

RAVENS IN OUR COMMUNITY

TRAINING CAMP VISITORS

OLB Terrell Suggs

Since moving training camp to the Under Armour Performance Center in Owings Mills three years ago, the Ravens have remained committed to hosting special groups from the surrounding Baltimore communities during these practices. Among such notable groups were veterans from the Wounded Warrior Project, an organization offering programs, services and events to help wounded vets navigate life at home, and Athletes Serving Athletes, a nonprofit organization that pairs volunteer athletes with individuals living with disabilities enabling them to compete in road races. Other groups in attendance included the Casey Cares Foundation, the Special Olympics of Maryland, Boys Hope Girls Hope, My Sister's Circle, Ronald McDonald House Charities of Baltimore and military groups from across Maryland, including the 53rd Signal Battalion from Fort Meade and members of the Maryland National Guard. Military members even assisted players K Justin Tucker and WR Torrey Smith (pictured far left) in dumping a bucket of ice water on their heads to raise awareness for Amyotrophic Lateral Sclerosis (ALS). At the conclusion of each training camp practice, players and coaching staff signed autographs and took the occasional "selfie" with guests.

RAVENS LAUNCH CAPOLOGIST PROGRAM

Earlier this summer, the Ravens launched LifeJourney Capologist, an innovative program that will allow middle and high school students to simulate managing the Ravens' salary cap. In conjunction with the organization LifeJourney, the Capologist program exposes students to real-life opportunities and career interests for them to pursue. Over 500,000 Maryland middle and high schools students will be eligible to use the program by signing up online. The program will be integrated into their current math coursework and will be available during after-school programs. Ravens senior vice president of football administration Pat Moriarty heads the program. To the best of the Ravens' knowledge, they are the first professional sports team to create a simulation and technology application to the salary cap.
