KLINT KUBIAK

Klint Kubiak was named Head Coach of the Las Vegas Raiders on Feb. 9, 2026, joining the Silver and Black after serving as the offensive coordinator for the Seattle Seahawks' 2025 championship campaign. Kubiak, whose father, Gary, was an NFL quarterback and long-time head coach for the Houston Texans and Denver Broncos, enters his 13th season in the NFL and 17th overall in the professional and collegiate coaching ranks.

In 2025, Kubiak was instrumental in helping lead the Seahawks to a 14-3 record, an NFC West Division title, and a Super Bowl LX victory. In his lone season in Seattle, he guided an offense that ranked third in the NFL in scoring (28.4 points per game), eighth in total offense (351.4 yards per game), eighth in passing (236.5 yards per game) and sixth in average yards per play (5.9 yards per play). The Seahawks' offense set franchise records for most points scored in a single season (483) and largest point differential (+191), while also ranking first in the league in most 30-point halves (5), most games with 30+ points including playoffs (9), and most games with 35+ points including playoffs (7).

Under Kubiak's tutelage, QB Sam Darnold was named to his second career Pro Bowl after completing 67.7 percent of his passes for 4,048 yards, 25 touchdowns and 14 interceptions. His 67.7 completion percentage was the seventh-best mark in the NFL and the highest rate in a single season of his career. WR Jaxon Smith-Njigba had 119 catches for a league-high 1,793 yards to go along with 10 touchdowns, earning first-team All-Pro honors and being named the NFL's Offensive Player of the Year. The Seattle rushing attack also excelled under Kubiak, improving from the 28th-best rushing offense in the NFL in 2024 (95.7 rush yards per game) to the 10th best run game in the league last season (123.3 avg.). RB Kenneth Walker III rushed for 1,027 yards and five touchdowns while RB Zach Charbonnet recorded 12 rushing touchdowns (tied 6th-most in the NFL) and career highs in carries (184) and yards (730).

In 2024, Kubiak served as the offensive coordinator for the New Orleans Saints where he utilized three starting quarterbacks due to injuries. Starter Derek Carr was limited to 10 games, with backups Spencer Rattler and Jake Haener starting the remaining seven games. WR Chris Olave recorded 32 receptions for 400 yards in only eight games. Kubiak relied on RB Alvin Kamara, who set a career high with 950 yards on 228 carries, the second most of his career, while adding six rushing touchdowns. Kamara also led the team in receptions (68) for 543 yards, second most on the team, with two touchdowns.

As the San Francisco 49ers offensive passing game specialist in 2023, Kubiak played a pivotal role in the passing game of the 49ers. San Francisco finished the regular season ranked second in the NFL in total offense (398.4 avg.), including fourth in net passing yards per game (257.9). They finished first in the league in red zone touchdown percentage (67.2), fourth in third down conversion percentage (47.5) and were tied for the sixth-fewest turnovers in the NFL. Pro Bowl QB Brock Purdy completed 308 of 444 (69.4 percent) passes for 4,280 yards with 21 touchdowns and 11 interceptions for a league-best 113.0 passer rating, and an NFL-best 123.8 in the fourth quarter. Including Purdy, five offensive 49ers were selected to the Pro Bowl and four as Associated Press All-Pros (TE George Kittle, FB Kyle Juszczyk, RB Christian McCaffrey and T Trent Williams).

In 2022, Kubiak served as offensive passing game coordinator/quarterbacks coach for the Denver Broncos, after coaching three seasons with the Minnesota Vikings (2019-21), the first two seasons as quarterbacks coach and one year as offensive coordinator. In 2021, the Vikings offense finished 12th in the NFL in total offense (362.8 avg.) and 11th in net passing yards per game (249.3), while tying for the fewest interceptions (7) and total giveaways (13). WR Justin Jefferson finished with 108 receptions for 1,616 yards with 10 touchdowns, finishing ranked in the top 10 in all three major receiving categories, earning AP All-Pro honors. QB Kirk Cousins added the third season of his career with 4,000-or-more passing yards and 30-or-more touchdown passes, as he was named to his third Pro Bowl. Pro Bowl RB Dalvin Cook carried 249 times for 1,259 yards with six touchdowns and caught 34 passes for 224 yards. Under Kubiak's tutelage in 2020, Cousins passed for 4,265 yards with 35 touchdowns, a 67.6 completion percentage and 105.0 passer rating, while the Vikings ranked fourth in the NFL in total offense. Cousins became the first Vikings signal-caller to record a 100+ passer rating in consecutive seasons (105.0), his second highest of his career behind his 107.4 in 2019, which also came with Kubiak's tutoring. Working with Kubiak in 2019, Cousins also posted 3,602 passing yards and 26 touchdowns with only six interceptions, as he was named to the Pro Bowl. During his tenure on the Vikings offensive staff from 2019-21, Cousins started all 47 games, passing for at least 26 touchdowns and a 100.0 passer rating each season. Under Kubiak's guidance over the three seasons, Cousins ranked fourth in the NFL in passer rating (105.0), fifth in touchdown passes (94), sixth in passing yards (12,089) and seventh in completion percentage (67.6).

Kubiak served as offensive assistant/quarterbacks coach in his first coaching stint with the Broncos from 2016-18. In 2018, he helped Denver QB Case Keenum throw for 18 touchdowns and a career-high 3,890 yards. Kubiak started his NFL coaching career with the Vikings as a quality control/assistant wide receivers coach from 2013-14. In addition to his NFL experience, Kubiak coached four years at the collegiate level with Texas A&M and Kansas. He served as an offensive quality control coach (2010-11) and graduate assistant/inside wide receivers coach (2012) for Texas A&M, earning his master's degree in human resource development. Kubiak coached wide receivers for the Jayhawks in 2015.

Kubiak was a four-year letterman at Colorado State. He played safety for the Rams and was named a team captain as a senior, while earning an invitation to play in the East-West Shrine Game. He is the oldest son of Gary Kubiak, who played quarterback for the Denver Broncos for nine seasons (1983-91), was a long-time NFL assistant coach, the Houston Texans head coach (2006-13), and Super Bowl 50-winning head coach for the Broncos (2015-16). He has two brothers, Klay, the San Francisco 49ers offensive coordinator, and Klein, who serves as a national scout/special projects for the Dallas Cowboys.

KELLEN MOORE

The New Orleans Saints named Kellen Moore as the 19th head coach in franchise history on Feb. 11, 2025. Coming off a Super Bowl LIX victory over the Kansas City Chiefs, Moore joined the Black and Gold after serving as the offensive coordinator for the Philadelphia Eagles' 2024 World Championship campaign.

Moore, a 14-year NFL veteran, played quarterback for six seasons (2012-17) and entered the coaching ranks in 2018, serving as an offensive coordinator for six campaigns (2019-24).

In his first season at the helm in New Orleans, Moore rallied the team from a 2-10 start to win four of the final five games. The Saints went 4-0 in the month of December, going undefeated in the month for the first time since 2011 and for only the third time in franchise history.

Moore put his imprint on the team in year one on offense, mixing a combination of rookie QB Tyler Shough, protected by a pair of promising young tackles in Kelvin Banks Jr. and Taliese Fuaga and WR Chris Olave and TE Juwan Johnson. A scheme was implemented behind Shough that accentuated his abilities and allowed the team to finish the season 5-4 with him as the starter.

In 2024, Moore was a key piece of a coaching staff that led the Eagles to a 14-3 record, which tied a franchise-mark for regular season victories, an NFC East Division title and the conference's number two playoff seed and culminating with a Super Bowl LIX championship at the Caesars Superdome. Ranked eighth overall in net yards per game (367.2) and seventh in points per game (27.2), Philadelphia rushed for a single-season club record 3,048 yards (sixth-best in NFL history) and finished second in the league in rushing yards per game (179.3). The 2024 Eagles were only the second team in NFL history to rush for 3,000-plus yards and at least 25 touchdowns (29). The Eagles passing attack also flourished under Moore's tutelage, setting a club record with a 103.4 passer rating, led by QB Jalen Hurts' career-high 103.7 ranked fifth-best in the league.

In the NFC Divisional Playoff victory over the Los Angeles Rams, the Philadelphia run game kept humming, gaining a team playoff-record 285 yards on 34 carries (8.4 avg.) with three touchdowns. In the Eagles' 55-23 NFC Championship victory over the Washington Commanders, they had their second-highest scoring total in postseason history, gaining 459 total net yards, including 229 rushing on 36 carries (6.4 avg.) with seven touchdowns. In Philadelphia's 40-22 Super Bowl LIX win over the Kansas City Chiefs, Hurts was voted the winner of the Pete Rozelle Trophy, awarded to the Super Bowl LIX Most Valuable Player after completing 17-of-22 attempts (77.3 pct.) for 221 yards, two touchdowns, a 119.7 passer rating and 72 rushing yards with one touchdown on the ground, the most rushing yards by a quarterback ever in a Super Bowl.

In 2023, Moore served as the Los Angeles Chargers offensive coordinator. He helped lead WR Keenan Allen to the Pro Bowl after finishing sixth in the NFL with 108 receptions for 1,243 yards and seven touchdowns. He also guided Justin Herbert to the sixth-best touchdown-interception ratio (2.9) and ninth-most passing touchdowns (20) in the NFL through Week 14 before sustaining a season-ending injury.

In four seasons as offensive coordinator of the Dallas Cowboys (2019-22), Moore's unit ranked second in the NFL in total offense (391.0 net yards per game) and scoring (27.7 points per game). The Dallas offense was also the NFL's fourth-best passing offense (264.4 net yards per game) and ranked seventh in rushing offense (126.6 yards per game) over that span. Moore helped the Cowboys secure a pair of NFC East titles and three playoff appearances in his five seasons as an assistant coach. He coached eight players to a combined 12 Pro Bowl selections as offensive coordinator, and tutored QB Dak Prescott to another as his position coach in 2018.

The Cowboys offense ranked as the NFL's best in 2021, leading the league in total offense (407.0 net yards per game) and scoring offense (31.2 points per game). Moore's guidance helped Prescott return from injury and throw for a franchise-record 37 touchdowns on a career-high 410 completions, registering a passer rating of 104.2, third-best by any passer in the NFL and the fourth-highest in a single season in franchise history at the time. On the ground,

Overall, he prepared three different additional quarterbacks to take snaps under center for the Cowboys in 2020, the first time that Dallas had at least four different quarterbacks start at least one game in a season since 2015. Moore's offensive front saw a shuffling of eight different starting lineup combinations on the offensive line due to injuries. Despite the injuries, Moore's unit finished the season ranked eighth in the NFL in passing offense, as WR Amari Cooper hauled in a career-high 92 receptions for 1,114 yards and five touchdowns, while Lamb set the franchise rookie record with 74 receptions.

During his first season as offensive coordinator in 2019, Moore's unit led the league with 431.5 total net yards per game, which was the tenth-best single-season performance in NFL history and best by any offense since Denver's 2013 record-setting unit (457.3). Prescott finished second in the NFL with a career-high 4,902 yards passing, second-most in team history, and a then-career-best 30 passing touchdowns. Elliott finished the season ranked second in the league with 1,777 yards from scrimmage, as Cooper recorded eight touchdowns and a career-high 1,189 yards on 79 receptions.

Moore entered the coaching ranks in 2018, taking over as Dallas' quarter backs coach after spending the previous three seasons in the room as a player. In his first season coaching Prescott, he was named to the second Pro Bowl of his career, helping lead the Cowboys to the franchise's second NFC East Division title in three seasons.

Moore played six NFL seasons for the Detroit Lions (2012-14) and Cowboys (2015-17) after entering the league as an undrafted free agent. Moore appeared in three games, including two starts for the Cowboys in 2015. He threw for 435 yards and three touchdowns in his first home start, a 34-23 loss to Washington, becoming the fifth quarterback in Cowboys history to eclipse 400 passing yards in a single game and recorded the sixth-most passing yards by any Cowboy in a single game. The following season, Moore broke his leg in training camp, but remained a mainstay in Dallas' quarterbacks room, working closely with then-rookie Prescott as the Cowboys tied a franchise-record with 13 wins in the regular season, including an 11-game win streak.

A native of Prosser, Wash., Moore finished his collegiate career at Boise State with a record of 50-3, the most wins by a quarterback in NCAA history. He concluded his collegiate tenure with the second-most touchdown passes (142) and sixth-most passing yards (14,667) by any quarterback in NCAA history, owning a career completion percentage mark of 69.7. Moore was a first-team All-American from the Football Writers Association of America in 2010, twice being named Western Athletic Conference Offensive Player of the Year (2009-10) and earning Mountain West Conference Offensive Player of the Year honors in 2011. The Broncos' offense finished in the top-five in scoring in each of Moore's final three seasons, including a first-place finish in 2009 and rank of second in 2010.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders - who began play in the American Football League in 1960 – are in their 67th year of professional football competition, including the last 56 as a member of the National Football League. In seven memorable decades - the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s, 2010s and 2020s - the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three World Championships of Professional Football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 23 playoff seasons, finished 38 seasons at .500 or better and played in 45 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s. The Silver and Black are the only AFC team - and one of just two NFL teams - to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only three original AFL teams to have captured three World Championships of Professional Football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980. In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During the memorable 65 years in Oakland, Los Angeles and now Las Vegas, the Raiders have won 512 league games, tied 11 and lost 494. "Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization as shown by their domination of pro football.

32 of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced six Coaches of the Year. In addition, 102 Pro Bowl players have earned 286 Pro Bowl selections representing the Silver and Black.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 - Monday Night Football. The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build a 43-33-1 record in Monday night play. The Raiders won 12 games at home to begin this series and are 21-10-0 at home in the 55 years of Monday Night Football.

Through the seven decades of pro football competition, the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports. Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

In addition, the Raiders are proud to contribute to community engagement, youth initiatives, multicultural awareness, and global outreach. The Raiders played in Oakland from their inception through 1982, relocated to Los Angeles in 1983, moved back to Oakland in 1995, and made Las Vegas home in 2020.

The Raiders base training and business operations in Henderson, Nevada at Intermountain Health Performance Center and play home games at Allegiant Stadium, a fully enclosed, state-of-the-art facility located adjacent to the world-famous Las Vegas Strip. The Raiders maintain an international presence and communicate with the worldwide Raider Nation through the team's official website and social media channels.

Nakobe Dean and the Raiders' 'firemen' put out late fire in win over Chargers
By Adam Hill
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Las Vegas Raiders linebacker Nakobe Dean likes to refer to his position group as the firemen.

"Anytime anything bad happens, it's on us to put the fire out," he said after the Raiders improved to 2-0 with a 26-14 victory over the Los Angeles Chargers on Sunday at SoFi Stadium.

Dean and his teammates were faced with trying to extinguish a blaze the Raiders defense had set itself late in the game.

The Chargers were given a first down at the Raiders' 48-yard line as they trailed 17-14 with 3:52 to play when the Raiders came out of a timeout on a fourth-and-1 play with 12 defenders on the field.

It was an egregious error that gave the Chargers a golden opportunity to salvage a victory from a second consecutive pedestrian performance by their offense.

But the Raiders firemen brought out the hoses.

"It doesn't matter what happens or why it's on fire, we have to put it out," Dean said. "That always means taking care of the next play."

Dean delivered a big hit on Chargers running back Omarion Hampton, jarring the ball loose for a fumble that was recovered by Jeremy Chinn and run back to the Chargers' 16-yard line.

"Short memory. That's what we preach all the time," coach Klint Kubiak said. "It's unacceptable what happened before the fumble and we have to get that junk fixed."

Kubiak had to settle for overcoming it as Kirk Cousins hit Cody White for his second touchdown of the day three plays later to seal the game.

But the offense could have been in a much more difficult position had the Chargers been able to tie the game or even take the lead had Dean not forced the fumble.

"We preach hunting the ball every time," he said. "(Defensive coordinator Rob Leonard) preaches it, so it's always on our mind to tackle at the level of the ball and try to bite the ball. (Hampton) ran hard today and ran through a lot of tackles, so we knew we had to get our pads down."

It all stems from Leonard's aptly-named "eat drills" where the defense hunts for the kill in late-game situations to take the team to the finish line.

"It's stuff we drill every day," Dean said. "So big shoutout to the coaches for making sure we drill it and keep it on our mind to finish the game."

Dean, who also tied for the team lead with 10 tackles, briefly left the game in the first half. He was evaluated in the medical tent before going through a series of drills with the athletic training staff and being cleared to return.

He said he simply came down too hard on the ground and was fine.

The Raiders were certainly glad he was OK.

“Winning pedigree,” Kubiak said of Dean. “He’s a winner. He won in college, he won in Philly. Him and (linebacker Quay Walker) bring winning to the organization. He came out for a minute and came back in and gutted it out for the team. That’s who he is.”

Dean’s efforts helped ensure the Raiders their first 2-0 start in five years, but he’s not satisfied.

“I felt like there were times we should have played better,” he said of the defense. “A lot of WTF plays, but we talked to each other about it. The good thing about our defense is there aren’t big egos so we can be real with each other about what needs to tighten up.

“Anybody can be held accountable from the coordinator to a rookie and that’s why our defense is what it is.

Especially when there are fires to put out.

Raiders grades: Winning the game in 3 phases keys upset of the Chargers
By Sam Gordon
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — How the Las Vegas Raiders performed Sunday in a 26-14 victory over the AFC West rival Los Angeles Chargers at SoFi Stadium:

Offense: A-

Kirk Cousins showcased his deep ball touch en route to 253 passing yards, completing 19 of 29 passes to go with three touchdowns and an interception. Wide receiver Tre Tucker — who slipped as the intended target on an in-breaking route on the interception — broke free down the field for two receptions of 40-plus yards on his way to five catches for 119 yards and score.

Practice squad wideout Cody White had two receiving touchdowns.

Running back Ashton Jeanty didn't have as much room to run this week — following a 102-yard outing last week against the Miami Dolphins — with 21 carries for 48 yards as the Chargers made him their focal point.

Defense: A+

Timely blitzes with a steady rush ensured Chargers quarterback Justin Herbert was under duress with 192 passing yards, two touchdowns and two interceptions to cornerback Hezekiah Masses, starting as a rookie for injured teammate Darien Porter.

Defensive end Malcolm Koonce split a sack with linebacker Nakobe Dean, who stuffed a third-down run midway through the third quarter and forced running back Omarion Hampton to fumble (with safety Jeremy Chinn recovering the football) in the fourth.

Dean added two of the unit's nine hits on Herbert, who battled a sticky secondary.

Special Teams: A

Kicker Matt Gay made a 59-yard field goal in the final seconds of the second quarter, the longest of his eight-year career. AJ Cole helped Las Vegas stay on track with field position, averaging 46.2 yards on six punts.

Coaching: A-

Coach Klint Kubiak was appropriately aggressive as a game manager and play caller, converting a key second-half fourth down and dialing up several completions down field. Fullback Connor Heyward's quarterback sneak on fourth-and-1 from the Raider 35-yard line extended an 11-play, 74-yard drive that ended with White's touchdown catch from Cousins.

Also executed on that drive was a toss to Jeanty turned throwback to Cousins, who completed a 27-yard pass to Dareke Young in addition to Tucker's 40-yarders.

Defensive coordinator Rob Leonard's unit pressured Herbert for the better part of four quarters, also featuring 12 men after a fourth-quarter timeout on fourth down. Dean forced the fumble on the ensuing play.

Graney: Raiders outplay Chargers and are perfect for it
By Ed Graney
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. – This is one of those needed-to-steal games. You beat the teams (Miami) you're supposed to and then take as many as you can of which you are an underdog.

That's how you climb over a win total of 5½.

Heck, that's how you keep things interesting for yourself in the AFC West.

The Las Vegas Raiders have done so now through two weeks and are perfect for it.

They beat the Los Angeles Chargers 26-14 on Sunday at SoFi Stadium, taking down a team many believed would contend for a division title this year.

The Chargers are now 0-2 and looking every bit of it.

Raiders quarterback Kirk Cousins had himself a fine afternoon, completing 19 of 29 for 253 yards with three touchdowns and one interception..

The Chargers were better (at least in some phases) this week than in a season-opening loss to Arizona, which tells you how bad they looked against the Arizona Cardinals. Because they were far from competent for most of Sunday. Not even close.

But the Raiders also raised their game from dismissing the lowly Dolphins last week. The Raiders really defended well across the opening 30 minutes but for one Charger sustained scoring drive. Ten plays, 69 yards.

But this could have even been a wider margin of victory.

It was a case of missed opportunities for the Raiders early on, one being on a fourth-and-goal call from the 1 that was stuffed and another on their first possession and deep in Los Angeles territory.

That's when Tre Tucker slipped on his route and a good throw by Cousins was instead intercepted.

But it didn't deter the duo. Cousins would find Tucker for a 40-yard score — a wide-open Tucker — to give the Raiders a 7-0 lead early in the second quarter.

So much was made of the Raiders needing a sure-fire No. 1 receiver before the season and that still is the case. But in Tucker they have someone capable of such big plays.

It wasn't the cleanest game. There were at least seven drops between the teams. Raiders running back Ashton Jeanty had three himself.

Next up: A game at New Orleans, which is 1-1 to start the season and won in Baltimore on Sunday. The Saints will be favored, so once again it's a game the Raiders need to steal on the ol' win-loss ledger.

They showed both really good and some bad against the Chargers in front of, as expected, a pro-Raiders crowd. But they had more than enough in the end.

Two-and-oh. How are you feeling, Raiders fans?

By Adam Hill
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The Las Vegas Raiders made the kind of egregious mistake Sunday that has led to far too many losses the last few seasons.

This time, they immediately atoned for their error.

The result was a 26-14 victory over the Los Angeles Chargers at SoFi Stadium and their first 2-0 start since their last playoff campaign of 2021.

With the Chargers facing a fourth-and-1 near midfield with 3:52 to play and the Raiders leading 17-14, the Raiders came out of a timeout with 12 players on the field and gave the Chargers a first down.

Nakobe Dean forced an Omarion Hampton fumble on the next play, however, and Jeremy Chinn ran it back to the Chargers' 16-yard line.

Practice squad callup Cody White scored his second touchdown of the game three plays later from Kirk Cousins after a play-fake that sprung him wide open in the end zone.

Cousins threw for 253 yards and three scores on a day the Raiders were limited to just 57 yards rushing.

The Raiders had taken the lead with 3:49 remaining in the third quarter when White came down with an acrobatic 13-yard touchdown reception from Cousins.

It came in response to the Chargers taking their first lead of the game on Justin Herbert's 10-yard touchdown pass to Oronde Gadsden on their first possession of the second half.

The Raiders led 10-7 after a first half that was far more eventful than the score would suggest.

Cousins finally broke through with the deep ball, hitting Tre Tucker on a 40-yard touchdown and finding him again on a 42-yard connection to set up a field goal just before intermission.

The Raiders had a pass intercepted in Chargers territory after Tucker slipped to the turf and were stuffed on a fourth-and-goal from the 1 when they tried a direct snap to Ashton Jeanty, who had four tries from inside the 5 and could not score.

The Chargers had issues of their own, hitting a 58-yard field goal attempt off the upright and having Herbert's deep pass intercepted when an open David Njoku bobbled the ball into the hands of Raiders rookie Hezekiah Masses.

Masses, the fifth-round pick, had his second interception in the final minutes to seal the victory and become the first Raiders rookie since Henry Williams in 1979 with multiple interceptions in a game. Maxx Crosby drew a holding penalty in the end zone in the final minutes.

Raiders star tight end 'close' to return after missing Chargers game
By Adam Hill
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — The return of Las Vegas Raiders star Brock Bowers will have to wait another week.

But a pregame workout did provide some optimism.

"(He's) close," coach Klint Kubiak said. "Very close. He looks great."

Bowers went through a workout on the field at SoFi Stadium about three hours before kickoff against the Los Angeles Chargers, but was ruled inactive for a game the Raiders won, 26-14.

He underwent a meniscus trim less than two weeks ago and returned to practice in a limited capacity Friday, but was listed as doubtful for the game.

Bowers went through stretching before running some routes Sunday morning on the field under the watchful eyes of general manager John Spytek, tight end coach Luke Steckel, assistant head coach Mike McCoy, offensive coordinator Andrew Janocko and wellness coordinator Alex Guerrero, among others.

The Raiders play at New Orleans next week, and there is optimism he will be able to return after missing just two games.

There was no further update on rookie safety Treydan Stukes, who left Sunday's game with a concussion after playing every defensive snap in his debut last week.

Isaiah Pola-Mao has replaced him in the lineup and slot corner Taron Johnson also lined up at safety.

Linebacker Nakobe Dean and running back Ashton Jeanty both left the game with minor injuries, but both were able to return.

"I'm feeling good," Jeanty said.

Quarterback Aidan O'Connell was not with the team for personal reasons. The team has provided no update on a possible return.

Starting cornerback Darien Porter missed the game with a foot injury. Rookies Hezekiah Masses started in his place and recorded two interceptions. Jermod McCoy also saw some time at corner.

Anything now possible for upstart Raiders after beating Chargers to start 2-0

By Case Keefer
September 15, 2026

Tre Tucker, Cody White among stars of Raiders' 26-24 road victory at Chargers

The 2026-2027 Raiders' season was supposed to be about progress and setting a foundation for long-term franchise success.

Forget about all that after two games. The bar has now been raised and expectations should be heightened after Las Vegas secured its first 2-0 start to a season in five years Sunday afternoon at SoFi Stadium in Los Angeles.

First-year coach Klint Kubiak complemented a victory in his home debut last week with an even bigger triumph in his AFC West premiere. The Raiders upset the Chargers 26-14, snapping a four-game losing streak in the rivalry series and a seven-game skid at SoFi.

Kubiak and the band of players that arrived with him have already started to transform the Raiders from a perennially sloppy, if not underachieving, side to a highly-efficient group that wins with grit and sharpness.

The Chargers were just as successful as the Raiders from a statistical perspective — gaining 310 yards and 5 yards per play to Las Vegas' 300 yards and 5.1 yards per play — but the former continually made massive mistakes Sunday while the latter was steadier.

Los Angeles had three turnovers and were lucky not to have more considering it recovered five out of a franchise-tying six fumbles on the afternoon.

Free-agent signed linebacker Nakobe Dean jarred the final fumble out of Chargers' second-year running back Omarion Hampton's hands with 3:52 remaining in the game. Veteran safety Jeremy Chinn scooped the loose ball and returned it 43 yards to the Chargers' 16-yard line to set the Raiders up to pull away.

The Chargers were trailing 17-14 and driving to take the lead before Dean's forced fumble, but a 11-yard touchdown catch from recently-signed receiver Cody White less than a minute later gave the Raiders a two-score lead.

The Chargers had a coverage breakdown and left White running alone towards the end zone on the third-and-five play.

The Chargers could never get out of their own way but the Raiders also asserted their dominance at times.

White also scored the Raiders' penultimate touchdown near the end of the third quarter when he outmuscled cornerback Rodney Shelley for a 13-yard catch in the corner of the end zone.

It wasn't quarterback Kirk Cousins' best throw but the discarded Seahawks' practice squad receiver, whom Kubiak knew from his time as Seattle's offensive coordinator last year, made sure he was rewarded anyway.

Cousins improved from a so-so Week 1 outing with 253 passing yards and three touchdowns while completing 19 of 29 attempts against the Chargers.

The 15-year NFL veteran showed he could still throw deep with a pair of 40-plus yard completions to receiver Tre Tucker, including on the game's first touchdown.

Tucker split the two safeties on a post route to catch a 40-yard pass at the start of the second quarter to put the Raiders up 7-0.

He later caught a 43-yard pass on a drive that concluded with a career-high 59-yard field goal from Matt Gay.

But the likes of Tucker, who had a game-high 119 receiving yards on five receptions, and White more than kept the Raiders afloat despite a down day from running back Ashton Jeanty.

The second-year running back broke out against the Dolphins but managed only 48 yards on 21 carries versus the Chargers with three dropped passes. Jeanty also exited the game late with an apparent leg injury.

Los Angeles running back Omarion Hampton outpaced Jeanty with 23 carries for 94 yards and a touchdown, but the Chargers could never produce explosive plays.

The home team didn't have a single gain go for more than 20 yards while the Raiders notched four after Kubiak made it an emphasis going into the game.

The Chargers were largely neutralized by another imposing performance from the Raiders' defensive line.

Superstar edge rusher Maxx Crosby tormented Chargers right tackle Joe Alt, who had four penalties including a holding in the end zone at the end of the game to give the Raiders a safety.

Crosby's longtime running mate Malcolm Koonce had his best game in more than two seasons, sacking Herbert twice and forcing a fumble right before Hampton's decisive cough-up.

Herbert often tried to pick on first-time starting cornerback Hezekiah Masses but the fifth-round drafted rookie largely to stood up to the challenge. Masses, who was starting in place of the injured Darien Porter, had a pair of interceptions including one in the fourth quarter right after the Raiders went up 24-14.

Teams that start 2-0 in the NFL make the playoffs 75% of the time. The last time the Raiders won their first two games, in 2021, was also the last time they appeared in the postseason.

They were considered among the longest shots in the league to make the field this season, but that's no longer the case.

The Raiders head to New Orleans to take on the Saints next Sunday with at least a share of first place in the AFC West locked up.

Competing for their first division title in 24 years sounded out of the question coming into the season, but it shouldn't be now.

That's how strong the Raiders have looked in their first two games.

THE ATHLETIC

Raiders start 2-0, Chargers fall to 0-2. Are we witnessing an AFC West role reversal?

By Sam Warren and Saad Yousuf
September 20, 2026

Klint Kubiak's Las Vegas Raiders are 2-0, and Jim Harbaugh's Los Angeles Chargers are in trouble.

Las Vegas traveled to L.A. and took down its AFC West division rival 26-14 on Sunday, taking advantage of a number of Chargers mistakes. L.A.'s much-hyped offense turned the ball over three times, including twice in the final four minutes.

The Chargers are 0-2 and face a daunting schedule over the next three weeks against the Buffalo Bills, Seattle Seahawks and Denver Broncos.

Meanwhile, playing a second straight game without star tight end Brock Bowers, the Raiders made it work offensively with wide receiver Tre Tucker putting up 119 receiving yards and fellow WR Cody White catching two touchdown passes.

After an impressive home win and solid Week 2 showing, is it too early to reset expectations for this Raiders team?

I'd say somewhat. The Chargers made a lot of mistakes in big situations, which helped the Raiders stay in the game throughout. After playing the Miami Dolphins last week, it's fair to say they haven't seen the best competition.

Las Vegas also had some big blunders that took points off the board, such as Tucker's stumble that led to Kirk Cousins' first quarter interception, and getting stuffed on four straight runs on the goal line. Add in a 12-men-on-the-field penalty before a key fourth-and-short snap, and it's clear the Raiders have things to clear up on both sides of the ball.

But the floor certainly appears to be raised for the Raiders. Cousins will keep them competent, and the defense is able to step up in big situations. They're not operating on the level of a top-tier NFL team, and it remains to be seen how they'd fare against one. But Kubiak has definitively improved this team, and it isn't among the league's worst like it was last year. — Sam Warren, Raiders beat writer

It was another uneven game for the Chargers offense. What's going on with Mike McDaniel's group?

Given a reputation from his days with the San Francisco 49ers, McDaniel's addition as offensive coordinator was expected to make the Chargers' offense more dynamic. Instead, it has looked sloppy through the first two games. Some of it is on the players and their execution — it's not McDaniel's fault that Brenen Thompson dropped a pass early and then David Njoku bobbled a potential big gain and turned it into an interception. But a lot also falls on McDaniel.

It's fair to wonder if McDaniel is getting too cute with his approach. In the fourth quarter, the Chargers had just 14 points and trailed by three. Ladd McConkey, who suited up despite dealing with a rib injury that took him out of last week's game, had just three targets, all of which he caught for 35 yards. Quentin Johnston led the team with five targets but had just one catch for 7 yards. Eight players had at least two targets, but only McConkey and Charlie Kolar had more than two catches.

There's something to be said about spreading the wealth, but it's on the offensive coordinator to identify the best players and take advantage of their skill sets. Outside of one drive last week that leaned on McConkey, and a drive on Sunday featuring Omarion Hampton, McDaniel hasn't done that consistently enough.

The Chargers also have avoidable issues with penalties, particularly false starts. Letting the ball hit the ground on the snap or on handoff exchanges should not happen at this level, and the number of fumbles (three on Sunday) are inexcusable. — Saad Yousuf, NFL staff writer

Most will see Maxx Crosby's swing-and-miss on Justin Herbert on a third-quarter Chargers TD and a zero in the sack column, but how did the star edge rusher look?

Crosby looked pedestrian on the stat sheet for the afternoon — he had just one tackle and one quarterback hit. But his presence definitely affected the Chargers' offense.

To start the second quarter, the Chargers were backed up near their own end zone. With the Raiders in a pass-rush situation, Crosby bore down on right tackle Joe Alt, who was clearly thinking about Crosby when he flinched on consecutive plays to earn false starts. The penalties derailed the drive and helped put the Raiders in good field position to set up their first touchdown.

Then in the fourth quarter, with the Chargers driving, Crosby forced Alt into another false start. Crosby also had the final word on the game: Alt held him in the end zone to prevent a sack, resulting in a safety. Crosby showed he can still close out games, but with improved weapons throughout the defense, maybe he doesn't need to be the only one to do so. — Warren

It's early, but how much panic is there for this Chargers team two weeks in?

At 0-2, the 2026 season could already be slipping away from the Chargers. They started the season with home games against the Arizona Cardinals and Raiders, who tied (along with New York Jets and Tennessee Titans) for the NFL's worst record in 2025. Aside from the Kansas City Chiefs in Week 6, the Chargers don't face another non-playoff team from last season until Week 10, when they play the Ravens in Baltimore.

It's too early to know which teams will emerge (or underachieve) compared to last season, but the Chargers have looked like one of the worst teams in the NFL through two weeks. — Yousuf

The Raiders were counting on Brock Bowers to be the focal point of their passing offense. How did Kirk Cousins throw for 253 yards without him?

In their Week 1 win over the Dolphins, the Raiders relied on Ashton Jeanty to pace the offense. The Chargers were prepared for him Sunday, holding Jeanty to 2.3 yards per carry. Given the absence of Bowers, that shouldn't have boded well for the Raiders, but their much-maligned receiving group stepped up.

Tucker had two catches of 40-plus yards, including the game's first score, and consistently stretched the field. Dareke Young also had a big catch on a trick play in the third quarter. And White, who the Raiders signed to their practice squad on Sept. 1 and elevated for a second straight week, caught two TDs, including the one that sealed the game.

Yes, there were coverage busts by the Chargers' secondary. But the receivers stepped up when they needed to, and this group proved they can hold their own when needed. — Warren

Kirk Cousins' 'phenomenal' play has new-look Raiders at 2-0
By Ryan McFadden
September 20, 2026

LOS ANGELES -- Kirk Cousins became the Las Vegas Raiders' starting quarterback to help jump-start the rebuild process under first-time head coach Klint Kubiak.

Cousins' presence has paid dividends thus far.

He threw for 253 yards, three touchdowns and an interception to lead the Raiders past the Los Angeles Chargers 26-14 on Sunday afternoon at SoFi Stadium, improving to 2-0 for the first time since 2021.

Cousins had a 65.5% completion rate and posted a passer rating of 113.1. It was a performance that left wide receiver Tre Tucker clamoring about Cousins postgame, saying the 38-year-old signal-caller "can probably play until he is 60.",

"It's still early, but the goal is to build something that way outlasts me," said Cousins, who has thrown six touchdown passes in two games. He is the second player in team history to record six touchdown passes in the first two games, joining former quarterback Ken Stabler in 1976.

Cousins proved that in Year 15, he still has a bit of arm strength. A week after he completed 1 of 7 pass attempts for 21 yards and two interceptions on throws for 10-plus air yards, he was effective on those throws. On attempts of 10-plus air yards, Cousins completed 8 of 12 passes for 181 yards, three touchdowns and an interception.

Cousins' interception with 9:05 to go in the first quarter was a result of Tucker slipping while running his route, which led to cornerback Cam Hart catching the ball. Cousins, however, had a nice response in the second quarter. With 12 minutes to go, Cousins completed a 40-yard touchdown pass to Tucker to give the Raiders a 7-0 lead.

During the final seconds of the quarter, Cousins found Tucker again for a 42-yard completion that set up a 59-yard field goal attempt from kicker Matt Gay to give Las Vegas a 10-7 lead at halftime. Tucker finished with five catches for 119 yards and a touchdown on seven targets.

"[Cousins] did a really good job of pushing the ball down the field," Kubiak said. "Our playmakers, like Tre, made some really big plays. It's something you're always trying to do every weekend."

Trailing by four points in the third quarter, Cousins helped the Raiders score 17 unanswered points to secure the victory. He engineered the comeback, starting with a 27-yard pass to wide receiver Dareke Young. Cousins tossed the ball to running back Ashton Jeanty, who threw it back to him before he found Young open down the field while a defender was closing in.

Three plays later, Cousins threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Cody White. In the fourth quarter, both players connected for an 11-yard touchdown, which gave Las Vegas a 13-point advantage.

"He's elite, man. I'm so excited to play with him," Tucker said. "He does not look any bit old to me, and the things I see him doing in practice, he's doing in the games."

Kubiak said: "He's been phenomenal with the operations and leadership. I can't say enough great things about No. 8."

The Raiders hoped that Cousins could show No. 1 pick, Fernando Mendoza, what it takes to be a solid starting quarterback in the NFL. Through two games, Cousins has been a good example to follow.

"I was saying to Fernando as the clock was running out, 'Hey man, this is every game in the NFL,'" Cousins said. "... It takes everything you got, and so you never know what direction it's going to go, but we got to find those inches. We got to finish."

Eagles' Broadway jab at Titans leads NFL Week 2 trolls
By Anthony Gharib
September 20, 2026

With half of the league looking to remain undefeated heading into Week 2, a win could lead to an even sweeter troll. Case in point? The Philadelphia Eagles.

Las Vegas Raiders 26, Los Angeles Chargers 14
The Raiders are 2-0 for the first time since 2021 after a big win against the Chargers.

Las Vegas pulled ahead in the fourth quarter behind consecutive turnovers by Los Angeles -- a fumble by running back Omarion Hampton then an interception thrown by Justin Herbert. Hampton's fumble resulted in a Raiders touchdown to put them up 10 with 2:59 remaining. Las Vegas quarterback Kirk Cousins had 259 yards passing and three touchdowns, and wide receiver Tre Tucker led the team with five receptions for 119 yards and a score.

A massive victory came with a straight forward troll as -- not far from Hollywood -- the Raiders captioned their win post: "Roll credits." As Cousins walked off the field, he took a video thanking the fans who showed up at Sofi Stadium and said it "felt like a home game," which Las Vegas wrote in its caption.

NFL Week 2: Takeaways, questions, fantasy spin for Sunday games
By NFL Nation
September 20, 2026

In the early window of NFL Week 2 on Sunday, last week's offensive explosion seemed like a thing of the distant past.

Five teams failed to reach double-digits points, including both the Bears and Vikings at a rainy Soldier Field. The Panthers forced five turnovers against the Falcons, while the Patriots cemented their win over the Steelers with a fumble return for a touchdown. The highest-scoring matchup of the early window (44 points) came between the Titans and Eagles, which ended on a game-winning touchdown grab by Philly's Darius Cooper.

The scoring picked up in the late window Sunday, as the Cowboys and Commanders combined for 57 points. However, Washington lost QB Jayden Daniels to an elbow injury in the second quarter -- hours after Chicago lost QB Caleb Williams to a right hamstring injury. Meanwhile, the 49ers dominated the Dolphins in their first game back from Melbourne, Australia. And the Seahawks won their second straight game with backup quarterback Drew Lock.

Our NFL Nation reporters reacted to all the action, answering lingering questions coming out of each game and detailing everything else you need to know for teams that played Sunday. Fantasy football analysts Matt Bowen and Tristan Cockcroft also have fantasy takeaways from each matchup. Let's get to it.

Raiders
How have the Raiders fared without TE Brock Bowers? Last year, the Raiders' offense fell apart when Bowers sustained a knee injury in Week 1. This year has been different. Las Vegas has been without Bowers (knee) for two weeks and has managed to make things work, which is a testament to coach Klint Kubiak. On Sunday, wide receiver Tre Tucker caught five passes for 119 yards and a touchdown. Las Vegas had eight players record a reception, including wide receiver Cody White, who had two touchdown catches. With Bowers expected to return for Week 3, the optimism for this offense grows higher.

What to make of the QB performance: After Kirk Cousins raised concerns about his ability to generate explosive passing plays, he let the ball fly at SoFi. On attempts of 10-plus air yards, Cousins completed 8 of 12 passes for 181 yards, three touchdowns and an interception. He had two completions for more than 40 yards each, including a 40-yard touchdown pass to Tucker. Cousins might not sling the ball like this every week, but at least he showed that he's still capable. -- Ryan McFadden

By Beth Harris
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Kirk Cousins used to watch Cody White attacking the football at Michigan State. The veteran quarterback figured the same thing would work for the Las Vegas Raiders.

Cousins connected with White for a go-ahead, 13-yard touchdown pass in the third quarter and an 11-yard score during the fourth, leading the Raiders to a 26-14 win over the Los Angeles Chargers in the teams' AFC West opener on Sunday.

It was White's first career game with multiple TD receptions.

"Cody showed me a lot today," Cousins said. "I guess those were my bank reps, just watching him play for Michigan State and then when he arrived try to translate that to here and now."

Las Vegas (2-0) beat the Chargers (0-2) on the road for the first time since 2020, a game that was played without fans because of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Raiders, who maintain a strong Southern California fan base, had lost four straight to the Chargers by double digits.

With No. 1 draft pick Fernando Mendoza watching from the sideline, Cousins was 19 of 29 for 253 yards with three TDs and an interception. He got sacked twice.

Cousins joined Ken Stabler in 1976 as only the Raiders quarterbacks to throw three or more TD passes in each of their first two games.

"He's been phenomenal," said Raiders coach Klint Kubiak, who enjoyed a successful run with Cousins when they were both with the Minnesota Vikings.

The Chargers took their first lead, 14-10, on Justin Herbert's 10-yard TD pass to Oronde Gadsden. Herbert fumbled and teammate Keaton Mitchell recovered at the Las Vegas 10-yard line. On the next play, Herbert spun out of a potential sack with Raiders star Maxx Crosby looming to connect with Gadsden.

The Raiders answered right back with the TD catch by White, who was elevated from the practice squad a day earlier. He also played in Las Vegas' 27-13 win over Miami in Week 1 but did not have a catch.

"It just meant the world," said White, whose family was on hand. "Just being able to go out there and make the plays when Kirk was able to give me some opportunities. It just felt amazing to go out there and get a win."

Leading 17-14, the Raiders' Jeremy Chinn recovered a fumble and returned it 43 yards with 3:52 remaining in the game. Omarion Hampton had a costly fumble for the second straight week and Chinn recovered, returning it to the Chargers 16-yard line.

Cousins then directed a three-play, 43-second drive that ended with White's second TD catch and a 24-14 lead in front of a raucous, predominantly Raiders-supporting crowd at SoFi Stadium.

"It's still really early, but certainly the goal is to build something that way outlasts me," the 38-year-old Cousins said.

The Raiders led 7-0 on Tre Tucker's 40-yard touchdown catch on the Chargers' busted coverage in the second quarter. Rookie Genesis Smith, replacing injured Elijah Molden, lost Tucker, leaving him wide open.

Matt Gay's career-best 59-yard field goal extended the lead to 10-7 just before halftime.

In his 100th NFL game, Jim Harbaugh fell to 0-2 for the first time in his college or pro coaching career, with the heavily favored Chargers also losing to Arizona 26-14 last week.

The Chargers were done in by six fumbles, among other miscues.

"The fight was there," Harbaugh said. "We're losing in the margins. That's what we have to get fixed."

A visibly frustrated Herbert was 15 of 26 for 192 yards with one touchdown and two interceptions. He took three sacks.

"That's not good enough and can't expect to win games like that when we're playing like that," he said. "If we're not playing up to our standard, that's on us to fix it."

The Chargers' Joe Alt, one of the league's top tackles, had three false-start penalties and an offensive holding call that led to a Raiders safety in the closing minutes.

"Thought I saw what I saw and didn't," Alt said. "Got to be better."

Injuries
Raiders: S Treydan Stukes was hurt in the third quarter.
Chargers: S Derwin James Jr. (hand) got hurt late in the first quarter, but returned before halftime. ... TE David Njoku (knee) was taken off in a cart early in the second quarter and did not return. ... DL Dalvin Tomlinson was hurt in the fourth.

Raiders defense flexes its muscle against Chargers
By Levi Edwards
September 20, 2026

After Week 1, it was fair to wonder whether the Raiders defense was the real deal.

It was quite the impressive showing with five sacks and two turnovers, limiting the Miami Dolphins to 74 rushing yards and quarterback Malik Willis to a 55.6 completion percentage.

Many assumed that the Los Angeles Chargers offense would pose a much greater threat than the young, rebuilding Dolphins did. After all, the Chargers just hired offensive mastermind Mike McDaniel to lead their unit, with two-time Pro Bowler Justin Herbert at his disposal.

Not to mention the Raiders hadn't won a game in SoFi Stadium since 2020 and Herbert has thrown 22 touchdowns in his career against the Silver and Black.

But as the game unfolded, the smoke cleared. The Raiders defense arguably played even better than they did the Sunday before.

Their pressure upfront completely rattled the Chargers, who had multiple false start and holding penalties. Herbert was hit nine times by seven different defenders and sacked twice.

The Silver and Black also held the Chargers to 5-of-14 on third down, the Raiders' second straight week holding a team to under 40% on third down conversions.

Herbert was held to 192 passing yards and, coincidentally exactly as Willis, a 55.6 completion percentage.

"I mean he's a hell of a player," Maxx Crosby said of Herbert postgame. "Super talented. He offers a lot of different challenges on the field. ... Us a defensive front, a front seven, just the defense in general, we wanted to make it as difficult as possible for him."

"I think we have a lot of confidence, it starts with [defensive coordinator] Robbie [Leonard]," Crosby added. "Robbie does a great job during the week of getting us prepared. ... We have a lot of confidence building, but every single week is a new challenge."

And now after two games, the Raiders defense is up to five turnovers – already more than a quarter of their total from 2025.

Rookie Hezekiah Masses accounted for two interceptions, starting in place of Darien Porter who was out with a foot injury. Masses' first interception was a grab off a bobbled catch by Chargers' David Njoku. The rookie's second came late in the fourth quarter when he leapt in front of Derius Davis and came down with the ball to a grand ovation from his teammates.

"I couldn't even sleep last night, man," Masses said on Raiders Gameday. "I was like, 'I can't let my team down.' I knew they were going to try to come at me being a rookie and I just had to make plays on the ball."

"I just want to get the ball," the rookie added. "Wherever the ball's at, that's where I'm trying to be and just make plays."

Masses is the first Raiders rookie with multiple interceptions in a game since Henry Williams nearly five decades ago. In 26 coverage snaps, Masses allowed two catches for 16 yards on six targets as a defender and was awarded a game ball for his efforts.

"Incredible start for him," Kubiak said. "Really proud of him, really proud of how his teammates supported him because the ball doesn't get into his hands without great pass rush and great coverage. But really proud of Zeke."

A third Raiders turnover sealed the game. Nakobe Dean forced a fumble on running back Omarion Hampton late in the fourth quarter as the Chargers offense was marching down the field. Jeremy Chinn recovered, setting up the Raiders offense to take a 24-14 lead on an 11-yard Kirk Cousins touchdown pass to Cody White.

In total, the Chargers fumbled the ball six times – with their last one being the most costly.

"Always satisfying, definitely with how much we talk about it," Dean said of forcing the fumble. "We talk about it, we rep it, we got what we call 'eat drills' every week. Being able to do it is essentially just seeing all your work kind of come into fruition."

"Winning pedigree, he's a winner," Kubiak said of Dean. "He won in college, he won in Philly, him and Quay Walker, they bring winning to the organization."

Overall, the Raiders' revamped defense doesn't seem to be fluke. If the trend continues, it could be a formidable unit, especially in receiving massive contributions from the rookie class and offseason free agency additions.

But even with a 2-0 start, the main objective is staying even keel.

"We got 15 more games," Kubiak said bluntly after the win. "I'm really proud of today, but the way that you in more is that you forget about it quick and go back to work on the next one."

Game Recap: Raiders earn first win in Los Angeles since 2020
By Levi Edwards
September 20, 2026

The Las Vegas Raiders greeted their Southern California fans Sunday with a complete performance and their first division win of the season by taking down the Los Angeles Chargers, 26-14.

With this win, Klint Kubiak is the first head coach (excluding interims) in franchise history to win both of his first games since Bill Callahan in 2002.

Both teams' defenses got off to strong starts, preventing any scoring until early in the second quarter.

Rob Leonard sent pressure from all angles with five different players recording a quarterback hit in the first quarter. Chargers kicker Cameron Dicker doinked a 58-yarder on the first possession, which gave the Raiders offense good field position.

While the Raiders offense got the ball moving down the field, Tre Tucker slipped down on an in-route and Cam Hart nabbed an easy interception. Two possessions later, the Raiders got a turnover of their own from Hezekiah Masses in his first career start. He snatched away a bobbled pass intended for David Njoku and returned it for 29 yards.

Once again, the Raiders offense couldn't capitalize on the momentum, halted at the goal line on four straight carries by Ashton Jeanty.

But in time, Tucker would redeem himself from his early blunder.

After the Raiders forced a third-and-out on the Chargers offense, Cousins hit No. 1 on two straight passes for 55 yards – the second being a 40-yard touchdown and the first score of the game.

In response, the Chargers leaned on a ground game propelled by second-year back Omarion Hampton. Six carries and 45 yards were enough for Hampton to get Los Angeles in the end zone and tie the game.

Cousins found Tucker on another deep ball for 42 yards, setting up Matt Gay to make a career-long 59-yard field goal to give the Raiders a 10-7 lead going into halftime. To amplify special teams play alongside Gay, All-Pro AJ Cole downed four of his six punts inside the 20-yard line in this outing.

To open the third quarter, the Chargers defense forced a three-and-out and Justin Herbert proceeded to come out of his slump. After going 7-of-15 with an interception in the first half, he found his groove for three completions and 66 yards.

Evading Maxx Crosby coming in for a sack, the Chargers quarterback found Oronde Gadsden for a 10-yard touchdown to take their first lead of the game.

The Chargers lead lasted for almost six minutes, as Klint Kubiak went deep into his playbook.

A few pass completions later and a fourth-down conversion on a Connor Heyward direct snap, the Raiders got 27 yards on a chunk play consisting of a double pass from Jeanty to Cousins to Dareke Young breaking wide open.

A week after making a touchdown-saving tackle on special teams, Cody White climbed a ladder over Rodney Shelley for a 13-yard touchdown. It was White's second career touchdown.

But White wasn't done just yet.

As Las Vegas held on to a tight three-point lead, they needed to get the ball back to their offense to seal the deal. Nakobe Dean delivered with a forced fumble on Hampton. The ball swooped directly in the hands of Jeremy Chinn, who returned it for 43 yards.

Already in the red zone, Cousins hit White for another touchdown on 3rd-and-5 to take a 24-14 lead. The Raiders quarterback finished with 253 yards and three touchdowns. Cousins is the ninth quarterback in NFL history to throw for at least three touchdowns in each of his first two starts with a team since starts were first tracked in 1950.

And the defense didn't let up either. Another Masses interception and a safety on Herbert followed.

Masses is the first Raiders rookie cornerback to record multiple interceptions in a game since Henry Williams in 1979.

Another complete showing from the Raiders in all three phases give them their first 2-0 start since 2021, and their first win SoFi Stadium since 2020.

Kirk Cousins throws three TDs, Raiders start 2-0 with 26-14 victory over Chargers
By Myles Simmons
September 20, 2026

You like that?

Raiders fans all over might be chanting Kirk Cousins' unofficial slogan for at least the next week after the quarterback threw for three more touchdowns, powering Las Vegas to a 26-14 victory to begin the season 2-0.

The Raiders had not started the season with two consecutive wins since 2021.

Las Vegas played solid defense against Los Angeles, picking up some timely takeaways. Omarion Hampton had another game-changing fumble, coughing the ball up on a fourth-quarter run up the middle with the Chargers down by three.

The Raiders scored a couple of plays later with Cousins' third touchdown pass, going up by 10 with 2:59 on the clock.

After Justin Herbert's second interception of the game, Joe Alt closed what was a particularly bad day with a holding penalty in the end zone for a safety to close out the scoring.

Alt had previously been flagged for three false start penalties, despite the Chargers playing at home.

Herbert finished the contest 15-of-27 for 192 yards with a touchdown and two interceptions. He also had three of the Chargers' six fumbles on the day, though the team did not lose possession on any of them.

Hampton had 94 yards on 23 carries with a touchdown.

But on the other side, Cousins was 19-of-29 for 253 yards with three touchdowns and an interception. Tre Tucker was his top target, catching five passes for 119 yards. Two of Tucker's catches went for at least 40 yards, including a long touchdown in the first quarter to open the scoring.

Cousins is now just the second quarterback in franchise history to have at least three touchdown passes in each of the club's first two games, joining Ken Stabler from 1976.

Kubiak has become the fourth coach in franchise history to win each of his first two games, joining Al Davis, John Madden, and Bill Callahan.

At 2-0, the Raiders will again be on the road in Week 3 as they play the Saints in New Orleans.

The schedule doesn't get easier for the 0-2 Chargers, as they'll be on the road to face the Bills in Week 3.

2026 NFL season, Week 2: What We Learned from Sunday's games
By Around the NFL Staff
September 20, 2026

26 Raiders | 14 Chargers

Bobby Kownack's takeaways:

Cousins gets its going for Raiders. Kirk Cousins opened the 2026 season dealing. When he threw three touchdowns in last week's win over the Dolphins, the critique was his ineffectiveness on deep and intermediate passes (10-plus air yards). He rectified that against the Chargers, throwing all three of his TDs on deep and intermediate targets, going 8 of 12 for 181 yards on such attempts. One of those incompletions was an interception, but it was only due to Tre Tucker slipping on the route. Cousins, who will fool no one into thinking he's a mobile threat at this point, stood tall on multiple throws under duress, and he ably exposed Los Angeles' defense despite Las Vegas failing to piece together a running game -- Ashton Jeanty averaged only 2.3 yards per carry on 21 attempts. It wasn't all Cousins, of course. Tucker gave the Chargers secondary fits for his second-career 100-yard receiving game, and Cody White, elevated from the practice squad Saturday, caught two TDs. Defensively, fifth-round rookie Hezekiah Masses picked off Justin Herbert twice; Maxx Crosby had four pressures and necessitated a hold by Joe Alt in the end zone to give the Raiders a safety, which effectively ended the game late. Still, 38-year-old Cousins has been the biggest revelation for the Raiders, who are now 2-0 for the first time since 2021. Placeholder for Fernando Mendoza or not, Cousins is leading Las Vegas to victories.

McDaniels' offense is M.I.A. The Chargers fired offensive Greg Roman after scoring a combined 15 points in their last two playoff games and replaced him with Mike McDaniel, who was expected to elevate Los Angeles' offense to a new echelon as he did for several years coaching the Dolphins. That has not nearly been the result thus far. The Chargers have been held to 14 points in each of their opening losses. The operation was sloppy across the board on Sunday against Las Vegas. Much of the blame will rightfully be laid at Justin Herbert's feet. He fumbled the ball three times, half of the team's six times coughing it up -- although the Chargers only lost one of those. He wasn't able to find a rhythm early, which caused L.A. to turn to Omarion Hampton to get something going (15 carries for 70 yards in the first half), but when Hampton slowed during the final two quarters with 24 yards on another eight carries, the Chargers really quieted down. Herbert finished 15 of 27 for 192 yards, one touchdown, two interceptions and a 59.5 passer rating. There was ugliness everywhere, though. Herbert's first pick happened because David Njoku dropped the ball, and right tackle Joe Alt committed four penalties. Trailing by three and facing a third-and-1 toward the end of the third quarter, the Chargers self-sabotaged when Jake Slaughter accidentally snapped the ball into Tre Harris' legs as the receiver went in motion. Simply nothing went smoothly for the new-look Chargers offense.

Chargers must take hard look at themselves. It is not an overreaction to say the Chargers are in deep, deep trouble. They have looked that bad, and their upcoming schedule is that brutal. Los Angeles' offense, as mentioned, is in a state of disarray, and the defense has made far too many mistakes in the first two weeks against offenses that are not considered world beaters. Now winless heading into Week 3, the Chargers are set to face a murderers' row of opponents. They play the Bills, Seahawks, Broncos, Chiefs, Rams, Texans and Ravens over the next seven games, with a bye in Week 7. There are no easy games in the NFL, but Jim Harbaugh and Co. opened the season with a pair of matchups they were expected to dominate. Now, it's difficult to find their first win if they don't rapidly improve their quality of play.

Next Gen Stats Insight for Raiders-Chargers (via NFL Pro): Hezekiah Masses played a total of 26 coverage snaps, allowing two catches and 16 yards on six targets while recording two interceptions. Across 11 coverage snaps matched up with Quentin Johnston or Ladd McConkey, the rookie did not allow a catch.

NFL Research: Kirk Cousins is the second quarterback in Raiders history with three-plus touchdown passes in each of the first two games of a season, joining Ken Stabler in 1976. The Raiders went on to win the Super Bowl that season.

Six fumbles, zero excuses. Chargers frustrated by blunder-filled loss to Raiders
By Sam Farmer
September 20, 2026

The Chargers coughed up another winnable home game, falling 26-14 to the Raiders — the same score as last week's loss — as fourth-quarter breakdowns define Jim Harbaugh's 0-2 start.

A misfired third-and-inches snap, multiple fumbles and interceptions and costly Joe Alt penalties all played a role in the Chargers' loss.

What was supposed to be a soft opening for the Chargers now gives way to a brutal gauntlet: road games at Buffalo, Seattle and Kansas City, plus meetings with Denver and the Rams.
Once is a hiccup.

Twice is a habit.

Maybe this is what the Chargers are — lurching, sputtering and unable to consistently move the football, despite an offensive overhaul packed with lofty expectations.

Just as they did in their abysmal season opener, the Chargers struggled at home Sunday and failed to establish a rhythm on their way to a 26-14 loss to the Las Vegas Raiders.

The Chargers lost their opener to the Arizona Cardinals by an identical score — 26-14.

In another bit of sad synchronicity, both the Raiders and Cardinals won just three games and fired their coaches last season.

"Not deterred," said Chargers coach Jim Harbaugh, off to his first 0-2 coaching start in college or the pros. "No one in that locker room is deterred."

If so, the Chargers are showing far more determination off the field than on it. Because their play Sunday could buckle the resolve of even true believers.

This six-fumble fiasco saw the Chargers end drives in this frustrating staccato: missed field goal, punt, interception, punt, touchdown, punt, end of half, touchdown, punt, punt, fumble, interception, safety.

Not what the franchise had in mind when they brought in coordinator Mike McDaniel to fix the offense.

"It's tough," quarterback Justin Herbert said. "No one wants to lose two games, but there's nothing we can do about it."

We need to do better. We will do better. That was the theme in the somber locker room. But All-Pro safety Derwin James Jr. let the mask slip a bit.

“Hell yeah, we’re pissed, man,” he said. “Put in all this work in OTAs, training camp, to go out and lose? I want to get this [stuff] right.”

It won’t get any easier. The Chargers play at Buffalo on Sunday against the 2-0 Bills, who have scored a combined 77 points in victories over the Houston Texans and Detroit Lions.

After that, the Chargers play at Seattle, at home against Denver, at Kansas City, and against the Rams as rare visitors at SoFi Stadium. Four opponents, four Super Bowl-winning coaches.

These first two games were supposed to be the soft start, or at least a relatively gentle ramp-up to the thorny part of the schedule.

Well, that’s out the window. The Chargers were dominated by Arizona, then dropped another home game to the Raiders. As head coach of the Chargers, Harbaugh had won all four of his previous matchups against Las Vegas.

The Chargers last started 0-2 in 2023, when they went on to finish 5-12.

Sunday, the Chargers were unable to get the ball downfield and repeatedly committed penalties and miscues that short-circuited drives. For instance, normally sturdy tackle Joe Alt was flagged for false starts three times.

Another botched opportunity: Trailing by a field goal late in the third quarter, the Chargers had a third-and-inches on their side of the field. Herbert dropped back into shotgun and sent Tre’ Harris in motion from right to left. Then, they snapped the ball at the precise moment the receiver was between center Jake Slaughter and the quarterback. The snap bounced off Harris’ knee. Herbert had to pounce on the loose ball and the threat was thwarted.

The normally stoic Herbert couldn’t hide his frustration. He appeared to angrily yell before retreating to the sideline.

Later, with slightly less than four minutes remaining, when the Chargers seemingly had a bit of momentum. They had just gotten a first down on a Raiders penalty — 12 men on defense — and had inched across the 50.

Herbert handed off to Omarion Hampton on a draw, and the second-year back was met by linebacker Nakobe Dean and promptly fumbled — one of six on the day for the Chargers. Safety Jeremy Chinn scooped up the ball and returned it 43 yards to the 16.

Raiders fans at SoFi Stadium erupted in glee. For the Chargers, that singsong, taunting “Raiii-derrrs” chant will surely haunt their dreams. The TV cameras didn’t help matters, at one point finding a lone Chargers fan amid an ocean of Raiders fans, a blue dot bobbing in a silver-and-black sea.

Three plays later, Kirk Cousins found Cody White with an 11-yard pass, the second touchdown of the day for the erstwhile practice-squad receiver.

The final insult came on the Chargers' last possession when Alt drew a holding penalty while trying to stop pass rusher Maxx Crosby, resulting in a safety.

The Chargers took a 14-10 lead midway through the third quarter when Herbert connected with tight end Oronde Gadsden II for a 10-yard touchdown.

But the Raiders responded on the ensuing possession when Cousins threw a 13-yard touchdown pass to White to put Las Vegas up, 17-14.

A key play in that drive showed the creativity of Klint Kubiak, in his first season as coach of the Raiders. Cousins took the snap and pitched the ball to Ashton Jeanty, who in turn threw it back to Cousins.

The quarterback then hit a wide-open Dareke Young for a 27-yard gain, giving the Raiders the ball deep in Chargers territory.

The Raiders had their own glitches, including at the end of the opening quarter, when they had a first-and-goal from the four, yet couldn't score on four consecutive Jeanty runs.

The Chargers had a similarly frustrating moment in the first quarter when Herbert found tight end David Njoku behind the Las Vegas defense and delivered the ball for what should have been a big gain.

Njoku bobbled the pass, however, and the ball was grabbed by rookie safety Hezekiah Masses, who had another pick in the fourth quarter during his first career start.

Making matters worse, Njoku suffered a knee injury on the play and did not return.

"This is a team that has the competitiveness, they've got the fight," Harbaugh said of his players. "We've got the guys. We've got the coaches. We've got to find our way."

The options: Circle the wagons or circle the drain.

Alexander: Is Chargers' season already spiraling downward?
By Jim Alexander
September 20, 2026

Two sloppy home losses have left the Chargers with little margin for error before a daunting stretch against Buffalo, Seattle, Denver and Kansas City. The bigger question is whether this team can summon the urgency to change course.

INGLEWOOD – If you are a Charger, or a Charger fan, it only gets more difficult from here.

And from the outside, given the performances of the past two weeks – and, essentially, the idea that they've squandered one-fourth of their home schedule with a pair of games that were ineffective at best and in some ways closer to horrendously inept – this season's path already seems wobbly.

It is, in fact, trending dangerously toward being a lost season, and nothing the head coach or quarterback has said after these two games engenders any confidence that this is going to turn around soon.

To recap, the Chargers were embarrassed by Arizona in their opener last week. Sunday, against the team that used to be here years ago – and still has a hold on the hearts of thousands of Southern Californians – the Chargers looked clumsy, disjointed and unfocused, again, in a 26-14 loss to the Las Vegas Raiders.

Next week they play at undefeated Buffalo, which is 2-0 and has outscored opponents 77-62 in its first two games. From there, they get the defending Super Bowl champs in Seattle, play Denver at home and play at Kansas City. By the time they play the Rams on Nov. 1, following a bye week, they could be 0-6.

Platitudes (and we'll get to those) aren't going to help.

Consider this span of three bizarre plays late in the fourth quarter Sunday, with the Raiders clinging to a 17-14 lead and the Chargers, somehow, still in position to overtake them:

On a third-and-7 play at their own 40 with 4:49 left, Justin Herbert was sacked and fumbled, but teammate Tre' Harris recovered for a 6-yard gain. Then, going for it on fourth-and-1 at the 46, they caught a break from the opponent's inattention when the Raiders were penalized for having 12 men on the field.

And then, with a first-and-10 at the Raiders' 48, Omarion Hampton had the ball stripped from him by Nakobe Dean. Raiders safety Jeremy Chinn scooped it up and returned it 43 yards to the Chargers' 16, and three plays later, Vegas went in front 24-14 on Kirk Cousins' third touchdown pass of the game.

But this week was another cavalcade of Chargers' miscues. There were back-to-back false starts by tackle Joe Alt inside their own 10 early in the second quarter. And a shotgun snap on a third-and-1 play from their own 32 in the third quarter that glanced off Harris as he was going in motion; Herbert recovered that one, but the Chargers had to punt.

Again, just as a week ago, they played as if they were unfocused: Eight penalties for 45 yards, including three false starts (all by Joe Alt), three holding penalties (by Rashawn Slater, Kayode Awosika and Alt, the latter in the end zone and leading to a safety on the Chargers' final possession), an illegal use of the hands penalty (Cam Hart) and an illegal formation on their next-to-last possession.

There were six fumbles; they recovered five and the lost one led to the Raiders' touchdown noted above. Herbert was 15 of 27 passing for 192 yards, was intercepted twice, was sacked three times and had a quarterback rating of 59.5. (His opposite number, Cousins, had a 113.1 rating after throwing for 253 yards and three touchdowns).

And this offense that was supposed to be more dynamic under Mike McDaniel? It's averaging 14 points a game. That's not going to get it done.

So, how does a team respond? Publicly, at least, with clichés substituted for solutions.

"If we're not playing up to our standard, that's on us to fix that," Herbert said. "It's just on us to be better, to know what we're capable of doing, doing our job and making sure that we're putting our best product out there."

I asked him if there was any anger over this inability to meet the standard.

"No, I don't think so," he said. "I think it's not good enough, and there's a group full of grown men that can handle their job and they're gonna do everything they can to correct it and fix it, and we're gonna stick together and it's tough. No one wants to lose two games, but there's nothing we can do about it now, so we gotta get better and fix them."

At least Herbert this time didn't use the word "execute" in every other sentence, as he has tended to do at other times. It's likely that he'd never heard of the quip from decades ago by John McKay, the late USC coach, who, when asked about his team's execution, deadpanned, "I'm all for it."

Head coach Jim Harbaugh's responses to similar questions sounded similarly bland: "We'll look at the tape, we'll go back to work. That's all I know how to do, that's all we know how to do … find our way, find the way and we'll move forward. It's a one-week league, and that's the only thing I know to do."

You're not expecting game plan secrets in these postgame sessions, but something stronger, or at least more substantial, would be nice. Like, for example, this from offensive lineman Slater:

"I mean, I'd be lying if I said we look totally prepared out there. … You look at the plays and it's not all just the system. It's technique, technical errors, stuff like getting lined up. It's all kinds of errors."

Or this from linebacker Daiyan Henley:

"If this was 0 and 5 or 0 and something, yeah, we can talk a little bit more about it. But I don't think we're frustrated at all. I think we'll just motivated to get to next week. I mean, when you lose a game, you just want to get that feeling out of you where you want to get to the next game.

"… We all understand where we are in the season. And I mean if you go look back at past teams, there's plenty that have started off slow and got to where they want to go at the end of it. So if that says anything about what we can do right here with these guys and what we have in this locker room, that is what we are right now."

Given that the chances of an 0-2 team making the postseason seem pretty minuscule, perhaps that is (or at least should be) the theme in the Chargers' building going forward: Show the so-called experts, and beat the odds.

By Elliott Teaford
September 20, 2026

McConkey catches three passes for 35 yards against the Raiders Sunday despite a rib injury and having two teeth knocked out. David Njoku, Charlie Kolar, Dalvin Tomlinson and Kayode Awosika also leave the game with injuries.

INGLEWOOD — Wide receiver Ladd McConkey was the poster boy for all the pain the Arizona Cardinals inflicted on the Chargers' offense in Week 1. He suffered an injured rib when Arizona's Mack Wilson Sr. delivered a jarring hit that separated him from the football.

McConkey assumed a similar position in Week 2, with two teeth knocked out of his mouth during the Chargers' loss to the Las Vegas Raiders, a reminder of all the suffering he and his teammates absorbed during another lackluster loss to a team that was favored by oddsmakers to defeat.

McConkey caught five passes for 82 yards and one touchdown against Arizona.

He had another three receptions for 35 yards against Las Vegas.

Chargers coach Jim Harbaugh referred to McConkey as "Just a warrior."

Kind words, McConkey said when told of Harbaugh's comment, nice to hear.

"I appreciate that," McConkey said. "I appreciate my coach having my back."

Apparently, sitting out Sunday was not an option, though.

"You only get so many opportunities at this game, so if I can be out there, I'm going to be out there," said McConkey, who sat out once during his rookie season in 2024, when he set franchise records for first-year players with 82 receptions for 1,149 yards, and once last season.

Even if he had been 100% while playing against the Raiders, he couldn't have helped the Chargers' sputtering offense by himself. He did average 11.7 yards per reception, which included a 19-yard gain on a dart thrown by quarterback Justin Herbert in the second quarter.

The completion kept alive a possession that ultimately produced running back Omarion Hampton's 1-yard touchdown run that tied the score 7-7. Other targets were few and far between, however. Herbert was inconsistent at best while completing 15 of 27 passes for 192 yards.

"I feel like it's just that we're hurting ourselves a lot," McConkey said of an offense that fumbled six times, tossed two interceptions to go with eight penalties, including a holding call against right tackle Joe Alt while Herbert attempted a pass from his own end zone, resulting in a safety.

"I feel like once we can just start clicking, we'll get rolling. But nobody's happy with where we're at, so we're going to attack it."

INJURY REPORT

Tight ends David Njoku and Charlie Kolar were each forced from the game. Njoku sustained a knee injury and was carted from the field in the second quarter and Kolar suffered a forearm injury in the fourth. Harbaugh said he didn't have a postgame update on either player.

Defensive lineman Dalvin Tomlinson injured his hamstring near the end of the third quarter. Left guard Kayode Awosika hurt his leg and was forced from the game. Safety Derwin James Jr. injured his hand in the first half, but was able to continue in the game.

James had a team co-leading seven tackles.

"There were quite a few (injuries) that were reported, and that's all the information I have," Harbaugh said when asked for updates after the game.

Chargers sink to 0-2 after lackluster loss to Raiders
By Elliott Teaford
September 20, 2026

The Chargers lose 26-14 for the second straight week before a difficult stretch against Buffalo, Seattle, Denver and Kansas City. Omarion Hampton's late fumble helps Las Vegas pull away in the fourth quarter.

INGLEWOOD — This was supposed to be the easy part. Two lackluster opponents and then the difficult part of the schedule. Two expected victories to get things rolling. Two games to break in a new offensive scheme and a new defensive one, too. Two reasons for optimism for the Chargers.

Now what?

What do the Chargers do after losses to the Las Vegas Raiders on Sunday at SoFi Stadium and to the Arizona Cardinals on Sept. 13 by matching scores of 26-14? How can they recover going into the most difficult part of their schedule starting next Sunday against the Buffalo Bills?

"Work," Chargers coach Jim Harbaugh said.

Harbaugh didn't go into specifics despite repeated opportunities to do so.

"Execute," Chargers quarterback Justin Herbert said.

Herbert didn't dive into the details, either.

"I'd be lying if I said we look totally prepared out there because we're not executing," Chargers left tackle Rashawn Slater said, cutting to the heart of the matter after their offense sputtered for the second consecutive week under new offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel.

In fact, the Chargers looked like they should be wearing those "Hello, my name is … " sticky badges as they stumbled and fumbled their way to a second consecutive defeat. For starters, Herbert completed 15 of 27 passes for only 192 yards with one touchdown and two interceptions.

The Chargers also fumbled six times, including running back Omarion Hampton's game-altering fumble in the closing minutes of the fourth quarter, killing a potential go-ahead drive. The Raiders' Jeremy Chinn picked up the ball at his own 41-yard line and returned it to the Chargers' 16.

Two plays later, Las Vegas quarterback Kirk Cousins threw an 11-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Cody White, their second scoring connection of the game, with 2:59 remaining in the game. Cousins completed 19 of 29 passes for 253 yards and three touchdowns by game's end.

The Raiders led, 24-14.

Right tackle Joe Alt, who had been penalized for false starts on consecutive snaps with the Chargers backed up near their own goal line earlier in the game, was then called for holding while Herbert attempted a pass from his own end zone. The Raiders were awarded a safety.

Las Vegas led, 26-14, with 1:41 left.

Season on the brink?

“We have to find our way out of this,” Harbaugh said.

Asked why he believed the Chargers could rebound next week against the Bills, with the Super Bowl champions Seattle Seahawks up next and the AFC West champion Denver Broncos after that and the Kansas City Chiefs to follow before the bye week, Harbaugh sounded adamant that a turnaround was possible.

“The competitors, the fight,” he said. “You’ve got to fight your way out of it.”

The Chargers started with good intentions, but their opening possession stalled and Cameron Dicker was called upon to try a 58-yard field goal. His kick had the distance, but the ball struck the right upright and bounced away. It was a hint of things to come.

After a scoreless first quarter, Cousins threw a 40-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Tre Turner with 11:51 left in the half. Hampton’s 1-yard touchdown run capped a 10-play drive, pulling the Chargers into a 7-7 tie. Las Vegas took a 10-7 lead on Matt Gay’s 59-yard field goal with four seconds left in the half.

Herbert threw a 10-yard touchdown pass to tight end Oronde Gadsden to give the Chargers a 14-10 lead, their first of the season, with 9:49 left in the third quarter. Cousins then tossed touchdown passes of 13 and 11 yards to White, who was elevated from the practice squad before the game.

The Chargers’ defense under new coordinator Chris O’Leary had a second consecutive credible game, limiting the Raiders to 57 yards rushing on 29 attempts, for a puny average of two yards per carry. Top running back Ashton Jeanty rushed for 48 yards on 21 carries, an average of 2.3 yards.

Cousins did all the damage with his right arm, though.

The Chargers’ error-prone offense did not live up to its end of the bargain for the second game in a row. Hampton rushed for 94 yards and one touchdown on 23 carries. Herbert looked unsettled far too often, even with top receiver Ladd McConkey in the lineup after he hurt a rib against Arizona.

“We’re losing in the margins,” Harbaugh said after coaching his 100th game in the NFL. “That’s what we have to get fixed. We’ll go back and look at the tape. We’ll go back to work. That’s all I know how to do. That’s all we know what to do. We’ll find our way, find a way. We’ll move forward.”

Only 16% of NFL teams that started a season 0-2 went on to advance to the playoffs, so it’s going to take a great deal of work for the Chargers to get their game back in order.

THE ATHLETIC

Raiders start 2-0, Chargers fall to 0-2. Are we witnessing an AFC West role reversal?
By Sam Warren and Saad Yousuf
September 20, 2026

Klint Kubiak's Las Vegas Raiders are 2-0, and Jim Harbaugh's Los Angeles Chargers are in trouble.

Las Vegas traveled to L.A. and took down its AFC West division rival 26-14 on Sunday, taking advantage of a number of Chargers mistakes. L.A.'s much-hyped offense turned the ball over three times, including twice in the final four minutes.

The Chargers are 0-2 and face a daunting schedule over the next three weeks against the Buffalo Bills, Seattle Seahawks and Denver Broncos.

Meanwhile, playing a second straight game without star tight end Brock Bowers, the Raiders made it work offensively with wide receiver Tre Tucker putting up 119 receiving yards and fellow WR Cody White catching two touchdown passes.

After an impressive home win and solid Week 2 showing, is it too early to reset expectations for this Raiders team?

I'd say somewhat. The Chargers made a lot of mistakes in big situations, which helped the Raiders stay in the game throughout. After playing the Miami Dolphins last week, it's fair to say they haven't seen the best competition.

Las Vegas also had some big blunders that took points off the board, such as Tucker's stumble that led to Kirk Cousins' first quarter interception, and getting stuffed on four straight runs on the goal line. Add in a 12-men-on-the-field penalty before a key fourth-and-short snap, and it's clear the Raiders have things to clear up on both sides of the ball.

But the floor certainly appears to be raised for the Raiders. Cousins will keep them competent, and the defense is able to step up in big situations. They're not operating on the level of a top-tier NFL team, and it remains to be seen how they'd fare against one. But Kubiak has definitively improved this team, and it isn't among the league's worst like it was last year. — Sam Warren, Raiders beat writer

It was another uneven game for the Chargers offense. What's going on with Mike McDaniel's group?

Given a reputation from his days with the San Francisco 49ers, McDaniel's addition as offensive coordinator was expected to make the Chargers' offense more dynamic. Instead, it has looked sloppy through the first two games. Some of it is on the players and their execution — it's not McDaniel's fault that Brenen Thompson dropped a pass early and then David Njoku bobbled a potential big gain and turned it into an interception. But a lot also falls on McDaniel.

It's fair to wonder if McDaniel is getting too cute with his approach. In the fourth quarter, the Chargers had just 14 points and trailed by three. Ladd McConkey, who suited up despite dealing with a rib injury that took him out of last week's game, had just three targets, all of which he caught for 35 yards. Quentin Johnston led the team with five targets but had just one catch for 7 yards. Eight players had at least two targets, but only McConkey and Charlie Kolar had more than two catches.

There's something to be said about spreading the wealth, but it's on the offensive coordinator to identify the best players and take advantage of their skill sets. Outside of one drive last week that leaned on McConkey, and a drive on Sunday featuring Omarion Hampton, McDaniel hasn't done that consistently enough.

The Chargers also have avoidable issues with penalties, particularly false starts. Letting the ball hit the ground on the snap or on handoff exchanges should not happen at this level, and the number of fumbles (three on Sunday) are inexcusable. — Saad Yousuf, NFL staff writer

Most will see Maxx Crosby's swing-and-miss on Justin Herbert on a third-quarter Chargers TD and a zero in the sack column, but how did the star edge rusher look?

Crosby looked pedestrian on the stat sheet for the afternoon — he had just one tackle and one quarterback hit. But his presence definitely affected the Chargers' offense.

To start the second quarter, the Chargers were backed up near their own end zone. With the Raiders in a pass-rush situation, Crosby bore down on right tackle Joe Alt, who was clearly thinking about Crosby when he flinched on consecutive plays to earn false starts. The penalties derailed the drive and helped put the Raiders in good field position to set up their first touchdown.

Then in the fourth quarter, with the Chargers driving, Crosby forced Alt into another false start. Crosby also had the final word on the game: Alt held him in the end zone to prevent a sack, resulting in a safety. Crosby showed he can still close out games, but with improved weapons throughout the defense, maybe he doesn't need to be the only one to do so. — Warren

It's early, but how much panic is there for this Chargers team two weeks in?

At 0-2, the 2026 season could already be slipping away from the Chargers. They started the season with home games against the Arizona Cardinals and Raiders, who tied (along with New York Jets and Tennessee Titans) for the NFL's worst record in 2025. Aside from the Kansas City Chiefs in Week 6, the Chargers don't face another non-playoff team from last season until Week 10, when they play the Ravens in Baltimore.

It's too early to know which teams will emerge (or underachieve) compared to last season, but the Chargers have looked like one of the worst teams in the NFL through two weeks. — Yousuf

The Raiders were counting on Brock Bowers to be the focal point of their passing offense. How did Kirk Cousins throw for 253 yards without him?

In their Week 1 win over the Dolphins, the Raiders relied on Ashton Jeanty to pace the offense. The Chargers were prepared for him Sunday, holding Jeanty to 2.3 yards per carry. Given the absence of Bowers, that shouldn't have boded well for the Raiders, but their much-maligned receiving group stepped up.

Tucker had two catches of 40-plus yards, including the game's first score, and consistently stretched the field. Dareke Young also had a big catch on a trick play in the third quarter. And White, who the Raiders signed to their practice squad on Sept. 1 and elevated for a second straight week, caught two TDs, including the one that sealed the game.

Yes, there were coverage busts by the Chargers' secondary. But the receivers stepped up when they needed to, and this group proved they can hold their own when needed. — Warren

NFL Week 2: Takeaways, questions, fantasy spin for Sunday games
By NFL Nation
September 20, 2026

In the early window of NFL Week 2 on Sunday, last week's offensive explosion seemed like a thing of the distant past.

Five teams failed to reach double-digits points, including both the Bears and Vikings at a rainy Soldier Field. The Panthers forced five turnovers against the Falcons, while the Patriots cemented their win over the Steelers with a fumble return for a touchdown. The highest-scoring matchup of the early window (44 points) came between the Titans and Eagles, which ended on a game-winning touchdown grab by Philly's Darius Cooper.

The scoring picked up in the late window Sunday, as the Cowboys and Commanders combined for 57 points. However, Washington lost QB Jayden Daniels to an elbow injury in the second quarter -- hours after Chicago lost QB Caleb Williams to a right hamstring injury. Meanwhile, the 49ers dominated the Dolphins in their first game back from Melbourne, Australia. And the Seahawks won their second straight game with backup quarterback Drew Lock.

The night game featured a wild ending, but ultimately the Kansas City Chiefs improved to 2-0 with an overtime thriller over the Indianapolis Colts.

Our NFL Nation reporters reacted to all the action, answering lingering questions coming out of each game and detailing everything else you need to know for teams that played Sunday. Fantasy football analysts Matt Bowen and Tristan Cockcroft also have fantasy takeaways from each matchup. Let's get to it.

Raiders

How have the Raiders fared without TE Brock Bowers? Last year, the Raiders' offense fell apart when Bowers sustained a knee injury in Week 1. This year has been different. Las Vegas has been without Bowers (knee) for two weeks and has managed to make things work, which is a testament to coach Klint Kubiak. On Sunday, wide receiver Tre Tucker caught five passes for 119 yards and a touchdown. Las Vegas had eight players record a reception, including wide receiver Cody White, who had two touchdown catches. With Bowers expected to return for Week 3, the optimism for this offense grows higher.

What to make of the QB performance: After Kirk Cousins raised concerns about his ability to generate explosive passing plays, he let the ball fly at SoFi. On attempts of 10-plus air yards, Cousins completed 8 of 12 passes for 181 yards, three touchdowns and an interception. He had two completions for more than 40 yards each, including a 40-yard touchdown pass to Tucker. Cousins might not sling the ball like this every week, but at least he showed that he's still capable. -- Ryan McFadden

By Kris Rhim

INGLEWOOD, Calif. -- Jim Harbaugh paused.

It was shortly after the Los Angeles Chargers' 26-14 loss to the Las Vegas Raiders on Sunday, and a reporter had asked about the Chargers' offense, which struggled for the second week in a row. As Harbaugh answered the question, he stopped while a loud and fervent Raiders chant blared in the background.

It's unclear whether Harbaugh, who often pauses at random times in his news conferences, was doing so because of the chant or whether he even heard it. Nonetheless, the moment was a cruel reminder of how quickly things have changed for the Chargers.

"We'll look at the tape. We'll go back to work. That's all I know how to do," Harbaugh said as the chants continued.

Coming into this season, ESPN's Football Power Index gave the Chargers the fifth-highest odds to win the Super Bowl. And Sunday's game was supposed to be a bounce-back opportunity for a team hoping to contend.

After last week's loss to the Arizona Cardinals, during which the Chargers' offense fell flat and the team's passing defense was picked apart, coaches and players preached a similar tune, echoing the words "uncharacteristic" and "sloppy." They were firm that the opener wasn't reflective of who they were.

Sunday's loss to the Raiders refuted that sentiment: six fumbles, eight penalties, three turnovers. An offense that, for the second week in a row, looked helplessly lost, and a defense seemingly outschemed again.

"It's just on us to be better," quarterback Justin Herbert said.

The Chargers' mishaps Sunday were plenty.

Offensive tackle Joe Alt, a Pro Bowler last season, was flagged four times, three for false starts and one for a hold in the end zone that resulted in a safety. Alt is the first player with three false start penalties in a game since Matt Pryor in 2020 and the first Chargers player since Marcus McNeill in 2011 to have four accepted penalties.

"Sometimes, it happens," Alt said. "I thought I saw what I saw, and I didn't. Got to be better."

A late snap on a third-and-1 in the third quarter that hit wide receiver Tre' Harris as he was motioning across led to an outburst from Herbert that was among the most animated of his career. An Omarion Hampton fumble in the fourth quarter essentially ended the game.

Then, there was a bobbled pass by tight end David Njoku that led to an interception. The only receiver who consistently posed a threat to the defense again was Ladd McConkey, who was playing limited snaps because of a rib injury. He tied for the team lead in receptions with three and had 35 receiving yards.

On the other side of the ball, a defense that was too often out of position in the secondary surrendered another 250-plus-yard passing game.

It was a similar script to last week's loss, but even worse. Still, the Chargers remain steadfast that this isn't who they are.

"I'm not deterred," Harbaugh said. "No one in that locker room is deterred."

Though Herbert echoed Harbaugh's comments, he acknowledged that there needs to be a sense of urgency in fixing their issues on offense.

"There's no time for us to be patient with how we're playing," Herbert said. "It's not good enough, so we have to be better."

Raiders quarterback Kirk Cousins, who was without All-Pro tight end Brock Bowers, threw for 253 yards and three touchdowns, including two to Cody White, who was elevated from the practice squad for the game. White had one touchdown in his career before Sunday.

"We got to look each other in the eye, man, and just tell the truth, and just get better," James said. "Because right now, that s--- just looks trash.

"I'm angry, but being angry don't fix anything."

Outside linebacker Khalil Mack, who returned to the Chargers for his 13th season with the hopes of winning a title, was so frustrated after the game that he didn't remember Harbaugh's speech.

"Honestly, I was blanked out the whole time; I don't really know," Mack said of Harbaugh's message. "My mind was on the game still.

"It's right there for us, man," he continued. "I feel like we doing a lot of things to hurt ourselves right now. And so once we get those things fixed, it'll look a lot better."

Chargers TE David Njoku leaves game with knee injury
By Kris Rhim
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. -- Los Angeles Chargers tight end David Njoku exited Sunday's game against the Las Vegas Raiders in the second quarter on a medical cart with an injury to his right knee.

The Chargers officially listed Njoku as questionable to return.

Njoku appeared to get injured while blocking for running back Omarion Hampton. The entire team came out on the field to give Njoku well wishes as he exited.

It wasn't the only Chargers injury on the day, as safety Derwin James exited the game in the first quarter with a hand injury. In his absence, the Chargers allowed a 40-yard touchdown to wide receiver Tre Tucker. James, however, returned to the game with a cast on his left hand.

The Chargers signed Njoku to a one-year deal in May after he spent his first nine seasons with the Cleveland Browns.

With Njoku out, the Chargers will lean on tight ends Oronde Gadsden and Charlie Kolar. Patrick Herbert, a practice squad player who is the brother of quarterback Justin Herbert, could also see time if Njoku's injury is long term.

Njoku had six receptions for 67 yards through two games with the Chargers.

Chargers' Justin Herbert is off to a rough start under new coordinator Mike McDaniel
By Doug Padilla
September 20, 2026

INGLEWOOD, Calif. (AP) — Two games into the season, the returns aren't promising for the Chargers and quarterback Justin Herbert under new offensive coordinator Mike McDaniel.

Herbert struggled for the second straight week on his home field — this time in front of a hostile crowd — as Los Angeles fell to 0-2 with its second 26-14 loss this season, this time to the Las Vegas Raiders.

Herbert was 15 of 27 for 192 yards with two interceptions and fumbled three times, although the Chargers recovered all three. Los Angeles fumbled six times on the day, losing one.

In his debut with McDaniel — who spent the previous for seasons as head coach of the Miami Dolphins — calling the plays, Herbert threw for a modest 209 yards with a touchdown and a pick in a loss to Arizona.

Known as a passer who has put up big numbers in the regular season but struggled in the playoffs, Herbert doesn't even have statistics on his side so far in 2026.

"There's a room full of grown men that can handle their job and they're going to do everything they can to correct it and fix it," Herbert said. "We're going to stick together. It's tough. No one wants to lose two games but there's nothing we can do about it now."

Translating what Herbert considers to be productive practices into game success would be a step in the right direction.

"We just have to be better," Herbert said. "That's not good enough and we can't expect to win games when we're playing like that."

Herbert wasn't completely to blame. Chargers receivers dropped three passes in the first half, including a bobble by David Njoku that ended up as an interception by the Raiders' Hezekiah Masses.

Herbert's second interception came with less than three minutes remaining and Los Angeles trailing 24-14. The Raiders tacked on a safety when Chargers right tackle Joe Alt was called for holding in the end zone with 1:46 left.

That sent the pro-Raiders crowd — the franchise called Los Angeles home from 1982-94 and maintains a strong Southern California fan base — into a frenzy.

Alt was supposed to supply stability for the passing game after playing just six games last season because of an ankle injury that required surgery. He was called for four penalties Sunday.

The addition of free-agent center Tyler Biadasz was also expected to help a beleaguered offensive line, but he was lost in training camp with a knee injury.

Coach Jim Harbaugh will look to fix the offensive line and his team's other problems before next weekend game at unbeaten Buffalo.

"The 'why' is what we'll be talking about," Harbaugh said. "We'll look at the tape. We'll go back to work. That's all I know how to do. That's all we know how to do. Find the way and we'll move forward. It's a one-week league."

5 Takeaways: Chargers Vow to be Better After 0-2 Start
By Eric Smith
September 20, 2026

The Chargers will look to bounce back in the second game of the season.

The Chargers are now 0-2 after a 26-14 home loss to the Raiders on Sunday.

1. Searching for answers

The Chargers just look ... off.

And two games into the 2026 season, the Bolts have now dropped both contests to drop into an 0-2 defecit.

"All three phases," Khalil Mack said. "We're doing a lot of things to hurt ourselves.

"Pretty much beating ourselves back-to-back weeks," Mack added. "Can't do that in this league in order to have success. Got to get everything corrected and get ready for the next one."

The Chargers lost Sunday's game to the Raiders by the same score as they did to Arizona a week ago.

Still, Chargers Head Coach Jim Harbaugh and multiple players in the locker room expressed belief that the Bolts could get this turned around quickly.

"Not deterred. Nobody in that locker room is deterred," Harbaugh said. "I liked the way we fought and that's what it's going to take to fight our way out of this."

Ladd McConkey added: "It's a long season. This is Game 2, obviously if we drew it up we wouldn't want to be here at 0-2. We got 15 regular-season games left, we have to get right back on track and get rolling. We'll be alright."

And while there were some positives Sunday, the Chargers simply couldn't get into a 60-minute rhythm to secure their first win.

The Bolts are on the road in Week 3 as they travel to Buffalo to take on the 2-0 Bills.

"It's about continuing to battle back and get back to work," Joe Alt said.

Derwin James added: "I'm angry, but being angry doesn't fix anything. Being angry doesn't fix the problem that we have. We have to get it fixed. I feel like we're a couple of plays away, it's not like we're getting blown out. But we have to win these games, there's no reason we're going out there playing like that."

2. Offense hampered by miscues

When the Chargers hired Mike McDaniel as their Offensive Coordinator in January, it was easy to picture the unit putting up plenty of points and yards.

But through two games, one stat that has defined the offense is turnovers.

The Chargers committed three turnovers Sunday and potentially could have had more.

Justin Herbert was intercepted in the first quarter, although that takeaway didn't lead to points as the Bolts defense came up with a goal-line stand.

The Bolts were then hurt by a pair of fourth-quarter turnovers as Omarion Hampton fumbled when the offense, trailing by three points, had just crossed midfield.

"I have to take care of it, put both hands on the ball and be better for my team," Hampton said.

Herbert was then intercepted on the Chargers ensuing drive.

All in all, the Chargers were credited with six total fumbles in the game, although Hampton's was the only one that was lost.

Perhaps the most critical one came late in the third quarter when the Bolts had third-and-1 at their own 32-yard line.

Herbert sent Tre' Harris in motion but Jake Slaughter's snap hit the wide receiver in the leg.

Although Herbert recovered, the Bolts were forced to punt.

"It was a big play for us and we didn't execute," Herbert said.

Harris added: "I tried to jump over it and get us a clean look. It was unfortunate what happened."

3. A look at the defense

The Raiders managed just 305 yards of offense, including a meager 57 rushing yards on 29 carries.

Raiders running back Ashton Jeanty had 21 carries for just 48 yards, good for an average of 2.3 yards per attempt.

But if there was one area that hurt the Bolts Sunday, it was a handful of explosive passing plays allowed.

The Raiders first touchdown came on a 40-yard pass to wide receiver Tre Tucker.

Tucker later hauled in a 42-yard reception late in the second quarter that led to a 59-yard Raiders field goal.

And a 27-yard pass to Dareke Young led to another Las Vegas touchdown that gave the Raiders a lead they wouldn't give up.

"Definitely big plays," James said when asked about the defense's performance. "It's the gotta-have-it's, the fourth downs, it's the before-the-half and not letting them get the points.

"You got to be good situationally on defense," James added. "It don't matter what the fire is, you have to put it out."

4. Offense out of sync

Here is one way to sum up the current state of the Chargers offense.

Joe Alt, one of the NFL's best offensive linemen, was called for three false starts and a holding penalty Sunday.

The holding penalty occurred in the end zone late in the fourth quarter, giving the Raiders a safety with less than two minutes remaining.

"Personally, I have to work on the false starts," Alt said postgame. "Got to be better."

Now, Alt is not the reason the Chargers lost Sunday.

Harbaugh said he's "looking at it all," meaning every phase of the roster.

But Alt's performance encapsulates that McDaniel's offense is going through a trying time.

In short, the offense simply isn't clicking on all cylinders.

"We didn't execute," Rashawn Slater said. "It's frustrating … we're not finishing drives, so many self-inflicted wounds.

"We're shooting ourselves in the foot. You're never going to win like that. We need to fix that," Slater continued.

He later added: "It's technique, technical errors, stupid stuff like getting lined up. It's all types of errors."

5. Penning fills in at guard

Trevor Penning played both guard spots in Week 2.

The veteran played one series at right guard in the first half on a drive that ended with a 1-yard touchdown run.

Harbaugh said postgame that starting right guard Cole Strange was "in being evaluated."

While Strange returned to the game after that, Penning later played the majority of the second half at left guard after Kayode Awosika suffered a fibula injury.

"Not a situation the team wants by losing your starting guard. I was ready, that's part of the job," Penning said. "Be ready when unfortunate things happen."

"I've been working at both [guard spots] all camp," Penning added.

Game Recap: Chargers Drop Week 2 Contest to Raiders
By Eric Smith
September 20, 2026

The Chargers dropped a Week 2 game to the Raiders on Sunday, falling 26-14 at home.

Here's a game recap from Week 2.

Turning Point
The Bolts have put themselves in a hole to start the 2026 season.

Down by three at the half, the Chargers showed plenty of life coming out of the break by forcing a punt and then putting together a touchdown drive.

The Chargers went 74 yards in seven plays before Justin Herbert found Oronde Gadsden for a 10-yard touchdown pass to put the Bolts up 17-14.

But the Bolts couldn't sustain the momentum as the Raiders scored on their ensuing possession to take a 17-14 lead.

The Chargers offense couldn't re-take the lead, punting twice before fumbling late in the fourth quarter after they had already crossed midfield.

The turnover set the Raiders up inside the red zone, which led to an 11-yard touchdown pass that helped Las Vegas ice the game.

The Chargers trailed 10-7 at the half after each team had some miscues in the opening two quarters.

The Raiders took a 7-0 lead before the Chargers responded with a 1-yard touchdown run from Omarion Hampton.

Before that, each quarterback threw an interception while the Raiders were also stuffed on fourth-and-goal from the 1-yard line.

Top Play
Down by a field goal early in the third quarter, the Bolts were facing a crucial third-and-5 from their own 42-yard line.

The play was the longest of Harris' career so far.

The Chargers have started 0-2 for the first time since 2023.

Chargers TE David Njoku carted off with knee injury
By Myles Simmons
September 20, 2026

Njoku was carted off the field after suffering a knee injury early in the second quarter.

The veteran tight end went down after a second-down run.

Njoku caught five passes for 58 yards in last week's loss to Arizona.

The Chargers are also dealing with an injury to veteran safety Derwin James, who is questionable to return with a hand issue.

2026 NFL season, Week 2: What We Learned from Sunday's games

Bobby Kownack's takeaways:

Cousins gets its going for Raiders. Kirk Cousins opened the 2026 season dealing. When he threw three touchdowns in last week's win over the Dolphins, the critique was his ineffectiveness on deep and intermediate passes (10-plus air yards). He rectified that against the Chargers, throwing all three of his TDs on deep and intermediate targets, going 8 of 12 for 181 yards on such attempts. One of those incompletions was an interception, but it was only due to Tre Tucker slipping on the route. Cousins, who will fool no one into thinking he's a mobile threat at this point, stood tall on multiple throws under duress, and he ably exposed Los Angeles' defense despite Las Vegas failing to piece together a running game -- Ashton Jeanty averaged only 2.3 yards per carry on 21 attempts. It wasn't all Cousins, of course. Tucker gave the Chargers secondary fits for his second-career 100-yard receiving game, and Cody White, elevated from the practice squad Saturday, caught two TDs. Defensively, fifth-round rookie Hezekiah Masses picked off Justin Herbert twice; Maxx Crosby had four pressures and necessitated a hold by Joe Alt in the end zone to give the Raiders a safety, which effectively ended the game late. Still, 38-year-old Cousins has been the biggest revelation for the Raiders, who are now 2-0 for the first time since 2021. Placeholder for Fernando Mendoza or not, Cousins is leading Las Vegas to victories.

McDaniels' offense is M.I.A. The Chargers fired offensive Greg Roman after scoring a combined 15 points in their last two playoff games and replaced him with Mike McDaniel, who was expected to elevate Los Angeles' offense to a new echelon as he did for several years coaching the Dolphins. That has not nearly been the result thus far. The Chargers have been held to 14 points in each of their opening losses. The operation was sloppy across the board on Sunday against Las Vegas. Much of the blame will rightfully be laid at Justin Herbert's feet. He fumbled the ball three times, half of the team's six times coughing it up -- although the Chargers only lost one of those. He wasn't able to find a rhythm early, which caused L.A. to turn to Omarion Hampton to get something going (15 carries for 70 yards in the first half), but when Hampton slowed during the final two quarters with 24 yards on another eight carries, the Chargers really quieted down. Herbert finished 15 of 27 for 192 yards, one touchdown, two interceptions and a 59.5 passer rating. There was ugliness everywhere, though. Herbert's first pick happened because David Njoku dropped the ball, and right tackle Joe Alt committed four penalties. Trailing by three and facing a third-and-1 toward the end of the third quarter, the Chargers self-sabotaged when Jake Slaughter accidentally snapped the ball into Tre Harris' legs as the receiver went in motion. Simply nothing went smoothly for the new-look Chargers offense.

Chargers must take hard look at themselves. It is not an overreaction to say the Chargers are in deep, deep trouble. They have looked that bad, and their upcoming schedule is that brutal. Los Angeles' offense, as mentioned, is in a state of disarray, and the defense has made far too many mistakes in the first two weeks against offenses that are not considered world beaters. Now winless heading into Week 3, the Chargers are set to face a murderers' row of opponents. They play the Bills, Seahawks, Broncos, Chiefs, Rams, Texans and Ravens over the next seven games, with a bye in Week 7. There are no easy games in the NFL, but Jim Harbaugh and Co. opened the season with a pair of matchups they were expected to dominate. Now, it's difficult to find their first win if they don't rapidly improve their quality of play.

Next Gen Stats Insight for Raiders-Chargers (via NFL Pro): Hezekiah Masses played a total of 26 coverage snaps, allowing two catches and 16 yards on six targets while recording two interceptions. Across 11 coverage snaps matched up with Quentin Johnston or Ladd McConkey, the rookie did not allow a catch.

NFL Research: Kirk Cousins is the second quarterback in Raiders history with three-plus touchdown passes in each of the first two games of a season, joining Ken Stabler in 1976. The Raiders went on to win the Super Bowl that season.

'We hit people in the mouth.' How the Saints defense kept Lamar Jackson, Ravens in check.
By Matthew Paras
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE — The play that best summed up the relentlessness of the New Orleans Saints' defense in Sunday's 24-17 upset win over the Baltimore Ravens was the unit's final one.

Rushing from the inside, rather than off the edge, Carl Granderson spun around Ravens rookie guard Vega Ioane to get a clear path to Lamar Jackson. The two-time MVP quarterback, sensing the pressure, let it fly. The problem? Jackson had little time to set up his throw.

The ball sailed over Rashod Bateman's head, landing right in the hands of Saints safety Julian Blackmon.

"Pheeew," defensive end Chase Young said, sighing in relief. "Literally. Phew."

Young may have been put at ease seeing the Saints clinch a statement-defining upset victory, but it was the Ravens who had it the toughest.

After putting up 41 points in an electric season debut a week ago, Baltimore was held to just 17 points against New Orleans — only three in the second half. The Saints' physicality, both at the line of scrimmage and in the secondary, appeared to wear down a Ravens unit that initially seemed on pace for another breezy afternoon.

But nothing was easy for Baltimore. Not for Jackson, who completed less than half of his second-half passes (8 for 15 for 65 yards). Not for star running back Derrick Henry, who went from averaging 4.6 yards per carry to 3.4 after halftime. Not for anybody.

Just the way the Saints planned.

"We are a physical group, bruh," Saints safety Justin Reid said. "This is one of the most physical defenses — and I pride myself on my physicality — that I've been a part of. We come downhill. We hit people in the mouth. And it wears on them as the game goes on.

"We gave up, what, three points in the second half? Unbelievable performance, man."

The Ravens, to be fair, were missing star receiver Zay Flowers because of a hamstring injury. But that hardly looked like a problem early. In the first half, the Ravens strung together lengthy drives, relying on their bread and butter. Henry consistently put them in favorable down-and-distances. Jackson wiggled free, finding his targets downfield. Bateman and tight end Mark Andrews looked well-equipped to make up for Flowers' absence.

But as the game folded, Reid said he started to notice a "crack in the armor." He first observed it when Granderson got a hand up to block Tyler Loop's 49-yard field goal attempt, although the Ravens would go on to easily score on their ensuing drive. But that play, he thought, started to shift the momentum.

But that play, he thought, started to shift the momentum.

“I feel like Staley doesn’t get enough credit,” Saints wide receiver Chris Olave said, referring to defensive coordinator Brandon Staley. “He puts the players in a great position to succeed.”

“They did a great job with limiting the explosives,” Henry told reporters in Baltimore’s locker room. “They did a great job of being where they needed to be and for those not to occur.”

For Saints coach Kellen Moore, perhaps the most impressive aspect of Sunday’s defensive performance was that the unit never got rattled when Jackson made plays.

And that was true even in the second half. In the third quarter, he Ravens had reached the red zone — only to get knocked out of the area on a huge third-down sack from Young and settling for a 49-yard field goal. And on the final drive, the Ravens quickly reached New Orleans’ 37-yard line — but Granderson and Blackmon came through.

“Our guys just didn’t stop,” Moore said.

That’s been a theme for the Saints’ defense over the last two seasons. And on Sunday, that relentlessness helped earn them their biggest win in the Moore and Staley era.

Rod Walker: Saints get signature win over Ravens, showing how special 2026 could be
By Rod Walker
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE — The New Orleans Saints silenced some noise Sunday.

They silenced, at least for a week, the skeptics who weren't so sure if second-year coach Kellen Moore has his team pointed in the right direction.

And they silenced the "white noise," which is what the Baltimore Ravens called their home opener.

But the story of this game wasn't the white that the Ravens and their fans wore at M&T Bank Stadium.

This game was all about the white flag that these 2026 Saints simply refuse to wave, even when times get tough.

For the second straight week, the Saints dug themselves in a deep hole.

For the second straight week, they dug themselves out of it. This time they finished the job, stunning the Ravens 24-17 to earn the biggest victory of the Kellen Moore-Tyler Shough era. This could be a defining moment in the Moore-Shough era, one of those wins you look back on years from now and talk about how it changed everything. That's what can happen when you go on the road and get a signature win over a team that will be in the Super Bowl mix.

"I think this game reaffirms everything that we thought and believed," said Saints guard David Edwards. "It's never going to be perfect. But if you continue to play and don't worry about the score or the circumstances and you just keep playing, good things will happen."

This game, just like last week's season opening loss on the road to the Detroit Lions, was far from perfect. The Saints' offense struggled out the gate again, settling for a pair of first half field goals. They have yet to score a touchdown in the first half. But they scored when they needed to in the fourth quarter to steal a win and raise the expectations.

When the NFL released the schedule in May, pretty much everyone (including me) predicted the Saints would be 0-2 after two weeks. Starting the season on the road at Detroit and Baltimore wasn't going to be easy. Just don't try telling that to this gutsy bunch of guys who don't blink when times get tough.

And times got tough Sunday. They trailed 14-3 late in the second quarter and didn't seem to have an answer for the Ravens' dynamic duo of quarterback Lamar Jackson and running back Derrick Henry. Things got even more bleak on the second drive of the third quarter, when left tackle Kelvin Banks had to be carted off with an ankle injury. But none of that fazed a team that just a week before rallied from a 21-0 deficit to force overtime before falling to the Lions.

Where does the resiliency come from?

"Our guys are really close," Moore said. "Our guys are really connected. All the stuff you do all offseason is for these moments when things aren't going great for you. Our guys aren't looking at each other frustrated. They are looking at each other saying we are going to find a solution and find a way."

Now if they can just find a way to play an entire game the same way they play in the third and fourth quarter. The NFL doesn't give extra credit for how you win. So forget about the style points and instead look at what a win like this can do.

"I think it's just a momentum-builder," center Erik McCoy said. "We came to a tough place, and we were down early. We stuck together and we finished. Togetherness. The fact that we did training camp in New Orleans and we had those three joint practices. We've been through the fire."

When you're going through a fire, it's much easier when you have a guy like Shough to douse the flames. Shough shows poise when the Saints need it most. Shough (27 of 34, 252 yards, TD) out-dueled fellow University of Louisville alum and two-time MVP Lamar Jackson (21-31, 235, TD). It helps having a defense that continues to shine. They held Henry to 68 yards rushing, including just 17 in the second half.

"This win gives us confidence," said safety Julian Blackmon, whose interception in the final minute sealed the win. "We got off to a rocky start last year, so being able to beat a team that's really good at home gives us a lot of encouragement going into the home game next week."

As it should.

The Saints don't have a team remaining on their schedule as good as the one they faced Sunday. Chris Olave, so instrumental in this win, called it the best victory since being drafted in 2022.

"I feel like since I've been here, we haven't really beat a good team," Olave said. "It's been tough for us to be able to battle against good teams or great teams that make the playoffs every year. Baltimore is a contender. To be able to battle, to show our resilience and come in here and get a W is huge for us. We've got to carry it over into next week."

The last time the Saints felt this good two weeks into a season was in 2024, when they blasted the Carolina Panthers and Dallas Cowboys in back-to-back weeks. We all remember how that turned out. They lost seven straight games after that, leading to the firing of Dennis Allen nine weeks into the season.

This version of the Saints feels different. This is a team that can handle the expectations that come with a monumental Week 2 win.

They will be favored in their next two games against the Las Vegas Raiders and Atlanta Falcons. Those two games will be in the Superdome, where the noise from the black and gold faithful should be much louder than the white noise that became dead silent when the clock struck zero Sunday at M&T Bank Stadium.

"When the crowd got silent at the bank, we're taking withdrawals," said veteran Cam Jordan. "We love it."

There was plenty to love about a win of this magnitude. And with the grittiness this team continues to show, there just night be plenty to love all season long.

NFL official explains why the league confirmed Tyler Shough's controversial fourth-down TD
By Matthew Paras
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE — Moments after the call confirmed Tyler Shough's fourth-down, game-winning touchdown in Sunday's 24-17 win for the New Orleans Saints, the pro-Baltimore Ravens crowd began chanting an obscenity to show their displeasure.

But much to their dismay, the NFL said the initial ruling stood because Shough wasn't clearly down when he was shoved across the goal line.

"The key here is the ruling on the field is a touchdown," NFL vice president of instant replay Mark Butterworth told a pool reporter. "So we need clear and obvious video evidence that he didn't score in order to reverse the ruling.

"We stopped the game, it's a high-leverage play, we wanted to make sure to either find clear and obvious video evidence that he didn't score or to confirm the call on the field. We exhausted all available angles and could not prove clear and obvious that he did not break the plane of the goal line."

In other words, if Shough was initially ruled down instead of in, that same judgment call would have likely stayed the same.

Butterworth did not address, nor was he asked about, what appeared to be a clearly missed facemask penalty during the play. With 1:28 left in the game, a Ravens defender appeared to yank quarterback Tyler Shough's facemask as the quarterback was pushed in the pile.

The lack of a penalty, which the league's replay review could not change, perhaps explains why Saints coach Kellen Moore laughed and said he should "be quiet" when initially asked about the play.

Shough said the play "hurt a little bit," but that he was "able to get in there."

"We'd like to not make it as close, but I think that's definitely something to look at," Shough said. "I mean, I was going to reach for it, but get your head pulled off, it's tough."

Sunday marked the second straight week that the league's vice president of instant replay had to chime in on a ruling made during a Saints game. Last week, the league overturned a play that took a sack-fumble touchdown away from the Saints after determining Lions quarterback Jared Goff started his throwing motion.

During Sunday's interview with the pool reporter, Butterworth asked whether Shough lost control of the ball at any point while trying to get it across the goal line.

"No," Butterworth said. "If he did lose control of the ball, we would need to find, after he regained possession, if the ball broke the plane of the goal line. In that mass of players, we weren't able to find clear and obvious video evidence that the ball did not break the plane of the goal line.

"Therefore, the ruling on the field stands."

Inside the locker room as a fired-up Kellen Moore addressed his Saints after win over Ravens
By Rashad Milligan
September 20, 2026

New Orleans Saints head coach Kellen Moore was all smiles in the locker room after the team's 24-17 victory over the Baltimore Ravens on Sunday.

"Listen up! We went in this game talking about, 'Hey, the most physical team,'" Moore said. "That's a really good team. They're going to play a bunch of meaningful games this year. That was a really good job of preparing ourself, handling the ups and downs of a game. OK? There's some ups, there's some downs, there's some stuff we have to get better at, but awesome resiliency."

The resiliency Moore refers to is from New Orleans' eight-point comeback in the second half against the perennial AFC contender. For the second week in a row, the Saints stormed back in the second half to contend with one of the NFL's elite teams. Last week resulted in defeat, while the group was rewarded a victory this week.

"Loved the way we prepared, loved the way we competed," Moore said. "These words, 'Go for it.' That's what we live by. OK? All three phases, we're going for it."

Last week's loss ended in a failed two-point conversion attempt for New Orleans against the Detroit Lions. If the Saints went for the extra-point kick, then the score would've been tied, and near the end of overtime, the game might have ended in a tie. This week, the team went for two again. This time, the attempt came as they trailed the Ravens by two points in the second half. The attempt, after a Baltimore penalty, was successful, and later in the fourth quarter, a goal-line sneak from quarterback Tyler Shough became the winner.

"You guys believe in yourself, you believe in each other? Every opportunity, go for it," Moore said. "We keep going for it; we're going to be right where we need to be."

Jeff Duncan: Three things we learned from the Saints' upset victory over the Ravens
By Jeff Duncan
September 20, 2026

The New Orleans Saints stunned the Baltimore Ravens 24-17 at M&T Bank Stadium on Sunday to even their record at 1-1 on the season.

The Saints outscored the Ravens 18-3 in the second half as they fought back from deficits of 14-3 and 17-9. Tyler Shough capped the win with a 1-yard TD in the final 2 minutes.

The finish was dramatic and controversial

Tyler Shough's game-winning 1-yard touchdown sneak will be highly discussed this week. Replays appeared to show that Shough was stopped short of the goal line by the Ravens defense on his 1-yard sneak on fourth-and-1 inside the final 2 minutes. However, Shough was stopped short for good reason: a Ravens defender grabbed his face mask and pulled him backwards in a clear infraction that was missed by officials.

After a replay review, officials upheld the call of a touchdown on the field, ultimately avoiding what would have been a complicated and controversial ruling.

It was the right call because Shough almost surely would have scored if he was not being pulled backward by the helmet. In the end, the officials made the best of a complicated and potentially dicey situation.

Shough was special again

For the second consecutive week, Shough orchestrated a furious second-half comeback with near-flawless execution in the second half. This time, though, his heroics resulted in a victory.

Shough dissected the Ravens defense throughout the second half, leading the Saints on nine- and 16-play touchdown drives in the fourth quarter to complete the comeback.

For the game, he completed 27 of 34 passes for 252 yards and a 107.4 passer efficiency rating. He added 23 rushing yards on nine carries.

In a first-ever NFL matchup of ex-Louisville quarterbacks, Shough outdueled Lamar Jackson to hand the Ravens their seventh loss in their last 10 home games.

Shough was 12 of 14 for 119 yards with a passing and rushing touchdown in the fourth quarter, making him only the second Saints quarterback in the last 10 seasons to have 100-plus passing yards, a passing touchdown and a rushing touchdown in the fourth quarter. Trevor Siemian (2021 vs Eagles) was the other, per ESPN Research.

Special teams kept the Saints in it

It's been a while since the Saints have had a special-teams performance as good as this one.

All facets of the teams contributed to the win.

Veteran kicker Daniel Carlson was 3 for 3 on field goal attempts, converting from 23, 47 and 51 yards.

Barion Brown returned a kickoff 53 yards to set up one of Carlson's field goals just before halftime.

Without the special play from the Saints' special teams, they wouldn't have been in position to make their second-half rally.

Tyler Shough delivered more 4th-quarter heroics, and this time it ended in an upset win
By Luke Johnson
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE — The nickname coaches bestowed upon Tyler Shough this week was supposed to land with a wink and a nod, like a good-natured poke in the ribs.

They called him “Poor Man,” referencing Baltimore Ravens defensive coordinator Anthony Weaver calling Shough a “poor man’s Josh Allen.” Weaver meant it as a compliment, comparing Shough to an NFL MVP. Everybody, Shough included, understood that.

But, just maybe, there was a little bit of a there there. An unintended slight.

“I know what he meant by it; obviously (Allen) is an elite player,” Shough said. “But it fires me up.”

Shough carried the Saints to a thrilling fourth-quarter comeback, leading his team to a 24-17 win against one of the NFL’s premier football teams on the road. It was the second consecutive week that Shough provided some magic late in the game, except this one came with a real victory instead of a moral one.

To be clear, Shough did not go at it alone. The comeback was only viable because of the contributions throughout the roster and coaching staff.

The New Orleans defense clamped down after an up-and-down first half and delivered the winning play in the game’s closing moments when Julian Blackmon intercepted former NFL MVP Lamar Jackson. Special teams decidedly went in New Orleans favor, with kicker Daniel Carlson going a perfect 3-for-3 on field goals, rookie Barion Brown adding a crucial 53-yard kick return and defensive end Carl Granderson blocking a field goal.

But the NFL has proven itself over and over again to be a league of haves and have-nots. Those who have a great quarterback enjoy the spoils. And it was Shough, again and again, dragging the Saints to the finish line.

“I think it just reconfirms Tyler is just going to keep going for it,” coach Kellen Moore said. “That is just the way he plays. There are highs and lows in games. There are things that go our way, (there are) things that do not go our way, and he just keeps going.”

The Saints struggled to run the ball again. Their excellent young left tackle, Kelvin Banks, left the game in the third quarter with an ankle injury and did not return. Their quarterback didn’t blink — even as Baltimore threw everything it had at him.

Late in a tie game, staring into the teeth of the Ravens formidable pressure, Shough stood tall in the pocket and delivered a strike to his trusted tight end on third-and-8.

It was a zone blitz. Baltimore showed six pass rushers at the snap, but two linemen dropped into a zone shortly after the start of the play. Shough took a massive hit from former Saints pass rusher Trey Hendrickson as he released the ball, but he released it true. Juwan Johnson hauled it in, broke two tackles, and rumbled for 25 yards to the Baltimore 5-yard line.

"We had a good play call, I knew I was going to be hot and Juwan did a really good job being friendly there," Shough said. "I was able to dump it off to him, and he just made the play with his legs."

Four plays later, Shough pushed the ball across the goal line himself on a fourth-and-1 sneak to give the Saints a lead for good. The play did not come without controversy — replay reviews did not definitively show Shough getting in, but also showed Shough's head getting torqued by an aggressive face-mask grab from linebacker Roquan Smith.

When the play stood, the defense had to hold up one last time against Jackson. The electric Ravens quarterback looked like he had some magic of his own ready, needing four plays to push the ball to the Saints' 37. But, with 20 seconds remaining, the Saints pass rush forced an errant throw, and Blackmon was the only one with a chance at a play. He picked it off easily to seal the win.

After the game, Saints pass rusher Chase Young described what he was feeling in the moment with an exaggerated, "Whew!"

It was just the latest example of what could be with Shough under center. A week after he nearly directed the Saints to a dramatic come-from-behind win against the Detroit Lions, Shough proved to the football-watching public that he and the Saints aren't going anywhere.

Shough finished 27 of 34 for 252 yards and a touchdown through the air and added 23 yards and a touchdown on the ground. New Orleans converted eight of its 15 third downs, many of which required Shough to dance around traffic before finding a target.

It wasn't a perfect game. The Saints got off to a slow start again, falling behind 14-3 with 24 seconds to go in the first half. They allowed Jackson to throw for 171 first-half passing yards, and future Hall-of-Fame running back Derrick Henry looked poised for yet another big day with 73 total first-half yards and a touchdown.

But the Saints defense turned the screws on the Ravens attack, limiting Henry to 17 rushing yards and Jackson to 64 passing yards, respectively, in the second half.

That was more than enough for Shough to provide the heroics — and probably to shed his well-intentioned nickname.

Chris Olave, who turned in another big game (eight catches, 86 yards and a touchdown), doesn't think his quarterback needs to be compared to anybody else anyway.

By Rashad Milligan
September 20, 2026

New Orleans Saints offensive tackle Kelvin Banks was carted off the field after suffering an injury against the Baltimore Ravens on Sunday afternoon.

The injury appeared to be in the lower leg, and the Saints officially ruled him out with an ankle injury after he was taken back to the locker room.

Four-year pro Asim Richards stepped in to replace Banks after the injury. Richards played over 250 snaps last season.

Banks was the No. 9 overall pick for the Saints in the 2025 NFL Draft.

Ravens fade amid Tyler Shough comeback. Did Saints expose issues for Jesse Minter's team?
By Jeff Zrebiec
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE, Md. — Second-year quarterback Tyler Shough led two fourth-quarter touchdown drives to help lift the New Orleans Saints (1-1) to a 24-17 come-from-behind victory over the Baltimore Ravens (1-1) inside a stunned M&T Bank Stadium on Sunday.

Baltimore led 17-9 after three quarters, but for the second straight week, Shough showcased his comeback ability.

He connected with wide receiver Chris Olave for a 21-yard touchdown with 9:42 to go, which cut the Ravens' lead to 17-15. Then, after a defensive holding penalty on the two-point conversion try awarded New Orleans a second attempt, Travis Etienne scampered in to tie the game.

After the Saints defense forced a three-and-out, Shough again led his team downfield on a 16-play, 68-yard drive, capping it off with a 1-yard touchdown on a quarterback sneak with 1:28 remaining.

The Ravens' defense struggled to get stops at critical times, allowing the Saints to score on five of their final six drives. And Lamar Jackson was picked off by Saints safety Julian Blackmon on the Ravens' final possession, handing Jesse Minter his first loss as Baltimore's head coach.

The Ravens will next face the Dallas Cowboys in Rio de Janeiro in Week 3, while the Saints will host the Las Vegas Raiders.

Shough showed composure and made plays in the fourth quarter. What do you make of how the second-year QB played against Baltimore's defense?
Shough was impressive. The Saints started pretty conservatively on offense, running the ball a lot and throwing quick, short passes. But Shough, as the game went along, gave the Saints plenty of reasons to open things up.

He took care of the ball, made good decisions and was elusive with his legs to get out of trouble. He never looked rattled, even when the Saints got behind by two scores in a hostile environment. He's obviously shown early in his career that the moment is not too big for him.

Shough's performance on third downs and late in the game is exactly what you want to see out of a young quarterback. — Ravens reporter Jeff Zrebiec

The Saints' defense allowed just three points in the second half. Why did the Ravens struggle to score when it mattered most?

Too many penalties and too many negative plays. The penalties were an issue in Week 1 against the Indianapolis Colts, but the Ravens played well enough in all three facets to overcome them. They didn't Sunday.

Their special teams were shaky, getting a field goal blocked and allowing a long kick return late in the second quarter that led to a Saints field goal. Defensively, the Ravens struggled to get off the field on third down all day. The offense looked good in flashes, but you can't keep putting yourself in second- and third-and-long and expect to mount long drives.

"Things just don't go our way sometimes at the wrong time," Jackson said. "That's what I believe. We just have to tighten up."

For all the praise he got last week, it's also fair to scrutinize offensive coordinator Declan Doyle. Not running the ball on third-and-1 in a tie game midway through the fourth quarter when you have Derrick Henry in the backfield is an interesting choice.

"We're going to ride with 'Dec' whatever he calls," Henry said. "We just have to go and make the play. Obviously, we didn't. He called a shot, wanted to take a shot. It just didn't work out this time. We're going to do whatever we need to do to be better next time." — Zrebiec

With Zay Flowers out, Rashod Bateman has his best statistical game since 2024. How encouraging was it to see him and Jackson regain chemistry?
Bateman (seven receptions, 88 yards, one touchdown) certainly needed a performance like this. He was held without a catch in Baltimore's explosive offensive performance in Week 1, and the wide receiver, long a target for fan discontent during an injury-marred and inconsistent career, spent the week hearing about his lack of early production. Jackson also insisted that he and Bateman have a strong rapport.

At some point, there needs to be some consistent proof of that, and Sunday was a good start. Flowers isn't certain to play next week, either. If the Ravens are going to be as explosive offensively as they expect to be, they will need more production from receivers not named Flowers. — Zrebiec

After the way the game ended, how concerned are you about this Ravens team?
Ravens fans won't want to hear this, but this was a performance straight out of last year. Minter talked all summer about his team being at its best when its best is required, and the Ravens certainly weren't Sunday, particularly on defense.

Allowing two fourth-quarter touchdown drives when you hadn't allowed a touchdown all game is a brutal ending and conjures memories from 2025. It's only two weeks, but this certainly doesn't paint a great picture.

"We just can't let games like this slip away," Ravens defensive lineman Calais Campbell said. "We have too many of the right pieces." — Zrebiec

What did the officials say about the review on Shough's game-winning QB sneak?
Shough had two shots at a quarterback sneak inside the 1-yard line to put the Saints ahead. After the first was unsuccessful, Saints coach Kellen Moore opted to run the same play on fourth down.

The push on fourth down wasn't great up front, but Shough managed to squeeze through for the score — at least according to the officials on the field. After a long review, the call stood, although it certainly looked like the Ravens might've had a case for a stop.

"The key here is the ruling on the field is a touchdown," NFL vice president of instant replay Mark Butterworth said in the pool report. "So, we need clear and obvious video evidence that he didn't score in order to reverse the on-field ruling.

"We stopped the game, it's a high-leverage play, we wanted to make sure to either find clear and obvious video evidence that he didn't score or to confirm the call on the field. We exhausted all available angles and could not prove clear and obvious that he did not break the plane of the goal line."

Adding intrigue to the call: A Ravens defender had obviously pulled back Shough by his facemask on the play, but the officials missed it, and the penalty went unflagged. Had the touchdown call been overturned, the missed facemask could not have been flagged retroactively upon review.

So, a week after a controversial review went against the Saints while they were playing the Detroit Lions, New Orleans caught a break. And a big win. — Matt Schubert

NFL Week 2: Takeaways, questions, fantasy spin for Sunday games
By NFL Nation
September 20, 2026

In the early window of NFL Week 2 on Sunday, last week's offensive explosion seemed like a thing of the distant past.

Five teams failed to reach double-digits points, including both the Bears and Vikings at a rainy Soldier Field. The Panthers forced five turnovers against the Falcons, while the Patriots cemented their win over the Steelers with a fumble return for a touchdown. The highest-scoring matchup of the early window (44 points) came between the Titans and Eagles, which ended on a game-winning touchdown grab by Philly's Darius Cooper.

The scoring picked up in the late window Sunday, as the Cowboys and Commanders combined for 57 points. However, Washington lost QB Jayden Daniels to an elbow injury in the second quarter -- hours after Chicago lost QB Caleb Williams to a right hamstring injury. Meanwhile, the 49ers dominated the Dolphins in their first game back from Melbourne, Australia. And the Seahawks won their second straight game with backup quarterback Drew Lock.

The night game featured a wild ending, but ultimately the Kansas City Chiefs improved to 2-0 with an overtime thriller over the Indianapolis Colts.

Our NFL Nation reporters reacted to all the action, answering lingering questions coming out of each game and detailing everything else you need to know for teams that played Sunday. Fantasy football analysts Matt Bowen and Tristan Cockcroft also have fantasy takeaways from each matchup. Let's get to it.

Saints
How will the Saints fix their slow starts? The Saints put themselves into an early hole for the second week in a row, but it worked out this time with some second-half heroics. The slow starts on offense are becoming a pattern under coach Kellen Moore. According to ESPN Research, this is the Saints' fourth straight game without putting up points in the first quarter. It's their second-longest streak in the past 10 seasons and the longest since they went five straight games in 2021.

Trend to watch: According to ESPN Research, the Saints were 5-of-8 on third-and-long conversions (at least 7 yards) before scoring the go-ahead touchdown at the end of the game. The Saints might start slow, but they've already shown an ability in the past few weeks to make key conversions, particularly between Tyler Shough, Chris Olave and Devaughn Vele. -- Katherine Terrell

Best quote from the locker room: Olave on whether this is one of the best wins he's ever had: "I feel like since I've been here, we haven't really beat a good team. I feel like it's been tough for us to be able to battle against good teams or great teams that make the playoffs every year. Baltimore, like I said, is a contender in the AFC. So just be able to battle, be able to show our resilience, be able to come in here and get a W was huge for us and we got to carry it over to next week." -- Katherine Terrell

NFL Week 2 eye-popping stats from Eagles, Pats, Jets, Bears
By Ben Solak
September 20, 2026

Week 2 is in the books! A little less exciting than Week 1 if you're a fan of offense; only 440 points had been scored through Sunday afternoon's games, whereas 702 had been posted by this time last week. If you're a fan of fumbles, be sure to tune in; there have been 82 fumbles through the first two weeks of the NFL season so far. Though, if you are a fan of fumbles, consider becoming a fan of something else.

Every Sunday, I'll find several of the coolest advanced stats from the day's NFL action to share with you. Some call them NFL Next Gen Stats. I call them Next Ben Stats: the data that might not make it on the broadcast but will make you a smarter fan (and laugh a little bit, probably).

Let's start with the statement day from Eagles quarterback Jalen Hurts.

32.9%: The Saints' offensive success rate in the first half, which is 29th leaguewide. They're 27th in EPA per play and in yards per play, as well.

And what about the second half? Great question. Including overtime, they are eighth in success rate (50%), sixth in EPA per play and 11th in yards per play.

It's too early yet to say what exactly is happening. Is Kellen Moore and his offensive staff cooking up excellent second-half adjustments? That's part of it. Is quarterback Tyler Shough settling down once defenses capitulate into softer coverages when protecting second-half leads? That is absolutely part of it. How about getting to use all four downs to string together a series? Yep. The Saints are 4-for-4 on fourth down, and all of them have come in the fourth quarter or later.

The Saints are now 1-1 with two second-half comebacks under their belts. Those are great experiences for a young team, which will never count itself out of a game for the rest of the season. But the Saints need to find a way to get early offense. The offseason investments in the running game (RB Travis Etienne Jr. and G David Edwards) have yet to show up. The heavy reliance on WR Chris Olave (second in the league in receiving yards with 268) feels fragile, as he doesn't have a great injury history.

Still, I like what I've seen from Moore. Shough is stringing together enough plays -- though he does have to cut down on the sacks -- and the Saints are cooking something on offense.

Tyler Shough, dubbed 'poor man' by Saints, leads win vs. Ravens
By Katherine Terrell
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE -- Baltimore Ravens defensive coordinator Anthony Weaver tried to pay New Orleans Saints quarterback Tyler Shough a compliment last week by referring to him as a "poor man's Josh Allen."

The Saints coaches turned it into a joke, dubbing Shough "poor man" for the rest of the week.

"I loved it. I knew what he meant by it, but yeah, obviously he's an elite player, but it fires me up," Shough said after the Saints' 24-17 win over the Ravens.

While the "poor man" portion of Weaver's comments went viral, he was trying to make a point that Shough impressed him last year when New Orleans played Miami, where Weaver was the defensive coordinator. Shough threw two touchdown passes in that game.

"Has all the arm talent in the world [and] can run. I don't think he gets enough credit for how good [of] an athlete he is," Weaver said. " ... I just think the more reps he gets, the more confident he's going to get in that scheme and with the talent around him. I think they have done a good job of trying to build the talent around him. They have tremendous skill players. I think they have upgraded their offensive line from when I saw [them] a year ago. So, sky's the limit for the kid."

Shough turned the tables on the Ravens late in the fourth quarter Sunday, scoring a go-ahead touchdown on a quarterback sneak on fourth-and-goal with 1:32 left. The touchdown, which put the Saints up 24-17, was confirmed after officials said they could not find clear evidence on replay that he had not broken the plane of the goal line.

Allen's 11 fourth-quarter passing and rushing touchdowns are the most since Week 10 of last season. But Shough is not far behind, with his 10 such touchdowns trailing only Allen in that span.

As of the end of Sunday's early games, Shough led the league with 662 passing yards, was tied for fifth with three passing touchdowns and was tied for fourth with one rushing touchdown.

"You know how social media be, but it's not really motivation, man. People try to compare people all the time, but I feel like Tyler's one of one," Saints wide receiver Chris Olave said. "He's making a name for himself in his league and by the end of the year, I feel like he's going to be one of the top quarterbacks."

Saints LT Kelvin Banks Jr. carted off with ankle injury
By Katherine Terrell
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE -- New Orleans Saints left tackle Kelvin Banks Jr. (ankle) was ruled out of Sunday's 24-17 win over the Baltimore Ravens in the fourth quarter.

Banks was carted off the field after landing awkwardly on his ankle on a third-and-19 play that resulted in Tyler Shough being sacked. Banks appeared to grab his left ankle and did not get up. He was attended to by the medical staff before getting on a cart and leaving the game.

"It always hurts when we lose guys," Saints coach Kellen Moore said after the game. "Guys compete and Kelvin's got an ankle. We'll see what this thing looks like tomorrow."

Tyler Shough and the Saints produce two big drives at the end to topple the Ravens 24-17
By Noah Trister
September 20, 2026

BALTIMORE (AP) — Twice in a row, Tyler Shough disappeared into a pile of bodies at the goal line with the game tied late in the fourth quarter.

Officials ruled he was stopped on third down and scored on fourth — it could well have been the reverse — and that was good enough for the New Orleans Saints.

Shough scored on a fourth-down sneak with 1:28 remaining, and the Saints rallied to a 24-17 win over the Baltimore Ravens on Sunday. After Shough didn't score on third down, New Orleans elected to go for it on fourth instead of kicking for a three-point lead. The second sneak was called a touchdown, and that decision was upheld after a review.

"It's a hard play on the goal line because ... sometimes they lose sight of the football. I think it's a challenging play for everyone," Saints coach Kellen Moore said. "Fortunate for us to get that. Obviously we're going to go for it in that situation. Chance to score a touchdown. If not, we're forcing them to be on the minus-1 and go the long way."

New Orleans (1-1) had first down from the 2 before a penalty and a costly incomplete pass allowed Baltimore — with only two timeouts left — to stop the clock after the next two plays. Shough finally scored on a 1-yard sneak.

The Ravens, who didn't have a first down on either of their previous two drives, made it to the New Orleans 37, but Lamar Jackson's deep pass was intercepted by Julian Blackmon with 13 seconds left.

Baltimore had a 17-9 lead and forced a three-and-out with sacks by Trey Hendrickson and Mike Green. That gave the Ravens the ball at the New Orleans 49 late in the third quarter with a chance to make it a two-score game.

But Baltimore went backwards 16 yards and punted, then the Saints drove to tie it with 9:42 remaining on a 21-yard touchdown pass from Shough to Chris Olave. After a penalty on the Ravens (1-1) moved the 2-point conversion to the 1-yard line, Travis Etienne Jr. ran the ball in to make it 17-all.

After another Baltimore three-and-out — Jackson curiously threw long on third-and-1 and his pass to Chris Moore was broken up by Kool-Aid McKinstry — the Saints took over at their own 32 with 8:06 remaining.

"A play that we liked, thought we had a shot there for an explosive," Ravens coach Jesse Minter said. "Obviously, didn't work out, so it's always going to be, you know, looking at it after the fact."

New Orleans then drove about as methodically as possible, converting two third downs and two fourth downs to seize the lead.

"We'd like to not make it as close," Shough said.

The Saints had to sweat out a review on the touchdown.

"We exhausted all available angles and could not prove clear and obvious that he did not break the plane of the goal line," Mark Butterworth, NFL vice president of instant replay, told a pool reporter.

Baltimore beat Indianapolis 41-23 in Minter's debut as coach, but in Week 2 the Ravens did many of the things that got John Harbaugh's staff fired, collapsing in the fourth quarter and dropping yet another home game. Baltimore was 3-6 at M&T Bank Stadium last season.

The Ravens were without top receiver Zay Flowers against the Saints. Baltimore did have offensive linemen Ronnie Stanley and John Simpson after their status was in question, but Stanley (toe) left the game in the second half.

Derrick Henry opened the scoring with a 1-yard run in the first quarter for Baltimore. After the Saints decided to kick a field goal on fourth-and-3 from the 5, Baltimore drove 80 yards and took a 14-3 lead on Jackson's 22-yard scoring strike to Rashod Bateman with 24 seconds left in the half.

Barion Brown's 53-yard kickoff return set up a New Orleans field goal before the end of the second quarter, and the Saints started the third with another three points on a 51-yard kick by Daniel Carlson. Tyler Loop connected from 49 for the Ravens to make it 17-9.

Saints go down to the wire, again

New Orleans lost in overtime at Detroit in Week 1 when its attempt at a game-winning 2-point conversion failed. This one came down to a huge play near the goal line as well.

The Saints trailed 21-0 in the second half before rallying to force OT against the Lions. Against the Ravens, they had 10 first downs to Baltimore's two in the fourth quarter.

"Our guys stuck with it all the way to the end, both games," Moore said. "For both games to come down to one opportunity at the end, one possession, it's a good experience for our guys."

Injuries

In addition to Banks, the Saints lost cornerback Martin Emerson Jr. to a shoulder injury.

Fearless New Orleans Saints rally again in second half, defeat Ravens for first win of season
By John DeShazier
September 20, 2026

Baltimore — Scared money doesn't make money, and if the New Orleans Saints have shown nothing else in the first two weeks of the regular season, it's that they're not scared money in the 2026 season.

A week after going for a two-point conversion and the win in an overtime road loss to Detroit, Saints coach Kellen Moore rolled the dice on fourth-and-goal from the 1 with 92 seconds left in a 17-17 game against the Ravens at M&T Stadium in Baltimore.

"Fortunate for us to get that. Obviously was gonna go for it in that situation — a chance to score a touchdown, (and) if not, we're forcing them to be on the minus one and go the long way," Moore said. "But it felt like we could get it done there."

Quarterback Tyler Shough strained, muscled and was shoved across the goal line plane — a call that withstood the replay official's review — and that score stood as the game winner when safety Julian Blackmon intercepted Lamar Jackson's pass at the Saints' 7-yard line with 13 seconds left.

New Orleans (1-1) offered another riveting performance and this time, all three phases played a significant role as the Saints eliminated the turnovers (from three against the Lions to none Sunday) and shrunk the penalties to five, for 35 yards.

Shough completed 27 of 34 passes for 252 yards and a touchdown, ran for 23 yards and a touchdown and received big-time assistance from his offensive line (which lost left tackle Kelvin Banks Jr. to an ankle injury with 2:02 left in the third quarter), receiver Chris Olave (eight catches for 86 yards and a touchdown) and tight end Juwan Johnson (four catches, 66 yards), who made several critical catches in the second half.

Defensively, the Saints sacked the elusive Jackson three times (1.5 by edge rusher Chase Young), held the Ravens to a field goal in the second half and clamped down for four quarters: A week after the Ravens posted 41 points and 500-plus yards, they were limited to 17 and 312.

"I just thought our relentlessness at the defensive line, the edge position, the linebackers blitzing — our guys didn't stop. Lamar is gonna make plays. He's one of the most talented quarterbacks in this league. He's a phenomenal player (and) he makes a lot of plays," Moore said. "You can't get discouraged when he makes a play. You just gotta keep going for it and I thought that's what our guys did."

On special teams, Daniel Carlson made all three field goal attempts (23, 47 and 51 yards), rookie receiver Barion Brown had a 53-yard kickoff return to set up a field goal that pulled New Orleans to within 14-6 at halftime, and recently-signed long snapper Scott Daly was flawless in his Saints debut.

All in all, it was the kind of performance — on the road, against a quality opponent — that the Saints have believed themselves capable of rendering since they began OTAs.

As was the case in the opener against the Lions, New Orleans trailed by one score at halftime; 14-6 against the Ravens after 7-0 versus the Lions. And, again defensively, New Orleans did what it could to keep an explosive offensive off the scoreboard.

But Brown returned the kickoff 53 yards to the Baltimore 44-yard line, Shough ran for 2 yards and completed a 13-yard pass to Devaughn Vele to set up Carlson's 47-yard field goal as time expired in the half.

Both Shough and Jackson were precise in the first half; Shough completed 12 of 15 for 102 yards, and Jackson connected on 13 of 16 for 171 yards and the touchdown. Vele caught three passes for 53 yards in the half.

The Saints helped bottle themselves up with three penalties (for 25 yards), and three plays that were tackled for loss. One of those was a fumbled toss attributed to Shough, but recovered by running back Travis Etienne Jr. for a 7-yard loss.

Those errors mainly disappeared in the second half, when the Saints outscored Baltimore 18-3 and scored on three of four possessions — two touchdowns, a two-point conversion run by Etienne and a field goal from Carlson.

By Charean Williams
September 20, 2026

Ravens defensive coordinator Anthony Weaver unintentionally gave Saints quarterback Tyler Shough a new nickname last week. Weaver called Shough a "poor man's Josh Allen."

Weaver meant it as a compliment. Saints coaches, though, began referring to Shough as "Poor Man" the rest of the week.

"I loved it. I knew what [Weaver] meant by it, but yeah, obviously [Allen] is an elite player, but it fires me up," Shough said, via Katherine Terrell of ESPN.

Shough threw for two touchdowns against Weaver's Dolphins defense last season in the Saints' 21-17 loss. On Sunday, Shough ran for a touchdown and threw for a touchdown in a 24-17 victory over the Ravens.

Since Week 10 of last season, Shough has 10 fourth-quarter passing and rushing touchdowns, per Terrell. Allen leads the league with 11 in that timespan.

"He's making a name for himself in his league and by the end of the year, I feel like he's going to be one of the top quarterbacks," wide receiver Chris Olave said of Shough.

Saints rally for 24-17 upset of Ravens
By Charean Williams
September 20, 2026

The Saints fell behind the Lions 21-0 in the season opener but rallied to force overtime. They lost on a failed 2-point conversion.

They trailed the Ravens 14-3 in the first half and 17-9 in the second. They did not lose.

The Saints outscored the Ravens 14-0 in the fourth quarter as Shough threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to Chris Olave and ran for a 1-yard touchdown on fourth down with 1:28 remaining. The Saints outgained the Ravens 137 to 43 in the fourth quarter, with Baltimore getting only two first downs.

In four possessions in the second half, the Ravens got no closer to the end zone than the Saints 31.

Shough's touchdown run was reviewed and upheld on replay. Two downs earlier, replay upheld officials' on-field ruling that tight end Juwan Johnson came up just short of the goal line on a diving attempt after a reception from Shough.

The Saints still had to hold off the Ravens, and Lamar Jackson got Baltimore to the New Orleans 37 with 20 seconds left. Saints safety Julian Blackmon intercepted Jackson on a desperation throw toward Rashod Bateman at the 7.

Shough went 27-of-34 for 252 yards and a touchdown and ran for 23 yards and a touchdown on nine carries. The Saints rushed for only 65 yards on 27 carries.

They were 8-of-15 on third down and 2-of-2 on fourth.

The Ravens, who had 228 yards at halftime, finished with 312 yards. Jackson was 21-of-31 for 235 yards with a touchdown and an interception, and he ran for 34 yards on four carries.

Derrick Henry ran for 68 yards and a touchdown on 16 carries, and Bateman caught seven passes for 88 yards and a touchdown.

Saints LT Kelvin Banks carted off with ankle injury
By Charean Williams
September 20, 2026

Saints left tackle Kelvin Banks was carted off the field in the third quarter Sunday.

With 2:20 remaining in the quarter, Banks got rolled up on by Ravens pass rusher Trey Hendrickson as Mike Green sacked Saints quarterback Tyler Shough.

The Ravens lead 17-9.

2026 NFL season, Week 2: What We Learned from Sunday's games
By Around the NFL Staff

24 Saints | 17 Ravens

Nick Shook's takeaways:

Saints battle back again. For a second straight week, the Saints found their offensive mojo in the second half of a road contest. Unlike Week 1, they finished the job and can thank their ascending quarterback for leading them to victory. Tyler Shough's final stat line included just one touchdown pass and wasn't nearly as prolific as his 410-yard output against Detroit, but the second-year passer consistently made clutch plays to keep the Saints moving. He spread the ball well all afternoon, connecting with Devaughn Vele seven times and once again leaning on Juwan Johnson in crunch time. Most importantly -- and most impressively -- Shough put his own body on the line late in the fourth, sneaking it twice and getting bent back awkwardly on his fourth-down rushing score, holding on to the ball just long enough to break the plane despite being contorted by a crowd of Ravens defenders. If we've learned anything about these Saints in two weeks, it's that they're scrappy, remarkably tough and refuse to give up. Their quarterback is the embodiment of it and the reason they won Sunday.

Ravens let one slip away. All of the buzz regarding Declan Doyle's offense was justified after a Week 1 explosion, and for a half of football Sunday, it remained true. Derrick Henry and Lamar Jackson keyed an impressive, balanced touchdown drive that ended with a Henry rushing score out of the wildcat formation, and Jackson's composure in an end-of-half touchdown drive (which he capped with a pretty scoring toss to Rashod Bateman) had the Ravens in the driver's seat entering the intermission. The second half didn't follow the same script, though, and Baltimore can question its offensive approach when reviewing what went wrong. The Ravens handed the ball to Henry just five more times in the second half (for 17 yards) and seemed to lose their offensive identity, leaving Jackson as their best remaining hope to keep the offense moving forward. New Orleans sensed the opportunity, generating pressure on Jackson and undercutting Baltimore's offensive momentum, opening the door for their second half comeback that theoretically could have been slowed by a couple of long possessions. The ending -- a Jackson interception on a pass to an area Bateman never reached -- only capped a frustrating and disappointing finish for a team that will need to learn from this defeat.

Shough, Olave have something special. Chris Olave was the star of New Orleans' Week 1 comeback and proved to be Tyler Shough's favorite target in Week 2, making timely catches throughout Sunday's contest on his way to an eight-catch, 86-yard finish. In just two weeks, it seems as though Shough knows where to turn when he needs a completion most, and Olave is consistently making difficult catches all over the field while earning extra yards with his footwork and willingness to fight through contact. Olave's emergence was much needed in Kellen Moore's offense and has fostered one of the most entertaining and productive QB-WR connections in the NFL through two weeks. Naturally, when Shough dropped to pass with the Saints needing a touchdown in the fourth, it was Olave who sifted through the defense, found open space and caught a perfectly placed rope from Shough for the score. Jordyn Tyson's injury dampened the spirits of the Saints' passing potential entering 2026, but Olave has unquestionably made up for it through two weeks.

Next Gen Stats Insight for Saints-Ravens (via NFL Pro): Tyler Shough completed 10 of his 13 attempts against the blitz for 113 yards, a career-high mark, while also going 17 for 21 for 139 yards and a touchdown when facing four or fewer rushers.

NFL Research: The Ravens led the NFL with 14 losses when leading by 10-plus points at any point in a game under John Harbaugh from 2020-2025, and now pick up their first such loss under head coach Jesse Minter.

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

In the blood: Football journey leads Klint Kubiak to try to turn around Raiders
By Adam Hill
September 8, 2026

It wasn't necessarily watching his dad win three Super Bowl titles as an assistant before he reached college that made Klint Kubiak realize how cool coaching could be as a profession.

The younger Kubiak was hooked by a far more subtle experience.

Gary Kubiak, then the head coach of the Houston Texans, allowed his oldest son to sit in on some pre-draft meetings as the staff discussed defensive end prospects.

"I just saw this big room full of guys just talking football and shooting the bull," Kubiak recalls. "I remember thinking this wasn't such a bad job. You get to talk football and be around guys that you respect. Even then, I didn't think I wanted to be a coach, but I remember that day very vividly."

He may not have known it for sure, but the family business was always beckoning.

Kubiak played four years at Colorado State and then went immediately into coaching as a graduate assistant at Texas A&M. While he took a brief detour when he and his wife were starting a family in search of a more lucrative profession, he returned to the sidelines and never looked back.

His success as one of the sharpest young offensive minds in the game has landed him the head coaching gig with the Las Vegas Raiders, where he is tasked with finding a way to turn around years of ineptitude with a few splashes of mediocrity.

It's a challenge the 39-year-old Houston-born and Colorado-raised Kubiak is embracing.

"You get the excitement of, 'Why not us? Why not this staff? Why not this group of players?'" Kubiak said. "To have a chance to be a part of the success here made (this job) even more desirable."

While he is just getting started on the job, landing it is the culmination of a steady rise through a calling he resisted, even though it was always in his blood.

Head start

Kubiak's father, Gary, was still playing when he was born, but most of his early memories of his father were as a coach.

While the younger Kubiak loved all sports, there was something about football that was very appealing.

"I always loved the fact that there are so many roles on a football team," Kubiak said. "There's just so many different body types and different types of people in football that make up the 11 guys on offense and defense. Just having that team sport with so many different personalities and athletic abilities, I think is pretty unique. It's not like basketball where it's just a bunch of tall guys that can run and jump. You've got guys on a football team that can't jump at all, but they can be the best nose tackle in the NFL."

That bond was only strengthened when he was able to serve as a ballboy and help out around the facility when Gary returned to the Broncos as offensive coordinator in 1995 when Klint was 8.

Whether he was spotting the ball during 7-on-7 drills in training camp or helping clean the locker room after practice, Kubiak just liked being around football.

Especially when larger-than-life figures like John Elway and Terrell Davis are just having casual conversations in your presence.

"You're going in there to grab their laundry and they're just having a ball," Kubiak recalls. "You're just thinking it's a cool job these guys have. So just those training camp practices really stand out."

Kubiak eventually found himself up the road at Colorado State where he played safety.

"My experience there was awesome," said Kubiak, who played for legendary coach Sonny Lubick before he was replaced by Steve Fairchild for Kubiak's final two seasons.

"I didn't have a lot of opportunities, but (Lubick) gave me a chance. I loved being a Ram. I loved playing football there."

Kubiak joked that he was slow, but Fairchild recalls immediately recognizing the safety's strengths.

"He was a very good player," Fairchild said. "But both him and his brother Klay (the team's quarterback) were outstanding people. He was a returning starter and you could tell right away in the offseason workouts that he was a team leader. He was always there early. When you meet the family, it's very apparent they were raised that way."

While Kubiak diminished his own athleticism, he did concede his understanding of the game allowed him to overcome any perceived physical deficit.

No time was that on better display than a 2008 game where Kubiak intercepted Houston's Case Keenum in the end zone with seconds remaining on the clock to seal a 28-25 Colorado State victory.

"Klint baited him into throwing that ball," Fairchild said. "He picked it off and we won the game.

"That was a great play and a great memory, but really you just can't say enough about them as a family. The whole experience of getting to know him and his family was one of those neat things in coaching."

Fairchild called Kubiak "hard-working and determined, smart and competitive." He says he would have hired him to his staff, but Kubiak went to Texas A&M to work under Mike Sherman as a graduate assistant.

The plan was to help out on defense. Plans change.

“I was there for two weeks and (Sherman) was like, ‘Hey, we have a guy graduating. We want him to take your job. You have to go to offense,’” Kubiak said. “I was really upset about it. I didn’t want to go to offense. But it ended up being the best thing that ever happened to me. It’s funny how it all worked out.”

Rising through the ranks

Kubiak proved to be a quick study on offense, which was also his father’s specialty. The fact he played safety only helped him better understand how to attack a defense.

But while he has made a steady climb through the profession, Kubiak needed to see the other side of the working world to truly understand his love for the game.

The life of a graduate assistant involves long hours for little pay. He earned his master’s degree in human resource development while coaching, but Kubiak had also married Colorado State volleyball standout Tessa Nelson and felt a responsibility to support the household.

So he took a job doing oil pipe inventory in east Texas. That lasted all of about two weeks.

Kubiak got a call from Texas A&M receiver Uzoma Nwachukwu, a very good player who Kubiak had coached very hard to try to help him reach his full potential. The coach wasn’t sure the pupil appreciated the style, but the conversation reminded him that coaching was what he was supposed to do for a living.

He returned to the job and then moved to the NFL as a quality control coach for the Minnesota Vikings before coaching receivers at Kansas for a year. He realized he missed the NFL and went to work for his dad in Denver, something he had previously insisted he did not want to do.

“I was at Kansas and I realized I could have a chance to go see him do his job,” Kubiak said. “I know he’s one of the best in the world at it. Am I going to really be so stubborn that I’m going to miss out on that opportunity? So the opportunity came up. They won the Super Bowl and Brian Callahan was the assistant quarterback coach and he left and a spot opened up, and I reached out to (my dad). I was like, listen, ‘I told you I never wanted to do this but if there’s a spot, I’ll work my tail off for you.’”

He knew he’d have to put in that kind of effort. Kubiak, whose two brothers also work in the NFL, was always aware of the potential for calls of nepotism so he always wanted to work as hard as he possibly could to justify any opportunities.

He acknowledges all three Kubiak sons are aware of their situation and fortunate to have been born with their parents.

Klint also knows he has a high bar to clear to reach the standard set by his father.

“He’s a way better athlete than me. He played quarterback in the NFL for nine years,” Kubiak said. “My dad is the hardest-working, best guy that I know. So I have a lot of work to do to live up to that.”

He continued that pursuit by moving to the Vikings as quarterbacks coach and then offensive coordinator.

It was there longtime NFL coach Rick Dennison, who played and coached with Gary and had known Klint basically since birth, saw him turn a corner.

“He took control and did a lot of good things,” Dennison said. “Every place he’s been, he’s grabbed a little of what they do and combined it into what he believes. Not just X’s and O’s, but culture. I think each one of those steps. He’s taken some stuff to heart and really done a great job of combining football knowledge and people skills.”

Kubiak returned to the Denver Broncos for a year as passing game coordinator and spent 2023 in the same role for the 49ers.

He has served as offensive coordinator for the New Orleans Saints and Seattle Seahawks the last two years.

Despite all the movement, Kubiak said he was never focused on ascension.

“I just wanted to be the best I was with where I was at,” he said. “When I was a graduate assistant at Texas A&M, I just wanted to not get fired, honestly. Give me a job and I’ll do the best I can at it. And then it was, ‘All right, I’d love to try to coach a position.’

“All those years taught me that you just try to do the best with where you’re at and try to add value to the organization. And I just always felt that those promotions come when you demonstrate that you can do a good job with where you’re at.”

Even after winning the Super Bowl as an offensive coordinator with Seattle last season and becoming one of the hottest names on the head coaching interview circuit, Kubiak wasn’t sure he would leave.

He said he was convinced the Raiders have all the organizational pieces in place from ownership to the front office to facilities to have success and he just wanted to be a part of it.

Now it’s his show to run.

Taking charge

The public perception of Kubiak as being ‘all ball” isn’t necessarily wrong.

“I’ve been around Coach Kubiak a long time, and I love his demeanor,” wide receivers coach Zach Azzanni said. “What you see is what you get. It’s no-nonsense. And I think our team is taking that approach. There’s not a lot of fluff. This is football. It’s ball 24/7 here. And if you’re not a tough guy mentally and physically, if you don’t like to sit through 18 hours of meetings and practice for three hours, this probably isn’t the place for you. And that’s the culture he’s creating.”

It’s one that is appreciated by general manager John Spytek, who hired Kubiak.

"I've seen him embracing the challenge of being a head coach and knowing that there's things that have to get done every day, putting the players in a position to be successful, and demanding a lot out of his staff and the players every day," Spytek said. "Self-aware, self-critical. There's a growth mindset to Klint that I think we all really enjoy being around."

Those who know Kubiak well, however, also point to a dry sense of humor and warm demeanor.

"Oh, he has a personality," said Raiders lineman Spencer Burford, who also played for Kubiak in San Francisco. "It may not be shown all the time just because of the business we're in, but at the end of the day he's human and has personality. It just takes time to see it. He has a sense of humor for sure."

Burford said one of his favorite parts of seeing Kubiak assume a head coaching role is that it requires him to talk to the team more."

"He's a great guy," Burford said. "It's just good to see him be a little bit more vocal. He makes it clear what he wants out of his guys and how he wants it done. There's a clear understanding across the board from staff to players to the guys upstairs to make sure everyone is on the same page. I love Klint."

Raiders wide receiver Dareke Young, who was part of the Super Bowl team with the Seahawks last year, echoed the sentiment.

"He has to talk more now and lead meetings, but he seems like a natural to me," Young said. "He's a leader. A lot of the guys respect him and how he conducts his business. I think he's made a good transition. And I definitely think he's funny. I can see why people don't think he has much personality, but as a coach, you just have to be respected. As long as you handle your business, it doesn't matter. And that's what he has done."

Guiding principles

Just like his core memory of being a coach's son was in the off-field interactions, the biggest lesson he has taken from his father's coaching style has nothing to do with route trees or zone run concepts.

"I would say the biggest thing that I learned is that I saw the same guy that I saw it at home," Kubiak said. "I saw that you can be a leader by being yourself. And so it just kind of gave me confidence seeing you don't have to change who you are. You have your values and you make those values come to life with the guys that you're with every day. The coaches and the players. So I think that just gave me confidence knowing I don't have to all of a sudden change if I become a head coach.

"Just go be yourself."

Gary won his Super Bowl as a head coach the year before Klint went to work on his staff. But it was never the pats on his dad's back for raising the trophy that mattered to him.

It was when people would approach him and tell him about the positive way Gary treated them or something he did for their family or a thoughtful Christmas gift that he would draw inspiration.

"I learned at an early age that you treat people the right way, treat people with respect and that means something to people, whether you're getting fired in Houston like he eventually did, or you're winning Super Bowls," Klint said. "I think when people talk about the kind of person you are, you don't want the first thing to be 'That guy is a (jerk)' or he treated me wrong and didn't care about my family. If the first thing that comes out of their mouth is that I got better as a coach and closer with my family working for that guy, that's what guys said about my dad and that means something."

He's also proud of being a dad himself, notably changing tones when talking about his kids in Little League or getting to take them to shows, sites and national parks since arriving in Las Vegas.

But he also knows he's here to win. Kubiak's message to the team has been clear.

He wants his organization to be about "we," not "I."

That will also benefit the individual, he believes.

While the modern game and social media machine have put an even greater emphasis on stats, popularity and individualism, Kubiak provides a counter-argument.

"It's all irrelevant if you don't win games," he said. "We tell the players all the time that all these guys that are on the wall here or painted in our team room, you get on this wall by being on a Super Bowl team. It's really hard to get on this wall as a guy that's not on a winning team."

It's now his job to help make that happen, a gig he's been working toward his whole life.

How Klint Kubiak found his way to the Raiders after oil fields detour
By Adam Hill
February 4, 2026

SAN JOSE, Calif. — The family business just wasn't cutting it for Klint Kubiak.

While his father, Gary, was serving as head coach of the Houston Texans, Klint was in his early 20s toiling as a graduate assistant at Texas A&M and believed it was time to find a way to support his own household.

"I was making $17,000," Kubiak recalled. "I was recently married and didn't feel like I was contributing much to the relationship. I felt like I had to go make some money, and another year as a GA wasn't going to get it done."

So he called up a cousin who worked for an oil company and took a job doing inventory on pipe in East Texas. The money was good and the work was fine.

Until a phone call made him realize what he had left behind.

"I just wanted to see what life was like outside of football," he said. "It wasn't terrible. It was a great job, but I found out pretty quickly something was missing and that was the joy of being a coach.

"I don't remember a lot about that job other than I knew I was out of my element."

The call

Uzoma Nwachukwu was a great receiver at Texas A&M and one in which Kubiak saw a bright future. So he rode him hard.

So hard, in fact, that Kubiak expected they would never talk again after his decision to leave the program for the oil industry.

Yet there was Nwachukwu's number popping up on his phone as he made the long drive home from work just two weeks into his new career.

"He basically said, 'Hey, thank you for working with me and making me better,'" Kubiak said. "I ended up quitting that job the next day and trying to get back into football."

It was always going to be his path even if he needed that brief detour to remind him.

"That phone call was the realization that these relationships are what it's about," he said. "It's kind of like being a teacher. You build great relationships. You're just teaching football instead of a subject. I didn't want to mess around too much more in the oil fields after that."

He returned to the sidelines, and it wasn't long before the accolades and money would follow.

Kubiak, now the Seattle Seahawks offensive coordinator preparing to coach against the New England Patriots in the Super Bowl, is expected to become the head coach of the Las Vegas Raiders.

He can't sign or announce any deal until after the Super Bowl, but the financial security he once sought outside of football has now come from the game into which he was born.

"I'm still really thankful for those years because you find out a lot about yourself and see how much you love something when you're willing to work hard at it even if it doesn't provide you with that immediate monetary success," he said.

Family business

His father, who won a Super Bowl as head coach of the Denver Broncos, was consumed by the game, and it became a part of the family.

Klint's brothers, Klay and Klein, both work in the NFL as well.

He remembers being 12 and going to the team facility with his father and seeing all the other coaches, whom he knew from their frequent visits to the family home.

"You go through a lot of adversity and find out a lot about each other and what people are made of," Kubiak said. "You get really close through that."

While there are obvious benefits of following in the footsteps of a successful father in terms of opportunity and name recognition, Kubiak also experienced the drawbacks.

There were times he felt the pressure of trying to chase down that Super Bowl win his father won with the Broncos. He's over that now.

"As you get older, you just realize you just have to be your own man," he said. "But I wouldn't be talking to you guys if it wasn't for my dad. Obviously, I don't get to coach in the NFL at a young age without him allowing me to be on his staff. But you get on a staff like that as the coach's son, you better make sure you make him proud. You don't want to be slacking at all. It's how my mom and dad raised us."

'Bittersweet' departure

The man Gary and Rhonda Kubiak raised became a brilliant offensive coach. Yet it's the person he is off the field many around the Seahawks prefer to talk about.

"It's a little bittersweet," Seattle head coach Mike Macdonald said of Kubiak's expected departure. "Because he's such a great person in addition to being a great coach."

Receiver Cooper Kupp has enjoyed getting to play for him this year and appreciates the standard he has set.

“He’s awesome,” Kupp said. “He’s so mild-mannered, but the most upset he gets is when he’s upset at himself for something. He holds himself to such a high bar that it calls everyone else to be there as well. If your head coach is pissed off because of a situation he put himself in, you start thinking, ‘How can I be better?’ I love how he goes about things in that regard.”

One of the biggest lessons Kubiak took from being around some of the game’s greatest coaches was to try to learn from them without trying to emulate them.

“The thing that stands out from him is you always have to find a way to be yourself because the players will see right through it if you’re not,” he said. “It’s really easy advice. Try to be the best version of yourself. Don’t try to act like my dad or Norv Turner or Mike Zimmer or Mike Macdonald. You can take lessons from them, but you have to be genuine.”

Simple philosophy

Kubiak has his own family now.

He and his wife, Tessa, have four children, though he keeps his home life extremely private, other than to share his family and faith are his proudest accomplishments.

His philosophy remains simple.

“It all comes down to giving your players the best chance to be successful,” he said. “You can sleep well at night if you put all your work into that.”

Kubiak has done that with an old-school focus on the running game as the foundation for his new-school concepts.

“Something that’s always been important to us is to be able to run the football against an eight-man front,” he said. “Then we build our game plans off of that. The NFL is about making explosive plays. It’s a really important part of the game. But to me, if you can’t establish the run and protect your quarterback, you’re going to have a hard time doing anything else.”

Spoken like a man who was always meant to coach, even if he took a detour to the oil fields.

How Gary Kubiak's lessons shaped Klint Kubiak's coaching identity
By Levi Edwards
June 19, 2026

A sense of déjà vu came over Gary Kubiak as he walked down the bleachers at Levi's Stadium.

As blue, green and silver confetti rained down, he and his wife Rhonda made their way to the field to find their son after the Seattle Seahawks defeated the New England Patriots, 29-13, in Super Bowl LX.

Klint Kubiak had just entered rare air, winning a Super Bowl as the offensive coordinator for the Seahawks. It was feeling the elder Kubiak was familiar with as a three-time Super Bowl champion in his own right.

"You find out real quick when you get into coaching, those playoff games and those Super Bowl runs," Gary Kubiak told Raiders.com, "they don't come around every day."

But the déjà vu had less to do with his own personal highs in coaching.

He witnessed his son win a championship in the exact same stadium exactly 10 years after he won Super Bowl 50 as the head coach of the Denver Broncos.

"I was at that game watching him win it all. … I got to see the smile on his face after the game," Klint Kubiak recalled during his introductory press conference as the Raiders head coach, two days after the Seahawks' win.

"Just to share that moment with him is something I know I'll never forget."
Standing on the grass in the midst of the chaos and celebration, Gary was brought back to that moment Klint greeted him after Gary's last Super Bowl win in 2016.

"To walk on that field after the game, give him a hug like he did me 10 years ago," Gary paused, "that was a special. I'll always be able to treasure it.

"It probably meant more for me to watch him win a championship like that that it did for him to see his dad."

Hanging around Hall of Famers like John Elway, Steve Young and Andre Johnson was the norm for Klint Kubiak growing up.

Gary, a nine-year NFL quarterback turned coach, introduced his three sons to the game early on in their lives. Quite frankly, he didn't have much of a choice considering how all-encompassing his work was. He was an NFL head coach for 10 seasons between the Broncos and the Houston Texans.

Bringing his sons into NFL locker rooms was the easiest way for him to spend substantial with them, but learning about football was never truly the main objective.

"I was more concerned with them learning how to work," Gary said. "I wanted them to see how hard their dad worked. That's why I wasn't at home a lot. I was trying to build these teams and players, and I wanted them to be around."

"Kids get very impressionable and they see successful players," he added. "Well, I wanted them to see why they're successful."

Gary was right. It did make quite the impression.

"The thing about my dad is that when I was growing up, he never made it about sports or football," Klint said. "He just always talked about everything other than that, about being a good person, about being respectful.

"He showed me what it means to be a great husband and a great father. So, those are the things that I want to emulate."

Like his father, Klint exhausted all of his options before going into coaching.

He was an exceptional high school athlete, playing wide receiver and defensive back in high school in Aurora, Colorado. He committed to Colorado State, where he started 26 games at safety.

Injuries halted his playing aspirations, so he turned to coaching, getting his feet wet at his father's alma mater Texas A&M as an offensive quality control coach and graduate assistant.

After three years in College Station, a newly wedded Klint felt it might be in his best interest to make a career pivot. He accepted a position at an oil-field service company operated by Gary's college roommate. Yet after a few weeks on the job, a burning desire for football remained.

"Next thing I know he's like, 'Hey dad, what do I do? Because this is not what I want to do. I want to coach,'" Gary said. "I think everybody in life has to figure out their own way and once he figured that out … his passion to do it, he didn't need me anymore from that standpoint.

"He knew what he wanted to do and now it was time to go to work."

Fast forward four years and Gary would hire his oldest son onto his Broncos staff as an offensive assistant. They would work together again at the Minnesota Vikings in 2019, with Gary serving as assistant head coach/offensive coordinator and Klint as quarterbacks coach.

Klint spent two seasons learning the system directly from his father and ultimately was promoted to offensive coordinator when Gary retired in 2021.

"I think that might be the hardest thing as a coach, for me personally, is when you're coaching your team or coaching your coaches and all of a sudden you have a son sitting in the room staring at you," Gary said. "I mean, that's some pressure there because you're trying to do your job and yet you're trying to teach your son a certain way.

"I enjoyed that. To coach in Minnesota with him, which was at the end of my career, to watch him coach and position and be responsible for a position and watch him grow, it's a great feeling. That's what's coaching is all about."

Given Gary's success in the league, it's fair to wonder how Klint will fare as he steps into his first head coaching role.

Based on his resume and his own steady climb, there's little doubt the foundation is solid.

"They're both people persons in a little bit different way," said Rick Dennison, the Raiders offensive line coach.

Dennison has a rich history with the Kubiak family, having played and coached alongside Gary as well as coached alongside Klint in Seattle.

"They get along with people and understand people, that's a strength of both of theirs. They know football really well. And I think those two combined, they get the best out of their teams. … I don't know if there's many differences."

It would be natural for Klint to turn to his father for advice, but Gary is adamant on making sure he never oversteps his bounds. No longer the head coach, no longer the boss, but now just trying to be the best "sounding board" and father he can be.

While it's big shoes to fill, Klint doesn't seem interested in wearing them out. He's intent on carving his own path and building a legacy that stand on its own.

"He's got some really good people around him, and he just needs to get in there and bust ass and let everybody do their job," Gary said. "Those things will take time and they take effort, but I know he'll put in the effort."

Which makes room for another question to pose. What does he expect from his son in Las Vegas?

"Well, we're going to find out," Gary said with a belting laugh. "You know, it's a hard job."

Who is Klint Kubiak? His rise from working oil fields to Seahawks OC and future Raiders coach

By Matt Barrows
February 6, 2026

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Football coach or oil field worker?

You might be surprised that Klint Kubiak chose the latter line of work soon after starting out on his own. The son of former Houston Texans and Denver Broncos head coach Gary Kubiak, Klint had initially tried his hand at the family business. He spent three seasons in his early 20s as an entry-level assistant on Texas A&M's staff.

But it didn't pay the bills.

"I was making $17,000," Kubiak recalled this week. "I was recently married and didn't feel like I was contributing much to the relationship. I felt like I had to go make some money, and another year as a GA wasn't going to get it done."

Working as an oil field employee wasn't as stimulating, but for $60,000, he thought he'd give it a go. His first job involved inventorying oil pipes along Highway 21 in East Texas, a task that involved attaching metal bands of varying colors to the appropriate pipe.

"I don't remember a lot about it other than I knew I was out of my element," Kubiak, 38, said.

The truth is, he didn't hate it. He figured he might get back into coaching someday but was willing, even eager, to take on a new challenge and put some money into the family checking account.

Then, two weeks into his new career, his phone rang.

The number on the screen surprised him. It was one of his former A&M receivers, Uzoma Nwachukwu, someone whom Kubiak had been particularly hard on. He didn't think Nwachukwu would ever speak with him again, much less dial his number. The call, however, rerouted Kubiak's path.

"I had a great conversation with him," he said. "And he just made me realize I was doing the wrong thing, that I needed to get back into coaching. … When I got that call, within two hours, I was calling my boss and saying, 'Thanks, but no thanks.'"

A few months later, Kubiak took a quality control job with the Minnesota Vikings and has been working his way up the NFL coaching ladder since.

On Sunday, he'll call plays for Sam Darnold and the Seattle Seahawks' offense in the Super Bowl. After that? All signs say he'll become the next head coach of the Las Vegas Raiders, a position that pays a bit better than graduate assistant or even oil field worker.

What will the Raiders be getting in Gary Kubiak's eldest son?

For one, he's well-versed in the offensive system that's permeated the league. When the 2026 season begins, former Kyle Shanahan assistants will be calling plays in Miami (Bobby Slowik), Green Bay (Matt LaFleur), Arizona (Mike LaFleur) and Los Angeles (Sean McVay and Mike McDaniel).

Kubiak served as the 49ers' passing game coordinator under Shanahan in 2023, and his younger brother, Klay, is San Francisco's offensive coordinator. A third brother, Klein, is a scout for the Dallas Cowboys.

The Shanahan-Kubiak relationship dates to 1984, when Mike Shanahan joined the Broncos' staff as wide receivers coach, and Gary Kubiak was a backup quarterback. Shanahan was on staff for seven of Kubiak's nine years as a player in Denver, including two as his position coach and four as offensive coordinator.

Shanahan became the 49ers' offensive coordinator in 1992 and gave Kubiak his first NFL coaching job in 1994 as quarterbacks coach. Kyle Shanahan recalled his father inviting Gary and other offensive assistants and their families to their Saratoga, Calif., home one evening.

"And I remember having to watch their three boys downstairs," Kyle said. "I was a lot older than them. And I remember messing with them and picking on 'em. And I kept getting in trouble because of all the noise we were causing downstairs."

Kyle said he's always been impressed by Klint's work ethic and resolve. He thinks he did a particularly fine job in Seattle this season, especially the way he utilized the Seahawks' personnel.

"How he helped Sam (Darnold), how he used the receiver from New Orleans, (Rashid) Shaheed, the way he used both of their running backs in different ways, how much he'd get Jaxon Smith-Njigba the ball on a consistent basis even though he was their main target," he said. "He moved him around so much, (defenses) couldn't take him away. So I thought he was more than deserving of a head-coach opportunity."

Seahawks tight end A.J. Barner said when Klint installed the system this past offseason, he not only used clips from his most recent stops in San Francisco and New Orleans, but also film from the early 2000s Texans, a team coached by Gary Kubiak and an up-and-coming assistant, Kyle Shanahan.

"We watched Owen Daniels, some of the Denver Broncos (players)," Barner said. "We definitely went into the archives."

Receiver Cooper Kupp, who played eight seasons under McVay in Los Angeles, said those Rams offenses skewed toward three wide receivers and lighter personnel packages. Kubiak went with a more heavy-handed version with the Seahawks, who used a lot of two-tight-end and two-back packages this season and ran the ball 507 times, third most in the league.

"The offense kind of branched off in different ways," Kupp said. "Now I get to experience the other branch — heavy personnel (groups) and being able to use a fullback."

Said Barner: "The more big bodies you get on the field, the more gaps you get in the run game. I think it only helps the offense."

That approach might also work on a Raiders team that's already invested heavily at tight end and running back — Michael Mayer, Brock Bowers and Ashton Jeanty — in recent seasons. Shanahan said he also thought Kubiak would be an excellent match for Indiana quarterback Fernando Mendoza, whom most NFL observers expect the Raiders to draft with the No. 1 pick.

"He seems like a very reserved guy," Shanahan said of Mendoza. "And Klint's the same. I mean, Klint's not a flamboyant guy. He's not real loud. He's a very real person. You're going to know what you get every single day. Watching from afar, it seems that's how that quarterback carries himself. I kind of see it as a perfect fit — two very humble, talented people coming in at the same time."

Though Kubiak played safety at Colorado State, quarterbacks became his specialty in the NFL. He served as quarterbacks coach in Minnesota and Denver before joining the 49ers in 2023. That was the year San Francisco signed Darnold to be a backup behind Brock Purdy, who was coming off a serious elbow injury suffered in the NFC Championship Game.

Darnold didn't see much action — he played 130 snaps, most in the meaningless season finale — but the stint allowed Kubiak to take a deep look at the player he'd coach when he took over the Seahawks' offense.

"When he went to practice in OTAs and training camp, and he played side by side with Brock Purdy, we knew that we had another starting quarterback on the roster," Kubiak said Wednesday. "We were really fortunate to get Sam. And he was at a point in his career when he just wanted a place to go learn for a year at a proven system with Kyle. And Kyle did a phenomenal job getting him ready to play."

Two other moves helped smooth Kubiak's transition to Seattle. He brought in offensive line coach John Benton, who'd had the same role under Gary with the Texans from 2016 to '13 (and under Shanahan from 2017 to '20 in San Francisco), to teach the zone-blocking technique that's a staple of the Shanahan system. And he signed free agents like Kupp and tight end Eric Saubert, who had played in similar systems.

He also meshed well with the team's cerebral, ultra-focused head coach. Mike Macdonald said this week he's used Teddy Roosevelt's famous line, "Speak softly and carry a big stick," at various points over his coaching career.

"That's a quote that resonates with me," he said. "I'm not the most outspoken guy of all time. You want your team's tape to do the talking. And I think our guys have done a really good job of that."

Kubiak carries a similar vibe.

Shanahan called him a grinder. "He works his ass off — as hard as anyone I've been around," he said.

Players described him as even-keeled, soft-spoken and consistent. And while Nwachukwu, the former Texas A&M receiver, might dispute this, when Kubiak gets upset, it's usually with himself.

"He takes a lot of ownership of the offense, even when he doesn't have to," rookie center Grey Zabel said. "He's a guy who just shows up every single day and just works and works and works. Whatever the future holds for him, he's a guy who's gonna outwork everybody."

When Zabel suffered a knee injury during the season, he had to come in early for treatment. He said when he rolled into the parking lot at 5:50 a.m., he figured he'd be the first guy there.

He was wrong. The stall marked "offensive coordinator" was already occupied.

"And every single day was like that," Zabel said. "It's a show-up-before-everybody and leave-after-everybody mentality."

Shanahan said there's a reason Kubiak's car never seemed to move. He recalled instances in 2023 when, following a late night at the office, he'd arrive at 49ers headquarters at 4:30 a.m. to find Kubiak already there.

"It was like, 'How early did you get in?'" Shanahan said. "Then you see the blanket on the couch, and you put it together. And he didn't have to do that. But he'd never leave the office until he had an answer for me, which is why it was so cool working with him for a year."

GENERAL MANAGER JOHN SPYTEK

THE ATHLETIC

How John Spytek earned Tom Brady's trust: From Michigan to Tampa Bay to Las Vegas
By Dan Pompei
May 6, 2025

In a banquet room decorated for Christmas, a group of coaches' kids were entertained by Santa Claus. There were awesome presents for the Michigan football team — high-end swag, including commemorative watches.

The Wolverines were gathered at the Eden Roc Hotel Miami Beach the night before Christmas to prepare to play Alabama in the 2000 Orange Bowl, and this was a night of celebration.

John Spytek, though, wasn't feeling very festive.

He wouldn't be playing in the game. A redshirt freshman linebacker, Spytek was physically worn down from spending the last five months on the scout team and getting driven into the ground by Steve Hutchinson and Jeff Backus, both future NFL stars. He missed home. He wondered if he belonged.

It had been a long season that began with a shattered thumb in training camp. Playing with a cast, he then sprained his shoulder.

The week before Michigan's season opener against Notre Dame, he went all out in practice. The next day, after a Michigan win, Spytek was given a T-shirt in a team meeting. "Scout Team Player Of The Week," it read.

It was the highlight of his year, along with a November practice. That week, in preparation for Penn State, Spytek was assigned to play the part of LaVar Arrington on the scout team. Arrington was on his way to winning the Butkus Award, the Bednarik Award and the Lambert Trophy. Wearing Arrington's No. 11 was an honor, and Spytek took it seriously.

So did Tom Brady.

The senior quarterback threw a deep ball to running back Anthony Thomas, who ran a wheel route. Often, scout team defenders run hard and then ease up at the end so the offensive player can finish the play. But Spytek closed on the ball, reached out and batted it down.

Brady, unsurprisingly, would be more difficult to beat on game day. Down by 10 in the fourth quarter, he calmly brought Michigan back, throwing the winning touchdown pass with under two minutes remaining.

It wasn't the only time Brady flipped a game's script that season. There was a late touchdown drive to beat Notre Dame and two touchdown drives in the final 16 minutes to overtake Ohio State.

If not for Brady, Spytek and his teammates would not have been in Miami preparing for the Orange Bowl.

Spytek brought his meal back from the buffet at the Eden Roc and sat at a table with other redshirt freshmen who were feeling like him. They looked down at their plates and didn't say much.

Then someone walked up and put his plate on the white tablecloth.

"I think I'll have dinner with the young bucks tonight," Brady said.

Then the team captain and MVP was somehow one of them. For about an hour, Brady talked with the freshmen about nothing and everything, lifting their spirits and making them feel they belonged.

"It was a small glimpse of who he is, the grace he operates in," Spytek says. "He probably doesn't remember it. But the rest of us could never forget it."

It is more than an indelible memory. It was the beginning of a connection that would help make NFL history.

On New Year's Day, Brady led another comeback to beat Alabama in the Orange Bowl. Then, 11 years passed before he and Spytek crossed paths again.

Brady, a sixth-round pick, became arguably the most unlikely success story in the NFL's grand history, winning three Super Bowls and establishing himself as football's best quarterback.

Then the Lions gave him $250 a week to run errands in the operations department. He bartended three nights a week to get by. Spytek began scouting with the Eagles and worked in Philadelphia for five years before becoming the Browns' college scouting director.

On the field before a 2010 game between the Patriots and Browns, Brady caught up with his Michigan classmate Aaron Shea, then the Browns' director of player engagement. Spytek moved in and reintroduced himself to Brady. The interaction didn't last more than 10 seconds before Spytek walked away, unsure if Brady remembered who he was.

Another decade went by. Brady had won his fourth, fifth and sixth Super Bowls and was widely considered the best quarterback of all time. But the partnership between Brady and Patriots coach Bill Belichick had frayed, and the Patriots somehow convinced themselves they would be better without him.

As the Patriots concluded that Brady was descending, Spytek was ascending. After three years with the Broncos, where he won a Super Bowl with Peyton Manning, he became the right-hand man to general manager Jason Licht with the Buccaneers.

In Tampa, Jameis Winston, the former first pick in the draft, arguably had the best season of his career in 2019 under new coach Bruce Arians. The assumption was that the Bucs would commit to Winston long term, even though he had led the league in interceptions.

Spytek's job, however, was to open his mind and the minds of others. Late in the season, he studied tape of veteran quarterbacks he thought might be available. Among them were Teddy Bridgewater, Drew Brees and Philip Rivers. One day, Licht walked into the draft room, which was adjacent to his office, and saw Spytek watching Brady. Spytek told him Brady's contract was expiring, and he didn't see any drop-off in his play. Licht chuckled.

Nobody respected Brady more than Licht. He was part of the front office that drafted him and spent seven years with him in New England. But it was almost impossible to envision Brady leaving the Patriots, let alone becoming a Buc.

Two days later, Licht approached Spytek at practice.

"I watched Tom," he said. "He's still pretty f—ing good."

Licht and Arians decided it was worth a shot, even if it was the longest of long shots. Licht, Arians, Spytek, Rob McCartney, who was the director of pro scouting at the time, Mike Biehl, the director of college scouting, and Mike Greenberg, who handled contracts, devised a plan. They knew if their interest became public, it would create a firestorm that could affect other options if Brady stayed in New England, so they decided to keep their pursuit between the six of them and team ownership. They would use code words to describe their mission.

Licht asked Spytek if he really thought Brady might come to Tampa. Spytek, looking at the Bucs' impressive depth chart, pointed out the roster would be a selling point.

"If you build it," Spytek said, "he will come."

"That's from a movie," Licht said.

Anytime they spoke of Brady, they called him "Shoeless Joe."

Licht became "Ray Kinsella," the Kevin Costner character in the movie who built the baseball field that drew Shoeless Joe from the great beyond. They began calling Bucs owner Joel Glazer "Terrance Mann" after the James Earl Jones character who disappeared into the cornfield with Shoeless Joe.

They recited lines from the movie.

"Go the distance."

"Ease his pain."

Operation Shoeless Joe worked, and Brady told the Bucs he intended to play for them. But he still hadn't officially parted ways with the Patriots. He told Licht he would visit Patriots owner Robert Kraft one evening to convey his intentions in person. The Bucs feared Kraft would convince him to stay.

Early the next morning, Spytek was stuck at a traffic light on his way to work. He picked up his phone. The first story on his Instagram feed was from Brady, thanking New England and saying he was going to take his football journey elsewhere. By the end of the day, he was a Buccaneer.

The Bucs closed their offices that day because of the COVID-19 pandemic. The first time Spytek and Brady met as Bucs was at training camp in a BioReference trailer, where both were getting nose swabs for COVID tests.

“Hey, Tom, John Spytek,” Spytek said through his mask. “We played together a long time ago.”

“Yeah, yeah, great to see you again,” Brady said through his mask. “It’s been so long.”

Spytek wasn’t sure Brady remembered the batted pass or the Christmas Eve dinner, but he was certain Brady had done his homework on him.

During Brady’s New England years, he met with Belichick leading up to games and was given a detailed report on the defense he would be opposing. In Tampa, he asked Licht for a similar arrangement. Licht suggested to Spytek that a couple of young scouts could handle the assignment.

“No,” Spytek said. “I want to do it. We can’t send a young scout in to meet with the greatest player of all time.”

Spytek wanted McCartney with him because he respected McCartney’s knowledge. Licht agreed and told Brady, who had questions about both.

“Are they going to know the league?” Brady asked.

Brady showed them a sample report of what he expected.

To prepare, Spytek put in the equivalent of a full day’s work, as he would before every meeting with Brady. He knew Brady would want a full report on the second nickel and fourth safety, as well as the star linebacker.

In their first meeting, they talked about the Saints for about an hour. It didn’t take long for Brady to challenge the information. Sptyek told him Marshon Lattimore was one of the best cornerbacks in the NFL. “He’s not Darrelle Revis,” Brady shot back.

Spytek warned him that Saints safety Marcus Williams could hurt him if he hung a ball up in the middle of the field. He described Janoris Jenkins as a twitchy corner who will play off and take chances and said if a quarterback is late with a throw, Jenkins could come up with an interception. Both players intercepted Brady.

The game was lost, but trust was won.

As the weeks went on, the meetings became casual and longer, sometimes lasting as long as 2 1/2 hours. Their conversations were about more than their upcoming opponent.

Often, the first 20 or 30 minutes of the meeting were about their experiences at Michigan. They laughed about how the strength coaches emphasized thick necks. By then, neither had Michigan necks as Spytek had become a marathon runner and Brady had spent years training for pliability.

Brady came to Tampa on a plant-based diet that excluded processed foods, dairy, gluten, sugar and nightshades. But at Michigan, it wasn't quite like that. They reminisced about gorging on Cottage Inn Pizza at all hours, pigging out on Mister Spots wings, taking down deli sandwiches from Maize and Blue Deli and trying to bulk up with prime rib and cheese fries from Outback Steakhouse.

"I got to listen to it all, and then eventually was like, come on, can we get to the meeting?" McCartney said.

Brady took the prep work seriously, even if he knew his opponents as well as Spytek and McCartney before showing up for the meeting. He even wanted to meet before training camp joint practices. When it was established that he would play in a preseason game in Houston, he asked Spytek and McCartney to meet in their hotel the morning of the game.

"I need to be at my best because people are coming to watch me," he told them.

After their prep work was done, Brady often started storytelling, which he did about as well as quarterbacking. He talked about idolizing and hanging with Joe Montana, Steve Young and Dan Marino and playing golf with Phil Mickelson, Bryson DeChambeau and Aaron Rodgers in "The Match."

Despite an uncomfortable parting, Brady spoke reverently about Belichick and his processes, game planning and motivational techniques. He said playing for him helped him see the game from a defensive perspective, which empowered him at the line of scrimmage. Belichick taught him that certain defensive alignments meant he didn't have to concern himself with every coverage possibility. That helped him process more quickly.

He told tales of teammates, opponents, games, drives and plays. Brady gushed about Julian Edelman and Rodney Harrison, saying you almost had to kill them to get them off the field. He also expressed admiration for Danny Amendola, Dave Andrews, Rob Gronkowski, Matt Light, Wes Welker and others.

"When he talked about what made them special, it rarely was about how fast or skilled they were," Spytek said. "It was how tough they were and how much they loved to play. You got a peek into his mind about what was important to him."

Part of Brady's alchemy was that he seemed to remember almost every blade of grass he played on, but his recall appeared selective about the 2015 AFC Championship Game, when Spytek's Broncos beat Brady's Patriots.

In Brady's first season in Tampa, the Bucs won 11 games and made the playoffs as a wild-card team. Moments before the offense took the field in their first playoff game at Washington, Spytek noticed Brady reading something on the sideline. Brady put it down and jogged off. Spytek looked again at what he was reading. It was the report he and McCartney had given him that week.

"The last thing he did before walking on the field to start the playoff run that led to a championship was read the writeup we gave him," Spytek says. "It was one of the most poignant moments of my career."

Their work also affected Super Bowl LV. The scouting reports had a video element with 20 to 25 plays. After Spytek and McCartney showed Brady the video of Chiefs defenders before the Super Bowl, Brady gathered his receivers, tight ends and running backs to share the videos with them. It was the first time he did that, and it helped the Bucs put up 31 points in a one-sided victory.

As Brady ran through the end zone and headed for the tunnel after the game, he saw Spytek and his wife, Kristen, in the southwest corner of Raymond James Stadium. He stopped and changed directions. Brady bear-hugged Spytek.

Spytek had thought about what he wanted to say if this moment came.

“I want you to know that working with you has been the honor of my career,” Spytek told Brady.

“You’re awesome,” Brady said. “Love you.”

Nine months later, Spytek ran in the New York City Marathon to raise funds for the National CMV Foundation, a charity he and Kristen helped establish. Their daughter Evelyn had congenital CMV, or cytomegalovirus, an infectious disease that can be fatal. Evelyn lived until she was 21 months old.

Shortly before the marathon, Licht told Spytek he should tell Brady about why he was running. Spytek demurred, but Licht told Brady anyway. A couple of days later, the CMV Foundation received the most generous donation in its history, courtesy of Brady.

Brady played two more years with the Bucs before retiring at 45 with 23 NFL seasons behind him. Last year, he became a game analyst for Fox and was approved as a minority owner of the Raiders.

Before each of the three Bucs games Brady was assigned to, he visited with Spytek.

By January, the Raiders were searching for a general manager. Brady, not the typical minority owner, called Licht.

“We had a couple long conversations about Spy,” Licht said. “He knew him well, so I don’t really think he wanted reassurance. He was just kind of telling me, ‘This is what we want here. Do you think he would fit?’ And, of course, I said yes.”

Spytek was interviewed on a video call by Brady, Raiders owner Mark Davis and minority owners Egon Durban and Mike Meldman. Spytek had interviewed for the Raiders’ general manager job in 2021 but felt like he had no chance. This was different. Brady asked many of the questions. The interview was cut off after 90 minutes because Spytek had to fly to Nashville to interview with the Titans for their general manager position. But the Raiders knew everything they needed.

When Spytek agreed to become the Raiders’ general manager, Brady told him, “Just be you. That’s good enough.”

They have talked on the phone quite a bit since. Spytek keeps him updated on everything the Raiders are doing. Spytek says Brady asks many questions but has not objected to anything. “Cool, babe, trust you,” is a typical response.

Sometimes, they just talk about what’s happening in the league. “He’s as consumed with it as I am, and our love affair with the game is what we have most in common,” Spytek says.

Brady, aware of how his physical presence changes the dynamic in a room, contributes remotely for the most part. But when the Raiders were vetting quarterbacks, he came to Las Vegas for a few days. He met with Spytek and coaches to discuss the veteran possibilities. He spent another day with Spytek discussing college quarterback prospects.

“When we are looking at quarterbacks, we’d have to be fools not to involve him,” Spytek says. “Tom is the foremost expert on quarterback play I’ve ever been around.”

Of course, Raiders coach Pete Carroll was a driving force in the trade for Carroll’s former quarterback Geno Smith. But Brady endorsed the move. “He really respected Geno — the way he can process and throw the football,” Spytek says.

During the draft, Brady stayed away but was in constant communication and was on board with the selection of quarterback Cam Miller in the sixth round.

“He liked the way he threw it, his technique, throwing from the ground up and his motion,” Spytek says. “And he thought he had the potential to improve.”

Like Brady, Miller has a history of winning, having won two FCS national championships at North Dakota State and 32 of 35 starts at Solon High in Iowa.

Dating to their days together at Michigan, Brady shaped how Spytek thinks about quarterbacks — how they should comport themselves, which traits are essential and which are superficial.

Their football values, milled in Ann Arbor and reinforced in Tampa, are the same. What matters to both is the team above all, a wholehearted commitment, unrelenting perseverance and unadulterated accountability.

In Tampa and even at Michigan, they helped bring out the other’s best. Even if neither realized it, they have been intertwined for 26 years, all the while building for now.

After Spytek formally accepted the offer to become general manager, he received a text from Brady.

He looked at his phone and saw three letters, an acronym Brady was associated with during the time he and Spytek shared in Tampa.

“LFG,” it read.

Why Raiders GM John Spytek and his wife, Kristen, are fighting for CMV awareness
By Vic Tafur
February 21, 2025

When John Spytek introduced his wife and two young sons at his Las Vegas Raiders introductory news conference last month, the team's new general manager called his wife, Kristen, his "rock."

"You're going to see my wife around a lot," he said. "She is going to be a big pillar in this community."

There are a lot of empty words at these types of proceedings, but those were not. The Spyteks are co-founders of the National CMV Foundation, which they started after their daughter, Evelyn, died in 2014 at just 21 months old. She was born with a cytomegalovirus infection, or congenital CMV, and died following complications from surgery.

CMV leads to more birth defects in the country than any other virus, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, and yet many are still unaware of its potential damages. That's something the Spyteks hope to attack in the Las Vegas market, just as they did in their previous stops at Tampa Bay and Denver.

"It's more common than people think, and women and families have a right to know about CMV," Kristen Spytek said.

The foundation has grown in size and reach, becoming a national resource for families while raising money for research, diagnosis, screening, treatment and vaccine development. No such thing existed when Kristen was pregnant with her first child, when prenatal scans not only showed that Evelyn wasn't growing as expected but that her bowel appeared unusually bright on an ultrasound.

"We went in for the 19-week scan to find out if we were having a boy or a girl, and I can still remember the ultrasound technician quietly leaving the room and the doctor coming in and saying there were problems," John Spytek said.

Doctors did not mention CMV, or that it could be an infectious disease of any kind. Kristen, who had developed sinus-like symptoms, was left to search the internet as the list of all the problems that Evelyn was facing — the bright bowel, a small head as well as heart concerns — grew as she reached 32 weeks of pregnancy.

"And Google spit out CMV at us,'" John said. "And we read about it and it was just horrible. And we were like, 'That can't be what it is or they would have told us.' But that's what it was."

Evelyn was born at 36 weeks, weighing 3 pounds, 14 ounces, and within 15 minutes a neonatologist told the Spyteks that he thought she had CMV.

"They confirmed it 24 hours later and by that point, there is nothing you can do about it," John said. "Now, the science has advanced where if you could diagnose this in utero, you can actually do a blood transfusion and some other treatments to try and save the child."

John has a tattoo of the sound waves of Evelyn's heartbeat over his heart, and at times he will touch it and hear his daughter's laugh. It's a calming moment in what has been a tough and now rewarding process to educate people about CMV.

"It's preventable, is what we keep talking about," he said.

Evelyn was eventually diagnosed with epilepsy, cerebral palsy, hearing loss and vision loss. She died on Dec. 26, 2014, after the Spyteks had started the foundation because they felt that she and other babies and families were depending on them to learn about CMV and spread the word.

"The goal was to eradicate CMV in totality, and it turned out to be a pretty out-over-our-skis goal with how little CMV was talked about," John said. "So we wanted to raise awareness for expectant moms and families so that they don't have to go through what we did. And so that their children don't have to go through what Evelyn did, more importantly."

Cytomegalovirus is a member of the herpes virus family and, according to the CDC, between 50 and 80 percent of people in the United States have had a CMV infection by the time they are 40 years old. A CMV infection causes cold-like symptoms, such as a sore throat, fever, fatigue and swollen glands, but can also cause severe disease in babies who are infected with CMV before birth.

About one out of every 200 babies is born with congenital CMV and, according to the CDC, about one out of five of those babies will have birth defects or other long-term health problems.

Kristen, who has since given birth to sons Jack, 11, and Tommy, 8, has a marketing background and went to work right away to help create awareness.

"I wanted to set up a place for people like me — parents, caregivers and family members — to go and find information about this that was educational and informative," she said. "Not too scary, but geared towards prevention for families."

Some babies born with CMV don't show signs of it at birth and develop problems later, according to the CDC.

"We have been pushing for things such as research funding at the federal level, congressional bills and newborn screening," Kristen said. "A lot of babies are born without abnormalities or issues and then go on to have conditions such as hearing loss or epilepsy."

Moderna has been working on a vaccine for CMV, and says the testing is currently in Phase 3.

"There is still a ways to go," John said. "You learn that there is no quick fix to this and it's going to take years before people maybe don't get CMV anymore, but we're making progress."

There is also a need for prevention education. Women who work around children, such as preschool teachers and daycare workers who feed children and change diapers, are at increased risk, as are parents who share utensils with their children. One of the foundation's goal is to get CMV placed on the Recommended Uniform Screen Panel (RUSP), a list of disorders recommended to be screened for as part of universal newborn screening programs.

"That would require everyone to be fully aware of it," John said of inclusion on the RUSP list, "and it would require doctors to educate the soon-to-be moms about the dangers of CMV and how you prevent it. It would shine a light on something that is a really big problem that people don't know exists.

The foundation started with six members — family members and friends of the Spyteks — as an all-volunteer grass-roots group, and now has 11 board of directors members and four employees.

"We've raised a half-million dollars in our best years, but we still have a long way to go," John said.

"We connect families regionally and state-wide, as well as with specialists," Kristen said. "And we create a safe space online and elsewhere for these families to engage and support one another."

And more and more future parents are learning about that space.

John worked for the Tampa Bay Buccaneers for the last nine years, and several members of the organization — including players — wore CMV-logo adorned cleats as part of the NFL's annual "My Cause, My Cleats" initiative, including for last season's game against the Raiders.

"It creates awareness that we can't get anywhere else," John said. "CBS did a 30-second camera shot of it and talked about CMV. And also, the energy that something like that gives to the base of our foundation and the parents that are in it every day … it's astounding. They get so motivated.

Raiders GM John Spytek is bringing Tampa Bay's 'no BS' philosophy to Las Vegas
By Vic Tafur and Tashan Reed
February 11, 2025

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers have won the NFC South four years in a row and have made the playoffs in each of the past five seasons, winning a Super Bowl ring in the process. There was a pretty simple rule for their success.

No BS.

So says Bruce Arians, the Buccaneers' former head coach who still works as an adviser for the organization. That's a major reason he expects big things out of new Las Vegas Raiders general manager John Spytek.

"You can't have a personnel department or coaching staff that doesn't work together," Arians said in a recent phone interview. "It just leads to the same bulls— of, 'Well, we don't have any players,' and 'Oh, they can't coach 'em.' They've got to work together so you know what you're looking for to build your team. The coaches and scouts were hand-in-hand … and Spy's been a big part of that."

It's a directive that Spytek has brought with him to Las Vegas after spending the last nine years in Tampa. Spytek is known for his eye for talent, and he worked closely with the Buccaneers coaching staff throughout his rise in the organization.

"He's really, really sharp, especially in evaluation — pretty much at all positions," Arians said.

Spytek was hands-on, which he promises to be with new Raiders coach Pete Carroll. He and minority owner Tom Brady were involved in helping Carroll hire his assistant coaches, including Chip Kelly as the offensive coordinator.

Spytek, 44, was a scout for the Philadelphia Eagles and Denver Broncos for 10 years before joining the Buccaneers in 2016. And, yes, he took his job home with him.

"I tell my wife all the time, the nature of a scout is to always be watching and observing, so I'm always watching and observing," Spytek said during his introductory news conference. "It's such a great quality. People will tell you the truth in this business if you find the right people, and our job as scouts … is to get to the root of who people are and decide whether or not we want to add them to our organization. That's ultimately what we're trying to do."

Spytek grew up outside of Milwaukee in Pewaukee, Wis., and dreamed of playing football at the University of Michigan.

That dream came true and led to his first scouting assignment — himself. After he arrived on campus in Ann Arbor and went through his first practice, he saw an immediate disparity in talent, which included a certain future Hall of Fame quarterback in Brady, then a senior. But all teams need "glue guys who do the dirty work," Spytek said, and the linebacker became a core special teams player at Michigan. Spytek also discovered the one thing he was really good at: watching game film.

A year out of college, Spytek got an internship with the Detroit Lions where he cut up film, filed scouting reports and drove players and coaches to and from the airport. A new dream was born, one Spytek recalled when he was sitting next to Carroll two weeks ago.

“When I dreamt about having one of these jobs, I always wanted it to be with an iconic franchise like the Raiders,” Spytek said. “I’m not sure I ever got far enough in my dreams as a young kid in Pewaukee, Wis., that I could be sitting up here with the Raiders, but here I am.”

Spytek saw firsthand how competitive the Raiders were last season despite their 4-13 record. In Week 14 in Tampa, the Raiders trailed by 4 points in the fourth quarter before the Buccaneers pulled away for a 28-13 win. Now, it’s Spytek’s job — along with Carroll and (from the shadows) Brady — to give the organization some stability and long-overdue success.

“There’s just some teams where it means a little bit more,” Spytek said. “There’s just some teams where the NFL is better when they’re crushing it. … I cannot be more excited to get started and to get started with coach Carroll here.”

When Spytek landed his first full-time NFL gig as a college scouting assistant with the Eagles in 2006, he was surrounded by a loaded front office and coaching staff. GM Tom Heckert led a personnel department that included three future GMs in Jason Licht, Ryan Grigson and Howie Roseman. Head coach Andy Reid’s coaching staff had five future NFL head coaches: Pat Shurmur, David Culley, Steve Spagnuolo, Sean McDermott and John Harbaugh.

The brain trust provided plenty of knowledge for Spytek to soak up.

“I tried to learn so much from every person that I was around,” said Spytek, who spent five seasons with the Eagles, three each with the Cleveland Browns and Broncos and nine with the Bucs. “I don’t pretend to have all the answers. I met so many wonderful people along the way that I worked great with (who) helped me get to where I’m at.”

Spytek’s breakthrough came when he was promoted to national scout with the Broncos in 2014.

“I get a natural high from watching guys compete,” Spytek said last year. “It’s hard to describe the joy when you find a player.”

While Denver went on to make the playoffs for the fourth season in a row, the front office felt the team — led by Peyton Manning — was capable of more. That led them to fire coach John Fox and replace him with Gary Kubiak in 2015.

When Kubiak was getting up to speed that offseason, he leaned on Spytek.

“What I remember about Spy is he was one of the people that (was) giving me a grasp on the team, what I had, what they thought our strengths were, what we had to do to continue to move forward and have a chance to win a championship,” Kubiak said in a phone interview. “He helped get me comfortable with the team so that I could get in there and work with my coaches and start to break down our needs and get ready for the draft. He was a big, big asset to me.”

The Broncos won Super Bowl 50 in Kubiak's first season as coach.

"It takes certain people to be leaders of others," Kubiak said. "And Spy, that's what he's got in him. … He's a very upbeat, positive, good person that's very good at motivating others around him. They didn't want to let him down."

Every offseason in Tampa Bay, Spytek would address the media on the third day of the NFL Draft, as Licht, the GM, wanted to give his guy some shine. Spytek would list off each member of the front office who had a role in the draft process. There was a lot of talk about the family atmosphere in Tampa Bay, and Licht and Spytek were close.

"I worked with him 20 years ago with the Eagles," Licht said in a phone interview. "Our wives are the closest of friends, our kids are with each other every other day and we lived four blocks away from each other."

Licht and Spytek would often try to convince the other — with game film — that his opinion on a player was wrong. It became their schtick.

"He was my right-hand man in personnel," Licht said. "He is a very intelligent, confident person who is very collaborative. He is a very curious person who is not afraid to enter the unknown, and when we went through some dark times here, I relied on him to be the positive force."

In 2020, Licht needed a boost when the Buccaneers first started talking about bringing in Brady at quarterback — in what eventually would be a Super Bowl-winning move.

"The initial calls to Tom were from me," Licht said, "but putting the plan together, John kept telling me that we've been building this team for a few years and, 'If you build it, he will come.' So we coined it 'Operation Shoeless Joe Jackson.'"

In the real-life "Field of Dreams," Brady signed with the Bucs and asked Licht to assign him someone with whom he would meet weekly and go over the scouting reports of opposing defensive players. That was Spytek, who would meet with Brady for several hours every week.

"That's where John and Tom really forged their bond," Licht said.

"When they were here, whatever Tommy needed from the pro personnel department, Spy made sure he had it," Arians said. "It could be research on corners or defensive coordinators or whatever it was. They had a great pregame plan ready for him the week before."

Following their Super Bowl win, the Buccaneers brought back all 22 starters, including re-signing free agents Ndamukong Suh, Shaquil Barrett and Leonard Fournette. Tampa Bay became the first team in the salary-cap era to return all 22 starters the season following a Super Bowl victory. In 2021, the Bucs tied a franchise record with nine Pro Bowl selections, including eight either drafted or signed during Spytek's time with Tampa Bay.

"I think he'll be excellent (as a general manager)," Arians said. "The Raiders have a good cap situation. He knows how to rebuild a roster because he was part of it in Tampa. We had four or five great drafts in a row, so he knows how to put it together."

Spytek is proud of the way the Buccaneers roster was built but stresses there is "no perfect way" to do it.

"For us in Tampa recently, it was definitely draft and develop," he said. "I think at the start of the season, 44 of the players that made the initial 53 were drafted or signed by us as undrafted free agents. I think all but two starters were."

And he took some notes from Carroll's early days with the Seahawks.

"I always admired the way that they started in Seattle, at the quarterback position in particular. They just kept taking shots and shots and shots," Spytek said. "They traded, they drafted guys high, they found their way to Russell (Wilson). What an unbelievable move that was. He was a little bit different. He was under 6 feet at a time when most quarterbacks were over 6 feet, so (they were) willing to think outside the box a little bit."

As all GMs do, Spytek will look to build the Raiders up through the draft. Much like he helped do in Tampa, however, he'll also need to make savvy trades and free-agent signings. The roster needs a lot of work, but his track record gives plenty of reason to believe he's capable of turning things around.

"It's the best way to build a solid foundation of a team, and then to reward those players with second contracts because we know exactly what we're doing," he said. "But if the opportunity comes to sign a Tom Brady or a Baker Mayfield or trade for a Jason Pierre-Paul or Rob Gronkowski, just examples from my career, we will absolutely do that when the team is ready and the organization is ready for that."

How the Raiders Landed on Their Franchise QB: 'Call Up Fernando. He's the Guy.'

By Albert Breer
May 5, 2026

It was the week before the draft, and with almost a full year's work of scouting invested, it was time for GM John Spytek and his personnel staff to give Raiders ownership a look. On the screen was what they call the "135 Board," a vertical stack of the draft's best players.

Controlling owner Mark Davis looked at it and smiled.

"I see the quarterback's up there," he said.

"Yep," Spytek responded, "and he's going to stay there."

As big reveals in sports go, this wasn't exactly LeBron James telling Jim Gray he was leaving Cleveland for Miami. And that was for a good reason. No one really needed to tell Davis—or anyone else—that the Heisman Trophy winner and national champion from Indiana, Fernando Mendoza, was going to be the first pick in the draft.

The owner knew it. Spytek knew it. And the football-watching faction of America wasn't in the dark on it, either.

But there was significance to the moment for those in the room in the closure it gave everyone. Over the past seven months, those with Davis and Spytek in front of that big screen flew commercial and private, rented cars in the South and the Midwest, stayed in big cities and small towns and poured endless hours into studying the 2026 draft's quarterbacks.

It started well before it became a fait accompli that Mendoza would go No. 1, and extended past when those outside the building saw the pick as a foregone conclusion.

Of course, Spytek and his top lieutenants had a pretty good idea for a long while that the Hoosiers' star would be holding up a No. 15 jersey in Las Vegas in late April. But this was never going to be a coronation. Every step would be taken. Every box would be checked.

A week later, Spytek sat in that same war room as the commissioner announced the Raiders were on the clock. The 45-year-old second-year GM found himself totally at ease.

"I just remember being in there with a great group of people that worked their tails off all year to find the right guy," Spytek said in the aftermath. "It was very peaceful. We were very thorough. We were confident that we'd done the work the right way to be so calm in such a massive moment for our organization's future. So it wasn't stressful or suspenseful. It was just calm.

"And so we're on the clock, we were like, 'Call up Fernando. He's the guy.'"

The search is on

The official kickoff to the Raiders' search for their next quarterback probably happened on the third weekend of last September, with Spytek and assistant GM Brian Stark traveling to check out the Auburn-Oklahoma game before heading to D.C. for Las Vegas's game against the Commanders. The Sooners' transfer quarterback, John Mateer, was off to a hot start and had entered the quarterbacking equation for 2026.

By then, as part of his normal process, Stark had already broken down Mendoza's film from his two years as Cal's starter and written a report on Mendoza the previous spring, as he did all the other quarterback prospects, not knowing what was to come.

"I thought he had a chance to be a really good prospect," said Stark, recalling his pre-IU assessment of the first pick. "I really did. But I did feel like he was still growing and maturing. I thought he could get stronger. And I thought more offensive exposure would be good. I was kind of waiting to see where the next part of his game was; it was a little bit more of a spread system [at Cal], a little bit more horizontal spread stuff."

At that point, Mendoza was on a longer list of prospects the Raiders wanted to get eyes on over the course of the 2025 season in live settings, as they did Mateer in Oklahoma's 24–17 win over Auburn on Sept. 20. (The QB bulled over a Tigers defender to score the game-winning touchdown that afternoon, for what it's worth.)

Scouts wanting to see coveted prospects in person is relatively standard, and the Raiders' brass's view of the top-end guys in that sort of environment wasn't limited to the quarterbacks. Along those lines, Spytek and Stark were also on hand for BYU-Utah on Oct. 18 to get a live look at Utes first-round tackles Spencer Fano and Caleb Lomu, the same weekend the Raiders played the Chiefs at Arrowhead Stadium, not knowing at that point where their pick would be in the draft order.

Naturally, most scouts see it as even more important to see a quarterback with their own eyes for a wide variety of reasons.

"I get there early," Stark said. "I want to watch everything because I think you can tell a lot about their demeanor and their mindset by watching everything from warmups all the way through, how they start to interact with their teammates pregame. And then, they have their team warmups. And then as the game goes on, you can just see them on the sideline.

"When you're watching on film or you're watching on TV, you don't get to see how they're reacting to different things, you don't get to see how they react and respond to adversity."

That became a factor in Stark's first live exposure to Mendoza the weekend before the trip to Utah. It was Oct. 11 in Eugene, Ore., and he and Raiders senior personnel exec Anthony Patch were there to look at both quarterbacks—with Ducks star Dante Moore on the radar, too. In the fourth quarter that afternoon, with the Hoosiers leading 20–13, Oregon freshman cornerback Brandon Finney Jr. undercut an Indiana receiver's route, picked off Mendoza, and returned the interception for a touchdown.

That tied the game. Autzen Stadium was rocking. Stark trained his binoculars on the IU sideline.

"I could see [Mendoza] come off the field and he took a second, then you could see him go search out his coach and talk through it—he wanted feedback," Stark said. "You could see he was talking about what he saw. I mean, I didn't hear the conversation, obviously, but I could see them interacting."

Stark scribbled some notes down.

Mendoza calmly returned to the field for the next possession and drove the Hoosiers 75 yards in 12 plays, capping the march by perfectly placing a back-shoulder throw from the far hash on Elijah Sarratt for the go-ahead touchdown.

'He's a big dude'

By Thanksgiving week, the draft's quarterback landscape was gaining clarity just as a struggling Raiders team was falling squarely in the mix to pick first.

So Spytek, Stark and assistant director of college scouting Johnathon Stigall took the days ahead of that weekend's game in Los Angeles (against the Chargers) to look more closely at guys they figured would be in their mix at the top of the draft. On Black Friday, they saw Mendoza play in his regular-season finale against Purdue, before heading to Fort Worth to see Cincinnati's Brendan Sorsby and TCU's Josh Hoover face off on Saturday.

It'd be Spytek's first shot to see Mendoza in person.

"Just being on the field with them pregame, you get to feel and see their size," Spytek said. "That was the first time I stood next to Fernando. You're like, He's a big dude. Then, to see the ball come out of his hand, see the velocity. But one thing that was cool about Fernando was when he came out to warm up, he had a very specific routine. He wasn't out there to screw around; headphones on and playing long toss. I mean, he was working.

"And all the other quarterbacks with him—his brother and the other guys—were working, too. It was much more like I watched Tom [Brady] and Peyton [Manning] warm up for years. They weren't out there playing pat-and-go, playing grab-ass. They're out there for a reason."

The other thing that was quickly obvious to Spytek and Stark that day: It was cold. Cold enough that, in the press box, after the game started, an announcement was made that it was the coldest game in Purdue history. With that adversity came an opportunity to see a quarterback, who grew up in Florida and played his first three college seasons in California, in an uncomfortable environment.

The first quarter might've been Mendoza's worst quarter of the season. Indiana had two three-and-outs on three drives. And while the other possession resulted in a touchdown, it was set up by a wayward Purdue punt that gave the Hoosiers a short field.

"It's funny. We asked him about it later—I said, 'Tell me about the Purdue game.' And he was like, 'Oh, I wore way too many clothes. I just wasn't comfortable,'" Spytek said. "But he had never played in a real cold game before, so he kind of learned something from that. He started slow. He missed some easy throws, but just kept working like he does."

On the first possession of the second quarter, Mendoza drove the team 65 yards in 11 plays, covering seven yards on a touchdown run to finish it, which made Spytek say, “Oh, he’s athletic; when he gets running, he’s hard to catch.”

The Hoosiers won, 56–3.

The next week, the Raiders’ brass watched on TV as Mendoza delivered another big moment: a 33-yard go ball to Charlie Becker that was the dagger in finishing off a 13–10 win over top-ranked Ohio State in the Big Ten championship. It had become obvious the Raiders had to ramp up their work on Mendoza.

By the end, they had 11 live game exposures. Spytek and Stark were at the Ducks-Hoosiers rematch in the national semifinal at the Peach Bowl and the CFP title game against Miami, giving the GM three exposures and Stark four to Mendoza. Stigall, Patch, SVP of football operations Mark Thewes, and director of college scouting Brandon Yeargan had all seen him play in person once. And Midlands area scout Matt Hand had also been to three IU practices.

There was plenty of agreement on what they’d all seen.

‘This might be the guy’

The last of those exposures came at Hard Rock Stadium in Miami as the Hoosiers achieved what once seemed impossible, winning the school’s first national championship in football.

Raiders limited partner Tom Brady made the drive over from his Miami residence for that one, joining Davis, Spytek, Stark and Thewes. After Brady—who played with Spytek for a year at Michigan and worked with him in Tampa from 2020 to ’22—got the same look scouts had at Mendoza from field level for warmups, the crew retreated to a suite for the game.

With each play Mendoza made, Stark recalls turning to Brady, who was behind him and to the left, and trading a look that simply said, “Yeah, this might be the guy.” Spytek remembers locking eyes with the seven-time Super Bowl champion after Mendoza’s iconic fourth-down touchdown run to seal the win.

“It’s almost something that’s not said,” Spytek said. “It’s just like, ‘Yeah, that’s what it looks like.”

Five days earlier, Moore had announced he was returning to Oregon, eschewing the chance to jockey with Mendoza for draft position, further clarifying the picture. “It was becoming more obvious that this is the guy,” Spytek said. “But we still had a lot of work to do.”

The coaching search came next, then a scramble to get to the NFL combine.

By then, Stark and his scouts had seen all the tape, and Spytek was just about there on the Indiana film, with the Penn State game sticking out.

“When you watch the all-22 film, it’s so loud, the camera’s bouncing. And he gets zeroed [blitzed] three times in a row and knows they don’t have an answer for it because they gotta get guys out [into the route], and he takes those shots and delivers a perfect ball to win it. And it was a great play by [Omar] Cooper, too.”

Yet, they hadn't gotten the chance to actually sit down and talk to Mendoza.

They'd get 18 minutes with him in Indianapolis.

In the first few minutes, Spytek and new coach Klint Kubiak wanted to get to know him a bit, confirm he was who their scouting work said he was and put him at ease. Then Kubiak and offensive coordinator Andrew Janocko got on the whiteboard and installed a play.

"It was very detailed, with the formation and splits of the receivers, all the different alignment details and all the different route details," Stark said. "There are five different routes on the play, and they're all at different depths. And then all the way through the protection. And then the quarterback's progression versus different coverages."

"If it's a single-high safety, you start here," Janocko told Mendoza. "If it's a two-safety shell, it starts here. If it's a pressure look, this is your answer."

Then the coaches wiped the board clean and turned to a selection of plays they had picked from different games. Mendoza quickly identified each of them solely based on the offensive formation, the opponent and the defensive structure. "This guy," Spytek said, "you didn't even have to push play, and he knew it."

After that, they asked him to return to the whiteboard to draw up and explain the play that the coaches had given him 10 minutes earlier.

"Fernando got right back up there and reinstalled the play to us," said Stark, "like he's been taught that play 15 times. It was very impressive." Spytek added, "Outstanding is probably an understatement for how smart he is and his level of recall and detail."

With that, they moved to the next step—getting to know Mendoza the person a little better.

'That's how you're supposed to act'

The background work had come back clean. The Raiders had scouts with connections to Christopher Columbus High School in Miami, Mendoza's alma mater, that they mined for information. Through the work of a variety of folks, Vegas tried to get to everyone at Cal who interacted with him. Same with Indiana. They asked the standard questions of his ex-teammates at the combine: If you could bring one teammate with you to the NFL, who would it be? Who's the best player you ever played with? Who was the best leader you've played with?

Mendoza's name came back—a lot.

But there's a difference between hearing it and knowing it, and the Raiders knew they'd take significant steps in going from the former to the latter at Mendoza's April 1 pro day.

The Raiders sent the cavalry. Stark, Yeargan, Janocko, VP of player personnel Brandon Hunt and offensive assistant Tim Zetts boarded a private jet in Las Vegas on March 31 that flew to Phoenix to pick up Spytek and Kubiak from the NFL owners' meetings, then to Bloomington for the pro day. The group had a quick dinner after landing and prepared for a busy Wednesday on Indiana's campus.

That Wednesday started with Mendoza's workout. There, the Raiders' officials saw his size, movement and athleticism one more time. But there was something else that stuck out—there wasn't a quarterbacks coach running the workout. Mendoza did that himself.

"Before every throw, he would stand up and say, O.K., Omar Cooper, slant route on the left," Stark said. "He was announcing whatever the play was, just so that there was no confusion on who was up, what route they were running. He ran the whole thing. It was very, very impressive. Really was. He took command."

The confidence in a pressurized environment reappeared. So did his presence.

More than just that, Mendoza remembered everyone.

"After the first time we met at the combine, I saw him at the pro day, and I mean, I hadn't seen him in a month or so," Stark said, "He's like, Oh, hello, Mr. Stark, good to see you again."

After the workout wrapped, the Raiders and Mendoza retreated to a classroom the Indiana staff had set aside for them. Kubiak and Janocko installed more plays. Mendoza showed, while teaching the plays back to the room, that what they saw in Indy was no fluke.

Spytek kept his eyes on Mendoza the whole time as the coaches were giving instructions, and he saw a quarterback in his element, all in and completely engaged in the conversation.

Then, to wrap it up, Stark recalled, "Coach Kubiak just kind of started quizzing him on a bunch of things that they had talked about, trying to make it difficult. And it was difficult, and Fernando just buzzed right through it, didn't bat an eye."

The meeting lasted nearly two hours, and thereafter, the group went to dinner. The Raiders asked Mendoza to arrange it, asking him to pick his favorite place in Bloomington. He chose the Uptown Cafe. Over a steak, Mendoza started asking the Raiders' coaches and personnel guys about their backgrounds and families, growing more at ease as the early-evening meal wore on.

As they left, Spytek said to Thewes, "Man, I wish I could've acted like that in front of a GM and a head coach, an offensive coordinator [and] an assistant GM when I was 22."

"Knowing the gravity of what that dinner could be—if you have a crappy dinner, you might be like, Oh, I don't know about this, this isn't as clear as it used to be," Spytek said. "But, instead, you walk out, and you're like, 'That's what it is supposed to look like. That's how you're supposed to act. That's how you're supposed to have a conversation.'"

'The kid is killing it'

Looking back now, as the 30 visit approached, Spytek can concede he already knew that Mendoza would be the first pick.

"When we walked out of that restaurant, the aggregate of the way he threw the ball and how big he was and the way he moved around and how he showed up for his teammates and how he led the pro day, and then the classroom after that for an hour and a half or two hours or whatever it was, and his intelligence and his focus in there," Spytek said, "And then you go to dinner and you see a different side of him, which is a little more laid-back but super relatable and engaging.

"We were still gonna go through the final parts of our process, but he was gonna probably have to screw it up pretty good at that point. I mean, like, at that point, what's he gonna do?"

Of course, Spytek was projecting a bit on how he figured Mendoza would relate to people from the very top to the very bottom of the Raiders, which would be important during his visit to Vegas.

Mendoza arrived in town late on April 6, with a full day planned for April 7.

Player personnel assistant Patrick Parrilli, a former college quarterback himself, picked up Mendoza at the hotel and led him around, following the itinerary, through the course of a tightly packed day. He spent time with the team's health and wellness group, the trainers, the strength coaches, player-engagement staff and the guys in the equipment room. He also sat down with members of the ownership group, and had significant time with Brady, where it was just the two of them and Spytek in the room.

And for dinner, they went to The Summit Club, a Discovery Land property built by one of those owners (and Discovery Land founder and chairman), Michael Meldman. The group decamped to a private room with a crew that included Davis, Spytek, Stark, Janocko, Sullivan, Thewes and Meldman himself.

As the staff brought out different courses as part of the prix-fixe meal at Geno's, TSC's upscale, on-property restaurant, Davis gravitated toward Mendoza, who engaged his future boss about how the owner got the team from Oakland to Vegas. They talked about Raiders history, too, with Mendoza showing fluency in a language Davis considers his own.

And it wasn't just how Mendoza was doing in that moment. It was, over the day, how the entire building was seeing a guy who was a few weeks away from becoming the No. 1 pick.

He showed an interest in everyone's jobs. He proved to be process-oriented, wanting to know how every department fit into the next. He engaged, asked questions and started building bonds.

"I think as a whole, the building was very impressed," Stark said. "I mean, there wasn't anyone who said anything, but, Wow, this guy's fantastic. I'd love to work with him. That was kind of the unanimous reply."

Spytek, in the middle of all of it, circled back with Parrilli to see how Mendoza's personal caddie for the day was doing.

"It's unbelievable," Parrilli said. "I'm having the best day ever."

"Treating everybody the right way, interacting, off his phone, he was just present all day," Spytek said. "And I think the thing that you like about Fernando is that he understands what the assignment is. Which is to impress, but he's just being himself. So it's not hard for him."

'This guy's a machine'

Back in February, during pre-combine meetings, the Raiders' scouts went through what they regard as an important piece of the process—where the area scout will read his report on a prospect, then national scouts Lenny McGill and Andy Dengler will follow with theirs, and have that followed by any others who'd had exposure to the prospect. They try to treat everyone on their board the same. It's basically a baseline for where the team is on a player.

The remarkable thing, with Mendoza, is that from that point forward, just about every box was checked. From the combine to an initial hour-long, get-to-know-you Zoom with Janocko; to the pro day; to a second, more football-centric Zoom; to the 30 visit, everything was mind-numbingly consistent. Just as people who knew him told the Raiders it would be.

"The thing that comes back from all these people that work with him is like, 'Man, this guy's a machine,'" Spytek said. "When it's time to work on ball, time to study ball, time to get on the field and throw, he's a machine."

The results at Indiana spoke for themselves.

But after seeing it for themselves, the Raiders could speak to it, as well.

So in the final meeting where Mendoza was discussed as a prospect, there was a matter-of-factness to the conversation that indicated what seemed like a slam dunk to the general public as far back as January had become an actual slam dunk for the team making the pick.

"It was just, 'Hey, any new information? Any concerns come up, anything like that?' And I'm like, 'No, no, nothing's come up,'" Stark said. "We do that periodically; we're going through the board, and there are just a few of us in there—Is there any new information on Fernando? No, it's still great. And it was like, O.K., we're good."

That's why, just like Spytek, Stark sat at ease in the war room in the late afternoon hours of April 23—alongside Davis, Meldman, limited partner/likely Davis successor Egon Durban and team president Sandra Douglass Morgan. And it wasn't just that he'd known what the team was going to do for some time.

More than that, it was based on who they were set to bring in.

"It was exciting for a lot of reasons—a lot of change, a long season, long offseason, coaching search, all the work we'd done on Fernando and the whole draft class," Stark said. "I was excited. Never really want to be in this position again, holding the first overall pick, but very comfortable, very confident [that] it's a great opportunity for us. If we have to be in this position, we all felt really good about there being a player like Fernando to be able to take No. 1."

And, sure, that was the assumed conclusion from the start.

But to get to it, it took a lot of time, a lot of people and a lot of steps.
Which, in turn, is why the Raiders, all these months later, feel so good about it.

OFF. COORDINATOR ANDREW JANOCKO

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

'Listen to your feet': Andrew Janocko brings own ideas as new Raiders OC
By Ed Graney
May 29, 2026

They have worked together for a long time now. At stops in Minnesota and New Orleans and Seattle.

They can and do talk about everything.

About responsibilities. About X's and O's. About how the quarterbacks are breaking a huddle.

Andrew Janocko wanted to be here. Wanted to follow Klint Kubiak from the Super Bowl winning Seahawks.

Wanted to be a first-time NFL offensive coordinator for the Las Vegas Raiders under their new head coach.

Wanted to be part of building something. Of creating a culture.

A new role

"Bringing the shield back and then getting to work with unbelievable people," Janocko said. "That's something in this business that really goes underrated is when you can work with good people. It makes the job, the stresses of the job, the good parts even better and the bad parts, you want to fight through those things with the people that you're around."

He is merging into a new role and there is no doubt Kubiak's presence will aid in the transition.

Hey. You have to adapt.

He has seen, the 38-year-old Janocko said, Kubiak grow and develop, been there step-by-step for the process. Janocko will use such experience, along with all the knowledge he has gleaned from other coordinators during his career, to chart his own path with the Raiders as he asks more and more questions and gets more and more feedback.

Kubiak and general manager John Spytek — at least with how the Raiders are now built — have said an ideal situation for any quarterback battle would be for a veteran to start a season and have a rookie learn from him.

Sometimes it works out that way. Sometimes it doesn't.

But there is heightened interest, for good reason, in Fernando Mendoza. The No. 1 overall draft pick is on most everyone's minds who follow the Raiders.

There is also much to learn about playing the position at this level. Much for Mendoza to dissect when taking OTA reps behind veteran Kirk Cousins and fourth-year quarterback Aidan O'Connell.

""I think (Mendoza) is a guy that wants to come in and grind every day, work," Janocko said. "All three of those guys come in every single day and they want to work, they want to learn, they want to be the best in the world.

"He's got two guys in the room with him that just set an unbelievable example with the way they work, the way they prepare, so he's able to see that and grow within himself. I think for us, we're trying to create an environment of competition, trying to create an environment of growth for all three of those guys, no matter where you are in your career."

He has seen Mendoza already take several steps forward, whether it be working under center or going through a progression or creating a mental process in the classroom.

Being able to take what is taught in the classroom into individual drills on the field and then to team drills. It's where a quarterback's growth process really begins.

It's also about constant learning for Janocko, about figuring out ways to make the offense for which Kubiak will call plays better.

Look at the quarterbacks Janocko has worked with – Cousins in Minnesota, Derek Carr in New Orleans, Sam Darnold in Seattle. He knows what intangibles are needed to get the most out of the position.

"You feel like you come into that meeting room each and every single day and you have a place to grow and learn and become a better player, a better competitor, a better teammate," Janocko said.

He wore a T-shirt on Thursday with the slogan "Listen to your feet." He said it goes back a long way.

That it encapsulates everything about the offense, how players are built, how their brains are constructed and then everything from the ground up.

"So if you're listening to your feet, whether you're a quarterback and you're progressing on time within your footwork, or you're an offensive lineman and you're gaining ground on your first step, or you're a receiver, and how are my feet helping to contribute to my route depth," he said. "All those things, are we gaining ground on our first step in the wide zone? So everything, our building blocks start there."

Feet he really likes: Those of tight end Brock Bowers and running back Ashton Jeanty.

Janocko just wants to find different ways of getting them the ball. Bowers, he said, is a proven talent and that Jeanty has already done some great things early in his career.

"Just finding ways to maximize how and when they touch the ball, finding ways to get them open, and then maximizing any time they have the ball in their hands," Janocko said.

The greatest

There was a visitor at Raiders practice Thursday. Minority owner Tom Brady made an appearance. He can be and is a great resource for a new coordinator like Janocko. Someone the latter can lean on when needed.

“He has been very open, somebody that we can pick up the phone and call, or you see him around the building,” Janocko said. “He’s the greatest of all time, so getting to be around him every day and any knowledge that you can pick up from him, just a great resource to have, and something that it’s very appealing sitting in my chair.”

It’s one he wanted. He wanted to be here. Wanted to follow Kubiak to Las Vegas.

Wanted this opportunity.

He has it now, listening to his feet along the way.

Gutierrez: A first-time OC, Andrew Janocko comes to the Raiders with history in mind
By Paul Gutierrez
May 18, 2026

Andrew Janocko is a Pittsburgh guy, through and through, a guy who's more than cognizant of history.

Having grown up a two-hour drive from where Three Rivers Stadium once stood, next to where Acrisure Stadium now lords over the confluence of the Allegheny, Monongahela and Ohio rivers, is one thing. Playing his college ball at Pitt, and being part of the Panther quarterback pantheon with the likes of Dan Marino, Matt Cavanaugh and Kenny Pickett, well, that's another. And, oh yeah, Janocko's social media is filled with images of the Pirates.

The Raiders' new offensive coordinator is also now all in with the Silver and Black. And not just because he has to be. He wants to be.

Yes, two seeming diametrically opposed things can be true at the same time. Welcome to the modern NFL, where ancient rivalries can be put on hold.

"You just respect the history of football, and part of that is the history of the league," Janocko told me on the most recent episode of Upon Further Review. "And one of the storied franchises in the league is the Silver and Black, is the Raiders, is that shield. And so, that's something that growing up, and being just a football fan in general, is something that you respect. You respect certain logos, you respect certain organizations, and that's one.

"Growing up in the '90s and the 2000s, the Rich Gannon years, a lot of wins there, a lot of storied wins. This is a team that went to the Super Bowl [so that] just kind of puts a real respect on this organization."

Talking about respect and Super Bowls, Janocko just won a ring himself.

The 38-year-old Janocko was the Seahawks quarterbacks coach and has worked alongside and with new Raiders coach Klint Kubiak on three of his last four NFL stops.

That would be in Minnesota (2019-21), New Orleans (2024) and Seattle (2025).

So it only made sense for Janocko to join the 39-year-old Kubiak in Las Vegas.

Janocko's reasoning was "twofold," he told me.

"One, it was the opportunity to continue my journey with coach," he said. "Our families have grown up together. Our kids have gone to school together. So when that opportunity presented itself, that was something that we thought was really special, really unique. In this business to … have a new opportunity with somebody that you've grown with in this profession, that you've been to lows and highs with throughout the profession …

"And then to do it at a place like this that has such a storied history, that's one of the revered franchises in the National Football League … the chance to get to come here, put this shield on, put the Silver and Black on and represent that Commitment to Excellence and that 'Just Win Baby' mentality is something that, as a family, we could not pass up."

Janocko, as you can tell, is big on history, and not just the NFL Films kind. He was a history major at Pitt and met his wife Natalie in a Greek history class (he's also a big pro wrestling buff who counts the nWo as one of his favorite cliques).

And given his, ahem, coaching history (he was the Vikings' assistant offensive line coach under Rick Dennison, yes the Raiders' new O-line coach, in 2019) and with who the Raiders signed (Kirk Cousins) and drafted (Fernando Mendoza) at the most important position in team sports this spring, well, allow Kubiak to explain why he wanted Janocko.

"You just look at his resume and the guys that he's worked with," Kubiak said, referencing Cousins in Minnesota, Derek Carr in New Orleans and Sam Darnold in Seattle. "Everywhere he's gone, guys have produced.

"Andrew is just a really, really phenomenal teacher. He knows how to keep it simple for the guys and he works his tail off to make sure he's prepared to go lead those meetings every day. I couldn't ask for a better quarterback coach, offensive coordinator, than Andrew. He's going to do a great job."

Which brings up the obvious question - if the scheme is Kubiak's and Kubiak is expected to be the play-caller on gameday, even as Kubiak said he's never called a game "alone," how does Janocko fit in as his OC?

"There's some parts that we're still figuring out, that we're feeling out, that we are building together," said Janocko, in the OC role for the first time in a coaching career that began in 2011. "But it all comes down to, how can we support Klint in his role as the play-caller? How can we build around our players? And then, what is each individual person's role in fulfilling that?

"That's something that … none of us take lightly - that we all are involved, we all want to pull our weight and that we build something that we put the players in the best situation to be successful. We put Klint in the best situation to be the play-caller, help him, give him any ideas that he would need to be successful. Try to problem-solve for him. That way he can rip the play calls and the guys can go execute."

No matter who is under center, or in shotgun.

Because as we've already established, Janocko is big on history and, thus, relationships (there's already a "baseline of trust" with Cousins, he said) but is looking forward to creating some new history in Las Vegas (Mendoza is a "tremendous worker," he said).

"He's somebody that wants to know the whys of everything, the story behind everything," Janocko said of Mendoza. "What we're calling, but why are we calling it?

"He's really just a sponge that wants to know everything. So it's a lot of fun working with a quarterback like that because he's coming in as a blank slate in this offense - never been in this offense before - and just asking a ton of questions."

As Janocko said, the No. 1 draft pick's curiosity is keeping the coach on his toes.

"He's asking questions that you might not have thought about in a couple of years," Janocko said, referencing his working primarily with vets in the recent past.

"It also makes you evaluate everything. 'I know we've had some success doing it one way, but we could do it another way and be even better.'"

Janocko is also digging having tight end Brock Bowers and running back Ashton Jeanty at the ready.

"Two huge competitors," Janocko said. "Two guys that are pedal-to-the-floor all the time. If we get an hour on the field, that's an hour of full-speed work. We get 30 minutes on the field, that's … 30 minutes of all they've got.

"So those are two guys that don't know another gear; they only know how to go and how to work hard, and that kind of sets the pace for what we want to be and where we want to go."

Like going from a through and through Pittsburgh guy to a full-blown Raider guy. It's kind of historic, when you think about it.

QBS COACH MIKE SULLIVAN

Mike Sullivan is helping build Raiders' next franchise QB — just like 12 years ago

By Sam Warren
Aug. 17, 2026

Shortly after Fernando Mendoza finished his first handful of NFL practices, he sat down with Mike Sullivan to discuss everything that transpired within them. Literally everything.

Before breaking for the summer, the Raiders' new quarterbacks coach and the rookie watched film of every single throw Mendoza made during the Raiders' OTAs practices. Sullivan had the No. 1 draft pick audit every detail of each pass — from his progression and timing to his footwork and accuracy — and evaluate what he did well and where he fell short. Mendoza handwrote his critique, which helped him digest his common mistakes and provided a physical reference for things to work on.

"Didn't have the neatest handwriting," Sullivan joked. "I said, 'maybe you could type this next time.'"

Mendoza reflected on the "voluminous" exercise, as Sullivan put it, throughout the summer and said it has helped him "kill urges" and "make the right play" during training camp. Sullivan and the Raiders' coaching staff have lauded the rookie for not repeating mistakes.

"He's someone that I think a lot of his confidence comes from the preparation and the type of time and effort that he puts in," Sullivan said. "To really continue to press, to continue to work, to improve, to never be satisfied is a benefit to a quarterback because then they get in situations it doesn't seem as hard and it doesn't seem as challenging."

Sullivan, along with head coach Klint Kubiak and offensive coordinator Andrew Janocko, is in charge of building up the Raiders' quarterback of the future. It's the same role Sullivan was in 12 years ago, before he ever knew it.

Sullivan was out of a job in the spring of 2014. He'd been the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' offensive coordinator the previous two seasons, but was out of work after Greg Schiano and his entire staff were purged.

David Carr approached Sullivan with an opportunity. Carr was a backup quarterback and Sullivan the QBs coach for the New York Giants' Super Bowl-winning 2011 team. Now, Carr's younger brother Derek was preparing to enter the NFL, and David felt that Sullivan was the right coach to prepare him for the 2014 NFL Draft.

"I had some time on my hands," Sullivan said. "And I thought, 'What a great way to get back into the game and work with a fine young quarterback.'"

Derek and Sullivan trained for the NFL Combine and Fresno State's Pro Day in the Carr's hometown of Bakersfield, Calif. Sullivan's meticulous approach was the same he used with NFL quarterbacks, and he ensured Carr he would always be "the most prepared guy in the room."

"His impact on me in just those few months was so great that I'm still using those things today," Carr said. "I always joke that (former Raiders head coach Jon) Gruden has seen every clip of film ever in football history. I think Sully is another one of those guys for sure."

Watching film with Sullivan can feel like wringing water from a stone. Carr said that no matter how much of the same tape he watched with the coach, Sullivan always found a way to squeeze out a new teaching point. Carr added that Sullivan's superpower is taking that information and relaying it in a concise format, ensuring his quarterbacks can use what they're learning without being overwhelmed.

Carr believes that Sullivan's emphasis on preparation stems from his Army background. Sullivan graduated from West Point while playing defensive back for the football team. He then attended Army Airborne, Ranger and Assault Schools and served in the 25th Infantry Division before starting his coaching career. Sullivan said he views coaching quarterbacks militaristically, trying to make practice rigorous and thorough so his players feel calm in the chaos of games.

"We try to do everything that we can to enable a quarterback, when he's called on to perform… he's not thinking too much. He's kind of on autopilot," Sullivan said. "He's created muscle memory in his footwork, his upper body, his vision. He's developed that kind of chemistry with his receivers and can anticipate the play call and knows the situation."

Sullivan and Mendoza's post-OTAs debriefings are an example of that. Mendoza feels like his diligence formed that necessary muscle memory to quiet his brain, creating more comfort — and success — on the field.

Carr said his training with Sullivan was similarly intensive, even in the shortened timeframe. The coach taught him fine details about studying film, reading defenses and mechanics. Despite similar focal points carried throughout their sessions, Carr said his training with Sullivan never got stale, which allowed for advanced growth in just a few months.

"There has to be a positive approach (to coaching), and you want to have enthusiasm and be creative," Sullivan said. "Sometimes, you have to change things up a little bit to get it to sink in."

Sullivan has a deep inventory of drills that teach his same tenets, even if, occasionally, a drill itself can feel completely unnatural. He's also not afraid to experiment in the meeting room; he says he'll go off-topic to relate one of his life experiences back to the lesson at hand, and he won't hesitate to "bust chops" when needed to keep things light. His lessons stuck with Carr beyond their time together, and after the Raiders selected Carr in the second round of the 2014 NFL Draft.

"He was showing me things and teaching me things that I was seeing in games he wasn't even my coach for," Carr said. "He was giving me tools that I used throughout my career … little tips he came up on and drills he came up with. I'm still teaching them to kids nowadays."

While Carr remained close with Sullivan throughout his 10 NFL seasons, the two never shared a team. Still, Carr credits Sullivan for setting him up for success in silver and black. Carr holds the Raiders' franchise records for passing yards (35,222), passing touchdowns (217), pass completions (3,201) and pass attempts (4,958), while also leading the team to its last two playoff appearances in 2016 and 2021.

Sullivan might also be able to credit Carr some for his job with the Raiders. Carr was coached by Kubiak and Janocko in 2024 while a member of the New Orleans Saints and formed a relationship with the tandem. When they realized they wanted to add a quarterbacks coach to their staff in Las Vegas, Carr said the Raiders reached out to consult with him about options. Sullivan was a known commodity to both coaches, as he worked with Kubiak in Denver and Janocko in Tampa Bay. But Carr made sure to endorse Sullivan when he was brought up as a candidate.

“I remember they asked me about Sully and I must have went on for about 10 minutes,” Carr said. “I think at that point they were like, ‘Alright man, we get it.’ I always say good things about everybody, but I just had more to say about Sully and I couldn’t stop talking.”

Whether Carr’s cosign was a factor in Sullivan’s hiring or not, the coach is now a key part of the braintrust leading the Raiders’ offense. Kubiak said Sullivan’s coaching and life experience have taught the team’s quarterbacks a lot thus far, and Carr believes pairing Sullivan’s veteran nature with Kubiak and Janocko is a perfect connection.

“From a football aspect, I mean these guys are hard workers,” Carr said. “They’re grinding tape. They’re doing all the things you would want as a player. They’re trying to find that one thing that may cost us a game and so they can show you and then you’re ready for it in a game. We’re all human, we all may miss something, but if three of them are doing it, they’re probably not gonna miss a lot.”

Carr also believes that Sullivan is a strong fit to shape Mendoza based on his own experiences of receiving Sullivan’s coaching as a young player. Carr said as long as Mendoza’s willing to be a “sponge,” Sullivan will ensure Mendoza absorbs all he can. And with the Raiders appearing to take a slow approach with Mendoza’s development, Sullivan will ensure the rookie is fully prepared before he’s deployed.

Sullivan said that not all young quarterbacks can be coached the same. Differing personalities and learning processes can cause him to convey his message differently to different players. But Sullivan’s characterization of Mendoza and Carr is quite similar.

Sullivan on Carr: “He was into every little detail, how much he really wanted to improve. There was nothing that was too small. He didn’t take anything for granted.”

And on Mendoza: “He just wants to get better. He’s gonna do anything and everything, whether it’s in the meeting room or on his own, going through his own walk-throughs that he does… He’s so committed to the process and not concerned whatsoever with anything else.”

Sullivan did not want to compare the two players; he complimented both of their arm strengths and mobility without relating them to each other. Yet he did confirm that their drive is of the same ilk.

“I think the competitive spirit and the desire to improve, grow and get better is something that they both share,” Sullivan said.

How much Mendoza grows will have a determining effect on how much the Raiders can get better. Sullivan will play a key role in his improvement, hoping to foster the same success in his new pupil that only his old one led the franchise to in the last quarter century.

DEF. COORDINATOR ROB LEONARD

THE ATHLETIC

'A little crazy' for the Raiders defense: A look at Rob Leonard's scheme and history
By Sam Warren
June 8, 2026

Rob Leonard has more responsibilities now than he's ever had in his 13 seasons as an NFL assistant coach.

The Las Vegas Raiders' defensive coordinator is getting a chance to build and implement his system for the first time; he'll make his play-calling debut in the fall. However, while Leonard's duties have multiplied as a first-time coordinator, he's finding parts of his new job are less active than those of old.

"Feeling like not having anywhere to go during individual has been different," Leonard said in his first comments since his February hiring. "I feel like I should be bouncing around, but that's just my personality … I'm a higher energy guy out there, as you can tell."

Leonard's vigor for coaching has been palpable during offseason team activities. While the longtime position coach no longer has a specific drill to run during individual periods, he can't help but get involved.

Leonard will stand on sleds for his defensive linemen and pass rushers, hold bags for his linebackers to hit and run routes for his defensive backs to cover. He'll even serve as the ball carrier in unit-wide pursuit drills, running downfield as his players feign tackles upon him.

His actions exemplify the effort he wants his defense to play with. Leonard said he wants his group to be aggressive to a fault. He feels like he's viewed as "a little crazy" for his philosophy, but he believes an attacking mindset is crucial for defensive success.

"I would like them to play fast, even at the cost of a mental error," Leonard said. "I don't like to see hesitation on the field, so even if you're unsure, make a decision and go and let us coach. Let us do our job, but I don't want any slow blinkers out there."

The approach is one that Leonard has employed since he walked on at NC State as a linebacker. And it's one the Raiders need to adopt following a season during which they were among the league's worst in getting after the quarterback and creating turnovers. After Klint Kubiak promoted Leonard from defensive line coach this offseason, Leonard has vowed his group will embody his methods.

"Style of play, man," Leonard said of what will stick out about his defense. "I'm going to coach the defense like I coach the D-line. I still do the same things I do. Not going one-for-one, attacking the ball, effort in pursuit. We start there, but that's always got to stick out, and a product on the field that you know what it looks like."

While it's clear Leonard will emphasize playing with reckless abandon, there's still a lot to be learned about how he'll run his unit. Here's more on what organized team activities have taught us about Leonard and his scheme.

Leonard's influences

There's no telling what a Leonard defense will look like schematically until the games begin. The coach is a fan of that ambiguity.

"It is great, because it's trying to keep an advantage," Leonard said.

But there is some public knowledge about the scheme. The group will be operating out of a 3-4 base, a departure from what the Raiders ran last season under head coach Pete Carroll and defensive coordinator Patrick Graham. Leonard's system will put a lot of responsibility on the inside linebackers, as their two outside counterparts will often align at the line of scrimmage with the three down linemen.

The linebacker group was a weakness for the Raiders last season, but they're confident about their new pairing, free-agent arrivals Quay Walker and Nakobe Dean.

"I keep saying they're multipliers," linebackers coach Ronell Williams said. "They change the math when you get the one-on-one situations, become plus one in coverage and in situations where the football IQ takes over."

It's known that Leonard will also be drawing plenty from his former bosses. The expectation is that the defense will look similar to what Mike Macdonald employs in Seattle, as Kubiak saw its success first-hand during their Super Bowl run.

Leonard learned its concepts while with Macdonald in Baltimore in 2022. Macdonald's scheme features two-high, split-safety coverage shells and a versatile nickel defensive back. The same can be said about Leonard's defense so far during Raiders OTA practices.

But Leonard's influences extend beyond Macdonald's tutelage. Star pass rusher Maxx Crosby said the coach is invoking principles from Steve Spagnuolo, Brian Flores and Graham as he teaches his scheme, leaning on his time under each coordinator as he becomes his own.

"He's been with a lot of different people and has a lot of different influences," Crosby said. "He's not a robot in anything he does; he's not trying to just do what everybody else wants him to do. He's going to do it his way. And guys respect that because they know how hard he works."

With Spagnuolo and Flores being blitz-heavy coordinators, Leonard's defense might be more aggressive with extra rushers. Walker and Dean have also proven to be successful blitzers at previous stops, as have defensive backs Taron Johnson and Jeremy Chinn — Las Vegas's personnel would allow Leonard to run a more attacking scheme. Each of those players will also help Leonard deploy the simulated pressures that have become a staple of Macdonald's scheme.

DB versatility

The nickel position has been a key to success for many modern NFL defenses, especially those built around the Macdonald system. The Raiders have multiple options at nickel under Leonard, and the coordinator seems keen on using each one in unique ways.

Johnson, Chinn and rookie Treydan Stukes have all been lining up at nickel during OTA practices. Each has also seen snaps at deep safety. When one is in the slot, another is generally back deep at safety alongside Isaiah Pola-Mao. And the two defensive backs will often switch between plays, sometimes depending on how the offense lines up.

The fluctuation is intentional, defensive backs coach and passing game coordinator Joe Woods said. By deploying their versatile defensive backs in different spots, the Raiders believe they can gain an advantage over their opponents.

“It provides more flexibility for us,” Woods said. “It gives us a chance to kind of dictate what we’re doing, where the offense doesn’t have a bead on it. It’s something we’re gonna continue to try to go at, and we have the right players. I think there will be some packages that we can use throughout the season that can help us.”

Moving alignments is part of the role of nickel defenders — switching positions with another player on the field, less so. However, Johnson, Chinn and Stukes are three of the Raiders’ better defensive backs, so keeping them on the field and maximizing their talents is in the best interest of this unit.

Interchanging nickels and safeties could also create confusion for the opposing offense. The Raiders struggled to force errors in 2025, as their eight interceptions were tied for the fifth-fewest league-wide and their 52 pass breakups were more than only the Dallas Cowboys.

Leonard said he’s intent on boosting ball production in his first year at the helm, and this unorthodox movement within his secondary could help him do so.

WR MALIK BENSON

By Paul Gutierrez
July 30, 2026

Malik Benson is the Raiders' Odysseus.

His football journeys have taken him from Lansing High School, just outside of Kansas City, to Hutchinson (Kan.) Community College to (take a deep breath, now) Alabama to Florida State to Oregon to, yes, Las Vegas as a sixth-round draft pick this spring.

No, no encounters with a cyclops, a witch or a flock of sirens…that we know of, mind you.

But the Southern Nevada desert is Benson's fifth different stop in five years, his sixth in seven, and the rookie receiver is looking forward to putting down some Silver and Black roots in Las Vegas.

Plus, his numerous stops on his football Odyssey actually set him up for success when it comes to being comfortable with being uncomfortable and adapting to new schemes.

"I've been to a lot of different schools and … I had to outwork the people that were there in front of me that had been there for some years," Benson told me on Upon Further Review. "Learning new playbooks, getting coaching from a whole bunch of different coaches, going with that dog mentality of, shoot, I've got to go and I've got to earn a job. I've got to, you know, take what's mine. I've got to learn the playbook. I've got to connect with my teammates, and things like that.

"So, I feel like doing that in college and being kind of uncomfortable in college, once I got here it was kind of a smooth transition because it was just like, there's not gonna be a concept that I haven't heard. Maybe it was called something else but, you know, I've seen pretty much every single concept."

In 39 combined games, 27 starts, at Alabama, Florida State and Oregon, Benson, who did not begin playing organized football until his freshman year of high school, caught 81 passes for 1,192 yards with eight touchdowns.

He also had a breathtaking 85-yard punt return for a TD against USC last fall.

And while Benson was not expected to challenge for a starting receiver gig with the Raiders, he has impressed enough to get first-team reps early in camp, and he is expected to contribute.

Again, take note of his punt return abilities and his special teams value.

"I want to see his explosiveness come to life," said Raiders offensive coordinator Andrew Janocko. "We're going to want to maximize what he does, how he comes off the ball, be able to challenge him mentally and do different things with him and just see him grasp the offense and take it from the meeting room to the field."

As noted before, Benson's ability to process, thanks to his travels, is one reason to believe.

Another? His 4.37 speed.

The 6-foot-1, 195-pound Benson glides when he runs, a by-product of his track background. In high school, he qualified for the state finals in the 100m, 200m, the 4x100m and the long jump.

Yes, it all translates onto the football field, he said.

"I was really good at long jump, and I feel like with long jump, you have to have a certain amount of coordination to be able to run full speed and stop on a dime," Benson said. "Kind of being at the top of the route, in and out of breaks, things like that. The down-the-field speed, you know, obviously that's the 100 and then the 200 and things like that.

"Being able to play sports like basketball and run track, all around that helped me. Once I was able to play football, it's just like I had that competitive edge in every other sport. I just had to kind of learn how to play the game and then once I learned how to play the game, and my mom finally let me play, I just really just fell in love with the sport."

Yes, the siren song of football called to Benson.

So much so that the lifelong Chiefs fan and his family had a decision to make after the Raiders pulled his card at No. 195 overall.

"When you get the opportunity to get that call from the Raiders organization, you can't be nothing but happy," Benson said. "So, you know, once I got that call, I knew that me and the family, we had to trash all that [Chiefs] gear and put on that black and silver."

Talk about an odyssey.

QB KIRK COUSINS

Kirk Cousins brings lessons to Raiders that began in his Michigan home
By Adam Hill
July 12, 2026

HOLLAND, Mich. — The four letters scribbled on a standard business nametag served both as a completely unnecessary introduction of the town's hometown hero and biggest star while also providing a perfect reminder that little has changed despite his immense professional success.

Presumed Las Vegas Raiders starting quarterback Kirk Cousins is back home at his alma mater, Holland Christian High School, running a football camp that is more field day than hard-core athletic endeavor.

It's far from a fly-by-night operation whereby an athlete pops in and collects a check for lending his name and some photo ops, but more so another chapter in a love affair between a man and the community that shaped him.

By the end of the camp, he's calling on several of the 204 fourth, fifth and sixth graders by name when they raise their hands to ask and answer questions ranging from football to scripture.

And they are calling him "Kirk," the name written by hand in marker on his nametag, at least until an afternoon storm washed it away early on the first day.

"I think it makes a statement that he's not separate from anyone else," his father, Don, said of the nametag. "That he's no better than anyone else. He's just another guy that happened to be given an ability by God to throw the football and to have the mind necessary to play quarterback. And he's where he's at because of who God made him to be."

It's a lesson Cousins learned from Holland and one he is still trying to share with a community that helped shape the kind of leader the Raiders are getting for at least one season.

The roots
Don Cousins, now the senior lead pastor of Discovery Church in Orlando, Florida, moved his wife and three children to Holland from suburban Chicago in search of a quieter life and one more aligned with the family's core values when Kirk was in seventh grade.

If there is anything the elder Cousins talks about nearly as much as his faith, it's competition and winning, core beliefs that have certainly been passed on to Kirk.

Don and his wife believed if they could "win" the next eight years, through the time older brother Kyle and younger sister Karalyne would all be done with high school, then they would give them all the tools they needed to compete in life for the rest of their lives. That, he believed, would make them winners as parents.

That goal was accomplished in this idyllic, picturesque community just miles from the shore of Lake Michigan.

“As a dad, I’m really just proud of who Kirk is as a person,” Cousins said. “He handles himself really, really well because of who he is on the inside. His character, his integrity, his genuine care and concern for other people. He understands what leadership is all about, and he understands that leadership is influence. …

“He genuinely cares about other people and doesn’t use them for his own benefit. He’s an equipper of other people and because of that, how he handles himself on the field becomes a winner as well.”

The leadership traits that have become synonymous with Cousins in the NFL were evident to those around him from the beginning. So much so that his mother started calling him the “Pied Piper” early in his youth.

“All three of our kids have a passion they get from their father, but Kirk at an especially young age was organizing activities in preschool,” MaryAnn Cousins said. “Then in kindergarten and first grade, he was organizing things at recess or football games. I kept getting calls as early as preschool for people to set up play dates with Kirk. I was just like, ‘Boy, you sure are popular.’ I don’t know what it was about him.”

Don Cousins believes the “clean-cut” image harped on by the media has hidden the fact his son has a “dynamic personality.”

“Every team he’s ever been on, he’s been a team captain,” the elder Cousins said. “He’s a lot of fun, and although he’s clean cut and he doesn’t run on edge of life morally or ethically if you will, the perception in some cases is that he’s viewed as a little bit square. He’s not square. He’s a lot of fun and part of the reason why the coaches come out and his friends still come is because he maintains all those relationships.”

Those attributes helped him find success on the field at Holland Christian, just steps from his front door, in football, basketball and baseball.

But it was football that would capture his heart right there on the same campus where he now hosts his camp.

“I think I learned right over here in this shed, the weight room, what it took to really work and grind at the game,” Kirk Cousins said. “Not just to go out and play, but to put the work in over the summer in the heat, lifting and running. I had teammates who were tough, hardworking people, and they kind of set an example for me. Then I had fun. So I think it was multifaceted, but there’s no doubt that the foundation was laid right here on this property.”

His favorite football memory remains a fourth-and-18 conversion in overtime, followed by a successful 2-point conversion that sent the student section scrambling to rush the field in a victory.

“Those are really special memories, and they do come back when you step on the grass here,” he said.

The growth

It took until late in the recruiting process, but Cousins, who will be 38 on Aug. 19, eventually landed a scholarship to nearby Michigan State, where his NFL abilities would be sharpened.

He credits former Spartans defensive tackle Justin Kershaw for further strengthening his acumen as a leader.

That started after his first practice, one in which Cousins admittedly struggled and started to question whether he belonged at such a high level.

Kershaw found him later in the day and offered words of encouragement that bolstered his confidence despite his struggles.

“When I ended up getting voted captain and people asked me how, I said I just did what Justin did,” Cousins said. “To have somebody to copy and model really helps. I’ve always taken that with me. Veteran leadership helps in the NFL. Now in the league, teams change so much that it’s hard. But if you can build relationships and be together longer, that continuity can make a difference.”

He didn’t say it, but it’s clear that will be part of his role with rookie quarterback Fernando Mendoza. Cousins isn’t there to be a coach, but the organization understands Mendoza will be well-served by simply following the example set by Cousins.

Mendoza said on Maxx Crosby’s podcast this week that the best pieces of advice from Cousins so far have been about the importance of preparation and remaining genuine and not try to change perceptions or to please anyone.

“He said you’re not going to last long in this league if you’re not genuine,” Mendoza said. “Because they don’t want to follow an inauthentic leader. They will talk in the locker room about how this guy is a phony and question what you’re doing. So I just try to be true to myself because if you’re genuine, whether it’s what you think your teammates in the locker room want to see, the advice he’s given me is just to be yourself.”

That is exactly what Cousins has done throughout his career with Washington, Minnesota and even Atlanta where the start of his tenure was hampered by his recovery from a major Achilles surgery.

Despite at times being mocked on the outside by those who don’t understand him, Cousins has been embraced everywhere because he stays true to himself. And he’s been rewarded for his success.

He signed a landmark deal in Minnesota and found success for six seasons until the organization decided it was going to select a rookie quarterback and move on from him after his injury. Cousins landed in Atlanta only to be a bit blindsided when the Falcons also drafted a rookie quarterback in the first round.

Yet Cousins eventually found his way back on the field and closed last season with four straight wins as a starter before hitting the market and choosing to come to the Raiders, who he was well aware would pick Mendoza with the top pick.

“The pitch for me was the ball,” he said. “The scheme. The coaches. The chance to get it going in the right direction again. It’s a proud tradition there. I view it as a privilege to be a part of getting it going again and getting the football part of it right. I just had to be OK with living in the Mojave Desert. And when I got there, I was a little nervous. But after two months, you see it's definitely workable. You need your electrolytes and your canteen of water. But we can absolutely make this work."

So far, so good.

Cousins and Mendoza quickly built a relationship, one that was on full display in their "Step Brothers" parody for the team's schedule release video.

But after a productive offseason program, there was no doubt where Cousins would be in the six weeks off before training camp opens in late July.

"I've often asked that question myself," he said of why his family maintains an offseason residence and permanent bond with Holland. "We could go anywhere. Do we really want to spend six weeks in West Michigan every summer? And the answer to me has always been, without a doubt, yes. I think it's the combination of the memories made here. The people I know here. The climate. The summer is favorable. You've got the water and the beach. But this is a special place for me."

The community

Holland isn't just a place where Cousins keeps a vacation home as an investment property. He remains a key part of the community.

The clerk at Baja Grill on the main drag lights up when discussing Cousins' frequent visits, relaying he often orders the chicken nachos and raves about the experience every time he does as if he's being served filet mignon at the finest steak house on the Strip.

Among the first things one notices being in the presence of Cousins is how everyone feels as if they are the most important person in the room when he's around. When fans, friends, or really anyone, approaches, Cousins is quick to start the conversation by asking about them. He appears genuinely interested in getting to know people who often appear to be hoping for nothing more than a handshake. It's evident all around a town where Cousins has laid down roots beyond just his own property.

Cousins and his wife, Julie, decided a few years ago to buy Clearbrook Golf Course, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year, to spare it from developers, a fate that had already taken historic West Shore Golf Course from the area.

"Our concern was that it would get removed and become apartments or housing or whatever was going to happen to it," Cousins said. "We felt like if we could preserve it as a golf course for the next generation, we'd like to step in and be able to do that. That's still our goal."

It was no ordinary business deal.

The Cousins worked with owner Jim Jeltema and his wife, who are nearing retirement age, to purchase the course but keep them in charge.

Despite what was undoubtedly a hefty price tag for the transaction, the couples operated on mostly handshake agreements until the final step in the process. They even shared lawyers and experts for several of the key points of the deal.

“One of the things I get asked a lot is, ‘What is Kirk like?’” Jeltema said. “I think his integrity level is unimpeachable. He has such a solid human compass, and he just always uses that conscience to help him make decisions. … In my experience, he was exactly the guy you’d expect him to be, based on what you know about him and what you’ve read about him, through the entire process. There was never a time I would say something I needed that they didn’t respond to positively. It was just a really good relationship. And still is.

“The one promise he made is that this will stay a golf course. I turned down two offers from developers. I didn’t see any sense in going that route because I felt a long-term commitment to the staff, and I want to see them stay employed. He’s helped us do that.”

The camp

Cousins’ camp, which endured a hiatus because of COVID and is finally ramping back up again, is a key example. He dropped the age range this year to include his own sons, Cooper (8) and Turner (7), and plans to move the ages up as they grow.

It’s not just a way for Cousins to reach out to young kids in the area. Many of the volunteers are local high school and college football players who get the chance to interact with Cousins and pick his brain. Others are former high school pals of the quarterback who get to spend time with their friend.

His family is omnipresent. So are Laura Jongekrijg and her daughter Dana Geurink, the co-directors of the camp.

Jongekrijg was an athletic administrator at Holland Christian when Cousins attended school there and has remained close to the family.

She approached one youth as he arrived for the second day of camp to make sure he had a good experience on the previous day.

“It was the best day of my life,” the child responded.

Jongekrijg later remarked the goal was just to give them their best days of the summer.

But Cousins and his team work diligently to make sure the experience is a positive one. At one point, he is engaged in a meticulous discussion about whether the footballs should be smaller for the fourth graders to make them easier to grip. Shortly thereafter, he’s engaged in what becomes a negotiation on overtime procedures for one of the games.

There’s not a detail he wants to leave unchecked, which is why Jongekrijg is one of several people monitoring radar and weather forecasts and relaying updates to Cousins in case things need to be moved inside.

“Obviously, he gives back so much financially, but I think this is the bigger chunk of what he does,” Jongekrijg said. “He gives these kids a piece of his soul. He’s out there telling kids that life is hard, but you have to be strong and courageous. That kind of giving back is priceless to these kids, and I don't think he has a clue about the way he influences lives around here. He has no idea."

That included Cohen Jansen, who just wrapped up his freshman season and is next in line to become the starting quarterback at Holland Christian in the future.

"It's so awesome to have him here," Jansen said. "He's such a humble guy, and he has done everything the right way. I think it's cool he shows the kids they can be humble and still have success."

Maroons head coach Dave Abberger called Cousins an "icon" in the community and credited him for being present more than just at his camp.

He said Cousins regularly sends texts and video messages to the team and individual players throughout their season that are often used in film sessions to inspire, motivate and teach.

"We don't have a ton of celebrities, but we do have Kirk," Abberger said. "I think what makes it cool is that when he comes back there is absolutely no pretense. He's just back home.

"And nobody's ever going to know about those little things he does for our players. It's absolutely incredible for someone of his caliber to invest that kind of time in the players to this day. Every Saturday, he wakes up and checks high school football scores. And the kids know that. To know that he cares and that it's not a transactional thing for him, but something he does because he actually cares, is what makes it so special."

One of the most important parts of the event to Cousins is the dads lunch on the last day of the camp.

The fathers of the campers head into the auditorium for a lunch where Cousins talks to them before taking questions ranging from faith to fatherhood to football. Mostly the prior. It's an open forum for Cousins and the dads to discuss both their ambitions and their shortcomings. It's there Cousins tells them he and Julie sat down this year to draw up a family Constitution that will serve as a guiding document for what he hopes will be generations of Cousins to come.

Football still important

Cousins, of course, is a professional football player. And a very good one. He is expected to start for the Raiders this season, though just how long he will keep the job is largely dependent on both his success and that of the team.

But he plans to be on the field.

"There's certainly a long checklist of football accomplishments I'd still love to get and a Lombardi (Super Bowl championship) is at the top of that list," he said. "But ultimately, I think it's about enjoying another year in the locker room with the guys trying to play the best football we can possibly play and win as many football games as we can possibly win."

He said one of the big lessons he has taken from his 14-year career is that you can't cheat the process. There are no shortcuts.

The key, Cousins believes, is to commit to the process and trust that if everyone in the organization pulls in the same direction, there will be a chance to reach their ultimate goals.

It's similar to how he hopes to represent himself as both a successful player and a strong representative of the community.

"I think you can have both, but I think it would be a shame to be a great football player and not a great man," he said. "I think any player would say that. Certainly who you are as a person is more important. That's how my parents raised me."

Not that he's stressing out about his image.

"I think honestly you just have to be your authentic self," he said. "I guess there would be pressure if you're being somebody you're not. And I'm not perfect. So you just have to understand that people are obviously watching and you want to walk with integrity. But I was raised right here to be that guy when nobody is looking.

"I've got my wife and my parents and siblings who will keep me in line if I'm not the guy I ought to be, but I just try to be authentically me and let the chips fall where they may."

That will almost certainly be on the shores of Lake Michigan.

Swan song? Maxx Crosby drops bars on the mic as smoothly as he drops QBs
By Adam Hill
June 6, 2026

Nothing guarantees what the future holds for star Las Vegas Raiders edge defender Maxx Crosby.

He hopes it could involve working with Future, however. More on that in a moment.

It has been a wild few months for Crosby, even if he's able to downplay the chaos.

He's not only been rehabbing from knee surgery, the eighth procedure on his body in his seven NFL seasons, but also he was at the forefront of one of the wildest voided trades in recent memory when the Baltimore Ravens shipped him back to the Raiders after growing concerned about his physical.

That's the official story.

But Crosby, whose media advocates leaked his interest in being traded during Super Bowl week, insists he's happy being back with the Raiders and ready to move forward after seeing the grass isn't always greener on the other side. Or purpler? You get the point.

"This has been an amazing offseason," Crosby said. "I know the biggest pet peeve of mine is when people see me and they're like, 'Man, you good?' and I'm like, 'I've never been better.' Honestly and I don't just say that just to say it, I truly mean it and believe it. I have great people around me. My circle's never been tighter and I go to war with two to three foxhole guys, I don't need 15 people with me. I've got the right people around me, truly, and it's extremely special."

The experience led him to a peace and a greater appreciation and comfort level with his inner circle.

"I faced a ton of adversity," he said. "There's been a lot of bullets flying in my direction. And truly, you figure out who you are in those type of moments. And everyone has a different quote about pressure makes diamonds and all these different things and sayings and things like that, but ultimately, it's real.

"Whenever it's really going on, you figure out who you are, and you have a choice, you can fold or you can respond. And I know myself. I'm not working to just come back, I'm coming back better, and that's my mindset."

Nothing guarantees he will be with the Raiders at the end of this year. It's not a slam dunk he will be on the roster when the season starts. The trade of Cleveland Browns star Myles Garrett to the Los Angeles Rams last week set the market and laid down the gauntlet for other teams to try to compete.

Some contender could blow away the Raiders with an offer. But for now, Crosby is with the only organization he's known and the one whose logo is tattooed on his body.

And he's content, which is a good thing for him and the Raiders. Perhaps it's why he's reached a point of feeling comfortable enough to share his other passions with the world.

While wrecking offensive lines and destroying quarterbacks' plans comes natural to Crosby, there is something more vulnerable about performing and putting out his music.

About exposing his soul through the words he writes down on paper and then raps into a microphone.

"I've been doing this since high school," said Crosby, who writes or freestyles all of his own songs. "So, yeah, finally I was like, 'Screw it, I'm dropping music.'"

He has put out several singles this summer, including "2AM in Vegas," "PlaqueBoyMaxx" and "Double R."

As far as athlete rappers go, he's got some bars.

Crosby said his passion for music began in high school when he and his friends would record music as a way of staying out of trouble. For much of his career, despite his success and popularity, something held him back from putting his soul out for the world to see.

That's no longer the case.

"I used to in the past, try to do everything by the book, and try to do everything — 'How is everyone going to take this?'" he said. "But I've had these songs that I wanted to release for a long time, and I'm like, 'I really don't care what anyone has to say, to be honest.' I know what I do on a daily basis. People are going to have their comments, people are going to be negative, people are going to be positive, but ultimately it's what I love and I do it as a passion. It's an escape for me.

"I think a lot of people like it, a lot of people can say whatever, but I think it's ultimately just cool to finally just be like, 'I don't care, I'm dropping the music.' If you don't like it, it is what it is."

It's a big step for Crosby, who says he would like to collaborate with popular rapper Future on a project at some point.

For now, he's in tune with himself and the Raiders.

FB CONNOR HEYWARD

From Ironhead's son to Cam's brother, Connor Heyward aims to stand out in his own right
By Levi Edwards
March 17, 2026

There's a sense of pressure for Connor Heyward that has come from his last name and the position he plays.

His father is late fullback Craig "Ironhead" Heyward, the 1988 first-round pick who played 11 seasons in the NFL. He was selected to the Pro Bowl in 1995 as an Atlanta Falcon after totaling 1,433 scrimmage yards and eight touchdowns.

Connor's older brother, Cameron Heyward, is heading into his 16th season playing for the Pittsburgh Steelers – the team that also drafted Connor in 2022. With 477 solo tackles and 92 quarterback sacks in his career, Cameron is a four-time All-Pro, seven-time Pro Bowler and 2023 Walter Payton Man of the Year recipient.

So yeah, that's what's Connor has to live up to.

"I know every time I step on the field they're saying, 'That's Ironhead's kid' or 'That's Cam Heyward's little brother' and that's something that I go out there and I remember," Connor Heyward said. "I play with a little edge because I'm undersized. ... You have to play with an edge and I feel that's what gotten me to this point. Just playing hard, playing until the whistle is blown and just doing your job."

"Both of them being great players, not just OK players, people that are the best at their game, I know what they do and I know what it takes," he added of his father and brother. "I have seen all the work they've put in and I know what it's going to take to get there, but I want to be better than them as well."

Heyward was an H-back at Michigan State and recorded 11 total touchdowns in college. With his 6-foot, 230-pound frame, he transitioned over to fullback after being drafted. In his time with the Steelers, he was utilized in a multitude of ways, doing more than just blocking as he notched five total touchdowns (three receiving, two rushing).

Per Next Gen Stats, Klint Kubiak had two or more running backs on the field for 25.4 percent of total snaps. His use of 20-23 personnel was the seventh-highest in the league with a 42.5 percent success rate.

To strip down the football mumbo jumbo, Kubiak is still a fan of using the traditional fullback in his scheme.

"Once Coach [Kubiak] called me and then talked to the GM [John Spytek], it was like, 'This is where I need to be,'" Heyward said. "And they talked about how they would use me, and how I fit this offense and what he did in Seattle and what he did in New Orleans."

"I know being a fullback, you have to do the dirty work," he added. "I know I'm a versatile piece on offense, whether that's catching the ball, blocking, sliding back or having an [isolation] on a linebacker. I feel like I can do a lot and this offense is really going to be able to show that."

The fullback also adds value to the Raiders on special teams with 28 total tackles and 1,124 special teams snaps in four seasons played.

"No matter what you play on special teams, it takes a mentality," he said. "It takes fundamentals, it takes everybody being on the same page and that's what people sometimes don't understand. Everybody has to be on the same page whether that's the cadence, punt direction, kick direction, being in the correct lane. ... It's something I'll always want to do for the rest of my career."

Along with his expanded role, he's also looking forward to reuniting with free agent signing Jalen Nailor, as the two were teammates at Michigan State from 2018-2021.

And to state the obvious, the ability to create his own legacy is equally enticing.

"Going back to Pittsburgh, being drafted there where my entire family is from, it was home and I kind of lived in a bubble," he said. "And I feel like I kind of have to get uncomfortable and me coming out here is definitely uncomfortable, but I'm excited about it."

RB ASHTON JEANTY

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Ashton Jeanty looks to take step forward — and take on Raiders leadership role
By Adam Hill
July 30, 2026

Las Vegas Raiders running back Ashton Jeanty didn't put up the kind of numbers he had hoped to as a rookie last season.

Even though that was mostly a result of a dysfunctional offense and an inconsistent offensive line, Jeanty was still able to take some lessons from the experience.

"When everything is not going well, continuing to go to work and having hope and faith," Jeanty said of what he learned last season. "I think that'll carry into this year. Just taking it one week at a time, whether you win or you lose, you've got to attack the next game and the next week with the same mindset.

"I'd say just (being) consistent. Sometimes you don't always get the results you want on the field, but you have to continue to be consistent regardless of the results that you get week after week."

Perhaps it's that mindset that has allowed Jeanty to allow his voice to be heard a bit more as he enters his second season.

"I think being more vocal for sure," Jeanty said of one of his goals. "It's always tough being in the first year trying to figure out so much stuff. But this year, there's a lot of expectations for me and I think I've got to make a big jump. I think that starts with helping my teammates as well and just being a better teammate. So, I think that starts with leadership."

New offensive coordinator Andrew Janocko has noticed.

"I think he's taking a leadership role, and I love to see that from him," he said. "Love to see him just come with that enthusiasm every day, so we're excited for him and what he brings. And just keep coaching every single rep, getting better, being very deliberate on what we're asking him to do each and every day so we can build on his strengths to put him in a position to be successful."

That will likely include using him as a receiver even more in the new system after he was able to haul in 55 catches for 346 yards and five touchdowns as a rookie.

The scheme of Janocko and head coach Klint Kubiak should help by putting Jeanty in more positive situations in both the run and pass game.

"I feel like I can run in any scheme, but this one's especially great," Jeanty said. "Running the wide zone and really attacking the defense and getting them running and then hitting them with some inside zone and play action. So, everything goes together really well and I'm just super excited to keep getting better at the run scheme."

That could help create even more opportunities in the passing game.

“I think (this offense) is going to help a lot,” Jeanty said. “That was one thing I worked on this offseason, just getting better at running routes. In this offense, anybody can pretty much do any route. So, the more I continue to do that, I think the more it’ll help the team out and help us win.”

So will an improved offensive line.

Left tackle Kolton Miller is fully healthy entering camp and the Raiders made center Tyler Linderbaum the highest-paid interior offensive lineman in NFL history with the knowledge the group would have to get better up front.

The bonds are already forming between Jeanty and the guys up front.

“Ashton’s a fun guy to be around,” Linderbaum said. “Extremely hard worker. Another guy that just wants to be great. Really excited to be able to play with him. As an offensive line unit, the run game starts with us if we can block the guys up front. And then having a special (talent) back there to have the big regular runs is going to be really valuable and important.”

Jeanty’s bonding hasn’t been limited to his offensive teammates.

He was excited when the team signed Quay Walker, who he considers one of the best linebackers in the league.

Jeanty wasted no time sitting down with Walker during OTAs to exchange notes to help them understand each other’s positions better.

“He’s so young, fast, electric, powerful,” Walker said. “I haven’t really gone up against him in pads, but he’s so explosive, smart as well. I try to pick his brain, he’ll try to pick mine.”

Jeanty said it has been a productive relationship.

“I think he’s one of the best linebackers in the game,” Jeanty said. “I feel like he’s a little underrated. With what he’s done, to learn from him, learn what he’s watching, what running backs are doing, it only helps my game to see how I can better set up runs and all types of things.”

A big step forward for Jeanty would be a huge boost for a Raiders team that needs to be able to run the ball to have the kind of success they hope for this season.

Finding Football: Ashton Jeanty's around-the-world route to the sport he never left behind
By Levi Edwards
February 19, 2026

It was a blast heard around Frisco, Texas, that put Ashton Jeanty on the map in the summer of 2019.

Not with the traits that would later define him: the violent stiff-arm, the glide-and-burst out of the backfield, the Halloween Michael Myers pose that would go viral. No, Jeanty's first impression came from the opposite side of the ball as a safety.

It didn't even happen in a regulated game. It was a scrimmage between Lone Star High School and regional rival Mansfield Lake Ridge. Jeanty, a sophomore at the time, had just transferred to the Texas high school by way of Naples, Italy, of all places.

Lone Star Head Coach Jeff Rayburn didn't know much about Jeanty other than the basics. He was a military brat who traveled nearly 6,000 miles to come play football at his school. Rayburn described Jeanty as a "respectful" and "friendly" young man from their first encounter and he was impressed with the tape he'd seen of Jeanty playing overseas.

"But you don't really know the level of competition that he's playing against," Rayburn said. "Obviously he looked really good, but you can look really against not really good players."

As for going up against Mansfield Lake Ridge, the level of competition was high as the team was coming off a 5A State Championship game appearance.

It handed the sophomore his first real chance to baptize himself – and the poor kid running toward him – into the near-religious intensity that is Texas high school football.

"Mansfield Lake Ridge, who's got a lot of fast, big athletes, really good program, and Ashton's playing safety," Rayburn recalled. "And he comes downhill on our sideline and just annihilates the running back. It was one of those hits where everybody in the stands, everybody on the sidelines including theirs was 'oohing' and 'ahhing,' jumping up and down.

"We all kind of looked at each other like, 'Yeah, he is like that.' And kind of the rest was history."

There's a familiar saying, often seen on wall décor in homes across America: "Home is where the heart is."

For Ashton Jeanty, who's never stayed in one place for too long, home is where football is. That's where his heart truly lies.

The Jeanty family has gone to great lengths to make sure football remained a constant in Ashton's life.

Ashton, the second of four children, was born to Harry and Pamela Jeanty while Harry, a Navy officer, was stationed in Jacksonville, Florida. The family soon moved to Chesapeake, Virginia and then Naples, Italy before he was in middle school.

"It was a tough experience," Ashton said. "At times, it was good … I wouldn't say it was bad, but it was just challenging moving around all the time. Always having to pack up and make new friends, leave family behind."

His parents noticed how athletic he was even as a small child, acrobatically flipping around the house with unlimited energy. They initially put him in organized soccer before football, a game his older brother and uncle had already played, caught his attention.

"I remember the first time really playing football, like earliest days," he said. "I was in Virginia. We're living on the base, and just kind of running around, you know, playing against all the kids on the base and, you know, just being crazy out there. From there, I just fell in love with football."

Adjustment quickly became a theme in Ashton's life. He never could have predicted he'd end up across the globe learning the fundamentals of football on a military base.

"I didn't know what to expect," he said. "I didn't even really know where [Italy] was on the map as a young kid. … It was a crazy experience to tell my teammates, my coaches, all my friends that in a month or so I'll be packing up, moving overseas and you'll probably never see me again."

Through it all, Harry made sure his son was able to play the game he loved wherever they went. His military background also paved a way for his son to pick up specialized traits needed to be an elite athlete.

"Hard work and discipline, the military teaches you those things," Harry Jeanty told Raiders.com. "And if you take them with you, you can pass them on. Same thing I've done. I think what speaks volumes about that is the fact that he was able to kind of see me wake up early, doing those things on long days. I believe he learned from that. He operates himself in that way. It pays big dividends."

At Naples Middle School in Gricignano di Aversa, Italy, Jeanty stood out like a sore thumb. But in a way, that wasn't such a bad thing.

His athletic ability quickly made him the one of the best players within the Department of Defense Education Activity (DoDEA), excelling as both a football and basketball player.

"He wouldn't go down on the first hit. He was explosive," Ashton's head coach at Naples, John Davis, previously told the Associated Press. "You just felt like you're always sitting on the edge of your seat waiting for him. You know, next touch might be a touchdown."

As Ashton's athletic prowess continued to grow, it became evident he had the potential to play Division I college football. Yet it would be difficult to showcase how good he was while living in Europe. Davis encouraged Jeanty to return to the United States to gain greater exposure and seize the opportunity play against top competition.

"Playing football in Italy was fun. But, you know, it wasn't the most competitive," Ashton said. "Getting to travel and see different aspects of different countries and then going to Germany, going to Spain, going to different places around Italy, it was amazing getting to play the sport I love but also experiencing different cultures and different foods – that's what everybody wants to do."

The Jeanty's objectively picked a near perfect place for Ashton's football future.

They set up shop in the Dallas-Fort Worth area, which is notable for producing an obscene amount of Division I and NFL talent. As of the 2025 season, 199 active NFL players played and graduated from a high school in the state of Texas – the most of any state in the country.

Jeanty wasn't even the lone NFL player on the roster when he transferred to Lone Star High School, as he shared the field with Denver Broncos All-Pro punt returner Marvin Mims, New Orleans Saints linebacker Jaylan Ford and 2024 Jim Thorpe Award winner Trey Taylor.

"Texas high school football is a way of life, it truly is," Rayburn said. "You see the movies 'Friday Night Lights' and things like that, it's such a community event for everybody because it encompasses so many. … It's something that you have experience and live to really understand it."

Ashton had to dive into deep waters as the small fish in a big pond. He was nothing more than a name on a roster sheet when he first suited up.

"Obviously they didn't really know how good I was," Jeanty said with a laugh. "I just wanted to prove who I was every day."

But after Jeanty's colossal hit in that scrimmage, he earned his way to be on the field at all times.

Quite literally, not remotely metaphorically, at all times.

Along with playing safety and running back, he lined up at slot receiver, racking up 816 receiving yards and seven touchdown catches his junior year.

He played nearly every position on defense including cornerback, outside linebacker and, shockingly, getting in the trenches with snaps at edge rusher and nose tackle.

You read that correctly. 5-foot-9, 195 pounds – giving people the business at nose tackle.

"With a kid like that who's just willing to do whatever the coaches ask, whatever the team needs, you just put him in different spots," Rayburn said. "And he'd go and make plays. We were really, really fortunate that he was so selfless to just do whatever we asked him to do.

"I was watching a video the other day, and I was showing some kids of Ashton wearing No. 17 as a sophomore and going to sacking the quarterback in a crucial moment in a big playoff game. They couldn't believe that was Ashton Jeanty playing defensive end."

Jack of all trades, master of none.

Ashton Jeanty faced skepticism at the college level despite an outstanding senior season.

Statistically, he was one of the best players in the state as he rushed for 1,835 yards, 31 touchdowns and averaged eight yards a carry in 2021. However, this was his only high school season playing exclusively at running back. Adding to the challenge, he was considered undersized for the position. 24/7 Sports ranked him as three-star prospect and No. 45 overall player in the state for the 2022 class, earning him two college scholarships offers to Power 5 programs.

"I had multiple coaches calling me during his senior year saying, 'Coach, he's better than the guys we had committed, but the guys have been committed for a year, two years, and they're really good players, we can't go back on them now,'" Rayburn said.

"I think just the timing of everything, getting here late … there was questions of like, 'How good of a running back is he?' He's playing at receiver, he's playing in the backfield some, you see the flashes, but they wanted to see more."

Jeanty received several offers from smaller DI programs but ultimately chose Boise State University for compelling reasons. From 2012-2019, four running backs from Boise State were drafted into the NFL, with two going on to become Pro Bowlers. The Broncos had also established themselves as a winning program in the Mountain West Conference, having not had a losing season since 1997 – six years before Jeanty was born.

"We told him to go with his heart and also research everything to see if this is the best place for you," Pamela Jeanty said. "Ashton decided over some time that's the best place for him. And he knew that he would excel being in that program. While he was there, of course at times it could be like, 'Should I go? Should I not go?' But he was really loyal and knew this was the place for him. Boise was the place for him."

"The choice to attend Boise State was really just thinking about my future and wanting to be where I am right now playing in the NFL," Ashton said. "And I knew going there, I'd have the best opportunity."

As for those goals and dreams, they've become an everyday reality.

The inconspicuous military brat traveling across Europe to play football has emerged into a household name and Heisman Trophy runner-up. Last August, he became the highest-drafted player in Boise State history as the No. 6 overall pick to the Las Vegas Raiders.

His last two seasons combined, in college and with the Silver and Black, he's rushed for a whooping 3,576 yards and 34 touchdowns. In the process, he broke several Boise State and NCAA rushing records and led the 2025 NFL draft class in rushing yards.

Jeanty has already dealt with more changes than ideal following his rookie season. He played through a midseason coaching change with the departure of offensive coordinator Chip Kelly and is preparing to head into 2026 with a new head coach in Klint Kubiak.

For most, adapting to such rapid shifts would be daunting, especially given the role he is expected to fill.

But Ashton Jeanty isn't most people.

"I think my upbringing taught me a lot of things, but definitely just how to adapt to different changes, handle challenges, keep continuing to be a better version of myself," he said.

"And no matter where I'm at, all that matters is the hard work and the discipline to keep doing the same things and get better each and every single day."

DE PATRICK JOHNSON

RAIDERS.COM

Patrick Johnson didn't make roster by coincidence, but with confidence in his training
By Levi Edwards
September 3, 2026

Patrick Johnson solidified his spot on the Raiders' 53-man roster before cut down day last Sunday.

But it seems the true moment he made the team can be pinpointed to the first quarter in the preseason finale against the San Francisco 49ers.

After making a 37-yard field goal to take an early lead, Matt Gay kicked the ball off to the 49ers. Johnson, a nearly 250-pound edge rusher sprinted down the field with reckless abandon, his speed resembling that of a safety and not someone lining up in the trenches.

Alongside rookie Keyron Crawford, Johnson met 49ers returner Jordan Watkins with a big boom at the 25 yard line. The tackle injected an adrenaline shot into a special teams unit that struggled the previous week against the Houston Texans.

"It's a make-or-break game for a lot of guys," General Manager John Spytek said, "and who makes the first tackle on the first kickoff – Patrick Johnson."

"Once I saw what they were giving me, I knew I was going to make the tackle," Johnson told Raiders.com. "Honestly it just comes down to understanding that it's either me or him and I know I need to make this team. For me, it was going to be whatever I had to do to go make those plays on special teams."

That special teams tackle was just part of a standout preseason Johnson was already having – with two sacks, three tackles for loss and a forced fumble heading into that final game.

"It's understanding that it's every game you have to prove it," Johnson said. "No matter how well I played the first two preseason games, knowing going into that third one I'm starting on every single special teams, that means they're going to want to see something out of me."

For Johnson, carving a role on the Raiders wasn't by coincidence or from one solid preseason. This has been six years in the making.

As a seventh-round pick to the Philadelphia Eagles in 2021, he's had the repetitive feeling of "always basically being on the bubble." In his second NFL season, he landed in a crowded Eagles defensive line room loaded with established Pro Bowl talent on a roster that reached the Super Bowl.

"They set the standard high," Johnson said. "And that edge room I was in, I knew that if I was going to make it, it was going to have to be through special teams. It couldn't just be on defense. ... You think you're a good player until you get around some really great players and you have to bring your standard up even higher."

He totaled 29 solo tackles and over 1,300 special teams snaps in his five seasons playing for the Eagles. He also had a short stint with the New York Giants in 2024, then returning to Philadelphia the following season.

As a free agent this offseason, he put together a rigid strength and conditioning program that has gotten him to what he believes is the best shape he's been in to date. The Raiders brought him in for workout, with a chain of communication between the two parties for months.

"Credit to our pro department for setting up that workout and bringing quality guys in like him," Spytek said. "And we had followed Patrick for many years with his career in Philadelphia and respected the kind of player and teammate and special teams player he is."

"You've got to believe in yourself before anyone else can believe in you. ... When it came to coming here, having my workout, I was so prepared," Johnson said. "I told my wife, told my family, 'Look, if they bring me in for a workout, I know I'm going to kill it. If they bring me in, I know I'm going to make this team.'"

He shortly had to put his words into action, as he signed with the Raiders the day before veterans had to report to training camp.

Special teams opened the door for him to get on the field. But his defensive showing this preseason surely increased his chances of making the roster.

"Since the moment he got here, all he's done is produce, work hard and be a great teammate," Klint Kubiak said. "Expect that to continue."

The Raiders' expectations of Johnson are on par with what he expects from himself. Even as a sixth-year veteran, he sees this as a legitimate opportunity to establish himself.

"I'm a guy that can go out there and make plays," Johnson said. "Be disruptive on defense, but also I can do it on special teams. I'm going to show my experience out there. I just want to show the coaches and the front office that y'all brought a dog in here. ... I've got a lot to prove left and we're just getting started."

DT JONAH LAULU

THE ATHLETIC

Las Vegas native Jonah Laulu got to a place he never thought he'd be: Home
By Sam Warren
July 9, 2026

Jonah Laulu had to kneel down. A boy, his head barely reaching the 6-foot-5 Laulu's waistline, stood alone; Laulu approached and got him to look up from his cleats. A brief conversation ensued, followed by an embrace.

Then they walked together across Centennial High's football field turf. The boy hid behind Laulu as they neared some cones and a line of children, all wearing shirts adorned with Laulu's name and image. Sensing the hesitancy, Laulu bent back over for some final words of encouragement and a high five. The boy ran to join his peers and joined in a drill being conducted by Laulu's old high school teammates.

As the sun set behind the barren red rock peaks, Laulu looked on and smiled. This was his second annual free youth football camp at his alma mater, one of several local events he's put on since joining the Raiders. The native-Las-Vegan-turned-Raiders-defensive-tackle ran the clinic for kids aged 7-13 with the same energy he deploys on game days. He riled up campers before running alongside them during warm-ups, joined them in drills and celebrated with them after successful reps. During breaks, he chatted with young fans; he took pictures and signed autographs for everyone once the workout was over, until darkness had fallen on the late-June evening.

"It means a lot to come out here and have this many people want to come and spend time with me," Laulu said. "I just think it's important because as a professional football player, I was once that kid."

Laulu is inspired by something he didn't have growing up. The 26-year-old was born and raised in northwest Las Vegas before there was a local professional sports team to root for.

While some NFL alumni lived in the area, Laulu said he never attended a camp like his as a kid. Given the area's interest in a chance to be coached by a Raider, and Laulu's resources after two NFL seasons, he is proud to provide the opportunity.

"These kids, I see myself in them," Laulu said. "They have all these dreams and aspirations. They have that goal, but they don't really see the trials and obstacles that you have to go through to get to that goal. To be able to be a physical representation of whatever they want to do is really cool."

Laulu hopes to instill in them the same drive that he had. His mother, Palolo, said he and his siblings were basically raised at the YMCA while she worked two jobs to support the family. While many of the Las Vegas Valley's most gifted athletes attend private schools, like national football powerhouse Bishop Gorman, Laulu went to public school, first Cimarron-Memorial High, before transferring to Centennial as a junior.

He earned all-conference honors as a senior despite playing just half the season. Still, lacking the pedigree of a player coming from a prestigious high school program, he was lightly recruited, fielding offers from only the University of Hawaii and UNLV. He decided to play for the Rainbow Warriors, leaving the valley for the first time. He starred for three years, then transferred to Oklahoma ahead of the 2022 season, putting him on the radar of NFL teams. After two seasons in Norman, he was taken by the Indianapolis Colts in the seventh round of the 2024 draft.

He never forgot where he came from.

“He’s just always (had) a soft spot for Las Vegas,” Palolo said.

Battling for a roster spot in his first training camp, Laulu was cut by the Colts at the end of the preseason. Months earlier, he had participated in the Raiders’ local pro day ahead of the draft and impressed; they claimed him off waivers.

“In a weird way, it almost felt like fate that he went to the Colts, he had that experience, and then for him to have this big disappointment of being waived before getting picked up by the Raiders,” Palolo said. “The very next day, he’s at the Raiders facility and he didn’t really have time to think about it. It was just there you go, now you’re back in it.”

A few weeks after that, Laulu notched his first career NFL tackle, at Allegiant Stadium. And a month after that, he made his first NFL start. Laulu logged defensive snaps in every game for the rest of his rookie season and finished 12th on the team with 35 tackles.

He parlayed a strong finish to his first season into more opportunities in Year 2. Laulu started 15 games and displayed improved pursuit, finishing tied for third on the team with four sacks and eight tackles for loss. He credited his growth to heightened attention to detail and more experience playing the professional game.

Laulu is excited to take another step forward in his third season. He said he likes how new head coach Klint Kubiak is holding everybody accountable. And he’s completely bought into what Rob Leonard, his position coach the last two years — “I would literally die for Rob Leonard,” Laulu said — is bringing in his first year as defensive coordinator.

Laulu is one of the first Las Vegas natives to play for the Raiders since their move to Sin City in 2020. Palolo believes Jonah has already made an impact on his community. Young fans can draw inspiration from any player who dons silver and black, but seeing one of their own take the field on Sundays carries extra weight.

“It gives them some hope,” Palolo said. “It gives them something to strive for. He made it a possibility. And the odds are against you, but he stuck with it and it happened.”

Laulu is a role model for Las Vegas’s large Pacific Islander population, in particular. Players such as Marcus Mariota have made their mark on the team since the move, and Laulu is one of several current Raiders of Polynesian heritage, but his ties to the area make him unique.

“I think he has a lot of pride with our family last name and to be able to represent our Samoan culture,” Palolo said. “Just to show that it’s possible, and you can be out there, work hard, find some success and then also give back to the community. He never forgets where he came from.”

And Laulu can draw from the city just as much as he can give back to it. Palolo said she feels playing in Las Vegas is a “big motivation” for Jonah.

“He’s putting on for the city, for his friends that he came up with who didn’t make it,” Palolo said. “I think it really means a lot to him to have that support and know he always has people around him who’ve known him from the beginning. And he wants to make them proud.”

C TYLER LINDERBAUM

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Center of Attention: Tyler Linderbaum setting the standard for Raiders
By Adam Hill
May 30, 2026

Tyler Linderbaum knows the Las Vegas Raiders gave him the biggest interior offensive lineman contract in NFL history to do more than just provide solid play at center.

He is being counted on to set a standard and raise the level of play of an entire unit that was one of the league's worst last season.

That process is already underway during OTA practices at the team facility in Henderson.

"I think, one, be myself," Linderbaum said of how that needs to happen. "At the end of the day it's my job to get everyone to be on the same page, to play at a standard that we set and that we want to play at. And us collectively as a unit, we decide how we want to play. It starts in practice, it starts in the meeting rooms on what we want it to look like. And if we're falling short of that, that's on us. But the more we can practice how we want to practice, play how we want to play, the better off we're going to be as a unit, and the better this offensive unit is going to be."

It's part of a whole new chapter in Linderbaum's life and career. He is joining the Raiders after spending his first four seasons with the Baltimore Ravens and just weeks after he got married.

"It's been awesome," Linderbaum said. "Very blessed to be in the position I am. Obviously, getting married was the best weekend of my life, and then being able to come to a new team, it's just the start of a new journey. I've always been a guy that just attacks each and every day. Attitude and effort are the most important things, and those are the things I hang my hat on. Just excited to be here, be with a new team and give as much as I possibly can to be the best version of myself."

Linderbaum is doing that with a new offensive scheme, new coaching staff and new teammates in a whole new city.

He said one of several tasks he's focused on during OTAs is to figure out what makes his new teammates tick and how best to communicate with them in order to be the best leader possible once training camp begins in July.

His coaches have taken notice.

"There is just a quiet confidence," coach Klint Kubiak said of Linderbaum. "Just a man out there running the show. Very athletic player, but a grown man."

Linderbaum's evaluation of his new coach is similarly glowing.

"As players, you don't want any gray area. You want things to be black and white, and I think Coach Kubiak does a good job of that," Linderbaum said. "His expectations, you know what they are, and if you're not meeting his expectations, then you understand that. I think as players, it's our job to uphold the standard that he has in place and then continue to push each other and push others around you. But it's been awesome to work with Coach Kubiak and the whole coaching staff, trying to get his message out to the players. It's been fun."

The pairing of coach and player is an important one for a rebuilding Raiders team. When Kubiak took the job, he communicated to the front office the importance of an intelligent, agile center to properly operate his offense.

General manager John Spytek responded by landing the best one on the market, and Linderbaum is quickly learning his role in Kubiak's system.

"I think the most important thing is just communication," Linderbaum said. "I think that's everywhere. Center's job, communicating, being a leader on that offensive line, and trying to get people in the right places, and communicate as loud and effectively as possible. And then, on the flip side of that, having communication with the quarterback, making sure everyone's on the same page and seeing it in the same lens."

Building chemistry with the quarterback is an important task that is magnified by the fact that there are two potential starting quarterbacks in Kirk Cousins and Fernando Mendoza, who is a rookie getting used to an NFL offense for the first time.

"Obviously, it's the center and quarterbacks' job to communicate with each other and be on the same page," he said. "So, just having that dialog is big with whatever quarterback is in there with us is important, and it's only going to build a stronger connection and get better as time goes on and as we get more reps. But happy with how we're moving along and processing everything."

Linderbaum is pleased with how Mendoza is coming along.

"He's been great," Linderbaum said. "Soaking in everything he's being taught, trying to take it and then apply it into the classroom and onto the field. You can tell he wants to be great, and that's all you can ask for for the whole rookie class coming in, is how much information can you take in and process? And then take it out onto the field.

"As older guys, our job is to help push these young guys along, and they're going to be guys that are going to help us win games on Sunday. So, it's our job to be the best teammate possible and help push everyone along. And with that being said, it makes us better as well."

Tyler Linderbaum eagerly attacking the 'start of a new journey' with Raiders

By Levi Edwards
May 28, 2026

It hasn't been just an ordinary offseason for Tyler Linderbaum.

The Pro Bowl center has been doing his fair share of multitasking since March when he signed with the Las Vegas Raiders. After spending four years snapping the ball to two-time MVP winner Lamar Jackson, joining the Silver and Black has made for an adjustment.

"Just trying to blend in with each other and just be the best possible teammate I can be for the guys," Linderbaum said Thursday after OTA practice. "And then, obviously, figuring out what makes us tick, how we operate on a day-to-day basis, and it's been fun to go through that journey with the guys here."

Some changes are more noticeable than others. He's expected to step into a more prominent role on a young roster spearheaded by first-time Head Coach Klint Kubiak. Though he's still new to the team, Linderbaum has embraced a leadership role by helping reinforce Kubiak's message in the locker room.

"I think as players, you don't want any gray area. You want things to be black and white, and I think Coach Kubiak does a good job of that," Linderbaum said. "His expectations ... it's our job to uphold the standard that he has in place and then continue to push each other and push others around you."

Among his new teammates is a trio of quarterbacks he's learning to snap to: veteran Pro Bowler Kirk Cousins, Aidan O'Connell, who logged 17 starts with the Raiders, and No. 1 overall pick Fernando Mendoza, who enters the NFL with only a handful of snaps taken directly under center.

Whether it's at the line of scrimmage or in the meeting rooms, Linderbaum is aware that communication is key.

"[J]ust having that dialog is big with whatever quarterback is in there with us is important," he said, "and it's only going to build a stronger connection and get better as time goes on and as we get more reps. But happy with how we're moving along and processing everything."

As he's become acquainted with his offensive line and quarterbacks, he's ventured off with them to a Vegas Golden Knights playoff game. He's also teamed up with left tackle Kolton Miller for their acting debut in this year's schedule release where they recreated the joint interview scene from "Step Brothers."

"Me and Kolton killed it first try," he joked. "They're like, 'I don't even know if we need to do another one.' ... It was fun that we were able to do that and hope the fans enjoyed it."

And to put an exclamation point on what's been an active offseason, he married his longtime girlfriend Rachel earlier this month.

"Very blessed to be in the position I am," he said. "Obviously, getting married, best weekend of my life, and then obviously being able to come to a new team, just start of a new journey.

"I've always been a guy that just attacks each and every day. Attitude and effort are the most important things, and those are the things I hang my hat on. So, just excited to be here, be with a new team and give as much as I can possible to be the best version of myself."

QB FERNANDO MENDOZA

THE ATHLETIC

Fernando Mendoza isn't the Raiders' starter. Here's everything he did as a backup in Week 1
By Sam Warren
September 18, 2026

HENDERSON, Nev. — Fernando Mendoza, chin strap fastened, had Klint Kubiak's voice ringing in his helmet. While the head coach made the play call, the rookie's eyes shifted to the playsheet on his wristband, and he relayed the call aloud. As his teammates walked to the line of scrimmage, Mendoza verbalized his possible responsibilities on the play.

"Some plays take you a different way depending on coverage, depending if there's a blitz," Mendoza told The Athletic. "There's some cans. There's some alerts that get changed. There's little tendencies in the plays that I have to remember."

But before Mendoza could go under center, take the snap and make his drop, he caught himself.

"There were a couple of times," Mendoza says, "I was so locked in."

The reality: Mendoza's quarterbacks coach, Mike Sullivan, heard Mendoza's play call, not the Raiders' offensive line. Below Mendoza's cleats, the turf was spray-painted white, the sideline at Allegiant Stadium. Mendoza was 30 yards from veteran quarterback Kirk Cousins, who was taking the snaps during Las Vegas's season-opening win over the Miami Dolphins. Mendoza served as the veteran's backup, the first time the No. 1 pick in the NFL Draft didn't start his team's season opener since 2018.

Mendoza, though, prepared for Sunday as if he were the starter. He carried the process over to game day, despite not playing a snap. On every offensive play the Raiders ran, Mendoza went through his process as if he was in the game, to the point of conducting his footwork and passing progression. He admits he fought the urge to perform his dropback and throwing motion along with Cousins on a few occasions.

Mendoza has taken No. 2 on the depth chart in stride since Kubiak announced Cousins the starter on Sept. 2. The Raiders believe letting the rookie watch from behind the veteran will help his development, and Mendoza says he's already learned plenty from one game observing Cousins.

"How efficient you need to be to win," Mendoza said of his takeaways. "The margin for error is smaller. It gets smaller from practice to the preseason to then the actual games. Windows are tighter. Everything is harder."

That difficulty is why Mendoza is preparing meticulously, including going through every detail of every play on the sideline while Cousins does the same on the field. When Mendoza is eventually called upon to become Raiders' QB1, he wants to be ready.

Mendoza says his process observing Cousins on game days is the same as during walkthroughs and practices. He simultaneously mimics Cousins' every action, hearing and saying the play call, then making mock decisions about his throwing progression on passing plays. He even breaks the huddle — a huddle of one — after relaying Kubiak's call to imaginary teammates.

The only difference on game days, Mendoza said, is carrying out simulated movements. During practice, Sullivan has Mendoza perform "America's Drill," where the rookie walks through the play, doing his footwork and progression, before Cousins leads the starters against the scout team.

"Evidently, I can't do that in the game because I don't want to be a tell on the sideline and give the play away with a pass or run gesture," Mendoza says. "But I think it was great to be involved and stay engaged with that."

Instead of acting out plays, Mendoza stays glued to Sullivan's side on game days. After breaking his pretend huddle, he tells Sullivan everything the opposing defense could do based on look and personnel, and how he would react to it. Sullivan will throw out a scenario or additional thoughts, and the two go back and forth before watching the play unfold on the field together. They quickly debrief, then move on to the next play.

"It's great to go from my self-visualization walkthroughs in practice to a game where I'm able to see a live-speed defense of the opponent," Mendoza says. "Being able to visualize what I would do in that specific scenario is very important, whether it's a certain look and I'm like, 'OK, coach Sullivan, I'm thinking about going here or using this part of my progression in this play.' Or sometimes we have a pure progression play where I'm seeing it as it goes and reacting. 'Hey, the No. 1 wasn't there. Oh, the No. 2 is there,' and throw."

Mendoza is a firm believer in verbalization — he said talking aloud with Sullivan through the play reaffirms it mentally, reassures his process and creates muscle and mental memory. He added that the process was Sullivan and offensive coordinator Andrew Janocko's idea, and Kubiak called it part of the team's efforts to "find every edge that we can to keep getting him ready to play."

"I think you're just putting yourself in the game, so you're getting game reps just like you would at practice," Janocko says of how Mendoza benefits from the process. "You're getting game reps, and that's twofold. That goes for down the road and prepping to play, but that also puts you in that game. So, when your number is called, whether it be the next snap or a while down the road, you're establishing yourself for game reps."

This is not uncommon for backup quarterbacks in the NFL. Cousins, who served as backup for fellow rookie Robert Griffin III in Washington during the 2012 season, says he followed a similar protocol.

"Just kind of staying in it at all times and being ready at any moment," Cousins said of his mindset as a backup. "That's kind of always the journey when you're one player away."

Third-stringer Aidan O'Connell, who backed up then-Raiders starter Jimmy Garoppolo as a rookie before starting the final nine games of the 2023 season, told Mendoza that he's used the same approach in each of his seasons in Las Vegas.

"Any No. 2 quarterback, they're listening to the call," Kubiak said. "They're saying it in their head what they'd be going through progression-wise, check-wise, putting themselves in the game on every snap."

Yet not every No. 2 quarterback wears their helmet for the entire game. Most don a headset or earpiece and wear a baseball cap.

Asked why he wore the helmet, “I’m not holding this big helmet up (to my ear)” to hear the play call, Mendoza says.

How about a headset?

“I was never offered a headset. I didn’t know that was an option.”

That was fine with Mendoza; it added to the realism of his simulated game within the game.

“Wearing the helmet is pretty crucial because that’s where the play calls come in through, and that’s the microphone you hear from the speaker,” Mendoza says. “When I wear the helmet, I can (experience) what I would actually see on the field.”

As for how he interacted with Cousins during the game, Mendoza says he tried to keep it to a minimum. He talked through a few coverages and offered to be a “second set of eyes” on anything Cousins was unsure of. Mendoza says he was quick to offer feedback, but he wanted to allow Cousins to focus fully on the game. Mendoza says he spent most of his time observing during the meetings between Cousins, Janocko and Sullivan when the offense was on the sidelines.

“I watch them get on the iPad, go through plays, watch them make sure we’re making all the corrections,” Mendoza says. “I want to be there and engage with that. Then I can ask any additional questions to coach Sullivan or coach Janocko if needed.”

Mendoza says aside from preparing for eventual action, his main job on game days as the backup is encouraging and helping his teammates. He was among the first to congratulate Cousins after each of his three touchdowns. And after his two interceptions, Mendoza says he did his best to “hype him up.” Otherwise, he’s helping however he can. After one drive, Mendoza was spotted on the sideline fixing star center Tyler Linderbaum’s shoulder pads.

Mendoza desperately wants to play, but in the meantime, the rookie is embracing the Raiders’ plan for him to learn from the sideline.

“I think it’s going to help me going forward to see the battle rhythm,” Mendoza says. “Really see the battle through the week of how we install plays, how we practice plays and how they show up on game day with coach Kubiak doing it. Obviously, he was very successful last week, so I’m excited to keep on staying engaged and keep on learning and developing.”

'It's his superpower': Inside Fernando Mendoza's extraordinary rise to No. 1
By Hallie Grossman
April 20, 2026

THE VERDICT IS all but in, the coronation all but official.

Fernando Mendoza's presence here, in Indianapolis at the combine, is formality over function. It's late February, two months to go until the 2026 NFL draft, but he has already done the fairytale, done the unthinkable, done the proving. There's no throw he can make this week that could outdazzle the missile he launched to beat Penn State last fall, with a pair of defenders closing in and the clock ticking down. There's no strength test he can crush that will tell us more about what he can and will his body through than the beating he took scrambling for his life to score the touchdown that helped seal Indiana's first national championship in January.

This thing is so wrapped up, even Mendoza -- normally so polished, so tactful -- briefly slips. He's at the podium, fielding questions from a flock of reporters who are so eager to hear what the "likely" top draft pick has to say, they throw elbows to get an inch closer. Mendoza gets asked about Tom Brady -- former NFL great, current minority owner of the Las Vegas Raiders, who are, in turn, owners of the first pick in this year's draft -- and he's duly effusive.

"To have," he says, stops, then tries again. "To potentially have a mentor like that would be pretty impressive." Underscore, highlight, ALL CAPS that potentially, he all but says out loud.

The rest of his news conference proceeds without a hitch, which is to say, it's typically Mendoza. He smiles when he listens to questions, he smiles when he answers questions, he smiles when he can't hear questions, he smiles when there is no more time for questions. He delivers his answers with class-president-acing-his-presentation energy, full of direct eye contact and workshopped points and counterpoints. It's tempting to look for notecards hidden somewhere discreet on the dais.

This is the pinnacle of the Mendoza experience. He looks like a star quarterback dreamed up in a lab: 6-foot-5, 236, respectable mobility, good arm, rarefied accuracy, all the while sounding like few star quarterbacks who have come before. He is, to hear those in his orbit tell it, the most unfootball-like of adjectives: "goofy."

So goofy (or "awkward" or "different" or "not normal," depends on who you ask) that one of his old coaches from his Cal days, Tim Plough, now head coach at UC Davis, has fielded a slew of calls from NFL scouts plying him with questions. Is Mendoza always like this? Is he really like this? Is that going to fly in a room of full-grown adults?

Yes, Plough, tells them. When he is in front of a camera or in front of a locker or in front of the dining room table in Plough's home, he is always like this. He will talk you and thank you to death. He'll drill you with questions and take the conversation in winding ways and be courteous to the point of oh, wow, enough already. It's an acquired taste for some, Plough concedes, but it's more than that too. The way that Mendoza is? The way he always is?

"It's Fernando's superpower."

THE STORY OF Mendoza's time in Bloomington, which ended with a cascade of increasingly unfathomable feats -- the Heisman crowning, the Big Ten title, the national championship, the 16-0 record, and all this for Indiana (?!) -- was a fairytale starring a new kind of hero.

"He's not ..." Plough starts, then pauses, in search of the best way to put this gently. "He's not the cool guy."

So what is it, exactly? What uncool boxes is he checking? Corniness? ("Some people might think he is corny, but I think he's a blessing," former Hoosiers running back Roman Hemby says.) Nonconformity? ("Everyone gives him a hard time, myself included, that he's kind of nerdy," his old high school coach Dave Dunn says.) Stone-cold quirkiness? ("Sometimes he'd just say the stupidest stuff, and you're like, 'What are you talkin' about, dude,'" former Indiana tight end Riley Nowakowski says.) Check, check, check. It's not a bad package, they all say, just not your typical star (or starting) quarterback package. They sort of love it, in fact.

He calls wide receiver Charlie Becker "Chuck-o-nator," and calls Nowakowski something "not PG," and has absolutely no nickname for Curt Cignetti whatsoever, because he does not have a death wish. Cignetti, now going into his third season as Indiana's head coach, makes Bill Belichick look positively joyful. "Yeah, Cignetti's not a nicknames guy," Nowakowski says.

For all his quirks, Mendoza is quick to read a room. Or a sideline. Sometimes Nowakowski would steal a glance at Mendoza and Cignetti conferring in the middle of the game, and snicker at Mendoza's total, if temporary, transformation. The quarterback had to shift gears to disgruntled grouch in order to game plan.

His eccentricities have an off button. It's just that Mendoza's default setting is on, turned all the way up. Which works. It worked at Indiana -- killed at Indiana, really. And it will work in the NFL, people think. People hope. People are trying to make sure, which is why Plough fielded all those calls in the first place.

"Is he a little different? Yeah," one NFL scout says. "Is that going to be a bad thing? I don't know. The issue that you have is: Can you see him leading your team? Is he going to be the guy that says, 'You ran the wrong route,' and then, 'M-F you,' in the huddle?"

Spoiler: He will not. On the first play of the Big Ten title game against Ohio State, Nowakowski was meant to block the edge on a rollout, but he got beat and Mendoza got crushed. The man can take a beating, but even he had to leave the game for a play, and Nowakowski spiraled. He just let the soon-to-be Heisman winner get destroyed. Their whole season rides on this one guy being able to play ... and now he might not be able to play. The quarterback returned two plays later and waved off Nowakowski's repeated apologies. Mendoza was still in pain but was also still Mendoza. "Jolly," Nowakowski says. No M-Fs in sight. "He was like, 'Dude, I got cracked!'"

But here's a spoiler addendum: He doesn't need to be that kind of leader. Back in 2024, Jayden Daniels had one of the best rookie seasons of all time. The coach who oversaw all that history, Dan Quinn, says the biggest misread on what a young, highly drafted quarterback needs to be is this: "The outside thinks he has to be the leader of the team, right when he walks in the locker room. And that's not the case. Man, learn the system so well you can be counted on in clutch moments. Be a great teammate. Help others get better. But you don't have to go lead by ripping a guy for being in the wrong alignment."

If you're inauthentic, Quinn says, these guys will sniff you out. They don't want to see their young, albeit transcendent, quarterback force leadership that isn't there. They just want to see him really freaking care.

Back in early November, when the Hoosiers were already an endearing story but not yet a mythical one, they survived an unexpected battle at Penn State to stay undefeated. Mendoza had 80 yards and less than two minutes left in the game to try to escape State College with a win, and the effort started with a 7-yard sack. From there, though, it was death by gashing: a 22-yard pass, a 12-yard pass, a 29-yard pass, a 17-yard pass, and a 7-yard touchdown pass that was part brass from Mendoza (two Penn State defenders coming in hot) and part wizardry from his wide receiver (Omar Cooper Jr. toe-tapping a millimeter of grass in the back of the end zone).

After the game, Nowakowski found Mendoza sitting on the bench crying. The quarterback had just authored a game-winning, two-minute fire drill, but he couldn't stop apologizing. He was so sorry because although he led an amazing final drive, he had played only fine the rest of the game, which is why he needed an amazing final drive in the first place. Nowakowski told him to stop; he couldn't always be perfect, and he was already more perfect than most of those guys out there anyway. Pat Coogan, Indiana's center, joined in the rescue effort with some gentle ribbing: "Nando, you are so ridiculous."

Maybe so. But he really freaking cared.

IF MENDOZA WAS emotionally ruined by the thought of less-than-stellar play, it probably had something to do with this: For much of the 2025 season, he went full football whisperer. That ball did what it was told.

On a wet, miserable day last summer in Bloomington, the team was deciding whether it was dismal enough to abandon its 7-on-7. While his teammates deliberated, Mendoza warmed up with the rest of the quarterbacks. There he was, ripping 50-yard dimes with tight spirals as if the ball weren't soaking wet. Nowakowski sought out Grant Wilson, another quarterback on Indiana's roster, because he was curious.

Nowakowski: "Can you throw like that in the rain?"

Wilson: "Are you kidding me? No. Of course not."

Wretched conditions or not, Mendoza had command of the ball -- and its precise location. According to ESPN Research, he overthrew or underthrew his receiver on just 7.1% of pass attempts in 2025, the third-lowest rate in the FBS. He completed 54% of his passes on throws 20-plus yards downfield, fourth best. His receivers dropped only 2.6% of his pass attempts last year, sixth lowest among power conferences, which seems like a credit to Mendoza as much as it is to the team's sure-handed receivers, because if a ball's placement is perfect, what's left to do but not drop it? And he developed one of the best back-shoulder throws in the game, which scouts coveted for that pinpoint accuracy and for what it told them about his football acumen.

"His football IQ is so high," says Mike Giddings, owner of Proscout Inc., which has worked with 39 Super Bowl teams in its decades of scouting. "Whether it's, 'Oh, he's got him beat. Throw it out in front of him.' Or, 'Oh, he's got him covered, I'm going to back-shoulder it.' To me, that's Peyton-like."

Giddings does plenty of name-dropping. In Mendoza, he sees Philip Rivers-like preparation, Joe Montana-like game management and Andrew Luck-like facility for making the big play when needed.

Because he was, simply, clutch. Mendoza ranked first in the FBS in expected points added per dropback last year overall (+0.52), second in EPA per dropback on third and fourth downs (+0.58), and fourth in EPA per dropback when tied or trailing in the fourth quarter (+0.66).

Yes, he could do with taking fewer sacks. His arm strength is good but not great, certainly not Josh Allen-level obscene. But there just aren't that many pokable spots in his game. The NFL ruling class has spoken: He's the best quarterback in a bad quarterback class. Maybe he's not a Caleb Williams-Jayden Daniels-Trevor Lawrence god-tier prospect, but his biggest green flag as an NFL hopeful might just be his lack of red flags.

"Everything I'm hearing about the kid, he's going to come in as humble as a quarterback who didn't have the success he had," one current NFL general manager says.

He wouldn't be here, in these interview rooms with these teams, if not for that success. But ears sure do perk up when they hear a guy has that kind of outsized success and a normal-sized sense of self.

"A lot of quarterbacks come in and they think they're the man," one scout says. "And they like the fact that he's not an egomaniac."

In this one specific and vital way, Mendoza, king of quirk, is perfectly ordinary.

BEFORE HE WAS anyone's conquering hero, Mendoza was the quarterback no one wanted. Not even his own team.

In the summer of 2023, he was coming off his redshirt season at Cal and seeing about as many snaps in camp as he had the year before: practically none.

"An afterthought," says Plough, who was the team's tight ends coach at the time.

Mendoza had been an afterthought recruit too. Two stars and one lonely power conference offer, and even that, only after Cal came calling a week before signing day because it had lost a quarterback pledge. Now, he was a ghost out there. No reps, which turned into no meeting time with coaches, which turned into him being invisible. It was an exhausting hamster wheel, and Mendoza figured he'd try just about anything to hop off, so he knocked on Plough's door, looking for support. Plough had coached quarterbacks for more than a decade, but since it wasn't his day job at Cal, he told Mendoza he could help out at night.

Starting in August, Mendoza would show up to Plough's office at 9 p.m., then stay until midnight. They'd convene every night that month to mine the basics, a How to Be a Better Quarterback seminar for one. How to learn the offense; how to call plays; how to suss out defensive schemes; how to locate blitzes; how to refine throwing mechanics; how to have pocket presence. By the time the season rolled around, Plough insisted they scale back these "midnight meetings," as they took to calling them, to just Monday through Wednesday. Plough needed to take his wife out for at least one date night or she'd leave him, he said, so Mendoza "let" him have Thursdays off.

Then, about halfway through the season, the Cal coaches, looking for any juice at quarterback, tabbed Mendoza as the starter. Plough thought he might be let off the hook. He was happy for Mendoza but assumed the quarterback would trade his sessions with the tight ends coach for more time with the offensive coordinator.

Right after he was named the starter, Mendoza showed up to Plough's office at 9, like normal. "'Hey, we're still going to meet, right?'"

Their midnight sessions continued for the year, sometimes just bleeding into time together at Plough's house with his family. Plough had met his wife back in college when he was coaching in the sorority flag football league and she played on an opposing team. When this football meet-cute was brought to Mendoza's attention, he had questions. What kind of plays had Plough called? What kind of plays had his wife run? What were those plays called? And why those plays? And how those plays? And ...

"We might have talked for 90 minutes about the plays we were calling in sophomore year, in sororities," Plough says. "But that's just the way his mind works."

He can't let things go. Mendoza "rages to master," Plough says, like all the best quarterbacks the coach has come across. Mendoza can't sleep. Can't move on. Can't think about anything else. Whether it's making sure he thanks you enough for dinner, or thanks you enough for the after-hours tutoring, or wants to get at the root of why that flag football play was called 20 years ago, or wants to intimately understand why that nickel lined up 2 yards outside of the field safety last week, he won't stop, can't stop, does not stop.

"It goes from being a joke, like, 'Oh, that's just Fernando being Fernando, what a goofball,'" he says, "to like, 'Oh, no, that's actually his greatest strength.'"

It will be hard to outwork Mendoza, hard to out-effort Mendoza, Plough says. And impossible to out-Mendoza Mendoza.

BACK AT THE combine, it's the rare stretch of days when Mendoza will be outworked and out-efforted. Because he lapped the 2026 quarterbacks field, he has opted out of workouts. Instead, he'll spend his few days in town reminding anyone who will listen that nothing is set in stone, that this is a job interview, that he still must prove himself. (Nowakowski says this is Mendoza's spiel in private too. "If I asked him right now, 'Do you think you'll be the first pick?' He'll be, like, 'I don't know. Man, I hope so.'")

He won't call it a coronation, though there are plenty of people in Indiana this week willing to do the coronating for him.

Word is he received a standing ovation as he walked through St. Elmo Steak House, one of the city's (and combine's) most revered institutions, just for the act of getting dinner.

Earlier that day, Mendoza walked the length of a hallway that led to Lucas Oil Stadium, where all the workouts he did not have to do were taking place. At the end of the corridor, a police officer with a buzz cut and white beard manned the security checkpoint. He was there to keep overeager fans at bay, but as Mendoza drew closer, hands in his pocket, the officer turned zealous himself: "Theeeeeere's Fernando," he yelled. Then he pointed at the quarterback. "You're a blessing," he told him.

And Friday, after he has completed his news conference duties, Mendoza walks past a different security guard, overseeing a different checkpoint, who pulls him aside. "Mr. Mendoza, we're all so proud of you," she says, then gives him a black bracelet. A token of her appreciation, perhaps, for what Mendoza just did, for what he might do yet.

His response is like so many of his others: earnest and a touch over the top. It's impossible to out-Mendoza Mendoza.

"Oh wow, I love this," he tells her. "Thank you. I love it. God bless you."

He walks away, then turns back one more time for good measure. "Thank you!"

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Why is Raiders rookie QB Fernando Mendoza so marketable?

By Mick Akers
April 29, 2026

Even before NFL Commissioner Roger Goodell announced Fernando Mendoza going to the Las Vegas Raiders with the No. 1 pick in Thursday's draft, the rookie quarterback was already inking partnership deals.

Mendoza's star rose last season as he led Indiana to an undefeated season and the university's first football national championship, netting himself the Heisman Trophy along the way.

Mendoza signed name, image and likeness deals during his final college season and then began racking up partnership deals soon after leading Indiana to win the College Football Playoff national championship in January.

It began with LinkedIn, where the business-minded Mendoza changed his status to open to work on the professional networking platform after declaring for the draft. Mendoza, a graduate of Cal's Haas School of Business, kept that partnership going by removing the open to work tag after he was drafted, and LinkedIn had a commercial that featured Mendoza celebrating his entrance into the NFL after being drafted by the Raiders.

Mendoza also inked deals with Taco Bell, US Bank, Adidas, Boss, Epic Games, Keurig, Dr. Pepper, Wheels Up and Pfizer.

"Although the rise and spotlight has been fairly quick, I've always tried to keep my brand standpoint at the forefront," Mendoza told CNBC. "I can show, at the highest level, that not only can I perform on the field, I can perform off the field in any situation. Whether it's a meeting, whether it's a presentation, or whether it's a getting to meet some new great people."

Taco Bell had an advertisement running on Friday on the massive LED billboard on Las Vegas Boulevard and Harmon Avenue, congratulating Mendoza on being drafted.

Leadership exemplified

Mendoza's straightforward approach to football and his wholesome family life off the field quickly built up his fan base. His dedication to his mother, Elsa, who lives with multiple sclerosis, is also a big draw to fans and his partnership companies.

Wheels Up, a private aviation company, announced Mendoza as an ambassador in February and that it was meaningful for him to be able to make travel more comfortable and manageable for his mother.

"At Wheels Up, we strive to remove barriers and give our members and customers the freedom to focus on what matters most," Wheels up CEO George Mattson said in a statement. "Fernando exemplifies leadership, discipline and purpose both on and off the field. Despite his individual accomplishments, he is a family-first team player who we believe aligns strongly with our brand, and we are proud to support him with a flexible travel approach that ensures the people who matter most can be alongside him."

Mendoza has it all when it come to marketability, according to Natasha Brison, an associate professor at the University of South Carolina's David and Nicole Tepper Department of Sport and Entertainment Management.

"Fernando Mendoza is a brand's dream endorser: excelling both on and off the field," said Brison, whose research focus includes sport marketing, brand management, athlete and coach branding. "On the field, he is tough, consistent and effective. Off the field, he is charismatic, professional and hard-working. In both aspects of his life, Mendoza shows he can be a part of a team (or family) but still lead when it is needed."

Brison said possessing such attributes as Mendoza does explain why he is extremely marketable. She highlighted how the Raiders top pick's choice to stay home in Miami for the NFL draft with his mother and celebrate with his family says a lot about his character and his values.

"His story is about optimism, perseverance and resilience; qualities that brands want to be associated with and want to convey to their consumers," Brison said.

Mendoza brought his family with him last week to Las Vegas for his introduction. The Mendoza family sat around a table with Raiders owner Mark Davis in the dining area of the team's headquarters before Mendoza took the stage to greet the fans.

Latino community opportunity

With Mendoza's Cuban heritage, the quarterback is also primed to tap into the Latino community.

Ana Valdez, president and CEO of the Latino Donor Collaborative, a nonprofit organization that promotes the economic and cultural contributions of the Latino community, says Mendoza is positioned to be a huge hit with Spanish-speaking NFL fans.

There are nearly 40 million Latino NFL fans in the U.S., according to the NFL. With the large segment of Latino fans, the NFL put on a season-long campaign last year called "Por La Cultura" — for the culture — celebrating the community's impact on the game.

The gross domestic product of U.S. Latinos is $4 trillion, which makes it the fifth-largest economy in the world, ahead of the United Kingdom, India and France, according to the Latino Donor Collaborative. Additionally, there can be an organic connection for the Raiders and Mendoza with a faster-growing consumer class, as according to the collaborative, the Latino purchasing power in the U.S. is growing 2.4 times faster than the non-Latino community.

"Even though Mendoza is not Mexican, he's Cuban. For Mexicans in Mexico, all Latinos are brothers and sisters," Valdez said. "In Mexico, there is absolutely no difference. They're brothers, wherever they come from, if they come from a Spanish-speaking country. So yes, in Mexico, he's going to be humongous."

Mendoza's academic achievements align with a nearly 200 percent increase in Latino men earning advanced degrees since 2000, which creates another bridge between Mendoza and the Latino community, Valdez said.

"If you see graduation, Latino kids, when they get their diploma, the first thing they do is go to their parents and give it to them," Valdez said. "Fernando represents that so proudly, right? Some people say even in a nerdy way, but it is so sweet. I think it touches people, especially his mom being unfortunately sick and the devotion that this guy has to her and making important career decisions based on what's best for him, for her."

Raiders fan Michael Gonzales, who attended the fan fest at the team's Henderson facility last week, sees the tie between a past Raiders great in former quarterback Tom Flores, a Mexican American who wore number 15, and Mendoza as the future of the franchise.

"The handoff is pretty cool," Gonzales said. "(Mendoza is) the only Latino to wear 15 again, as a first-round quarterback … It's kind of cool to have that bridge."

Graney: Raiders' new quarterback always puts family first
By Ed Graney
April 25, 2026

It was after his third year at California — having already graduated with a business degree — when Fernando Mendoza transferred to Indiana.

When the quarterback heeded the advice of his mother, Elsa.

"She always saw more in me than I saw in myself," Mendoza said. "At the time, she (challenged) me to take a swing at becoming a great NFL player by transferring and challenging myself in an uncomfortable environment and being uncomfortable in being able to grow.

"She said to step to the plate and if you swing and miss, in 20 years you will know you did everything possible to try and accomplish your dream. I was able to step to the plate and hit a home run last year, so she taught me to have unwavering optimism and to believe in yourself to try and accomplish those goals."

More like a grand slam.

A Heisman Trophy. A 16-0 record and national championship. Being the No. 1 overall draft pick of the Las Vegas Raiders.

Little bro

Mendoza was introduced to the media Friday with his family in attendance. It included his youngest brother, Max, who became even more famous Thursday night when Fernando on national television left Max hanging with a ready high-five after the selection was announced.

"We actually had two post-celebrations when we got the call," Fernando said, smiling. "I had to pick one on TV. I apologized to him. He knows I love him and so I hit him with a dap and hugged him afterwards."

Believe it. Max definitely has a future in broadcasting.

You can tell how much family means to Fernando, how his mother's fight while living with multiple sclerosis is something he and his brothers are intent on making things better for her.

Fernando actually donated $500,000 and launched the Mendoza Family Fund in support of research for MS to work toward a cure for the disease.

His voice cracked Thursday when talking about her, when saying how his mother told him how proud she was following the Raiders making official what most assumed would occur for months.

And her love for him is unwavering.

Elsa, who uses a wheelchair, penned a piece for The Players' Tribune a few days before the Heisman ceremony that saw her son win the ultimate of collegiate football awards.

"You are already everything I could have hoped for as a mother," she wrote. "And that has nothing to do with the miles you throw or the touchdowns you score. It has everything to do with the man you've grown into. As an oldest brother who shows the way. As a hard worker who has an unstoppable spirit. As a Cuban American athlete who represents his community.

"As a leader who lifts up, and lends kindness, even when no one is looking. As a person of faith, who leans on God and trusts Him, even when it's an uneasy road. You have a future that's so bright and a heart that's so full. My gentle giant. My darling son. My buddy. My teammate. I believe in you with every part of me."

Know your team

He has obviously learned well the history of the Raiders, of its deep roots to the Hispanic community. He has more than once pointed out the accomplishments of Jim Plunkett and Tom Flores.

He talks of the responsibility of it all, of it being an honor to uphold the legacy. That he appreciated the Raiders legends who attended his press conference. That what an honor it would be to wear No. 15 (he will do so), that in which Flores sported during his playing career.

Mendoza said he received a text of congratulations from Maxx Crosby. Tyler Linderbaum. Kolton Miller. Kirk Cousins. The latter of whom will, among other things, be the veteran quarterback Mendoza will learn from.

It all seems in place now.

But none of it would mean a thing without those around him he loves, which you saw Friday. His father, Fernando. His younger brother Alberto. Elsa. Max.

All of those who adore him.

"You've never once looked away," Elsa wrote. "You've never once treated me like I'm embarrassing, or deficient, or anything other than someone you love and are standing by. And even as my condition has gotten worse, and as our lives continue to change around that fact: You manage to make me feel like I'm still every part of myself … Like I'm still that same mom."

Burgers, branding and generosity: How Fernando Mendoza left an Indiana legacy
By Adam Hill
March 29, 2026

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — Outfits and attitudes have changed around this sprawling Midwestern campus as a result of one of the most impressive seasons in college football history.

A nerdy kid from Miami who once committed to play at Yale and eventually transferred from California has made Indiana a football school and once again instilled pride in a fan base that had to go deep in the closet to find old gear that they now wear to everything from class to nice dinners.

The fact Fernando Mendoza has had this kind of impact in just one year on campus isn't that much of a surprise considering the fact he led one of the losingest programs in college football history to an undefeated season and a national championship while winning the Heisman Trophy.

But to explore the true impact of Mendoza Mania, a phenomenon that is likely soon to come to Las Vegas when the Raiders make him the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft, one must look no further than how he dramatically influenced one prominent local restaurateur's condiment usage.

His arrival

It wasn't Mendoza's decision to transfer to Indiana for his junior season that completely turned around the fortunes of Indiana football.

That came a year earlier when coach Curt Cignetti arrived and took the Hoosiers on a stunning run to the College Football Playoff.

Still, there was some skepticism that Cignetti may have been a one-hit wonder. Landing Mendoza in the transfer portal provided some hope, but he was far from a sure thing.

Ed Schwartzman, the owner of campus institution BuffaLouie's, certainly wasn't sold that this was a roster that would make history.

Still, he was intrigued when a representative for Mendoza reached out to gauge interest in adding a branded item to his menu that could help raise money and awareness for multiple sclerosis, which afflicts Mendoza's mother.

He had done something similar with a burrito at La Burrita when he was at Berkeley and was hoping to bring the idea with him to Indiana.

"I didn't know much about him but I Googled him and some reporter gave him a 7 percent chance to win the Heisman," Schwartzman recalls with a laugh. "I sent the link to my team and said, 'Who knows, but someone thinks he has a chance. I think we want to do something to help this guy.' And it wasn't for money for him or us, but for a great cause."

It proved to be a great decision, both personally and professionally.

Mendoza came into the restaurant, along with his brother, Alberto, and two other teammates, to sample several options for the new menu item. He wanted it to tie into his Cuban roots, and the concept they came to a consensus on was a burger with Swiss cheese, hot ham, grilled onions, pickles and mustard.

Yes, mustard on a burger. It was certainly out of the comfort zone of Schwartzman, a native New Yorker who always believed ketchup is for hamburgers and mustard is for hot dogs with no crossover.

But it was for a good cause. And as it turned out, a good person and friend.

Schwartzman started making food for the contingent of Mendoza's friends and family who would attend games each week. He attended playoff games and despite all the attention and demands on Mendoza, the star quarterback would always make time for Schwartzman's 10-year-old son.

"He could not be any nicer," Schwartzman said. "This kid just gets it. His whole family gets it."

'I'd vote for him'

Schwartzman may have had the opportunity to get closer to Mendoza than most around the community, but many fans share the same evaluation of the star quarterback as a person.

Todd Handy has been an Indiana fan his whole life, though he may be more vocal about it these days.

Many of his sweatshirts and hats have been collecting mothballs since the once-dominant basketball program started to fall on hard times.

Now he's fully decked out in crimson and cream as he attends the live broadcast of the women's basketball coach's show at Hoosier Hank's restaurant, a few blocks from campus.

Handy said Mendoza's presence has inspired the entire community and brought people closer together.

"He's just a great representation for Indiana University, Bloomington and our whole county," Handy said. "I think if you're having a bad day and you get to hear Fernando Mendoza talk, it will turn it around. The Las Vegas Raiders are going to be getting a good player for sure, but he's even more special off the field. I hate to see him go, but he's going to be one of those that we're voting on in the political world one day.

"I know I'd vote for him."

Sarah Dubbels nods in agreement.

She attended an event at Dick's Sporting Goods a few weeks earlier where fans had to wait in line in frigid temperatures in the wee hours of the morning just to get a wristband to come back in line later for the chance to shake Mendoza's hand.

But what they also saw was Mendoza taking extra time with everyone, including a woman in a wheelchair later identified as Janet who he got down on one knee next to and engaged in an extended conversation.

"He's kind, generous and classy," Dubbels said. "Las Vegas is getting a good one. He's so nice and polished, but he's strong. He's got grit. He'll get it done. I've seen him get hit so many times and just get up and get the job done."

"He's going to do really well in the NFL. His mentality, his preparation, which is off the charts. He's a football nerd. You're getting a Peyton Manning, Tom Brady-like guy in the classroom. He will overcome any deficiency anyone thinks he might have because he's so smart. If he's on the Raiders, I will follow him and I know he's always going to represent us with class."

Campus impact

Shay Ciezki is the star of the women's basketball team and one of the best players in the Big Ten.

But even she was able to learn something from being around Mendoza as part of the Hoosiers athletic department.

"I got to hang around with him in the summer, and it's so cool to see his work ethic and how much he does that a lot of people don't know or see," she said. "He's always watching film or trying to get on the field to put in extra reps. You can see it in his play and athlete to athlete. It's something I think everyone wants to try to mirror."

His presence is tough to get away from.

Ciezki laughs thinking about a few weeks earlier when the team was in Southern California for a road trip to play USC and UCLA. All of the players were in Hoosiers gear as they walked around town to constant screams and calls about the school's star quarterback.

"You can just see the influence he has that has just taken over our brand across the country," she said. "But he's everything the media shows. He's a great guy. He's fun, and he's a great culture guy. I think Las Vegas is getting one heck of a player."

Her coach, Teri Moran, has been at the school for more than a decade and has had to sit through some difficult football games.

While she appreciates what he has done for the university on the field, the impact he will leave behind off it is what will define his legacy at Indiana to her.

"This group has just been so much fun, but for Fernando being the quarterback, from his interviews to his heart with people to his story with his mom, it's just been awesome for us," she said. "Not just the football program or the school, but our community in Bloomington, as well. This is a close-knit community anyway, but we've traditionally been a basketball school and that all changed this year.

"Indiana has been talked about nationally throughout this whole thing. I have a feeling we'll get more applicants than ever. It's unheard of what they've been able to do. I just can't wrap my head around how they went from the losingest program to national champions and he was such a big part of that in doing it the way he did."

It's a sentiment shared by senior Dalton James, who covers the Hoosiers football team for the Indiana Daily Student.

"Nobody cared," he said. "People went to games because it's fun and it's outside in the fall and you can tailgate and drink. That was all."

Now football games are a national attraction and a major beat for the school paper and all media outlets in the region.

James said one of his biggest challenges has been coming up with new ways to say Indiana won in yet another blowout.

But Mendoza always keeps things interesting and fresh. James and other reporters would often find themselves laughing as they listened back to his interviews and transcribed his quotes.

"He's just so unique, almost a nerd," James said. "But listening to him talk is just so much fun. He's using words like 'conglomerate' and things like that in postgame interviews. Obviously, they didn't lose. But you almost got the sense he would have handled himself the exact same way. He's such a good person to represent the school. You knew when he was going to go up there to talk, whether at the Heisman ceremony or spring practice, he's going to represent the school as best he could. Anytime he was talking, you knew it was going to be good for us."

Mustard guy

He's also been good for business.

Applications are almost certain to rise dramatically as a result of what Mendoza and the Hoosiers did on the field.

And the Mendoza Brothers Burger was joined by a Mendoza Brothers Cubano at Schwartzman's other location, Gables Bagels.

As Mendoza's popularity grew, Schwartzman had people all over the country calling the restaurants with their credit card numbers and asking to buy the items for whoever was in the restaurants just to be part of the effort.

Nearly $400,000 has been raised through both sales of the items and other Mendoza-driven initiatives.

Schwartzman gets emotional talking about what it has meant for him to get to know Mendoza and his family, particularly the impact he has witnessed Mendoza having on people.

"He's just so gracious," Schwartzman said.

He also has good taste, apparently. Schwartzman is a devoted convert to a concept he once believed unfathomable.

“Now I only put mustard on my burgers thanks to Fernando,” Schwartzman said.

Inside Fernando Mendoza's first day as a Raider
By Levi Edwards
April 28, 2026

Fernando Mendoza quietly walked into the Raiders broadcast studio Friday afternoon, greeted by hosts Amber Theoharis, former Raiders receiver James Jones and Pro Football Hall of Fame cornerback Eric Allen.

At 6-foot-5, he looked less like a quarterback and more like an NBA shooting guard as he slid into the far-right seat at the anchor desk and introduced himself. The three hosts asked him a few general questions about how his day was going. With a sly grin, Mendoza kept his answers short and sweet, while very calmly collecting himself.

He glanced at the camera in front of him, then turned to ask, "Is this live?"

"Yes it is," Theoharis replied.

Mendoza's demeanor quickly shifted. The small talk was over as he straightened up, shoulders squared. The hosts saw it happen in real time, what his teammates have probably seen each week before he steps on the field – the moment he locked in.

And as the red dot on the camera turned on, so did he.

"I'm just so blessed for the opportunity," Mendoza said. "And it shows what a first-class organization this is, the support whether it's the alumni, the coaching staff, the teammates, everyone that's reached out, I'm so happy to be a part of it."

This quiet, calm, young man transformed into this charismatic, engaging superstar. He turned into the quarterback the nation fell in love with over the span of the last calendar year for his postgame interviews and big play-making abilities.

In front of that camera, he turned into the guy the Raiders drafted to be their their franchise quarterback.

"You are a very humble kid, [but] this is your team dog," Jones told Mendoza. "Whether you like it or not right now, this is your team walking into the building."

A seriousness once again took over Mendoza..

"Although I've come off as very humble, and pretty fuzzy and warm," Mendoza responded, "at the end of my Indiana career when you have that equity, you're able to be like No. 4 [Brett Favre] and No. 12 [Aaron Rodgers]," as Mendoza name dropped Jones' two quarterbacks with the Green Bay Packers.

"If you ask my teammates ... I wasn't always a nice guy, I was an a-hole sometimes because I wanted everyone to do their one-eleventh, everyone to do their job, hold everyone to an high standard.

However, coming into a new organization, starting from the bottom of the totem pole, I believe that leadership is earned, not given."

Within his first few hours inside Raiders headquarters, Mendoza showed the traits that made him the No. 1 pick — and not just the ones tied to arm strength or footwork. First impressions matter for any rookie, especially one carrying a franchise's hopes, but nothing about his demeanor felt manufactured.

He was simply being himself.

At no point did the moment seem too big, especially when walking into the lobby of the team's facilities to a standing ovation from the staff and team president Sandra Douglass Morgan. His mother, father, aunt and two younger brothers trailed behind him, allowing him to soak in the moment.

"He's always been someone to be open to new things," his father, Fernando Mendoza Sr., told Raiders.com. "Meeting new people, new situations, whether it's a new school or a social environment, that's kind of his demeanor. Kind of observant and pretty open to new experiences. That's who he is."

"He's a pretty reserved guy at times, but he'll wear his emotions on his sleeve," he added of his son's temperament. "I think you could see it come through afterwards, when he could let go and realized, 'Hey, I'm going to be playing for the Raiders.'"

The first hands he shook belonged to four Raiders icons: Super Bowl XV MVP Jim Plunkett, 1985 NFL MVP Marcus Allen and Pro Football Hall of Fame receivers Tim Brown and Fred Biletnikoff.

"I really appreciate all the legends coming out here today," Mendoza said during his introductory press conference. "It means so much to see the alumni and really shows what a first class organization this is. So, I'm stoked and ready to prove it."

Each compliment he received throughout the building, he quickly dismissed, reminding them he is now "back at the bottom of the totem pole."

Yes, the No. 1 overall pick in the NFL Draft said this on numerous occasions as if he's a UDFA coming in to fight for a roster spot.

Don't let the soft smile fool you. Underneath it is a calculated competitor.

"I think part of his calming presence is he's not scared to work," his mother, Elsa Mendoza, said. "He has no fears about working and staying late and being the best he can be. He's just confident that he knows he can outwork anybody.

"He is what you see. It's so funny because once people get to know him, they're really like, 'He really is that person.' He doesn't try to be anything that he's not. He is who he is."

His day wrapped with a tour of the facility and a conversation with owner Mark Davis in the cafeteria.

Then, for one last time, he flipped the switch back on.

He went out to address over 2,000 Raiders fans in attendance for the Festival of Football celebration, playing to a crowd full of nonstop cheers. He high-fived as many hands as he could, not turning down fans the opportunity for pictures.

This included granting an interview to Noelle aka "DJ Cheese" – an 8-year-old Intermountain Health patient and kid reporter for the day. In the midst of crowded event, he crouched down on bended knee to give Noelle his full attention.

He carried himself like someone ready for the NFL spotlight, a role he seems to have been preparing for quietly, naturally, for a long time.

And if Day 1 was any indication, the spotlight won't change him.

LB SEGUN OLUBI

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Inside linebacker Segun Olubi's winding, resilient road to Raiders
By Sam Gordon
June 28, 2026

BULLHEAD CITY, Ariz. — A hundred-ish teenagers kneeled around him at Anderson Auto Group Field House, students summoned to the football field, eager to hear the sensei speak. But Las Vegas Raiders linebacker Segun Olubi wanted to hear their voices before camp began, grabbing the microphone to let them know.

"I'm an energy guy," Olubi said, dressed in a long-sleeved Raiders shirt with matching black pants, white socks and orange Nikes.

"So on the count of three, we're going to get the loudest yell we can possibly do. One, two, three."

Silence from the students as Olubi yelled, his face toward the ceiling and his arms extended, prompting some laughs and another request a few seconds later.

"We need some energy. … On the count of three, the loudest yell we got."

Energy matched. Camp underway.

The unvarnished passion with which Olubi organized his football camp in his onetime hometown has steadied him through the cycle of change that resulted in a one-year free-agent deal with Las Vegas. An NAIA recruit turned junior college transfer turned Division II starter turned Division I walk-on, Olubi, 26, is now a fifth-year force of will with a selfless spirit and sterling smile.

The Raiders watched him block a punt off the booming right foot of A.J. Cole in their loss last year to the Indianapolis Colts, seeing his special-teams prowess firsthand. His mother, Yemisi, a physician working in California's Inland Empire, where he also once lived, watched him refuse to yield his dream as they canvassed the country throughout his youth.

"I don't know how to describe it," she said, cheesing after the camp concluded following two two-hour sessions then a break, the first with elementary school boys and girls. Wearing a Bullheads Firebirds Flames shirt, a nod to Olubi's Pop Warner team, she added: "The fact that he would want to come back here and deposit something in this community, it just shows that he's growing into a good man. A man who likes to give back and bring other people along with him in his journey."

Campers were guided through stretches and drills by Olubi's former coaches and teammates, Las Vegas edge rusher Kwity Paye — his former teammate with the Indianapolis Colts — and kicker Kansei Matsuzawa among them. Afterward, the Raiders trio signed dozens and dozens of autographs, drawing out grins they mirrored in photos for which they posed alongside their pupils.

Pizza and waters were also presented free of charge like the rest of the camp, along with black shirts adorned with the greater-than symbol in white across the front.

“It’s really just being greater than your circumstance,” Olubi explained standing 6-foot-1, chock-full of muscle at 233 pounds. “Being greater than any obstacle that comes toward you. And being able to be a pillar of light in your community, regardless of what happens to you in life.”
Regardless of no Division I scholarship offers.

Bullhead City became a base of sorts for Olubi, born in Philadelphia with stints in New Jersey and Minnesota’s Twin Cities — where his parents divorced and his mother did her occupational medical residency — sandwiched around one in Corona, California.

Sports provided a sense of stability and structure amid the constant movement in his youth.

Basketball, soccer and track and field filled Olubi’s idle time, but nothing resonates with him like football does. His mother bought him a Minnesota Vikings uniform for his elementary school’s “pro day,” foreshadowing the next 20 years … and counting.

“Since then, it’s just been this passion for football,” said Yemisi Olubi, from whom he and his brother, Gbenga, inherited their resilience — watching her grind through medical school. “He was able to take different things from different environments, develop adaptability and also learn how to integrate into different groups of people or teams.”

Olubi was in fourth grade when his family landed in Bullhead City, where the Anderson Auto Group Field House hadn’t been conceptualized, much less built. The desert town of 44,493 tucked across the Nevada border and nestled alongside the Colorado River supported his start.

Hence why he came back to host his camp, whether he played in Las Vegas or not.

Said Randy Moreno, a coach at the camp who coached Olubi in football and basketball his freshman year at Mohave High School — keeping in touch with him throughout his career: “There was not a selfish bone in body. Everything about him is how he can give back. Even at that time, I would give him a ride to practice and it was like ‘Coach, ahhh.’ I was like ‘Man, you’re good.’ … Before he was closer, he was still going to come back.”

The move to Corona enrolled Olubi, then a sophomore, at Centennial High School, for which he played across the defense, thriving also on special teams. Sometimes a safety, linebacker or gunner, he never found a positional home.

That “probably didn’t help him out a ton,” Huskies coach Matt Logan said, but it didn’t dim his passion or verve. “The pace and the intensity he played with is where I think we started to see of the separation of what he could become,” even if D-1 programs didn’t.

Without a D-1 scholarhip, Olubi made his way to College of Idaho, a NAIA program in Caldwell, Idaho, for which he played his freshman year. Then came a year at Saddleback College, a junior college in Mission Viejo, California, that led him as a junior to Harding College, a Division II school in Searcy, Arkansas.

All those stops and their corresponding coaches afforded him tangible takeaways he has since applied to his pro career: leadership at Idaho, belief at Saddleback, conviction at Harding, he said. If not for Harding's discontinuation of his economics major, he might not have thought to walk on at San Diego State.

"I think about that too," Olubi said, championing his faith in God. "I don't harbor any type of negative ill will towards anybody, because everything happens for a reason."

Olubi's multi-positional background eased his adjustment to San Diego State, where he impressed on coaches with his processing and speed in addition to his customary all-out effort. With a defensive back's burst and a linebacker's thump, he was an ideal fit for the "Aztec" spot, a hybrid safety-linebacker role akin to the "Lobo" role manned by former New Mexico star (and Chicago Bears star turned Pro Football Hall of Famer) Brian Urlacher.

Depth on the defense — for which he eventually settled at weakside linebacker while serving as a standout on special teams — limited Olubi to seven games his senior year, compromised by COVID-19 and granting him a fifth-year scholarship campaign.

"It was just like one of those things where like — why did it take this long to do that?" said Olubi's defensive coordinator at San Diego State, Kurt Mattix, now Ohio's defensive coordinator. "Because they saw it. He's beating corners and safeties and defensive backs in sprints because he didn't know any other speed other than full-go."

That's in part why Olubi's teammates voted him captain his senior season, the other part being his commitment as their teammate. He led by example, led with friendship, led with connection — and the hard conversation.

"He can look in the mirror and know that he was always giving his best in everything he did," Mattix said. "Unbelievable person to be around. Always had smile on his face, unless he was mad at you because you got after him a little bit."

Though 53 tackles in 14 games, including 3.5 for loss plus a pair of sacks, weren't enough to get Olubi drafted in 2022, a 4.45-second 40-yard dash at his pro day helped him garner attention from NFL teams. First from the San Francisco 49ers, then the Colts, for whom he played the past four years.

Not that he was bothered by that.

"Those hard times, when you're kind of learning to work by yourself, I learned that skill," Olubi said. "I had learned to work in the dark and let that come to light."

And to silver and black.

Las Vegas specials teams coordinator Joe DeCamillis said he's "excited" to coach Olubi, calling him "twitchy," a "difference maker" and noting he has already left a favorable impression.

The Raiders see him as a special teams standout. Bullhead City sees him as a hometown hero.

"For him to come back and to give into this kids and pour back into them, it's great," Moreno said. "A smaller area, it lets these kids know 'If I have discipline and hard work, I can achieve my goals as well.'"

How Tre Tucker's steady growth is a key advantage for the Raiders
By Paul Gutierrez
May 26, 2026

Tre Tucker grew up wrestling.

He also ran track in high school and, obviously, he played football good enough to earn a scholarship from Cincinnati and get selected in the third round of the NFL draft by the Raiders.

But when it comes to his position group in his team's most recent reimagining, the speedy-and-undersized-yet-physical pass catcher sees another sport peering through.

"The receiver room's kind of becoming like a basketball team," Tucker told me on the most recent episode of Upon Further Review. "You've got to have … your role.

"You've got a point guard, you've got your shooting guard, you've got all that. So, really, you want your best three out there and then you want them to complement each other."

Enter Tucker as a modern, albeit, gridiron combo of Phil Jackson, Gregg Popovich, Pat Riley, Red Auerbach and Becky Hammon.

"If I was a coach, I would want my best three [receivers] out there and I want all different skillsets, you know, because it kind of gives you flexibility to do what you want," Tucker continued. "But, we've just got to all do our job. We've got to execute and when the ball's thrown to us - catch, block - good things will happen."

So is the 5-foot-8, 182-pound Tucker running the point on a fast break, or filling up the basket as a three-point bomber from the outside, figuratively speaking?

Tucker paused.

"Wherever they need me," he chuckled. "I just say, Wherever they need me.

"So, we'll see."

Ever the team player, Tucker has also assumed another role, another title.

For all intents and purposes, as the Raiders enter Week 2 of OTAs, Tucker is WR1.

And why not? He led the Raiders with 696 receiving yards last season and had five touchdown catches. And, while the Raiders did add Jailon Nailor and Dareke Young in free agency and used a sixth-round draft pick on Malik Benson, the only other returners to the WR room with more than four career starts are second-year guys Jack Bech (20 catches for 224 yards in 16 games, five starts) and Dont'e Thornton (10-135 in 15 games, eight starts).

Much to the consternation of fans, the Raiders did not necessarily address the need for the prototypical "X" receiver on the outside this spring.

And yet…

New coach Klint Kubiak was intrigued enough by Tucker's skillset that he name-dropped him several times, unprompted, this offseason.

So I asked him specifically about Tucker.

"He can run all day," Kubiak said. "He's a quiet leader, a guy that we're going to put in a leadership role. He's got to be a playmaker for us, and he has been. And now let's go see what else we can get out of him."

So does Tucker remind Kubiak of another player he coached previously?

A slight smile crossed Kubiak's face, no doubt thinking about Tucker's 4.37-second 40-time at his pro day.

"Yes," he said. "Sometimes that's not fair to say out loud, but when you've got a guy that's that size and that competitive and works that hard, there's not a whole lot of humans on the planet that can put as many yards on the field at that high of a speed.

"So he's been really impressive."

And therein lies the rub.

Tucker is entering his fourth NFL season…with his fourth different NFL coach.

From the guy who drafted him in Josh McDaniels to Antonio Pierce to Pete Carroll to Kubiak.

Different coaches. Different mindsets. Different philosophies.

Tucker exhaled.

"At the end of the day, you don't want that," Tucker said. "You wish to have the same head coach all four years but, you know, that's the nature of the business. I think the best thing you can do is just be a pro and be able to adapt."

And therein lies the potential for growth for a purported WR1

"It's obviously going to be new schemes, new changes, and I think the great ones, the ones who last so long, they're able to adapt … and keep going and adjust to all the new changes," he said.

"The hidden thing that people don't realize is you get to learn. You learn ball. I've been in a bunch of different schemes, but I've learned different things in each scheme … the whys. I've been blessed to be able to have different schemes and learn different ways how to play football and each one has impacted me in a way and I've taken something from it."

Throw in the fact that Tucker is also breaking in a pair of new quarterbacks in 15th-year vet Kirk Cousins and rookie Fernando Mendoza and, well…

"I'm not gonna lie, I'm a huge fan of Kirk Cousins," Tucker said, adding that he watched his star turns on the Netflix series "Quarterback."

"Seeing him in person, he's probably top 3 funniest on the team. His demeanor, he's top 3 funniest. Like, every day Kirk does something and I'm just like, Oh my gosh … great personality, great human being and definitely excited we got him."

Yes, Tucker said Kirko Chainz and the Nandolorian "100%" nailed their "Step Brothers" appearance on the Raiders' schedule-release video.

"Those two personalities are great for each other," Tucker said.

And what of Mendoza?

"He's awesome, he's a tremendous rookie," Tucker said. "I'm very excited for him, he's gonna have a very bright future. The one thing that really impresses me, being the No. 1 overall pick, just so you know, his work ethic, his detail, attention to detail.

"I'm a football junkie, so I watch a lot of things on film. Sometimes I watch guys who aren't even in, just to see what they're doing, and he's always behind taking mental reps and that just shows that he's gonna be a great player one day and his future is very bright."

With his versatility and adaptability, you might say the same of Tucker, the wrestler-turned-track star-turned-WR1.

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Hill: Dad's book offers life lessons for Raiders' 2nd-round pick
By Adam Hill
May 2, 2026

Treydan Stukes couldn't help but read the words in his dad's voice.

It was the same affirmations and lessons the Las Vegas Raiders second-round draft pick had been hearing in his home his entire life.

This time, they were printed in a book.

"The Self-Centered Perspective: Using Self-Mastery, The Power of Introspection, and Choice to Balance Life's Ups and Downs," is the title of the 2024 work produced by Treydan's father, Ray Stukes Jr.

The book synopsis says it "will help you achieve a higher quality of life by arming you with the understanding, confidence, positivity, and fulfillment you may not have thought possible in your life."

But the lasting lesson the rookie defensive back took from it is one that has been ingrained in him since he was a child and one he carries with him on the field.

H.E.A.R.T.

"It's Humility, Efficacy, Accountability, Resilience and Trustworthiness," Stukes said after a rookie minicamp practice Saturday. "I wear it on my wrist every day, just to remind myself, those are the values I want to show and prove to myself every single day in life and in football. So, yeah, I think that's the main thing, that's the main takeaway from that one, for sure."

He has done a great job of it thus far.

While his physical talents greatly improved over six years of building size and strength at Arizona, it's difficult to find a scouting report on Stukes that doesn't lead with character, intelligence and leadership.

He arrived in Tucson as a walk-on who was a 4.0 student in high school and a zero-star recruit who weighed 150 pounds and had no legitimate offers.

Stukes was welcomed into the program only because his father's former college position coach Paul Rhoads was the defensive coordinator and cracked the door open by sharing high school tape with the rest of the coaching staff.

But his heart, or H.E.A.R.T., became immediately evident. Stukes was on scholarship the next season and named captain three times under two coaching staffs.

He starred on the field and off, even opting to stay loyal to Arizona when other offers arose and his program appeared to be in turmoil.

His character shines through every time he speaks. And he just so happens to be really good at football.

Stukes is a versatile defensive back who will serve a variety of roles in Rob Leonard's defense. But he's not about to stop growing as a person or a player just because he completed an unlikely journey to the NFL.

"I think building a great team starts with being a great teammate first, and that's something I learned the importance of throughout my entire football career, honestly," he said. "And coming in as a rookie, you want to be confident, you want to be ready to learn, but you want to learn from the vets.

"You want to learn from the coaching staff. And that's what I'm here to do. I'm going to steal knowledge from everyone I can. I'm going to copy the vets that have done it right and have been succeeding for years at this at this level."

It's the kind of mentality that allowed him to traverse a road paved in the adversity of being overlooked at every stop along the way.

"My path was never the most perfect path, or what you would draw out for yourself," he said. "It's hard to imagine yourself at the highest point watching the best of the best in the world when you're in those times. But I just kept trusting the process, trusting the people I love, and trying to gain knowledge everywhere I was. And I just kept getting confident, more and more confident in my abilities as I kept getting older and wiser.

"And, I'm super happy to be here now."

Those are lessons that go beyond what you can read in a book. Unless your dad wrote it.

"I read the book, obviously in his voice, and it had just taken me back to being in fourth grade, first year of tackle football," Stukes said. "The things he's telling me are the same things he's writing down.

"So, it was definitely cool to read it in a book and realize that he's been teaching me that stuff my entire life."

Treydan Stukes leaned on personal values to transform from unrecruited prospect to Raiders' second-round draft pick

By Levi Edwards
April 24, 2026

This unmovable faith has shaped his life on and off the football field. It's how the safety without a single FBS college scholarship to his name has become a Las Vegas Raider.

A Goodyear, Arizona, native, Stukes was unranked as an undersized prospect in his home state which led to him walking on at the University of Arizona.

Fast forward six years, a few added inches in height and some lean muscle mass on his once deemed "undersized" frame, Stukes worked his way into becoming regarded as one of the top defensive backs in the nation.

"I think it all falls down to my values," Stukes said via Zoom as he reflected on his journey to the NFL.

"I kind of go by the motto, 'Heart, humility, efficiancy, accountability, resilience and trustworthiness.' I've used those values at every level in every stage of my life. It's just helped me grow and keep striving to be my best in all aspects of my life ... and I think that's what's allowed me to have the growth that I've had from being a walk-on to now."

His instinctual nature and ability to read offenses is what's made him thrive. He complied seven interceptions, 29 pass deflections and 12 tackles for loss in his time with the Wildcats.

Needless to say, his ability to find his way to the ball is what led him up the draft board.

"Mindset is a huge part of that," Stukes said of his knack for creating turnovers. "I think getting the ball back to your offense is obviously going to be the most important thing you can do as a defender. And being a defensive back, you get the most opportunities in the pass game. ... I think a lot of teams, and honestly, football as a whole has kind of recognized the value of turnovers, and I value that as highly as anything on the football field."

Along with Stukes' ability to make plays on the ball, he brings versatility to the Raiders secondary. He lined up in multiple spots in college, ranging from free safety, box safety, nickel corner and even outside cornerback.

"I'm willing to play any of them. ... I've got some good reps at pretty much every defensive back position," he said. "So, wherever the coaches want me, whatever the coaches see me fitting best, I'm willing to do, and whatever I can play to help the team win games, that's where I'm at."

Regardless of where Stukes lines up for the Raiders, his path to the NFL is still something to marvel at. And as he embarks on this new chapter, he'll continue to trust the process which has led him to this point.

"If a guy like me with zero stars out of high school can make it to this point, anybody is capable of doing whatever they want if they are disciplined and they put in the work and effort that it takes to be prepared for their moment to shine."

Raiders RB Mike Washington Jr.'s ambitions come with no ceiling
By Paul Gutierrez
May 1, 2026

Mike Washington Jr. has goals.

BIG goals.

And the Raiders' fourth-round draft pick doesn't really care if you think he's aiming too high. After all, this is a well-traveled running back whose college career took him from Buffalo to New Mexico State to Arkansas to the NFL and Las Vegas so confidence and, yes, discipline have played major roles in his journey.

When he said in the afterglow of the Raiders using the No. 122 overall draft choice on him that he was "looking to be a legend [and] I'm going to be a legend," it deserved a follow up. As in, what, exactly, did he mean by that?

"It means I'm gonna do everything that I say," Washington told me without flinching on the most recent episode of Upon Further Review. "I'm looking to put on a Gold Jacket, you know? And I know it's big words, but I have high expectations of myself and I've always been that way.

"Some people may hear this and they laugh, but people have been laughing at me my whole life. So I always use that as a chip on my shoulder just to prove everybody wrong. So that's what I mean by that – I have super high expectations of myself and I will exceed those."

There's no laughing in this corner. After all, you have to be sure of yourself to make it in the NFL, let alone life. And discipline, as noted before, has set him on that path.

Consider: Washington's father is a major crimes investigator for the Utica (N.Y.) Police Department, his mother is the founder and executive director of the Patty-Roy Foundation, a nonprofit to help the homeless, and his older brother is a former Marine and bodybuilder who is now a police officer in Dallas.

"It was instilled in me since Day 1," Washington said.

"Now, that's kind of just what I implement into my game, into my routines, just being disciplined. And not motivated. Because being motivated is an emotion, it comes and goes. But discipline is something you do whether you're sad, happy, tired. It has nothing to do with motivation. [Discipline] is doing it on a day-to-day basis, no matter how you feel."

And those are things Washington can control.

What he was "blessed" with is size (6-foot-2, 228 pounds), speed (4.33 in the 40) and agility (a 39-inch vertical).

Washington smiled.

"With the genetics thing, I mean, it's talent," he said, "but it's hard work at the same time. I've been gifted with genetics and being able to have this talent, but my hard work has met my talent. So now, I'm able to excel at whatever I really put my mind to."

Touché.

All of which begs the ultimate X's and O's question on Day 1 of rookie minicamp - how does Washington, who averaged 6.4 yards per carry in rushing for 1,070 yards and 8eight touchdowns last fall, fit in a backfield already boasting last year's No. 6 overall draft pick in Ashton Jeanty, who was a 25-yard pickup away from a 1,000-yard rookie season?

Think of last year's Super Bowl champions and remember who called plays for the Seahawks with a pair of productive backs. Yeah, that was new Raiders coach Klint Kubiak, then Seattle's offensive coordinator, who worked with new Raiders OC Andrew Janocko, then Seattle's QB coach.

"Yeah, I mean, we were excited to get him, for sure," Raiders director of college scouting Brandon Yeargan said of Washington. "Super productive, high character.

"We feel like he's a really good fit for Coach Kubiak and Andrew's scheme in the wide-zone system. So, pretty fired about him, and the person he is too."

In Kubiak's two-headed rushing attack, Kenneth Walker III rushed for 1,027 yards and five TDs and won Super Bowl MVP honors while Zach Charbonnet rushed for 730 yards and 12 scores.

So THAT's how Washington, who told me he is most comfortable running in "any type of gap scheme and zone schemes," fits with the Raiders.

In fact, former Raiders linebacker-turned-Raiders radio analyst Kirk Morrison already has a nickname for the duo of Jeanty and Washington – the Silver Surfer and Black Lightning.

Washington smiled. Again.

"Really, honestly, just complement him," Washington said of joining Jeanty. "Then being a sponge. Being a sponge will be my biggest asset because I'm a huge sponge and I like to learn from everybody."

On every stop.

But especially on that initial jaunt from Buffalo to Las Cruces, N.M., where his eyes spied something different.

"Never seen a mountain a day in my life," he said. "First time going out there, seeing mountains, seeing the tumbleweeds, I was just like, 'Whoa, am I in a cartoon or something?'

"It was wild, but it was a huge culture shock going out there. Super hot, too."
