CHIEFS VISIT SUPERDOME TO TAKE ON NEW ORLEANS SAINTS

VS.

Kansas City Chiefs (12-1) at New Orleans Saints (10-3)
Sunday, December 20, 2020 • CBS • 3:25 p.m. CT
Mercedes-Benz Superdome • New Orleans, Louisiana
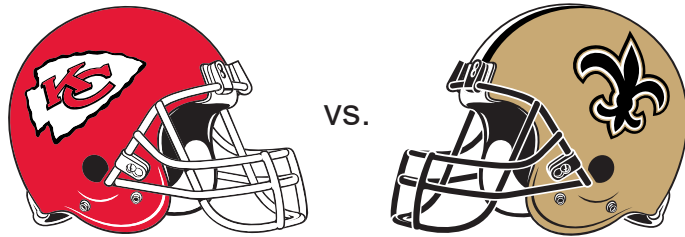

The Chiefs travel to New Orleans to take on the Saints in the club's final regular season road contest of 2020. Kickoff on Sunday, Dec. 20 is slated for 3:25 p.m. CT. Last week the Chiefs clinched the AFC West Division title for the fifth consecutive season with a 33-27 win over the Miami Dolphins. The club has won 10-consecutive road games (franchise record), including all seven this season. Under Head Coach Andy Reid the Chiefs have now qualified for the postseason seven times in his eight seasons. Kansas City enters Sunday's contest on top of the AFC with a 12-1 record, the best mark through 13 games in franchise history. The Chiefs have tallied a 36-11 (.766) mark against AFC West opponents since 2013, including victories in 31 of the last 34 meetings (.912). The Chiefs hold a 56-15 (.789) record against AFC opponents dating back to 2015.

Reid owns 234 career victories (regular and postseason combined). He ranks fifth on the NFL's all-time wins list, recently passing Curly Lambeau (229). In eight seasons with the club, Reid has tallied 89 regular season wins. NFL/Super Bowl MVP QB Patrick Mahomes has recorded 13,620 yards, 109 touchdowns and only 23 INTs (+86 TD/INT differential) in his career. In 44 games, he's notched 26 300+ passing yard performances. Mahomes only threw five INTs last season in 484 pass attempts and has five INTs this season in 497 attempts. He's tallied 33 TD passes so far this season and a 112.3 rating. TE Travis Kelce owns 25 games with 100+ receiving yards and has caught at least one pass in 108 consecutive games. Kelce has eclipsed the 1,000-yard mark for the fifth-consecutive season, extending his NFL record as the first tight end in NFL history to do so, and he needs 128 yards in the final three games to set the single season record for tight ends (George Kittle - 1,377). He has 1,250 yards this season. Since entering the league in 2016, WR Tyreek Hill is first among all NFL pass catchers with 66 receptions of 25+ yards. In his seventh NFL season, WR Sammy Watkins has averaged 14.6 yards per catch in his career. Rookie RB Clyde Edwards-Helaire owns 724 rushing yards thus far in 2020. On Oct. 17, the Chiefs added RB Le'Veon Bell to the club's offense. Bell has tallied 238 yards from scrimmage and one rushing TD. Defensively, the Chiefs have given up an average of 21.6 points per game this season, ranking fifth in the AFC. KC has 24.0 sacks this season, 15 INTs and five fumble recoveries. The Chiefs have scored 60 points off 20 takeaways. S Tyrann Mathieu leads the team with six INTs this season. On special teams, K Harrison Butker has made 119 of his 132 career field goal attempts (90.2%) and 178 of 191 PATs (93.2%).

For the first time in 50 years, the 2019 Kansas City Chiefs returned to the Super Bowl, defeating the San Francisco 49ers 31-20 in Super Bowl LIV in Miami on Feb. 2, 2020. The Chiefs were crowned AFC Champions after a 35-24 victory over the Tennessee Titans at Arrowhead Stadium, earning the Lamar Hunt Trophy for the first time in franchise history. The Chiefs have hosted the AFC title game the last two seasons. Last year the Chiefs held the No. 2 seed entering the playoffs.

"Flexible scheduling" will be used in Weeks 11-17. Additionally, in Weeks 5-10, flexible scheduling may be used in no more than two weeks. In Weeks 5-16, the schedule lists the games tentatively set for Sunday Night Football on NBC. Only Sunday afternoon games are eligible to be moved to Sunday night, in which case the tentatively scheduled Sunday night game would be moved to an afternoon start time. A flexible scheduling move would be announced at least 12 days before the game. Flexibility for Saturday games is also a part of the 2020 schedule. For Week 17, the Sunday night game will be announced no later than six days prior to the final Sunday of regular season play. The schedule does not list a Sunday night game in Week 17, but an afternoon game with playoff implications will be moved to that time slot. Flexible scheduling will not be applied to games airing on Thursday or Monday nights.

MCCULLOUGH'S AMAZING STORY

Kansas City Chiefs Running Backs Coach Deland McCullough was featured on ESPN's E:60, highlighting his inspirational journey to discovering his birth parents.

The feature, which aired on Sunday, Sept. 2, 2018, documents the life of McCullough, who was adopted at birth, and his search for his biological parents that spanned more than 40 years. That alone makes for a powerful story, but as it turns out, McCullough was already plenty familiar with his biological father – a man he had known since he was a kid, a man that was a mentor and father-figure who goes by the name of Sherman Smith. It's a story that defies the odds as his father was unaware that he had a son, but still served as an instrumental figure throughout McCullough's life.

"If you would have told me to pick who my father was, there's no way I would have picked him because I might have thought I wasn't worthy for him to be my father," McCullough said. "I felt like my blessings came full circle because I'd always wanted to be somebody like him."

THE BEST IN CHIEFS HISTORY

Now in his eighth season as head coach in Kansas City, Andy Reid is the club's third-longest tenured head coach trailing only Pro Football Hall of Fame Coach Hank Stram (15 years) and Marty Schottenheimer (10 years). In his first eight seasons as Head Coach of the Chiefs, Reid has coached the team to a 89-36 record in 125 regular season games. His 71.2 winning percentage is the top mark in franchise history for any coach in his first eight seasons leading the club. Marty Schottenheimer is second on that list, leading his Chiefs teams to a 81-43-1 (65.2%) record in his first eight seasons. In Reid's 125 total games with the Chiefs, he has registered a 46-16 (74.2%) record at home and a 43-20 (68.3%) record on the road.

• The 2013 Chiefs, led by Head Coach Andy Reid, orchestrated the greatest single-season turnaround in franchise history after an 11-5 finish. In 2012, the team finished 2-14, a +9 turnaround in his first season with the club. MAHOMES SIGNS DECADE-LONG EXTENSION

The Kansas City Chiefs made several moves in the offseason to keep key members of the Super Bowl team in the Kingdom long-term, starting with signing quarterback and MVP of Super Bowl LIV Patrick Mahomes to a 10-year contract extension.

At 24 years and 138 days, Mahomes became the third-youngest player and youngest quarterback in NFL history to be named Super Bowl MVP. He is also the youngest player to ever win an NFL MVP and a Super Bowl title. In 31-career games, Mahomes has completed 724-of-1,099 passes (65.9%) for 9,412 yards and 76 touchdowns. He is the fastest quarterback in NFL history to reach the milestones of 9,000+ career passing yards and 75+ passing touchdowns, doing so in his first 30 games. Mahomes also ranks first in career postseason passing touchdowns (13) and second in career postseason passing yards (1,474) in franchise history. The 10-year extension now brings Mahomes under contract in Kansas City for the next 12 seasons.

"This is a significant moment for our franchise and for the Chiefs Kingdom," Chiefs Chairman and CEO Clark Hunt said. "Since he joined the Chiefs just a few years ago, Patrick has developed into one of the most prolific athletes in all of sports. With his dynamic play and infectious personality, he is one of the most recognized and beloved figures to put on the Chiefs uniform. He's an extraordinary leader and a credit to the Kansas City community, and I'm delighted that he will be a member of the Chiefs for many years to come."

"Getting this deal done has been a priority for us for quite a while now," Chiefs General Manager Brett Veach said. "I'd like to thank Chris Cabott and Leigh Steinberg for their efforts and patience, along with Brandt Tilis and Chris Shea on my staff. I'd also like to recognize Clark Hunt, Mark Donovan and Coach Reid who have all been incredibly supportive while we've worked though the details. I've said from the beginning that Patrick is one of the most impressive players I've ever scouted, but I don't think anyone could have envisioned everything he's brought to our football team and community. His abilities are so rare, and to couple that with an incredible personality is outstanding. We're going to continue to do everything we can to surround him with talent, and this deal provides us more flexibility to do that. He's obviously an integral part to our success and we're thrilled he's going to be the quarterback of the Kansas City Chiefs for a long time."

"I've had the privilege of coaching a lot of incredible athletes and special people in my career, and Patrick is without question on that list of players." Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid said. "The best part is he's still early in his career. He's a natural leader and always grinding, whether that's on the field, in the weight room or watching film, he wants to be the best. He's a competitor and his teammates feed off his energy. He makes us all better as an organization and we are blessed he's going to be our quarterback for years to come."

"The support Chiefs Kingdom has shown me has been tremendous since the day I got drafted. The fact that they've been behind me and supported me has been truly special and it's a one-of a-kind-thing. I knew the moment I stepped on Arrowhead's field that this was the place I wanted to be for my entire career," Mahomes said. "I think I've reiterated that my entire career that I've been here and can't wait."

CHIEFS EXTEND JONES AND KELCE

The Kansas City Chiefs locked up two more central pieces of the Super Bowl squad by reaching agreements to extend the contracts of both DT Chris Jones and TE Travis Kelce. Jones is now under contract for the next four seasons and Kelce will be a member of the Chiefs for the next six.

Entering his fifth season in the NFL, Jones has made his mark as one of the premier defensive linemen in the league and a focal point of the Chiefs defense. In 2019, Jones registered 9.0 sacks to lead the Chiefs defense for the second-consecutive season and was selected to the Pro Bowl for the first time in his career.

"I'd like to thank Chris and his representatives, Jason and Michael Katz for their efforts in getting this deal done," Chiefs GM Brett Veach said. "Chris is an elite defensive tackle in our league, and there is no better example of that than his impact in our Super Bowl LIV victory. He's a passionate player and guy who loves Kansas City. He wanted to be here with us, and it was a priority for us to keep him here. We're really excited to lock him up for years to come."

Entering his eighth season in the NFL and with the Chiefs, the All-Pro TE Kelce has already cemented himself as one of the most prolific offensive weapons in franchise history and is on his way to becoming one of the greatest tight ends to ever play the game. His 6,465 receiving yards are the most for any tight end through their first seven seasons in the league. He's also the fastest tight end in NFL history to 500 catches – doing so in just 95 games – and with another 1,000-yard campaign in 2019, Kelce became the only tight end in history to reach the milestone in four-straight seasons.

Following the deal, Andy Reid made note of Kelce's growth both on the field and as a leader in the locker room. "Just the fact that he's been voted a playoff captain the last couple of years - three years I think - probably says everything," Reid said. "Everyone here has watched him grow before their eyes - fans included. Still though, he comes to work every day wanting to get better, so you love that part of him. He brings energy every day. I've been lucky enough coaching his brother and they're both that way. They're wired where they want to be the best, but yet they enjoy playing the game like no other—like you're playing in the backyard type-thing."

"It's a beautiful thing when you have ownership that trusts in you and wants to make change with you in terms of the season and the community," Kelce said. "On top of that, going out there and playing football with guys that come to work every single day and fight their tail off for you. It's a beautiful thing. This community - Kansas City - I love you, and I'm thankful I'm going to be here for the next six years."

2020 KANSAS CITY CHIEFS DRAFT CLASS

RB Clyde Edwards-Helaire was selected by the Chiefs as the final pick of the first round of the 2020 NFL Draft (32nd overall) out of Louisiana State University. In his final season at LSU, Edwards-Helaire tallied 1,414 yards and 16 touchdowns plus another 453 yards through the air in 2019, averaging 6.58 yards-per-rush while racking up seven 100-yard rushing games on the team's journey to an undefeated national championship season. He was a 2019 Paul Hornung Award finalist and was named first-team All-SEC as a running back and second-team as a returner.

LB Willie Gay was taken in the second round as the 63rd overall selection out of Mississippi State to bolster the Chiefs defense. The six-foot-one, 243-pound Gay tallied 76 tackles and 9.0 tackles-for-loss over his last two seasons for the Bulldogs (18 games), contributing to a takeaway in seven of his final nine contests between 2018-19.

OL Lucas Niang rounded out the Day 2 picks for the Chiefs, as Kansas City selected Niang in the third round with the 96th overall selection out of Texas Christian University. The six-foot-six, 315-pound Niang was a three-year starter at right tackle for the Horned Frogs and never allowed a sack in his 27 career starts, earning Second-Team All-Big 12 honors in 2018. Niang elected to opt out of the 2020 season.

DB L'Jarius Sneed was selected in the fourth round as the 138th overall pick out of Louisiana Tech University. The six-foot-tall, 192-pound Sneed was a three-year starter for the Bulldogs, tallying 28 passes-defensed, eight interceptions and three pick-sixes during his career. He moved from corner to safety for the 2019 season and received second-team All-Conference USA recognition.

DE Mike Danna was chosen by the Chiefs with the 177th overall pick in the fifth round out of the University of Michigan. Danna tallied 104 tackles, 28 tackles-for-loss and four forced fumbles across three seasons at Central Michigan before transferring to Michigan in 2019. He went on to record 38 tackles, three tackles-for-loss and a forced fumble for the Wolverines.

CB BoPete Keyes was selected with the 237th overall pick as the Chiefs traded back into the seventh round to acquire the Tulane University product. Keyes was a two-year starter at Tulane, tallying 85 tackles, 18 passes defensed and two interceptions in 24 games (23 starts) over the last two seasons. The six-foot-one, 202-pound defensive back was an All-American Athletic Conference Honorable Mention selection in 2019, posting a career-high 47 tackles and six pass-breakups.

CONTINUITY IN THE KINGDOM

The Kansas City Chiefs are set to return 18-of-22 starters from Super Bowl LIV for the Run It Back Tour in the 2020-21 season. This marks the most continuity by a defending Super Bowl championship team since 2000 when the Rams returned 18 starters from their Super Bowl XXXIV campaign.

The eight returning starters on offense are: QB Patrick Mahomes, FB Anthony Sherman, WR Tyreek Hill, WR Sammy Watkins, TE Travis Kelce, T Eric Fisher, C Austin Reiter and T Mitchell Schwartz.

CHIEFS KINGDOM FIGHTS FOR ITS RIGHT TO PARTY

The Kansas City Chiefs celebrated their Super Bowl LIV win with their fans in a parade through downtown Kansas City followed by a rally at Union Station in February.

It was a glorious day for Chiefs Kingdom filled with confetti and cheers, and a day which Chiefs Chairman and CEO Clark Hunt said in his ring ceremony speech that he would "always remember as one of the greatest days of my life."

Thousands of fans embraced the winter weather in the spirit of TE Travis Kelce's famous words after winning the AFC Championship Game, quoting the Beastie Boys, "You've gotta fight for your right to party!" After the Super Bowl victory in Miami, he ammended that to "You've gotta fight for your right to Lombardi!" which became a motto for the parade.

OWNERSHIP OF 50+ YEARS

THE FIRST LADY OF FOOTBALL

Norma Hunt continues to play an integral part of the Chiefs in Kansas City. She owns the distinction of being the only woman known to have attended all 54 Super Bowls and was selected to preside over the coin toss at Super Bowl XLI along with Pro Football Hall of Fame quarterback Dan Marino. She is involved in numerous philanthropic and civic efforts in Kansas City and Texas. Her late husband, Lamar Hunt, was the guiding force behind the formation of the Kansas City Chiefs and the American Football League and was inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in 1972. He, with the help of his family, coined the term "Super Bowl."

Hunt, along with her daughter-in-law Tavia Hunt and granddaughters Gracie and Ava Hunt, all participate in the NFL Women's Apparel advertising campaigns. The Hunts have been featured alongside other female NFL leaders such as Charlotte Jones Anderson (Dallas Cowboys Executive Vice President/Chief Brand Officer and NFL Foundation chair), Suzanne Johnson (wife of New York Jets owner Woody Johnson) and Tanya Snyder (wife of Washington Redskins owner Dan Snyder).

CHIEFS FANS SET WORLD RECORD

On Monday, Sept. 29, 2014, Kansas City defeated the New England Patriots 41-14, and Chiefs fans set a Guinness World Record for Loudest Crowd Roar at a Sports Stadium (Outdoors). Chiefs fans reached a peak decibel reading of 142.2 as Guinness World Records adjudicator Philip Robertson monitored the sound levels. The mark was set early in the contest while the club was on defense. The Arrowhead Stadium record passed the old record of 137.5 decibels and broke Seattle's record of 137.6. The Chiefs still hold the record five years later.

THE ARROWHEAD ADVANTAGE

"The fans, they're phenomenal. 142.2 decibels, I never thought I would be fired up (for) decibel levels but I'm fired up for them. My ears are still ringing, I mean it was loud, loud down there. Like incredibly loud."
- Chiefs Head Coach Andy Reid

"One hundred percent. Whenever you can go out in pregame warmups and feed on the energy because the fans are there packing the stadium that early, it truly is special. We feed off that the entire game. There's not an empty seat in the stands and I know there won't be an empty seat in Arrowhead this week. I'm excited just to be in front of that crowd playing this AFC Championship."
- Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes

"A legendary environment like that at Arrowhead Stadium is something else. We're excited about it, we respect it, we realize that the environment is an issue and an element of play and it's something that we need to be prepared for and ultimately combat."
- Steelers Head Coach Mike Tomlin
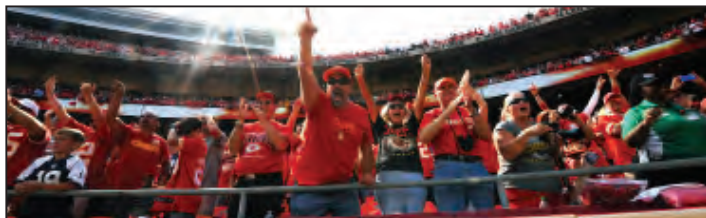

THE ORIGIN OF SUPER BOWL & SUPER BOWL IV

Lamar Hunt left an indelible mark on professional football. While Hunt made many lasting contributions to the game, part of his legacy will be his "accidental" naming of pro football's most important contest, the Super Bowl. As the story has been told and retold over the years, some of the facts have gotten lost along the way. Here are some of the most important elements of the tale in how the Super Bowl got its name...

- After the AFL-NFL merger was announced in June of 1966, Commissioner Pete Rozelle appointed a committee consisting of himself, Lamar Hunt (Kansas City), Tex Schramm (Dallas) and two other owners from each league (AFL & NFL) to firm up the details of the merger agreement.

- At one of those initial merger meetings, there was a discussion about the date of the game. As the committee discussed the championship game (which ultimately became referenced as the Super Bowl), there was some confusion on whether the parties were discussing the respective AFL and NFL title games or the game between the two leagues. It was then that Hunt first recalled saying, "You know, the last game, the final game . . . the Super Bowl."

- The "inspiration" for Hunt's whimsical suggestion was the high-bouncing "Super Ball" produced by the Wham-O company. Lamar's wife, Norma, had previously purchased one for each of the Hunt children (Lamar Jr., Clark and Sharron) and the toy had become somewhat of a craze in the Hunt household and many other homes across the country.

- Hunt was later quoted as saying, "Nobody ever said let's make that the name of the game. Far from it, we all agreed it was far too corny to be the name of the new title game."

- In a letter from Hunt to Rozelle on July 25, 1966, Hunt urged the commissioner to "coin a phrase" for the title game between the two leagues. In the letter, Hunt said, "I have kiddingly called it the Super Bowl, which can obviously be improved upon."

- Rozelle agreed with Hunt's suggestion since he had a particular disdain for the term "super." According to longtime NFL executive Don Weiss, Rozelle was a former PR man who had a keen appreciation of grammar. In Rozelle's book, "super" was the equivalent of "gee whiz" or "neat." He believed that the term "Super Bowl" had no sophistication whatsoever.

- Rozelle was initially inclined to call the game the "Pro Bowl," but that moniker was already assigned to the NFL's annual all-star contest.

- In the years leading up to the merger, many members of the media had billed a possible championship match-up between the two rival leagues as a "World Series of Football," but Rozelle clearly did not want to have his game associated with baseball.

- After much consternation and debate, Rozelle eventually dubbed the title contest between the two leagues as "The AFL-NFL World Championship Game." However, Hunt's whimsical, off-the-cuff comment had taken root. In the weeks leading up to the game, headline writers had already adapted Hunt's two-word title over the much more verbose official moniker for the game. The TV networks billed the game as "Super Sunday" and even NFL Films tagged their film reels as being designated for the "Super Bowl."

- After the first two "AFL-NFL World Championship Games," the term "Super Bowl" was officially adopted by Commissioner Rozelle and the NFL. The first game to officially be designated as the Super Bowl at the time it was played was Super Bowl III between the AFL's Jets and the NFL's Colts. The first two championship games were retroactively named Super Bowls I & II.

CHIEFS HOFERS FROM SB IV

Prior to Super Bowl LIV, it had been 50 years since the Kansas City Chiefs played in a Super Bowl (IV). That game served as the final AFL-NFL World Championship Game in the history of professional football. The spectacle at Tulane Stadium in New Orleans, La., helped pave the way for the eventual AFL-NFL merger later that year (1970).

In all, 17 members from both the Chiefs and the Vikings that took part in Super Bowl IV were later inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame in Canton, Ohio, including both head coaches, Hank Stram and Bud Grant, as well as Chiefs Founder Lamar Hunt and Vikings General Manager Jim Finks. For the Chiefs, 10 members of the Super Bowl IV Championship were later enshrined into the hallowed halls in Canton.

A LIFETIME OF SUNDAYS

The National Football League celebrated its 100th season in 2019, marking a century of thrills, unforgettable moments and a cultural phenomenon that has evolved into America's favorite sport. And through it all – from the AFL-NFL merger back in 1966 to Super Bowl LIV – four incredible women have been there every step of the way. That's the focus of NFL Films' documentary "A Lifetime of Sundays," which traces the rich history of the league through the perspectives of four female owners integral to the sport's growth: the Kansas City Chiefs' Norma Hunt, the Chicago Bears' Virginia Halas McCaskey, the Detroit Lions' Martha Ford and the Pittsburgh Steelers' Patricia Rooney. It's a one-of-a-kind glimpse into the lives of those who helped make the NFL what it is today.

"This whole process over the last year and a half has been so special," said Chiefs Chairman & CEO Clark Hunt. "I'm so glad for my mom and the other three women that these stories are being told, because each one of them has a unique perspective on the history and the development of the National Football League."

TRAVIS KELCE NOMINATED FOR MAN OF THE YEAR

The Kansas City Chiefs announced that TE Travis Kelce was named the team's nominee for the prestigious Walter Payton NFL Man of the Year Award presented by Nationwide.

"Being nominated as the Chiefs Walter Payton NFL Man of the Year is one of the greatest honors of my professional career," Kelce said. "This team and this community have been an incredibly important part of my life for the past eight years, and I'm humbled because there are so many players who are also doing so much to serve others and are deserving of this recognition. The 87 & Running Foundation began to help disadvantaged youth by mentoring and motivating them to explore and develop their abilities and aspire beyond their circumstances. I'm extremely proud of the work we've done and want to thank my foundation team for their dedication and the Chiefs for their support of this important work. What I've accomplished on the field alongside my teammates over the years – especially last year – means so much more knowing that what has been accomplished off of the field is making a difference in the lives of others here in Kansas City and in my hometown of Cleveland Heights."

This summer, Kelce announced his largest contribution yet to Operation Breakthrough, a massive $500,000 donation to purchase a building adjacent to the current facility, which will be transformed into the Ignition Lab: Powered by 87 & Running. At the time of the gift, Kelce noted his goal was to eliminate barriers that prevented teenagers from the urban core from exploring future careers in the STEM sectors. The Ignition Lab will help Operation Breakthrough serve youth up to the age of 18, after they would have traditionally aged out of Operation Breakthrough's services and resources past the age of 14. Additionally, Kelce has made multiple other financial gifts in Kansas City and in Ohio, especially as the agencies he works with were hit hard by the current pandemic. He gave nearly $140,000 in donations to Operation Breakthrough in Kanas City and the Heights Foundation in Ohio to help both groups navigate the challenges created by COVID-19.

CWO DRIVE FOR OPERATION BREAKTHROUGH

The Chiefs Women's Organization provided new holiday gifts to 38 families in need this year in partnership with Operation Breakthrough. The mission of Operation Breakthrough is to provide a safe, loving and educational environment for children in poverty and to empower their families through advocacy, emergency aid and education. Operation Breakthrough cares each weekday for more than 650 children, ages 6 weeks to 14 years. They also provide educational programs, healthcare, parent programs and emergency services to the children and families they serve.

The Chiefs 2019 World Championship ring, produced by Jostens for Super Bowl LIV, is full of symbolism, as well as nods to the team's history, in addition to highlighting the club's title journey last season.

Made out of 10 karat white and yellow gold, there are a total of 255 diamonds and 36 genuine rubies for a total of 10.5 carats of gemstones.

50-YEAR FLASHBACK

Much has changed in since 1970 when the Chiefs won Super Bowl IV following the 1969 season. In the 50 years since the franchise's first NFL championship, Super Bowl ring designs have been one of the things that's seen a drastic change. Also designed by Jostens, below is a look at the club's Super Bowl IV ring.

The ring features a large, round one-carat diamond set in the center of a football shape with 10 additional smaller diamonds around its perimeter. A larger red stone serves as the backdrop. "Kansas City Chiefs 1969 World Champions" appears around the stone. Other features of the ring are an AFL logo, the teams and final scores of the AFL title game and the Super Bowl. Also, '62, '66 and '69 are listed as recognition for the team's three AFL titles, among other features.

'Like it's a dream': Kansas City goes wild as Chiefs close out Super Bowl victory

Luke Nozicka, Steve Vockrodt, Kaitlyn Schwers and Joyce Smith

February 2, 2020

KC Star

With less than two minutes left in the game, the crowd erupted in the Power & Light District in downtown Kansas City as the referee said over the large television: "The goal on the field stands."

The touchdown, confirmed by the official at Super Bowl LIV in Miami Gardens, Florida, put the Kansas City Chiefs ahead. Fans screamed. There was jumping, hugging and crying. Red and white fireworks lit downtown.

"It feels like it's a dream," Seth Runyan, 25, said after he cried. "This is unbelievable."

Thousands of fans cheered as the Chiefs closed in on a 31-20 victory over the San Francisco 49ers at Hard Rock Stadium. Returning to the Super Bowl for the first time in 50 years, the Chiefs had won it.

"Kansas City is together as one," said Madison Rae, 25, one of the hundreds of people gathered along Grand Boulevard who couldn't get into Power & Light, minutes before the game ended. "Ready to prove the naysayers wrong."

Confetti flew into the crowd. "We Are The Champions" blasted over speakers.

Many fans said they waited their entire lives for this moment.

"It feels like we're in shock," said Sam Fink of Amsterdam, Missouri. "Like, is it real?"

The three stages of a Super Bowl comeback were grief, bargaining and then, exuberance.

"Always bet on red, baby," Adrienne Lewis said as she slapped the table after the Chiefs recaptured the lead late and looked to seal victory. "Always bet on red."

The celebration stood in marked contrast to moments on edge early in the fourth quarter. Things had been looking grim.

After quarterback Patrick Mahomes threw his second interception during a Kansas City drive in the fourth quarter, the foreheads of fans had sunk into their hands throughout Kelly's Westport Inn.

"We are giving the 49ers too much respect," Tanisha Wesley said then. "We aren't playing our game."

A nervous feeling took over after the 49ers got the ball back early in the fourth quarter ahead by 10, nullifying the excitement building as Mahomes made a few key plays. Chiefs devotees were scared, afraid to see another year of getting so close, but not finishing.

At Johnny's Tavern in Shawnee, fan Dave Shockey, 62, said he was feeling the pressure after the 49ers took the lead. Regardless, he believed Sunday's game wouldn't be the last time fans will see the Chiefs in the Super Bowl.

"Win or lose, it's just a game," he said.

That kind of talk evaporated as the Chiefs took the lead again and won.

"My heart is beating so fast right now," said Mohamed Elsaid, 36, a fan who drove from Springfield, Missouri, to Kansas City to watch the game.

He screamed as the clock ran down with the Chiefs ahead.

It was, he said, a "life-changing event."

The parade for the Kansas City Chiefs' victory is set for 11:30 a.m. Wednesday.

BUILDING ANTICIPATION

Hours before kickoff Sunday morning, fans had lined up along nearby businesses to get into the Power & Light District.

Many said they believed the Chiefs would win.

"Woah, we're half way there," fans sang, shouting the lyrics to the Bon Jovi tune. "Woah, livin' on a prayer."

Near the front of the stage was Ania Bernacik, who waved her hands in the air while sitting on the shoulders of another Chiefs devotee. The city's Marching Cobras drill team pumped up the crowd. A beach ball was passed around.

Before the game in Westport, Kyle Kelly, co-owner of Kelly's Westport Inn, said it would be "bedlam" there if the Chiefs beat the 49ers.

"We are hoping it will be," he said.

Kelly would know. He worked in Westport when the Kansas City Royals won the World Series in 1985 and again in 2015.

"It's such a unifying factor," Kelly said of Kansas City's sports teams. "You meet a stranger, you start talking about football. It just breaks down barriers."

In front of Harpo's, the Heatley family gathered ahead of the big game. Devoted Chiefs fans in their own right — the family dog, a German Shepherd, was named Chief.

Grace Heatley, who said she wasn't a huge football fan, was swept up enough by the Chiefs postseason run that she boarded a train from St. Louis, where she lives, to take in the Super Bowl with her family.

"There's nowhere I'd rather be this weekend than Kansas City," she said, "even if it means a five-hour train ride."

Her brother, Matt Heatley, perhaps the biggest Chiefs fan in his family, gave his favorite team a 50-50 chance of winning. But his father Mark Heatley put the chances of a Chiefs victory at 70%.

The difference? Mahomes.

"We have the best football player in the NFL," Heatley said. "Hands down."

For Jeff Dayton and Carol Nielsen, a couple who have been together since 1984, the Super Bowl took on a greater meaning, and not just because the Chiefs were in it. A friend, a devoted Chiefs fan for 45 years, died about a month ago.

Their friend seemed healthy, but a cancer diagnosis advanced quickly, they said. They've taken in the Chiefs postseason run with their friend in mind.

"We are so thrilled," Nielsen said. "If anyone would have gone to heaven, it would have been him."

Dayton and Nielsen were gathered in a corner at Kelly's, where most tables were occupied half an hour before kickoff. Both were counting on a Chiefs victory. And Dayton thought a close game was in the offing.

"(The Chiefs) have the ability to blow it wide open," he said. "But I don't know that will happen."

Nielsen hoped the Chiefs would take the Vince Lombardi Trophy decisively.

'THE ELECTRICITY, THE ENERGY'

Kansas City City Council members representing the third, fourth and fifth districts organized a watch party for residents to enjoy the game at the Southeast Community Center in Swope Park, projecting the game onto a wall in a gymnasium.

Among those who came: Faye Jacobs, who was attending her first Super Bowl watch party since she was released from prison in Arkansas. Jacobs, 44, spent 26 years in prison for a murder she did not commit, according to the Midwest Innocence Project.

Jacobs made Kansas City her home for a fresh start, she said. She volunteers with the Innocence Project and works at a car dealership in Johnson County. She attended Sunday's watch party with her friend Tracy Bentley, a middle school teacher from Kansas City.

Both were confident in seeing a Chiefs win Sunday night.

"You cannot be in Kansas City and not feel the heartbeat of the Kansas City Chiefs," Bentley said, predicting a 34–28 Chiefs win. "The electricity, the energy … if you can't beat them, join them, and so we're happy to join them."

The game packed plenty of thrills throughout the night.

As Mahomes ran for Kansas City's first touchdown of the game, the hundreds of Chiefs fans under red light at Power & Light erupted in cheers. They threw their hands into the air, bouncing up and down.

A large Chiefs flag was waved from the KC Live! stage in front of the sea of red jerseys.

Across town, fans at Kelly's Westport Inn screamed and exchanged high-fives as Mahomes put the Chiefs on the board. Before San Francisco tied up the game, Chiefs devotees boasted of their confidence about their team's first trip to the Super Bowl in 50 years.

"That drive, that Kansas City drive took a lot off the clock," Rob Mayer said of the Chiefs' scoring drive, which kept the 49ers defense on their heels for more than seven minutes. "Going for it on fourth down? You have to."

By halftime, excitement ran high.

"(I'm) nervous but confident," 31-year-old Chance Batts said in Shawnee at the end of the second quarter that had some people out of their seat. "We're going to win."

Terry Knopke, who remembered watching the Chiefs play in their last Super Bowl decades ago, said a first half in which the typically high-scoring Chiefs tallied only 10 points gave her some cause for concern.

"I thought we would be ahead at halftime, so I'm disappointed," Knopke said of the 10-10 halftime score. "But I think they will step it up in the second half and win."

Knopke issued a warning before her companion, California ex-pat and 49ers supporter Terry Cunningham, chimed in.

"If you say anything negative, I'm going to cut you off," Knopke said.

Cunningham proceeded anyway.

"I like the score," Cunningham said. "I think the 49ers win by three."

As the third quarter ended 20-10 with the 49ers up, Chiefs fans grew uneasy. Some said they felt sick.

But late in the fourth quarter as the Chiefs surged and took a 24-20 lead over the 49ers with less than two minutes to go, spirits across the city rose.

Fans at Johnny's Tavern believed again. They chanted: "Defense! Defense! Defense!"

It seemed that it truly was Kansas City's year, after all.

Chiefs Super Bowl Parade: Thousands brave the cold to fight for their right to party

Sharon Hoffman

KC Star

The meteorologists predicted snow and wind and c-c-c-cold. The police warned of barricades and major traffic jams.

And yet like quarterback Patrick Mahomes miraculously spinning and scrambling and sprinting his way into the end zone for a touchdown, the fans found their way to the destination of their dreams: the Chiefs' Super Bowl victory parade in downtown Kansas City on Wednesday.

By comparison, the Royals' World Series parade in 2015 was a breeze — a balmy, sun-kissed autumn breeze.

A parade in the thick of winter is a bit different. But Kansas City is tough.

Even a car chase down the full length of the parade route was startling but didn't dampen spirits.

Fans who waited hours were rewarded in style, with red double-decker buses brimming with Chiefs players rolling down Grand Boulevard to the afternoon rally at Union Station (see Sports for coverage of that event.) Along the parade route, some players got the crowd going by raising their arms, just like in Arrowhead Stadium. Some tossed aluminum bottles of Bud Light beer. (Is that legal?)

And Mahomes himself, standing at the back of one of the last buses in the parade, threw a few footballs to the crowd with perfect aim.

From before dawn and throughout the day, Chiefs fans took to heart the immortal words of tight end Travis Kelce (borrowing from the Beastie Boys) after last month's glorious AFC Championship Game: "You've gotta fight, for your right, to party!"

Here's how some of the thousands of fans at the parade did just that.

HAPPY CAMPERS

Hotel rooms were scarce Tuesday night, but a few folks brought their own lodging: tents.

As the temperature hovered in the upper 20s, Michael Peters of Blue Springs and his family set up a small tent with a heater at 17th Street and Grand at about 7 a.m. — more than four hours before the parade was due to start.

"We woke up at 6 o'clock, gathered up all our gear — wife does all the packing," said Peters, who was huddling with wife Casey and their children, ages 13 and 14. "Took about 30 minutes to get everything loaded up, packed up the heater, got a little tent. We have kids in competitive sports, so we're used to the weather."

He and his family weren't alive the last time the Chiefs won the Super Bowl, in 1970.

"It's been 50 years, so it was before my time," he said. "So getting to witness it with the kids, giving them the day off of school was pretty cool."

Roger Porter said his family and friends spent the night in his real estate office at 33rd and Main streets.

"We just brought tents and sleeping bags and had an office party," Porter said.

They arrived at Union Station about 5 a.m. and came prepared with candles tucked under terra-cotta plant pots to warm their hands, lots of blankets and snacks.

One man didn't bother with a tent — or anything. He just lay down along Grand near 17th Street, right on the concrete with no padding. It seems he needed to rest up before the parade started.

PARADE ENTREPRENEURS

At 14th and Grand, vendors wove through the crowds selling $20 T-shirts. We can't tell you all that the shirts proclaimed, but you probably have a good idea:

Patrick +@#&%* Mahomes, the front reads.

And on the back, *&%#@, I'm a Chief.

"I can wear this to the bar," one woman said.

Tamer shirts were selling for $15; pennants were $5.

Fans quickly realized that money does make life easier.

John Fuller said getting down to the parade from Overland Park was easy: He just paid $50 to park a few blocks from Grand Boulevard. "As a 50 year fan of the Chiefs, I don't think I would ever miss this," he said.

Tammy Noyes and her family drove up early from Louisburg, Kansas, and staked out a spot around 19th and Grand Boulevard.

"We paid $40 to park, but it was just two blocks away," Noyes said. "And it was worth it."

STARTING EARLY

The biggest and earliest gathering was at Union Station, where the rally was scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. Before 5 a.m., the plaza in front of the building was filling up.

Grace Kahn, 15, a student at Lee's Summit Academy, and Aubrey Kolberg, 21, a hairstylist, arrived at 4:30 a.m. to get a prime spot right up against the gated barriers at Pershing Road and Main Street.

"We wanted front row seats," Kahn said. She missed the Royals parade and wanted to be sure to support the Chiefs.

They were so close to the front, "we could get a phone number," Kolberg said, laughing.

"Yeah," said Kahn, "and maybe get a great Instagram pic."

Somehow Jody Feuerborn's coat didn't make it when she and her family packed the car around 5:30 Wednesday morning, but on the whole, the day was going smoothly.

She and her husband, Matt Feuerborn, and three of their children were lined up hours before the parade, relaxing on blankets five rows from the barricades along Pershing Road near Union Station. To pass the time, the family watched "Ferris Bueller's Day Off" on Matt's cellphone.

"We're watching Ferris Bueller — skip school and go to the parade," she said with a laugh.

Their commute from Shawnee took only 30 minutes, a far cry from the three hours they spent trying to get to the World Series parade.

"I don't know if we started earlier or the city planned better," she said.

They arrived around 7 a.m. and found a spot in the third row — until the car chase cleared the area after 8 a.m.

The first thing Feuerborn noticed was officers shouting, and they scrambled to get up from their spot and away from the barricade.

"We didn't hear really the car coming," she said. "Just all of sudden everybody goes, 'Get back, get back, get back!'"

Feuerborn said the car had almost reached the spot where they'd been sitting when a police car hit it and spun it around.

"We could smell the rubber, smell the burning rubber," she said.

THE EARLY BIRD GETS THE PRIME SPOT

Seeing a Chiefs Super Bowl parade "means everything" to Yolanda Holman, who said she became a fan because of her late aunt.

"This would have been a day she would have been so happy — getting into the Super Bowl," she said.

Holman and her sister, Kimberly Harvey, set out from Grandview around 6:30 a.m. and found parking up the hill from Union Station. They trekked slowly down down, taking their time because of Holman's arthritis, and found spots for their lawn chairs along Pershing Road.

"It was hard, kind of, because it's all downhill, but I mean, I just took my time, wasn't in no rush," Holman said. "That's why I came really early so I wouldn't have to fight too much of a crowd."

The two were settled in their spots more than three hours before the parade began. So they came prepared.

"I got my lawn chair. I got about four tops on, my long johns. I have on my warm socks, heated socks, boots. I have hand warmers — the whole shebang," Holman said.

M.J Ringstad came to the parade with his best buddies, Bennett Jones, Evan Jurad and Logan Hansen, all of them football players at Olathe Northwest High School.

They started planning where they would stand at the parade "as soon as we got to school on Tuesday," Jones said.

Then when they woke Wednesday morning, "we started having second thoughts because we were just so tired," Jurad said. But it was worth the early rise to claim a spot at 3 a.m. along Grand Boulevard, right up against the metal barriers.

"Front row seats," they cheered in unison. Besides, they were all bundled up, and everything was warm and toasty. "Except our toes," Ringstad said. "I can't even feel my toes because they are so cold."

Kaitlyn Carey of Independence and her family arrived at 12:30 a.m. to capture a prime spot at Pershing and Grand.

"We made sure we had a good parking spot and a sick spot (on the parade route) and we got both — boom," Carey said. "I have not been to sleep yet. I have been up since 6:30 a.m. yesterday."

But standing at that prime corner didn't work out for everyone.

Poor Marybeth Gilbert, a 5-foot 1-inch-tall teacher at Center Elementary, was surrounded by the crowd as the players passed by. The crowd roared "Go Chiefs," waved flags and held up their phones taking video.

Gilbert couldn't see any of it. "I bet it looks great," she said.

Nearby, Tein Braughton, 7, sat atop his dad's shoulders. His mission: "to see Patrick Mahomes."

Shortly before the parade started, what could he see?

"Heads!" Braughton shouted.

And then there were those who weren't concerned about seeing the parade.

On 12th Street, a block west of the parade route, Ben Stueve, 35, was busy throwing a foam football to his 6-year-old son, Henry in a tiny park. The parade was about to start, but Henry didn't care. He just wanted to play catch.

Dad, who grew up loving the Chiefs, was fine with that. He expects his son will have a great role model in Mahomes for years to come.

"It gives me a little bit of comfort knowing that his favorite player and the player who he'll want to emulate the most is such a good person and a good leader," he said.

THE COLD DOESN'T BOTHER ME ANYWAY

Philip Schottel, 59, knows how to keep warm for his Chiefs. A 30-year season ticket holder, he deemed Wednesday's weather "perfect." Nothing like that playoff game in the '90s, he said, when it was so cold "the beer in the neck of my bottle was freezing."

A bit down Grand, die-hard fans Grant Mong and daughter Mallory, of Overland Park, said a little cold weather wasn't going to keep them from celebrating. "Bring it on!" said Mong, who was all decked out in a furry vest, leather chaps, cowboy hat and dark goofy glasses with red boxing gloves draped around his neck.

He was ready to celebrate.

John Mesa was 13 the last time the Chiefs staged a victory parade through downtown Kansas City.

He wasn't smoking cigars then, but 50 years after his first Chief parade he enjoyed a stogie as he lounged in a lawn chair on the steps of the former federal courthouse at Ninth and Grand.

"My wife dumped me off and went back home," Mesa said. She was cold, but he wouldn't have missed it short of a blizzard.

"I've been a season ticket holder 26 years," he said.

Rayshonda Johnson of Kansas City said her family tailgates at every home Chiefs game (their parking spot is J31 at Arrowhead). They know what they're doing.

At 4 a.m. Wednesday, they snagged a parking space at 16th and McGee and set up a grill and fire pit, where they were roasting hot dogs and brats.

"We are true fans," she said.

GOING THE DISTANCE

Charles Willsie said he and his wife drove 4.5 hours from Sioux City, Iowa, Tuesday night "so that we can celebrate with all of our friends and family in Kansas City."

"It's important for me to witness this. I grew up in Kansas City," Willsie said. "I've been a lifelong Chiefs fan. I've been through all the trials and tribulations with the team. And I'm ready to finally celebrate a victory."

Shawn McMullen and Reggie Oliver weren't missing this.

McMullen, 41, drove 14 hours from Charlotte, North Carolina, to watch the Super Bowl with family in KC. Oliver, 40, spent $600 on a last minute flight to KCI Tuesday.

Childhood friends raised in Kansas City, both lined up for the parade at 7 a.m. near its beginning at Sixth and Grand.

"Chiefs nation," McMullen said. "It don't get any better than this."

They figured the spot would allow them to see the parade and quickly get out of the cold to watch the rally on television later.

Bundled up in multiple layers, neither seemed fazed by the freezing temperatures.

"It is what it is," Oliver said. "It's Kansas City."

Both planned to stick around town for a few more days.

"I just want to take it all in," McMullen said.

THE SHUTTLE BUS WASN'T THE PROBLEM

At the 2015 World Series parade, the shuttle bus system was so slow and crowded that some fans said they waited hours and never made it.

Kansas City Area Transportation Authority CEO Robbie Makinen said officials learned from that. This year, he said, twice the number of buses were deployed, made possible with dozens of school buses.

In all, more than 400 buses were used. By 10:30 a.m., Makinen said, 30,000 people had used the shuttle service.

"It's been working really well. The longest wait times I've heard is around 30 minutes, so people are happy with that," he said. "We learned a lot from 2015. And now we need to do this more often with more victory parades because we've got it down."

At Oak Park Mall around 8 a.m., the line for the shuttle bus was moving along, but Bart Putnam still had a challenging morning.

The Olathe resident and lifelong Chiefs fan joined a few hundred others at the mall in Overland Park to catch a free ride to the parade — but not without enduring some stress first.

"We dropped off the car last night so we could have a way to drive back. But then Uber drivers weren't coming to Olathe this morning," he said, adjusting his arrowhead-shaped hat. "So we decided to come to Oak Park Mall and get on the shuttle bus. Well, then I forgot my jacket."

Putnam and his wife returned home, still couldn't catch an Uber, then arrived back at the mall in Overland Park.

In the end, they caught a shuttle after a 30-minute wait. But he said he would do whatever it takes to make it to the parade.

"The last time the Chiefs won the Super Bowl was on my birthday, but a year before I was born," Putnam said. "I never got to see this before. (I'm a) big football fan. I'd definitely go a long way to get there."

By 10 a.m., there were shorter wait times, or no wait times, at all of the shuttle bus stops.

At Swope Park, fans said they were grateful to see the long line of buses awaiting them after they walked more than a mile in the snow. Many hopped aboard in a matter of minutes.

James Hansen of Leavenworth got to the stop at Worlds of Fun at 5 a.m. He waited outside the gate and eventually got on a bus at 7.

He then journeyed from the drop-off at Lydia Avenue and Truman Road all the way to Pershing Road, just outside the Westin Crown Center.

As a Chiefs fan for more than 20 years, he said it was important to see this "once in a lifetime" parade.

Driving into downtown Kansas City appeared to go rather smoothly as well. Periodic checks of KC Scout traffic cameras showed roadways flowing freely for the most part.

Authorities warned drivers not to park on the highways, like what happened during the World Series parade.

For one woman, walking worked just fine, even though she's on the disabled list.

April Keith of Gardner, injured while shopping last December, showed up on a leg scooter.

"We just walked five miles on a broken foot because we were not going to miss this," Keith said near the Liberty Memorial. "Because this is a once in a lifetime opportunity and nothing's going to hold us back."

CHEERS TO THE CHIEFS

Police officially warned against public consumption of alcohol along the parade route. But that didn't seem to stop many people.

Grand Slam Convenience store at Sixth and Grand enjoyed a steady stream of customers buying vodka, beer and other drinks. Out front, they sold aluminum bottles of Bud Light in plain view of police officers.

On the Grand Avenue bridge over Interstate 35, a couple went to work on two six-packs of frosty Smirnoff Ice. One man in a Chiefs jersey walked around with everything he'd need for mimosas: a gallon of orange juice in one hand and a bottle of champagne in the other.

Staff at Anthony's Restaurant and Lounge blocked off the front and back entrances with folding tables.

Outside, employees shouted, "Cold beer! Get your beer here! Hot dogs too!"

Tables had only three condiments: ketchup, mustard and Sweet Baby Ray's barbecue sauce.

On Admiral Boulevard, the Red Front Bar and Grill was packed with people pregaming on whiskey sours and bloody marys. But many flocked to the coffee, hot chocolate and doughnuts.

"Everyone's just so excited," said Jennifer Simone-Mandacina, who owns the bar with her husband, Charles Mandacina III. "People we're down here at 3,4 in the morning."

Her husband sold spots in the adjoining parking lot early in the morning for $40 apiece. It quickly filled up.

She said the bar wasn't gouging customers on food and drinks. The coffee, hot chocolate and doughnuts weren't priced — whatever customers offered was accepted.

HERE THEY COME

Up on Sixth street before the parade, speakers blasted oldies like Def Leppard's "Pour Some Sugar on Me." The crowd knew game time was close when the music switched to the Beastie Boys' "Fight for Your Right" and Tech N9ne's "Red Kingdom."

The parade started right on time at 11:30 a.m., and cellphones immediately lifted toward the cloudy sky as spectators sought to capture the moment — if they weren't 10 rows back.

Aboard the buses, Kansas City Mayor Quinton Lucas threw his hands out in celebration, and Missouri Gov. Mike Parson smiled widely.

The route was littered with confetti cannons, drawing loud applause at each shot.

Some fans complained that the players — particularly Mahomes — were hard to spot atop the crowded buses. One woman, though, gushed, saying it was just like the humble quarterback not to hog the spotlight.

Farther down the parade route, many of the players left their buses and danced on the street, greeting fans who filled the sidewalks.

One fan, clad in red and gold pants, steadied himself on top of a garbage can and yelled to hundreds of strangers: "This is the best day of my life!"

Fans dozens of rows from the parade craned for a look at Chiefs royalty.

"Andy!" one woman shouted as a man who may or may not have been Chiefs Coach Andy Reid rode by.

Near the Westin Crown Center, a man who looked an awful lot like Reid — graying mustache and all — donned a headset and conspicuously chomped his gum for the occasion. He elicited shouts and waves as he made his way along Pershing Road.

As the parade moved down Grand, Mahomes became a bit more conspicuous. As Chiefs fullback Anthony Sherman stood by atop the bus, getting the crowd going, Mahomes waved, smiled and launched a few footballs, before heading over to Union Station for the afternoon rally.

Touchdown, Kan-Za City!

The Chiefs want to turn Arrowhead Stadium into a voting location this November

Sam McDowell

KC Star

The aftermath of a Super Bowl title has been overshadowed by one of the most unusual and unpredictable summers in NFL history.

Kansas City is not immune.

Rather than an offseason defined by a championship celebration, the Chiefs have been occupied instead with real-world issues, such as the COVID-19 pandemic, deciding whether to allow fans at home games, furthering discussions with Native Americans on traditions like headdresses and the chop, as well as Black Lives Matter and voter registration.

Chiefs team president Mark Donovan spoke with the media on a Zoom call Wednesday, addressing all of those topics.

Below are his comments on turning Arrowhead Stadium into a voting location, as well as social justice causes, edited for length and clarity. You can find his comments on the plan for fans in the stands here and the ban on Native American imagery here.

• Quarterback Patrick Mahomes and safety Tyrann Mathieu have pledged to become involved in voter registration movements. As part of their objectives, they said they have spoken with Donovan, as well as Chiefs chairman and CEO Clark Hunt.

On Wednesday, Donovan said the organization is trying to make Arrowhead Stadium a polling location in November.

"Voting registration and voter engagement, I personally believe, is very important. And people exercising their right to vote, I personally believe, is very important. I think Patrick, Tyrann, others, I'm really proud to be associated with those guys in their efforts. I appreciate that they mentioned we've had those discussions, and I've been in those discussions. We have some plans to do things in and around this election that are going to be focused on, number one, awareness of the importance of voting; number two, creating awareness of the ways people can register to vote, the ways people can engage and doing that through the experts in that space.

"We have a plan right now, which is not final, and I'll share it with you all that we're committed to doing it, but it has some challenges — we want to make Arrowhead a polling location. We want to create an opportunity for people to come to Arrowhead and vote. In addition to that, with the awareness, you're going to see a lot of things around the highest points of awareness for us as an organization that are going to be focused on voting, the awareness of voting and ways to vote.

"One of the reasons that I personally and I think this organization believes that's a platform we need to get behind is the beauty of the vote. You can have different opinions. You can vote for different people. But vote. And that's really what we're trying to engage in."

• In the aftermath of George Floyd's death, sports leagues have embraced moments of protest and solidarity among players. The NFL has yet to play a game since Floyd, a Black man, died while in police custody after a white cop knelt on his neck for nearly 9 minutes.

Mahomes and Mathieu joined other NFL stars in releasing a Black Lives Matter video aimed at garnering the league's support for the movement, which it later received. The Chiefs also released a statement of support.

Asked how the organization might be involved in any future player demonstrations on the field, Donovan said, "I go back to some of the things we said when all of this started to become as big of an issue as it's become. It's definitely something that needs to be addressed. It's definitely something that needs our attention. If you go back to the end of May or beginning of June, we sat and talked about this as an organization — players, coaches, football operations staff, our own executive staff. And we made a decision to shut our website down and just say (that) right now the important thing is to one of our principles — unite our community. Unity is more important now than ever, and we need to continue to do that. And that's been our theme.

"When the players' video came out early in this process, I was really proud to be part of the team that we've got to support this; we've got to go out with a statement. I believe we were the first team in the National Football League to respond to that video. I'm most proud of the message we sent that night. It was late at night. It was Clark (Hunt), myself and a few others on a phone call, just saying, the message we want people to hear and the message we want our players to hear is that we love and support them. We're part of a family. Just like any family, there are passions on all sides. What we've said is, in discussions that I've had with our players, with Clark, with Coach (Andy Reid), with (general manager) Brett (Veach) and with others, let's love each other, let's support each other and let's respect each other. That's really what we're going to continue to do. We're going to meet and have more discussions about this. And you'll be hearing more from us as we go. But that's the approach we take to issues like this."

The Chiefs' plan to keep their Super Bowl team together was three years in the making

John Clayton

The Washington Post

As he watched rookie Patrick Mahomes develop behind starting quarterback Alex Smith in 2017, Kansas City Chiefs General Manager Brett Veach began to get the feeling he was going to have some difficult salary cap management in his future.

Veach and Matt Nagy, then Kansas City's quarterbacks coach and now head coach of the Chicago Bears, were the first people in the Chiefs' organization to think Mahomes should be Kansas City's next quarterback. In 2016, Nagy would get his fellow assistant coaches to watch Texas Tech games featuring Mahomes, and Veach would send repeated video updates to head coach Andy Reid — to the point that it became too much. Eventually, however, Veach's scouting reports won over Reid, and Kansas City traded up in the first round to draft Mahomes.

As a rookie, Mahomes sat for the team's first 15 games, but when the quarterback played against Denver in the 2017 regular season finale, after a full season of shredding the Chiefs' defense in practice, Veach knew not only that his and Nagy's instincts were correct, but that he had to start thinking about building the roster around a future second contract for Mahomes that could cost more than $40 million per year.

"I think any time you draft a quarterback, your intentions are to eventually sign him to a long-term deal and hope and pray he's a franchise quarterback," Veach said. "We certainly got a glimpse of what he could do in that one start in Denver. We had seen a backlog of just tremendous development, and some of the stuff he did in training camp created the thought to have a great plan in place."

That plan, which began in 2017 and culminated this offseason with a contract extension for Mahomes and the retention of several other key players, has the Super Bowl champion Chiefs in position to defend their title this season and for years to come. And for Veach, the lowest-paid GM in football, according to two people with knowledge of the situation, the work he did in keeping Kansas City's core together is likely to change his own financial status in the near future.

After Mahomes was drafted, Reid did not rush his development, having him sit behind Smith during a year in which the veteran led the Chiefs back to the playoffs. But even while Mahomes was a backup, his ability stood out.

"He would just completely eviscerate our number one defense in practice, and he did so easily," Veach said. "It was like, 'Oh, my God, this is like our third-team offense,' and he played with such a carefree attitude back then that something was brewing."

In Mahomes's first NFL game, he led a comeback to beat the Broncos, 27-24. After the Chiefs, led by Smith, lost in the first round of the playoffs, the team traded Smith to Washington and began the process of building around Mahomes.

"Our whole intention that first free agency period in 2018 was to get as much talent as we could," Veach said. "We knew we had a great tight end in Travis Kelce. We knew we had Tyreek Hill. That's why we went out and got Sammy Watkins. We just wanted to get as many weapons as we could. But as soon as we were three or four games into the 2018 campaign, we're thinking he's going to be the MVP."

Fifty Mahomes touchdown passes later, Veach was right, and the Chiefs came within a game of the Super Bowl. That led to a pivotal offseason, when Veach had to balance filling short-term needs — especially on defense — and positioning the Chiefs to handle Mahomes's eventual contract extension.

"We need a defense to complement this offense, because this kid is the best player in the league," Veach said of his thinking during the 2019 offseason. "Our offense is always going to score points, and we have to be good enough on defense to win a Super Bowl. We knew we had the offense that we had last year, but the defense wasn't good enough."

Veach's first big moves were trading outside linebacker Dee Ford to the San Francisco 49ers for a second-round draft pick and cutting outside linebacker Justin Houston. To many on the outside, the moves were curious for a team trying to improve on defense. Ford and Houston were effective edge rushers, but Veach needed to free up some money, and neither was an ideal fit for the new 4-3 defense under coordinator Steve Spagnuolo.

That left a void at edge rusher, and Veach began studying then-Seattle Seahawks defensive end Frank Clark. He had been impressed by Clark's college play at Michigan and the way Pete Carroll had developed him in Seattle. Clark, like Ford, was under the franchise tag.

"We knew it was going to cost, but we're thinking, 'How can we mitigate that cost?' " Veach said. "We made the [Ford] trade with the 49ers so we had the extra second-round choice. If we had to give up a one or a two, we're going to get something back."

Veach got a Pro Bowl pass-rusher in Clark, 27, at a young age. Then the Chiefs further helped the defense by signing safety Tyrann Mathieu to a three-year, $42 million contract and drafting safety Juan Thornhill, who excelled before suffering a season-ending injury. The result was a much-improved defense that was capable enough, when combined with Mahomes and the high-powered offense, for the Chiefs to win the Super Bowl.

But as the 2020 offseason began, there was plenty of work to be done. The novel coronavirus pandemic, which is expected to have a major revenue impact on the NFL because stadiums will be without fans or only partially filled this year, threatened to lower the salary cap in 2021 and perhaps 2022. For the Chiefs, knowing they had to pay Mahomes, that meant they might end up losing some of their core players.

But where Veach was fortunate is Mahomes understood he could help himself by being flexible with his contract demands.

"He didn't want his contract to be outdated, but at the same time he was cognizant that we have a lot of good players," Veach said. "To be successful in this league . . . you have to be flexible and creative with your cap space, so he was open to be flexible."

The Chiefs were able to work out a contract extension with tight end Travis Kelce (87) after some creative work with quarterback Patrick Mahomes' contract. (Charlie Riedel/AP)

The Chiefs gave Mahomes guarantees that kick in two and three years ahead. In doing so, they were able to lock him up for a total of 12 years, adding 10 years to the final two years of his rookie contract. But the main thing that got the deal done was Mahomes not getting a raise for the first two years. He was scheduled to make $27.2 million in 2020 and 2021, and that's what he makes under the new deal. His cap numbers also stayed about the same.

 "If you look at the contract, the first five years average out to about $40 million a year, so we get what we want," Veach said. "Then in the second half of the contract, it's like $50 million a year."

By keeping Mahomes's cap number the same the next two years, Veach was able to lock up Chris Jones, one of the league's best interior pass rushers, with a four-year, $80 million deal. Jones gets the $16.1 million he was scheduled to make as a franchise player this year and $21.5 million next year. That flexibility left Veach with enough room to sign Kelce to a four-year, $57.25 million contract.

The Chiefs now have core contributors Mathieu, Eric Fisher and Mitchell Schwartz signed through 2021; Hill and Mecole Hardman through 2022; and Mahomes, Jones, Kelce and Clyde Edwards-Helaire longer than that.

Mahomes's decision mirrors one Tom Brady made early in the 2010s, when he took less money to allow the New England Patriots to keep the roster that surrounded him at a Super Bowl level. That, along with some careful planning and creative execution by Veach, puts the Chiefs in position to compete for another championship this season — and to potentially replace the Patriots as the NFL's next dynasty.

Why the Chiefs had no problem re-signing their top players

Adam Teicher

ESPN

Tight end Travis Kelce had no problem finding reasons he wanted to remain with the Kansas City Chiefs after signing his recent contract extension.

"We have great guys in the locker room, great people in the facility and overall it's just a fun atmosphere every single time you come to work," Kelce said. "Guys don't want to leave that. Guys want to keep building off of that.

"Going out there and playing football with guys that come to work every single day and fight their tail off for you, it's a beautiful thing."

Kelce was speaking for himself but could have been speaking for any of the Chiefs' other high-profile players who signed new contracts during the offseason: quarterback Patrick Mahomes, wide receiver Sammy Watkins and defensive tackle Chris Jones.

It goes beyond just this group, in fact. The Chiefs, to a large degree, kept intact their Super Bowl championship team from last year. They were set to bring back 20 of their 22 starters from the Super Bowl before Laurent Duvernay-Tardif and Damien Williams opted out of the season because of COVID-19. Before Duvernay-Tardif's departure, the Chiefs looked as if they would be the first defending Super Bowl champions to return every player who started at least 10 games the previous season since the 1981 Raiders from the pre-free agency era.

Why did so many players, including a number of lesser-known players, decide to stay? Boiling it down, they wanted to.

"We've got a lot of selfless guys on this team, a lot of guys that don't necessarily look in their own mirror," safety Tyrann Mathieu said. "It's about the guys around them. It's a very fortunate situation we're in and I think everybody is just grateful to be a part of it."

The Chiefs have doled out a lot of money to keep the gang together. They would pay more than $600 million over the lives of the contracts of Mahomes, Jones and Kelce alone.

But Watkins decided to stay for the final season of his contract by agreeing to a pay cut. He was scheduled to make $14 million this season but will instead be paid $9 million, though he could make up the difference and then some by reaching certain performance incentives.

"I've made enough money," Watkins said. "I'd love more money, but as far as being smart and [staying] on this team, knowing you've got to pay Pat, you've got to pay Chris, there's a lot of guys you've got to pay. So for me to take a contract like I did was a blessing. ... This is my happy place, so why not take a smaller contract and come out and play with the guys I've been playing with?

"Very important to stay. For what we did in winning the Super Bowl and the type of team and coaches we have, the organization, why wouldn't I stay? I'm a guy that's been in the league going on seven years, and I've been on teams that were not so good and were not winning. We've got a well-established quarterback, a well-established team, coaches, organization. The real fun is in the winning more than anything."

As the Chiefs, in their own words, attempt to "run it back," a look at four reasons players are eager to stick around:

Coach Andy Reid

Most Chiefs players seem to like working with Reid. That's particularly true of Mahomes, who before signing his extension extracted a promise from the 62-year-old coach that he wouldn't retire anytime soon.

Players generally feel Reid cares about them as much, if not more, as a person than as a player and also believe he can help them reach their potential as a player more than most coaches.

"No. 1 is Coach Reid," said backup quarterback Chad Henne, in listing his reasons for re-signing with the Chiefs in March. "He's definitely one of the best coaches that I've been around. He knows the ins and outs of the offense and the defense. He's been around for a while and he's a winning coach."

Mahomes

This is particularly true for pass-catchers like Kelce and Watkins. Kelce's two best statistical seasons have been the last two, since Mahomes was made the starting quarterback. Watkins hasn't hit career bests in two seasons with the Chiefs but might have had he not missed six games in 2018 and two last season.

Winning

Not only are the Chiefs defending Super Bowl champions, but the future looks good. Many of their better players are still young in football terms. Mahomes is 24, Jones 26, Tyreek Hill 26, Frank Clark 27 and Tyrann Mathieu 28. Among their best players, only Kelce at 30 and Mitchell Schwartz at 31 are at an advanced football age.

"Guys want to be around a winning atmosphere," Henne said. "Obviously, a Super Bowl helps, but when you're around guys who want to compete each and every day and fight for one another, I think it's definitely just something that you want to be a part of. Throughout my career, ups and downs, winning [and] losing, winning is the way to go. We have great tradition here and a lot of great people around us."

Trust

Players trust chairman Clark Hunt and general manager Brett Veach to make the right moves after Reid is finished coaching, whenever that might be.

"We trust the front office, Brett Veach, Andy Reid and Clark Hunt, to keep the core," Kelce said. "We trusted that they were going to be able to make it make sense for all of the players, which they did. They held their end of the bargain. We're very thankful that we still have the core going into this year and for a few years ahead."

This is particularly true for Kelce, who is signed through 2025, and Mahomes, who is signed through 2031. Each may be playing for a different coach by the time his contract expires.

"I think that trust is something that's built, and with my three years in the Chiefs organization, you see the trust that everyone has within each other," Mahomes said. "Everything that coach Reid says, everything that Veach says, and what everyone in this organization says, those things happen and they put in the work every single day.

"It's almost a challenge if I can beat coach Reid or Veach to the facility some days. They put in as much effort as anyone, and when you have a culture like that from the top down, with Clark Hunt to the 75th, 90th, whatever man on the roster, that trust and that culture was something that I wanted to be a part of."

Chiefs players, coaches speak out on shooting of Jacob Blake. Here's what they've said

Sam McDowell

KC Star

The story of Jacob Blake, a 29-year-old Black man shot from behind seven times by a police officer in Kenosha, Wisconsin, has sparked pleas for change across the country.

In some cases, athletes have led the way. In the NBA, MLB, MLS and the NHL.

And in the Chiefs' locker room.

Conversations about social injustice continue to take place among Chiefs coaches and players, with head coach Andy Reid opening the floor for the discussions. Players have hinted they're considering potential demonstrations for the season opener on Sept. 10, though defensive end Frank Clark said Friday nothing has been finalized.

But they're moved to do something.

Quarterback Patrick Mahomes and safety Tyrann Mathieu have turned the efforts toward an increase in voter registration. Chiefs president Mark Donovan said this week the team will attempt to turn Arrowhead Stadium into a voting location in November.

The police shooting of Blake Sunday compelled many in the organization to speak about the topic. Here are some snippets of what Chiefs players and coaches have said over the past few days:

• Patrick Mahomes, quarterback

Mahomes has been vocal in supporting Black Lives Matter, appearing an a video this summer in which players demanded the league back their cause. They did.

Mahomes appeared on SiriusXM NFL Radio this week and was asked about Blake.

"It's just crazy, man, that this is still going on in the world that we live in today. We're going to try to set the example on it, in whatever way possible, to show that we can get along and we can really respect one another for who they are and not the color of their skin. And we're hoping that we can get over this. I mean it's too long. It's been too long, and we're going to try to get over this and get to where we treat each other equally."

• Frank Clark, defensive end

In a Zoom call with reporters Friday, Clark said the most difficult part of the situation will be one day explaining it to his young kids. He also offered a stark reality of what's to come.

"This is something we're going to continue to deal with. That's what you gotta understand. That's what I understand. Our country, if they think that another Black man isn't going to get killed by a police officer, I feel like everyone's confused. I feel like if we don't think it's going to happen again and continue to happen, we're confused. At this point, we have to do something about it. Man, it's just crazy, you know? It's crazy."

• Andy Reid, head coach

Before being asked a question during his news conference Wednesday, Reid opened with an off-script message about Blake.

"Listen, I'm just going to put my two cents in on Jacob's situation. I think you guys know, I'm into team. I'm into peace and people getting along. Right or wrong, we all need to join hands, man, and make this world a better place where we can go into each other's neighborhoods and be comfortable, and that we appreciate life and how important it is and how hard it is to create life — something that none of us are capable of doing in a test tube.

"It's a precious thing, man. It's complicated. It is precious. At this time, everybody needs to come together and join hands, like I said, and love each other for what we are, and the privilege that we have in this short period of time that we are on earth, as opposed to walking in fear, to walk with strength and pride and make this country the greatest place ever along with the world. We do that and we'll be a great example to the world.

"My heart goes out to Jacob and his family in that situation. I don't know the whole story. But I hate seeing the way things are going right now, and we're better than that. Absolutely better than that."

• Eric Bieniemy, offensive coordinator

Bieniemy spent the bulk of his time on the topic Friday complimenting Chiefs players, ownership, members of the coaching staff and front office for their response to social injustice issues in recent months. Then he zeroed in on the possibility of Arrowhead Stadium becoming a voting location this fall.

"That would be historical. I remember growing up as young kid. When I turned 18, I had to get a job, I had to go to school or I was gonna join the service. But on top of that, my mother told me, 'Your ass is gonna vote. You are going to vote. Because we fought for this right.'

"And how about that? These guys have stood up and said, hey, let's make this right; let's make it where everybody can have the opportunity to come to this stadium and vote. I'm proud of the people that we have in this building, but I'm also proud of the people that have provided the light and way for them so they can come out and be free to be who they are and speak freely to the world about what's going on and making the change."

• Travis Kelce, tight end

Appearing with Mahomes on the radio show, Kelce echoed Reid's sentiment.

"I think Coach said it best — everybody's just got to love each other and appreciate one another for who they are, their differences, knowing that we all have differences. We all have crazy different upbringings (with) the people around us, thought of mind, things like that. Everyone has to come together and appreciate everyone for who they are, man. And until we have that peace of mind, I think we need to stand up and make a change, make a difference in our communities, until we see that."

• Rashad Fenton, cornerback

Fenton grew up in Miami, a diverse city in which he said "Everyone treats everyone equally there. That's how I was raised."

On the shooting of Blake, he said, "Just the fact that could be my father. That could be my uncle. That could be me. Just putting that into perspective of just treating everyone equal. I don't know why it's so hard (or) why it's a discussion to get treated fairly."

• Tommy Townsend, punter

The Chiefs' rookie punter, who is white, said his place in the team conversation is different than that of those around him.

"The biggest thing for me is just listening and learning from my teammates. It's always good to step back and learn. I think that's been something that's been happening a lot recently. Our vets and team leaders have been doing a great job of bringing awareness and doing everything we can to start moving forward and create change. That's something I'm looking forward to — keeping the discussions going and continuing to learn.

"This is something that's very new to me. A lot of light is being shed on it now. I think it's definitely something that's sparking inside of me that's making me want to go forward and create change and do what I can to help out. A lot of the stuff going on, it is tiring. Even this short period of time that I've been seeing it on social media, it's exhausting to see. I hate seeing it. I hate seeing how it affects my teammates and how it affects their families. It's obviously not right. It's something that we gotta be better at and we gotta change."

From top down, Chiefs pushing for social justice initiatives

Dave Skretta

The Associated Press

August 31, 2020

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Two years before Clark Hunt was born, the Kansas City Chiefs made history by taking Grambling State defensive tackle Buck Buchanan in the American Football League draft, making him the first Black player from any college — much less a historically Black one — to be the first player selected first overall.

It was a testament to the progressive nature of Hunt's father, Chiefs founder Lamar Hunt, the trailblazing son of a Texas oil tycoon who helped form the American Football League when the National Football League refused to grant him an expansion team.

Hunt was a champion of Black rights during the Civil Rights era of the 1960s. He grew up in conservative circles yet formed his own opinions of right and wrong. And when his football-loving son was born in 1965, those principles that Hunt instilled in his football franchise became instilled in Clark, who years later would succeed him as chairman of the Chiefs.

"My dad really encouraged the players to get out there and use their platform to make a difference in the community," Clark Hunt said. "A lot of those efforts over the decades have been focused on things that benefit the minority communities."

Indeed, the biggest reason the Chiefs are among the most progressive teams in the NFL these days — during a new era of social justice initiatives — is that the reigning Super Bowl champions always have been that way.

When star quarterback Patrick Mahomes, fast becoming the face of the league, speaks out in support of the Black Lives Matter movement, the Chiefs in turn support him. When safety Tyrann Mathieu and defensive end Frank Clark discuss the importance of registering people to vote, Hunt and his top lieutenants respond: "How can we help?"

The answer, by the way, is discussions to turn Arrowhead Stadium into a voting location in November.

"What I've really appreciated the last couple of years," Clark Hunt said, "is how engaged the leaders on our team are, and I'll just take Patrick and Tyrann as examples, that they're very engaged. They want to make a difference. They want to do some things that are going to make our country better, things that are going to help us get along as a country.

"You referenced Arrowhead being a polling station," Hunt continued. "That's one of their big issues, is voter registration and getting people out to vote. We've worked with them and we're working with some organizations here locally to try to encourage people to get out to vote. We've made an effort to get all of our players registered to vote here. The icing on the cake would be if we could have Arrowhead be a polling station. We don't know if that's going to work out."

Yet the fact that discussions are taking place at the highest levels of Missouri government is a sign of just how seriously Hunt, team president Mark Donovan and the rest of the Chiefs franchise are taking such initiatives.

It's not as if there aren't players elsewhere in the NFL that are working for social justice, or for increased voting and better representation in government. But there are few organizations that are so vocally in support of them.

It's not just Hunt, either, though he sets the tone. Chiefs general manager Brett Veach and coach Andy Reid also are outspoken in their support, shrugging off the antiquated notion that having opinions and taking action outside the walls of the football facility can be a distraction or somehow detrimental to what happens on Sunday.

"I like when people come together. I'm about that," said Reid, who grew up in the melting pot of Los Angeles in the 1960s, and whose father was an artist that championed equality. "I've had a Native American athlete at Northern Arizona — phenomenal person. I've had Hispanic athletes. I've had obviously Black athletes, but from different areas of the world. I've had white athletes, and it's so unique how they all get together. I just appreciate the world I get to live in with athletics."

Reid understands taking any kind of stance can be divisive, particularly these days. So do Mahomes and Mathieu, who know that everything they say and do will be dissected and discussed in the wild world of social media.

Yet they dismiss any political concerns in favor of a simple idea: "Do what you think is right."

"I'm going to do whatever I can to fight for equality for all people," said Mahomes, who has a white mother and Black father. "I'm not worried about people and how they're going to do negative stuff back to me. I am worried about doing what's right for humanity and making sure that all people feel equal."

There have been missteps over the years, such as the Chiefs' use of Native American imagery that drew widespread condemnation and has been slowly phased out. Members of the franchise have expressed thoughts and taken stances that have proved regrettable. Opinions on a number of topics, such as Hunt's preference that players stand for the national anthem, have changed amid the changing landscape of American life.

The core values that Lamar Hunt set down remain, though. They're the values that gave Buchanan a chance with the Chiefs in 1963, and that are giving Mahomes and the rest of the team the platform to speak out nearly 60 years later.

"My dad set a great example for me and my siblings on a lot of issues. And probably his greatest strength was how he treated people," Clark Hunt said. "He didn't care where you came from, what your background was, what your race was. He treated everybody he met with respect and appreciation. That's been a lesson that we've all learned, and just bring it forward to what's going on with racial equality and social injustice. I think Andy probably said it as well as anyone: 'We just need to love our neighbor.' And if we all do that, this world is going to be a whole lot better place."

$1 million benefits Ronald McDonald House Charities

Ashley White

September 18, 2020

KSHB

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Kansas City Chiefs fans helped raise $1 million for charity through flag sales during the Red Friday Kickoff Edition.

The Chiefs on Friday said the donation marks the highest Red Friday donation since the club began selling the flags before the 2014 season. Over the past eight years, the Red Friday sales have raised more than $2.8 million for Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kansas City, which provides free housing to families of children receiving medical care.

"Red Friday is the most important day of the year for Ronald McDonald House Charities of Kansas City, and this year, more than ever, we really needed Chiefs Kingdom to show up in support of sick kids and their families. And show up they did," the organization's CEO, Tami Greenberg, said in a news release. "It's extraordinary that this generous and caring community came together to make such a meaningful donation to RMHC-KC, all through $5 flags."

The Chiefs partnered with McDonald's to sell the special Super Bowl LIV Champions edition of the flag at all Kansas City and St. Joseph-area locations. The flags also were sold at Kansas City Hy-Vee stores. The minimum donation for a flag was $5.

"Year after year we've seen the people of Kansas City, and Chiefs fans throughout the country, step up to show their amazing support for this team through Red Friday, as well as show their appreciation for the work that RMHC-KC does here in our community," Chiefs President Mark Donovan said in the release. "This was certainly the most unique flag we've done in the past seven years as it was our Super Bowl LIV Champions flag, and we hope to #RunItBack, have another champions flag, and raise even more next year."

The Red Friday Kickoff Edition also stopped in Springfield, with flags sold at 55 McDonald's locations in the area and the Hy-Vee store in Springfield. Those sales generated nearly $65,000 for Ronald McDonald House Charities of the Ozarks.

In the Topeka area, flag sales raised nearly $25,000 for Ronald McDonald House Charities of Northeast Kansas.

'A bright spot': Chiefs welcome voters for historic Election Day at Arrowhead

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Brian Brooks arrived with his red Chiefs mask on his face. Brian Cunningham wanted to honor the occasion by donning a red sports jacket that has been in his family for 57 years. Excited to enter one of her favorite places in the city, Tara Russell knew a red, white and gold sticker awaited her, one to demonstrate that she fulfilled her right as an American.

Brooks, Cunningham and Russell — and thousands of other Kansas Citians — came to Arrowhead Stadium on Tuesday, some as early as 6 a.m., to vote on Election Day.

"This is historic," Brooks said after he voted. "I've never seen anything like this, voting at a stadium. This is important to me because the Chiefs are such a vital part of my life, always have been. To combine that passion with the passion of trying to make your voice heard through voting, it was a no-brainer for me."

Indeed, Tuesday provided another monumental moment for the Chiefs in their 61-year history. The franchise, after five months of work, was able to get Arrowhead approved by the city's election board as a centralized polling location for the first time in the venue's 48 years. For 13 hours Tuesday, registered voters who live in the city and within Jackson County (Mo.) were eligible to cast their ballots inside Arrowhead's club level.

As Chiefs fans, Brooks, Cunningham and Russell all referenced the same person as the same primary reason they were aware of Arrowhead becoming a polling location: superstar quarterback Patrick Mahomes.

Fans voting at Arrowhead was the result of an idea from Mahomes and star strong safety Tyrann Mathieu, one that was driven out of frustration and sorrow in the aftermath of the deaths of Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor and George Floyd. In June, Mahomes and Mathieu approached the top four men in the organization — owner Clark Hunt, general manager Brett Veach, president Mark Donovan and coach Andy Reid — to have the Chiefs create a voter registration program. The team's registration initiative was designed to help educate people about their voting rights and encourage them to get involved in social issues where they live.

"We support our players, we love our players, and we're proud of them," Donovan said. "We're a family. The things about families, and we're an example of this, is we've got representatives on all ends of the spectrum from a political standpoint.

"Trying to find some platform that we can all get behind is not always easy. This one really resonated with a lot of our players and a lot of our organization."

Side by side, fans and members of the Chiefs organization voted together, as everyone wore masks to cover their mouths and noses amid the coronavirus pandemic.

"It means a lot because this year has just been a cluster for everyone," Russell said. "It's been full of confusion, full of people on opposing ends. In Kansas City, I feel like the Chiefs are one thing where everyone does come together, regardless of your beliefs. The Chiefs opened it to everyone to vote."

Donovan said he drove by his usual polling location around 5:30 a.m., and the line of people was already down the street. By 5:45 a.m., Donovan was inside Arrowhead to cast his ballot, as Reid followed by making his voting selections around 6:30 a.m. One of Arrowhead's security guards, Donovan said, finished his night shift and was able to vote before going home.

"I haven't been at a lot of polling stations as they open the gates, but I don't think there are very many around the country where people were cheering as they walked in the door," Donovan said. "It has something to do with being at the stadium, but it was a pretty energetic atmosphere."

Serving as one of the judges for the city's election board, Donovan called the Chiefs' polling location the most efficient he's seen in his 36 years as an eligible voter.

Brooks, 35, entered Arrowhead and voted within 15 minutes. Cunningham, 47, voted in less than 10 minutes. Russell, 35, executed her right to vote in 12 minutes.

"It was very smooth," said Brooks, who co-hosts a morning radio show on Hot 103 Jamz. "You can tell the Chiefs really thought this thing out. The social distancing is there, and there's plenty of space for that. I would love to experience this again.

"I'm going to always remember, in 2020, along with coronavirus, that this is a bright spot. I was shocked at how convenient it was. There was no craziness, no anarchy. You vote for who you vote for, and you get in and out."

The Chiefs partnered with RISE To Vote, an organization that helped many NFL teams encourage voter registration. One meeting in July, Donovan said, led both parties to consider Arrowhead as a polling location. The stadium, which holds more than 76,000 seats, fulfilled many of the requirements for a new polling location — a large space, free parking, accessibility, plenty of electronic outlets and controlled heating and cooling depending on the weather — in the Chiefs' application to the election board. At first, the Chiefs wanted at least 15 voting machines on site, which is often three times more than most polling locations.

"That process culminated, not too long ago, with the election board saying, 'Although it's a great idea, there's just too many hurdles,'" Donovan said. "We finally had to go to them and say, 'What's it going to take?'"

The answer was a financially shared effort from the Chiefs, Hunt and Mahomes' foundation, 15 and the Mahomies. The group purchased 40 new voting machines, an investment of more than $100,000, for Arrowhead to remain a polling location for future general and midterm elections.

"Hopefully (for) 10 years, these machines will continue to be used," Donovan. "For anybody that's been here today, I think they're going to want this to be a polling location for a long time."

Cunningham, a business systems analyst at Ascend Learning, has been a Chiefs fan his entire life. His father, Robert, became a season ticket holder in 1963 after Lamar Hunt, the Chiefs' founder, moved the team from Dallas to Kansas City. The elder Cunningham became one of the franchise's Red Coaters — in wearing a red sports jacket at old Municipal Stadium — who was a part of the team's pregame ceremony in forming a lane for the Chiefs to run through during their introduction. Cunningham's father died during his childhood, but he felt it was fitting to wear the sports jacket while voting at Arrowhead.

The Yellow Rock Barn, a historic site within the city, is Cunningham's usual polling location. But Cunningham wanted to drive a few extra miles to vote at Arrowhead in appreciation of the leadership from Mahomes and Mathieu.

"It shows that they listened to the players who wanted to do this to make it easier for people to vote," Cunningham said of the Chiefs. "I saw pictures of (Reid) voting earlier today and that's cool. It's just cooler to go to Arrowhead to vote."

Within days in June, the Chiefs followed their star players, with Hunt, Donovan and Reid voicing their support of the Black Lives Matter movement after people began protesting in opposition to police brutality, social injustice and systemic racism. Everyone in the organization felt their greatest impact was to assist people in expressing what they believe is important by electing the officials who best represent their values.

"Clark Hunt and Mark Donovan have gone above and beyond to support the players, and that's what team is all about," Reid said Monday. "There's great respect there. That's the part I appreciate the most, just how everybody pulled together to jointly get this thing done."

Before the Chiefs' season opener, prominent players, such as Mahomes and Mathieu, wore T-shirts that featured the team's red and gold colors. Next to the Chiefs logo was only one word — in big, capital letters — on the front of the shirt: VOTE.

One of the first people to vote at Arrowhead was Quinton Lucas, Kansas City's mayor. A few hours later, Brooks felt inspired and invigorated by how the Chiefs' popularity, as reigning Super Bowl champions, attracted a variety of voters across several demographics.

"Usually at the church I vote at, it's all Black (people)," Brooks said. "But here, you see that there's different races and different ages, which is really cool. That's a microcosm of America. It just shows that the voting initiative put out by the Chiefs was a real collaborative effort to get people out to vote."

Most players, Donovan said, voted before Election Day via an absentee ballot in their home state, such as Mahomes in Texas and Mathieu in Louisiana.

In the aftermath of the voting initiative and Arrowhead becoming a polling location, Mahomes said last week that the Chiefs' next mission is to financially support local minority-owned businesses. Donovan acknowledged that the Chiefs are close to finalizing donations to two organizations before the end of the year.

"Having as many people vote is obviously the first step right now with how important this election is," Mahomes said. "But the next step is to continue to help out our community and help out the people that need the help the most. I think the biggest thing is keeping the conversation going and then going out and taking action."

In past elections, Russell has voted at the Disabled American Veterans building, which is less than 5 miles from Arrowhead. She remembers the last time she voted, too. Russell was with her 13-year-old son, Alan Russell Anderson Jr., and they both waited outside in near-freezing temperatures.

Tuesday was Russell's first trip to Arrowhead this season, the place where she has tailgated and cheered for the Chiefs for years. Working three jobs — a forensic specialist for the city's police department, a nurse at Truman Medical Center and a sexual assault nurse examiner at COVERSA — Russell planned her day, and when she could vote, in a manner similar to how Reid puts together the Chiefs' weekly game plan. Russell didn't need a coat since the temperature was 70 degrees, but she researched the state's Supreme Court judge, Court of Appeals judge and the circuit judges on the ballot.

Before she exited Arrowhead, Russell asked a poll worker if she could have two red, white and gold "I VOTED" stickers, one to put near her heart and the other to be given to her son.

"I'm glad that the players did push for this," Russell said. "I think Andy Reid should be happy that he was voting where I was voting."

Chiefs GM Brett Veach Strengthens Dynasty Talk with Fantastic Offseason

BJ Kissel

July 16, 2020

Chiefs.com

The word was thrown around after the game down in Miami just a few months ago.

The Chiefs Kingdom diehards called for it after Patrick Mahomes' MVP season back in 2018, which fell just short of a Super Bowl trip.

For many, the feeling the word may elicit changed following all of us witnessing the thrilling comeback win over the 49ers, and the knowledge that this team is full of young superstars – not seasoned veterans giving it one last shot.

But for the remaining few who don't find need to throw around the word "dynasty" regarding the Kansas City Chiefs' current opportunity, perhaps Brett Veach and his staff reportedly turning less than $200 of salary cap space this offseason into keeping Sammy Watkins and Demarcus Robinson, signing Patrick Mahomes to the largest contract in sports' history, and giving the CEO of Sack Nation – Chris Jones – what he rightfully deserved, rightfully where he deserved it – could change their mind.

And that wasn't it, but we'll get to the others later.

To dig a little bit deeper into the significance of each of these big-money moves and the underlying story that connects each of them – shows the continuity, trust, and relationship between the Chiefs' personnel staff, coaching staff, players and ownership.

From the moment Sammy Watkins first stepped into the building and held his very first press conference, he mentioned culture, family, and the Kansas City community as reasons he was excited about joining the organization – not just the chance to play for a historically-good offense.

That culture Andy Reid has created and Brett Veach, who got his start under Reid, understands, has built an environment that Watkins wanted to not only be a part of, but wanted to stay in. That hasn't been the case at Watkins' previous stops, as he's been open about before.

Therefore, the conversation about players like Watkins re-structuring deals, perhaps taking less money – depending upon incentives and such, are often discussed in only financial terms, which is real, but is also real that the environment had to be right. The culture had to be right.

Reid and Veach have gotten that right, and Watkins' return proves that on many levels.

The conversation surrounding Patrick Mahomes' deal has been about astronomical numbers and overall length of the deal—something that will make Brandt Tilis and Chris Shea – two of the unsung heroes of the offseason that you may never see publicly – names in Chiefs' lore as part of this dynasty construct.

But the fact that Mahomes was acutely aware of the structure of his deal and how it would to relate to others, again, shows something of the culture, trust and relationship between all three groups at work – the personnel staff, coaching staff, and ownership.

Less than a week later, Jones secured his bag and seemingly the entire team celebrated on social media.

From less than the cost of an authentic Mahomes' jersey in the team store to signing a core of players that could rightfully earn them more than the cost of a new stadium, the Chiefs' offseason was a historic chapter written not before our time, or after our time, but during our time, by Veach and company, who still had to time to think up gems like, "The Brett Veach Special.*"

But outside of these big moves, which in some ways could be seen as obvious ones to get done - despite the different financial challenges to do so – the smaller under-the-radar moves could be just as important.

Look no further than last year's Super Bowl victory and unsung hero Damien Williams, who many thought had a legitimate case for Super Bowl MVP, or Daniel Sorensen the AFC Divisional Round win over the Texans – his tackle on the fake punt and forced fumble a few minutes later changed the tide.

Williams is tied for 13th all-time in NFL postseason history with 11 touchdowns – the second-most of any current player in the league (Rob Gronkowski, 12). He's two postseason touchdowns shy of entering the Top 5 in that category. His initial signing wasn't met with an amount of fanfare that he's earned with these numbers, and neither was Sorensen's extension (before Veach's tenure, but same point remains).

And that's because it's not always about the big signings.

The offseason signings of guys like the versatile Mike Remmers, who has started more than 75 games in his career all across the offensive line, or defensive end Taco Charlton, a former first-round pick and a mentee of Chiefs' Super Bowl hero Frank Clark back at the University of Michigan, or even cornerback and standout special teamer Antonio Hamilton, who Dave Toub singled-out as a player he wanted specifically, at some point next season, these guys will all play crucial roles.

And most already know about what running back Clyde Edwards-Helaire, linebacker Willie Gay Jr. and the rest of the rookie class is bringing to the table. It was the talk of the offseason until Veach, Tilis and Shea went all Oprah with everyone on new contracts – tossing tens of millions to homegrown players on each side of the ball.

They accomplished most of this during a pandemic as well. That will always be a part of this story.

While Mahomes, Jones, Tyrann Mathieu and others with the big names and contracts get most of the national headlines, and rightfully so, the under-the-radar players who aren't getting their hype now, fight to be the next Damien Williams, Charvarius Ward, or Daniel Sorensen.

The re-signing of players like Mike Pennel, Bashaud Breeland and Anthony Sherman shouldn't go unnoticed either. It can seem easy to bring back players to a Super Bowl winning team, but this culture was in place before the Super Bowl was won.

Culture comes first in anything that is special. Success without culture is fleeting.

It's a culture that shows it rewards people who come in and do the right thing – treats them fairly throughout the process and is something they want to stay a part of.

We've seen it play out just like that with this team.

The only players on the roster over the age of 30 years old right now are Chad Henne (35), Mitch Schwartz (31), Anthony Sherman (31) and Mike Remmers (31).

Led by a Hall of Fame head coach, the league's undisputed best player and a fanbase prepped for the long run—combined with a perfectly executed offseason—there's no reason not to throw around the word "dynasty" when it comes to the Chiefs' opportunity right now.

The players haven't shied away from it. They're actively promoting it, and coach Reid shies away from nothing.

The Chiefs are looking to become the eighth team in NFL history to win back-to-back Super Bowls, and the first since the 2003-04 New England Patriots. No team in the history of the NFL has won three Super Bowls in a row.

If the conversation later becomes how do we quantify the greatest "dynasty stretches" in the history of the NFL, these are a few of the numbers and stats that'll be used.

So, that's the bigger challenge ahead. In the immortal words of Roger Dorn, "I guess there's just one thing left to do."

'I'm into peace': Andy Reid seeks unity; Chiefs president discusses many topics

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Chiefs held another padded practice Wednesday as part of their training camp, but coach Andy Reid wasn't interested in talking about football when he arrived at the podium for his usual news conference.

In his opening statement, Reid expressed his frustration in the aftermath of Sunday's shooting in Kenosha, Wis., when a police officer shot Jacob Blake, an unarmed Black man, seven times. The incident, which left Blake paralyzed, was captured on video by a bystander's smartphone.

"I'm into peace and people getting along," Reid said. "Right or wrong, we all need to join hands, man, and make this world a place where we can go into each other's neighborhoods and be comfortable, that we appreciate life and how important it is — and how hard it is to create life. It's a precious thing, man.

"We need to, at this time, come together and love each other for what we are and the privilege that we have on this short period of time that we're on earth. As opposed to walking in fear, walk with strength and pride and make this country the greatest place ever. We do that and we'll be a great example to the world. My heart goes out to Jacob and his family."

The Chiefs were off Tuesday, and Reid spoke with many of his players about the shooting before Wednesday's practice. The Chiefs, unlike the Detroit Lions on Tuesday, elected to have their practice to prepare for their season opener in two weeks. Reid, though, wanted to make it clear that the Chiefs, as a team, agreed with what many members of the Lions — such as general manager Bob Quinn, safety Duron Harmon and quarterback Matthew Stafford — said Tuesday in demanding social justice and equality.

"I listen," Reid said of his players' fears and anger. "I try to do the same thing with my kids and people I come in contact with. You can learn from everybody, and there's concerns right now. Change is always a little uncomfortable for people. In our business, we have a lot of change, and it's constantly happening. You've got to listen and sit and make sure you keep open communication. I'm lucky to have a locker room that does that and players that talk about it and guys that listen to each other."

In June, Reid voiced several of his emotions — sorrow, anger, empathy, gratitude and, finally, optimism — with regard to the racial and social issues that have gripped America this summer after the deaths of Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor and George Floyd. Reid told Chiefs fans then that he supports the Black Lives Matter movement to end social injustice, racism and police brutality.

In reiterating his message Wednesday, Reid used even stronger words in urging Americans to do more to improve the country's progress toward true equality.

"I hate seeing the way things are going right now," Reid said. "We're better than that, absolutely better than that."

An hour after Reid's comments, Mark Donovan, the team president, held his annual news conference during camp, discussing the topics and issues the franchise has addressed since the Super Bowl.

Because Donovan's comments are some of the most significant since camp started, The Athletic decided to publish the full transcript. Donovan's answers to reporters' questions have been lightly edited for clarity.

Why do the Chiefs feel comfortable selling tickets when many other NFL teams, and other pro sports teams, haven't felt comfortable, at least to this point?

It's roughly 16,000 tickets out of the 75,000 or so that we typically would have. I think what makes us comfortable is our plan. I was on a league call (Wednesday), and we were talking about that and I was asked to present to the league our plan and our success this past Saturday. And our plan for Saturday and for the opening kickoff.

Our plan is only as good as compliance and the following of directions, the following of a protocol for our staff or our players, for our coaches and for our fans. It's critical. If they do, we feel pretty confident that we can do this. We're not alone. We are definitely in the minority when you look across the league. We take the responsibility very seriously. We understand that we've got to get this right and we've got to be very diligent in our processes and protocol in order to be successful, in order to have another game with the fans. We know that other teams and other leagues are looking at us.

What system is in place to ensure that the people who are charged to ensure that the safety policies are being followed are actively identifying and correcting violations, such as not wearing a mask when inside the stadium?

I was very impressed with our fans and their ability and their compliance with putting on their mask as soon as they are approaching someone. This is not an excuse, and I want to be crystal clear on this: We have to do a lot more to continue to communicate, to make people aware that it's really important, even in your seats, to wear your mask.

I talked to a few of our season ticket members. I said just I need to reinforce the importance of wearing the mask in the stands. And the dad looked at me and said, "Mark, I wore the mask everywhere you told me to. I was sitting in a seat, there's no one within 10 feet of me and I'm with my family (who I) eat with and spend all my time without a mask. I appreciate it, but it's 95 degrees and I took my mask off for a minute." I said, "I hear you, but as we get more people in and we're closer together, we'll have more interactions, more cross traffic. We all have to be disciplined."

You'll see some stuff this Saturday. It's very in-your-face signage. We're gonna walk up and down aisles with a sign that says, "Hey, wear your mask, even if you're sitting."

We're going to continue to learn to try to understand how we can better enforce that. We don't want to be in a situation where we're evicting someone or arresting someone or anything like that. But we think that we have enough systems and enough communication in place where we can enforce that. It's to protect all of us.

One of the biggest things we had to our advantages is we're an outdoor stadium. But we also have to listen to the experts. And the experts are telling us, "Yeah, you're an outdoor stadium, but you're not just sitting and eating dinner. You're standing and cheering and yelling and screaming. Those are all things that factor into the risks associated. And those risks are significantly decreased if you wear a mask." So those are the kinds of things we're really focused on.

FC Dallas (a Major League Soccer team), which (Chiefs owner) Clark Hunt also owns, decided to kneel, as a peaceful protest against police brutality and social injustice, during the national anthem earlier this month in its first home match. Some fans booed them. How does that situation impact the Chiefs if those players want to express themselves in a similar manner?

We learned a lot from the FC Dallas situation, and I think everyone across sports learned a lot from that situation. We take all that learning into what we're talking about here.

When all of this started to become as big an issue as it's become — and it's definitely something that needs to be addressed, and it's definitely something that needs our attention — we as an organization sat and talked about this: players, coaches, football operations staff, our executive staff. We made a decision to shut our website down and say right now the important thing is to really, as one of our principles, unite our community. Unity is more important now than ever. I believe we were the first team in the NFL to respond to that (George Floyd) video. I'm most proud of the message we sent that night. It was late at night. It was Clark, myself and a few others on a phone call just saying the message we want people and our players to hear is that we love and support them. We're part of a family. Just like any family, there are passions on all sides. Let's love each other, let's support each other and let's respect each other.

That's really what we're going to continue to do. We're going to meet and have more discussions about this. You'll be hearing more from us. But that's really the approach that we take to issues like this.

What do you want to express to fans who may be upset or try to violate the Chiefs' rule on banning fans from donning Native American-themed headdresses or face paint worn that appropriates American Indian cultures and traditions?

This isn't a new issue for us. I share some personal stories of the first few meetings (in 2014) I had with John Learned (who founded the American Indian Center of the Great Plains in Kansas City). He explained how this is viewed and here are some of the issues we should be discussing. I walked away from that first meeting a little bit embarrassed about my lack of knowledge and a little bit inspired. If you have the knowledge, it becomes pretty clear.

Everybody is going to have opinions on all these issues. I respect that. Personally, I didn't understand what a headdress or a war bonnet was or what it represented. To have an American Indian explain the sacredness of that, how every single feather is earned and what it means in their community, it's a pretty easy answer. Let's educate people. Let's create awareness around that. The realistic goal we had was if we can just explain this to a fan we see in the parking lot who is wearing a headdress, we feel confident we can convert them. You can paint your face.

You can wear a crazy hat, a wig or a headband. You can create your own character. But understand that just throwing the headdress on because you bought it at a five-and-dime store and think it's cool, it's not.

What is being discussed about the "Tomahawk Chop" being under review?

The drum came back to Arrowhead as part of trying to bring the traditions and honoring the traditions that were started in Municipal (Stadium). Again, a little bit embarrassed and inspired that we didn't realize the sacred position of the drum in the American Indian culture. When that was explained to us, we went to them and said: "How do we make this work? What are our options?" They shared with us the idea of blessing in the four directions, blessing the drum itself, acknowledging what it is and creating an education.

(The drum) is seen as sort of the heartbeat of that culture. When you hear things like that, it's easy to latch on to that and say, "OK, it's kind of the heartbeat of the stadium, too." We can debate that, right? People can argue. But it is a way to unify our fans and it is a way to bring people together at that moment. How do we do it in a respectful way? That's what we're working on right now. These aren't things that we're going to be able to successfully change, one way or the other, overnight. We're going to continue to work on that.

What is being done and discussed as part of the Chiefs' voter registration initiative?

Voter registration and voter engagement, I personally believe, is very important. We as an organization are really proud to be associated with Patrick (Mahomes) and Tyrann (Mathieu) in their efforts. I've been in those discussions. We have some plans to do things in and around this election that are going to be focused on awareness of the importance of voting and creating awareness of the ways people can register to vote. Rise To Vote, (an organization) the league is working with, is (an organization) we're actively working with and have met with us and our players. They are going to meet with our staff, as well as our stadium staff to make sure that everybody is aware of the opportunities they have to register to vote and to vote.

We've got a plan right now, which is not final, that we're committed to doing it. But it has some challenges. We want to make Arrowhead a polling location (on election day). We want to create an opportunity for people to come to Arrowhead and vote. In addition to that, you're going to see a lot of things around the highest points of awareness for us as an organization that are going to focus on voting, the awareness of voting and ways to vote. This organization believes that that's a platform that we need to get behind is the beauty of the vote. You can have different opinions. You can vote for different people. That's really what we're trying to engage in.

Amid the coronavirus pandemic, why are ticket prices higher than usual?

How do we take a stadium from 76,000 seats down to 16,000 seats and equally and fairly distribute those tickets to our season ticket members? As you can imagine, when you do the math, it's pretty quick that you can't. We said all season ticket members will have the opportunity to move their tickets to 2021. There'll be benefits and incentives to do that. We've locked in their flat pricing for next year.

How do we make this fair and equitable in terms of the tickets we do have? In May, when our schedule was released, we announced our single-game ticket price. We were assuming we were going to have 76,000 people in the stadium. Those prices were based on a lot of very complicated algorithms and data that we used to understand the market. Those (16,000 tickets for opening night) are single-game prices. We completely understand and expected the response, because it's a significant jump. We're pretty good, from a data standpoint, of understanding what the ticket is really worth and (the price) being below that number.

The person who buys a ticket to our Houston Texas game today, at the price that we're selling at, can put that on the secondary market that minute and make more money, hundreds of dollars more based on location, in some cases. A $400 ticket is going for (around) a $1,000 on the secondary marketplace. What we're trying to do is be fair.

How have ticket sales been and does that speak to the passion of Chiefs fans?

Sales have gone exactly as we expected. When you look at what the projections are going to be and how our projections have to be right, we're exactly where we thought we were going to be. Based on the demand, it's an interesting way of doing it, because we're doing it by tenure, going back to the point of fairness. We had to figure out a way to give every single season one of our season ticket members an opportunity. It allowed the longest-tenured season ticket members the opportunity to buy first. We're probably only 30 percent through our season ticket members.

If you look demographically, you could have some people who may be medically challenged, may have conditions, may be in our older demographic and may be less likely to want to come to a game where they've got to go through all these protocols. We believe, as our projections show, that as we get closer to the newer-tenured season ticket members, the percentage of people who buy within those pods are going to be much higher.

Is there a financial mark the Chiefs must reach this season to make having fans at the games worth it?

The numbers don't pencil out. You can't really make the numbers work when you're talking about that amount of tickets. This isn't about that. This is about creating an experience and continuing the experience at Arrowhead, giving our fans the opportunity to be there for some really special moments. To some, it may sound a little bit contrived.

But honestly, we're raising a banner on Sept. 10. We want our fans to be a part of that. We're really struggling with the fact that only 16,000 (fans) are going to be able to be a part of that, live and in person, but that's a lifelong memory. It's going to be different. It's not going to be exactly what we wanted. But it is something that was really important to us as a franchise. I will speak for the (Clark) Hunt family on that. That was a big driver on figuring out a way to get our fans in safely. And that's been a big driver for us as a business.

Chiefs' Clark Hunt describes the Super Bowl LIV championship ring in detail: 'It's big'

Herbie Teope

And the long wait for the unveiling ceremony proved worth it. Much planning went into the making of the jewelry, which apparently cost, well, quite a bit.

"You guys are lucky we designed these rings before we signed Patrick's new contract or they'd probably be a lot smaller," Chiefs chairman and CEO Clark Hunt jokingly told the assembled team on Mahomes' 10-year, $503 million extension.

Kidding aside, Hunt then dove into the eye-popping specifics of the ring.

"The Super Bowl LIV championship ring boasts a total of 10 and a half karats of gem stones, including 255 diamonds and 36 genuine rubies," Hunt said. "The centerpiece, the ring top, is the Chiefs' arrowhead logo composed of 60 diamonds in honor of the franchise's 60th season, and 16 cut rubies, which represents our 10 AFC West division titles and six playoff appearances under Coach (Andy) Reid.

"Fifty diamonds surround the logo in the shape of the Lombardi Trophy to mark the 50 years between Super Bowl victories. An additional 122 diamonds cascade along the rings' top edges marking the club's 22 playoff appearances and the 100th season of the National Football League."

The rings are also unique to each individual player who earned one.

"These rings are also customized to be unique to each of you with your name, jersey number set in diamonds and your signature etched on the inside," Hunt told the players Tuesday evening. "Under your jersey number on the left side of your ring is the motto from the championship season, 'Be Great!'"

Hunt then paused to tell tight end Travis Kelce that they were going to put the song, "(You Gotta) Fight For Your Right (To Party)," in that spot, but the song title was too long.

With the light moment over, Hunt went on to finish describing the rest of the championship jewelry.

"The right side of the ring displays the Super Bowl LIV logo, the final score of the game and the words 'Chiefs Kingdom' in recognition of our incredible fans," Hunt said. "Finally, the inside of the ring features the final scores of our three playoff victories and the deficits this team overcame in each of those games, recognizing the resilience of this outstanding group of players and coaches.

"And on the other side of the ring are the initials L.H. as a reminder of the man who named the Super Bowl, founded this franchise and who my siblings and I were blessed to call, 'Dad' — our dad, Lamar Hunt."

Before directing the video board to count down from 10, Hunt emphasized what can happen when people come together to achieve a common goal and greatness.

He also pointed out the bond among every member of the organization and how the ring serves as a symbol of camaraderie for the Super Bowl champions.

"Every member of our Chiefs family who wears this ring played a part in doing something special," Hunt said.

With Hunt's remarks finished, the video board inside the stadium counted down from 10 to zero, prompting the assembled team in front of Hunt to open the boxes containing their rings.

'Put it on my shoulders': Chiefs' Eric Bieniemy knows he must carry on

Dan Pompei

September 29, 2020

The Athletic

Editor's Note: Throughout the NFL season, The Athletic is telling the stories of Black coaches who have been identified as having the qualities to become head coaches.

Wet, windy and nasty, the day was gray in the Sea of Red.

Seventh-ranked Colorado needed to upset second-ranked Nebraska for a shot at the 1990 national championship.

In the first half, Colorado running back Eric Bieniemy, the nation's leading rusher, fumbled.

Then he fumbled again.

Another time.

And then a fourth time.

At halftime, the coaches gave the kinds of speeches a thousand coaches have given before. The players looked at the floor and nodded without really listening.

And then Bieniemy stood. You could hear a football drop.

"I screwed up," he said forcefully. "It will not happen again. Put it on my shoulders."

After trailing 12-0, that's what Colorado did, giving Bieniemy 19 second-half carries.

Bieniemy rushed for 116 yards and four touchdowns in the second half against a defense that had allowed one touchdown run in eight previous games. The Buffs won 27-12.

About one month later, Bieniemy finished third in the voting for the Heisman Trophy behind Ty Detmer and Raghib "Rocket" Ismail. And a month after that, Colorado beat Notre Dame in the Orange Bowl to claim the only football national championship in its history.

Twenty-three years down the road, Bieniemy was a running backs coach in his first season with the Chiefs. Jamaal Charles was a two-time All-Pro running back at the height of his abilities.

Charles fumbled against the Texans. Once Charles walked to the sideline, Bieniemy was waiting for him on the field, near the numbers, a place where assistant coaches are not supposed to tread.

Bieniemy: "You lose another fumble, you're not going back in."

Charles: "I'm an All-Pro. What do you mean I ain't goin' back in?"

Bieniemy: "Fumble again, and you will see."

Bieniemy's will became Charles' will, and Charles didn't lose another fumble in his next 261 touches over 14 games.

That will has been the force behind many accomplishments.

But even Bieniemy's exceptional will hasn't been enough to make him an NFL head coach. Bieniemy, the Chiefs' offensive coordinator since 2018, has interviewed for seven head-coaching jobs — the Browns, Giants, and Panthers this year, and the Buccaneers, Jets, Dolphins and Bengals in previous years.

You might say some of those teams fumbled in not hiring him.

It's hardly ever about the fumble, though. It's about what happens after the fumble.

The man who was interviewed seven times without being offered a head-coaching job pays attention to things others don't.

As the Chiefs prepared to play the Texans in the season opener on Sept. 10, logic said the Texans would defend mostly with man-to-man coverage. But Bieniemy made sure his quarterback, Patrick Mahomes, was as prepared for Cover 2, Cover 3 and every other possibility, according to Mahomes. As it turned out, the Texans played a lot of zone and Mahomes was ready.

It was a significant factor in their 34-20 victory. "When you get things besides what you see on tape, but you have answers for everything, you still can go out there and have success," Mahomes says.

"Details. It's all about details with him," Chiefs coach Andy Reid says of Bieniemy.

"The biggest thing with 'EB' is how detailed he is," Mahomes says.

"Details?" his former boss Brad Childress says. "He would tell you about the left tackle's right foot."

"I didn't even know how to spell details until Coach EB got with me at age 25," Charles says. "He taught me so much about details. Now I'm detailed in my life every day because of it."

Mahomes says Bieniemy is as detailed in his approach to preseason games as he is postseason games.

Bieniemy isn't the quarterbacks coach. That's Mike Kafka. But Bieniemy meets with the Chiefs' quarterbacks every day during the week, he communicates the plays to Mahomes from the sidelines and he confers with him between series. Bieniemy also is in charge of the Chiefs' protection plans, which require significant collaboration with the quarterback.

"I think that's where people get lost," Mahomes says. "They think because he wasn't a quarterbacks coach, he's not in the meetings with me. He's very involved. He's game planning. He's putting in plays. He's telling me why we want these plays versus these looks."

For Bieniemy, working with Mahomes is, of course, a blast.

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

Bieniemy laughs like that a lot.

"Patrick is a come-early, stay-late guy," he says. "He wants to know the whats, the whys, the hows. He wants to know everything about the game plan that's going to help him be the best he can be. He wants to know everything about the opponent."

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

Mahomes could be a head coach maker. Of course, Reid already is one, and 10 of his assistants have been hired as one, including his last two offensive coordinators, Doug Pederson and Matt Nagy.

For Bieniemy, there is the blessing of working for Reid, and there is the curse of working for Reid.

The blessing is learning from one of the most influential and successful coaches in the game. The curse is whatever offensive success the Chiefs have usually results in roses at the feet of Reid, and only at the feet of Reid.

The Chiefs' head coach has been effusive in his praise of Bieniemy. He says not many coaches lead and hold players accountable better than Bieniemy does.

Reid pushes back against the notion that Bieniemy is a glorified running backs coach. "He's somebody who started in the box, but has gotten out of the box, like me," Reid says. "I was a line coach, he was a running back coach, and both of us have had to learn everything about everything. Football-wise, he can coach anything right now and be pretty comfortable with it."

Bieniemy technically is not the play caller, but he calls plays in every game, according to Reid. "I just say, 'Hey, what do you like here?'" Reid says. "And let him take it and go. We bounce it off each other."

Bieniemy called plays for two years when he was Colorado's offensive coordinator, so he has some background as a play caller. "Everybody likes to make a big deal out of it," he says. "That's OK. That's the way Coach Reid does it. I know when I become a head coach, hell, I'm going to call my plays as well. The people that love to make a big deal out of that, they're not having the fun I'm having."

As Bieniemy has spent more and more time with Reid, his offensive philosophies have become more like his. Because Bieniemy was a running back, it's convenient to stereotype him as a ground-and-pound kind of guy. But now he likes to fling it around.

"I might be the biggest sellout as far as running back coaches," he says.

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

"There's something about this pass game and getting the ball downfield as quickly as you can," he says. "Do I have my own philosophy? Yes. Are there some things I'm going to take from this particular offense? Yes. I have an opportunity to work with a coach who has a brilliant mind, a very creative mind. He has helped me to become more flexible in the way I see things and the way you can run an offense and a team. You want to take a lot of that with you. But you also want to make sure you are doing what is best for that particular team. Not everybody is built the same, so you want to make sure that whatever team you take over, that you can help build the system that is going to work for them."

The man who was interviewed seven times without being offered a head-coaching job has passion the way a volcano has lava.

His voice is loud, deep and powerful, and impossible to ignore.

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

Bieniemy recalls losing the bowl game in a youth football league at Hunter's Field in New Orleans. When he thinks about it, the uneasiness, and the churning of the innards, come back.

His will is a reflection of his mother's. Fern St. Cyr did whatever was necessary to keep the lights on and Bieniemy and his brother Jamal smiling. That meant working from before the sun rose until after it set and taking multiple jobs in factories and offices.

At Colorado, Bieniemy was a starter from the beginning, and he impressed with his blocking, among other things.

"A raging inferno on the field," former Colorado offensive line coach Mike Barry once called him.

"I call him a crazy competitor, very emotional," former Colorado offensive coordinator Gerry DiNardo says. "He was totally into every practice and every game, never a down day on the field. There are certain people who are wired to be 100 miles an hour every day, every practice and every game. He was like that. You can be wired, though, and not conceptually understand things. Understanding the game was one of his great traits."

Some running backs dance after 7-yard gains. Bieniemy was livid after them, according to the recollection of former Colorado center Jay Leeuwenburg.

"I can't believe they tackled me," Bieniemy would say, steaming.

At times, Buffs coach Bill McCartney presided over live scrimmages with up to 15 consecutive inside running drills, power against power. They were the kind of practices that made some players report to the athletic trainer's room rather than the field, limping when others could see them.

Coaches would tell Bieniemy to come out during the drills and he would wave them off. "I'm taking every snap," he would say.

Bieniemy expected others to match his intensity. Former teammates still tell stories about how Bieniemy berated his defense after three quarters of a 1990 game against Texas. "I had not seen an offensive guy get in the middle of a defensive huddle and challenge a defense like that," Leeuwenburg says. "That was a memorable moment. And it made a difference."

Time has not made Bieniemy any less demanding.

When he was an assistant for the Vikings, Bieniemy's individual period was intense, according to Childress. "He's grinding those guys, cones, ropes, bags," Childress says. "He had them moving, constantly moving. He wanted to make sure they were lathered up by the time we got to that first install period."

When the Vikings signed Chester Taylor as a free agent in 2006, Taylor was not accustomed to practicing hard on Wednesdays after a full workload the previous Sunday and thought his veteran status would afford him recovery time. Bieniemy, however, would not tolerate his starting halfback standing around with his hands in his pockets while others were grinding.

It wasn't long before Bieniemy and Taylor were nose to nose and Childress was physically separating them.

Taylor: "He can't talk to me like that!"

Childress: "That's EB. He talks to everybody like that."

Bieniemy was not discriminating. Said Childress, "He treated them all the same — shitty, but with love."

Charles can relate. In his early days with Bieniemy, he didn't know how to respond to him. "We were bumping heads every time, bustin' it, yelling, going back and forth," he says. "We were about to fight every time. Every time we communicated, it wasn't good."

Charles sought the counsel of Taylor, Adrian Peterson and Maurice Jones-Drew, and found out each had a similar experience with Bieniemy. "Eventually, I realized it was all coming out of love, trying to make me better," Charles says.

Bieniemy may have the ideal approach for a team defending a championship. "When you have success sometimes you come into work thinking you can just go through the motions, but he's not going to let you do that," Mahomes says. "He's going to make sure he gets the best out of you every single day."

Bieniemy impacts Mahomes in a way few offensive coordinators could. "Not that Pat doesn't have the grit and determination, but he has a constant reminder there that you have to be a tough son of a gun to play this sport," Reid says.

The always-composed Reid has influenced Bieniemy, helping him keep his flame at a simmer. Most of the time.

"I'm actually better, believe it or not, with not showing it as much," Bieniemy says. "But it still tears me up inside. If you are going to do something, you might as well do it wholeheartedly. We work too goddamn hard and put too much time, effort and energy into what we do, so we might as well reap the rewards. I want our guys to know that every moment you have is a defining moment. It's a defining moment. It's about living in the now and maximizing what you have today."

Bieniemy does not ask his players to do something he would not have done. A second-round pick of the Chargers in 1991, Bieniemy lasted nine years in the NFL mostly by being the kind of backup every coach wants. He was a four-phase special-teams player and complementary running back on the Chargers, Bengals and Eagles.

In Bieniemy's final season with the Eagles, Childress once found Bieniemy in the hot tub at 6:45 a.m., trying to get loose for practice two hours later. Childress, an assistant, says Bieniemy consistently was on the field an hour before practice started to get his body right.

"I'll always remember that — he did whatever it took," Childress says. "You could never stump him. He was always in his book even though he was second or third on the depth chart. He was always standing at the ready, always prepared."

The game program said Bieniemy stands 5-foot-7; the mirror says 6-foot-2. He acknowledges he might have a short man complex.

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

"I was made perfect because I've always been competitive," he says. "The thing I may have lacked in height, you couldn't take the fire or energy. I didn't believe anyone could outperform me because they were a certain height or certain weight. I always felt if given an opportunity to compete, you won't outwork me or outshine me."

The man who was interviewed seven times without being offered a head-coaching job has a smile so bright, it puts a Temptations song in your head.

The smile is a window to something he doesn't often show in NFL stadiums.

Charles left Kansas City after the 2016 season, but he and Bieniemy remain close.

Bieniemy often hosted Charles and other players for Thanksgiving and Christmas dinners. They ate, watched football, played dominos and shot pool. "It was like he had two different personalities," Charles says. "We basically are family at the end of the day. He looks at me like I'm a son."

Bieniemy and his wife of 26 years, Mia, have two sons. When Bieniemy has time off, he wakes everyone early so the four can have more time together. He has to check himself, he says, so he isn't overbearing with activity planning.

Elijah is 21, and to no one's surprise, he and his dad love to compete with one another. Neither shows mercy in Scrabble, Uno or checkers.

And then there's Madden. They used to play the video game frequently, but Bieniemy backed away because Elijah had become so adept at it. When everyone was confined to the house in the offseason, they decided to play again.

"That first game, I got after him," Bieniemy says. "Noise is being talked. My wife is upstairs. 'Is everything alright?' Beat him so bad I had to take a picture of it."

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

Elijah got his revenge recently, reclaiming the Madden crown.

"He got after me, and now he lets me know it," Bieniemy says.

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

Their other son is Eric III. Five days after Eric III was born, he had a seizure. The Bieniemys rushed him to one hospital, then to another. He was given a double blood transfusion.

Then came the uncomfortable conversation with the doctor.

"Mr. and Mrs. Bieniemy, Eric has cerebral palsy."

In the next five years, the Bieniemys spent more time in hospitals than their homes.

Eric III is 25 now, wheelchair-bound and reliant on his parents for all of his needs. He doesn't communicate, but his family understands him just fine. Over time, they moved with him from San Diego to Cincinnati to Philadelphia to Boulder to Los Angeles to Minneapolis, back to Boulder, and to Kansas City.

Eric III can't play games with his father and brother, but he wants to be a part of the action. When he feels good, the family feels good.

"He's the man," his father says. "He's the man."

No one and nothing makes dad's smile brighter.

Bieniemy loves Mia more for the way she loves Eric III. She is his primary caretaker and a "saint," in the estimation of her husband.

Bieniemy and his wife haven't had a vacation in 25 years, one of the many sacrifices they have made. No one wishes for a different reality, however.

"One thing you learn when you are taking care of a special-needs kid is the ultimate love," Bieniemy says. "You learn to be committed. You learn to sacrifice. You have a greater understanding of what accountability means. … It makes you not take anything for granted."

The man who was interviewed seven times without being offered a head-coaching job has seen some things.

When Bieniemy was a boy in the lower ninth ward of New Orleans, everything, he will tell you, was Black or White. "I witnessed my parents go through a lot of issues with race growing up," he says.

At the age of 10, Bieniemy and his family moved to Southern California, where he was exposed to people he had never been around before. Initially, it made him uncomfortable.

"As I got older, I realized moving was probably one of the best things that happened to me and my younger brother," he says. "Why? It exposed us to many different races of people. Some of my best friends were Mexicans. I saw Chinese people, Filipinos. It was such a melting pot of people. Everybody looked at each other like we're family. It exposed us to different cultures and different ways of life. It helped us to grow. It helped us to accept people for who they are."

When he went to college, it wasn't the same. He felt like there were one or two African Americans for every 500 students.

During his freshman year, he was arrested after a bar fight. He told The Los Angeles Times it was precipitated by big White guys telling him, "N——, we're going to kick your Black ass."

Bieniemy pleaded no contest and did community service.

He had a couple of other minor brushes with the law, but nothing serious enough to prevent Colorado from trying to hire him as its head coach earlier this year.

If there is a good reason Bieniemy is not a head coach in the NFL, nobody can explain it. At 51, he checks every box.

"I don't have the answer," Bieniemy says. "All of my interview experiences have been good, been great. I had an opportunity to interact with all those different owners, and we actually hit it off. The feeling was mutual. But for whatever reason, it just didn't work out. And what I've learned is, regardless of skin color, if it doesn't work, it doesn't work. The way I feel is if they don't hire me, that's OK."

Fumbles happen.

It's hardly ever about the fumble, though. It's about what happens after the fumble.

Bieniemy still is a head-coaching candidate near the top of every list. And the second half of his coaching career has yet to begin.

"They've almost done me a favor because I get to come back to the Kingdom and work with Coach Reid and (team president) Mark Donovan and (owner) Clark Hunt," he says. "On top of that, we've got a young, up-and-coming quarterback. He's still young, and he's got a lot of years ahead of him. … There's plenty of experience to gain here that's going to help me moving forward. … If they feel I am not ready, what better place to be?"

Heh, heh, heh, heh.

Yes, Eric Bieniemy is laughing.

Andy Reid and Brett Veach strengthen Chiefs' continuity with 5-year deals

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Around the season's midway point, Chiefs owner Clark Hunt usually shares most of his thoughts on the team's performance in his annual state-of-the-franchise news conference. Hunt shows his personality by often praising the players, assistant coaches and staff members he employs. He then voices his desires for a memorable end to the regular season and a thrilling postseason.

Monday's address was a historic one for Clark in a year full of significant accomplishments for his franchise. He celebrated after coach Andy Reid and general manager Brett Veach each signed a five-year contract extension with the Chiefs, all in the hopes the franchise can sustain its prosperity while pursuing more championships.

"I can't speak highly enough about the job the two of them have done in leading our team," Hunt said.

Reid and Veach have worked together the past 13 years, with the Philadelphia Eagles and then with the Chiefs starting in 2013. During their partnership in Kansas City, the Chiefs have had a winning record the past seven seasons. Before he was promoted to his role, Veach scouted Patrick Mahomes when he was at Texas Tech and convinced Reid and Hunt to execute the blockbuster trade during the 2017 NFL Draft, moving up 17 spots in the first round, to select the superstar quarterback. Reid helped develop Mahomes into becoming the league's MVP award winner in 2018 and Veach revamped the Chiefs' defense the following offseason. Reid and Veach's work culminated in February, as the Chiefs captured their first Super Bowl victory in 50 years.

Even before Hunt hoisted the Vince Lombardi Trophy, he told several members in the organization that he planned to sign Reid and Veach to their extensions. An agreement between the men, ensuring Reid and Veach would continue to guide the team through the 2025 season, was in place after training camp.

"I love it here," Reid said in early September. "I appreciate the Hunt family and all that they've done for me since I've been here — and our players and coaches. I feel blessed that way."

As the extensions were being finalized last week during the Chiefs' bye week, Hunt said he laughed and cherished the memory of when he interviewed Reid for the team's coaching opening in the first week of January 2013. The interview, Hunt said, was scheduled for four hours because Reid had planned to get on a flight to Phoenix to interview for the Arizona

Cardinals' coaching vacancy. Instead, the men chatted for nine hours and Reid canceled his flight.

"The chemistry was fantastic just right away," Hunt said. "We could tell we really had a rapport and it seemed like the two of us would work well together. Andy is a tremendous person to work with.

"If you think about the journey that we've been on over the last eight years when we hired Andy, we were obviously coming off of several very difficult seasons. The turnaround with Andy was almost immediate. And to his credit, he gets better."

The biggest characteristic Hunt has demonstrated with Reid and Veach has been trust. In 2015, the Chiefs began the season with a disappointing 1-5 record. Hunt, though, quickly spiked the notion that Reid's job was in jeopardy before in his annual midseason news conference. Reid and his staff made coaching adjustments, the players responded and the Chiefs won 11 consecutive games before falling in the divisional round of the playoffs.

Veach started his NFL career as Reid's do-everything assistant in Philadelphia. Veach agreed to join Reid's staff in Kansas City after they had a phone call, one in which his exact role wasn't determined. Before the 2017 season, Hunt signed Reid to a contract extension through the 2021 season and he fired former general manager John Dorsey. Although Dorsey was a talented evaluator of players, he was fired for mismanaging the team's salary cap and his disorganization. Veach was the team's top internal candidate for the job. Hunt trusted Veach's scouting skills, work ethic and knowledge of how to create salary-cap flexibility to promote him, becoming the youngest general manager in the league at age 39.

"Clearly, Brett's done an outstanding job," Hunt said. "One of the things that I think is most important to the success we've had is how he and Andy work together. They came with the pre-existing relationship from Philadelphia, so that was something I knew we were getting. But it's probably been better than I thought. That dynamic is really great."

The Chiefs, who are 8-1 this season, have had stability and continuity for almost a decade, one part because of Reid's coaching ability to maximize his players' skills and the other Veach's boldness to acquire talented players. Veach signed veterans such as Sammy Watkins, star strong safety Tyrann Mathieu, linebacker Anthony Hitchens and traded for star defensive end Frank Clark. The past two draft classes led by Veach have produced contributors — free safety Juan Thornhill, receiver Mecole Hardman, running back Clyde Edwards-Helaire, linebacker Willie Gay Jr. and cornerback L'Jarius Sneed.

In the past four years, Hunt has had Reid, Veach and president Mark Donovan report to him. The four men, Hunt said, talk several times each week. One staff member, before the season began, called all four men brilliant for their expertise and strong interpersonal skills for collaboration.

"We all know that we're really good at what we do," Veach told The Athletic in late July. "I certainly know that Coach is a Hall of Fame coach and Mark Donovan is a great president and Clark is a great owner. We've all had fights and disagreements, but it is like a family. I think what makes this place special right now is the fact that there's a high level of trust and respect. No one's trying to outdo one another.

"That is certainly infectious, and it trickles right down to the players. Players are really smart and they see this."

The credibility of Hunt's leadership, Mahomes' excellence and Reid's knowledge helped propel Veach and his staff to achieve perhaps the most flawless offseason in the franchise's history. Veach retained 20 of the 22 starters who led the Chiefs to their Super Bowl victory. He persuaded Watkins to agree to stay with the Chiefs on a one-year, $9 million deal that can rise to $16 million through incentives. He ended the summer with four-year deals for star defensive end Chris Jones and star tight end Travis Kelce.

The biggest move for Veach was signing Mahomes, the reigning Super Bowl MVP, to a 10-year, $477 million extension that could reach as much as $503 million through incentives. Before Mahomes signed the deal, Reid told him and Hunt that he planned to keep coaching for several years. Many in the organization believe Reid, 62, will remain in his role for at least another decade.

"We thoroughly listen to each other," Mahomes said in late August of his relationships with Hunt, Reid and Veach. "I feel that's why you get such a great culture that we have here."

As the son of Lamar Hunt, the Chiefs' founder, Clark Hunt was proud to explain the symbolism when comparing the state of the franchise in 2020 to when the team moved from Dallas to Kansas City in 1963. Back then, the Chiefs had a Hall of Fame coach in Hank Stram and a Hall of Fame quarterback in Len Dawson. With the Chiefs signing Reid and Mahomes to extensions, Hunt believes both men will be Hall of Famers when their careers are over. He also hopes Reid and Mahomes can lead the Chiefs to several Super Bowl victories.

"The value of a great head coach in the NFL cannot be overstated," Hunt said. "It's similar to the value of a great quarterback. When you have the two of them together, you can have a lot of success."

Hunt pleased with NFL's diversity proposal

As the chairman of the NFL's finance committee, Hunt said he agreed with the league's approval last week to reward teams that develop people of color who become head coaches or general managers.

Under the policy, the team that loses the minority candidate will receive a pair of third-round compensatory picks in future drafts. (If a team loses two people of color, either to the same team or different teams, they would receive the compensatory picks in three drafts.) The hiring team will receive no draft-pick compensation.

The league felt the policy was needed after the 2020 hiring cycle saw no new head coaches of color hired. The NFL started this season with two minority general managers and four minority head coaches. Romeo Crennel with the Houston Texans and Raheem Morris with the Atlanta Falcons are two Black men who were named interim head coaches earlier this season.

"I think it's really, really a smart change," Hunt said. "It's something that will incentivize organizations to develop talented minority candidates who hopefully can go on to be a head coach or general manager. If you look at Andy and Brett and the way they run their operation, it's not an incentive that the two of them needed because they've already taken those kinds of steps."

The Chiefs could benefit from the policy during the 2021 hiring cycle. Offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy, a Black man, is expected to be one of the top candidates to become a head coach after he interviewed with five teams the past two years. Tim Terry, the director of player personnel, and Ryan Poles, the assistant director of player personnel, are Black men who could be general manager candidates.

"From a Chiefs standpoint, I don't think we needed (the policy)," Hunt said. "But from a league standpoint, I think it's a really good dynamic."

Success, trust and burnt ends: Why everyone loves Kansas City Chiefs coach Andy Reid

Adam Teicher

ESPN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -- When Eric Bieniemy was a free-agent running back in 1999, he had some relatively lucrative contract offers with other teams. He instead signed a deal for the minimum salary with the Philadelphia Eagles so he could play for their new head coach, an obscure former assistant by the name of Andy Reid.

Reid had this way of making Bieniemy, at that point of his career mostly a special-teams player, feel on his free-agent visit that he would be a valued part of what the coach was trying to build.

"When I went on that trip and I visited the Philadelphia Eagles, I felt at home," said Bieniemy, who would play one season for Reid and then return to coach for him years later with the Kansas City Chiefs.

"I felt a part of something. I felt a part of the building block that was necessary to help them to start it off. I was a part of a foundation that Coach wanted to lay."

Reid has been making players feel that way for his entire career -- from stars like Patrick Mahomes and Travis Kelce to those at the bottom of the roster, as Bieniemy was more than 20 years ago.

More than any other reason, that's why players almost universally love working for the 62-year-old Reid.

"I can't remember anyone who didn't like playing for him, and I can't imagine why anyone wouldn't like playing for him," said Geoff Schwartz, a Chiefs offensive lineman in 2013, Reid's first season in Kansas City. "He's everything you want in a coach."

Indeed, it's easy to find players who have good things to say about their experience with Reid. Pick a player, current or former, and the chances are overwhelming he'll have a positive story or anecdote.

"It's no secret what Coach Reid does," Kelce said. "He puts guys in different positions on the field to succeed and maximizes their strengths, which is why he's such an unbelievable offensive mind.

"You have fun with it."

During the offseason, the Chiefs re-signed several top players, including Mahomes, Kelce and Chris Jones. They also retained some lesser ones, such as backup quarterback Chad Henne.

The Chiefs had much to offer, including money and the chance for additional Super Bowl championships. But Reid seemed to be an equal draw.

"He had no thoughts of retirement any time soon," Mahomes said of Reid while discussing why he re-signed with the Chiefs. "Obviously, that's a huge part of it."

'We trusted him right from the start'

It's not surprising skill players like working for Reid. Mahomes had the NFL's second 50-touchdown, 5,000-yard season with the Chiefs in 2018. Kelce is the first tight end in league history to have four straight 1,000-yard seasons.

But the position group that seems to inspire the most devotion toward Reid is offensive line. Reid was a lineman in college at Brigham Young.

Each Friday during the season, the linemen get to play wide receiver. They begin practice with a drill in which they get to catch passes.

"Starting off practice like that is a little bit of a reward for working our butts off for the last two days," tackle Eric Fisher said. "It just gets us in a good mindset to polish all of the details.

"It's a fun period for us."

Eventually, though, play has to stop and work must begin. Schwartz said the 15-play script that Reid uses to begin games is often crafted with offensive linemen in mind.

"There were always some runs and some screens and some reverses and some bootlegs, just a lot of ways to start the game off by helping his offensive line," Schwartz said. "I always loved that. We always started games with plays that benefited us, helped us get better, helped us get into a rhythm."

Reid joined the Chiefs in 2013 after they had just gone through one of the most brutal stretches in team history. They had won no more than four games in four of six seasons, including a 2-14 record in 2012.

The Chiefs had some talented players, but little direction. Reid was going to need some buy-in from the players to turn the team around quickly.

"You can't really listen to a coach or buy in to a coach unless you trust everything he's saying," former linebacker Derrick Johnson said. "We trusted him right from the start. Andy is a straight shooter. He did everything he told us he would do. That's what everybody loved."

But the players found Reid didn't ask without giving in return. Case in point: his first Chiefs training camp in 2013.

"He told us that training camp was going to be tough," Schwartz said. "And he was right. It was hard. We hit a lot. But he said that if we committed to him for three hours of practice in the morning, he would hook us up the rest of the day. And he did. We had walk-throughs in the afternoon, and they were literally walk-throughs. I've been places where that wasn't really the case.

"The things he told us, he did for us."

Reid said: "You can't be in the job I'm in and not be real for as long as I've been doing it. I think that ends up being important to the guys. I'm not going to be all over the place with them. I'm going to try to shoot them straight with what I see, right or wrong. I've got a couple of years' experience with all this gray hair.

"When it's all said and done, players want to be coached. They want to maximize their ability. I've learned that from some great players. They just wanted you to give them one more thing to make them better."

Reid established a players' leadership committee consisting of one member from each position group as a way for players to air their concerns.

"Whenever we started that meeting, the first thing he would say is, 'All right, what gripes do you have?'" Johnson said. "He doesn't want guys complaining in the locker room about this and that, like practices being too long or the food in the cafeteria not being good. So he would say, 'Tell me all the stuff like that and I'll fix it.' He doesn't want us to have any excuses for not getting it right on Sunday. He wants to eliminate all the distractions."

One time, Johnson said, the players complained they were hitting too much in practice.

"Andy likes long practices," Johnson said. "He's old-school. He runs a lot of plays. But we talked to him one time about wanting to take the pads off a lot at practice. We felt we didn't need to wear them as often as we did or do as much hitting as we did. He said, 'OK, got it. Anything else?' It was that quick.

"Most of the things we brought to him, he trusted just like that."

'You treat people like they're people'

Reid is a players' coach for other reasons. He's rarely critical of a player in public, instead usually taking the blame himself for putting players in a bad spot.

That's ironic because players say one of the reasons they like working for Reid is he plays to their strengths.

"Coach Reid puts guys in position to be successful and do what they do well rather than trying to fit everybody into a box," said Greg Lewis, who played for Reid with the Eagles and is now the Chiefs' wide receivers coach. "He gives you opportunities. If your strength is speed, he puts you in position to utilize your speed. If your strength is blocking or doing something of that nature, he puts you in those positions rather than try to fit you into a box of something you're not. He's able to mesh all those different types of skill sets together so seamlessly."

By all accounts, Reid isn't a yeller or screamer. Former players remember him rarely getting angry, perhaps once per season.

"He'd make faces, groan, maybe bite his lip, say 'Gosh darn it,'" former offensive lineman Jeff Allen said. "That's when you knew he wasn't happy. But that's about as far as he would go, and it took a lot for him to get to that edge."

Johnson said: "Andy is usually a calm speaker. When he starts talking fast, that's when you know it's time to pick it up. If you don't, the next time he's not going to be calm or talking fast. He's going to be yelling."

Best of NFL Nation

That doesn't mean discipline is unimportant to Reid. He just finds a different way.

"Human nature says if you keep yelling at somebody, [he's] going to turn you off," Reid said. "The old saying, 'Do unto others as you want done to you,' I kind of do that. But at the same time I'm in a position where if your biorhythms are down, I'm going to crank them back up for you. There's a time and a place for everything. I think staying positive and being real and honest with the guys is probably most important. I think it is with most humans.

"I believe in discipline. There are certain things you just need in this sport. ... But at the same time, I believe you treat people like they're people. I've done that since I've been in the business. That part hasn't changed."

Schwartz said: "He does a good job of connecting with players. He treats you like an adult. You put the work in, and he treats you with respect. He expects you do to your job, and he treats you as though you can do that. He's not going to micromanage your whole day. He definitely micromanages how he teaches the offense. But he's just not in your business the whole day.

"Before the game, we didn't see the coaches in the locker room. They come in right before the game to talk to us, but we might get to the stadium two or three hours before the game and he's not in your way, no other coaches are in your way. I've had teams with coaches that come in an hour before the game and they'll be, 'Hey, now, I was watching film last night and I saw this weird play [from the day's opponent] on film from seven years ago, so just be on the lookout for that.' Well, it's game day. We had all week to get ready for that. We just wanted to be left alone to prepare for the game.

"He gave us space when we needed it. That plays into why everyone likes Andy Reid and how easy it is to play for a guy like that. Because you respect him and he respects you, you don't want to let him down."

Reid 'undefeated' when it comes to food

Chiefs coach Andy Reid reveals how a cheeseburger and a water cooler helped him celebrate winning his first Super Bowl in style.

Schwartz and others described their relationships with Reid more as peer-to-peer than player-to-coach. Players occasionally go to Reid for personal advice. One player once asked Reid which type of car he should buy.

Another way Reid reaches his players is through his love of food. That resonates with his players, particularly the larger ones.

Reid, in his first year with the Chiefs, returned to Philadelphia to coach his new team against his former one. After coaching the Eagles for 14 seasons, Reid knew a little about the local cuisine. He ordered out for the whole team the night before the game, the spread including local delicacies like cheesesteaks and crab fries.

"You could always get a Kansas City restaurant recommendation from him," Allen said. "Any time. And they were good ones. He was undefeated there."

Reid would occasionally offer the players advice about what time of day was best at various Kansas City barbecue restaurants to get burnt ends, a delicacy around town despite their unappetizing name.

"He was like, '4 o'clock at Jack Stack, 5 o'clock at Joe's,'" said Schwartz, naming a couple of popular places in Kansas City. "He liked to eat. It was part of his way to relate to us. But it didn't come off as fake. He didn't come off as something other than who he was, and that's something we all appreciated.

"Most coaches, it's hard to have conversations with them. It just felt like you can always have a conversation with Andy."

Reid's relationships sometimes extend beyond a player's time with the Chiefs. Allen played three seasons for Reid with the Chiefs before signing a free-agent contract with Houston.

Allen said the first person he heard from after an injury knocked him out of the Texans' lineup was Reid.

Allen later returned to play with the Chiefs in parts of two seasons before retiring.

"We had conversations that were outside of football, about where I was personally," Allen said. "Before I decided to retire, we had a conversation about it. We sat down and talked about what was best for me, and he supported me on that. I felt I could still play, but there were things in my life -- injuries, life at home, my future.

"You don't get his reputation just by being a good football coach. You also get it by being a good person."

Allen then finished by summing up what many players feel about Reid.

"You don't feel like you're playing for Andy Reid," he said. "You feel like you're playing with him."

Chiefs' DT Derrick Nnadi is Making a Difference One Dog at a Time

Matt McMullen

February 13, 2020

It all started with Rocky.

The All-ACC honors, the pre-season award watch lists and the various accolades were special, but for defensive tackle Derrick Nnadi, this timid puppy – adopted prior to Nnadi's senior year at Florida State - was about to change his life.

Rocky would serve as Nnadi's confidant through the thick and thin, bring him unparalleled joy and – in due time – inspire the future third-round pick to cover the adoption fees for 126 dogs at the Kansas City Pet Project.

The story has swept the nation, but for Nnadi, this young pit bull was where it all began.

"Everything scared him. If I dropped my phone and it hit the ground, he'd run away," Nnadi recalled. "Because of that, I started taking him anywhere and everywhere I went. I introduced him to new surroundings, people and other dogs just to help him come out of his shell a little bit. Going through all that, it got me thinking about other dogs and what they're going through - abused animals and dogs living in shelters that can't seem to find a home. That's how I got the idea."

The idea was first put into action at the NFL Scouting Combine two years ago, where Nnadi pledged to support The Humane Society for every rep he tallied on the bench press. It was this past offseason, however, that Nnadi decided to take things a step further. For every game the Kansas City Chiefs won in 2019, Nnadi was going to cover the adoption fees for a dog at the KC Pet Project.

"It was all his idea," said Tori Fugate, Chief Communications Officer at the KC Pet Project. "It was so heartwarming for a player to use his platform like this, and we were just hopeful that there would be lots of wins."

Indeed, there were plenty of wins to go around – 14, as a matter of fact – as the Chiefs punched their ticket to Super Bowl LIV in Miami. There was just one game left, but this time, Nnadi figured the one-for-one model wasn't going to cut it.

"It was a last-minute idea that hit me out of nowhere. The way I saw it, we had the biggest game in the world coming up, and if I was sponsoring one dog for a regular game, then this had to be the biggest gesture imaginable," Nnadi said. "It seemed like the perfect thing to do."

Nnadi called the Pet Project and told them he was covering the adoption fees for every dog in the shelter. That meant 109 dogs – not to mention the 14 already sponsored during the season – were suddenly available to families free of charge.

"We had a line of people waiting the day after the game," Fugate said. "We expected a big response locally, but we never expected this. People just kept showing up to adopt."

In hardly any time at all, all 109 dogs had a home because of Nnadi. In a matter of 48 hours, he had won a Super Bowl – tallying a tackle-for-loss in the game – and helped dozens of dogs find a better life.

That impact was realized less than a week later, as the KC Pet Project invited back every family that adopted one of Nnadi's sponsored dogs for a parade through the organization's facility. Nnadi took photos and got to know the lives he'd changed – including a three-legged dog fittingly named "Nnadi" by his new family – before presenting the crowd with a check for more than $18,000, officially coming through on his pledge.

"It made me feel pretty good just seeing all these dogs have a second chance. They have families now that'll love them," Nnadi said. "It works the other way, too. These dogs will love these families, so it's not just helping dogs, it's helping people."

It all seems so simple, but it's a reality that Nnadi made possible.

"This was not only a great thing for Kansas City, it also inspired people to do things like this across the country," Fugate said. "This brought so much awareness to shelter animals looking for homes and it encouraged so many families to come out and adopt a new best friend. It's so wonderful."

It all started with Rocky, but in just a matter of years, Nnadi's love for animals has touched so many more.

Chiefs receiver Tyreek Hill surprises KC frontline healthcare workers with free meals

KC Star

The line exhausted after 45 minutes, and then these healthcare workers on the front lines of the fight against the coronavirus pandemic removed cell phones from pockets, huddled in front of Saint Luke's Hospital and posed for a picture.

"Tyreek!" a few of them shouted. "Come get in here!"

Chiefs wide receiver Tyreek Hill walked to the group, stood front and center and stretched his arms wide.

"I'm smiling," he said, a white mask covering his face. "You just can't see it."

A nurse removed her own mask, handed it to Hill and made an unusual request, one fitting of the times.

She wanted his signature — on the mask.

Hill spent Thursday morning at the location just off the plaza, handing out 100 meals to medical workers. Nurses and doctors lined up and met the recent Super Bowl champion. Hill wore not only a mask but gloves, giving people elbow bumps rather than handshakes.

"I'm always trying to uplift people," he said. "I always want to put a smile on people's faces. That's the main reason for it. I feel like the time we're living in now, a lot of people are down; a lot of people are sad. I'm always trying to bring a smile to someone's face."

Hill and his foundation partnered with Fuel Cafe, a Kansas City company, to provide the food. They served 100 workers. Fuel Cafe has previously provided prepared meals to workers at other hospitals, too.

The visit with Hill Thursday had been kept a secret inside Saint Luke's Hospital. Cassandra Stompoly, the unit's nurse manager, broke the news during a shift meeting earlier in the morning.

"It was very hard to keep it a secret," Stompoly said. "I knew it was going to be a big deal, so I wanted to make sure they had the same kind of reaction that most people would have to something like this."

The late reveal prevented them from wearing their favorite Chiefs garb or having football-related items on hand for Hill to sign. So they got creative. Hence the mask.

But a couple of maintenance workers came prepared. After the Chiefs won the Super Bowl, Duane Ferguson had a sign made commemorating an event he wasn't sure would ever happen. In bold white capital letters on a red background, the sign reads "Super Bowl Champs," along with the game's final score — Chiefs 31, 49ers 20.

Ferguson turned it into a magnet and sticks it on the maintenance cart he rolls down the facility's hallways.

It got a little more awesome Thursday when Hill added his signature to it.

"I might have to get it laminated before I put it back," Ferguson said, "so nobody smears it."

Hill told him another title would be coming. He'd have to update his sign. Such lighthearted moments provided a brief break from the reality of a pandemic that has kept people isolated for the better part of two months.

For Hill, too. He said he has developed a daily routine — a morning workout followed by time with his kids.

"It feels amazing just being around people again," Hill said. "Seeing their smiles and being around laughter, it makes me feel good. I'm always about energy, bringing good energy. It's fun. I love it."

Chiefs stars Patrick Mahomes, Tyrann Mathieu vow to head up voter-registration effort

Several NFL stars, including Patrick Mahomes and Tyrann Mathieu, have contributed to a powerful Black Lives Matter video. They've shared their feelings about racial and social injustice on social media in the wake of George Floyd's death at the hands of Minneapolis police officers.

Now, the two Chiefs leaders will do even more.

"It's going to be much more than guys pitching football camps back home," Mathieu said. "I see a lot more guys really getting involved in their communities and pushing things forward."

To Mathieu and Mahomes, the starting safety and star quarterback of the Super Bowl-winning Chiefs, that means taking an active role in voter registration.

"It's a lot more than just protesting," Mathieu said. "You have to find a call to action. I think voter registration can impact a lot of people.

"If we can make voting cool, if we can make it atrendy thing, then we're really changing the future, setting these kids up for a great future. ... A lot of folks don't think that's cool. Maybe we can make it cool again."

As protests continue around the country, calls for easier and more voter registration have gained momentum in the sports world, especially in the college ranks. Last week, 62 Missouri football players marched peacefully from the Mizzou campus to the Boone County Courthouse and registered to vote.

Georgia Tech has led a movement to make Election Day, Nov. 3 this year, an NCAA mandated day off from practice to allow athletes to vote.

Mathieu and Mahomes want to see what they can do to get professional athletes involved. They've spoken with Chiefs CEO and chairman Clark Hunt and team president Mark Donavan and have more discussions with teammates in the works.

"We really want to move forward with this," Mahomes said. "We're going to try to find the best way to give money or support or whatever it is to get as many people registered to vote, so they can go in and effect change."

Mathieu sees voter registration as a very worthy cause for the NFL and other sports.

"If we could get a program going, and to see 30 other football teams do it and 30 basketball teams do it ..." Mathieu said. "It's going to be our duty, our responsibility, to understand that we may have a million dollars and maybe can fix some things to a certain extent.

"But to really see our kids have a future, to see young minorities hold great seats of power, that comes through voter registration."

'Enough is enough.' Chiefs' Patrick Mahomes said he will use his platform to speak out

Sam McDowell

KC Star

A video that has sparked Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes to jump full-fledged into the Black Lives Matter movement is one he still can't bear to watch. Not completely.

But as the images of George Floyd's death prompt action across the country, they're also prompting a reflection of Mahomes' own platform.

With permanent changes.

"Enough is enough," Mahomes said via a video call with media Wednesday. "We gotta do something about this. I'm blessed to have this platform. Why not use it?"

Protesters have lined the streets of American cities since Floyd died in Minneapolis police custody on May 25. Mahomes said he has watched the nine-minute video only in parts rather than in entirety, saying, "it hurts me too much to my soul."

Mahomes, 24, is the son of a black father and white mother, born in small-town Tyler, Texas. While he said he has not experienced less privilege because of his race, he has studied racial inequality — an education gleaned from conversations with his family and other important figures in his life.

In the past two weeks, he has been vocal in his support of the Black Lives Matter campaign to fight racial injustices, initially on his social media accounts and then via participation in a video aimed at the NFL, featuring teammate Tyrann Mathieu and more than a dozen other players. The players requested the league "condemn racism and the systematic oppression of black people."

Mahomes is prominently featured in a powerful clip bolstered by his presence. Looking directly into the camera, he's the first player to state the movement's message: "Black Lives Matter."

"That stuff needed to be said," Mahomes said Wednesday of the video and his own statement on social media. "We needed to come together as players and show that we believe black lives matter. We believe this needs to be informed. We need to be the role models to go out there and take that step."

Along with Mathieu, Mahomes said he plans to address voter registration issues, a blueprint that has not yet been diagrammed but includes ongoing conversations with Chiefs owner Clark Hunt and team president Mark Donovan.

The video featuring Mahomes and other NFL stars preceded an important shift in the league's stance — or at least its public stance — on a demonstration that reached its league back in 2016, when San Francisco 49ers quarterback Colin Kaepernick knelt during the national anthem before a game.

Mahomes commended the support he's received from the Chiefs and said he has personally spoken with NFL commissioner Roger Goodell. And a day after the players revealed their video, Goodell released his own 81-second video acknowledging the need for change.

"We, the National Football League, admit we were wrong for not listening to NFL players earlier and encourage all to speak out and peacefully protest. We, the National Football League, believe black lives matter," Goodell said in the video.

While not outright stated as a direct response to the message from Mahomes and his colleagues throughout the league, the precisely similar wording in Goodell's statement indicated it was exactly that.

"We think that's the first step," Mahomes said. "But we wanna make sure it leads to action."

'America needs you, Mom': KC Chiefs defensive end Alex Okafor speaks out for justice

Alex Okafor

KC Star

Alex Okafor is a defensive end for the Kansas City Chiefs, former Texas Longhorn and native of East Texas. He wrote the following to share with the audiences of The Kansas City Star and Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

After an injury in Week 15 of the 2019 season, I watched my Kansas City Chiefs win the Super Bowl from the stands with my parents.

It was a heartfelt experience. There's nothing that I wanted more than to be on the field, battling with my teammates. But being able to watch our team win, with my parents next to me, is an experience that I wouldn't trade for the world. I wish time would have stopped and we could live in that moment forever.

Just a few months later, Mom was in the hospital, diagnosed with Acute Myeloid Leukemia. Because of coronavirus restrictions, we could not visit her in the hospital during her chemotherapy. Within three weeks, at only age 59, she was gone.

Soon after, so were three more African-Americans: Ahmaud Arbery, Breonna Taylor and George Floyd. At this point, I'm about to melt down. The pain from my mother's death is sitting heavily on me, not to mention the rage that has taken over me since these slaughterings. I'm overwhelmed with so many emotions; all I wanted to do is crawl into a cave and hide while the rest of the world burns down.

Then I thought to myself, "What would Mom have done?"

Sonia Danette Alexander Okafor has always been my biggest role model. She grew up in East Texas, losing her mom at 9, and went to Grambling State University, majoring in criminal justice. She had grown up in the civil rights movement and experienced a lot of racial trauma post-segregation. She always made my brother and me aware of the racial injustices in this country. She did her best to prepare us for the obstacles to being Black in the suburbs of Texas:

Don't stay out too late.

Don't wear durags in public.

Drive carefully while passing through Williamson County.

Put both hands on the steering wheel when being pulled over by the cops.

She stopped at nothing to assure everyone in my family excelled. She had a kind heart and was always trying to improve society. She worked as a probation officer for 11 years and was certified as an alcohol and drug-abuse counselor. Later, she worked for a nonprofit organization finding housing for underprivileged families. I'm sure if she were alive today, she would say we need more organizations as such to help level the playing field.

She was one of the most courageous people I know. My dad moved from Nigeria at 19 and met my mom at Grambling. Shortly after marriage, his mother got sick and he wanted to bring her to the States for better medical care. But he wasn't a U.S. citizen yet, so Mom volunteered to bring my grandma back. My mom had never been to Nigeria, and the area my dad grew up in wasn't safe for foreigners. Nevertheless, she went and brought my grandma back seamlessly. That kind of courage and selflessness are what we need right now.

We also need more of her tolerance. Which reminds me of the story in which my dad brought home goat meat for the first time. In Nigeria, the head of a goat is considered a delicacy; my dad was saving it for a special occasion. When Mom opened the freezer door, she screamed: A goat's head was staring back at her! Initially, she was terrified, but she made it a point to learn about the Nigerian culture so she could understand my dad's upbringing. (She eventually came to eat goat meat but never would try that goat head.) She knew it wasn't fair to judge my dad without truly understanding where he came from.

We as a nation need to come together to learn more about one another's upbringing. The more we learn, the more sensitive we will be to other demographics' struggles.

Mom was a huge fan of Oprah Winfrey. She recorded every episode of her show and bought all her magazines. Nowadays, I get emotional every time I see or hear someone mention Oprah. I see my mom in her. Both are strong Black women who strive to make this world a better place. Oprah once advocated, "Turn your wounds into wisdom." This resonates with me because if Mom were alive, I believe this would be her advice for our country. We must learn from the recent murders if we want to end systemic racism in the United States.

After Mom passed away, I vowed that I'll stop at nothing to make her proud. I'll be the best man I can be while honoring her to the fullest. The first big step is making a legitimate effort to end racism in this country. As much as I wanted to cut off all news networks and social-media outlets so that I could mourn in peace, I know this is not what Mom would have wanted. Because of her, I'm writing this article. Because of her, I want to have this uncomfortable conversation about racism and inequality.

Mom worked as an alcohol and drug-abuse counselor for 11 years. There's a term in that field known as "emotional sobriety." In order for the Black community to take the next step, we must embrace these emotions of anger. We have to address our pain and agony in a way in which it doesn't eat at us anymore, but motivates us to take care of our own. We must practice emotional sobriety so that we can take these negative emotions and channel them into concise and conscious efforts. This includes voting, and not just in the presidential election.

Mom always urged me to go vote. If I had time in my schedule I would, but I never took it seriously. If I voted it was only because Mom kept bugging me. Growing up, mom used to always say, "If you don't like what's going on in your life, what do you plan to do about it?" Well, since my mother is no longer here to pressure me every election, I must take it upon myself to vote while encouraging others to do the same.

Mom, I love you. I'm more determined than ever to continue your work in creating a better society. A better America.

Why Chiefs star Frank Clark made special trips to feed the homeless on skid row

Sam McDowell

KC Star

On Easter morning, Chiefs defensive end Frank Clark woke up in his California home feeling the urge to do something. Feeling a nudge to help the neighborhood in which he spent much of his childhood.

But how?

As his family cooked a holiday meal, he left for Los Angeles' Skid Row — a well-known district in downtown L.A. —unsure of his plan.

"The first place I thought of was the pizza spot," he said.

The Skid Row residents — many of them homeless — had a celebrity delivery man.

Clark himself.

And this week, he repeated the gesture. Clark packed up his trunk with dozens of pizzas from Little Caesars, delivering them to his old neighborhood.

"Took care of my people today," he wrote on social media.

Clark spent a portion of his childhood homeless with his single mother, Teneka, he told The Star last September, a few months after he signed a five-year, $105 million contract with the Chiefs. They stayed at Union Rescue Mission in Skid Row but bounced around to other shelters and motels, too.

He has made a point to remember his past, calling it a purpose. He paid for homeless guests to attend the team's home opener last fall, providing them a limousine ride to the stadium and seats in a suite.

In his first pizza delivery to Skid Row, over the Easter holiday, Clark and a friend rushed into Little Caesars during the midst of the pandemic and asked for as many pizzas as they could make. How about 100? He offered to buy pizzas from those inside the store who had already ordered.

On such short notice, the store said they could make 55 .

His jersey number.

"It's a coincidence. It's crazy," he said. "... I went down there with my friend. He helped me pass out food to the homeless. We made sure we wore our protective stuff. But I feel like I'm more in touch with them than the average person. I know the streets."

Frank Clark to Pay Funeral Costs for Local Four-Year-Old Shooting Victim

Matt McMullen

July 4, 2020

An unthinkable tragedy struck a local family this week when four-year-old LeGend Taliferro was shot and killed while he slept in his home, and as the community grieves a life cut far too short, Kanas City Chiefs' defensive end Frank Clark is doing what he can to help.

Clark is covering LeGend's funeral costs, as reported by McKenzie Nelson of 41 Action News. According to Nelson, Clark has been in contact with LeGend's mother about how he can help. The Pro Bowl pass-rusher also tweeted a photo of young LeGend - who was described as having "the heart of a lion" by his mother – along with a message encouraging the community to remember and honor the four-year-old's memory.

"RIP young LeGend Taliferro. Crazy In the midst of a movement we still manage to do foolish things," Clark said in his tweet. "He was killed as he slept in his home due to gun violence. His mother, Charron Powell needs us. Let his name be heard."

Clark was a critical component of the Chiefs' championship campaign in 2019 - tallying five sacks in the postseason alone – but his impact was often felt well beyond the field. He gave away 150 backpacks and school supplies to kids in need last August, threw a Halloween dinner and party for local inner-city families in October and frequently gave back to the underprivileged community in Los Angeles where he grew up, providing families with food, cleaning supplies and hygiene products on a regular basis.

Now, as LeGend's family copes with the worst of circumstances, Clark is once again using his platform and resources to make a difference for those who need it.

Mahomes' new deal is a record, and the Chiefs have been right about him at every step

Sam Mellinger

KC Star

Twelve years ago, Chiefs coach Herm Edwards was deciding between Brodie Croyle, Damon Huard and Tyler Thigpen as his quarterback.

Twelve years from now, Patrick Mahomes will remain under contract with the Chiefs.

Kids who just finished kindergarten will be in college when Mahomes' new contract expires. Kids who just finished fourth grade will be trying to intercept Mahomes, or perhaps blocking for him.

We knew this was coming. We didn't know this was coming, and not just that the news was broken by a woman who sold champagne for the Chiefs' front office celebration.

The Chiefs all but promised Mahomes' next contract would be historic, and they outshot that expectation — 10 years, with the contract kicking in after his rookie deal expires in two years, according to ESPN's Adam Schefter. The deal is worth up to $503 million — sports' first half-billion dollar deal — and includes $477 million in "guarantee mechanisms," with opt-outs if those aren't exercised, according to NFL Network's Ian Rapoport.

This is the first time an NFL player has held sports' richest contract. No player has ever been tied to a team for a longer period of time. Chris Cabott, the president and COO of Steinberg Sports and Entertainment, helped negotiate a deal that will benefit not just his client but players across the league.

The contract is without precedent because Mahomes is without precedent. He is a league and Super Bowl MVP before his 25th birthday while playing the most important position in professional sports.

His worst season as a starter is either the time he threw for 5,000 yards and 50 touchdowns, or the time he led three consecutive double-digit postseason comebacks in winning the Chiefs' first Super Bowl since before his father was born.

Before Mahomes, the Chiefs were exactly good enough to lose in the playoffs.

With Mahomes, damn near anything is possible on any snap, in any game, in any season. A generation of Kansas City kids will graduate from high school knowing nothing but a world in which their local football team employs one of the greatest quarterbacks in league history.

What a time to be alive.

The Chiefs won Super Bowl LIV, return 20 of 22 starters, improved their already absurd offense, retained offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy and signed Mahomes to what is effectively a lifetime contract. We don't know how defensive lineman Chris Jones' negotiations will end, but lets just say teams have had worse offseasons.

For Mahomes, he won the Super Bowl MVP, slammed many domestics during the parade, influenced Whataburger to expand to Kansas City, starred in a video that forced the commissioner to apologize and now has a contract that will make him his sport's richest player and benefit the league's other stars for years. Lets just say players have had less impressive stretches of five months.

You cannot have followed the Chiefs for more than a few years and not feel like the world has shifted. For years — for decades, really — the top of the league has felt close enough to see but too far away to touch.

The Chiefs made a lot of smart decisions. They hired a lot of good people. They employed stars, from Deron Cherry to Christian Okoye to Derrick Thomas to Priest Holmes to Tony Gonzalez to Justin Houston to Eric Berry. But none of it was enough.

In Andy Reid's seven years, the Chiefs have done more than merely be right on Mahomes. They drafted Travis Kelce and Tyreek Hill and Jones. They signed Mitchell Schwartz and Tyrann Mathieu in free agency. They traded for Frank Clark and Charvarius Ward.

But none of these things had an impact like being so undeniably correct about perhaps the most all-in decision in franchise history: trading two first-round picks and a third-round pick at a time when some believed they were better off adding to a team that had just gone 12-4 with a division championship.

The Chiefs were almost brazenly right with this — they began planning for this contract extension before Mahomes' first snap, and general manager Brett Veach called Mahomes the best player he'd ever seen before Mahomes' first season as a starter.

If they were wrong about Mahomes, they had basically no safety net. The Chiefs would be going with Andy Dalton or Cam Newton or Jordan Love at quarterback right now.

Instead, they have the league's best.

There is risk in everything. This is no different. Mahomes could be injured, or he could have already played his best two seasons. Andy Reid won't coach forever, and Mahomes is unlikely to be surrounded by this much skill-position talent for the rest of his career. If this is as good as it gets, then Mahomes and the Chiefs will each feel unfulfilled.

This is a percentage play. Because if Mahomes is not going to be widely regarded as one of the best few to ever do it by the time this contract is finished, we have yet to see the reason.

Defenses adjusted to him in 2019, and he had to compete through a knee injury that limited his ability to extend plays. He still threw for 2,752 yards, 21 touchdowns and six interceptions in 10 games after the injury, including the playoffs. The Chiefs averaged more than 30 points in the postseason.

The only professional disappointment he's suffered so far is the time the 2018 Chiefs' defense beat him in the AFC Championship Game.

Mahomes is outrageously talented but also intensely smart. He has shown himself to be at his best in the biggest moments, with a natural leadership that won over a locker room filled with older teammates almost immediately. He won a league MVP trophy in his first year as a starter, and then worked harder and became even more effective.

Just spitballing, but the likeliest reasons for Mahomes' career to be sidetracked from historic are injury, his work ethic fading with success and the Chiefs failing to surround him with enough talent.

The first is true with any athlete, the second has so far gone the opposite way, and the Chiefs' GM is just 41 years old.

Guarantees don't exist, but which way would you bet about whether the Chiefs just locked up one of the best 10 quarterbacks of all time?

The Chiefs have been right about Mahomes every step so far. He's given them nothing but reasons to believe that the biggest contract in league history will also be one of the best.

Patrick Mahomes' Contract Extension Hits Chiefs' Fans Differently, and Here's Why

BJ Kissel

Chiefs.com

It's done. The best football player in the world will stay in Kansas City for the foreseeable future.

The news of Patrick Mahomes' historic contract extension hit the internet Monday morning and social media caught fire, and for good reason.

It wasn't a surprise that it happened – nobody thought it wouldn't eventually, but the deal still raised plenty of eyebrows all across the country, and for multiple reasons.

The guy with the best start of any player in NFL history – the NFL MVP Award in his first year as a starter, and then a Super Bowl MVP following three-straight playoff comeback wins of double-digits in his follow-up campaign, was always going to be the highest paid player in football.

It's the nature of the position and his resume to this point. But the details – mainly the length of 12 years he's now under contract – means the professional career and continued story of the best football player any of us have ever seen (to this point) will forever be a Chiefs' story - a Kansas City story.

It means the kind of moments we've all experienced over the last two years have just begun. The crazy throws, the electrifying runs and improbable comebacks, are just getting started.

Kids who can't read right now will be driving cars when Mahomes' newest contract is up. Husbands and wives who haven't even met yet will get married and start a family before he could even possibly go to another team. And Mahomes' future Chiefs' teammates who will be a part of his 2030 Super Bowl run – to be watched by more than 100 million people – aren't barely teenagers and haven't yet played in front of even 1,000 people.

In addition to that, Mahomes didn't just sign the largest contract for a football player of all-time, he signed the biggest contract for any athlete, ever – surpassing the Los Angeles Angels' outfielder Mike Trout's mega-contract signed last year.

Mahomes, who put up this video on his social media accounts following the announcement, stated that they're "chasing a dynasty" right now.

It's the same word – dynasty – that players like Travis Kelce, Frank Clark and Tyreek Hill were using on the field and in the locker room following the Super Bowl victory down in Miami a few months ago.

No team has won back-to-back Super Bowls since the 2004-05 New England Patriots, and no team has ever won three Super Bowls in a row. In fact, the prop bets have already begun on the over/under on number of titles the Chiefs will win between now and the end of this contract.

This contract, which Mahomes made sure would be structured in a way that his teammates can still get paid and talent can still be added around him, will be talked about forever. It's history-making.

If you're a college kid wanting to be a sports agent, you're going to learn about what Mahomes' representatives - Chris Cabott, Leigh Steinberg and the folks at Steinberg Sports and Entertainment – were able to pull off.

A football player is the highest paid athlete in the world for the first time, ever. They negotiated the biggest deal anyone has ever seen, and everyone came out looking good.

You'll also learn about what Brett Veach, Brandt Tilis, Chris Shea and company were able to do on the Chiefs' side. It's the longest deal in football history. It's the biggest deal in football history, and from all accounts by those familiar with contracts, salary caps and future business planning, the deal is a win-win for both parties.

Neither side comes out looking selfish or bad—something Veach noted in his media availability is unique considering the size and impact of the deal.

Veach shared the story of Tilis coming down to his office last Spring, not long after Trout's deal with the Angels was signed and said that Mahomes "was going to get a baseball contract."

He did, and current and former players across the league have been united in saying, "He's worth every penny."

It took years to negotiate this deal, and the price kept going up with each touchdown and comeback win—something Veach said they all laughed about over the past couple of years, but now it's done, and the Chiefs say they have flexibility to win in the present, and the future.

This was a "legacy-deal, not a cash deal," Veach noted.

But one of the underrated storylines of this contract is also the validation it gives Mahomes for a decision he made years ago as a teenager – giving up the guarantee of more than a million dollars to pursue professional baseball right out of high school.

Mahomes had that opportunity, but he wanted to chance to continue his passion of playing football in college at Texas Tech and so he passed it up. He bet big on himself in a way that a lot of others might not have, and he was rewarded for it.

Less than six years later and only five as a "full-time football player," Mahomes surpassed that financial mark by more than 500X's and doesn't seem fazed by any of it.

Before Mahomes, the Chiefs hadn't drafted a quarterback that started and actually won a game for them in more than three decades. They had never drafted a quarterback who won a playoff game for them.

It was a thing. It was discussed every year around the draft.

"Would the Chiefs draft a quarterback in the first round for the first time since 1983?

Well, they did, and it was worth the wait.

In his two years as a starter, Mahomes has started five postseason games – going 4-1 while scoring 16 touchdowns and tossing just two interceptions—just to hit the tip of his long and distinguished resume—at 24 years old.

The record books will keep being written by the reigning Super Bowl MVP and current face of the NFL.

There's another big reason this move just hits differently for Chiefs' fans. They've had to endure some of the worst playoff losses and off-the-field tragedies of any fan base in the entire league over the past few decades. They deserve this time.

From Joe Delaney and Derrick Thomas, to the no-punt game, missed field goals, phantom hits to the quarterback's head and the most-sudden "forward progress" call in football history, any many, many more, through it all, this fan base has remained loyal.

They show up to games – not to watch, but to participate – and created an atmosphere that's praised by outsiders who pop in to visit Arrowhead Stadium to see what the fuss is all about. They quickly learn and the mystique carries on.

But now, that same stadium - born of a defensive identity led by the tenacity of No. 58 coming off the edge – will continue to echo the cheers and shouts of disbelief in watching another player born of special skill and character, and another one they can call their own.

Patrick Mahomes is the best player in football. He loves being a Chief and absolutely loves being a part of this community—something he mentioned multiple times as to why he signed a deal that would keep him in town for the next 12 years.

He's chasing a dynasty, and we get to witness the journey—something we should never take for granted, because after all, we know better than most how rare this really is.

'A watershed moment': The meaning behind Patrick Mahomes' Royals ownership

By Alec Lewis and Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Angel McGee was sitting at her desk at the Kansas City Urban Youth Academy on Tuesday morning when an internal news release pinged her phone. She glanced over and saw the name all of Kansas City has come to revere in connection with ownership of the city's baseball team. She wasn't sure whether she was seeing things.

"I was like, 'Hold on, did I read this right?'" McGee said.

She shifted from her phone to her monitor, furiously clicking her email to enlarge what she semi-could-not-believe she had read. Sure enough, the news was real: Kansas City Chiefs superstar quarterback and Super Bowl MVP Patrick Mahomes had been announced as the newest member of the Kansas City Royals' ownership group.

McGee, the Urban Youth Academy's manager of communication and outreach, continued reading. There was a statement from Royals principal owner John Sherman, lauding Mahomes' leadership. There was a statement from Mahomes himself, explaining his vision to deepen his roots within Kansas City. McGee's jaw remained dropped.

The wowed reaction Tuesday, of course, was widespread across Kansas City. Bob Kendrick, the president of the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum, was playing a round of golf Tuesday morning when he learned Mahomes became a part owner of the Royals. He, too, was ecstatic. It wasn't just the marriage between two of Kansas City's civic institutions. It was also the idea that Mahomes, of biracial heritage, became a part owner in the major leagues during the moment in which America resides.

"The timing," Kendrick said, "just seems to be so appropriate."

Kendrick first met Mahomes in 2017, a few weeks after the draft. Mahomes, as part of the Chiefs' annual program to educate new players on the history of professional athletes, toured the Negro Leagues Baseball Museum. Kendrick shared stories of Jackie Robinson entering the major leagues in 1947, Henry Aaron starting his Hall of Fame career in the Negro Leagues and Andrew "Rube" Foster, the former Black pitcher who led seven other owners in establishing the Negro National League 100 years ago.

"If you're African American or Hispanic and you play a team sport in this country, it all starts with the Negro Leagues," Kendrick said. "I don't think that's been lost on Patrick. He understands his father's role in this sport as an African American."

Indeed, Mahomes' father, Pat, pitched in the major leagues for 11 seasons. He would become pals with fellow pitcher LaTroy Hawkins, who would watch Mahomes take the field as a Chiefs quarterback months after Mahomes' visit to the museum.

As Mahomes no-look-passed his way to being looked upon as one of football's next greats in 2018, Hawkins watched his godson's love for Kansas City grow. Success early in 2019 only amplified that love, which started to show in the form of nods to the city's roots.

In October, Kendrick received a phone call from an official from the Chiefs. Four days later, Kendrick delivered to Mahomes a replica No. 25 jersey from the 1942 Kansas City Monarchs. Mahomes wanted to wear the No. 25 Monarchs jersey when he entered Arrowhead Stadium last season before the Chiefs hosted the Indianapolis Colts in a prime-time game. He wanted to honor Leroy "Satchel" Paige, the Hall of Fame pitcher who had donned it before the major leagues' color barrier was broken.

"It's just cool to know that when I go to Kansas City that he's there and he's making an impact on everybody that he comes in contact with," Hawkins, also a special assistant within the Minnesota Twins organization, said. "For me, that's the most important thing. I don't know much about football — other than what he's taught me over the years — but I do know that having relationships and doing your part to give back to the community and investing where you're going to be employed at is very important."

While Mahomes was parading the Chiefs to victories in winter 2019, a sale was surfacing across the Truman Sports Complex lot. Sherman, a Kansas City businessman who had given back in the form of his support for Teach for America and the Truman Library Institute, among many other philanthropic endeavors, was set to purchase the club.

He was introduced as the new owner in November. A few months later, Mahomes' parade of victories turned into an actual parade. For the first time in 50 years, on Feb. 2, the Chiefs won the Super Bowl. Spring's absence of sports — and the Royals, specifically — because of the COVID-19 pandemic gave way to conversation about a potential long-term contract for Mahomes. Meanwhile, Mahomes was conversing about baseball.

He asked Hawkins about his job with the Twins as their special assistant in the baseball operation. Mahomes, as the Chiefs' top representative in the NFL's players union, was also intrigued to get Hawkins' thoughts on how the MLB was building its approach and procedures to start its shortened season amid the coronavirus pandemic.

"I hope you guys get it right so we can play football," Mahomes told Hawkins. "What kind of testing are you guys doing?"

At some point, the conversation shifted toward an opportunity that had arisen, one for Mahomes to purchase a piece of ownership with the Royals. He and Hawkins talked about it. Mahomes also discussed the idea with his agents, Chris Cabott and Leigh Steinberg, and even his dad.

"I always tell him, if it feels right and it makes sense, that's what matters," Hawkins said. "Everybody doesn't get that opportunity to be able to become a part owner of a professional team in any sport."

That conversation was shelved in the days after May 25, the days following George Floyd's death. On his social media platforms, Mahomes expressed sadness about the deaths of Floyd, Ahmaud Arbery and Breonna Taylor while also condemning police brutality, social injustice and racial inequality. Mahomes also gave his support, along with other star NFL players, for the Black Lives Matter movement.

Kendrick observed Mahomes' stances and marveled at them. At the same time, he was participating in conversations among the Royals brass, which was listening and learning itself.

Reggie Sanders, a special assistant with the Royals, hopped on Zoom calls with leadership from the top to Urban Youth Academy employees such as McGee to even players. They discussed diversity, inclusion and equity. Among all of MLB, one glaring issue was obvious: the very small presence of minority owners.

That number grew by one with Tuesday's news, which goes lengths toward explaining McGee's reaction.

"Now we're in this stage of equity," Sanders said. "The thing that never was in the forefront of that was the equity piece. Equity in terms of thought, in terms of policy, governorship and action. Inside of our organization, we're trying to be intentional about our practices in terms of who we bring on. So the Patrick Mahomes scenario is very fitting to that pragmatic equity solution."

Kendrick, thinking through the news on the golf course, was not surprised to see that pragmatism because of the people involved. There's Sherman, who has long embraced the Black culture and heritage of baseball. And there's Mahomes, who is aware of his potential impact beyond the turf.

"It couldn't have come at a better time because of what's going on in America at this particular moment and what has transpired — and has been transpiring for a long time — but most recently with the George Floyd situation," Hawkins said. "It's another indication of being able to push the needle, being about to create a legacy and showing Black people that you can do it, it's possible.

"I wish I had done more when I was playing, but he's comfortable in himself to be able to be a trailblazer. It's important because now we see somebody that looks like us that is able to own part of a team. He gives hope."

In saying that, Hawkins referenced young boys and girls, those of whom the Urban Youth Academy works to develop. McGee, thinking of the time, said this news "couldn't be more perfect."

"This allows us to show our kids — look at the face, a face that resembles a lot of you," McGee said.

On Tuesday, when the news broke, when McGee was fumbling around her desk and Kendrick was beaming at the golf course, Hawkins and Mahomes texted each other.

"I want to build something special (with the Royals)," Mahomes told Hawkins.

Hawkins' response conveyed the importance of the draft and player development, of building from within. In essence, this is exactly what Mahomes has done civically in becoming a part owner for the Royals.

"This is, I think," Kendrick said, "a watershed moment for sports here in Kansas City."

Chris Jones plans to collect sacks, rings after 4-year deal with the Chiefs

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — In his first public comments to reporters since becoming a champion, Chris Jones took a quick pause from speaking Monday during his Zoom video conference. As one of the Chiefs' most vibrant players, Jones, the star defensive tackle, flashed his wide smile before praising general manager Brett Veach. Jones, with all his swagger, called Veach, the man who helped execute his lucrative contract last week, his dog, further fortifying their already strong relationship.

Since the Super Bowl, Jones never wanted to leave the Chiefs, even though he could've become an unrestricted free agent. The Chiefs, led by Veach, wanted to keep Jones, who at age 26 is expected to enter the prime of his career.

On Monday, the two parties celebrated once again, via Zoom, after Jones signed his four-year, $80 million deal Wednesday, a contract that has the potential to bring him as much as $85 million through incentives. At each step in his five-year career, Jones has been an overachiever, becoming a rare premier interior pass rusher, breaking the NFL record for consecutive games with at least one sack and even convincing his employer to forgo a season on the franchise tag. After Veach and the Chiefs demonstrated their faith in him, Jones was eager Monday to share what he wants to accomplish through his new deal. Jones wasn't afraid to raise the expectations on himself to as high as they can be.

"It's about having a Hall of Fame career, getting a gold jacket," he said in a calm manner. "Honestly, if somebody would've told me you can choose $20 million or 20 sacks this year, I'd choose the sacks every day. That's where my mind and heart is at — getting sacks, winning championship rings and having fun.

"The game is bigger than just money. It's my passion, and I want to get the gold jacket, man."

Though Jones is a lovable personality in the Chiefs' locker room, he also understands the legacy he can create for himself by helping the franchise win multiple Super Bowls.

He desires to earn the league's defensive player of the year award within the next four seasons. He has dreamed of being the league's leader in sacks, with the crowd inside Arrowhead Stadium roaring as he devours opposing quarterbacks. He wants to one day be at an event alongside superstar quarterback Patrick Mahomes and star defensive end Frank Clark — two of his closest teammates — in which all three men show multiple Super Bowl rings on one of their hands.

In the past month, several members of the Chiefs have been open about the franchise's desire to become the NFL's next dynasty. Jones was the latest person Monday, as he described the text message he received from Mahomes on July 6, the day the quarterback signed the largest contract in sports history.

"As soon as his deal got done, Pat texted me and said, 'Hey, let's get this thing done; I left something on the table,'" Jones said. "That's when I had the feeling that me and the Chiefs were going to work something out."

Mahomes allowed the Chiefs to structure his 10-year extension — by in essence spreading out at least $477 million over that time — by having the deal start after the 2021 season. That decision gave the Chiefs the short-term salary cap flexibility to offer an extension to Jones.

When Jones agreed to his extension, Mahomes sent him a short text message Tuesday that was full of excitement: "Let's fucking go!"

Jones appreciated Mahomes' loyalty to him at every stage of the offseason.

"For me, it was just about the understanding that me and Pat have about bringing a dynasty in Kansas City," Jones said. "We both have the same goal of building something special in Kansas City with Coach (Andy) Reid and all the talent we have. We all have the same mindset: We want to keep this team together."

Veach's message to Jones and his agents, Michael Katz and Jason Katz, was one of patience after the men met during the NFL Scouting Combine. Similar to everyone in America, the men were forced to adjust their plans and the negotiation for an extension after the coronavirus became a pandemic that impacted the business of every industry. Veach felt the Chiefs needed as much time as possible before the league's franchise tag deadline Wednesday to better understand the potential changes to the salary cap in future years if the league loses significant revenue this upcoming season.

Jones, similar to Mahomes, gave the Chiefs some immediate cash flow help by not receiving a signing bonus upon signing his contract. His base salary for the season also stays at $16.1 million, which is what he would've made on the franchise tag.

"We were driven and determined this whole time," Veach said. "Our plan was to do a lot of the things we've done this offseason. Right at the top of that list was Pat Mahomes and Chris Jones — and everyone knew that. You just don't draft these guys year after year. Chris is not a guy that you can just find in any draft. When you have a player that talented, that special, we were determined to make sure Chris Jones was a Chief."

In the past two seasons, Jones has been the Chiefs' best defensive player, recording 24.5 sacks and 27 tackles for loss during that stretch. Since 2018, Jones has earned the second-highest pass-rushing grade (91.4), according to Pro Football Focus. Only Aaron Donald of the Los Angeles Rams has more sacks (52) than Jones (33) among defensive tackles since 2016.

Listed at 6-foot-6 and 310 pounds, Jones is one of the quickest and strongest defensive tackles in the league. He also has been a major contributor for the Chiefs without having to record a sack. In the Chiefs' comeback victory in the Super Bowl, Jones produced perhaps the best performance of his career, deflecting three passes to keep the San Francisco 49ers scoreless in the fourth quarter. He also pressured 49ers quarterback Jimmy Garoppolo into throwing an interception before halftime.

"He's unblockable as an interior pass rusher," Veach said of Jones. "With his size and athleticism and his quickness, it takes two guys to block him. All you have to do is turn the Super Bowl on and see what he did against a very good 49ers team.

"He's a young guy, and we certainly feel that he's going to keep getting better and better and better. When we announced, via Twitter, that we signed him, (one of) his goals were to be defensive player of the year. If he can stay healthy and stay on this upward trajectory, there's no doubt in my mind he has all the tools needed to do that."

Since Jones is so confident and exuberant, Reid said he can understand why some opponents, analysts and fans might have misconceptions about work ethic and professionalism. But Reid described Jones as a brilliant defender, a player who enjoys studying, performing his best in the game's biggest moments and having his teammates rally around his enthusiastic voice.

"He's very talented, and he brings a great personality to our team," Reid said of Jones. "Nothing is impossible in his mind, and that's the way he goes about it. I've been proud of the commitment he's given to the organization and how he's handled himself."

The biggest example Reid and Veach shared of Jones' mature devotion to the Chiefs was actually last offseason.

In seeking an extension last summer, Jones wasn't with his teammates when the Chiefs began their offseason program. He stayed away when the team held its organized practices and even took an $88,650 fine for skipping the team's mandatory minicamp. But Jones ended his holdout at exactly the moment the Chiefs held their first team meeting at the start of training camp. He respected Reid enough not to be a distraction for the team, and he wanted to do his part to learn the Chiefs' new 4-3 base scheme under new defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo. Jones was also willing to share and exchange pass-rushing techniques with Clark, whom the team acquired via a blockbuster trade and signed to a five-year, $105.5 million contract.

"It would've been very easy for Chris to show up late or to complain," Veach said. "But Chris was dedicated to this team, he wanted to win the Super Bowl and the really cool thing — and Coach and I talk about this all the time — was how was Chris going to handle the first few weeks of practice with Frank. Within a few days, I remember being at training camp last year and seeing Frank and Chris just hit it off."

Before signing his contract, Jones loved his relationship with the Chiefs. Beyond Veach and Reid, Jones expressed his gratitude for Brandt Tilis, one of the team's salary-cap specialists who helped figure out how to ensure the extensions for Jones and Mahomes worked in concert. Jones acknowledged Ryne Nutt, too. As the director of college scouting, Nutt was instrumental in the Chiefs identifying and selecting Jones in the 2016 NFL Draft.

Five days after signing his contract, Jones believes his deep love for the Chiefs can only grow.

"I always wanted to stay with the Chiefs," he said. "It's not about being the highest-paid player. It's about getting what you deserve. Thankfully, I'm here for the long haul."

Chiefs star Mahomes having 2020 nobody will soon forget

Dave Skretta

August 10, 2020

The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The world is in the grips of the worst pandemic in more than a century, the country is going through the kind of social upheaval unseen in decades, and the vast majority of people would prefer 2020 just grind to an end.

Patrick Mahomes might be having the best year of anyone.

The Chiefs quarterback began it by leading the franchise to its first Super Bowl championship in 50 years, a game in which he cemented his status as the league's premier quarterback by rallying his team past the San Francisco 49ers in the second half and earning the MVP award on a warm February night in Miami.

Mahomes proceeded to sign a record-setting 10-year contract extension that could pay him nearly a half-billion dollars, yet managed to structure it so that the Chiefs could continue to afford talent around him. He used some of that money to buy a piece of the Kansas City Royals, allowing the son of former major league pitcher Pat Mahomes to fulfill a baseball itch and simultaneously endear himself to his adopted hometown on a whole new level.

He played in the celeb-studded American Century Championship, finishing in a respectable tie for 38th in Lake Tahoe. His social media following has grown exponentially. He's become the face of the NFL after just two full years as a starter.

"It's been a crazy time for sure," Mahomes said in a wide-ranging interview with The Associated Press. "The pandemic and the movements across our country — it's been different. We won the Super Bowl. That was awesome. The parade and everything, and then the world changed. You're able to step back and think about a lot of different stuff, and then go out there and try to be the best person you can be every single day."

That isn't just hyperbole. And make no mistake: The year hasn't just been one long party.

As the new player representative for the Chiefs, Mahomes had a major voice in negotiations between the NFL and its players' union on return-to-play protocols. He has expressed his support for the Black Lives Matter movement, and along with Chiefs safety Tyrann Mathieu, he has spearheaded a voter registration effort in Kansas City.

"I think the whole point of 2020 is you never know what's going to happen the next day," Mahomes said. "You try to do your part to make the world a better place. It's a different time in the world. You have to talk about these things."

All of which makes the confines of Arrowhead Stadium a sanctuary these days.

The Chiefs are entering the meat of training camp, with veterans joining the rookies and full-contact padded practices about a week away. The moment Mahomes walks through the doors — and gets his temperature checked and picks up his tracking device and all the other things that football in the age of COVID-19 entails — he can be just one of the guys for a couple of hours.

He can joke with his wide receivers. He can throw behind-the-back passes to offensive linemen. He can throw out the most audacious suggestions for coach Andy Reid, who quite often turns those thoughts into equally audacious plays.

"He brings a different energy, a different style to the game that even I was a little more accustomed to, just going out and playing ball in the backyard-type football," said Chiefs tight end Travis Kelce, one of Mahomes' best friends on the team. "I think it's a fun time to be a Kansas City Chief and it's because 15 is in the building, for sure."

Not just be a Kansas City Chief, but be a fan of the Kansas City Chiefs.

"It's exciting to know that he's going to be here forever," Chiefs offensive lineman Mitchell Schwartz said. "Obviously, the Royals ownership stake just cements him more into the city. There's a pretty special connection."

Mahomes is not exactly a reluctant superstar. He bought a Ferrari 812 Superfast, which has a starting list price of about $350,000. He spent the summer months embracing the boating life with his longtime girlfriend, Brittany Matthews.

He hasn't let all the trappings go to his head, though. He grew up around professional athletes, often trailing his dad into major league clubhouses. His down-to-earth parents have made it a point to keep their high-flying son grounded, as if his very nature would allow Mahomes to think he's better than anyone else.

"You know how he's wired," said Reid, who couldn't help but grin when asked about the Royals purchase. "He loves baseball, so it's a match. I joked with him that he can't play and do both, but he can be part-owner of one and play the other."

Now that training camp has begun, Mahomes insisted that his focus is squarely on football. Even with a pair of starters opting out in running back Damien Williams and offensive lineman Laurent Duvernay-Tardif, the Chiefs return 18 of 22 who started during their Super Bowl run, and expectations are high for a repeat — or three-peat, or four-peat, or five-peat.

Tyreek Hill and several other players have made such a run of championships their goal this offseason.

Mahomes is the unquestionable linchpin for the Chiefs becoming a Patriots-like dynasty

"Obviously winning the Super Bowl and how fun it was, the adversity and overcoming, we're trying to have that same mentality. We understand it's going to be hard," Mahomes said. "I think the biggest thing is just starting over. You start with a blank slate. You go through the process of being the best quarterback you can be every day. You accept the challenges."

Then you get back to work.

Matt McMullen

August 14, 2020

Chiefs.com

Travis Kelce gazed out across the crowd in the midst of his legendary speech at the Kansas City Chiefs' championship parade back in February. His words were both hilarious and powerful, punctuating a truly unforgettable celebration with an address nobody will soon forget.

"I just want to say I love you all," Kelce said as his words boomed from Union Station. "I love this team."

The speech fueled the party for the next several minutes, and as the confetti flew and Beastie Boys' lyrics were belted, Kelce's genuine affection for his home of seven years was clear as ever.

That love was demonstrated yet again six months later as Kelce signed a contract extension with the Chiefs on Friday that will keep the All-Pro tight end in Kansas City through the next six seasons. The move further positions the reigning Super Bowl Champions for a run at multiple titles, and for Kelce, it means he can continue to chase down all-time greatness in the red and gold.

In fact, it's not hyperbole to suggest that Kelce is already among the best to ever play his position in NFL history.

No tight end has ever amassed more than Kelce's 6,465 receiving yards through their first seven seasons in the league. He's the fastest tight end in NFL history to 500 catches – doing so in just 95 games – and with another 1,000-yard campaign in 2019, Kelce became the only tight end in the history of the game to reach the milestone in four-straight seasons.

The past two seasons, in particular, have been especially prolific. His 2,565 yards through the air are fifth among all players in that span, trailing only the New Orleans Saints' Michael Thomas, the Atlanta Falcons' Julio Jones, the Arizona Cardinals' DeAndre Hopkins and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers' Mike Evans.

His consistency in that time is equally remarkable, as Kelce has racked up at least 60 receiving yards in 26 of his last 32 regular-season games. For context, only Jones has accomplished that same feat since the beginning of the 2018 campaign.

And as unprecedented as the on-field exploits are, Kelce's desire to give back to the Kansas City community has been even more substantial. Through his foundation – Eighty-Seven & Running – Kelce has changed the lives of children and families throughout the metro, specifically through his support of Operation Breakthrough, where he helped open a robotics lab back in 2018.

The lab provides more than 300 area students with an educational opportunity that they would have never had otherwise and earned Kelce NFLPA Community MVP of the Week honors following its grand opening, adding yet another accolade to a career chock-full of them.

The Lombardi Trophy also joined that collection last season, as Kelce played an instrumental role in the Chiefs' three postseason double-digit comebacks with four touchdowns and 207 yards through the air. It all led to Kansas City's victory in Super Bowl LIV, which brings us back to Kelce's speech for the ages.

"This the most beautiful scene I have ever witnessed in my life," Kelce said as he wrapped up his remarks at the championship parade. "I love this city to death. I promise you, from here to the end, I cherish every moment with you all."

A contract extension now in hand, there are plenty of those moments left.

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Since they became teammates in 2017, Travis Kelce and Patrick Mahomes have had a small tradition reserved for when the Chiefs open their training camp. As a way of expressing their excitement for the new season, both men smile and laugh as Kelce, the star tight end, gives Mahomes, the superstar quarterback, a piggyback ride as they enter the practice fields.

One of the Chiefs' biggest bromances just happens to be one of the NFL's most dominant duos.

Over the past two seasons, Kelce has collected the most receptions from Mahomes' gifted right arm, and together, they led the Chiefs to their first Super Bowl victory in 50 seasons. Meanwhile, this summer has featured Kelce and Mahomes golfing together and they vacationed together in Nevada, as well as holding their usual workout sessions.

And now both players, before their summer concluded, made sure they remained co-workers — and piggyback partners — for several years.

Following Mahomes' contract extension last month, Kelce agreed Thursday to a four-year contract extension with the Chiefs worth $57.25 million, a source confirmed to The Athletic. The deal, which Kelce is expected to sign Friday, includes $28 million in guarantees.

When the Chiefs started camp, Kelce voiced his desire to play alongside Mahomes for the remainder of his career.

"I'm a big fan of Pat's," Kelce said of Mahomes, the reigning Super Bowl MVP, two weeks ago. "I think he's the best player in the NFL. You can't tell me there's a better quarterback than him, that's for sure. He led us to a Super Bowl because he is that. It's a fun time to be a Kansas City Chief, and it's because 15 is in the building."

Kelce's deal was the latest benchmark in a busy offseason for the franchise, as the Chiefs were able to accomplish their grand mission of keeping most of the team's star players together for this season and beyond. Just as Mahomes did last month with his historic 10-year extension, Kelce gave the Chiefs an advantage in terms of their salary cap sheet by not having his extension begin until after the 2021 season. Even when Kelce begins his extension, the Chiefs know he will not be the NFL's highest-paid player at his position, although he has the statistical production worthy of such a distinction.

Hours before Kelce agreed to his deal, star tight end George Kittle agreed to a five-year contract extension with the San Francisco 49ers that can bring him as much as $75 million — making him the league's highest-paid tight end — with $30 million guaranteed.

In late January, just before the Chiefs faced the 49ers in the Super Bowl, four NFL coordinators spoke to The Athletic to compare Kelce and Kittle.

"They are both outstanding," one coordinator said. "Kelce is probably the most difficult guy to defend, and part of that is, when you get ready to play them, you have to defend two routes. There is the route Kelce is running normally, then there is the one he runs after Mahomes starts moving in the pocket and scrambling and doing all that. You have a guy completely covered, then bang, the quarterback moves and he changes direction and he takes off. You are in a bind."

In the Super Bowl, Kelce statically outperformed Kittle. The six times Mahomes targeted Kelce led to six receptions for 43 yards, including a fourth-quarter touchdown. Kittle finished with four receptions on seven targets for 36 yards.

Throughout the Chiefs' postseason run, Kelce played at his best when the team was trailing, as he collected 19 receptions for 207 yards and four touchdowns.

"The biggest thing for us is just being who we are," Mahomes said of playing with Kelce before the Super Bowl. "That's something we do every day. We take advantage of every single rep, we let our personalities show and try to find a way to win in any way possible."

When Mahomes learned of Kelce's extension, he celebrated on his Twitter account by posting a GIF of himself jumping and patting his teammate's helmet after they connected for a touchdown during the 2018 season. Mahomes' message to his Twitter followers was just three words and seven exclamation marks: "6 MORE YEARS!!!!!!!"

On critical third-down plays, Mahomes relies most on Kelce, who is faster than linebackers and bigger than defensive backs while running smooth routes in the middle of the field. One way coach Andy Reid has maximized the talents of Kelce, who is listed at 6-foot-5 and 260 pounds, is by having the tight end line up as a receiver on the perimeter on more than one-fourth of his snaps last season, according to Pro Football Focus.

Such advantageous matchups have led Kelce to record, since 2017, 100 receptions in which he gained at least 15 yards, 31 more times than any other tight end during that stretch. As Mahomes enters the prime of his career, he and Reid are confident that Kelce will continue to be a reliable receiver, particularly in the red zone.

Kelce is also the first tight end in league history to record at least 1,000 receiving yards in four consecutive seasons.

"He's definitely one of the best I've ever played with, and I'm blessed to have him on this team," receiver Tyreek Hill said of Kelce last season. "He makes all of us better. He's passionate with everything that he does, and he loves the challenge."

For Kelce, the extension allows him to have a similar career as Tony Gonzalez, the Hall of Fame tight end who spent his first 12 seasons with the Chiefs. The two men have been friends throughout Kelce's eight-year career, and Gonzalez has always provided lessons and encouraged Kelce to accomplish more and build a greater legacy in Kansas City than even he did.

In 2018, Kelce broke one of the franchise's single-season records, which Gonzalez held, by recording 1,336 receiving yards during Mahomes' first season as the Chiefs' leading man. Kelce also broke Gonzalez's record for the most receptions (103) in a season. When last season ended, Kelce had captured what eluded Gonzalez's illustrious career: a Super Bowl victory.

If Kelce, 30, reaches the end of his extension, he will have played 13 seasons in a Chiefs uniform, becoming the longest-tenured player at the position in the franchise's history.

When thinking of his future two weeks ago, Kelce allowed himself only to consider how he could improve this season based on the conversations he has had with tight end assistant Tom Melvin.

"He's always harping on me to sharpen the tolls, get better at your strengths but also the weaknesses (because) we have to rise to the occasion," Kelce said of Melvin. "It's definitely a fun process, but getting better is a year-long thing. It's a career-long thing. You can never be satisfied with where you are."

Chiefs' Kelce to launch STEM project for underserved children

Tod Palmer

KSHB

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Chiefs tight end Travis Kelce is giving back to Kansas City's kids.

Fresh off signing a four-year contract extension, which will keep two-time All-Pro tight end with the Chiefs through the 2025 season, the 30-year-old Kelce announced Friday on social media that he is creating a STEM career program for inner-city children.

Through a partnership with Operation Breakthrough, Kelce's Eighty-Seven and Running Foundation is purchasing a building that will serve as the home for the Ignition Lab: Powered by 87&Running, Kelce said via Twitter in a post titled "Dear KC… from my heart!!!"

Kelce, a third-round pick by Kansas City in the 2013 NFL Draft, said he can't "begin to tell you how much this city means to me" and vowed to recommit to important "work I have left to do off the field."

The Ignition Lab provides Kelce's teen fans in underserved KCMO neighborhoods who are "navigating a world that doesn't always have their back" with "a co-working space where these teens will have the support, resources, and opportunity to explore careers in STEM, launch their own entrepreneurial ventures and gain real-world experience."

Operation Breakhtrough is excited about this new partnership and what this lab is going to bring to KC.

"We know for sure there is going to be a co-working space," Operation Breakthrough CEO Mary Esselman said. "We know we are working on a high school robotics practice field. One of the things we started when we opened the Makers City was our kids start coding at an early age. They are participating in robotics and we want to make sure we can continue that. We are hoping to have an electronics lab, a green tech lab."

Kelce, a five-time Pro Bowl selection, said he's grown to be "profoundly aware of the difference in opportunity, exposure, and privilege I grew up with compared to others."

He hopes this project helps bridge the gap for children in Kansas who lack the same opportunity, exposure and privilege.

"Where you live, the situation you were born into or the color of your skin should have no impact on the dreams you can dream," Kelce said. "And it's a beautiful thing when a kid's dream comes true," Kelce said.

Kelce, a member of the Pro Football Hall of Fame's All-2010s Team, would know after hoisting the Lombardi Trophy five months ago in Miami after the Chiefs' 31-20 victory in Super Bowl LIV.

He is the only tight end in NFL history with four consecutive 1,000-yard seasons and is the Chiefs' all-time leader with 5.3 receptions per game, while ranking second with 67.3 receiving yards per game in his career.

Kelce, who missed his rookie season with a knee injury, has managed to reach the Chiefs' all-time top five for career receptions (507) and receiving yards (6,465) in only six seasons and ranks sixth in franchise history with 37 career receiving touchdowns.

Why Chiefs rookie Clyde Edwards-Helaire is worth the hype

Adam Teicher

September 2, 2020

ESPN

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -- As a freshman at LSU in 2017, running back Clyde Edwards-Helaire received most of his playing time in practice against a defense loaded with future NFL players.

He would rush for just 31 yards during games that season, but thriving during those sessions against LSU's star-studded defense showed him he belonged. Over the next two seasons, Edwards-Helaire rushed for 1,916 yards and 24 total touchdowns before being drafted in the first round by the Kansas City Chiefs.

"My freshman year, I had guys across from me like Devin White and Arden Key, NFL-type caliber players on the defensive side of the ball and everything is pretty much live," Edwards-Helaire said. "It tends to just be fast. As far as coming here and making an adjustment, it was no real speed adjustment. The biggest adjustment is understanding what you have to do and what the details are and being a professional."

Edwards-Helaire arrived in Kansas City with plenty of hype. He was a star last season for LSU's national championship team and the first running back selected in the draft. By joining coach Andy Reid, quarterback Patrick Mahomes and one of the NFL's most imaginative and potent offensive teams, expectations on the field and in the world of fantasy football are already high.

In training camp, at least, he's lived up to those expectations. The Chiefs made him the featured back from the first snap of camp, and he looks like a fit. He has showed reliable hands, nifty moves and the ability to stay on his feet after contact.

"He's a hard worker," Mahomes said. "I think that's the first thing you can see from Day 1. He's always wanting to learn more. He's always wanting to get in every single rep they get him in and he's someone that's gotten better every single day, so I'm excited to have him, adapt him and evolve him more and more in the offense. And as he learns more, he'll progress and have more success every single day."

Edwards-Helaire was a significant part of the Chiefs' offensive plans from the moment he was drafted. He became a bigger figure shortly before camp started, when Damien Williams, the Chiefs' leading rusher last season and one of the stars of Super Bowl LIV, opted out of the season because of COVID-19 concerns.

Williams' decision was a significant one for the Chiefs, but the ground did not shift below Edwards-Helaire.

"I've always been a guy that felt like I just needed to be 100 percent tuned in from the beginning," Edwards-Helaire said. "I didn't have to flip a switch and feel like, 'Oh, now is the time.' Since the day I was drafted, I felt like, 'Get this playbook, start rolling and do my job.' There was never really a shell-shocking moment for me."

That doesn't mean Edwards-Helaire doesn't understand what he's walking into with the Chiefs.

"He's very hard on himself, and that can be good and bad," running backs coach Deland McCullough said. "He's somebody who is a perfectionist, who wants to have perfect practices. You know it would be nice to say you're going to have those, but you're not going to have those all the time, so you need to be able to take the good with the bad, but more in his case, take the bad and move forward. That's something we're really working on him with: 'Hey, you just got to play to the next play.'

"But very impressed with his demeanor, his approach to the game, things he does on the field, and he will correct himself even if there's something that goes off the rails. He'll come off and say, 'Man, I was supposed to run this,' or 'I should've looked the other way.' He's somebody who's constantly self-checking himself."

Nowhere is being on point as important as it is in pass protection, where Edwards-Helaire must pick up the blitz to give Mahomes time to throw. There's a lot to know: First comes the technique, then there's recognizing who's coming and from where, and then there's learning the Chiefs' blocking scheme. Reid doesn't always trust rookies with the job, but offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy said he's satisfied with Edwards-Helaire's efforts.

"He understands the importance," Bieniemy said. "If you don't protect the quarterback, you can't play."

A preseason game or two could have allowed Edwards-Helaire to prove his ability as a blocker at live speed, but that's not an option in 2020. The last rookie feature back for the Chiefs, Kareem Hunt in 2017, earned regular-season playing time by knocking a pass-rusher off his feet during a preseason game.

"He's a real smart kid, so he's picking it up," Reid said. "He wants to be good, so that's a good combination to have, and he has the talent to go with it. He's strong. He's short, but he's strong. So he gets himself in good position with his quickness and his leverage and does a good job of protection. He has a pretty good base of what's going on with it -- who's coming, who the offensive line has and his responsibility. Reps will continue to help that."

The specific life experiences that prepped Patrick Mahomes for stardom with the Chiefs

Sam Mellinger

September 3, 2020

KC Star

Patrick Mahomes has this memory from a fight with his dad. This was years ago. Patrick was a kid. Six years old, maybe. His dad was a big-league pitcher with the Rangers. Father and son, playing baseball together, and they both had ideas.

Pat wanted Patrick to hit off the tee. Patrick thought that was dumb. A waste of time. Because he was 6 now, you see, and he didn't need the tee anymore.

"Just throw me the ball," he remembers telling his dad. "I can hit the ball off you now. I don't need to hit off the tee."

Then son followed dad to work. This is how he spent the summers, quality time, but also noticing what the best in the world do to get there and stay there. Which is when Patrick knew his dad was right, because right there in front of him, three or so hours before the game, was Alex Rodriguez hitting off a dang tee.

"Right then," Mahomes said, "I knew, 'Man, if he can do it and he's a superstar, then I can do it if I'm just getting to kid-pitch,' or whatever it was."

This is about when you realize that Patrick Mahomes was made for this. We've been over most of the story, traced nearly all the steps from childhood baseball star, to three-star quarterback recruit with one major offer, to NFL MVP and the league's most important player.

You can probably recite some of this. Playing baseball helped with his arm angles. Basketball helped with creativity. His dad and godfather being big-league pitchers showed him leadership. Andy Reid helped with a plan and structure.

But take two steps to the side. Tilt your head a bit. Look at this from a slightly different angle and you'll see one more fundamental truth about how this all came to be.

Think about Mahomes' dad and godfather. The good stuff isn't just that they allowed a window into the world of professional sports at a young age. The extra benefit — what put the experience over the top — was the specific window provided by those two men.

The two most important male influences in Mahomes' life spent a combined 32 seasons in the major leagues, nearly all of it in middle relief, never leading a league in a meaningful stat, never being selected to an All-Star Game.

Put another way: Mahomes is a supernatural talent whose primary male influences were grinders. He has the physical and mental gifts of a superstar, driven with the work and focus of someone desperate to just make the team.

"That definitely did help," Mahomes said. "Just seeing, like you said, the grind. Seeing how you have to try to find a way to make yourself better. Seeing how you have to really take advantage of every single little opportunity in order to live out your dream. That definitely helped a ton, for me, not taking anything for granted."

Pat was once among the Twins' top prospects and debuted in the big leagues at 21. But Pat's ascent stalled, and when the Red Sox released him five years later he had a 5.88 career ERA and no big-league offers.

He went to Japan, humbled, then worked his way back for another chance. He earned it, too, pitching parts of five more seasons — the years Patrick celebrated his fourth through eighth birthdays. Important years.

Think about that: early success, then a long stall, rejection, lots of work and more success on the other side. That's a heck of a model for a young kid wanting to be a professional athlete.

"Exactly," Pat said. "My route (to the big leagues) was fairly easy. Then things went kind of bad for a year and a half or two years. He got the experience that. He got to see it first hand."

LaTroy Hawkins' career is even more extreme. He pitched 21 years — only nine men in history have appeared in more games — and was his team's full-time closer in just two. Of the 19 pitchers who debuted after World War II and spent more time in the big leagues, all made All-Star games, and 11 are in the Hall of Fame.

Hawkins had shoulder surgery at age 37, and either side of that — surgery or age — has ended many careers. Hawkins came back, though, with a 3.08 ERA while averaging more than 50 appearances over his last five seasons before retiring at 42.

Again, a heck of a model for a young mind — historic longevity and consistent production without the margin for error enjoyed by, say, Nolan Ryan's fastball or Bert Blyleven's curve.

"He saw the work I put in," Hawkins said. "I was always on him about putting in the same work. He wasn't one of those young men you had to pound it in and keep on him about. Once you told him about it and he knew it was going to benefit him, he was all in. All in."

Mahomes certainly isn't the first child to learn from an athlete parent, and he's not the first to pair elite athleticism with maniacal work. But his story is different than many others because of the path taken, with all that time spent around professional athletes as a kid and the fact that his personal recognition came late.

Some of that is by choice. Mahomes decided to take what everyone thought would be his more difficult athletic path, the one away from baseball and toward football. He arrived in the NFL as something of a quarterback outsider: no Elite 11 camps as a kid, only one interested Power Five school out of high school and second-team All-Big 12 honors his last year at Texas Tech.

Maybe that helps drive the work, too. He learned from his dad's rise and fall and rise again. He saw what Hawkins did to stay in the big leagues for two decades.

This wasn't supposed to be Mahomes' life, this life as a quarterback. He was a baseball player. Then the product of a gimmick offense. Then his footwork was a mess.

Those things can be fuel. He believed in himself as a quarterback when most believed he was making a mistake. Now that everyone can see he was right, he has a lifetime's worth of preparation to make sure they never forget.

Chiefs QB Patrick Mahomes is well-equipped to be the face of not only KC, but the NFL

Herbie Teope

September 6, 2020

KC Star

In the short span since he entered the league in 2017, Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes has become a star among stars.

Or as one NFL team executive outside of Kansas City said of the Chiefs signal-caller: "The Michael Jordan of this era."

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, Mahomes is that big.

Being the new face of the NFL sounds like a lot to absorb, especially for a young man who turns just 25 on Sept. 17, but dealing with the bright spotlight on center stage, well, the young quarterback takes it in stride.

"I don't think of it as added pressure," Mahomes said. "That's the same mindset that I've had since I was a little kid, is I want to go out and be the best in whatever it was, and I'm going to go out there with that mentality every single day."

The plan is working so far, and it's helped Mahomes stay grounded since exploding on the scene in 2018, his first season as a full-time starter in the NFL.

Since then, his list of on-field accomplishments has only grown: leading the Chiefs to their first Super Bowl win in 50 years; being named MVP of Super Bowl LIV; and winning the NFL's MVP award in 2018. Mahomes, the fastest player in NFL history to reach 7,500 career passing yards, holds a 23-7 record as a starter having compiled 9,128 yards and 76 touchdowns with 17 interceptions over the past two seasons.

The Chiefs rewarded their quarterback handsomely in July with a blockbuster 10-year contract extension worth up to $503 million, a deal that keeps Mahomes in Kansas City through 2031.

But he didn't get to this point on talent alone.

HELLO, MEGA-STARDOM

From Tom Brady, to Aaron Rodgers, to Adrian Peterson, to J.J.. Watt, to Von Miller and Aaron Donald and Larry Fitzgerald, among so many others, the NFL over the past decade has seen many high-profile superstars.

And pure physical skills can get a player to the top of his game.

But Mahomes seems different. A high level of dedication to his craft, combined with hard work and those amazing physical traits, separate him from the pack.

"You look at him and you go, 'Well, he's natural,'" Chiefs coach Andy Reid said. "Well, no. He does have some natural ability, but he works at it. He's not just complacent with where he's at. He's always working on his game.

"The hours he spends going over the plays when he's away from the building, it's a tribute to the kid. He's completely dedicated to it. I just think for young kids coming up — college kids, high school, the youth leagues — that this guy goes about it the right way, and it's fun to watch."

Mahomes also has a willingness to listen, a trait Reid emphasized when explaining how his quarterback's character allows him to continue learning.

Reid drew on his extensive coaching career to offer this comparison when discussing Mahomes' humble nature.

"I'll go back to Reggie White, who is a phenomenal Hall of Famer, and really Brett Favre," Reid said. "These guys, when I was young in the league, I just noticed that the great ones want you to give them one more thing to even be greater than they already are.

"And they're very humble that way, and they always continue to learn. That's the process in which Pat goes. He wants you to coach him."

In addition to humility and a ceaseless work ethic, Mahomes possesses a desire to embrace competition, and the instinct to tackle it head-first. Those attributes remind Chiefs defensive line coach Branden Daly of the five seasons he spent around Brady and the New England Patriots (2014-18).

Daly said he isn't keen on player comparisons, but he thinks Brady and Mahomes share an important characteristic.

"The one thing that would stand out to me is their competitive fire and the way they approach the game, the way they bring energy each and every day to their teammates," Daly said. "I have a tremendous amount of respect and I'm happy and fortunate for the opportunity to share the same field and same team as them."

Chiefs quarterbacks coach Mike Kafka, who crossed paths with Brady and Peterson during his playing career, agreed.

"The thing that Pat brings is his competitive spirit is incredible," Kafka said. "He's able to lift and build up the guys that are in that huddle, build himself up as well with his confidence. I think that right there — his competitive spirit — that's what separates him and that's what makes him great."

So talent, work ethic, humility and competitive fire are just some of the ingredients that makes Mahomes who he is on the football field. But even that elite combination of traits might fall short of greatness if not for what he's done to ensure there's always a quality support group around him.

"It's a thing where it's going to take a lot of people around me, as well," he said. "I'm trying to surround myself with a lot of great people, and then I feel like the Kansas City Chiefs organization is surrounding me with a lot of great teammates."

NEW GENERATION

It wasn't too long ago that Brady, Rodgers, Drew Brees and Peyton Manning were the NFL's quarterback elites.

Brady, Rodgers and Brees are still playing, but now it's Mahomes, Russell Wilson, Lamar Jackson, Deshaun Watson, Dak Prescott and even an emerging Kyler Murray who are commanding the headlines.

And what the latter group has in common isn't lost on Wilson.

"For me, when I came in the league there weren't too many short quarterbacks, first of all," Wilson said. "There weren't too many Black quarterbacks that were starting, not many in the league, to be honest with you. I've had other guys before me that have played, that gave me the opportunity and allowed me to be able to play this game.

"I never take that for granted, and I'm so grateful for that. So, for me, I believe and I hope that I opened up doors for other guys, other young kids who want to be great at something despite their circumstances or what people may say you can and cannot do. And hopefully I continue to do that."

When told of Wilson's comments, Mahomes nodded.

"You open the door not only for Black quarterbacks, but quarterbacks of every single race that haven't had those same opportunities that I've had in the past," Mahomes said. "I think it just shows that you can't put someone in a certain position based on the color of their skin or where they come from.

"You really listen, kind of like anything else in the world. You really just know who that person is, what aspirations they have and how they can really lead the team. I'm just excited you see the change going on in the NFL, and hopefully it can transition to the rest of the world."

Before Mahomes was named league MVP in 2018, just two Black quarterbacks had been so honored since The Associated Press launched the award in 1957: Steve McNair, who was named co-MVP with Manning in 2003, and Cam Newton in 2015.

Now, the NFL has seen two Black quarterbacks earn MVP in consecutive years: Jackson won in 2019. Additionally, in the recent NFL Network's Top 100 List, as voted by players around the league, three Black quarterbacks made the overall top five: Jackson at No. 1, Wilson No. 2 and Mahomes No. 4.

Has the NFL finally reached a place where skin color and skills stereotypes no longer matter?

Chiefs offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy thinks so.

"You have to understand, I grew up in a day and age where I watched James Harris and Doug Williams do it at a high level," Bieniemy said. "But watching these young guys, these young gunners, they're obviously African-American quarterbacks and they've done a hell of a job.

"But ... it's time to stop labeling. If these guys can play the position, let them play. The only thing you want is to give people an opportunity to be at their best. Those kids have done a great job of relishing everything."

While Mahomes appreciates this shift in how Black quarterbacks are viewed, he maintains that there's still work to be done.

"I think we're getting close," Mahomes said. "I think you see the change in football the last few seasons. You're seeing guys can play the sport in many different ways. It's not the thing, 'Oh, he's a Black quarterback; he's a running quarterback.' You're seeing guys that are sitting in the pocket making those throws, you're seeing guys that are running, you're seeing guys that are athletic. You're seeing now it's just a person playing."

EMBRACING RESPONSIBILITY

Much like Jordan did during his decorated playing career in the NBA, Mahomes wields power now. And it's not limited to the city for which he plays.

Look no further than Mahomes' involvement with an NFL player-led video calling for change in the wake of George Floyd's death in Minneapolis. His participation in the viral video, which drew the support of Reid and Chiefs chairman and CEO Clark Hunt, led to a phone call with NFL commissioner Roger Goodell about Black Lives Matter. Soon after the players' video debuted, Goodell issued his own video supporting the movement.

Mahomes' community presence in Kansas City is embodied in his "15 and the Mahomies Foundation," which is dedicated to helping children and has donated $225,000 to local charities.

Mahomes also joined the Royals' ownership group, becoming the youngest part-owner of a major professional sports team in history. He's also involved in helping to spur voter registration ahead of this fall's general election.

While he carries a lot of responsibilities on the field as the quarterback of a Super Bowl-championship football team, Mahomes embraces the opportunities this role presents and uses his platform to effect positive change.

The face of the Chiefs franchise and, increasingly, the NFL takes none of this lightly.

"To be in the situation that I'm in, I'm not going to take it for granted," Mahomes said. "I'm going to execute and do whatever I can every single day so that I can say I have no regrets when I'm done with my career."

'Patrick's a unicorn': Mahomes' intellectual skills are what make him unique

Nate Taylor

September 10, 2020

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Every prominent member of the Kansas City Chiefs has watched and rewatched the moment that began their thrilling comeback victory over the San Francisco 49ers in Super Bowl 54.

Andy Reid, the future Hall of Fame coach, has the design of the play — Gun, trey right, three jet, chip wasp, Y funnel — on one of his newest T-shirts. General manager Brett Veach, who has framed artwork of the play in his home, has watched the play more than 100 times, always marveling at what led to the play's result, an impressive 44-yard completion. The man who threw the ball, superstar quarterback Patrick Mahomes, not only remembers everything that led to such a career-defining highlight, but he also knows how and why he was the person who suggested perhaps the most memorable play in the franchise's history.

The more Mahomes has reflected on the play, the less he thinks about what his gifted right arm accomplished to stun the 49ers. He instead considers the play one of many mental breakthroughs from last season that proved his steady advancement toward becoming a legendary quarterback.

"You have to have the perfect scenario," Mahomes said, "for that play to work."

The situation — a 3rd-and-15 from the Chiefs' 35-yard line while trailing 10 points in the fourth quarter — is a dire one for most NFL quarterbacks. But during the 49ers' challenge before the play, Mahomes was able to process the scenario and solve one of the sport's hardest equations to put the Chiefs in an advantageous position.

He did this in four seconds.

With the NFL Films cameras on him, Mahomes began a conversation with offensive coordinator Eric Bieniemy and backup quarterback Matt Moore. Mahomes then looked back at the field, his brain visualizing one of the Chiefs' 300-plus plays. He turned back to Bieniemy to ask a question: "Do we have time to run Wasp?"

In calling for the play, Mahomes calculated that his offensive linemen could block the 49ers' fierce pass rushers just long enough for a deep pass. Based on his film study, Mahomes knew the 49ers weren't going to blitz. And Mahomes knew star receiver Tyreek Hill, the league's fastest player, needed at least four seconds to get open when running a 25-yard "dangle" route, a double-route that combines a deep cross and a corner.

"That will live on forever," Mahomes said of his superb play call, the equivalent of calling his shot.

Mahomes and the Chiefs, however, believe more such plays will occur this season. As the Chiefs begin their quest — starting with Thursday's opener against the Houston Texans — to become repeat champions, one of the most difficult feats in professional sports, Mahomes fully understands he's entering the prime of his already remarkable career. He believes another improvement in his performance in his fourth season will be the byproduct of his mental progress, perhaps giving the Chiefs their greatest schematic advantage yet.

A month after the Super Bowl, Mahomes said as much to a group of celebrities when he appeared on HBO's "The Shop," explaining that he didn't fully know how to read opposing defenses, and identify certain tendencies, until midway through last season.

Reid, an offensive innovator, had already built a potent offense when Mahomes became the starter two years ago. Mahomes, though, bolstered Reid's offense with his rare collection of skills — arm strength, vision, mobility, creativity and improvisation — in racking up 50 touchdown passes in 2018. In his 29 years in the NFL, with 22 as a head coach, Reid has helped develop several star quarterbacks, including Brett Favre, Donovan McNabb, Michael Vick and Alex Smith.

When considering all the tasks and responsibilities placed on the position, Reid knows the truth when comparing Mahomes to his previous quarterbacks when they began their fourth season.

"I'd probably tell you he's ahead," Reid said of Mahomes. "Brett Favre ran the option in high school. Pat Mahomes (threw) the football (almost) every play in college. In high school, he was doing the same type of thing.

"But on top of that, you get this kid that wants to be the best, is willing to work at it, wants you to give them information and is very intelligent. And he's a good leader. He has the full package, but you're still going to see growth."

Every important person in Mahomes' life agrees that he has always been a prodigy, someone whose thoughts, ideas and problem-solving ability are advanced for his age, and that's still the case with the 24-year-old.

Yet Mahomes provides an added bonus: He has excelled in using his role and voice to motivate his teammates to be at their best with him during the most critical moments of games. Chiefs owner Clark Hunt acknowledged after last season that Mahomes' ability to know exactly what to say to his teammates, especially before the team rallied from double-digit deficits in three playoff games, astonishes him just as much as the imaginative completions.

Mahomes knew every word he said in the huddle helped the Chiefs execute their wasp play. He first instructed his teammates to stay in the huddle longer than usual. Once he told everyone the play, Mahomes spent a few seconds encouraging Hill, who misplayed a ball in the third quarter that led to an interception. Then Mahomes looked and pointed at receiver Sammy Watkins, non-verbally asking him to work hard to attract multiple 49ers. In practices before the Super Bowl, Mahomes didn't throw the ball much to Watkins, who ran a deep square-in.

"I knew, in that situation, he was going to be far enough downfield that he would be around the first-down (marker) as well," Mahomes said of Watkins. "If that corner (Emmanuel Moseley) didn't sink off, I was able to have a guy I could throw to that could make a play in a big-time (moment). I just wanted to make sure he knew that, that he's as big a part of the play as anybody. He got guys to cover him and got Tyreek open."

Mahomes backpedaled an additional 9 yards from the shotgun after the ball was snapped to create enough time for his offensive linemen and Hill. Then Mahomes launched the ball, which traveled 57.1 yards in the air, his longest completed pass by air distance of the season.

When Veach rewatches the play, he believes it's the best example of Mahomes fusing his exceptional athleticism with his mental mastery.

"We take it for granted now because he has an uncanny feel for the game," Veach said of the Chiefs. "His awareness is at such an elite level that it ties all these things together. He's able to have all these people and all this pressure and all this stimulus around him and still play with that mindset, like he's back in the backyard."

Amidst the Chiefs' celebration after the Super Bowl, Mahomes made sure to hug and thank his parents, Pat and Randi, for how they raised him and for being the first ones to notice his keen intellect.

The first time it was apparent to those who knew him that Mahomes was different intellectually, he was at Shea Stadium in New York.

It was in the summer of 2000, likely a few months before he turned 5 (on Sept. 17). Mahomes spent plenty of time that year at the New York Mets' former ballpark watching his father, a veteran right-handed reliever, pitch. After shagging balls in the outfield during the team's batting practice, Patrick and his mother usually watched the games in a lounge for family members and friends of players. To this day, Patrick still recalls the room being filled with toys and activities, which enticed and maintained the attention of most children.

"I would just sit there and watch the game," he said. "I was so interested in seeing the game, seeing what was going on and looking at the count and I'd understand how the pitcher was pitching.

"Now watching my little sister and watching other kids that other guys have around, I don't see other kids thinking that same way as I did when I was a little kid."

By that summer, Pat and Randi let young Patrick learn as much as he could about baseball and what made professional ballplayers successful. Mahomes asked questions in the clubhouse, he watched some of the superstars of that era — Derek Jeter, Mike Piazza and Alex Rodriguez, among others — go through their pregame routines and he spent hours in the outfield trying to catch each fly ball in a different, creative way.

Pat and Randi learned quickly that Patrick always wanted to challenge himself to see what he could accomplish, whether it was by learning to play as many sports as he could or by allowing him to be in youth leagues with and against older children. Randi nicknamed Patrick "The Energizer Bunny." Yet she and Pat watched their son pitch shutouts, make game-winning shots in basketball and score goals in bunches in soccer because he grasped the strategy and mechanics of the sports quicker than other children.

In addition to his parents, Patrick has been mentored by LaTroy Hawkins, his godfather, who pitched in the major leagues for 21 seasons. The surprise, Hawkins said, was when Patrick, either with schoolwork or as an athlete, had to be taught a particular lesson a second time.

"His mind is incredible," Hawkins said of Mahomes. "He doesn't think like other athletes. He's in that upper echelon. (Michael) Jordan is my favorite athlete, and (his) mentality is completely different from everybody else's. That was recognized in Patrick at a very young age.

"Telling him to study like you tell other kids to study is, like, a waste of time. Just let him see it and he has it. His mind is so broad that it's amazing that he's able to keep up with everything."

One reason is because Patrick Mahomes has a photographic memory.

Pat, Randi and Hawkins wanted to help cultivate that trait in Mahomes by empowering him to always think in a creative manner. Success, they told him, could be captured in many ways. After many of his games, Mahomes would be interviewed by his parents and Hawkins, the trio asking him questions, big and small, for him to have better comprehension on how to improve. Even Mahomes sometimes can't pinpoint the exact reason why he became so smart so young.

"It's just kind of a mixture of everybody that I've been around in my entire life," he said. "It's hard to explain. It's how I've always thought. It's still the same today."

In fourth grade, Mahomes was paired with Bobby Stroupe, his trainer who is the founder and president of ATHLETE Performance Enhancement Center (APEC). In more than 20 years, Stroupe has trained close to 30 professional athletes, in six different sports, from when they were in elementary school. Mahomes, though, has always been a unique athlete for Stroupe.

The first principle of their training sessions was creativity. Almost every drill and workout needed to create an environment that encouraged Mahomes to use his imagination since his creativity was further developed than his fundamentals.

"I'm not a quarterback coach," Stroupe said. "Most people look at something and say, 'OK, the way this works is A to B. Patrick's brain doesn't really work that way. He's a problem-solver, but he's open. He doesn't have any bias on how the problem is solved."

Together, they agreed on the same philosophy when Mahomes wanted to be Whitehouse (Texas) High's quarterback for his junior season: He didn't have to be textbook or robotic to lead his team to victory.

One of the best discoveries Mahomes made on the field is that extending plays by scrambling felt similar to when he was on the basketball court as Whitehouse's point guard. Eventually, as Mahomes learned, one of his teammates would almost always get open. Before Mahomes commanded Whitehouse's air-raid offense, the team had relied on prototypical pocket passers who could complete throws in rhythm within the structure of how the play is designed.

Stroupe worked to nurture Patrick's arm strength while refining his ability to make off-platform passes so that the techniques could feel comfortable during games. In a 2012 game against John Tyler High (Tyler, Texas), Stroupe watched Mahomes do what has become almost expected these days, a scrambling, one-footed deep pass for a long completion.

"I heard a random dad say, 'He needs to just throw the ball and quit running around!'" Stroupe said of that night. "I thought, 'You just have no idea what you just saw.' It's funny what the eyes see. Some people think something's a mess, and you see something extraordinary."

Stroupe knows athletes must be confident to succeed. But Mahomes is different, Stroupe said, because he has never become arrogant. During his college career at Texas Tech, Mahomes disagreed with analysts and NFL evaluators who believed his uncommon playing style — he was labeled as a high-risk gunslinger — would be the reason he wouldn't become a star. Mahomes told Stroupe he wanted to keep pushing the limits of what a quarterback can do. Behind their calculated decision, Stroupe has yet to find Mahomes' maximum capabilities, both physical and intellectual.

Mahomes, meanwhile, has always made his most passionate plans work.

"Honestly, I mean, I've thought I was going to be a professional athlete since the moment I can remember," Mahomes said. "I've always believed that if you put in the work and that you put in the time, you could be here, in the NFL or whatever professional sport that is. I'm not trying to sound cocky or too confident, but that's just how my mindset has always been.

"It's gotten me to where I'm at today."

Since he joined the Chiefs in 2017, Mahomes and Stroupe have given each offseason a theme. Last year, their sessions were about resiliency. The idea was for Mahomes to train in an unorthodox manner that ensured he would move better around and out of the pocket in December, January and early February.

Mahomes' inspiration wasn't from a former NFL star quarterback — he wanted to follow the mentality of an NBA legend.

"I look back at guys like Kobe Bryant," Mahomes said. "They talk about how they practice these shots for the one moment that they have to do them. You can do that in football, as far as preparing yourself for every single look."

Using pneumatic resistance equipment, Stroupe can track Mahomes' rotational and lower-body power in coordination with the Chiefs' training staff. Stroupe can give Mahomes a specific number of repetitions to reach — with different percentages of his maximum lift or with how quickly he can finish the drill — when doing a power squat. Stroupe has always seen Mahomes reach the goal.

"He's done it so many times in front of so many people, it just blows their mind," Stroupe said of Mahomes. "That's one of the best ways to elevate Patrick. Put something in front of him that he's not certain that he can do, and he's going to elevate himself and go get it."

Mahomes and Stroupe felt they accomplished their goals before last season began. Neither man, though, anticipated that Mahomes would sustain a left ankle injury, one that Stroupe felt was more significant than most people realized, in Week 1 of the regular season. Suddenly, the theme of the season for Mahomes was about showing his resilience.

In the Chiefs' seventh game against the Denver Broncos, he sustained the biggest injury of his career: a dislocated right kneecap.

While Mahomes missed two starts, Reid was in awe of how he continued to work, spending hours watching film while receiving as much treatment as he could from the Chiefs' medical staff. When Mahomes' returned to the field in Week 10 vs. the Titans, he didn't scramble around the pocket or run to gain additional rushing yards. But in rewatching the film from that game — which was the last time the Chiefs lost — Reid could tell Mahomes' thought process when progressing through his reads was improving.

By the middle of December, Mahomes had regained his usual athletic form. He threw for 340 passing yards and two touchdowns in the snow in a home victory over the Broncos. Yet one play in the game foreshadowed to the coaching staff that Mahomes was going to start overwhelming opposing defenses with his mind as much as feet and right arm. On a 3rd-and-7, the Broncos showed a Cover-2 look before blitzing two cornerbacks and a linebacker along with a variation of a Cover-0 in the secondary. Mahomes recognized the blitz, backpedaled an additional 7 yards from the shotgun and was still able to connect with receiver Mecole Hardman on a pass near the sideline for a 10-yard completion.

The lone time Mahomes had seen the Broncos unleash such a blitz earlier last season was against the Indianapolis Colts, and quarterback Jacoby Brissett threw an incompletion on the third-down play.

"The hours he spends going over the plays when he's away from the building, it's a tribute to the kid and he's completely dedicated to it," Reid said of Mahomes. "He's blessed with great vision. He has a mind that is decisive with decision-making. He's blessed with this, but he also works tremendously hard at the job."

Another mental trick Mahomes employed was positioning his head in a certain direction to psychologically manipulate linebackers and safety in the middle of the field. On some plays, Mahomes appeared to stare at a defender, sometimes as long as a second, to get that player to freeze before passing the ball to an open receiver. He also completed 12 of his 16 pass attempts for 255 yards on third-down plays when the Chiefs needed at least 15 yards for a first down. Three of those completions resulted in touchdowns.

In the Chiefs' two playoff victories prior to the Super Bowl, Mahomes played the best football of his life, which didn't surprise Stroupe, Reid or Bieniemy. Fully healthy, and with more experience against certain defensive strategies, Mahomes made the proper protection calls and often thwarted the man and zone coverages the Texans and Tennessee Titans used by finding the most favorable passing matchup.

Mahomes was the Chiefs' leading rusher in both games while producing 615 passing yards, eight touchdowns and zero turnovers. Even when the Titans called one of their best defensive plays, double-teaming Hill and star tight end Travis Kelce, Mahomes became aware that his legs were the Chiefs' best answer, as he escaped the pocket and evaded multiple defenders for a sensational 27-yard rushing touchdown.

"We didn't see him playing good football for him again until the playoffs," Stroupe said. "That's just a fact."

One of Mahomes' favorite moments in the postseason was when his mind, in the middle of a play against the Texans, realized that Kelce was going to adjust his route before he actually made a cutback toward the middle of the field. Mahomes released the ball before Kelce turned back to make the reception, both players ad-libbing at the same time. When the offense returned to the sideline after scoring a touchdown, Kelce approached Mahomes to ask a question: How did Mahomes know what his teammate was doing at the exact moment as he was doing it?

"I really didn't," Mahomes said, looking back on the play. "I just did it. I just let it go. That's just the instincts that I have."

In his last three games, Mahomes performed at such a brilliant level that he guided the Chiefs, through his vocal leadership and intelligence, to improbable victories. They erased a 24-0 deficit against the Texans in one quarter. The Chiefs won all three games after trailing by 10 or more points in the postseason, a first in NFL history. And with quarterback legends — such as Tom Brady, Joe Montana, John Elway and Peyton Manning — looking on, Mahomes orchestrated a 21-point barrage in the final nine minutes against the 49ers, the most points ever in the fourth quarter of a Super Bowl.

Earlier this year, as they began another phase of their training sessions, Mahomes gave Stroupe a gift.

The item was one of Mahomes' game-worn jerseys from last season. Mahomes' written message wasn't about their workouts or how Stroupe improved his body over the years to help him become a champion.

"Thanks," Mahomes wrote, "for believing in me."

Three days before the Super Bowl, Kurt Warner presented his theory on Mahomes. As a Hall of Fame quarterback, a two-time MVP winner and a Super Bowl champion with the St. Louis Rams, Warner felt he had watched enough film of Mahomes, in just 35 games, to make a rather bold statement.

"I wonder if we've never seen an entire package like what we've seen with Patrick," Warner said then. "He's got the freaky athleticism and arm talent, like Aaron Rodgers. He's got the ability to be accurate and play in the pocket, like other great quarterbacks. The thing for me that separates him, too, is his ability to creatively see the game, which is very unique. Only a few guys have been able to do that.

"There's the potential for him to be the most complete quarterback we may have ever seen in this game."

Warner predicted that Mahomes was going to have an incredible offseason this summer, a time in which the Chiefs could continue to explore and expand their offensive playbook. Anything, Warner said, could be possible for Mahomes.

Before Mahomes returned to work for the Chiefs' offseason program, the NFL had to alter its business amid the coronavirus pandemic. The Chiefs held remote meetings and Mahomes gave his input to Reid on new plays from his new home in Dallas.

By staying in the Dallas area for most of the spring and early summer, Mahomes and Stroupe spent more time together than usual. One of the themes for their sessions was on adaptability. Stroupe's force-vector training focused on Mahomes being able to have power and strength in at least eight different directions — eight different lunges, hops, leaps and jumps. Then Mahomes worked to polish eight different directional throws.

"You'd be hard-pressed to find an athlete in any professional sport that has improved as much as (Mahomes) has in the last six years," Stroupe said. "This is as lean and as athletic as he's ever been. I saw him beat a linebacker in a 10-yard sprint that ran a 4.5 (40-yard dash) at the combine."

An unconventional drill put Mahomes in position to make what Stroupe calls locomotion throws. That is when Mahomes passes the ball in an asymmetrical movement pattern, as one side of his body does one motion while the other side of his body does something else.

When Stroupe shouted to instruct that the ball be released to a receiver, he then timed Mahomes — who either skipped, backpedaled or did a spin move at the time — to see how quick the ball left his right hand.

"This creates a sense of urgency, and he's got to creatively solve the problem," Stroupe said of Mahomes. "When we start doing those things, and mixing it up with running backward and turning and throwing to a target you haven't seen, and you start making him do leaps in eight different directions and throw the ball in the leap, then it becomes a lot more second-nature and it's feeding that talent and those gifts that are already there.

"I've trained NFL quarterbacks that I would never do those drills with. Look, Patrick's a unicorn."

During the Chiefs' training camp, several members of the team recognized that Mahomes showed a greater understanding of the playbook. Mike Kafka, a former NFL quarterback and the Chiefs' quarterbacks assistant, said Mahomes almost always knows all the multiple answers he has, as counter moves, on plays based on what the opposing defense will present. Several veteran players have seen Reid and Mahomes talk through ideas and new plays so much that the Chiefs' offense should no longer be labeled as just Reid's creation.

"You can just tell that wherever he's been (this past offseason), his mind has been in football," right tackle Mitchell Schwartz said of Mahomes. "He's looking really sharp. It's exciting."

Similar to Warner, Bieniemy also has a theory as to why Mahomes will continue his metamorphosis as a quarterback this season.

"He's a great kid, but he's a competitive prick," Bieniemy said. "He wants to improve at everything he possibly can improve upon. He just wants to work, and that's what you love about being around him."

Beyond attempting to find new ways to throw the ball, or even executing the new plays that illustrate his collaboration with Reid, Mahomes is most eager this season to showcase his enhanced ability to make pre-snap adjustments. No longer does Mahomes just want to display his superiority over his opponents through his physicality or improvisation. He plans to exhibit the newfound mastery he has worked to attain.

"This year should be special, God willing," Stroupe said of Mahomes. "He's in a great place mentally."

It's just one week, but Clyde Edwards-Helaire looks like a difference-maker for Chiefs

The most exhilarating player in football is the quarterback for the Kansas City Chiefs, a 24-year-old who broke a championship drought and owns a couple of MVP trophies.

But the most exhilarating play in the Chiefs' 34-20 season-opening win Thursday against the Texans had little to do with Patrick Mahomes. Well, unless you include his handoff.

Yeah, the Chiefs can run the ball now, too.

For one night — opening night — rookie Clyde Edwards-Helaire stole the spotlight, introducing himself to the NFL with 25 carries for 138 yards and a touchdown run that will dominate highlight reels.

"I'm kind of just floating," Edwards-Helaire, the first-round pick, said of his emotions after his debut.

He is just the fourth player in the NFL history to top 130 rushing yards and score a touchdown in his NFL debut.

And some touchdown, too.

On an inside zone call, Edwards-Helaire met Texans safety Justin Reid in the secondary after squeezing through the line of scrimmage, a hole created by guard Kelechi Osemele in his first Chiefs start. Reid never stood a chance. He never got a hand on Edwards-Helaire, either. A quick cut, and poof. He was gone, a 27-yard score.

"(Osemele), he ended up pretty much getting everything cleared out. I only had one person to make miss, as far as the safety coming down," Edwards-Helaire said. "Watching film throughout the week, watching games from last year, watching the two games that Houston played the Chiefs last year, just knowing how everybody played on their defense.

"Film study. Filmy study was big for me. That's pretty much how that long run happened."

The first hit eased the jitters, he said. The previous week or two prompted some comfort.

Edwards-Helaire said the confidence he can perform at this level — his realization he belonged — arrived over the past couple of weeks, before he'd ever played a down in the NFL.

Stood out to his teammates long before that.

"I mean he's been doing it since the day he got here," Mahomes said.

In a game in which the Texans seemed intent on taking away the deep ball — and therefore limiting Tyreek Hill — Mahomes threw for just 211 yards. But he accepted what was there.

At times, even extended stretches, that meant a reliance on the run game. The 2019 Chiefs represented a turnstile at running back before Damien Williams' grasp on the job took root in the postseason. Williams is sitting out 2020 because of COVID-19 concerns, instead staying home with his ailing mother.

Edwards-Helaire is the guy. Not the lead of a committee. The guy.

His 25 carries are more than any running back had in a regular season game last season.

And yet...

"For the most part, I'm still on my game," he said 25 minutes after it ended. "Still feeling like I could go out there and play two more quarters."

And thus the rich get richer. That's the idea, right? The Chiefs used their first-round choice to supplement their already-explosive offense. For at least one night, the rookie looks capable of transforming the running game.

He didn't catch a pass, a quality for which he was noted at LSU.

Give it time.

"I thought the offensive line did a great job of giving him holes to run through, and he hit it every single time," Mahomes said. "He's going to keep getting better. It's another weapon that I kind of have in this offense. We're going to keep doing whatever we can to keep moving the ball and scoring touchdowns."

Harrison Butker finds great moments to add depth to his kicking game for KC Chiefs

A shoulder ride — that's the best way for a kicker to leave the field. The legs have already done their job.

Harrison Butker deserved the tribute after winning Sunday's game with a record performance.

Butker's 58-yard field goal — his second from that distance in the game — provided the winning points in the Chiefs' 23-20 overtime decision over the Los Angeles Chargers in the host team's debut at $5 billion SoFi Stadium.

The atmosphere was surreal with no fans in the stands in a beautiful new stadium. But the environment may have helped Butker.

SoFi Stadium is covered. The ends are open air, but there was no wind to affect the path of the ball. Kick it solidly and it's just a matter of squaring up and not getting it blocked.

Butker waited through the two-minute warning, a false-start penalty and pushed him back five yards and the Chargers' final timeout. Twice he had swung his powerful right leg through the kick, once at 53 yards, the other at 58, and both would have been good.

Finally, it came down to one snap.

"I just got a little more angry every kick," Butker said. "I think I even looked over at the Chargers' sideline like, 'Come on man, I'm trying to finish this game and get back to Kansas City.'"

Butker's third attempt split the uprights, and he said it was the best of his kicks. Making two previously in that sequence built, not damaged, his confidence.

Quarterback Patrick Mahomes gave the idea of a miss no oxygen.

"One hundred percent he'd make it," Mahomes said.

Also contributing to Butker's glorious Sunday: homework.

"During the week I did a little research and learned the turf in SoFi Stadium was the same turf used in the Texans' and Cowboys' stadiums, and I had good games when I kicked there," Butker said.

Butker felt good during the Chiefs' warmups, making kicks from 67 yards before the game at 70 at halftime. Special teams coach Dave Toub mentioned to Andy Reid that if the Chiefs get to the L.A. 40, making it a 55-yard attempt, the Chiefs should feel comfortable.

That happened late in the third quarter. The Chiefs trailed 17-6 and were staggering on offense. They had driven to the Chargers' 37, but then Mahomes was sacked for a big loss. A 10-yard completion put the ball at the 40.

Butker then drilled his first 58-yarder, matching the franchise record of Nick Lowery, who made kicks from that distance in 1985 and 1993. Butker's previous best had been 56 yards.

"I guess I have to break the record, hopefully next week," Butker said.

According to ESPN Stats, the kick was the second longest to win a game in overtime since the NFL went to overtime in the regular season in 1974.

Butker, in his fourth NFL season, entered Sunday's game as the second-most accurate field goal kicker in league history at 89.9 percent. Distance is his next frontier.

"For me to take it to next level I have to have some longer kicks," Butker said. "In 2018, my long was 54, which is OK — kind of middle of the park. Last year, making a 56-yarder was big.

"But now I feel comfortable from 58 and beyond. That's what I have to start doing to separate myself from the rest of the kickers in the league: making long field goals."

With increased range, Harrison Butker gives Chiefs two long-distance scorers

Nate Taylor

The Athletic

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Since they became the NFL champions, many of the Chiefs — led by star defensive tackle Chris Jones — have been comfortable comparing themselves to the Golden State Warriors, the former NBA juggernaut that won three titles in four seasons.

The reasons to compare both teams are easy to understand. Like the Warriors, the Chiefs' potent offense is capable of scoring points at a blistering rate, especially in comeback victories. Meanwhile, the Warriors, when healthy, were (and still are) most known for their historic ability to shoot 3-pointers, led by a duo of superstars in point guard Steph Curry and shooting guard Klay Thompson, known as the "Splash Brothers" since the net often splashes after they release the ball from long distance.

Patrick Mahomes is the Chiefs' version of Curry, a superstar quarterback who can complete remarkable deep passes that most NFL quarterbacks wouldn't even attempt. But in the Chiefs' overtime win Sunday over the Los Angeles Chargers, Mahomes didn't score the game's final points. Instead, Mahomes went to the sideline and transferred his duties to his Splash Brother: kicker Harrison Butker.

Consider the comparables. Butker, in essence, swished his 58-yard field goal, as the ball went through the uprights to give the Chiefs a 2-0 record in their "Run It Back" campaign to repeat as champions, which the Warriors accomplished in 2018.

Butker's personality also, in some ways, mirrors the demeanor of Thompson, a player known for being a laid-back sharp-shooter who reserves his emotions for during and after the game's most critical moments. Butker stayed calm, went through his mental routine and even refined his mechanics within the unusual three minutes it took for him to execute his game-winning kick.

After a false-start penalty by the Chiefs and a Chargers timeout negated two Butker makes, he calmly booted his third — and final — kick toward the objective. Butker turned his back toward the ball, even before it sailed through the uprights, and put his arms in the air, waiting for his teammates to hug him. Throughout Thompson's nine-year NBA career, he has shot several 3-pointers and followed them up with a similar action, not even needing to see the ball go through the net.

"Having Harrison, it's special," Mahomes said after Sunday's game. "In overtime, you want to score a touchdown. But knowing at the same time, when we got in that 2nd-and-long, I was like, 'If I can get (the ball) to around the 40(-yard line), (Butker) is going to make it.

"I have full confidence in that. It's something that gets underlooked. But when it comes to times like these, those are the moments that win you games."

Before Sunday, Butker's last game-winner occurred in the middle of last season, when he made a 44-yard field goal against the Minnesota Vikings as time expired. The most memorable part of the Chiefs' celebration that day involved Mahomes, who didn't play in the game because he was recovering from a dislocated right kneecap. Mahomes ran onto the field and jumped and pumped his right fist before being the first person to reach Butker.

An improved Butker this season, though, could make keeping the Chiefs off the scoreboard even harder for opponents. The Chiefs demonstrated Sunday that barely crossing midfield is when they enter Butker's kicking range. Most teams can't say that about their kicker.

Butker's final kick Sunday, his second 58-yarder, ended with the ball landing 10 yards past the crossbar.

"I had no doubt on this one," coach Andy Reid said of his confidence in Butker. "Tough kid. For a kicker — (and) you don't say this quite as often — he loves to compete. He really beared down on that and there was no question when it came off his foot."

Ahead of the second NFL game inside SoFi Stadium, a $5 billion, state-of-the-art facility, Butker prepared by reading an article on the venue's artificial turf. The article said the playing surface was the same that is used inside the stadiums for the Dallas Cowboys (AT&T Stadium) and Texans (NRG Stadium).

"I thought I had good games whenever we kicked there," Butker said. "I wasn't too worried at (SoFi Stadium). After the first couple of kicks, I was used to the turf. I think it's really nice and it almost feels like you're kicking in grass. I felt really good, had a great warmup and was able to continue that in the game."

On Butker's first attempt to win Sunday's game, a false start penalty from offensive lineman Nick Allegretti negated the kick from 53 yards. Butker felt the ball curved too much to the left, although the ball went through the inside of the left upright. After the kick, punter Tommy Townsend, an undrafted rookie, made a small adjustment in holding the ball to give Butker a different target point — farther to the right — for his right foot. For the 58-yard attempt that was negated by the Chargers' final timeout, Butker said he swung his right leg too hard, which he noticed made the ball go through the inside of the left upright closer than he wanted.

"For the last kick, I had the same aiming point and I think I just slowed down my leg swing a little bit," Butker said. "I hit a better rotating ball and I thought it went pretty much down the middle."

One after another Sunday, the Chiefs sprinted to Butker to greet him with high-fives, pats on the helmet and the ultimate gesture a kicker can receive on the field: being lifted atop his teammates' shoulders. Butker closed his eyes and unleashed a yell for his teammates to see his passion. In the locker room, Reid called Butker to the middle of the team's postgame celebration to receive more praise from the rest of the Chiefs. Butker broke down the huddle, too.

"Hey, they aren't (going to) hand it to us," Butker told his teammates. "Let's run this thing back, baby!"

Even once the Chiefs boarded their busses to head to the airport for their flight home, players expressed their appreciation for Butker through their Twitter accounts.

"Legend! @buttkicker7," Mahomes wrote.

"THE BUTTKICKER!!" wrote star tight end Travis Kelce.

"His name is Harrison Butker," wrote defensive tackle Derrick Nnadi, "and he has ice in his veins."

And similar to Thompson, Butker is building a strong reputation throughout the NFL for his consistency, no matter when he attempts his field goals. Butker has been successful in his last 18 field goals, including the postseason. His last miss also happens to be when the Chiefs had their last loss, on Nov. 10, 2019, when KC fell to the Tennessee Titans.

Prior to his game-winning kick, Butker's first field goal Sunday was also from 58 yards — the longest make of his career — on the opposite side of the field. The coup put Butker in the Chiefs' record book, as he joined Nick Lowery in tying the franchise record for the longest made field goal.

"For me to take it to the next level, I have to have some longer kicks," Butker said after Sunday's game. "In 2018, my (longest) was 54 (yards), which is OK, kind of middle of the pack. Last year, making a 56-yarder was big. But now, I feel comfortable from 58 and beyond. I think that's what I've got to start doing, separating myself from the rest of the kickers in the league and start making longer field goals.

"I'm super thankful for (special teams) Coach (Dave) Toub and Coach Reid for trusting me and letting us attempt those long field goals."

In his fourth season, Butker, 25, pushed himself in the summer to extend his maximum distance without sacrificing accuracy. As part of his training, Butker altered his diet. Listed at 6-foot-4 and 205 pounds, Butker lost some body fat to help improve the power in his field goals and kickoffs. He found inspiration in Cristiano Ronaldo, the superstar soccer player who is known for his fitness when performing on the pitch for Juventus F.C.

By late July, weeks before the Chiefs' training camp, Butker had seen the benefits of his training in making 70-yard field goals while working out on a high school field.

In camp, Butker worked to show Reid and Toub that he would be consistent at longer field-goal attempts. Burker proved himself in making a 62-yard field goal during a camp practice inside Arrowhead Stadium.

"Last season, I don't know if I would've been consistent from that distance," he said. "If you look back to 2017 against the Texans, same turf and 49-yarder at the end of the game, (I) barely made it over (the crossbar). I definitely have a stronger leg. A day like (Sunday), where you're indoors basically with no wind, I was able to hit from 67 (yards) before the game and 70 (yards) at halftime.

"Last year, I don't think I would've made all three of those (kicks). Hopefully I would've made the last one. I definitely feel stronger and more accurate this season."

In just 53 total games, Butker has achieved plenty in his career. He helped the Chiefs win the Super Bowl, of course, but he also has the team's record for the most made field goals in a single season and has 445 career points, the sixth-most in franchise history. But Butker has yet to earn Pro Bowl or All-Pro honors, goals he wants to capture this season.

The man he will likely compete against for such awards is Justin Tucker, the Baltimore Ravens' stellar kicker. A four-time All Pro, including the past two seasons, Tucker has made 90.9 percent of his field-goal attempts in his nine-year career. Butker has made 90.2 percent of his kicks.

Next for the Chiefs (2-0) is a road game against the Ravens (2-0), one of the biggest matchups of the season that will be played Monday night for a national TV audience. Butker plans to be the best kicker on the field.

"I guess I've got to break the (Chiefs') record and beat Nick Lowery," he said, smiling. "Hopefully next week, Monday Night Football."

Injury update

In Reid's news conference Monday, he said that he expects cornerback Charvarius Ward (fractured left hand) to participate in practice at some point later this week.

The Chiefs could also add defensive tackle Mike Pennel to their active roster this week. Known for helping the Chiefs' run defense improve last season, Pennel finished serving his two-game suspension Sunday.

"There's a chance he's back up and ready to go," Reid said of Pennel. "There's a good chance."

Reid said the illness that forced star defensive end Frank Clark to miss the second half was the same stomach issue the six-year veteran dealt with last season. In December, Clark had a stomach virus in which he lost 12 pounds that required him to see a gastroenterologist after being evaluated by Dr. Mike Monaco, who works with the Chiefs' medical staff. Once he regained his health, Clark said he learned he needed to be disciplined with his diet to help prevent too much acid from being in his stomach.

On his Twitter account Monday, Clark said his biggest issue was not staying hydrated enough during Sunday's game.

"He's had this for a number of years, so he works through it," Reid said. "Nobody wants to be out there more than him. That's never a question with Frank Clark. He loves playing the game, but it's something that he battles through. Our doctors try to monitor it and keep it under control as best they can."

Tyrann Mathieu Foundation registering people to vote at Union Station event

Travis Meier

September 22, 2020

Fox 4 KC

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The Honey Badger is celebrating National Voter Registration Day with a special registration event at Union Station called, "Flex Your Freedom."

Tyrann Mathieu Foundation is teaming up with Harvester today, Sept. 22, to give away meals to 320 low-income families, a nod to his jersey number 32. Those families all pre-registered and have been picked beforehand.

Families receiving the donations will come to Union Station at 9 a.m. and will be able to register to vote when they come here to pick up their food.

However, the registration isn't just for those families — it's for everyone. Registration will open to the rest of the public at 11 a.m. There will be options to apply for a mail-in ballot and vote early, in-person as an absentee voter. There will also be information on notarizing your ballot.

The deadline to register to vote in Missouri is Oct. 7. In Kansas, it's Oct. 13.

Mathieu's foundation said in a statement that he is hoping that Black voters come out, a demographic often underrepresented at the polls. Black voter turnout also declined between 2012 and 2016, according to the Brookings Institute in Washington D.C.

"Flex Your Freedom" also aligns with the start of in person absentee voting in Missouri today. To vote absentee, you must meet one of these qualifications – which includes being out of town on election day; having a disability that prevents you from going to the polls; or having an increased risk of getting COVID-19.

The event will end at 2 p.m.

What a year: Chiefs' Patrick Mahomes named one of Time's most influential people

Sam McDowell

KC Star

Chiefs quarterback Patrick Mahomes has forever changed Kansas City, the architect of a Super Bowl parade that strolled down Grand Boulevard.

But his reach stretches far beyond Kansas City.

Mahomes has been named one of Time's 100 most influential people in the world in 2020, joining celebrities, activists, political figures and the President.

"There is a lot more promise in Patrick Mahomes' future than just on-field accolades," said Yankees Hall of Fame shortstop Derek Jeter, who wrote on Time's selection of Mahomes. "He already has started to build a legacy as one of the most impactful athletes of his generation, and I, for one, am excited to see what is next."

What a year it's been.

As the quarterback of the Super Bowl champions, sure.

But also as a recently turned 25-year-old with the city at his fingertips.

Mahomes led the Chiefs to their first NFL championship in 50 seasons, three straight comeback wins guiding their postseason fate. He became the youngest player in league history to stash both regular season and Super Bowl MVP honors and then was rewarded with the richest contract the NFL has ever seen.

On the field, his play spoke for itself.

Off it, his voice became louder than ever. Mahomes thrust himself into the center of the Black Lives Matter movement in the wake of George Floyd's death, appearing in a video among other NFL stars that demanded the league office recognize social injustices and the systematic oppression of Black people. A day later, NFL commissioner Roger Goodell obliged.

"Enough is enough," Mahomes said then. "We've got to do something about this. I'm blessed to have this platform. Why not use it?

"As I've gotten older, and I know I'm still young, I've learned a lot, and I think that was one of the things (I learned). I know I have this platform. I know everyone's not going to agree with it, but I'm going to do my best to make the world a better place, and this is the right moment to do it."

In actionable ways, Mahomes has taken part in voter registration causes, enlisting teammates' support, including star safety Tyrann Mathieu. Partially as a result of that push, Arrowhead Stadium will be transformed into a voting location this November.

"What I've really appreciated the last couple of years is how engaged the leaders on our team are, and I'll just take Patrick and Tyrann as examples," Chiefs chairman and CEO Clark Hunt said. "They're very engaged. They want to make a difference. They want to do things that are going to make our country better — things that are going to help us get along as a country."

And he's just getting started — at least in Kansas City.

Mahomes signed a 10-year contract extension that will keep him here through at least 2031. The compensation isn't too bad — he will be paid $503 million over those 10 seasons, the most lucrative contract in American professional sports.

Months after signing it, he stood inside Arrowhead Stadium with his teammates as they received Super Bowl LIV rings.

That evening, he presented his longtime girlfriend, Brittany Matthews with her own ring, getting engaged to his high school sweetheart.

What a year, indeed.

(Harrison Butker)

Butker's Chiefs breakout was a lifetime in the making: 'I'm trying to be a robot'

Sam Mellinger

KC Star

Harrison Butker talks about kicking the way an architect might discuss floorspace. He is particular. He is precise. Three steps back, two to the side. That's his starting point. Each step is the same. Every time.

The Chiefs' placekicker knows what his body lean is supposed to feel like during the kick. Knows how his feet are to be positioned. Knows the specific part of his foot that should hit the ball, the trajectory the ball should take, and exactly what it should look like going through.

To emphasize these points, he keeps a notebook. A thick notebook. He's obsessive. When he feels good, he writes down why. When he feels bad, he searches for answers, and leaves clues for the next time.

If this sounds robotic, well, that's the idea.

"In my mind, I'm trying to be a robot," he said. "So, OK, if someone's trying to make a robot, to be the most consistent kicker ever, they would look the same every time. How can I look the same every single kick?"

Butker's last game was the best of his life: two 58-yard field goals, including the game winner in overtime. Another kick to force overtime. Two more — one from 53, the other 58 — before the winner that didn't count.

His next game will be on Monday Night Football, in one of the NFL's most anticipated games of the year. Mahomes-Jackson will eat up the headlines, and that's how it should be, but Butker and the Ravens' Justin Tucker might be the game's best kickers, too.

This is the week of Butker's professional life, in other words, and it's been a long time coming.

The Chiefs have employed some of the best in the sport's history — Jan Stenerud, Nick Lowery, Morten Andersen. None ever had a day quite like Butker's. To casual fans, this looks sudden. Kickers are anonymous between the extremes of Lin Elliott and Adam Vinatieri.

But this has been a lifetime in the making. Butker is gifted both physically and mentally. People don't often think of kickers as athletes. People don't often think of kickers watching film. Butker is the former, and he does a lot of the latter.

Butker was a four-year starter, two-year captain and central defender who won three state soccer championships in high school. He grew up wanting to be a professional soccer player — he leaves clues about that background in his celebrations, which we'll get to in a minute — and was good enough for Division I programs to be interested.

But when his club team transitioned to year-round competition, he didn't want to give up basketball and football. By then, Butker felt himself losing a little love for soccer, drawn instead toward the big crowds and excitement of football.

Lamar Owens recruited Butker to Georgia Tech (he chose Tech over Auburn). Owens remembers watching Butker dunking during basketball games — Butker is 6-foot-4 with a 42-inch vertical — and his high school football coaches wanting him to play receiver.

This summer, on a day he said the Weather Channel reported 15 mph winds in Kansas City, Butker hit from 77 yards.

"Just an all around athlete," Owens said. "I tell people all the time: He's not just a kicker. He's a competitor, he's an athlete."

Smart, too. That stuff about becoming a robot? Comes by that honestly. Butker's dad is a computer programmer for Truist and brought that perspective to Butker's sports.

Whatever the result, good or bad, father and son would pause after and think deliberately: How can we make it better?

Butker is among the many athletes who reference Kobe Bryant's influence: learn from the best, obsess over details, relentless pursuit of improvement.

"Any guy at the top of their sport, or whatever their craft is, they have to be detail-oriented," Butker said.

Butker had a standout career at Georgia Tech. He is the school's all-time leading scorer, a captain as a senior. He kicked a walkoff field goal against Virginia Tech as a sophomore and the winning extra point with 30 seconds left against Georgia as a senior.

The path of the kicker is never easy, though. Just three were drafted in Butker's class in 2017, and only seven more have been taken in the three drafts since. The league provides just 32 of these jobs, and teams don't often expend heavy capital to fill them.

Butker was the third kicker taken in 2017, going in the seventh round and 233rd overall to the Panthers. That put him in a competition with Graham Gano, who was coming off his worst season for accuracy since being released by Washington six years earlier.

But Gano responded that preseason. He and Butker performed similarly. The Panthers chose Gano and put Butker on their practice squad. A few teams reached out with invitations for him to try out, but that would've required Butker to give up his place with the Panthers.

By then, he'd made peace with not kicking in games that year. He and Gano and the other specialists had formed strong relationships. He felt like he was improving, and learning, benefiting in part from long snapper J.J. Jansen's extensive note taking.

But then the Chiefs called. Cairo Santos — who, if nothing else, will be remembered as the reason Patrick Mahomes doesn't wear No. 5 anymore — had been injured after three games. The Chiefs went through their database, going back through the most recent draft process as well as available veterans.

They didn't have a seventh-round pick in 2017. If they did, they may have done the same thing the Panthers did with Butker. They kept coming back to Butker. His tape from the preseason looked good.

In retrospect, it's another fortunate break for the team that's had so many in recent years — they upgraded the position, and who knows, if Santos' injury came a week or two later, maybe someone else would've picked up Butker.

The Chiefs were desperate for a kicker. They offered Butker the job, straight up, no tryout.

"How are you going to turn that down?" Butker said. "The whole reason you're on a practice squad is to make a 53-man roster."

When he arrived, he still didn't know if he was up for it. Kicking can be a lonely business, especially without confidence, and especially without results.

When Butker arrived in Kansas City, special teams coach Dave Toub showed him his draft notes, which had Butker No. 1 in the class. The scouting staff's evaluations agreed.

That helped, but not as much as hitting the game-winning 43-yarder on Monday Night Football in his career debut.

"That was the first time I proved to myself that I was good enough for the NFL," Butker said. "Because I did it in a regular-season game, on a pretty big stage."

Butker has been as close to that perfect robot as could be reasonably expected. He has missed just twice inside 50 yards in the last three seasons. His 58-yarders against the Chargers are the two longest made kicks of this young season, and his 90.2 percent career accuracy ranks second all-time to Tucker.

We promised you something, about Butker's celebrations being influenced by his soccer background. When he hit the game winner against the Chargers — his third make, but the first that counted — Butker did not watch the ball go through the uprights.

He took his three steps back, two to the side, same as always. His body lean was perfect. His foot placement on point. The ball felt just as it should off his foot, and the 4 seconds or so it takes a kicked football to travel 58 yards is simply too long to keep that much adrenaline inside.

So before the ball went through, and before the officials raised their arms, Butker turned away from the field and threw his hands in the air, walking toward his teammates on the sideline like a man who'd just conquered the world. Soccer players do this, you know. They score the goal and then sprint the other way, waiting to be mobbed by their teammates.

Butker has done this before. Once this training camp, actually, he did it after kicking from 69 yards. But that one bounced off the crossbar, falling short. Oops. This time, he felt a split-second of panic. He did not hear the customary celebration.

Then he remembered: no fans.

Chiefs' Tyreek Hill coaches football at Lee's Summit North when he's not on the field

Harold Kuntz

October 8, 2020

Fox 4 KC

LEES SUMMIT, Mo. — He's already won a Super Bowl and now he can add another title to his list: high school football coach.

Tyreek Hill began his job as assistant football coach at Lee's Summit North this year, and he says it's what he wants to do when he's done playing in the NFL.

"Coaching has always been something that I always wanted to do ever since I was a kid, you know, because my dad, he kind of coached me," Hill said.

Jamar Mozee, the school's head football coach, was in disbelief when he was contacted by Hill's agent about the job.

"I was moving into my new house here in Lee's Summit and right after I got done moving in, I was exhausted and I checked my e-mail and I got an email from an agent. I called the number, and I didn't know if it was a joke," he said.

The agent was Drew Rosenhaus and the player interested in coaching was the Cheetah.

He's fast on the NFL field, but on high school, he takes his second job of assistant football coach very seriously.

Mozee says he's had no problem fitting in.

"He doesn't come in there like he's an All-Pro, Pro Bowler or top 20 player in the league. He just comes in and he's a coach. He's a good communicator. He talks to them, and at the same time, gets on them. I've been very impressed."

Mozee welcomes Hill, not only for his football knowledge, but off field lessons as well.

"Playing is not coaching. Every kid is different, every kid is different. You can't put them all in one box. That's why the relationship piece is so important."

As one of the few Black head coaches in the Suburban Conference, he's proud his staff reflects the culture of his team and tries to get Black men involved in coaching. With Hill on board, they both want to encourage their players to reach for college football, but also be leaders of their community.

"Yes, we love playing football, but it's what you do outside of football that makes you who you are, so that's why I love coaching so much," Hill said.

(Tyrann Mathieu)

Tyrann Mathieu is changing the game

The Super Bowl champ and Chiefs MVP is the NFL's new model defender

Dominique Foxworth

October 15, 2020

The Undefeated

But what position will he play? Back in 2013, that was the main question on the minds of NFL front-office types about Tyrann Mathieu. That uncertainty, even more than the suspension and off-field concerns that dogged the Heisman finalist, kept one of the best players ever to come out of football factory Louisiana State University from being selected before the 69th pick in the 2013 NFL draft.

But what position will he play?

Seven years later, NFL teams are still asking that question. But gone is the tone of curiosity and skepticism. It's been replaced with anxiety and fear. Because, for the Chiefs' opponents, the dilemma that is Tyrann Mathieu is no longer theoretical. Any hope of beating the defending Super Bowl champs depends on knowing not only where on the field Mathieu will be — but what he will be.

The Chargers learned that lesson the hard way last year in a Week 11 matchup with the Chiefs. In shotgun on third-and-8, Philip Rivers surveyed the defense. The Chargers were in a speed trips formation — three receivers left and a tight end opposite. Mathieu was on the right, 12 yards deep, mirroring free safety Juan Thornhill on the left — a conventional alignment for a strong safety, signaling to Rivers a traditional Cover 2. With a perfect 2-beating double-in and clear route combo dialed up, the Chargers had one receiver going long, forcing the playside safety deep. The first in-route dragged the middle linebacker away, leaving the remaining backer in an expanded zone against a receiver. Rivers snapped the ball and whipped his eyes to the left, firing confidently as Keenan Allen wheeled behind the linebacker's hook zone to drop into a gaping hole just beyond the sticks. It looked like an easy first down.

Nah.

Mathieu, far from a Cover 2 safety's deep half responsibility, sliced in front of Allen, intercepting the ball in the hole. Despite his pre-snap alignment, he wasn't playing safety. He was the middle linebacker in a Tampa 2 zone. Mathieu is one of a few players in the NFL who is comfortable enough to assume the linebacker's role but even better able to decipher and react to the offense's attack than a 'backer would be. Now, with the ball in his hand, the onetime return specialist took the ball back 35 yards to the Chargers' 6-yard line.

In the same way that Lamar Jackson and Patrick Mahomes have settled the debate over pro-style and dual-threat quarterbacks, Mathieu has changed the perception of what it means to be a defensive back. He has become the model defender in today's NFL: He has the instincts and physicality to play in the box as safety or linebacker, as well as the athleticism to cover receivers and tight ends. He is the skeleton key that can unlock defenses. His All-Pro selection in 2019 tells the story: He earned the AP's first-team honors as a defensive back and second-team honors as a safety.

Mathieu — who back in 2013 was too small, too controversial, too hard to place — is the most important defensive player on the best team in football, the 4-1 favorites to win a second consecutive Super Bowl. He was the missing piece that turned the Chiefs' defense into champions. But he didn't set out to change the game. He just did the jobs that needed to be done. Now his work extends beyond the field of play. "I think I'm centered right now, more than any other time in my life," Mathieu says. "It's not about money, it's not about chasing rings, it's not about making people feel like I'm this special person."

After a journey through the NFL with infamous ups and downs, Mathieu, finally, is exactly where he's meant to be.

"I try my best to be a servant," he says. "I think the guy who serves, he's always going to get his blessing. It may not be on his time, but he'll get it eventually. That's the space I'm in right now."

Just before the kickoff of Super Bowl LIV, Mathieu watched a kid deliver the game ball to midfield. Seeing the contrast of the kid's brown skin and bright yellow mohawk, Mathieu leaned over to a teammate and said, "I started that hair."

"I've always been a leader," he says now, remembering the hairstyle he made famous when he became known as the Honey Badger at LSU. "I've always been a trendsetter. I've never really paid much attention to the one eye black, or the blond mohawk — I've just done some of those things off impulse, and I think other people ran with it."

"I think other guys just naturally follow him," Chiefs defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo says. "He's got one of those personalities. And I'm not just talking about football. Whether it's his smile or his personality or his intensity, his confidence, his boldness, people tend to gravitate to him, follow him, let him lead and know that he's going to steer them in the right direction."

Eight years into Mathieu's NFL career, he has also steered the way in defensive trends. Jamal Adams and Minkah Fitzpatrick, two of the other safeties named to the AP's 2019 All-Pro team, are disciples of his do-it-all style. This offseason, Seattle gave up two first-round picks to get Adams from New York. The Cardinals, two seasons after releasing Mathieu, made Budda Baker the highest-paid safety in the league because of his ability to impact the game from everywhere on the field. Logan Ryan played seven seasons and won two Super Bowls as a cornerback, but when the former Titan hit free agency, he and his agent marketed him as a versatile safety, "similar to Tyrann Mathieu."

And based on this year's combine interviews, we're in for a new slew of baby badgers sprinting into the NFL. When 2020 defensive prospects were asked whom they play like, the name cited most was Mathieu. Even 6-foot-4, 238-pound superhuman linebacker Isaiah Simmons said, "The first name that comes to mind is Tyrann Mathieu." Simmons was later drafted at No. 8 by GM Steve Keim of the Cardinals, the same GM who took a chance on Mathieu in 2013.

"I think I'm centered right now, more than any other time in my life. It's not about money, it's not about chasing rings, it's not about making people feel like I'm this special person."— Tyrann Mathieu

Back then, it would be hard to imagine that every defense in the NFL would either have a player it uses like Tyrann Mathieu or be looking for one. In the minds of some NFL decision-makers, Mathieu had fallen from Heisman finalist to practically undraftable after getting kicked off the LSU football team for a failed drug test and arrested for marijuana possession (offenses that, like Mathieu himself, look different in modern context).

His history with weed also branded him a guy with "character issues," a label that proved to be the most inaccurate of all the pre-draft critiques — and the most painful for Mathieu. To hear analysts paint him as a bad teammate stung. And worse, for months, he couldn't do anything about it. He was a man without a team, far from the game he loved.

On night two of the draft, he sat in a New Orleans restaurant surrounded by family and friends, with a few purple and yellow balloons hanging on the wall behind him. When his name was finally called in the third round, the room erupted around him. Tears of joy streamed down his face. Upon hearing his name, "I was relieved," he said, voice still quivering, during his on-air interview. "Seven months ago I didn't think I'd be here." Then he affirmed his deepest desire — and put the focus back on the field. "I'm ready to play football now."

It didn't take him long to make an impression. Mathieu can recount with pinpoint accuracy the play he says is the most memorable of his career, during his debut with the Cardinals in 2013 — his first competitive football game in 20 months. His NFL career was only a couple of plays old when Rams quarterback Sam Bradford exploited the Cardinals' inverted-2 man coverage by hitting Jared Cook in stride on a seam route with linebacker Karlos Dansby in coverage. Cook pulled away from Dansby — and the rest of the veteran Cardinals defenders — for what looked like a certain 55-yard touchdown.

Mathieu, playing as the nickelback, darted past his teammates, slowing as they gave up the pursuit, and lunged, knocking the ball free just before Cook crossed the goal line. Dansby recovered the ball in the end zone for a touchback. Mathieu sprinted to the sideline to celebrate with his team before the TV commentator could even acknowledge his touchdown-saving effort. As the game went to commercial, Dick Stockton hilariously said, "It remains no score, thanks to Karlos Dansby."

"It was like slow motion. I could see me punching the ball out, I could see my teammates jumping on it, everybody going crazy," Mathieu says now. "But for me — for a whole year I had to listen to people say I wasn't the best safety in the draft, I wasn't the best defensive player in the draft. That I wasn't worthy of being a good teammate, I wasn't worthy of providing for my family.

"So to make that play, the first play in one of my first NFL games, that was the moment that I knew: 'Hey, man, that's why you don't listen to what people say. That's why you continue to just believe in what you can do.'"

For the next five seasons, Mathieu might have been the Cardinals' most impactful defender. With Mathieu on the field, Arizona allowed a QBR of just 45.5. That would have been the best in the league for that time frame, better than the Legion of Boom Seahawks' 50.5. Without him, the Cardinals' QBR rose to 61.6. That would have ranked last.

But Mathieu wasn't always on the field long enough to make that impact clear. Due to frequent injuries, he played in all 16 games just once in his first five years. An ACL tear ended his rookie season and delayed the start to a disappointing second season, which also saw him miss games for a broken thumb. Back to form in 2015, Mathieu earned All-Pro honors, but his season ended early when he tore his other ACL. In 2016 he played in just 10 games, the fewest of his career, because of a shoulder injury. "When I came to the league, for me it was all about trying to show people I was a good teammate, that I was worthy of being an NFL player," he says. "Then, I go through these injuries, and it was a different emotion for me. I don't think I was really able to handle it how I know I could have."

Mathieu finally played a full 16 for the Cardinals in 2017, but it was too late. "Once I had my injuries, I was no longer functioning. I think that was the reason why me and the Arizona Cardinals divorced, in my mind. I don't think I was practicing how I normally practice. I don't think I was walking how I was normally walking."

When he was a free agent in 2018, Mathieu's best offer came from the Texans in the form of a one-year, $7 million "prove it" deal. And that he did. Mathieu played all 16 games on the Texans' top-five defense, leading them to a division championship. A "special dude," former coach Bill O'Brien says of Mathieu.

By the time the 2019 free-agency period opened, the Chiefs — whose league-best offense had been saddled with the No. 31 total defense in the NFL — had zeroed in on Mathieu. They hoped to spend about $11 million per year, a substantial increase over his salary with the Texans. When his price rose to $14 million, some in the organization thought the team should pass. But in the end, the pro-Mathieu contingent won the day, and not because of Mathieu's ability to cover anyone on the field. The Chiefs believed their locker room needed more than just an influx of talent — it needed a veteran presence. As one front-office executive said then, "He will make our guys believe."

"I knew a coach that had been with the Texans who said, the day he stepped through the door, the whole culture changed," Spagnuolo says. "And he was talking about the team, he wasn't talking about the defense. Based on that comment, and what I saw on tape and the ability, I just felt like it would be really important to have that kind of guy at that position. Because we value the safety position for all the things that we've got to do back there. He would be a perfect fit for us."

The three-year, $42 million gamble worked. Mathieu led the defense in snaps, recording 75 tackles, 2 sacks and a team-high 4 interceptions. Thanks to Mathieu and Spagnuolo's revamped defense, the team's defensive rank jumped 23 spots in 2019, up to eighth in the league.

"Kansas City really offered me the opportunity to be who I am as a teammate, to be who I am as a leader, and also giving me the joy to play defensive back," Mathieu says. "Because Spags is a defensive back in his mind, it's fun to come to work every day, knowing certain game plans will be centered around you."

Last season, in a Week 3 clash against the Ravens, Mathieu showed how impactful he could be. It was the type of play that often goes underappreciated by fans — a touchdown-saving maneuver that he makes look routine, even though he is probably the only player who would have made it. In the fourth quarter, with Kansas City leading 30-19, the eventual league MVP, Lamar Jackson, had driven 64 yards down the field to the Chiefs' 16-yard line.

The Ravens were in an empty set, with a tight end and two receivers in a bunch to the right and a receiver and running back in a stack on the left. The Chiefs had spent most of the game in Cover 3, and the Ravens were trying to exploit it. The play set up a receiver vertical route to occupy the free safety and a receiver shallow cross to pull down the linebacker, creating a hole in the middle of the defense to allow the tight end to slip behind for the easy touchdown. Mathieu was lined up on the left, at linebacker depth, playing Cover 3 strong safety — responsible for the wide left curl to flat zone.

But after so many years in the league, Mathieu has seen every play from every position. He recognized the Ravens' route combination — and wasn't about to let the coverage rules keep him from making the play. Rather than cover the backside curl, Mathieu sprinted to the hole and broke up the pass. The Ravens were held to a field goal, and the Chiefs held on to beat the NFL's eventual No. 1 seed 33-28.

"It was pretty evident early on that Tyrann could handle a lot of different things, so I knew I wanted to use them that way. … When you challenge a guy to play different positions and they love that and embrace it, that certainly helps you as a coach," Spagnuolo says. "Anytime we can get him in a spot that we think is going to produce for us, we're gonna try to do that."

And off the field, Mathieu had done just what Spagnuolo hoped back in March: completely changed the culture as soon as he got there. For the third time in four seasons — and on the third different team — Mathieu was named a captain.

"He's one of the best leaders I've ever been around," says Chiefs quarterback Mahomes. "The first day we were at camp, it was more than just his play on the field. It was putting people in positions like he had been in that defense for years, even though it was his first day."

And 190 days later, the night before the Super Bowl, it was Mathieu who was chosen to speak to the team. The next day, in the huddle just before the game, he gave an impassioned plea to leave it all on the field, referencing a 2-4 stretch the Chiefs had earlier in the season. "We knew what kind of team we was, dog. All we had to do was believe in each other and play for each other," he said, surrounded by his teammates. "I watched a lot of people step up, dog. That's what we need today. We need energy. We need oneness, dog. We need to be remembered!"

For many of his teammates, Mathieu's message resonated as much because of his actions in the preceding months as his words in the moment. He calls himself a "practice All-American," a term normally meant as a slight toward players who practice overzealously during the week but don't produce on Sundays. Mathieu produces on Sundays because he is overzealous the rest of the week, constantly trying to soak up new information about the game.

"I knew that he was going to be a very cerebral player because of the questions that he asked," says Del Lee-Collins, Mathieu's defensive backs coach in high school. "He absorbed every single thing that was being said to him. And he just stuck in my back pocket. Anytime I was coaching anybody else, he was getting the same coaching without being on the field."

"I'm not the biggest, I'm not the fastest, I'm not going to be nobody's first pick, but in my mind, I should be," Mathieu says. "And that's because I really practice how I perform, and I rely on that. I don't rely on speed, I don't rely on athleticism — I rely on my preparation and what I did in practice that week."

From Honey Badger to Super Bowl champ, Mathieu has always been known for his spirit. "He's just got one of those personalities," Chiefs coordinator Steve Spagnuolo says.

Which helps explain how it was Mathieu, not Mahomes — who seemingly perfected the quarterback position and orchestrated three consecutive comebacks en route to a Super Bowl win — whom coaches and teammates voted team MVP.

"That was cool, man," Mathieu says. "That was definitely gratifying. It's really everything I'd been working for. That had nothing to do with performance on the field. I feel like that award came from just who I've always been as a teammate."

Ask Tyrann Mathieu how he thinks people would describe him and you might expect to hear compliments on his game: relentless, ferocious, versatile, instinctive, fearless.

Instead, he says: "I would hope people describe me as sensitive, supportive and really just loyal. I would hope that more than anything." Rather than focusing on his place among the greats of the game, Mathieu concerns himself with his place in the lives of the people he touches. Because the pioneering player's greatest influence never stepped onto a football field.

In the earliest years of his life, his grandmother Marie was the only maternal influence he knew. She created the foundation Mathieu needed, "making me feel special, making me feel wanted." And her motherly nature wasn't limited to just her family. In their troubled Central City New Orleans neighborhood, she was a loving light.

"I feel like my grandmother did that for even some strangers," Mathieu says. "She opened her house to them. I look at my life today and I'm still trying to be like her. I'm still trying to make people look at me and feel wanted."

That started in the locker room, where his teammates were all treated like "brothers," he says. But now, as Mathieu's profile has grown, so has his sense of responsibility off the football field. "I think when I first started my foundation, it was like any other ballplayer. Camp, put on a turkey drive and call it a day," Mathieu says. "Now we're getting personal."

"He's one of the best leaders I've ever been around. Since the first day we were at camp, it was more than just his play on the field."— Patrick Mahomes

Now, The Shift, a mentorship program Mathieu created under the Tyrann Mathieu Foundation, connects Mathieu with a group of young men via Zoom. "For an hour in their day, they're not in the streets. They're on a FaceTime call with me," he says. "These are kids from Louisiana who are in gangs, who are in violence, who are living a life that they're trying desperately to get out of. So for a lot of them, I'm saving their lives. That's given me great pride and a sense of responsibility."

He urges these kids to see beyond the limitations of their surroundings and encourages them to serve their communities. "I think the next step for me is to bring about change in our world, the real world," Mathieu says. "I urge a lot of my teammates to do the same thing."

Mathieu and Mahomes are the faces of the Chiefs' voter registration initiative. Together, they pushed their teammates to respond to this summer of unrest by registering to vote and using their elevated profiles to encourage others to do the same. Mathieu took it a step further, hosting a voter registration drive in Kansas City in September through his foundation.

"He challenges me to be in the community like every week," Mahomes says. "Since the moment he got to KC, he has something that he is working on and asking all his teammates to be a part of it. It's special, man."

In November, Mathieu will be voting for the first time. He never believed that government was for people like him. "Growing up in inner cities, you feel like the left-out kid," he says. "You don't believe those things work for you." Now he believes there is power in his vote, and he plans to exercise it.

"There's so many people that have gone through so much to give us this opportunity, this freedom to vote," Mathieu says. "I think it's my responsibility to bring awareness and to let everybody around me know that is their obligation and their responsibility as well. You have that right. You have that voice. So just be confident in it, use that."

In mid-September, two days after his Chiefs open the season with a win against the Texans, Mathieu walks into a garage in New Orleans, powering through the aches of the debut to lob life lessons to the youngsters he mentors with The Shift. Dark clothes, dreads pulled back, eyes smiling above his mask, Mathieu entered the room of boys: "Wzapnin?" His greeting is five syllables in one, a question and a statement — one word, like him, doing the work of many more.

These boys idolize Mathieu. Many of them aspire to athletic success. Mathieu encourages them to see both the improbability of a sports career and the limitations of its impact. "In order for us to really save the world, all of us can't be ballplayers," he says. "Some of us have to take the hard jobs."

Yet Mathieu aims to do both. He is a Super Bowl champion, the Chiefs' MVP and one of the most respected voices in the league. And now, at a time when he finally feels at home on the field, he is turning his focus off it, to the communities that made him.

"Never forget where you come from," he says. "Always go back there. Start there. Right now, it's all about my communities that I'm living in, trying to push them forward — whether it be voter registration, peacefully protesting or some athletes simply using their platform to inspire others to be better. I don't think enough of us do that."

This offseason, as COVID-19 threatened the start of the season and social justice appeared to be as important to Americans as sports, Mathieu was vocal about support for the Black Lives Matter movement, eventually appearing in the viral player-led video directed at the commissioner. When he and the Chiefs opened the NFL season with a resounding win against the Texans, the game began with a moment of unity — which was booed by the crowd of 16,000 in Kansas City.

"Obviously that's not what we were trying to accomplish," Mathieu says. "I think that was a moment for everybody to take a deep breath, you know, breathe a little bit. And for all of us to kind of accept our roles in this going forward."

By Week 4, the season was back to the 2020 version of normal: The game, expected to be a marquee matchup between the 3-0 Chiefs — coming off another dominant win against the Ravens — and the 2-1 Patriots, led by Cam Newton – was postponed by a day after Newton tested positive for COVID-19. (After news of the postponement broke, Mathieu tweeted, "Wear your mask, wash your hands" – and also "I need a f—ing hug.")

On the field, as he has for his entire life, Mathieu found his solace. After a sluggish first half for both teams, the Chiefs took a 19-10 lead in the fourth quarter. As the Patriots started the next drive, Mathieu was playing the nickel position over a bunch left formation. The Patriots ran a curl flat combination with a clear. Mathieu broke on the flat to Julian Edelman, who was in space awaiting backup quarterback Jarrett Stidham's pass. Mathieu gathered himself for the tackle — just as the pass slipped through the normally sure-handed Edelman's grip. It fell almost perfectly to Mathieu, who grabbed it and ran 25 yards down the sideline for an easy touchdown.

"Obviously it's cool anytime you can score points defensively, you know, especially for myself — I don't always get on the stat sheet," Mathieu said after the game. "I just try my best to do my job and be where I'm supposed to be."

It's the story of Mathieu's career. The man who has always had to do extraordinary things to make room for himself in this league and in this life, who has created opportunities where there were none, has finally found himself in the perfect position.

Super Bowl MVP Patrick Mahomes, Kansas City Chiefs split cost to use Arrowhead Stadium as Election Day voting site

Super Bowl MVP Patrick Mahomes played a large role in making Arrowhead Stadium in Kansas City a polling location on Election Day by splitting the cost with the Chiefs.

Chiefs president Mark Donovan on Tuesday told reporters that the idea of voting at Arrowhead came up in a meeting, "and that launched the whole campaign to try to make it a reality."

Mahomes wanted people to come together to use their voice

"I thought it was very important not only just to get as many people out to vote as possible but also to use a place as Arrowhead where we have a lot of fun, show a lot of love and unity where people (are) coming together, and use that as a place where we can come together and vote and use our voice," Mahomes told Jim Trotter and Steve Wyche on the "Huddle and Flow" podcast.

"I thought Arrowhead was the perfect place for it, and the Chiefs were all on board with it."

Donovan said that they had several meetings that made the idea look good on paper, but the election board came back saying there were too many hurdles. One of them was the funds to purchase new voting machines.

"We finally had to go to them and say what's it going to take," Donovan said. "And that's really what launched the idea of purchasing new machines. And so we, the Chiefs organization, the Hunt family (the team owners) and Patrick Mahomes and his 15 and the Mahomies Foundation came together and said, 'If that's what it's going to take, we're committed to this point. Let's go.'"

The six-figure cost is split to make it happen

They ended up splitting the significant cost to make it happen.

"A six-figure investment by us that not only will legitimately impact the community today but will impact this community for years and years to come -- hopefully 10 years to come -- where these machines will continue to be used," Donovan continued.

He said he thinks voting at Arrowhead may become a regular thing in the future.

"We'll work with the election board on exactly how we can expand and what makes the most sense in terms of how many elections. We actually were having that conversation earlier today in between voting activities. And like I said, if you actually come here and see what we're doing and how we're doing it, there's a lot of interest in utilizing this a lot more," he said.

Missouri S&T to the Chiefs: The story of Tershawn Wharton's unconventional path to NFL

Sam McDowell

KC Star

In small-town Macon, Missouri, a high school football coach often tells stories about a former athlete from a previous job. He shares them so often, in fact, that he wonders if his players have grown tired of hearing about a guy they've never met. But who cares?

It's just that every time coach Jameson Allen wants to illustrate a point, he feels he has the perfect example. The weight room immersion? The importance of academics? The desire and drive? Allen would prefer to show the end result, not simply talk about it, and the final product points to one guy.

Tershawn Wharton.

He's now a rookie defensive lineman with the Chiefs, a man who spent most of his life assuming talent alone would not get him to the NFL because, frankly, many didn't think he had enough of it. But now that he's here, he's excelling — Pro Football Focus ranks him as the third-best defensive rookie in football.

And here's where we remind you that he went undrafted in April.

"Nobody knew the potential that I had," Wharton said. "I feel like it was an opportunity that I just took and ran with."

Wharton traveled the more unusual path to the NFL. On paper, anyway. Those who knew him best always saw this coming because they knew he always saw it coming. And dare they doubt him.

Wharton couldn't find Division I interest as a senior at University City in St. Louis, even as the offers rolled in for a teammate on the defensive line who would wind up at Oklahoma. He settled at Missouri S&T, a school better known for churning out engineers than football players.

"No matter what people think about you," said Allen, who coached Wharton at University City. "if you work harder than you think need to work, dreams can come true. He is the prototypical example."

It wasn't that anyone thought badly of him. They just didn't think of him at all.

Until he made them.

'TREMENDOUS EFFORT'

The Chiefs were on Wharton about as long as any NFL team. They had scouts watching him soon after his breakout sophomore season at Missouri S&T — a school-record 21 tackles for loss and 13 1/2 sacks — and the in-person reviews backed the numbers.

Their scouts liked him, enough to convince the Chiefs front office and coaches to invest more time. And when Wharton didn't hear his name called during NFL Draft weekend, the Chiefs offered him a deal.

But before setting expectations that he would contribute as a rookie — or even make the roster, for that matter — they wanted proof he belonged.

On the first day of practice, Chiefs general manager Brett Veach made the rounds on the field, position group to position group, and spotted Wharton.

"He was really twitchy, athletic, worked his tail off," Veach said.

OK, Veach thought, but let's see how he does once we put the pads on.

Wharton passed that, too.

OK, Veach thought, but let's move him up against the first- and second-stringers in practice and see if he can still hold his own.

Passed that, too.

"He just kind of answered every bell and flashed it at every step of the way," Veach said.

They made him prove it. Wharton wouldn't have it any other way.

The Division I programs thought of him as too raw as a high school senior. They thought he was undersized for a defensive lineman. His arms weren't long enough, some said. But when he signed with a Division II program, he told friends he would still one day make the NFL. Didn't care who believed it.

So when some teammates took spring and summer breaks in the offseason, he hired personal trainers. He wasn't working simply to better himself against his current competition. He was already preparing for what he might see in the NFL.

"His first semester here, he put on about 25 or 30 pounds, and I'll tell you what, he wasn't adding fat," Missouri S&T head coach Todd Drury said. "He just blossomed in the weight room.

"He understand that it's such a small percentage of players who make it to that next level, so it takes more than just ability. We had those conversations really early because that was already on his mind."

Wharton is quiet but determined, his former coaches say. A gentle giant, Allen describes him. He never needed to be pushed.

In fact, in high school, Allen relished the chance to give a fiery pregame speech for the purpose of "looking into my players eyes and seeing who was ready to play." Wharton didn't react much. On the field, though, "his motor was non-stop," Allen said.

When Drury first dug into his film as he recruited him, that was the first thing he noticed.

"Tremendous effort," Drury said. "He was really just running to the football play after play after play.

"That's something that's never changed."

More effective as he's aged, though. He had 35 1/2 sacks in college. He impressed enough that after his sophomore year, Division I programs finally called.

Too late, he told him.

"You're always a little nervous when you bring your best player in your office and you ask him about transferring," Drury said. "But Tershawn is one of the most loyal people you'll ever meet."

Wharton's phone rang multiple times after the draft. Teams were interested. At some point that evening, he FaceTimed with Drury.

"I'm going to the Chiefs!" he said.

Drury didn't need to ask the reason. He already knew.

The Chiefs had been on him early.

'I ALREADY MADE THIS TEAM'

The Chiefs coaching staff met nightly during training camp, grading every player and every play as they compiled cases for their 53-man roster. The hardest decisions, Veach would later say, came along the defensive line. The front office had viewed it as their deepest position group. Good players would be cut.

And yet, long before, an undrafted rookie from a Division II program was telling those close to him he had already made the team.

"Yeah, I mean, early on in training camp, I asked him how cuts were going to work with the COVID situation, and he said, 'I already made this team. I'm not thinking about that,'" Drury said. "He was locked in. He wanted to show who he was and not worry about getting cut. That's who he is."

It's who he's had to be. His mind is trained that way now, a history of prove-it-or-lose-it circumstances molding his approach.

After a few days of training camp, Chiefs defensive line coach Brendan Daly moved Wharton up to practice against the offensive starters. He often matched up with guard Kelechi Osemele, a former All-Pro. He won a few reps.

"When you get picked up, you feel like you belong automatically," Wharton said. "You're playing with champions. Competing every day, the more and more I made a few plays in training camp, I realized, 'Oh, I can do this.'"

Steadily, the playing time keeps advancing. Wharton has played at least half the defensive snaps in three consecutive games, leaving an imprint on each. He forced a fumble in Denver, a play that, unsurprisingly, derived mostly from effort. He recorded his first career sack a week later against the Jets, using a stunt that he often ran in college.

"His work ethic and the way he handles the day-to-day operation, you would not know this guy is a rookie," Daly said. "You would not know that this guy came from a small school, to be quite honest with you. He has a professional demeanor and work ethic — a maturity about him that's beyond his years."

Wharton is the third-highest rated defensive rookie in the NFL, according to Pro Football Focus, which grades him at 71.3. That trails only Washington defensive end Chase Young (73.4), the second overall pick, and Colts safety Julian Blackmon (72.2), a third-round pick. There were 122 other defensive players drafted, Wharton not among them.

It's getting harder and harder to believe that at every stage of his football life, he's somehow hovered beneath the radar.

Not with the Chiefs. Their scouts marveled at his audition in the East-West Shrine Game against some of the top college draft prospects in the country. He dominated one-on-one pass rush drills. A physical presence in the run drills, too.

The proverbial measurables didn't favor him. The low bar for arm length for a defensive lineman, for example, is considered about 32 inches, and even that would be a red flag. At his Pro Day, Wharton measured 31 1/4 inches.

But when Daly saw him play, at the urging of the scouting department, he kept coming back to one thing.

The effort.

"It's not the way (most) go," Wharton said. "But it was always the plan. It was always the childhood dream. Just being (at a Division II school), I knew I would have to work harder."
