."

It has been only one training camp. The learning is just beginning.

Chargers love having veteran Thomas Davis Sr. as part of family

By Helene Elliott

Thomas Davis Sr.'s speed is among the many assets the Chargers liked when they signed the three-time Pro Bowl pick as a free agent in March.

"He's 36 years old and he runs around like a 13-year-old," coach Anthony Lynn said in praising Davis' energy.

But on Thursday, the first full day of training camp for the Chargers at Jack Hammett Sports Complex in Costa Mesa, Davis was among the slowest players to leave the field.

Instead of hurrying off the field after a two-hour practice on a hot and humid day, he lingered in the family area with the blended his, hers and theirs family of four children he has created with his wife, Kelly. Thomas Jr., in whose honor Davis added the designation "Sr." to his name, carried his dad's helmet when the linebacker finally walked toward the sideline.

He felt he owed his daughter Skye — soon off to college — sons Denim and Thomas Jr., and daughter Mattison those precious extra minutes of family time.

His family had followed him from Carolina, where he spent his first 14 NFL seasons, to southern California, where the Chargers signed him to a two-year, $10.5-million contract in hopes he can lend an experienced voice in the locker room and fortify an injury-depleted linebacking corps that had trouble stopping the run.

"Coming from the East Coast to the West Coast is a real big move but it's something that, at this point of my career, we've embraced it," he said. "We're looking forward to the opportunity and hoping to have a really good year."

Davis expected to be a Panther his entire career. They chose him 14th in the 2005 NFL draft and stuck with him through three ACL tears in his right knee, one each in 2009, 2010, and 2011. He rewarded their loyalty with a franchise record 1,111 tackles in 176 games, those three Pro Bowl selections, and a first-team All-Pro performance in 2012. He also won the 2014 Walter Payton Man of the Year award and the 2016 Bart Starr award for character and leadership on the field and in the community.

Davis envisioned the 2018 season would be his last before he retired, but life has a way of turning plans upside down. A four-game suspension, imposed by the NFL for violating its policy against performance-enhancing drugs, set him back from the start. He said the substance was in a supplement he had been taking without any previous problems, but he accepted the ruling.

"It wasn't a situation where it was me trying to cheat the game," he said. "At the end of the day, I can live with that, knowing it wasn't something that I did intentionally. I've moved on from it. I've proven that over the course of a 15-year-career, for that to be the only blemish on my career, I think that speaks volumes for it."

Then, after the Panthers got off to a 6-2 start, they lost their next seven games and slid out of playoff contention. Davis wanted to come back "to be part of the group that came in and right the wrongs," he said in a video posted on his Twitter feed, but the Panthers told him early this year he wasn't part of their future.

"In no way did I ever imagine putting on another uniform," he said in that video, "but I want to play football."

He pushed retirement to the back of his mind.

"Just the way my season went last year in Carolina, kind of the way it started out, and at the end of the season I felt like I still had a lot of juice left," he said Thursday. "I was just hoping for another opportunity to play and the Chargers presented a great opportunity for me, and I took full advantage of it."

He wasted no time impressing his new teammates during the Chargers' off-season program.

"He's new ... but what happens when a guy like that walks in the room and you already know his resume, so you obviously give him the utmost respect that you can give," defensive tackle Justin Jones said. "He comes in, he doesn't have to speak, but you know he's a leader.

"He's one of those guys that, when you walk into the room, you kind of just look and wait for him to say something because you know how much knowledge he has. Fifteen years in the league, that's a long time. That's a lot of games played, that's a lot of situations that you had to make the best out of and handle those adverse times. For a guy like me who is going into year two, I would rather know how you overcame those adverse times so that when I hit those times, I know how to proceed."

Safety Derwin James praised Davis' willingness to help others while maintaining his own skills.

"That man is so fast. I've seen him fly past me a couple of times running to the ball," James said. "He's a tremendous athlete. He looks like he's in year one to me."

Lynn said he plans to bring Davis along slowly and "hold him out some" during camp in deference to Davis' age and unfamiliarity with the Chargers' system. That's fine with Davis.

"Being 36 years old and being in my 15th season, I definitely embrace whatever role the coaches see fit for me," he said. "I'm not a guy that's going to fight what they have planned for me. I'm just going to come out and do what's asked of me and try and fit into this team as well as I possibly can.

"Hopefully I can bring a lot of veteran leadership, first and foremost, but also coming out and showing that I can still come out and compete at a high level. That's what it's all about. You don't come in and just try to be a vocal leader or a leader. You just try to come in and fit in where they need, just try to contribute to the team as much as you can."

His contributions could help lift the Chargers beyond the second-round playoff exit they made last season.

"This is a team that is definitely capable of doing great things," he said. "We know in this league one year does not predicate how you're going to be the next year but just looking at the roster I feel we have what it takes to go far in this league and it's all about putting it together."

'All of them are just plain athletes': How three RBs have brought attention to Colorado

By Nicki Jhabvala
The Athletic
October 2, 2019

Calais Campbell caught himself mid-sentence as he thought back to his days at Denver South High and his journey to the pros. He, like so many young players in Colorado, dreamed of becoming a Bronco and wearing that orange and blue like his idol Terrell Davis.

He, like so many young players in Colorado, also noticed how few of those dreams actually became reality.

"It is a true blessing to be able to make it to the NFL," he said last week before returning to his home state to face the Broncos. "As a kid growing up in Denver, you don't see too many guys — although right now we have a lot of guys playing well."

Colorado is no Texas or Georgia and certainly no Florida or California. While many NFL players have come out of Colorado, the majority have been linemen — Campbell, Nate Solder, Ryan Jensen, Mitch Unrein, Ben Garland, Erik Pears and so on — with the rare skill-position players, like LenDale White, mixed in between.

But over the last couple of years, a trio of running backs has cast a spotlight on a state so often overlooked, taking the NFL by storm with their production and, for a couple of them, unlikely paths.

Carolina's Christian McCaffrey (Castle Rock, Colo.), Denver's Phillip Lindsay (Aurora) and the Chargers' Austin Ekeler (Eaton) rank among the 14 best backs in the NFL in rushing average since the start of last season. Through the first four weeks of this season, the three have all started every game and combined for 1,441 scrimmage yards and 12 total touchdowns.

"That's pretty cool," Campbell said. "That's a big deal."

McCaffrey, Ekeler and Lindsay starred in high school in three different counties, producing a slew of state records and astounding career totals before doing the same in college (McCaffrey, 23, at Stanford; Lindsay, 25, at Colorado; and Ekeler, 24, at Division II Western Colorado) and now the pros.

All three trained at Landow Performance, a facility in Centennial not far from the Broncos' headquarters, to prepare for the NFL Draft. McCaffrey and Ekeler were part of Landow's 2017 pre-draft group, while Lindsay arrived the following year.

All three impressed with their NFL combine or pro day performances.

All three have proven to be complete backs, heavily involved in the run game and pass game for their teams.

All three were labeled as undersized, as unlikely to be three-down backs in the NFL, as having logged too many miles in college.

Yet they never really got to know one another as their paths diverged.

Only McCaffrey was drafted, at No. 8 overall, while Ekeler and Lindsay became the diamonds of college free agency in 2017 and '18, respectively.

Collectively, they've put a state so often passed over at the forefront.

"Shoot, I hope so," Ekeler said. "Coming out of high school, with recruiting, I feel like it was just overlooked. It ended up working out for me. I don't know what it is about Colorado. Hopefully we're representing well. It's crazy to think the three backs from Colorado are starting for different teams, and of similar age too. It's pretty special."

If Louisiana has the Mannings, Colorado has the McCaffreys, the first family of Mile High football. When Ed McCaffrey starred for the Broncos, Christian was often on the sideline, his blonde curls dangling over the back of his No. 30 Broncos jersey while chasing his brothers — all of whom starred locally and were recruited to top FBS programs.

Where Campbell remembers snapping one photo with Davis, and Lindsay remembers reading Davis' autobiography as a young player, McCaffrey grew up around Davis and other Hall of Famers.

Loren Landow, now the Broncos' head strength coach who prepped all three for the draft, was McCaffrey's trainer since high school, helping him hone his rare abilities into head-turning talent.

"When we had Phillip and McCaffrey, that was a big time as far as the running backs," said Tony Lindsay, Phillip's uncle who has coached high school in the Denver area since 1990. "They just stuck out in high school like sore thumbs.

"Watching McCaffrey, he was just a real smart runner when he was at Valor (Christian). He had very good body control. When you say running backs, most of them are black. Then you see a white kid and I saw him and was like, 'Man, you can't hate on this kid.' I was a running back and I know. The first time I saw him run I was like, 'He's good. He's good.' It's almost like he knew where to cut before it happened."

In his four years at Valor Christian, a Class 5A Colorado powerhouse south of Denver where Ed McCaffrey now coaches, Christian compiled 848 career points, 141 total touchdowns, 47 receiving touchdowns and 8,845 all-purpose yards — all of which rank second in state history.

While McCaffrey had additional resources, his work ethic and talent are still recounted almost as legend, attempted by many but matched by none. Just as his break-away runs at Stanford or gaudy yardage totals would cause heads to shake in disbelief, so too would his workouts.

Remember the clip of him during micro-hurdles that went viral?

"Everybody thinks he sped it up. It is not sped up," said Augustine Agyei, who succeeded Landow as the facility's lead coach for NFL draft prep. "That was actually him.

"He understands football. He's been around it a long time. He's laser-focused. A very, very, very focused individual, which is great because he understands how to rise to the occasion."

Lindsay, too, was a known standout in high school, starring at Campbell's alma mater, Denver South, and finishing as its all-time leader in rushing yards (4,587 yards) and all-purpose yards. His father, Troy, and uncle, Tony, both former college backs themselves, were also Phillip's mentors and coaches from little league on up.

In the same game Phillip tore his ACL as a high school senior, he snapped his father's Denver Prep League all-time rushing record. At 5-foot-8 and 190 pounds, he was notorious for his trash talk and his days as a linebacker.

"Oh my gosh, he begged me, 'Uncle, please don't send my defensive tapes out. I don't want you to send them because I want to be a running back in college,'" said Tony, formerly the head coach at Denver South. "That's what he wanted to be, but don't think I didn't show some of those people that because he would knock people's helmets off. He was vicious. Oh my god, he was vicious."

Because of the injury late in high school, and perhaps because of his slight frame, Lindsay went largely unrecruited in college, landing at Colorado when Mike MacIntyre honored his scholarship after Jon Embree was fired.

There, too, Lindsay went on to set records, becoming CU's all-time leader in all-purpose yards (5,760) and yards from scrimmage (4,683), while finishing second in career rushing yards (3,707). At his pro day in Boulder, he ran a 4.39-second 40 in front of John Elway, Gary Kubiak and Vance Joseph.

But again, any interest wasn't enough. Lindsay was snubbed by the NFL combine, snubbed in the NFL Draft and snubbed by the Broncos, who pissed him off for not even selecting him in the seventh round.

When Lindsay cooled down and decided to stay home as a Bronco, he called Elway and made him a promise: Despite being undrafted, he would win the starting job at running back.

And that, he did, surprising no one in Colorado.

"It's cool seeing another guy from Colorado make it up the ranks and then continue to have such huge success," Christian McCaffrey said at his family's youth camp in Colorado earlier this year. "I'm definitely happy and I think it's great for Colorado football as well. The more guys that do what Phil is doing is special for guys. You look at the high school talent now, and even younger than that, it gives the kids a sense of pride and somebody to look up to in that position; that can dream and have aspirations of being where he is."

Last season, Lindsay totaled 1,037 rushing yards, the second-most by an undrafted rookie, and became the first undrafted offensive rookie to earn a Pro Bowl nod. In Year 2, his role has changed, along with the Broncos' offense. His touches are spread among the running and passing games, but he still leads the team with 213 rushing yards and a pair of rushing touchdowns.

His path from undrafted out of Colorado to starting in the pros, however, was paved a year earlier.

"I don't know him directly, but I had heard about him," Lindsay said of Ekeler. "He's from a smaller mountain town, but he's tough. He's really tough. He started the undrafted free agent thing for me." From a town of about 5,000, Ekeler dominated Class 2A Colorado football out of Eaton High, but he garnered notice from primarily Division II schools that wanted him to change positions.

At 5-foot-9, Ekeler could lift more than twice his body weight, shed tackles with ease and amassed 2,398 rushing yards (10.2 per carry) and 42 touchdowns at Eaton. Yet some saw him as an athlete, or potentially a cornerback.

Western Colorado, in Gunnison, wanted Ekeler where he wanted to play.

"He was a freak on film," Western coach Jas Bains said. "He's strong and he's fast and everything that you want, not only in a running back, but a skill position as far as speed and explosiveness and strength. He had all those things and it was very visible on film. On his highlight video, he even had himself dunking a basketball. Great balance, great speed. He just broke tackles and made guys miss. It was very impressive."

At Western, Ekeler produced more than 1,000 rushing yards in each of the four years he played, totaling 5,857 in his career, plus 1,215 receiving yards. He recorded more than 300 rushing yards and five touchdowns in a game — twice — and developed a reputation as a workout junkie.

Bains said a representative from nearly every NFL team inquired about Ekeler over the course of his final two seasons at Western. And after months of training alongside McCaffrey at Landow Performance, Ekeler participated in Colorado's pro day and ran a blazing 4.43-second 40, which would have ranked as the fourth-fastest time among running backs at the combine in 2017. He also recorded a 40.5-inch vertical that would have ranked sixth among all combine participants that year.

And yet — nothing. Again.

"He's maybe a small-town kid that played at Division II," Bains said. "In stature, he's not 5-10, 6 foot, 6-1. He's a smaller tailback and I think sometimes those guys get overlooked in the sense of can they take the brunt of the NFL and can they last? It's unfortunate it happens sometimes."

As a college free agent on a team that lost Danny Woodhead but starred Melvin Gordon, Ekeler had a chance, but a narrow one.

"Coming from a school like that, or even just being in a small town, you have limited resources so it teaches you to make a lot of things work," he said. "I had two pairs of gloves the whole season. Now I have a deal with Adidas and I can get a new pair every day if I wanted. You have to make things work. We used to have to pack our own bags, we'd bus everywhere. And I look at it now and it just makes you really appreciate the NFL and the resources."

The rise of Ekeler, especially to start this season, is mirroring that of Lindsay in 2018. Two small, undrafted kids out of Colorado the entire league overlooked or pre-judged. The doubts of whether Ekeler could handle the starting job while Gordon held out for a new contract were quashed almost immediately when he recorded 287 yards from scrimmage and three touchdowns in his first two games for the Chargers. In a win over Miami last week, he produced 60 rushing yards and a rushing touchdown, as well as 62 receiving yards and a receiving touchdown.

Next up: the Broncos, who could use a heavy dose of Lindsay to overcome their four-game slump.

"Even though they got Gordon back and he'll be their No. 1 back, they're still going to play this guy," Broncos coach Vic Fangio said. "I mean, this guy has played really, really well. It's hard to believe he went undrafted. But that's the draft. Different strokes for different folks and people getting missed all the time."

When McCaffrey registered his third game this season with more than 175 scrimmage yards and a touchdown, he was likened to Superman, described as the most exciting player in football and mentioned as an MVP candidate. He also joined a club with only Jim Brown. Yes, the white back out of Colorado and the Hall of Famer are the only ones to have at least 175 scrimmage yards and a touchdown in three of their first four games in a season.

Although a star at every level he's played, McCaffrey is a Coloradan, thereby unexpected to be among the NFL's finest. Yet he, Lindsay and Ekeler have proven to more than their label as backs. They're playmakers.

"They're athletes. All of them are just plain athletes," Tony Lindsay said. "They don't just run. I bet you they were good in basketball or track. They're athletes."

Their odds-defying talents and years of work paved their own way. But back in Colorado, their stardom has the power to open more doors.

"I feel like there's a lot of good talent here in Colorado," Phillip Lindsay said. "You just have to give it an opportunity and give it a chance. There's just so many kids in California and Texas that you get overshadowed, but if you're good, you're good."

The Rise Of Austin Ekeler

By Tyler Dunne
Bleacher Report
September 11, 2019

He started the day in tears.

Literal tears. As Chargers running back Austin Ekeler sprinted through the tunnel for Game No. 1 of Season No. 3, he couldn't hold them back.

Then the game began, and he devastated the Colts one cannon blast at a time.

Hurdling a defender on his second touch.

Snaking out of the backfield to catch the team's first touchdown of the season. Spike and air guitar included.

Embarrassing professionals. Ekeler caught one screen pass, turned upfield, veered toward the sideline and revved through the flailing arms of the reigning Defensive Rookie of the Year, the "Maniac" Darius Leonard. And rammed through corner Pierre Desir. And rendered Malik Hooker a statue, stunned and helpless, 55 yards to the house for another touchdown. Ekeler spiked the ball (again), air-guitared (again), and when he decompressed on the bench in front of a rotating fan moments later—one teammate flexing guns in his face—the man Ekeler is currently costing millions of dollars even chimed in. There was Melvin Gordon III, saluting the man draining any leverage he has left:

Ekeler supplied two more blasts in overtime, too.

Knifing back inside, in the face of two Colts, for 19 yards. Then, four snaps later, booting Indy back to the Midwest with a third touchdown. Against nine defenders in the box, he coolly slid behind fullback Derek Watt's seal to paydirt, giving the Chargers a 30-24 win.

He couldn't strum the guitar this time. He was mobbed.

And as Ekeler headed back through that tunnel, he saw his family and...cried. Again.

Ice Cube's "It Was a Good Day" blared. Fans—real, live Los Angeles Chargers fans!—screamed and high-fived as they headed to the exits. And at that precise moment, everything that's been so murky in L.A. became so exquisitely clear. The Chargers, apparently, do not need Gordon. The star known as "Flash," whose 2014 season at Wisconsin ranks No. 2 on the Division I all-time rushing list, right behind Barry Sanders' 1988. The workhorse who went 15th overall and is one of only four NFL players with 3,500 yards from scrimmage and 35 touchdowns since 2016.

The Chargers are still Super Bowl contenders with this 24-year-old from an unincorporated town (Briggsdale, Colorado, population: 809) and a college nobody's ever heard of (Western Colorado). They can win with a running back who, from afar, looks like a kid on the sideline. Like, at any moment, he'll surely be tapped on the shoulder by some security official, who will take his hand and usher him back to his parents in the stands.

Sporting a bright floral shirt, Ekeler cannot stop sweating. Beads pool all over his bald head and drip into his eyes. A team official hands him a towel, and Ekeler explains that, no, he's never actually played guitar. He just loves the idea of being a "rock star," on center stage, entertaining a crowd. Back in his college living room, he used to blare rock from the '70s and '80s and told his roommate that if he ever made it to an NFL end zone, this would be his signature.

One, two, three violent strums.

"I'm breaking the strings!" he says, air-guitaring again. "I'm jamming. Bwowww!"

New superstars emerge in the NFL every fall. But this? This is different, because nobody has taken Ekeler seriously as a football player his entire life.

Forget Division I schools. D-II schools didn't even believe in him. Forget being motivated by one or two slights on draft day. Twenty-seven running backs were drafted. He never heard his name called. He's been forever treated like a player bound to fail. Hooker, just standing there on that 55-yarder, represented countless others.

Ekeler is always surprising people. Pretty much everyone but himself.

Because to Ekeler, this is all one continuous build. If Gordon returns, great. Ekeler's not even thinking about that, instead obsessed with "building, building, building" to this point. To those tears.

"Even in college, I was always on the verge of tears, because I was building," Ekeler says. "Everything I have done before had led to this moment."

Who knows when Gordon returns? NFL Network's Ian Rapoport reported it'll be between Weeks 6 and 8. With Ekeler, it may not matter. Because with Ekeler, the Chargers would be wise to let this build proceed uninterrupted.

***

Long before he became the lifeblood of an NFL offense, Ekeler was on a ranch.

In the middle of nowhere.

And absolutely miserable.

This is where you need to start, in Briggsdale, where Ekeler's life was painfully simple. All summer, since he can remember, he'd wake up at 6 a.m. to work for this then-stepdad's fencing company. There were no attaboys, let alone allowances. No, Ekeler installed fence...after fence...after fence...until dark, because that's what he was told to do. And he knew that if he ever screwed anything up, he'd pay the price. Ekeler says his ex-stepdad—whom he never references by name here—had an abusive father himself growing up and, in turn, "brought that upon me."

So he's not shy about any of it. That he hated the work. The constant of pounding posts into the ground. And stringing wire. And clipping fence. And the fact that there was never an end in sight on these massive projects.

And that he hated his stepdad.

"I hated him. I hated him. I hated every minute about that," Ekeler says. "But literally, looking back, that's what taught me about working hard. It sucks. It sucked when I was going through all that stuff, but it literally taught me how to work hard. Because there was no complaining. It was: Get it done as fast as you could. If he ever asked you to do anything, you'd run. You'd literally run and go do it. Get it done.

"Because if you didn't, you didn't like the result. I just hated this guy."

His biological father and mother split shortly after he was born. His dad is in prison for life and, no, as he sits in Chargers headquarters in his Space Jam shirt, with a 1½-inch scar on his right arm and a dime-sized scar on his left—routine battle wounds, nothing serious—Ekeler doesn't want to get into all of that. His mother met this stepdad after they moved into town from Colorado Springs and stayed with him for 11 years.

At no point did Ekeler ever think this work was doing him any good. "I'm just thinking, 'This is terrible,'" he says, closing his eyes at the memory of his body aching every night. The toughest part might've been tamping posts. That is, Ekeler would plant fence posts deep into the ground, one quarter-mile at a time. And each quarter-mile, he then needed to install a massive H-brace.

For 20 miles. For 25 miles. For 30 miles.

However long a barbed-wire fence needed to be to, for example, keep a landowner's cows off the railroad.

Ekeler was joined by his stepdad, stepdad's son, stepdad's son's friend and his mom and brother, Wyett, though Wyett was too young to help back then. While they did play some music, nothing ever gave them any joy through this all. The joy came in the occasional fishing trips. His face lights up thinking back to "slaying bass" at Lake McConaughy in Nebraska with his mother's side of the family. He'd catch catfish everywhere, too.

Soon enough, however, winter arrived.

And there was more to do.

Pointing at different spots on the table here, Ekeler lays out the land in explaining how he tended to his stepdad's farm animals year-round. How he'd need to carefully disconnect and drain four different hoses, downhill, after each usage and what would happen if he failed, if the hoses froze up or cracked. His stepdad went berserk. He'd drag Ekeler out of bed in the middle of the night to make him thaw those hoses out via campfire or a wood-burning stove...then string 'em back out...then bring 'em back to the troughs.

Ekeler never considered quitting, at any point. That was not an option.

Yet he did have an escape: sports. And he quickly realized that all this work made him a different breed as a running back at nearby Eaton High. He was farm-strong. He never tired. He never complained. As a senior, Ekeler ran for 2,398 yards with 42 total touchdowns.

Not that anybody outside of Eaton seemed to notice or care.

He ponders why.

Maybe it was geography. It's easy to overlook a school in Colorado with only 90 kids per graduating class, and his own head coach wasn't much help. He liked Bill Mondt a lot. Mondt actually coached the New Mexico Lobos back in the '70s, but, 76 years old by this point, he wasn't exactly fighting for Ekeler. Instead, he'd pass off any letters he received to Ekeler, who tried (and failed) to sell himself. No Division I schools showed a blip of interest, and all the Division II schools in arm's reach— CSU-Pueblo, Adams State University, etc.—wanted Ekeler to play defensive back.

Or maybe the film was too grainy. It certainly wasn't HD—but you could still see his number, see him racing away from the pack. He even had connections. His offensive coordinator's twin brother coached at North Carolina. So Ekeler went to UNC's camp, and he killed it...and he never heard a peep. His own damn cousin, Mike Ekeler, was a linebackers coach at Nebraska. He can still hear Mike telling him he needed to run a 10.8 in the 100-meter dash to have any shot at Nebraska. ("I'm like, 'I run an 11.01. OK...all right.'")

Ekeler even remembers finding a list online that showed he had the 22nd-most rushing yards in the entire nation.

"And I didn't get any interest from anybody?" he says. "I was so confused."

Even now, he's dumbfounded.

His thick, dark eyebrows flare. His voice gets louder.

"Sure, I went to a small school, but I am DE-STROY-ING people!" he says. "What else could you have done? What else? I had 42 touchdowns! It was absurd! I would score four, five a game! I don't know what else I could have done."

It's clear what everyone missed: that kid on the ranch.

"To me, you couldn't evaluate my heart, my work ethic. You couldn't evaluate all that," he says. "You can't put that in numbers. ... You can't measure someone's demeanor and how they work."

One program did offer the chance to play running back: D-II Western Colorado. The head coach there, Jas Bains, told Ekeler his senior running back was graduating so they had a spot.

And that's all Ekeler needed to hear.

As his high school graduation neared, Ekeler lined everything up in Gunnison—a place to stay, a roommate, a summer job as a rafting guide to pay rent. He packed his bags the night before receiving his diploma.

"And I said, 'See ya!'"

Ekeler wouldn't need to install a fence ever again.

***

The apathy pained him. Like lingering sciatica. Ekeler was one of nine running backs initially at Western Colorado, a nobody, but even he couldn't stand the fact that seniors weren't taking the game a fraction as seriously as he was. He quickly earned the starting job, and each blowout loss stung more than the last—48-21, then 29-3, then 35-13.

Finally, he snapped.

During a team dinner, Ekeler saw teammates goofing around and fiddling with their phones. So when Bains asked if anybody had anything to say, Ekeler spoke up.

His voice trembled then and trembles now just reliving that moment.

"I was on the verge of tears because I was so nervous," Ekeler says. "I was just so passionate in telling the team what I had to say."

Ekeler told everyone that their attitudes were unacceptable. That nobody was locked in, nobody seemed to care—at all—about this team. This was foreign to him. Ekeler was used to his high school team winning nearly every game. From that point forward, Ekeler was a team captain. Western Colorado won two games, then four, then four again, then went 7-4 in Ekeler's final season. His passion did, in fact, catch on.

Laughable, even, compared to Gordon's tour de force through the Big Ten. But that's the point. That's where you see how Ekeler is different than any back in the NFL. He played in front of 100 fans on Saturdays, not 100,000. He was never on national TV. Never surrounded by 5-star recruits forever destined for greatness. And he relished this. He loved building something, organically, all in the name of pride and pride only.

When Ekeler first saw those seniors with a foot out the door, part of him understood why. It's hard to lift yourself out of bed for 6 a.m. workouts when no one—literally, no one—is considering football as a career. It wasn't a dream, let alone a reality. But, to Ekeler, this sure beat the ranch. He told everyone who'd listen, "We can do something. We can put a ring on your finger." He embraced the challenge of getting others to care like he cared, of pulling "as many people as I could along."

Gunnison is a town of 6,000, give or take. Hardly Madison, Wisconsin. But Ekeler was in his element.

"I love that you had to be the one who made it work," Ekeler says. "It wasn't because we had this huge program and all these nutritionists. You yourself had to get the motivation in your head to say, 'I'm going to get this done.' It was just like working at the fence. There's no one besides you and everyone around you. You have to get it done. Whatever it takes. You have to motivate yourself.

"We don't have these extravagant weight rooms and all these hype things. We don't have a big crowd we're going to play for—Oh, we've gotta play for them. We didn't even have each other when I got there. Everyone was all over the place.

"I don't know why I put it upon myself. Probably because I cared. This was not how I wanted it to be here for my time here. I'm going to speak about that."

And this is where he also met his first love: the weight room. Ekeler quickly realized, in there, what a childhood of manual labor had done for him.

The first "max day" at school, he squatted more than everyone. Linemen. Linebackers. Nobody came close then. And now, in the pros, he's still outlifting virtually everyone. Whenever Ekeler enters a weight room, it's a spectacle—teammates gather to see Ekeler squat five 45-pound plates on each side of a barbell.

He and two other players at Western Colorado—Travis Haney and Ty Henry—made a habit of lifting extra, of ticking off their strength coach for doing too much. They'd walk into the weight room, ask, "What's not sore?" and then destroy that muscle.

This is what Ekeler did for fun.

The result has been beautiful deception. Pads on, it's difficult for anyone to tell a 5'9" running back packs so much punch. Here, sitting in a chair, Ekeler sways back and forth, staring ahead at a pretend defense.

From Western Colorado to the NFL, his raw strength became a (secret) superpower.

"People try to shoulder-tackle me. They think they can just blast me on the ground. But I have balance. My legs can stick," says Ekeler, slamming his left foot into the ground. "My foot just sticks in the ground. So you hit me and, Bam! I bounce! You might move me, but it's not going to slam me into the ground, like people think."

In 40 collegiate games, Ekeler finished with 5,857 rushing yards and 55 touchdowns. This time, people noticed. Scouts from nearly every NFL team passed through Gunnison, including one former D-II player. Packers scout Sam Seale played at Western Colorado before a decade in the NFL and, Ekeler says, was his running backs coach's best friend.

He figured he'd play for Green Bay or the Chargers, because Chargers scout Tom McConnaughey showed a genuine interest, too.

Ekeler went undrafted. Ekeler chose the Chargers.

***

The first time Ekeler stepped into the huddle in OTAs—as one of 90 players trying to make the team—he felt his stomach tighten. Everything felt tight.

He started to dry heave, asked for a sub to take his place, sprinted to the sideline and Ekeler...

"Because," he says, "I cared."

So much so that he had the audacity to walk right into his head coach's office—nerves running wild, words tripping over each other—to ask Anthony Lynn what he needed to do to make the team.

He was a nobody then, a running back wearing No. 3.

His odds of making the team, as one of five backs in camp, were slim.

Lynn told Ekeler to 1) protect Philip Rivers, 2) protect the ball and 3) go visit "Coach Stew," the special teams coordinator. Ekeler listened. He promptly chatted with George Stewart for 40 minutes, about life, about everything outside of football in a conversation he cherishes to this day. And then, after turning heads practice...after practice...after practice...Lynn brought his name up to the entire team.

He praised Ekeler. He told everyone about that day Ekeler had the guts to approach him.

And then Lynn made a confession: He didn't even know Ekeler's name at the time.

Three years later? Ekeler is the starter. Everything has changed very fast, very furiously. But Ekeler says he hasn't thought much about the situation that set off all that change: Gordon's contract holdout. The two aren't that close, for one. Ekeler says they share more of a "business relationship," adding that they have "different lifestyles." And why would he think about it, anyway? Why let it poison his mind at this point? He treats every day, at every level, with the same tenacity.

That lip would quiver just as much now as it did in that team meeting at Western Colorado.

No, the gravity of his role now will never hit him.

"My role has changed, and it might change back," Ekeler says. "Mel might come back and get his starting job back. Whatever happens, I'm a football player. That's how I see myself. People are like: 'Oh, you're out of special teams now. Do you think you'll go back?' It's like, 'I want to go back!'

"Whatever I can morph myself into, for this team ... that's what I'm going to do. I made this team on special teams, so I have a secret love on special teams."

He's pressed on this. He's reminded that the Chargers have Super Bowl aspirations and that he is the starting running back. That changes things.

"What does it change?!" he snaps.

The pressure. "From who? Not myself. I've already had pressure on myself."

Now, you're getting the ball about 20 times a game. The team needs you more than ever. "Let's go. Let's go."

This isn't Briggsdale or Gunnison. Everything around him has changed. The audience to his air-guitar sessions has grown from one to millions. Which is nice. But fantasy football trolls are finding him, too. After fumbling against Jacksonville, as a rookie, he says people on Instagram told him to die. He now has his agent delete negative comments on there so his family doesn't have to read such "B.S." One message, however, did find its way to Ekeler's eyes on the eve of this season. A fan sent Ekeler a DM asking if he could realistically handle the load as a running back at his size.

The person added that he himself was 5'8," 190 pounds, and that if he got hit, he'd break.

Ekeler couldn't resist. "No offense," he wrote back, "but you're not me.'"

Because Ekeler knows what he's made of. Last season, he was speared in the face and knocked airborne by the Bengals' Clayton Fejedelem on an onside kick. He suffered a concussion and major nerve damage, losing all feeling on the left side of his body. It was the "scariest" injury of his life because, on the spot, Ekeler lost his superpowers. This bodybuilder who could bicep curl 65 pounds wasn't even able to lift a 20-pounder with his left arm. Structurally, his muscles and bones were fine, but the connection between his brain and left arm was damaged.

"I'm literally in the doctor's like: 'Hey, am I going to be able to use my arm? Or is this dying right now?'"

Gradually, the nerves started firing again, and he played three weeks later. With a cowboy collar on, he still wasn't himself. He felt top-heavy. He couldn't move his neck and thus couldn't see where he was going. Two weeks after that, he received exactly zero carries in L.A.'s 41-28 divisional playoff loss to New England.

Now he's back. "I don't have a freakin' bionic neck anymore!" He can stick that leg and buckle tacklers into crumpled heaps. "And they say, 'Oh! Cot dang!'" One week, he's squatting 405 pounds six times. The next, he's shredding the Colts.

It's a tad eerie for an outsider visiting the Chargers locker room. Gordon's stall is still full of clothing and cleats, as if he never left. But nothing feels eerie or awkward to anyone here.

Nobody sounds the least bit concerned by his absence.

Asked if there's any drop-off from Gordon to Ekeler, the answer is an overwhelming "no."

Wideout Mike Williams calls Ekeler the strongest player on the team, regardless of position, and says the expectations for the offense haven't changed a bit. "He's a baller," Williams adds. "He's small, but he battles." Travis Benjamin agrees. This Chargers receiver appreciates Ekeler's humble beginnings as an undrafted free agent—"Austin knows where he's not trying to go back to"—and says there's always three, four, five plates to each side of any barbell Ekeler throws around in the weight room.

There's no slippage, to Benjamin, because Ekeler has the body type to handle any workload the Chargers give him.

And the expectation is the same: the Super Bowl. The Chargers want another shot at the Patriots.

"Hopefully we see that team again," Benjamin says, "and, this time, run 'em over."

Between Gordon's locker and Ekeler's locker is Watt's. He's known Gordon since they were both high school recruits in Wisconsin. They're tight. They were college roommates in Madison, with Watt mashing away as Gordon's lead blocker for three years there and now three years in the pros.

Watt gets that Gordon is trying to earn what he believes he deserves but quickly adds that Ekeler is the No. 1 right now and that Ekeler is "taking off with it."

Now, Watt and Ekeler are becoming incredibly close.

He calls Ekeler "strong as a bull," says "he can lift a house" and can still remember Ekeler's first camp, when all the vets were asking each other, Who is that? To him, as good as Gordon is, there isn't a drop-off.

"He can be great," Watt says. "When the ball's in his hands, you never know what's going to happen. He can take it to the house every time."

Like he did Sunday, when he left the Colts in his dust on that 55-yarder, with Watt telling him, "You're too strong!" on the sideline.

As nonsensical as it sounds, Gordon simply isn't on anyone's mind. It's not necessarily a matter of running backs in the NFL being irrelevant in 2019. It's a matter of Ekeler.

His presence keeps the Chargers humming.

***

People always pepper Ekeler with the same question: Who do you compare yourself to?

His answer is always the same: No one. And he sincerely means that. Ekeler never watched football growing up, not with so much work to do on the ranch. So he never had a favorite team, nor a favorite player.

"I don't want to be anybody else," he says. "I just want to be the best I can be.

"For me, it's about what I'm doing."

Thus, it's impossible to predict where Ekeler takes his game from here. He is, in Watt's words, a "pinball." And this pinball does it all. He'll run you over and rev into high gear and line up all over the field. He's so much more than a funky name from an obscure school.

He's an old soul. If he ever does learn guitar, he's starting with "Money for Nothing" by Dire Straits. In Gunnison, only three radio stations came in clearly—Christian, country and classic rock channels. Ekeler would hear a song he loved, like this one, and think it was brand-new.

He enjoys PC video games, such as League of Legends. Back in Briggsdale, when he wasn't working, or at school, he'd cut himself off from his stepdad by locking the door and playing video games.

He's still into fishing. This past Fourth of July, he went fly fishing with his brother, Wyett, who's now 18 and a senior running back at Windsor High, about a 20-minute drive from Eaton. Afraid of the ocean, saltwater fishing here will need to wait.

And his No. 1 passion, of course, is still lifting weights. He "absolutely" believes he's one of the strongest backs in the NFL. He felt himself getting softer, briefly, as a rookie and asked the Chargers for a more strenuous lifting regimen.

For a franchise synonymous with bad luck—it's already down safety Derwin James and offensive tackle Russell Okung—the combination of it all, in Ekeler, is a godsend.

So maybe it doesn't even matter when or if Gordon returns. Why would the Chargers impede what Ekeler is building?

He won't say it, of course. Nobody here will. But Ekeler is making a running back everyone considered elite look expendable...because he may be something more special.

He doesn't take this ascension for granted, citing the fact that nearly 40 players were cut from every NFL team. It's why Ekeler always goes out of his way to help younger players. He doesn't know whose life he could impact.

"If I can help, I want to help," he says. "Life's too short not to help other people."

"You're the decision-makers," he says, his voice rising. "Whatever you do, if you put me on the field, I'm going to produce.

"I show up. I work as hard as I can. I get the job done."

It's off to Detroit next, most likely without Gordon again.

Ekeler knows he'll probably tear up there, too.

Chargers RB Austin Ekeler out to prove he's an NFL feature back

By Eric Williams

September 9, 2019

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- Los Angeles Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers knows running back Austin Ekeler's name now.

That wasn't the case two years ago, when Ekeler showed up at Chargers Park in San Diego as an undrafted rookie out of Division II Western State Colorado (whose school name has since changed to Western Colorado University).

Rivers kept asking backup quarterback Kellen Clemens: "Hey, what's No. 3's name again?"

But Ekeler regularly made plays during offseason work and training camp in 2017, earning a spot on the 53-man roster. From there, Rivers learned his name.

"We got it going, and then I said, 'Shoot, this No. 3 is pretty good,'" Rivers said after the Chargers' 30-24 overtime victory over the Indianapolis Colts on Sunday. "And No. 3 ended up being No. 30, who we now know as Austin Ekeler. And he's been a playmaker for us over the last few years. I don't think anybody was surprised with the plays he made today."

Ekeler is making sure the rest of the league remembers his name as well.

Starting in place of Melvin Gordon, who's in Day 48 of his holdout over a contract impasse with the Chargers, Ekeler finished with a career-high 154 yards from scrimmage and three touchdowns against the Colts. That total included the game-winning score on a 7-yard run in overtime.

According to ESPN Stats & Information, Ekeler gained 108 yards after the catch Sunday. His 10.4 yards per reception in 2018 led all running backs.

"He has this thing that nobody can see unless you're out there with him, but there's just nothing too big for him," Rivers said. "You can see it in his face and in his eyes and in his communication. It's just like we're out there in the backyard. I saw that when he was a young player, and that's continued to be the case."

Looking to replace the production of one of the top running backs in the NFL, Chargers coach Anthony Lynn said he would lean on a running-back-by-committee approach to start the season. It worked in Game 1.

Ekeler's big day included 95 receiving yards on six receptions. He and Justin Jackson combined for 115 rushing yards on 18 carries, giving the Chargers balance on offense.

At 5-foot-8 and 200 pounds, Ekeler isn't built like a traditional tailback. However, Lynn believes the 24-year-old can be a feature back in the NFL.

"He plays with outstanding leverage," Lynn said. "And like I've said before, pound-for-pound he is the strongest man on our team."

Added Ekeler: "Physically, I feel good. I think with my body type, I'm lower to the ground and take less hits through my ankles and knees. I think that's really going to help me out through my entire career as far as injuries."

Ekeler's versatility and Jackson's slithery running style were a couple of reasons Lynn, Rivers and the rest of the Bolts weren't too concerned about Gordon's absence. The Chargers have been successful with the Ekeler-Jackson combo, as they are 5-0 the past two seasons when Gordon hasn't played.

Yes, Gordon makes the Chargers better on offense, and they would like to have him back on game days. But since Rivers took over as the team's starting quarterback in 2006, the Chargers have finished outside of the top half of the league in scoring only twice in 13 seasons.

Different players have cycled through over the years, including running backs LaDainian Tomlinson, Darren Sproles, Danny Woodhead and Ryan Mathews, receivers Vincent Jackson and Malcolm Floyd, and tight end Antonio Gates. Also, the Chargers have been led by several offensive coordinators, including Norv Turner, Frank Reich and Ken Whisenhunt.

However, the Chargers' dedication to a balanced offense has stayed the same, according to Rivers. Ekeler is the latest back to lead the rushing aspect of it.

"It is our identity," Rivers said. "I do think that is who we wanted to be for the last 15 years. If you look offensively for the last 15 years, we played best when we were balanced.

"We've had rushing leaders. We won rushing titles, and those are the years we played the best, but within those seasons, we have games where you throw it 40 times and find a way to win. When we are balanced, there is no question that is when we play our best. That is who we are. We're not a spread-it-out, dink-and-dunk team. We are a balanced team."

Chargers have a leap of faith when it comes to corner Casey Hayward, a former Packer

He was once a member of the storied Green Bay Packers.

As such, Casey Hayward jumped face-first into the experience by jumping fanny first into the stands — twice.

The first time, he barely made it.

“There’s a high part of the wall and a low part,” the Chargers cornerback said of Lambeau Field. “You gotta go to the low part.”

Hayward paused for a second and then added, “I thought I had enough ups, but I didn’t.”

He scored two touchdowns during his four seasons with Green Bay and celebrated each with a Lambeau Leap.

The first came after he intercepted a pass from Jay Cutler and ran 82 yards for a touchdown against Chicago. After cruising into the end zone, Hayward made a slight left turn and headed for the front row.

“I’ve seen other guys not get up there,” Hayward said Friday, smiling at the memory of his near-failure, which occurred during a Sunday night national telecast. “A lot of people don’t quite make it. The fans had to pull me up.”

On Sunday, Hayward, who is now in his fourth season with the Chargers, will play against the Packers for the first time, in a venue that figures to feel a lot like Lambeau West.

In fact, with Green Bay fans forecast to dominate the crowd at Dignity Health Sports Park, it wouldn’t be at all surprising for a touchdown-scoring Packer to take a visitor’s leap.

A Dignity Dive?

“They’re going to travel well,” Hayward said of Packers fans. “When I used to play there, it didn’t matter where we went. Those fans showed up. I wouldn’t expect anything different this time.”

Hayward and the 3-5 Chargers remain desperate for victories. They are underdogs against the 7-1 Packers and have little room left to stumble. They just snapped a three-game losing streak.

But in a season of general underachievement for the team, Hayward has rebounded with a performance closer to his first two years with the Chargers, each of which produced Pro Bowl honors.

“I think he’s a little more focused this year,” defensive backs coach Ron Milus said. “It seems like once you start making plays, then here comes another play to be made. He never really got on a roll like that last year.”

Hayward had his second interception of 2019 on Sunday in a 17-16 victory at Chicago. He had 11 in his first two Chargers seasons but none a year ago.

He also was credited with defending three passes, his highest total in that category in nearly two years. In 107 career games, Hayward only twice has had more than three pass breakups.

“I think I’m on a good pace, as long as I keep playing like this,” he said. “I think I’ve been playing at an All-Pro, Pro Bowl level. I just gotta continue it with the next half of the season.”

So far this season, only Detroit’s Kenny Golladay has caught passes for more than 100 yards against the Chargers. And that came on an afternoon during which the Lions scored just twice.

Green Bay might be getting Davante Adams back this week from a toe injury that has cost him four games. In his most recent appearance, against Philadelphia, he caught 10 passes for 180 yards.

If Adams does return, he and Hayward likely will be seeing quite a bit of one another.

“Casey’s focus is just unbelievable,” safety Rayshawn Jenkins said. “He makes so many plays for us. The things he does during a game are the things you pray for your corners to do.”

Hayward, 30, was a second-round pick of the Packers in 2012. After he played out his rookie contract, Green Bay decided to move on without him. He signed with the Chargers, made his back-to-back Pro Bowl appearances and then, in the spring of 2018, signed a three-year extension worth up to $36 million.

Hayward isn’t the most athletically gifted defensive back in the NFL or even in L.A., not with Jalen Ramsey now playing for the Rams.

At 5-foot-11, 192 pounds, he also isn’t the most physically imposing cornerback, but coaches and teammates praise Hayward’s instincts, intelligence and preparation.

Milus said Hayward has more than enough ability to be disruptive in those fleeting final moments that determine whether or not a completion happens.

“He’s got some suddenness and some quickness to him that enables him to make plays,” Milus said. “He has what we call ‘C.O.D’ — change of direction. You gotta bring something to the game and that’s what Casey brings.”

Jenkins, who is in his first full season as a starter, said he marvels at Hayward’s grasp of offenses and dedication to film study. He said he aspires to one day reach Hayward’s level of professionalism.

Most of all, Jenkins said Hayward possesses an impressive ability to anticipate, as if he knows where the offensive player is going just as surely as the offensive player does.

“His preparation and understanding is just fun to see,” Jenkins said. “And he’s so poised, always. It’s like watching someone paint a picture. You’re just there watching the masterpiece unfold. It’s crazy.”

Crazy, perhaps, but also somewhat wasted in this 3-5 start. Because of the Chargers’ struggles, faith in them has wavered.

But Hayward, for one, understands what heights still can be reached for those willing to leap.

‘I make it happen’: Chargers’ Casey Hayward has been proving doubters wrong since high school

By Daniel Popper
The Athletic
September 12, 2019

In early fall of 2007, Casey Hayward was still just a quarterback.

His coaches at Perry High School in Perry, Ga. — about 100 miles south of Atlanta — knew he was capable of dominating at any skill position on the field. “He was by far the best player on our team,” said Chad Alligood, the Panthers’ offensive coordinator at the time. But they didn’t want to play Hayward on defense and risk an injury to their star dual-threat quarterback. The senior was too valuable — a 170-pound touchdown machine with a football mind wise beyond its years.

“He could check us into any play,” Alligood said.

Circumstances, however, changed those plans.

One of the Panthers’ starting cornerbacks went down with an injury. Perry had started the season 2-3, giving up an average of 31.2 points in those first five games. The defense needed a spark. And with a starting spot now open, the coaching staff turned to Hayward.

Hayward started at corner that week. And on the first throw that came his way, a deep ball, Hayward hauled in an interception and returned it for a touchdown. He did the same thing in the next game. And the next one. And the next one. Four straight games with a pick-six, after never previously playing a snap of cornerback in his high school career.

One of those games was a 48-28 Panthers victory over Peach County, a local powerhouse. It was a Friday night in mid-October. Hayward scored six touchdowns — five at quarterback and one on his interception return.

Sitting in the stands that night was Charlie Fisher, who then was the co-passing game coordinator for Vanderbilt and the only Power-5 conference recruiter with an eye on Hayward.

“He was lights out,” said Fisher, who is now the wide receivers coach at Arizona State. “He just had the ‘it’ factor, man.”

The Commodores were playing on the road at South Carolina the next day at noon. Fisher drove through the night to make it to Columbia for kickoff. He couldn’t stop thinking about Hayward, a player he’d been tracking for a year.

“I saw all I needed to see that night,” Fisher said. “I didn’t want him playing for anyone else in our league.”

Fisher arrived at 4 a.m., and the next morning before the game, he delivered his message to the Vanderbilt coaching staff: “Listen, if you guys don’t want him at DB, I’m taking him at wideout. Because if we pass on this guy, we are absolutely crazy.”

Fisher offered Hayward a scholarship three days later. With only one other offer available — from Troy University — Hayward accepted.

“He was getting overlooked,” Fisher said, “and I knew that.”

Herein lies the most puzzling part of Hayward’s standout football career, which includes the past three seasons as a starting cornerback with the Chargers.

Hayward is so instinctually gifted that he earned all-state honors as a defensive back in 2007 despite playing just five games at a position which he had no familiarity with before his senior year. And yet none of the blue-blood SEC programs — Alabama, Florida, Georgia, etc. — had any interest in a player wowing Friday night crowds in their backyard.

“He’s not the biggest guy. He’s not the fastest guy. He’s not the strongest guy,” Alligood said. “But his football IQ and just his ability to play the game is why he is the player he is.”

“He’s not 4.3 fast,” Fisher said. “But he’s got 4.3 feet, and the other thing he’s got is 4.3 instincts, and that’s what makes him really good at DB.”

Lots of NFL players, though, attended smaller schools or were ignored on the recruiting trail. Many of them are stars. This does not make Hayward unique.

What does make him unique is that this was not the last time he was overlooked. Far from it. Doubters followed him from college to the NFL, and from the Packers to the Chargers.

All of them, eventually, were silenced. Emphatically.

Hayward took his lone Power-5 offer and picked off 15 passes in his four years at Vanderbilt. He’s still tied for the most interceptions in school history and ranks 11th all-time in the SEC.

NFL teams drool over ball skills like Hayward’s. For defensive backs, interception production in college almost always translates to the professional ranks. “Guys that bite as young puppies,” Chargers secondary coach Ron Milus said, “they bite as bigger dogs.”

Hayward was no different. The Packers drafted him out of Vanderbilt in the second round in 2012 with the 62nd overall pick. Hayward intercepted six passes as a rookie and defended 20 passes overall, fourth-most in the NFL.

A hamstring injury derailed his second season, limiting him to just three games. He returned in 2013 and snagged another three interceptions in 16 games. But he didn’t pick off a single pass in his fourth season in Green Bay. And having drafted defensive back Damarious Randall in the first round in 2015, the Packers opted to move on from Hayward, who played out his rookie contract that fall.

Hayward hit the open market and there wasn’t an overwhelming amount of interest, even with his 10 interceptions in a little more than three full seasons. Looking back now, Hayward feels he had been pigeonholed. The Packers played him almost exclusively at nickel corner, where he defended slot receivers, and that is how most NFL teams viewed him in that offseason before the 2016 season.

Most teams. But not the Chargers.

The Chargers’ front office, led by general manager Tom Telesco, felt Hayward could play and excel on the outside. They already had their two starting spots filled by Jason Verrett and Brandon Flowers. But their third corner, Patrick Robinson, was a free agent. They looked into bringing Robinson back, but ultimately agreed to a three-year contract with Hayward to round out their cornerback depth.

By Week 5 of that season, both Verrett (ACL) and Flowers (concussion) were sidelined with injuries. Verrett would miss the remainder of the season. Flowers would play in just three more games before a second concussion landed him on IR, as well.

Injuries allowed Hayward to find his calling as a defensive back while in high school. Now, injuries would allow him to establish himself as the one of the best cornerbacks in the NFL.

“He brought a chip on his shoulder,” Milus said of the 5-foot-11, 192-pound Hayward.

Hayward started 14 games in 2016 and led the league with seven interceptions. He flourished on the outside, made his first Pro Bowl and was named a second-team All-Pro at cornerback.

“People started getting hurt,” said Milus, who has been the Chargers’ defensive backs coach since 2013. “Next thing you know, Casey’s in the game, and Casey can’t come out of the game. And next thing you know, we’re telling him, ‘Casey, you got their best guy.’ He just stepped up to the table.”

The position change was paramount. But so was an alteration in technique.

Hayward played mostly off coverage in Green Bay in defensive coordinator Dom Capers’ scheme, aligning several yards away from the line of scrimmage when in man-to-man. With the Chargers, under defensive coordinator John Pagano, Hayward was allowed to employ more press-coverage techniques, lining up closer to receivers pre-snap.

“He’s smart,” Milus said of Hayward’s press prowess. “He doesn’t always try to get his hands on them at the line of scrimmage, but at the end of the day, he tries to stay in front of a guy. So he’s got the quickness to stay in front of people. Ideally, you want a guy that’s over six feet with long arms and all that kind of stuff. That really ain’t Casey, and we get that. But his ability to have patience at the line of scrimmage, stay in front of a guy and probably more importantly, knowing the angles of how to cut people off, that’s what he’s been able to do for us.”

The Chargers changed head coaches for 2017, bringing in Anthony Lynn. Gus Bradley came aboard as defensive coordinator, and his system calls for a similar amount of press man coverage.

Hayward picked off another four passes that season, his second with the Chargers, and finished tied for second in the league with 22 passes defended. He earned second-team All-Pro for the second straight season.

“His innate ability to read what the offense is doing and how he studies the game makes him play a step faster,” Alligood said.

The Packers looked on as their defense allowed the sixth-most net yards per passing attempt in the NFL in 2017.

“It definitely motivates you,” Hayward said of the Packers letting him walk after 2015. “That’s always the goal, to come in here and compete and try to show people that you still can be pretty good. I wanted to show people I was the best.”

Milus was diplomatic when asked if the Chargers saw something in Hayward the Packers did not.

“I don’t know about that,” he said. “I just know we saw a good football player. He had ball skills and we needed a guy with ball skills. He had a chance to prove himself here, and he’s taken it and ran with it.”

Rarely does a player of Hayward’s caliber slip through the cracks after his rookie deal. Unless teams spend lavishly on free agents, they don’t typically expect new signings to become All-Pro honorees, much less franchise cornerstones.

The Patriots added cornerback Stephon Gilmore after his rookie deal with the Bills expired in the spring of 2017, and he was named a first-team All Pro in his second season with New England last year. But the Pats gave him a five-year, $65 million contract, which towers over Hayward’s initial three-year, $15.3 contract with the Chargers.

The closest recent comparison is linebacker Zach Brown, who earned second-team All-Pro with the Bills in 2016 after the Titans let him walk in free agency once his rookie deal expired.

But these instances are few and far between. And Brown is now on his third team since leaving Tennessee. Hayward, who signed a three-year, $36 million extension with the Chargers in March of 2018, is in his fourth season with the Bolts.

His presence will be even more important now as the Chargers deal with injuries at cornerback. Trevor Williams (quad) was placed on IR this week. Michael Davis (hamstring) is likely to miss Sunday’s game against the Lions. Hayward will lead a thin group into Detroit and try to slow down Matthew Stafford, who threw for 385 yards in Week 1. The Lions have a deep and talented receiving group including Kenny Golladay, Marvin Jones, Danny Amendola and rookie tight end T.J. Hockenson.

“Their run-action pass right now is as good as anybody that I’ve seen in a long time,” Lynn said this week.

Hayward proved college recruiters wrong. He proved the Packers wrong. He even shattered the Chargers’ expectations like a black belt kicking through a plank of wood.

He needed some help along the way. A college coach giving an unknown kid one last look. A general manager thinking outside the box.

HUNTER HENRY

By Jim Alexander
The Press-Enterprise
July 26, 2019

COSTA MESA — If you were to suggest that Hunter Henry resembled a lion released from his cage at the outset of the Chargers’ training camp … well, it wouldn’t be inaccurate, but it might be overstating the issue.

Henry missed almost all of last season with a torn ACL suffered in organized team activities in the spring of 2018, an injury that enabled Antonio Gates to spend one more season in a Chargers uniform. But the initial practices at the Jack Hammett Sports Complex this week are not the first we’ve seen in 2019 of tight end Henry, the 35th pick of the 2016 draft out of Arkansas.

That reference to “almost” in the above paragraph? Henry saw the field for the first time all season in the Chargers’ most important game, the 48-21 loss at New England Jan.13 that sent them home two steps short of the Super Bowl. He played 14 snaps and was targeted once (with no catches) against the Patriots, and the knee held up. He progressed through OTAs and a minicamp this past spring, and he isn’t wearing a knee brace in this camp.

And his ability to zip past two defenders and catch a perfectly thrown ball from Rivers during 11-on-11 work on day one Thursday would indicate Henry is poised to take a larger role in the Chargers’ offense than before.

“Hunter is really cool,” head coach Anthony Lynn said. “Even when he sweats, he never lets you know that he’s sweating. I can tell, though, that he’s happy to be back. He’s working his tail off. He looks good.”

Playing against the Patriots at the end of the season “was awesome just from my mindset, because I’m so much farther along (now) than I was there,” Henry said. “I felt good. But now I feel great. To be able to do it then, and now (to) where I feel, I’m very confident.”

The ingredients for a breakout season seem to be there. Henry, who turns 25 in December, averaged 13 yards a catch in his first two seasons and caught 12 touchdown passes in 29 games, in a Chargers offense with a surfeit of wide receivers and a future Hall of Fame tight end in Gates.

Tyrell Williams (41 catches, 653 yards, 5 TDs last year) signed with Oakland in the off-season, so there will be more balls available for others. And while Henry (6-foot-5 and 250 pounds) fits the profile of the traditional tight end he’s also quite capable of stretching defenses, which is why most of the folks who pay attention to these things are advising fantasy team owners to draft him early.

“I think you’re even going to see a better version of Hunter Henry than you remember, just because (he’s spent) another year learnin’, watchin’, workin’,” Rivers said. “I’m excited to see how he does this year.

“I think he’s old school, but with … maybe underappreciated athleticism and speed and range. He’s a little bit old school in the sense that he’s gonna line up and put his hand in the dirt and block power (running plays), and he’s going to run your traditional tight end routes. But look, you can also put him out there and do other stuff with him.”

The chemistry between Rivers and Gates over the years was amazing to behold. Gates – who is still unsigned, though Chargers general manager Tom Telesco said this week he’s still had conversations with the 39-year-old and hasn’t completely cut ties yet – has 116 career touchdown receptions, most by a tight end in NFL history, 89 of those with Rivers over 13 seasons.

The quarterback is now developing that chemistry with Henry, to the point where they had a couple of throw-and-catch sessions in Florida during the five-week break between minicamp and training camp.

“It wasn’t anything really orchestrated,” Rivers said. “It just so happened he was having a time with family vacation about 15 minutes from where I kind of spend the summer. He and I threw a couple of days and ran, and his brothers came along … I don’t throw much during that break, but when you’ve got your tight end that’s that close, you make exceptions and throw a little bit.”

There are other ways in which these two are simpatico. They’re both from the South; Henry split his childhood between Little Rock and Atlanta, and his dad was a four-year letterman and offensive lineman at Arkansas, so being a Razorback ran in the family. Rivers grew up in Alabama, the son of a high school football coach.

“We have a lot in common, so off the field we were able to build kind of a bond,” Henry said. “Being both from the South, (we) kind of grew up with the same households a little bit, kind of the same background. Obviously we’re very far apart in age. But at the same time, I mean, he’s as young as ever, I feel like. Sometimes it’s weird to think he’s like 36, 37 years old. He seems like my age sometimes.”
To be precise, Rivers is 37.

But both men understand the joy of being on the field. Henry appreciates that privilege even more so after having had to sit and watch a year ago.

“It was really hard,” he said. “I learned a lot as a man, and as a football player I learned a lot, too … It was hard to watch from a distance, but (I’m) very excited for the future.”

The knee, he said, “feels good.” That’s enough of a reason to be excited.

RAYSHAWN JENKINS

Rayshawn Jenkins has gone from 'knucklehead' to maybe Chargers' most exciting athlete

By Jeff Miller
Los Angeles Times
September 3, 2019

He was attempting to be diplomatic, coyly referencing a few bad decisions and regrettable mistakes.

He wanted to illustrate how far Chargers safety Rayshawn Jenkins has come today by describing where exactly Jenkins was yesterday.

Finally, Ron Milus took the most direct route possible, something he coaches Jenkins and the rest of the Chargers defensive backs to do.

"OK, I'm just going to say it. Ray was a knucklehead," the Chargers' defensive backs coach said, laughing. "He has grown up a lot. He's been much better. His decision-making is much better. I just think now he's growing into becoming a professional football player."

Entering his third season, Jenkins has had some very amateurish moments in the NFL.

As a rookie he was twice called for unnecessary roughness and once for roughing the kicker. He spoiled two other special teams plays by throwing illegal blocks. Last season he had two more unnecessary roughness penalties, one coming in London, where the situation escalated so much that Jenkins had to pulled from the game before doing further damage.

"That's my background," Jenkins said. "I play with a lot of passion. When I hit that field, I have a different mentality. That's why I'm very confrontational. That's how I grew up. That's my environment."

Now 25, Jenkins was born in St. Petersburg, Fla., and raised in a less-than-ideal, hardly traditional setting. For one thing, he has 17 brothers and sisters. For another, he came from a broken home and violent neighborhood, and went through childhood with his hands balled up and throwing punches.

He then spent four seasons at the University of Miami, where custom dictates that every player — regardless what they're studying — major in swagger. The Chargers drafted Jenkins in the fourth round in 2017 and watched as he struggled to find his way as a rookie.

"I would do something in Week 8 that I did in Week 1," Jenkins recalled. "And I was like, 'Damn, they told me not to do that and I still did it.' It was just understanding things like that. They need you to be a guy they can depend on."

All of this matters now because the Chargers are about to start depending on Jenkins more than ever. Long recognized as one of the team's best athletes, he will be their starting free safety Sunday in the season opener at home against Indianapolis.

Last year Jenkins started the final three games — including two in the playoffs — in part because the Chargers' linebacking corps was depleted by injury. He was larger then and used to playing closer to the line of scrimmage. Jenkins is now about 20 pounds lighter from his peak weight and the speed he has regained can be glaring.

"He's made a couple plays in the middle of the field that I don't know if we've seen those plays being made the last couple years," Milus said. "No disrespect to anyone else, but Rayshawn has demonstrated some great athletic ability."

In the Chargers' third preseason game, Jenkins closed quickly to break up a deep pass from Seattle's Russell Wilson to Tyler Lockett. As the ball hung in the air, Jenkins converged and arrived just in time.

Rookie free safety Nasir Adderley, a second-round pick, showed some of those same coverage skills last week in his preseason debut against San Francisco. He and Jenkins appear to represent a significant upgrade at a position where the Chargers had to use Jahleel Addae, a natural strong safety, a year ago.

"His feel for the game brings out more athleticism," defensive coordinator Gus Bradley said of Jenkins. "He's really physical. He has a strong safety mentality. So he has the physical nature that we're looking for as that middle-field safety."

Part of Jenkins' motivation to trim down and move away from strong safety was the emergence last season of Derwin James, the Chargers' dynamic first-round pick who became an All-Pro.

Milus said the position switch was made easier because of Jenkins' understanding of the entire defense, the mental side of football something he also has improved upon.

"Ray said, 'There's still another spot back there. What's that guy supposed to look like?' " Milus said. "He decided, 'OK, I'm going to look like that.' He's figured that out. You have to give him credit."

Now the Chargers just want Jenkins to play football and stick to the roughness that's necessary. For a player built on confrontation, the ability to turn away from an after-whistle challenge will be crucial.

"I'm good now," Jenkins said. "I'm 100% beyond that. It's still my foundation. It's still at my core. But you have to be able to bottle those emotions at certain parts of the game. I understand that now."

JUSTIN JONES

Lighter Justin Jones ready to carry his weight for Chargers at defensive tackle

By Jeff Miller
Los Angeles Times
August 5, 2019

He is expected to play a bigger role this season for the Chargers.

Through a changed diet and an altered workout routine, the second-year defensive tackle has dropped nearly 20 pounds from when he first reported as a rookie.

Version 2.0 marks such a profound difference that Mike Pouncey said he thought Jones actually was larger.

"He looks like he put on a lot of weight, a lot of muscle," the veteran center said. "He's moving around faster. He understands the speed of the game now and that it's different than college."

Pouncey then offered this: "He's a guy that is probably our most improved football player from Year One to Year Two. He's out here making plays every day. If he can play like that the whole year, our defense is going to be really good."

Jones, a third-round selection in 2018, steadily established himself over the length of his first NFL season.

He started the Chargers' two playoff games and had his first solo sack in the team's 23-17 wild-card victory at Baltimore.

Part of an interior group that, among others, includes veterans Brandon Mebane and Damion Square and 2019 first-round pick Jerry Tillery, Jones is someone the Chargers are counting on to produce even more.

"I think one day, he has the potential to be a Pro Bowl [selection]," Mebane said. "It has been really good to see the progress that he's making from last year to this year."

Jones said the progression began in January, his increased role in the playoffs providing confidence plus the motivation to work harder physically and increase his film study.

He said he noticed the game had slowed down for him by the time the postseason began. Catching up to the speed of the NFL allowed him to grow more comfortable in his assignments.

"I was like, 'OK, now I know I can take that next step and become that player they know I can be,' " Jones said. "That was my goal this offseason, to become the player that they know I can be and I know I can be."

Instead, Jones tried boxing and swimming. He also rode a bike, his 6-foot-3, 300-pound frame not exactly typical for that sport.

"He said, 'If you have a bike, go ride a bike,' " Jones recalled. "I hadn't ridden a bike since I was in seventh or eighth grade, but I rode a bike."

He said boxing allowed him to work on his endurance and hand speed. He never had boxed before, then spent six to eight weeks with the sport starting in the late winter.

"I have a whole new respect for boxers because I went a round-and-a-half to two rounds sparring and I about died," Jones said. "They go 12 rounds. They make it look easy."

Just as dramatic was how he tightened his eating habits. Jones explained that he eliminated beef and pork in favor of chicken, turkey and fish. This week, he even found himself extolling the virtues of burgers made from plants.

Working with a personal chef, he introduced more vegetables and usually had only fruit for breakfast.

Jones opened training camp at 295 pounds and said he might be closer to 290 now. When he joined the Chargers out of North Carolina State, he weighed 316. He was listed at 309 last season.

"It's a big difference," Jones said. "I feel great … and it's showing up in my play. I'm really comfortable. I've learned the playbook, and I know what my job is. … I feel like I'm coming on really well."

He credited the presence of learned teammates such as Mebane and Square for accelerating his progress. Pretty much daily during sessions with the media, the younger Chargers reference the help they're receiving from the older Chargers.

"When I come to practice, I know I need to work just as hard or harder than Brandon Mebane because he got to where he's at because of his hard work," Jones said. "I want to be there."

Based on what he has shown so far in training camp, Jones appears to be on his way.

Justin Jones Fulfills Mom's Wish

By Hayley Elwood

When Justin Jones joined the Chargers in 2018, he was two classes and an internship shy of finishing his bachelor's degree at NC State.

Fast forward a year, and his work is officially done.

Jones completed his remaining requirements and graduated with a degree in sport management, marking the occasion by walking in the school's commencement ceremony.

There was no doubt Jones would finish his degree, but the road to the walk at PNC Arena in Raleigh, N.C. almost didn't happen.

"He didn't want to walk."

Justin made it a point this offseason to officially complete his degree. He knew he wanted to do it sooner rather than later.

But what he didn't want to do was walk.

"I didn't want to walk in the first place," Justin reflected. "My mom wanted me to walk. I made sure I did it."

Cross-reference the story with his mom and it matches.

"I knew he would graduate, because he told me he would even though I was bugging him," Jamela mentioned. "But he didn't want to walk. He asked if it was serious and I said, 'Yes, it is that serious!' Every parent wants to see their child walk across the stage."

Although they agreed that he'd walk, Justin still wasn't too keen on the idea. Mainly because he felt awkward not knowing the people he'd be walking with.

Good thing his mom had a plan.

Call in reinforcements.

NC State's defensive line was one to be lauded in 2017. Four of their starters, Bradley Chubb, B.J. Hill, Kentavius Street and Justin Jones were all selected in the 2018 NFL Draft and began their professional careers in various cities across the country.

Jamela knew how close these four men were and knew it would mean the world to Justin to have them at his commencement ceremony.

So, she did what any mom would do and call in backups.

"He didn't want to be up there by himself without his boys, which I got," Jamela reflected. "It was fine, but I told him, 'I'm still your mom and I want you to (walk). You're my oldest child, why wouldn't you do that for me?' So what I did was, I talked to the guys on the down-low to surprise him so they could come to his graduation."

Jamela said while she knew the guys' moms, she decided to go straight to the sources and reach out to them on Instagram. She wanted them there under one condition: that they would do it as a surprise and not tell Justin.

Surprise him they did.

"It was weird when I was there because I was walking with a bunch of people I didn't know," Justin recalled. "It's funny though because when I got in my seat and looked up, I saw all my boys from everywhere. Chubb came from Denver, Street came from San Francisco, B.J. Hill came from the Giants. They all came to NC State to watch me graduate."

Jamela couldn't have been more excited her plan paid off. In fact, she said her son nearly shed a tear.

"I was like, dang! They came to see me graduate?" Justin exclaimed. "I hadn't even told anyone I was graduating! It was crazy but cool. My family was up there. I had like 20 people come to my graduation. It was great and my mom got to see me walk so that was the most important thing."

But while the walk on stage happened, she didn't know Justin also had something planned for after he crossed the podium.

"He walked straight out!"

According to NC State's website, more than 6,000 students were part of the school's spring 2019 graduating class. And if you looked at their commencement exercise, it seemed like your average ceremony.

Students file in, they sit down, they hear from the chancellor and other notable figures. Then, they get their degrees conferred.

But after Justin walked across the stage, he did something besides going back to his seat. He just kept walking.

"After you get off the stage and you take your picture with the diploma, you walk around and you get your little gift and you walk down the aisle and you sit in your seat," Jamela said. "Well, Justin just walked straight out. Everybody else turned (to go back to their seats) and he walked straight out! So we all got up and left! He did it his way, so it is what it is."

Jamela couldn't even get mad. I mean, Justin did do what he said he was going to do, right?

A Mother's Day to remember.

Even though Justin walked in his ceremony in "the most extravagant way" with sunglasses and earbuds, not to mention a cap adorned with the Chargers lightning bolt and his new number, 93, what's most important is that he did it. Just like Head Coach Anthony Lynn did last year. He made Jamela proud, specifically on a weekend that made her feel extra special.

"There was no better Mother's Day gift," she stated. "No, that was it. it was a great weekend to see him walk, and have his family be here, too. To see him so happy with his boys there, it made my day. I know he didn't want to do it, but he did it for me."

"(It was important for her) to see me walk across the stage and see me complete something I started," Justin added. "That was big for her. And, I'm the first to graduate from college from my family, so that was really big for her. She wanted to see that."

Education is something that's always been important to the Joneses and Jamela knew football was equally as significant as well.

Jamela knew Justin always had a passion for playing in the NFL, and she admits it still didn't hit her until she heard his name called on Day 2 of the draft last year. But as any mom is, she was focused more on what would come after he finished playing in the NFL, what he'd do after those three letters; Plan B.

But, now that he has his degree – not to mention a successful rookie season under his belt – she isn't worried. In fact, she's prouder than ever knowing her son has the best of both worlds

"To see him live his dream, and do what I wanted him to do, it's great," Jamela said. "It was a very emotional day and I could just say, the combination of all we've been through; the injuries, sitting in the rain, sleet, snow, or hail, meeting colleges and going to games, all for the last eight years, it gives me validation that I did my job for him. I feel a sense of accomplishment for myself. I know it paid off for him, and it gives me a sense of pride as a mom."

DESMOND KING II

By Mike DiGiovanna
Los Angeles Times
September 10, 2019

It will be a combination homecoming game and Mother's Day celebration for defensive back Desmond King when the Chargers visit the Detroit Lions on Sunday.

More than 100 family members and friends — including King's mother, Yvette Powell; his grandparents; several high school coaches and former teammates — will be on hand to watch the kid who grew up in the working-class neighborhood of Warrendale and starred at Detroit's East English Village Prep Academy take on his hometown team.

"I'm very excited — you should hear all the people here talking about it," Powell said by phone. "The city of Detroit loves my baby."

And the baby loves his mama. Most of the King contingent will have to purchase tickets for the game and sit in the stands, but some will root for the All-Pro slot cornerback from the lap of luxury.

King, who played in four youth league championship games and two prep city title games on Ford Field's artificial surface, purchased a suite for the game — at a cost of about $10,000 — for his mother, older brother Andre Golson, and several other family members and close friends.

"It brought me to tears," Powell, 49, said of King's gesture. "I told him I'm the happiest mom in the world, and as long as I'm at the game, I'm fine. He told me, 'Mama, you've been in the stands, you've been on the field with me, but you haven't been in a suite,' and he wanted me to sit up there this time.

"I didn't expect that. I guess it's his way of saying 'Thank you, Mama, for supporting me all those years.'"

It was Powell, a single mother, who shielded Desmond from the dangers of Detroit's streets, who shuttled him from football to wrestling to track practices as a kid, who found time to volunteer for King's youth league and high school teams despite working two jobs, and who drove him to and from high school every day, a 35-minute commute from the west side of town to the east side and back.

And it was Powell who guided the family through tragedy, when another of King's older brothers, Armon Golson, was shot and killed during a robbery when King was a 17-year-old high school senior in September 2012.

"Man, she means everything to him," Rod Oden, King's high school football coach, said of Powell. "She is his inspiration behind everything that he does. She did a phenomenal job with him. He definitely wants to show his mom his appreciation."

A college star at Iowa, King is in his third year in California after the Chargers selected him in the fifth round of the 2017 NFL draft. But he remains firmly rooted in Detroit. He returns every summer to run a youth football camp and often works out with Oden's high school players.

"It's good to know I have that support system back home, even when I'm out here," said King, who was a huge Lions fan as a kid. "As a guy from the inner city of Detroit, to come back for a homecoming game … it's nice to know a lot of people will be there rooting me on."

King will carve out some time to see his mother and some relatives at the team hotel Saturday, but he won't be able to catch up with all of his friends. These are business trips, as veteran defensive lineman Damion Square learned when the Chargers played in his hometown of Houston in 2016.

"I had 23 people at the game," Square said. "It was nuts, but it was good to play at home."

What kind of homecoming advice would Square give King?

"One, don't get too outrageous with the tickets," Square said. "Two, approach it like you approach any other game. Don't get too high, don't get too low. Just believe in your capabilities and your preparation."

Confidence has never been an issue for the 5-foot-10, 200-pound King. He was undersized in high school, where he established a Michigan prep record with 29 interceptions and rushed for 3,970 yards and 45 touchdowns in three varsity seasons, and in college, where he won the Jim Thorpe Award, given to the nation's best defensive back, in 2015.

King seized a key role in the Chargers' nickel package as a rookie in 2017, emerged as one of the NFL's best slot cornerbacks in 2018 and, thanks in part to his fearlessness, developed into a second-team All-Pro punt returner last season.

Chargers defensive back Desmond King

King had 62 total tackles and 10 pass breakups in 2018, his best game coming in a 33-30 win at Pittsburgh on Dec. 2, when he had 10 tackles, two pass breakups and returned a punt 73 yards for a touchdown.

He had three tackles — one for a loss — and returned the opening kickoff 43 yards in Sunday's season-opening 30-24 overtime win over Indianapolis, but he did fumble away the only punt he handled, in the third quarter.

"Dez is just a stellar athlete," Square said. "He doesn't seem to be crazy fast, but when he catches punts he creates separation. And you have to be another level of athlete to play defensive back — and to do it on a consistent basis — in this pass-happy league."

Oden, now the coach at Harper Woods High in the Detroit area, said many of his current players are planning to go to the game Sunday. Seeing King play in an NFL game against the Lions at Ford Field could have an enormous impact on those kids, many of whom are facing the same challenges King did.

"It helps them understand that anything is possible, that this thing is tangible, that you can reach out and touch it," Oden said. "Dez is a kid who not only went to school here but who has been the constant underdog — he was always undersized, too short, too slow, all these things. "And to go play in the Big Ten and win the Thorpe Award, to get an opportunity to play for the Chargers and to make the best of that opportunity? He's an inspiration to us all, for sure."

Desmond King is having the ride of his life as an All-Pro with the Chargers

The interview, like most of them do, began with a question.

And so began the latest on the Chargers defensive back whose dizzying climb last season saw him emerge from being a fifth-round draft pick two years ago to being the very definition of elite.

In the 2017 draft, 150 players were selected before King. None earned All-Pro recognition at two positions. King did, a first-teamer on defense and second-teamer returning punts.

He also received a vote as a kickoff returner, confirmation that King genuinely stood out league-wide every way in which the Chargers employed him.

"He's a great player already," fellow cornerback Casey Hayward said. "If he can just get better at the little things coach [Anthony Lynn] told him to get better at, he'll have a better year and he'll be All-Pro again."

The ascent over the last several months, indeed, has been turbo-charged. But so much so that now just talking to King required a helmet?

Well, no, the headgear wasn't necessitated by King's raise but rather his ride — a 2019 Polaris Slingshot SLR, a vehicle that is classified legally as an "autocycle" but only because "rolling spaceship" doesn't sound official enough.

"I think it's a really cool ride because you can get the experience of almost driving like a motorcycle but still be inside a car," said King, who wears a dark-tint helmet while on board. "It's definitely a great experience. I'm just having fun with it and taking it for joyrides. … I get a lot of eyes toward me in this thing."

King drew little attention at his Detroit high school and originally committed to Ball State — to play running back. He eventually received a scholarship offer from and attended Iowa.

He made first-team All-Big Ten his last two seasons, and second-team Associated Press All-American in 2016. Many projected he would be drafted in rounds 2 or 3, but with concerns about his size and speed he wasn't selected until Day 3.

Still, King never stopped thinking big … and bigger.

King and a few of his teammates spent Super Bowl week in Atlanta, sitting down for interviews and interacting with fans while the Rams and New England Patriots prepped for the game.

It was the first time he had seen a Super Bowl site in full bloom, the player inside him causing his mind to wonder to a nearby, promising place.

“I thought a lot about if the Chargers made the Super Bowl what our experience would be like,” King said. “It looked and sounded pretty good to me. Hopefully, this year we can make that run.”

Powell, who still lives in Detroit, was able to attend two of the Chargers’ road games last season, at Cleveland and Pittsburgh. Against the Browns, her son had two interceptions. Against the Steelers, he returned a punt 73 yards for a touchdown. The Chargers won both.

“We relived those games a little bit,” King said, smiling. “I got to hear about her experience watching from the stands. It was great having quality time to catch up with her. It was nice to get some time with my family outside of Detroit.”

Making All-Pro doesn’t bring a trophy or plaque or certificate. The honor nets recognition only. But that doesn’t mean it lacks value.

King was able to cash in on his stellar season in the form of a phone conversation with four-time All-Pro cornerback Darrelle Revis.

His agent arranged the call, presenting King with the chance to ask Revis about his offseason preparation and how best to follow a breakout year. Revis’ centered on staying humble and hungry.

“That’s a guy I looked up to growing up,” King said. “Just having that private conversation with him was so special.”

King, 24, lives in Irvine with younger brother Devon and “Ace,” a Maltese and miniature poodle mix who belongs to King’s girlfriend.

In the last two seasons, King played during the NFL’s “My Cause, My Cleats” campaign wearing designs drawn by Devon, whom the All-Pro football player has called his inspiration.

They don’t get bothered much by the neighbors, King admitting that most of them seem to have no idea he plays football for a living.

He said he tries to avoid wearing anything that bears the word “Chargers” and keeps offseason hours similar to someone working a 9-to-5 job.

But when it comes time to head to the carport and fire up the “autocycle,” King becomes abundantly more obvious.

“The guy who delivered it dropped it off and said, ‘Have fun,’” King said. “I was kind of amazed with it for a while. It was like, ‘Wow, I’m really about to drive one of these things.’”

And then off he went, the joyride Desmond King began back in September continuing.

UCHENNA NWOSU

Uchenna Nwosu: Player by Day, Coach by Night

By Hayley Elwood

But this wasn’t an NFL stadium.

This was the Field of Dreams recreational park in San Pedro where on Friday, Nwosu coached and cheered on a co-ed group of middle schoolers from the Boys & Girls Club of Carson Main Street Clubhouse’s NFL Flag football team as they went on to notch a 37-13 victory.

See, while Nwosu is entering his second year in the NFL, he’s in the middle of his first as the coach of this team – the appropriately named Chargers.

“It means a lot to see the smiles on these kids’ faces, especially after the win they had,” Nwosu said. “Everybody was involved, and everybody was happy, so it felt good.”

As a native of Carson, it was of the utmost importance for Nwosu to give back to his community in some way, so he decided to turn to coaching the team. The group practices two times per week and has games on Fridays. Additionally, all jerseys, shorts and registration costs for the whole team were covered courtesy of the Los Angeles Chargers.

“This community gave a lot to me; the city of Carson,” he reflected. “So to be able to come back and give any way I can, especially to the younger community, it’s very good. I didn’t go to the Boys and Girls Club growing up, but I knew there was a way I could get involved so I figured why not the Boys and Girls Club?”

Nwosu said he grew up watching a lot of various athletes who greatly impacted his life. For him, what better way to pay that forward than to actually do the same for others? Not only is he teaching them about the game of football, he’s helping them learn the things he gleaned from his coaches who have touched his life along the way.

“Kids don’t normally get to hang out with NFL players, so to give them that experience is cool. I’m teaching them teamwork, playing together and to never give up and play hard. It’s stuff that our coaches teach us. They’re the next generation. They’re the ones (who will lead) after we’re gone. So to instill positivity and lessons in them that they can carry on will be good.”

TROYMAINE POPE

Chargers’ Troymaine Pope puts family first to make NFL dreams a reality

By Gilbert Manzano

COSTA MESA — Football players rarely admit there’s a backup plan. The mentality is to make the 53-man roster and don’t worry about the what-ifs.

Troymaine Pope wasn’t brought up that way. Making the Chargers’ active roster for Week 1 is Pope’s top priority, but he always has a Plan B.

Pope’s mother, Tracey, taught him at an early age that providing for family comes before personal goals. That’s why Pope worked as a cashier and stocker at a Walmart, even though he was busy setting rushing records at Jacksonville State.

Pope holds Jacksonville State’s single-season rushing record, but those 1,788 yards he recorded in 2015 weren’t going to provide for his daughter, Cassidy.

Pope took the job, not because he gave up on his NFL dreams, but to provide for his family while he waited for one of the 32 teams to call. The Seattle Seahawks were that team, and Pope turned in his resignation after attending orientation and working one day for the company.

Pope has found steady work on practice squads with the Seahawks (three different stints), the New York Jets, Indianapolis Colts, Houston Texans and the Chargers.

Pope said his mother is his inspiration. Tracey Pope wakes up at 3 a.m. to get ready for work, something she has done for many years. Her work ethic is what pushes Pope today and what got him through his low point when he went undrafted.

“It’s a blessing to be here because I was lost at that point,” Pope said. “I didn’t know what I was going to do. I didn’t know if I was really going to play football again. I didn’t know if it was over with or not, but when I got that call I knew was going to make the most of that opportunity.”

Pope is an undersized running back at 5-foot-8 and 205 pounds. But the Chargers have looked past size in recent years. Austin Ekeler also went undrafted, and now the 5-10, 200-pound running back is an important playmaker for the Chargers.

Running back Justin Jackson is another example. He was drafted in the seventh round last year, then waived by the Chargers and brought back to the practice squad. Jackson finished the season by contributing in the team's biggest games and is expected to do the same this year.

"Austin and J.J. (Jackson), they're really doing a good job with helping me understand the playbook," Pope said. "If there's something I don't understand, they have no problem answering questions truthfully and being honest with me."

With the Chargers having depth at running back, Pope will need to continue making plays on special teams to make it difficult for the Chargers to release him when cutdown day arrives next weekend.

Pope flashed his speed on the memorable punt return that started with a juke move to make a lunging Saints defender miss on the tackle attempt. He later shifted to his left to make two more Saints defenders miss before he hit top speed with an open field ahead.

The touchdown served as a reminder for Pope that he belongs in the NFL.

"It's just a reminder," Pope said. "You know, stay humble. Stay grinding. It's what you've been working for, even though over the years I've been having some ups and downs."

PHILIP RIVERS

'Shoot, daggum, come on, darn it': How Philip Rivers' lexicon has infiltrated the Chargers' locker room

By Daniel Popper
The Athletic
October 3, 2019

Philip Rivers approached the temporary podium, set up behind an end zone on a UC Irvine practice field, and started taking questions from a group of reporters. It was late in the afternoon on Aug. 3, and the Chargers and Rams had just wrapped up their second of two joint training-camp practices.

I had started on the Chargers beat less than two weeks earlier, and this was my first time at one of Rivers' press availabilities. I noticed immediately that the quarterback had a favorite pet word. While most people say "um" or "like" when trying to gather their thoughts between phrases, Rivers, in his Alabama twang, prefers the word "shoot."

On facing former teammate Eric Weddle, who had signed with the Rams in the offseason: "Shoot, by the time you get to when we would play these guys, I think we both would know each other pretty well. So I don't think there's any secrets."

On participating in a joint practice so early in training camp: "Shoot, we've been in a week. So when you practice, we've had six or seven practices against ourselves, plus the walkthroughs. I think it was right on time for us."

On possibly eliminating preseason games, considering how productive joint practices are: "I feel like this is enough for me. But with other guys, shoot, you need to go out there and get a taste of it in the real, live deal. And guys have kickstarted their careers that otherwise may have never been known."

On how he motivated himself going into his 16th NFL season: "Shoot, I mean, I love to play, I love to compete, and I think you want to be there for your teammates and chase that ultimate goal, which we've yet to accomplish."

It was interesting, but I didn't think about it again until after the Chargers opened their season with an overtime victory over the Colts. I was bouncing around the locker room and talking to different players. That's when I realized that "shoot" was not just a favorite word for Rivers.

Everyone was using it.

I asked safety Adrian Phillips about the game-tying touchdown T.Y. Hilton scored late in regulation. "You never want to give up that play," Phillips said. "But shoot, he made a play. He made a great play. That's why he's an elite receiver."

I asked fullback Derek Watt about the speech Rivers gave to the team before overtime. "He thought maybe people were feeling like, shoot, it's over," Watt said. "No. We haven't lost anything."

I asked Hunter Henry about having to sit out the final few plays of the fourth quarter after he took hit to his knee (Henry ended up suffering a fracture on the play). "Shoot, I hated missing those last few snaps," Henry said.

Henry also said the word when discussing Rivers' speech: "Shoot, it's a long game, especially when you got to overtime in the first game, with conditioning, getting back into it." And he used it again when I asked about the crucial catch he made in the game-winning overtime drive. "Shoot," Henry said, "I kind of just tried to tempo it down because I felt that safety there."

A clear trend was developing, and I was fascinated.

Did any of these guys actually say the word "shoot" before meeting Philip Rivers? Or had Rivers' unique lexicon infiltrated the vernacular of his teammates?

He was asked about Detroit pass rusher Trey Flowers.

"Shoot, every week they have somebody," Whisenhunt said. "That's the way it is in this league."

Whisenhunt talked on Thursday. I approached Phillips in the locker room Friday. He was kind enough to pause the Netflix show he was watching to indulge my completely ridiculous questions.

I told him he'd used "shoot" in an answer in the locker room after the win over the Colts.

"Did I???" Phillips said, flabbergasted. "I didn't even realize it."

Phillips went on to say that he thinks it's prevalent primarily "because you don't want to cuss."

But then he paused to think about it for a moment. "You hear Philip say it a lot," Phillips said. "So it probably sticks on."

Rivers obviously says "shoot" all the time when talking to reporters. But in order for it to have spread to his teammates, he must also say it around them.

"The same person y'all see is the same person Philip is," Phillips confirmed. "Ain't no faking for the camera. No. 'Shoot, daggum, come on, darn it.' He says all that."

As I was talking to Phillips, I mentioned some of the other players who said "shoot" after the Colts win, including Watt.

"Shoot!" Phillips said to Watt, who was standing behind me.

I turned around and told Watt what I'd noticed.

"All you guys say it now," I said.

"Shoot, man," Watt said, showing off his dry sense of humor. He gave us a wide-eyed look and walked away.

"It just rolls off the tongue," Phillips said.

Phillips was helpful, but I was not satisfied.

The next week, I brought up the topic up with Austin Ekeler, another shoot connoisseur. The running back was intrigued. I asked if Rivers' language had trickled down.

"Shoot, when I —" Ekeler started to answer and then caught himself.

"I just said it right now!" he exclaimed.

He laughed, and then continued.

"I feel like you're just around a lot of guys, you just start to morph how you guys talk to each other," Ekeler said.

Ekeler noted that Henry says it more than anyone else. Henry hails from Little Rock, Ark. So maybe this is a southern thing?

"I don't know if it's Alabama," Phillips said. "That's just Phil. That's just how Phil is."

Ekeler provided a more concrete answer. He was sure that he did not say the word "shoot" before he met Rivers as a rookie in 2017.

Ekeler agreed with Phillips that Rivers probably first started saying "shoot" to avoid swearing. Rivers, of course, is a devout Catholic.

"But it's just been passed down," Ekeler said. "It's spread."

Ekeler then got philosophical and started riffing on what he called "the social culture" in locker rooms.

"We're just around each other so much, so we just start to become one in a weird way," Ekeler said. "In our language, in the way we talk to each other."

He mentioned another word that has permeated the locker room, a Henry special: "Beast."

I asked Ekeler to use the term in context.

"'What's up, beast?' Or, 'Hey, beast,'" Ekeler said. "There's probably a bunch more that we don't even actually realize."

But then there are the words that have not stuck. "Dadgummit" is another common Riversism.

By Gilbert Manzano
Orange County Register
September 7, 2019

They were given two options by the stadium security crew. Walk straight ahead to meet friends and family or turn left for an expedition through the Silicon Valley stadium before arriving to the team bus.

The 49ers aren't doing their visiting teams any favors by making them take a lap to the exit after a game. But it was accommodating for the reporter waiting for a walk-and-chat interview.

Philip Rivers emerged from the locker room holding stylish bags over each shoulder. A different look from the backpacks and rolling suitcases that departed before the Chargers' longtime quarterback.

After adjusting his shoulder bags, Rivers headed left and began his voyage with the reporter attempting to decipher why his "Now I begin" hasn't turned into "I began." Rivers officially enters his 16th NFL season Sunday at 1:05 p.m., when the Chargers open the 2019 regular season against the Indianapolis Colts at Dignity Health Sports Park in Carson.

Rivers has repeatedly said the relationships he's built with teammates who have been around a handful of seasons is a reason why he continues to play professional football at age 37 and soon-to-be 38 in December. But that's just a part of why he continues to commute from his San Diego home to the team's headquarters in Costa Mesa on a daily basis.

He sees himself making that drive and building those relationships for at least one more season after this one. He's hopeful of another new beginning in 2020, even though he's technically a free agent at the end of this season.

"I do believe, certainly, I want to be playing for this team next year," Rivers said.

THE MOUNTAIN TOP

Rivers signed the man's jersey over the No. 7, took a picture and continued his walk and sentence while stadium employees dashed around the 6-foot-5 quarterback.

"I love to compete," Rivers said. "I think a combination of loving to compete, loving the game. Wanting to reach the mountain top with this group and with these guys, something we haven't done. I haven't been able to be a part of that. It's a combination of all those things."

It's been well documented that Rivers hasn't won a Super Bowl. He has two less than his 2004 quarterback draft mates, Ben Roethlisberger and Eli Manning. Six less than Tom Brady. And one less than his good friend and former teammate, Drew Brees.

Rivers has had hundreds of Chargers teammates during his 16 seasons with the organization. It bothers him that he wasn't able to win a championship with his former teammates, especially the players who retired without a Super Bowl ring.

"It's the Nick Hardwicks, the Lorenzo Neals, the LaDainian Tomlinsons and all the way down," Rivers said before pausing.

Perhaps in that moment Rivers remembered he's the last one left from the original group that chased a Super Bowl. The team hasn't officially closed the door on a reunion with Antonio Gates, but they'll start a season without the tight end for the first time since 2002.

"Gates," Rivers continued. "Those are just a few I've named of hundreds of teammates we've had here that every year we didn't get it done, and guys have moved on that you're just sick that you didn't (win a championship with).

"Aah! You wanted to do it with that group, and then you want to do it with the next group and then you want to do it with the next group."

If Rivers is able to get to the top of the Super Bowl mountain with this next group of Keenan Allen, Melvin Ingram, Hunter Henry, Joey Bosa, Derek Watt, Casey Hayward, Melvin Gordon, and recent veteran additions such as Mike Pouncey and Thomas Davis, he'll be able to connect all his groups over the years. That's another reason, and a big one, for why Rivers continues to play.

"I'll at least feel like, and hope, those guys can all feel a part of it when, and if, it happens," he said.

YOUNG VIBES

Watt explained why Rivers occasionally calls his teammates Chester. It's a name Rivers shouts for any player who catches a ball in practice by using their chest.

"He's the first one yelling, 'Hey, Chester!'" Watt said last month after a practice. "That started with him when I first got here, and now everyone else is yelling and who's the first one to yell Chester."

As the fullback continued to reveal more quirky mannerisms from his quarterback, Rivers walked down a staircase and had a message for Watt.

"Don't lie, Derek. Tell the truth, Derek," Rivers shouted.

Rivers enjoys teasing his teammates and has no issue with being teased back. The back-and-forth banter in a way has closed the age gap between Rivers and his younger teammates.
He's 11 years older than Watt and 10 years older than Allen, Rivers' trusted top wide receiver.

Rivers gave Allen a hard time during his 2013 rookie year because he struggled with running in-routes. He's now known as one of the best route runners in the NFL.

"It's hard to gain his trust a little bit at the beginning because you have to kind of learn it his way, but once you start to adjust … and you start to click.

"I think it's a real strong bond (with Rivers). Just the camaraderie in the locker room, hanging out, vibing. Being good on the field consistently just creates a bond, a family."

The current Chargers are aware Rivers hasn't gotten to the mountain top, but they don't want it to turn into a "Win one for Phil" – to steal a line from the Denver Broncos when they finally won one for legendary quarterback John Elway.

They want to win one as a group.

"We all want to win for the team," Allen said. "He's the oldest, but we have the same goal. We don't talk about 'Win one for Phil.'"

Rivers is the star quarterback with numerous team records, but he's still just one of the guys. He wants every player from the active roster to the practice squad to feel comfortable sitting with him at the breakroom table for card games.

“The Keenans, the Watts, all these guys, they’ve kept it fresh for me,” Rivers said. “It’s so funny because I’m not old out in the (real world).

“I’m sure they know I’m corny and old to them. Sometimes I say to them, ‘Now what does that mean?’ I like to be able to get in with the lingo and all that stuff.”

Rivers learned the popular Lil Jon line “Turn Down for What.” He now uses it to praise his teammate after making a play.

“He’ll yell, ‘Turn Down for Watt,’” Watt said.

NO END IN SIGHT

Rivers stopped and dropped his bags on a heavy equipment cart near the team bus. He took a few steps back and began to wave his hands as his passionate words reflected his facial expressions – similar to the ones that have become popular gifs on Twitter.

“I like being one of the guys,” he said. “It’s not Philip’s team. No, no, no. It’s our team, and let’s go. We need all of us.”

For cool points, Rivers might want to consider sending his “Let’s go” reaction gif to his newest teammates. The one where his eyes are widened in disbelief before smiling and nodding with a “Let’s go!”

But Rivers does have his moments of feeling old. He was recently reminded by safety Derwin James that he was eight years old when Rivers started his career with the Chargers in 2004.

“One of my favorite parts of the game is being a teammate,” Rivers said. “I won’t get any simpler than that. Shoot, that stuff is fun. It is crazy though to have a 17-year-old (daughter) and some of the guys that get drafted are 21. It’s not that far off. It is crazy.”

Pouncey, a center who joined the Chargers last year, was recently asked what it’s like playing with Rivers, and before the reporter finished the question, Pouncey smiled and said, “it’s awesome.”

Pouncey joked that Rivers is able to have a youthful personality because he has nine children at home. He was joking, but Rivers agreed.

Rivers continues to play with passion because of his kids, and now he’s able to share what he does on Sundays with his oldest children. Halle (17), Caroline (14), Grace (13), Gunner (11), Sarah (9) and Peter (7) have been waiting for Sept. 8 to arrive.

That’s when their dad plays the Colts and they’ll be there Sunday to support him. The same way Rivers attended his father’s games growing up. Steve Rivers was a high school football coach in Alabama.

Rivers still has his competitive fire, he’s mentally fresh and his body is cooperating. He’s ready for another “Now I begin” in Year 16.

One day he’ll have his last beginning. He just doesn’t know when that will be. He’s going to focus on one year at a time, and he’s only contractually obligated for one season.

“I’m contradicting myself a little bit as I’m thinking, ‘Hey just focus on this year,’” Rivers said. “I’m not opposed (to getting the extension now), but at the same it wasn’t like, ‘Gosh, I hope we get this done.’ It was, ‘Yeah, I’m good if it works out.’ Because I do have a desire to play again.”

Rivers is on board for Year 17 in 2020, when the Chargers move into a new stadium in Inglewood.

“Y’all want me to come back? I do. Let’s go,” Rivers said.

By Mark Inabinett
Birmingham News
July 8, 2019

Los Angeles Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers was putting in the work on Monday afternoon, sweating under the Lower Alabama sunshine in heavy air that was awaiting the birth of a Gulf disturbance.

Rivers grew up in Alabama and was an All-State quarterback at Athens High School, but after 15 NFL seasons in Southern California, a July afternoon in the other LA was a hot blast from the past.

Rivers held the first day of his quarterbacks and wide receivers camp at St. Michael Catholic High School in Fairhope on Monday. He worked with 10- through 12-year-old youngsters. At 3:30 p.m. CDT Tuesday, he'll repeat the camp with 13- through 15-year-olds on the field.

"It's funny because this is all I knew growing up," Rivers said of the weather. "It's about the same heat -- maybe not quite as hot in north Alabama. But being gone for so long, I found myself complaining about the heat: 'Golly, it's hot out here.' But this is all they know, too, so they're used to it. They'd be playing somewhere this afternoon I'm sure, too."

Rivers didn't know if an eight-time Pro Bowl quarterback or the chance to play football in July was the real attraction on Monday.

"Some of these kids, they may not know me or care," Rivers said, "but I know if I was in Decatur, Alabama, and somebody came in and had a camp, I'd have been like, 'This is awesome. I want to go.'"

Rivers said his objectives for the campers were a good experience and maybe a nugget or two of football knowledge.

"I don't teach them how to play quarterback in three hours," Rivers said, "and there's a lot of different ways to teach somebody how to play quarterback. My way's not the only way, but it's the way I know. But I think maybe they learn a little bit about quarterback. Maybe they just have a good time. I think a three-hour camp, if it was in my hometown when I was 10, 11 and 12, I'd have been all over it. …

"If I had three hours and we had some organized drills and then we're going to play a little kind of a touch game that we've tweaked -- it's not real football, we call it Rivers' rules, kind of fastbreak basketball with a football, have a little fun. I was talking to my dad (Steve Rivers, a former high school coach) about it. I was like, 'We can't do drills for three hours.' He goes, 'No, I'd let them play. Have a little fun. Have a good experience.' And again, maybe they hear one thing about football, maybe they need a pat on the back, maybe they wanted to catch a pass, I don't know, but it's something that you can hopefully put a smile on their face for three hours."

One thing the campers will take away from the camp is the Latin phrase "nunc coepi." It was printed on the back of every camper's T-shirt.

"I think in its exact terms is 'Now I begin,'" Rivers said. "We've kind of made it 'Now we begin.' We adopted that out at our team a few years ago, and if you ask any of my children what's Dad's favorite phrase, that would be it. It's because it's a never-ending beginning. You're always beginning again. You begin again, again and again, whether you have a good play or a bad play, good test grade or bad test grade.

"We kind of apply it to everything. Shoot, nunc coepi, that's kind of another way of saying, 'Let's go.' Begin again. I was trying to think of something different, and maybe they'll have to go google it. They can investigate it a little bit, and there's some good stuff there."

St. Michael played its first full season of varsity football in 2018. The Fairhope school seems a long way from home for Rivers, but he said he was happy to bring some attention to Baldwin County's only Catholic high school.

"Obviously, St. Michael's a young school that's just getting started," Rivers said. "But I know a few people in the area, and then this particular school, not only athletically what I believe they're trying to grow to, but it really aligns with what I believe in spiritually and academically. It's a young school and again I know some people in the area and it's kind of worked out to be able to be here and give a little time. A couple of hours for me and I have as much fun as anybody out here, I think. Hopefully, they learn a little something, have a little fun and, hopefully, again help the school. …

"This young school again really lines up with everything our family believes in in all three of those areas I mentioned. It's like, 'Shoot, I can give three hours.' We spend a lot of time on the Gulf this time of year, so it makes it easy to get over here before training camp.

"I'm already getting the itch to go to camp."

TRENT SCOTT

By Gilbert Manzano

August 27, 2019

COSTA MESA — Trent Scott is finding his footing as a starting left tackle, but he already knows his way around a grill – a charcoal grill to be exact, because in the south, there's no such thing as a gas grill.

The Huntsville, Alabama, native is so confident in his grilling skills that he invited his Chargers offensive line teammates to his home for a backyard cookout – with his smoker grill as the main attraction.

"I'm nice on the grill, though," Scott said. "Out here, it's mostly gas grills. Gas grills are more convenient, but there's nothing like that smoked meat."

Scott grilled ribs and hamburgers, but the biggest hit were the chicken wings, according to guard and center Dan Feeney.

The way Scott is confident on the grill is the same mentality he carries on the football field, even if he makes mistakes.

Scott went from an undrafted rookie with seldom playing time last year to potentially starting Week 1 as quarterback Philip Rivers' blindside protector.

"That's what you look forward to growing up as a kid," Scott said about starting in the NFL. "Always wanting to get here, and once you get here, you want to be a staple. You want to be the guy. This is what I was looking forward to and I want to take full advantage of it."

Scott was thrust into a starting role after Russell Okung suffered a pulmonary embolism in June. As of now, the team isn't sure when their Pro Bowl left tackle will return. Okung's health is the team's top priority, and Scott is currently their best option to fill in because of the progress he's made in the past year.

"I looked up to him coming in," Scott said about Okung. "I used to always ask him for advice (last year) and he's been around all throughout camp. Throughout the preseason helping me with my technique and I always try to add it to my game."

Regardless of who gets to start, the Chargers will have a young offensive line protecting Rivers. Tevi, Feeney and guard Forrest Lamp are entering their third year in the NFL.

The young offensive line has struggled at times, but veteran Mike Pouncey has been their biggest vocal supporter.

"A lot of those guys respect the career I've had so far, and any tips I can pass down to them, I try to do my best, because we have a good group of guys," Pouncey said. "They're all young guys. They're all willing to learn. I think a lot of these guys will have long, long careers and be special football players."

Scott said he's prepared for the potential of starting because he gets to practice against Joey Bosa and Melvin Ingram, two of the best pass rushers in the NFL.

But he wasn't as confident when it came to joining the renowned marching band at Grambling State University. Scott grew up playing the tuba, trumpet and bass drums, and is learning to play the keyboard and piano.

"They practiced harder than the football team," Scott joked about his alma mater's band. "It'd be like 10 o'clock at night and you hear them out there."

RODERIC TEAMER

Chargers rookie Roderic Teamer has passion for rescuing dogs

By Gilbert Manzano
Orange County Register
October 24, 2019

COSTA MESA — A white note with black letters hung above Roderic Teamer's locker. It was a reminder for him to shoot his "Sunday Night Football" introduction.

For him to be pondering what he wanted to say, three days before the Chargers hosted the Pittsburgh Steelers, was an accomplishment for the undrafted rookie safety.

Teamer wasn't supposed to be receiving facetime on prime-time television, at least not this soon. He became a Chargers' starter because of injuries to Derwin James and Adrian Phillips, but he was preparing to start his fourth consecutive game, signifying the trust he's gained from coaches.

Most prime-time game intros start with the player announcing himself and ending with the college they attended, but some prefer to go with their high school, hometown or a comedic line. Last year, Chargers left tackle Russell Okung said he attended "Wakanda Tech," a fictional school and a reference to the film "Black Panther."

Teamer attended Tulane University, which was in play for him to say.

"I might say Tulane, I might not," he said.

If he wanted to go the Okung route, Teamer could have called himself the "Dog Whisperer." And that's not a self-given moniker.

Teamer was given the name by his friends at Tulane because of his passion for rescuing dogs. If a dog was in need of help, Roddy Jr. got the call.

"When Roddy helps out, they'll call him, email or find him on social media," said Roderic Sr., Teamer's father. "People were like, 'Well, we don't know what to do with the dogs.' So they called him. 'Hey, can you help us with the dogs?'"

Teamer always answered the call, despite being busy as a student athlete. When puppies needed assistance, Teamer fed them and paid for vaccinations. In two separate occasions, he kept dogs in his dorm room while he found a permanent home for them.

"I won't be saying that," Teamer said about calling himself "Dog Whisperer" in front of a national audience.

He went with his hometown.

"Roderic Teamer, New Orleans, Louisiana," he said on air.

His reputation for being reliable and caring has followed him to Southern California.

There were many routes the Chargers could have gone when injuries struck the strong safety position. It didn't make sense to many when the Chargers named Teamer the starter in Week 3 against the Houston Texans. He hadn't practiced in a month because of a hamstring injury and was making his NFL debut against star quarterback Deshaun Watson.

Teamer was burned multiple times by Watson's ability to extend plays, but still the Chargers stuck with him.

"He's pretty sharp," Chargers defensive coordinator Gus Bradley said before Teamer's first start last month. "He has stayed on it through the time that he's been injured. He sits right up front by where I am presenting. He takes meticulous notes, stays on it and is very detailed."

Teamer was sidelined, but he found ways to contribute. That's what he did for the dogs he rescued in New Orleans. There was always a way to find a loving home. Every dog was worth the time and effort.

Something as simple as caring helped Teamer with the Chargers. It showed his coaches he wanted to improve.

Five starts later, Teamer is second on the team in solo tackles (22) and third for combined tackles (31). He recorded his first career interception last week against Tennessee Titans quarterback Ryan Tannehill, and was named a nominee for Rookie of the Week for his performance in Nashville.

"He's always been very determined," Roderic Teamer Sr. said. "Works really hard. He's a very talented young man. I'm not super surprised he made it.

"I knew that if he had gotten the opportunity to compete, that he was gonna make it difficult for somebody to get rid of him because he's such a competitor."

Words that start with the letter C define Teamer, such as competitor and compassionate. Words that start with the letter B are the names of his many dogs.

Bayou, Blaze, Bruce and Bella are the four labrador retrievers that live with Teamer's parents in New Orleans. There's also Bare, a pit bull who's scheduled to move to California with Teamer.

At one point, the Teamer household had nine dogs, some they fostered until they got adopted. But a few times, the dogs won them over and became permanent residents.

"I'm sure there are things he has done that I'm not familiar with," Teamer Sr. said about his son's dog rescues. "He knows I'm like, 'Look, you don't have time as a college football player. Any dog you pull off the street, I end up having to take care of and I'm at capacity.'"

FIRST RESCUE

Teamer, who was in middle school at the time, jumped into his father's sports utility vehicle after a football practice. But Teamer Sr. ended up driving two passengers home.

"Stray dogs usually don't run up to cars," Teamer said. "I roll the window down, and he was damn near climbing through the window."

"He put his paws on the door," Teamer Sr. recalled. "Basically saying, 'Hey, could y'all help me? I'm lost and I need help.'"

They opened the door and the playful dog jumped into the backseat. The father and son then looked at each other.

"OK, what are we going to do now?" Teamer Sr. asked.

When they arrived home with the pit bull, who was later named Brodie, Teamer put him on a leash.

"To see if he had any type of training, which he didn't," Teamer said. "He learned pretty quickly."

Brodie didn't stay long. Teamer found him a forever home a few days later. It was his first of many successful adoptions.

He learned to train dogs because he grew up with two dogs, Buster and Beaux. Buster arrived six months before Teamer was born. In a way, Buster was the first rescue for the Teamer family.

"I was like no, no, no," said Teamer Sr., who works for Blue Cross Blue Shield in Louisiana. "I knew specifically what kind of dog I wanted, but by the time I got home, the puppy was there with my oldest daughters."

When he saw his two daughters, Tai and Tia, smiling as they played with Buster on the floor, he knew he had lost. Buster was staying.

"Now we're stuck with the puppy," Teamer Sr. said. "I named him Buster because he's going to be a Buster for sure."

The Teamer family lived in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, for two years after Hurricane Katrina hit the New Orleans area in 2005.

"Katrina had a lot of impact on him," Teamer Sr. said about his son. "A lot of people were unable to take their dogs, and we watched the news reports of all dogs being rescued or having to fend for themselves. That made an impression on him. His love for animals came together."

MARDI GRAS RESCUE

Toya Teamer brought home the first dog, but the husband who was initially against it, was the one who went with Roddy Jr. on the rescue trips.

Big Rod and Little Rod, which was what the family called the father and son, never encountered a vicious dog or did anything extreme, such as crawling under an abandoned home to pull out puppies, or any other dangerous stunts that are portrayed on dog rescue TV shows like "Pit Boss" and "Pit Bulls & Parolees."

But there was one situation when Teamer went on a rescue without his father. It was around Mardi Gras time, and one of Teamer's former teammates at Tulane informed him that three puppies were abandoned near a street gutter.

Teamer, who was a junior at Tulane, drove 90 minutes to find the three-week old puppies and took them to his parents' home. The Teamer family fostered them for about eight months before they were adopted.

Whenever Teamer had time to leave campus, he would go home to train the puppies. He spent his Spring Break bottle feeding Cow, Belle and Beau.

"Instead of hanging out and doing what most college students do on spring break, he was home," Teamer Sr. "Getting up every four to six hours, cleaning them up, feeding them, taking care of them."

FOSTER DORM CENTER

Teamer couldn't always send the dogs he rescued to his parents' home.

He turned his dorm room into a foster center, despite not filing the proper paperwork to house pets.

In one instance, a friend of Teamer had asked him to find a home for her dog, Lola, because she was spending the next year in South America doing volunteer work.

But there was a language barrier between Teamer and Lola, who only understood commands in Spanish. Lola was a stray dog from Chile before being brought to the United States.

Teamer made it work and found Lola a permanent home after spending about four months in his dorm room.

"The girl that adopted (Lola) from me, she speaks a little Spanish," Teamer said. "She talks to the dog in Spanish and that's part of the reason why she really wanted to adopt the dog from me."

Teamer hasn't had a rescue in the Los Angeles area, but he plans in the future to get involved with animal rescue organizations. He's been busy working his way up from a Chargers tryout player to a starting strong safety in the NFL as a rookie.

But he'll find the time to help. He usually does.

"I don't really think about it as me helping out people," Teamer said. "I think about it as helping out the dog, because animals get put in situations that they can't control.
"Even as a human you get put in situations you can't control, but you can still control how you deal with that situation. With animals, it don't go that way. I just try to help out in that way."

JERRY TILLERY

World traveler Jerry Tillery fits into Chargers' eclectic D-line

By Eric Williams
ESPN.com

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- For Jerry Tillery, it's time move on.

Asked about his globetrotting as a student at Notre Dame -- something he's answered numerous times before -- Tillery turned a bit prickly.

"It's helped me a lot, it really has," Tillery said. "But right now I'm focused on trying to be the best football player I can be, and that's where I'm at mentally and physically."

Tillery, who had traveled to 18 countries before the Los Angeles Chargers made him a first-round pick this spring, understandably wants the attention to be on football, not how many stamps he's collected on his passport during his time in college.

But Tillery's wide range of interests -- including travel -- had some observers questioning his commitment to football, a game that will pay him $10.5 million on his rookie deal.

Chargers defensive line coach Gif Smith said he never thought Tillery's outside pursuits were an impediment to his production in football.

Smith said Tillery commanded his attention early the pre-draft process, and he viewed Tillery's various off-the-field interests as an asset, not a crutch.

"When you talk to Jerry, you understand that he's extremely passionate about football," Smith said. "Outside of not talking to him, you could get distracted because he is well-versed. He's had the opportunity to go to places outside the country and do a lot of things other people might not be able to do.

"But it never took away from his love of the game, and how he wanted to play the game at the highest level. After speaking to him early in the process, that was a non-factor."

hedge fund Abbey Capital in Dublin, Ireland, and travels to places like South Africa and Japan.

"The people that say things, they don't know," Tillery said. "They don't know Jerry Tillery. They haven't seen me working in practice. They don't know everything I've put in to what I do. I'm going to show them. I'm going to show them pretty soon."

Soon likely will be Sunday, when Tillery should see his first game action in the Chargers' second preseason game against the New Orleans Saints.

Tillery's been held out of contact drills during the offseason and the start of training camp to let his body heal from shoulder surgery to repair a torn labrum he suffered during his final season at Notre Dame.

Tillery began working in team drills this week, however, and the 6-6, 295-pound pass-rusher has shown some explosiveness and power.

"We saw flashes of it," Chargers defensive coordinator Gus Bradley said. "You're like, 'Oh, OK! We just saw a flash of Jerry Tillery.' He's mentally [strong], but he just needs the physical part of it now -- the lining up, the block-reaction and things like that."

Much like Tillery, fellow Notre Dame graduate and defensive lineman Isaac Rochell also has interests outside football, including photography and his effort to curb people's use of social media.

"He's going to excel at anything he does," Rochell said. "He happens to be a first-round pick for the Chargers, so he's going to excel at that and attack that 100 percent. He's a smart dude. I appreciate how many layers he has and the different things that he does. But at the end of the day, that doesn't take away from his ability to play ball."

Added Tillery: "I'm someone who's really well-rounded. I use my skills and life experiences -- I put them to good use. I think I'm someone who can adapt in any situation, any circumstance. Everything I've done, all the experiences I've had up to this point have really helped me."

Tillery's roommate in training camp is fellow Notre Dame graduate Drue Tranquill, a linebacker selected in the fourth round this year by the Chargers.

"He's awesome," Tranquil said about Tillery. "He enjoys so many different aspects of life. He's a hard worker, a guy who takes his game very seriously. A lot of times he's beating me to bed at night, which is hard to do. I'm a pretty disciplined guy about getting my eight hours. He's just really committed to his craft and getting better."

"We're all unique in our own way, especially D-lineman," Smith said. "How boring would it be if they were all the same? He's different. We always try and give him and Isaac a hard time -- Notre Dame and all of that. They're all a little different, and that makes it interesting, makes it fun in the room -- you look for their triggers and whatever gets them going on the practice field and on game day."

Tillery also is the latest example of a player who some NFL teams pinch their noses over but the Chargers covet -- smart players who are looking to achieve a healthy balance between life and football.

"We don't shy away from that," Chargers GM Tom Telesco said. "I don't mind players having other interests off the field. All of these guys, they play football right now for their career, but football doesn't last forever, either.

"We did a lot of work on Jerry. He loves to play the game. He loves football. He knows this is his primary job, but yeah, he has interests off the field."

Chargers special teams coordinator George Stewart coached at Notre Dame during the Lou Holtz era, and has an intimate understanding of what type of athlete it takes to make it through the private school.

"That's one thing that our head coach, Coach Lynn, talks about is having a plan B," Stewart said. "Plan A is football in terms of what they do. Plan B is what you're going to do after football.

"It's very rare that you have guys -- sometimes it's late in their career before they look at a plan B. To get a guy like Jerry Tillery that has a plan B already, it's outstanding for him. That's what we try to do with our players so once they leave this organization, they're able to go out in the real world and have a chance to be successful in other endeavors."

DRUE TRANQUILL

Chargers rookie Drue Tranquill makes every moment count, even when asleep

By Mark Whicker
Los Angeles Daily News
May 29, 2019

COSTA MESA — The "student-athlete" is a dubious construct, fashioned by the NCAA itself. But such people do exist.

Many are at places like Notre Dame, where they are expected to practice and watch tape and push the weights and still walk into every classroom on time and ready to emote.

The difference between Drue Tranquill and most of them is sleep. They put it aside. Tranquill cherished it.

"I'd get seven or eight hours a night," he said. "I took a class and learned about sleep debt. It's like building it up in a bank. If you don't get it, you won't function at the highest level."

So Tranquill lived like a normal person, until he awakened. Then he majored in mechanical engineering. He learned how to design and construct artificial limbs and joints, among other things. He graduated, spent one more year taking interesting and off-topic courses, and played linebacker for the Fighting Irish and got to the College Football Playoff. Or, as Clemson calls it, a field trip.

The Irish got shelled by the Tigers but they had a 12-0 regular season, one that Tranquill risked everything to play. He ignored the Cassandras, didn't worry about injury, and finished what he started as a married, graduated, redshirt senior.

Now he's a fourth-round rookie for the Chargers. He has fit in fine, so far, during offseason workouts.

He is a safety turned linebacker, a footnote recruit turned headline player. People no longer sleep on him.

"His work ethic is the standard," said Isaac Rochell, a Notre Dame alum and defensive end. "But he can make plays all over the field. You're seeing that in the modern game, where the athletic guys can move up to different positions."

The 6-foot-2 Tranquill comes in at 233 pounds and at least that many experiences. He and his wife Jackie brought their first son, Elijah, into the world Friday.

Jackie and Drue were schoolmates in Fort Wayne, Ind. Jackie went to Purdue, the prime engineering school that thought it would sign Drue. When it came time to propose, Jackie was studying in London and planned a weekend trip to Iceland. So Drue and a friend met her there unexpectedly, with the question and the ring.

Tranquill was a 3.73 student and won the Wuerffel Award, given to the player who combines his best football with his best community service. He was a two-time Notre Dame captain and carved out a career despite carvery on each of his ACLs in a 10-month span.

Coach Brian Kelly loved his example but wondered if he had become more of a knight than a teammate. Most people have heard and accepted that nobody's perfect.

"He almost wasn't believable," Kelly said, so Tranquill learned to reach out more while he still reached up. As usual, he succeeded.

Tranquill never had to search for incentives. His dad Tony, whom he calls "my hero," spent eight years at Auburn getting his engineering degree. "He and my mom had five kids, three of them while he was in college," Drue said.

Purdue, which was a Big Ten punching bag at the time, recruited Tranquill hard. When Notre Dame came, recruiting coordinator Mike Elston told him, "You're the sixth safety on our board."

"I said to heck with that. I'm coming to play," Tranquill said. "And Coach Kelly stepped in and said, 'Look, he's an athlete, he'll find a place.'

"I was supposed to be a scout-team player and I rolled the dice and bet on myself. As the game evolves, athletes play. If you're strong and fast and can change directions and you're smart, you'll find a place in this game."

Another crossroads came in 2018 when Tranquill could have entered the draft. But he wanted to get to the College Football Playoff, and he didn't like being told he should protect himself from injury.

Then there were the guys.

"(Teammate) Asmar Bilal was in my wedding," Tranquill said. "I was close to those guys. They were the ones I wanted to win a championship with."

He improved his draft position and fed his restless mind with different courses. One was called The Heart's Desire.

It challenged his reading and writing skills, made him think about the difference between "résumé values and eulogy values. It made you become introspective. There were these tombstones in the Grotto, on campus. So what do you want on your tombstone? Things like that."

That decision won't have to be made for millions of moments, all of which will count for Drue Tranquill.

JAYLEN WATKINS

Family foes: Watkins brothers anticipate division rivalry

COSTA MESA, Calif. – Sammy Watkins may have never played football if it wasn't for his older brothers. He described himself as a "big fat kid" around the age of 6 or 7. Even out of shape, watching his older brother Jaylen Watkins play in Pop Warner piqued Sammy's interest.

"I was sorry at first," Sammy told Yahoo Sports. "Everybody [was] better than me. And then, just that summer, I was like, 'I'm going to go outside and play football in the sandlot with my brothers.' "

Sammy and Jaylen are half brothers, growing up in different homes. The brothers played high school football a 25-minute drive apart and now live in different parts of Florida. Still, they've been close from a young age, often meeting up at a basketball court near their grandparents' house and have stayed connected throughout their careers. They were drafted the same year, 2014, (Sammy went fourth overall, Jaylen 101st) and shared a team during Jaylen's brief stint on the Buffalo Bills in 2015.

This season, Jaylen, a safety for the Los Angeles Chargers and Sammy, a wide receiver with the Kansas City Chiefs, will square off twice as AFC West division rivals. The matchup was set to occur last season, but Jaylen tore his ACL about three weeks before the Chargers hosted the Chiefs in the 2018 season opener.

"I think he's going to have an opportunity to actually play on the field and get some snaps against me," Sammy said. "So hopefully I can, you know, crack him or something."

The first time the Watkins played each other in an organized football game, Jaylen harassed his younger brother in a Pop Warner game. Jaylen, one year older than Sammy, played with the younger kids due to his smaller size. Both boys played quarterback, setting up a Watkins quarterback duel. While Sammy spent all his time under center, Jaylen also played nose tackle. Not only did Sammy's team lose, but Jaylen remembers "giving the center hell," and sacking Sammy.

As their careers took off and Jaylen played safety at the University of Florida and Sammy caught passes at Clemson, the brothers trained together back home in Florida during the offseasons. Sammy is a different kind of player than most receivers due to his combination of size (6-foot-1, 211 pounds) and speed (he ran a 4.43 at the NFL scouting combine), Jaylen said. Defensive backs can't beat up Sammy to slow him down at the line like a smaller receiver but also don't want to let him run free in fear of not catching him.

Covering and working closely with a top-level receiver has impacted Jaylen's game, particularly during their shared time in Buffalo in 2015. Jaylen signed with the Bills hoping the opportunity to work with his brother would catapult his play following an early season release from the Eagles. At the time, Jaylen said he needed to work on patience at the line and Sammy needed to learn how to counter it.

While on the practice squad in Buffalo, Jaylen was assigned to play scout defense on his younger brother and often wore the opposing jersey of whichever defensive back would be covering Sammy that weekend. Jaylen learned to cover his brother's complex attributes. He could run with Sammy, he just needed to trust his speed.

After 11 weeks in Buffalo, the Eagles re-signed Jaylen.

"I came back to Philly and was thrown in the fire," Jaylen said. "But I was like, 'I'm ready; I've been covering there with Sammy every day.' "

In Week 14 of that season, the Eagles hosted the Bills. The Watkins' father, Sammy Watkins III, attended the game in Philadelphia with a Bills jersey covered by an Eagles jacket.

Jaylen provided a scout on his brother for the secondary unit leading up to the game but it didn't matter. Sammy still scored a 47-yard touchdown. Jaylen didn't play on defense but passed Sammy several times on his jog off from special teams.They acknowledged each other, exchanged taps on the shoulder and kept moving.

"Obviously when you're on the field it just kind of goes out the door," Jaylen said. "After the play you realize, 'Oh, that's my brother.' But during the play you know there's 10 other people on the field. It's chaos. You kind of like block it out."

Last year's hype about the matchups built to the point where the brothers' father already had plans to be in Los Angeles for Week 1 only for Jaylen's knee injury to derail the sibling showdown.

The first of the two games this year won't come until Week 11 and Jaylen doesn't want to predict too far into the future. When discussing the possibility of playing Sammy this year, Jaylen glanced down at his leg.

"You know, don't want to," Jaylen said before pointing down at his leg. "We're anxious though, both of us."

Jaylen Watkins works toward his long-awaited Chargers debut

He was back on the field at Dignity Health Sports Park on Saturday night, Jaylen Watkins taking another step toward what he hopes is his ultimate return.

For the record, the defensive back never has played in a real game for the Chargers. His most recent NFL appearance came in the Super Bowl after the 2017 season.

He was a champion that night, Watkins playing mostly special teams for Philadelphia in the Eagles' 41-33 victory over New England. He signed with the Chargers two months later, tore an anterior cruciate ligament in the preseason four months after that, and basically disappeared.

Watkins returned home to Florida for the majority of his rehabilitation and watched from afar as the Chargers went 12-4 and advanced to the second round of the playoffs.

"I've never missed a season since I was 5 years old," he said. "That was my first year trying to figure out what I was going to do after rehab. Usually, it's hanging out with the guys or watching other games.

"[But] it was tough to watch games and watch guys. I had a baby boy, so I was able to spend a lot of time with him and [he] kind of kept me going and focused."

Watkins was out there Saturday in a 23-15 exhibition loss to Seattle, entering at free safety in the third quarter after the Chargers began the game with their starting secondary.

The appearance was the second of the preseason for Watkins after he sat out the opener. He played last weekend against New Orleans and had an interception deep in Chargers territory to halt a Saints threat on the anniversary of his torn ACL.

Watkins said he realized it was exactly a year to the date when he walked into the home team training room and began to recall the last time he had been in there.

"It kind of made me happy because when it happened, you think it's over," he said. "Then fast forward a year, you're back in the same spot getting ready to play. I don't think it gets better than that."

Entering training camp, Watkins was expected to battle for the No. 1 job at free safety, where starter Rayshawn Jenkins has refused to budge.

Watkins' potential to play a role increased last week when Derwin James suffered a stress fracture in his foot, an injury that will sideline the All-Pro strong safety three to four months. Watkins, a veteran of 36 NFL games who has the versatility to also play cornerback, is among the group vying to help fill the void created by James' absence.

"Some people, when they get hurt [they] say, 'Why me?'" safety Adrian Phillips said. "[Watkins] went back to the drawing board, started working and made himself better than what he was before."

The year was not an easy one for Watkins, who said the most difficult part of rehabbing was "not being around ball."

He'd watch the Chargers games on television and send text messages that his teammates would find waiting for them when they returned to their lockers.

Following his interception against New Orleans, he said he received congratulatory texts from friends who've had ACL injuries, some of whom still haven't made it back.

"How to handle adversity," Watkins said when asked what he learned while sitting out. "I have in the past, but I'll say this is the big one for me just because of the stigma behind an ACL."

DEREK WATT

COSTA MESA, Calif. -- Derek Watt might be the Watt brother you've never heard of, but he was the most celebrated as a high school player.

Watt, a fullback for Los Angeles Chargers, is the younger brother of J.J., who plays for the Houston Texans and the older brother of T.J., who plays for the Pittsburgh Steelers. Derek totaled 2,685 rushing yards and 44 touchdowns during his prep career. He also served as the team's kicker and punter, earning Wisconsin Player of the Year and USA Today All-America honors his final season at Pewaukee High School.

"They both say that I was one of, if not, the best high school football players they've ever seen," Watt said.

Of course, fast forward and Derek's football acumen has been eclipsed by the accomplishments of J.J. and T.J. Watt.

J.J. is one of the best players in the NFL, a perennial All-Pro defensive lineman and three-time defensive MVP. T.J., in his third NFL season with the Pittsburgh Steelers, is no slouch either, earning a Pro Bowl invitation as a pass rusher in 2018.

Both J.J. and T.J. were first-round selections; Derek was picked in the sixth round of the 2016 draft.

Derek says he and his brothers fantasized about making it to the NFL while playing football in their backyard. They pretended to play for their favorite team, the Green Bay Packers.

"We just continued to work and work, and finally we've all achieved the dream of getting to the NFL," Derek said. "And now it's just what our story is in the NFL, and how far it can go."

Derek will get an opportunity to play against older brother J.J. for the first time on Sunday (4:25 p.m. ET, CBS). J.J. was nursing a back injury when the Chargers defeated the Texans in Houston three years ago.

The two never shared a football field on an organized team. J.J. was already on his way to college when Derek started high school football at Pewaukee. And by the time Derek arrived at Wisconsin, older brother J.J. declared early for the NFL draft.

"He Facetimed me yesterday (Monday) mainly to see my son," said Derek about his older brother, who enjoys spending time with 7-month-old Logan. "He wanted to see his nephew because he's starting to crawl now, so he wanted to see him. But he also was asking what the game plan was looking like this week and that type of stuff, and I'm not giving much away there. He's definitely trying to start the small talk there."

Derek is 2-0 against his brothers in the NFL. Along with beating the Texans three years ago, Derek faced off against T.J. last year in Pittsburgh, a 33-30 win by the Chargers.

The middle brother, Derek is two years older than T.J. and four years younger than J.J. Derek and T.J. played together in high school and at Wisconsin. Derek said he only played a couple snaps on offense last year, so he didn't knock heads with his younger brother often.

The three brothers remain close, communicating daily through group texts. Their parents, mother Connie and father John, will attend the game on Sunday.

"It's very surreal," J.J. said. "Even just being at a meeting and seeing him on the scouting report and flipping on the film and -- it's just like any other week, you're watching film but then all of the sudden it's your brother on the film instead of just a fullback.

"It's very cool. I'm not going to try and act like it's not exciting or anything. It's awesome. I mean, we literally played football in the backyard, in the front yard, dreamed about playing the NFL. So, this is going to be very special."

"As a fullback you're more of an adjuster than anything sometimes," Derek said. "The defense might do something you weren't expecting, and so you've got to make sure that you can still get to your guy and adjust off that. A guy might come free off his block and you've got to put him back on his guy, or just pick up somebody you weren't expecting to block."

Derek was never fit as a pass-rusher, as T.J. said Derek's destiny was to be in the scrum.

"They tried him out (at fullback at Wisconsin) in fall camp and it ended up working out in his favor," T.J. said. "He was more an inside linebacker. He's not an edge guy. He was good in high school. He had a lot of tackles and had a lot of scholarships to play linebacker, so he was no slouch on defense. He's a plugger, just like he is a fullback. He'd be a run-stopping guy."

Now Derek serves as the eyes and ears for current tailback Austin Ekeler, one of his good friends. Ekeler attended Watt's wedding to wife Gabriella last year, and relies on Watt reading the defense on runs when he's in the game.

"It's a grind out here, especially on the practice field," Ekeler said. "So just having a friend out there with you makes you relax. We take a little pressure off each other because you have someone to talk to, put your mind at ease."

"The best way to describe him is that he's just a football player," quarterback Philip Rivers said about Derek. "He can catch it well, he blocks, he's smart. He just kind of can do a little bit of everything."
