2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – DANE BRUGLER

Last Updated: April 16, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

This is my fourth mock draft of the 2026 draft cycle, and it's the fourth time Mendoza is at No. 1, unsurprisingly. The Heisman Trophy winner will be the first player drafted next Thursday and should immediately increase optimism around the Raiders' organization.

2. New York Jets

Arvell Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

A pass rusher, be it Reese or David Bailey, appears to be the Jets' favorite. Reese isn't a tweener — he is a “whatever you want him to be” edge defender. He can set an edge, play off or be a full-time pass rusher. That type of hybrid skill set can be utilized.

3. Arizona Cardinals

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

It won't be surprising if the Cardinals use this pick on a pass rusher such as Bailey, but the idea of securing their right tackle position for the foreseeable future will be an appealing option. It will be interesting to see if the Cardinals receive any viable trade offers to move back.

4. Tennessee Titans

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

Head coach Robert Saleh wants to collect pass rushers and have a healthy defensive line rotation. (In his four seasons at the Jets' helm, the team drafted a first-round pass rusher twice.) It's not a hard sell on why Bailey makes sense for Tennessee.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – DANE BRUGLER

5. New York Giants

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

Over John Harbaugh's 18 years as head coach in Baltimore, the Ravens drafted nine positions in Round 1, including safety (three times). Though using a top-five pick for that position is uncommon, Downs has rare football intelligence and (despite not testing in any drills) is above the line in terms of on-field athleticism.

6. Dallas Cowboys (from CLE)

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

Projected trade: Browns receive Nos. 12, 20 and a 2027 fourth-round pick; Cowboys receive Nos. 6 and 39

The Cowboys could sit at No. 12 and have an impact defender fall to them, but it won't be surprising if the organization gets aggressive. Styles would not only be an immediate starter at a position of need, but also wear the green dot as a rookie.

In this projected trade, the Cowboys surrender two of the first-rounders they hold this year (plus a 2027 pick), but they get back into Round 2.

7. Washington Commanders

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

A backfield that includes Jayden Daniels and Love would be bad news for defenses. Though the price tag is high for the position, Love has the talent to become a top-five running back before the end of his rookie contract.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – DANE BRUGLER

8. New Orleans Saints

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

Pass rusher or cornerback are attractive options here, but the Saints urgently need to find upgrades at wide receiver — especially as they figure out if quarterback Tyler Shough is a short-term stopgap or a long-term answer.

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Rueben Bain Jr., EDGE, Miami

Bain is one of the more polarizing prospects in this draft (for multiple reasons). But his profile fits Kansas City and would give defensive coordinator Steve Spagnuolo an inside-outside disruptor on the defensive line.

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

The Bengals have drafted several first-round cornerbacks over the years, but never in the top 15. That streak could come to an end with Styles and the top-tier pass rushers off the board in this scenario. Delane would be one helluva consolation prize.

11. Miami Dolphins

Keldric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

First-year general manager Jon-Eric Sullivan spent the past 20 years in the Green Bay organization, and there is plenty about Faulk's profile that screams "Packers." His speed and length on the edge at 275 pounds would make for a promising building block on a rebuilding roster.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – DANE BRUGLER

12. Cleveland Browns (from DAL)

Spencer Fano, OT, Utah

Mendoza going No. 1 and the Browns looking to trade back — those are about the only two things we for sure know will be happening early in Round 1. Fano will be high on the Browns' wish list if they stick and pick at No. 6, and he's a no-brainer at No. 12 in this trade-back scenario.

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

The Rams could go in several directions here, but wide receiver is the most fun outcome and makes sense for the organization long term. Plenty of evaluators around the league believe a fully healthy Tyson would be in the mix for WR1 in this class. That he was limited during the draft process might not matter as much to the Rams as it might for others.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

Despite the departures of Isaiah Likely and Charlie Kolar, tight end isn't a major need with Mark Andrews still at the top of Baltimore's depth chart. But Sadiq is more of a dynamic asset who can line up across the formation and block his tail off. He would give Baltimore a multidimensional pass catcher.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – DANE BRUGLER

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Vega loane, G, Penn State

Edge rusher and linebacker are arguably Tampa Bay's top two areas of need, but do the Bucs see any prospect — at either position — worthy of this spot? They are in a position to go best player available here, which might be loane, who would provide an immediate upgrade at left guard.

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

The Jets not having a player with more than 400 receiving yards last season still blows my mind. Lemon doesn't have elite size or speed, but he is extremely quarterback-friendly with his route manipulation and toughness.

17. Detroit Lions

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

Though he's inexperienced in areas, Freeling is an ascending player with above-average size and athletic traits. The Lions have short-term options opposite Penei Sewell, but Freeling has the talent to earn his way onto the field at some point during his rookie season.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

McCoy is a tough player to project in a mock draft — some teams are comfortable with his 2025 knee injury, while others won't consider him in the first round. I don't know how the Vikings feel, but adding his level of talent to a Brian Flores defense would be fun to watch.

19. Carolina Panthers

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

As Carolina continues to build its defense, Thieneman has the versatility that will speak to general manager Dan Morgan and the Panthers coaches. He would upgrade both the coverage and run defense from day one.

20. Cleveland Browns (from DAL via GB)

KC Concepcion, WR, Texas A&M

Draft the offensive lineman first, then the receiver? Or vice versa? The answer for Cleveland is debatable, but it works out well in this scenario. After selecting Fano earlier, adding Concepcion's dynamic inside-outside versatility is a good fit here.

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

Cooper would be an ideal complement next to DK Metcalf and Michael Pittman Jr. in the Steelers offense. With his ball skills and run-after-catch ability, Cooper is dangerous out of the slot as a catch-and-create player.

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Akheem Mesidor, EDGE, Miami

The Chargers have an ascending pass rusher in Tuli Tuipulotu, but short-term contracts and unproven players are mostly behind him on the depth chart. Because of his age and other factors, Mesidor has some question marks, but he is an NFL-ready disruptor.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – DANE BRUGLER

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

This pairing has been mocked to death, and I almost changed it just for variety's sake. But it makes sense for Philadelphia. Proctor can compete for a starting role at guard as a rookie, while also giving the Eagles a long-term succession plan behind right tackle Lane Johnson.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

The Toledo coaches brought McNeil-Warren from Florida to Ohio, and the Browns would love to keep him in the state. He is a tall, rangy safety with the athleticism and ball skills that will translate well to an NFL secondary.

25. Chicago Bears

T.J. Parker, EDGE, Clemson

The Bears have the edge rushers to line up today and play competitive football, but they would love to add another talented pass rusher to their rotation. Parker didn't quite have the 2025 season many expected, but his motor and leveraged power led to disruption against the pass and run.

26. Buffalo Bills

Malachi Lawrence, EDGE, UCF

The Bills' drafting history under general manager Brandon Beane has leaned more toward bigger defensive ends, so this would be a chance to go with a lighter, more explosive option. Though he's not super bendy, Lawrence has the initial burst and rush explosiveness to create problems for blockers.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Caleb Lomu, OT, Utah

I don't think the 49ers are going into draft night stressing that they must find a long-term solution at left tackle. But if the right player falls in their laps, it would make sense for them to go that direction — and Lomu could be that player. He is a work in progress (in several areas), but his athletic footwork and body control form a great foundation.

28. Houston Texans

Chase Bisontis, G, Texas A&M

Based on how much several teams like Bisontis, there is a good chance loane isn't the only guard drafted in the first round. The former Aggie is strong and efficient and would immediately push for starting reps as Houston continues to revamp its offensive line.

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Denzel Boston, WR, Washington

The Chiefs have used a top-60 draft pick at wide receiver in three of the past four drafts, but the position remains unsettled for them. Boston is a tall ball winner and would be somewhat of a pivot from what this team normally drafts early at the position.

30. Miami Dolphins (from DEN)

Chris Johnson, CB, San Diego State

I don't think anyone expects this pick to be a quarterback or running back, but every other position might be on the table as the Dolphins facelift their roster. Cornerback certainly falls in the “need” category, and Johnson has the talent and intangibles to be a cornerstone player on defense.

31. New England Patriots

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

With 54 starts over the last four seasons, Miller is this year’s iron-man prospect, which head coach Mike Vrabel will obviously appreciate. As long as Drake Maye is their quarterback, it will be impossible for the Patriots to devote too many resources to the offensive line.

32. Seattle Seahawks

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

Seattle enters draft weekend with just four draft picks, so this spot is a prime candidate to be dealt. But if the Seahawks stick and pick, a cornerback or edge rusher makes the most sense, given who will be available. Hood would offer ascending cover talent.

Last Updated: April 15, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

Las Vegas could theoretically turn the draft card in now and start celebrating the landing of its new franchise quarterback. Mendoza is accurate with the football, can pick up the sticks with his legs when necessary and is able to execute any NFL-level throw. Considering the Raiders have been among the bottom five in QBR over the past five seasons (44.8), there's no reason to overthink this. Let's get to the Jets at No. 2, where the draft really starts.

2. New York Jets

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

In my January mock draft, I had Ohio State linebacker Arvell Reese here. In February, I went with Ohio State safety Caleb Downs. Now, it's Bailey. These are all good options for a defense that could use a lot of help, but the Jets really need an instant impact edge rusher. They were 31st in sacks last season (26) and traded Jermaine Johnson, further thinning out the unit. They have to find foundational players off the edge. And Bailey is explosive and productive, posting 14.5 sacks (tied for first in the FBS), 71 pressures (second) and a 20.2% pressure rate (first) last season.

3. Arizona Cardinals

Arvell Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

New coach Mike LaFleur will want some foundational players on his defense, and Reese has a sky-high ceiling. He has extended experience at off-ball linebacker and off the edge, and Arizona could use him at either spot. His future is probably rushing the passer, though, and he had 6.5 sacks last season. The Cardinals -- who were in the bottom five in pressure rate (28.5%) last season – absolutely need someone such as Reese opposite Josh Sweat in a division that features some of the top NFL quarterbacks in Matthew Stafford, Sam Darnold and Brock Purdy.

4. Tennessee Titans

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

Will the Titans take the plunge? We haven't seen a running back go this early since Saquon Barkley went No. 2 eight years ago, but Love has the goods to come off the board in the top five. And while the case could easily be made that Tennessee has other, more important holes to fill on its roster, it'd be a mistake to look at Love solely as a traditional running back. He's a playmaker who can put a jolt in the Titans' offense in the backfield with quarterback Cam Ward. Love will break free for home runs; he will haul in tough catches when flexed outside; and he will power over defenders to extend drives.

With both of the top edge rushers off the board, we could see a new No. 1 running back ahead of Tony Pollard, Tyjae Spears and Michael Carter in Tennessee.

5. New York Giants

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

If things fall this way, the Giants will have a tough call to make on three Ohio State prospects. I could see Carnell Tate as the team's No. 2 receiver opposite Malik Nabers. I could certainly see Sonny Styles quarterbacking the defense from the middle linebacker spot. But I keep coming back to what Downs could do from the back end of this secondary. Next to Jevon Holland, his incredible instincts would pop in this defense. Downs would be the first safety taken in the top five since Eric Berry went to the Chiefs in 2010, and he'd be worth it.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

6. Dallas Cowboys (from CLE)

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

Let's have some fun here. Dallas and Cleveland each have two first-round picks coming into the draft, which gives those front offices some ability to maneuver. With an elite prospect still on the board, I have Cowboys owner Jerry Jones calling up Browns general manager Andrew Berry to try to make something happen. In this scenario, Dallas would trade pick Nos. 12 and 20 to Cleveland for Nos. 6 and 39. That means the Browns suddenly have three first-round picks. And it means the Cowboys can add.. Sonny Styles. Dallas wasn't stopping anyone last season. It allowed 6.1 yards per play, second worst in the NFL. It allowed 30.1 points per game, worst in the NFL. And it was far and away the league's least effective defense by EPA. We've all wondered whether the Cowboys would use both of their first-round picks on defense this month, but this trade up the board might have a greater impact, even if it means sacrificing one of those Day 1 selections. Styles is my No. 4 prospect, and he is explosive (43½-inch vertical jump), rangy (4.46 in the 40-yard dash) and productive (77 tackles last season).

7. Washington Commanders

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

The Commanders need defensive help, and Miami edge rusher Rueben Bain Jr. would have to get a look. But they also have their pick of the receiver class. Tate is currently my No. 2 receiver behind Arizona State's Jordyn Tyson, but he's atop a lot of receiver boards around the league and doesn't come with the same injury questions Tyson does.

Paired with another Ohio State product in Terry McLaurin, Tate would bring clean route running, reliability and some big-play ability. He averaged 17.2 yards per catch last season en route to 875 yards and nine trips to the end zone. Considering the Commanders would be relying on Luke McCaffrey, Treyton Burks and Dyami Brown behind McLaurin, this makes sense.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

8. New Orleans Saints

Rueben Bain Jr., EDGE, Miami

If the Commanders were to select Bain at No. 7, Tate could be the pick here. The boards in Washington and New Orleans might look similar in this range. But with Tate gone, there should be solid receiver options in Round 2 to fill the void opposite Chris Olave (spoiler!), so Bain fits. The Saints' defense is getting a bit of a refresh this offseason, and regardless of whether defensive end Cameron Jordan comes back, they need more youth and juice on the edge. Bain might have short arms for the position, but he also has immense power, plenty of explosion and the deep pass-rush toolbox to beat offensive tackles with consistency.

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

As Patrick Mahomes works back from his torn left ACL, the Chiefs' offense is seeking playmakers. Tight end Travis Kelce is back, but he's 36 years old. Veteran receiver Hollywood Brown is gone to the Eagles. Third-year wideout Xavier Worthy has flashed but scored only one touchdown last season. Where are the real difference-making pass catchers beyond Rashee Rice? We can't ignore Tyson's durability concerns, considering he missed a third of his possible college games because of injuries, but we also can't ignore his fantastic skill set when he is on the field. He makes tough catches in traffic and had 711 yards last season. I'm already picturing Mahomes buying time in the pocket and firing 50-50 balls to Tyson in the end zone.

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

This has become a pretty popular mock draft match, and it makes sense. Cam Taylor-Britt signed in Indianapolis, and the No. 2 corner spot opposite DJ Turner II is up for grabs in Cincinnati. The Bengals have to do something on defense to catch that unit up to the offense a bit; it allowed 7.8 yards per pass attempt in 2025, fourth worst in the league. Delane is technically sound, and he can make plays to get the defense off the field and put the ball in quarterback Joe Burrow's hands. Over four college seasons -- including three at Virginia Tech -- Delane had 27 pass breakups and eight interceptions.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

11. Miami Dolphins

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

The Dolphins entered this mock draft with 11 total picks, including seven in the first three rounds. They need them as they continue to make big changes under new leadership. One of the key components to a successful rebuild is shoring up the offensive tackle spots. Patrick Paul takes care of the left tackle spot, but there are questions at right tackle after Austin Jackson missed 11 games in 2025. Miami figures to have a run-heavy offense next season behind mobile quarterback Malik Willis and talented running back De'Von Achane, and Mauigoa would plow open some rushing lanes. If the Dolphins preferred, they could kick him inside, where I think he has a Pro Bowl ceiling.

12. Cleveland Browns (from DAL)

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

Cleveland is on the clock with the first of three Day 1 picks after the projected trade down. The two positions often associated with the Browns' early picks are wide receiver and offensive tackle. With the way the board fell, that probably means Proctor, Utah lineman Spencer Fano, USC receiver Makai Lemon or Indiana receiver Omar Cooper Jr. would be in the mix. Fano's future might be at guard, and the receiver class has more value in the early 20s, where the Browns pick two more times. So I'm going with Proctor.

He has been buzzy this month, and while his tape is a little inconsistent, the traits are all there. Proctor could lock down the left tackle spot for an offensive line undergoing big alterations.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

You might see Puka Nacua and Davante Adams on the Rams' depth chart and question them using a top-15 pick at receiver. But Adams turns 34 late in the 2026 season and is in the last year of his deal, and the receiver depth falls off dramatically after those two standouts. Besides, the Rams are again in win-now mode with quarterback Matthew Stafford on a year-to-year status at this point. General manager Les Snead has never shied away from going for it, and adding a tough-as-nails competitor with sure hands out of the slot could put this offense over the top in the team's quest for another Super Bowl.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Spencer Fano, OL, Utah

Taking Fano here would give Baltimore options. He could stick at his traditional position and become a swing tackle in Year 1 behind Ronnie Stanley and Roger Rosengarten before eventually taking a starter role. He could kick inside to guard and replace Andrew Vorhees. Or he could even be the team's next starting center after Tyler Linderbaum signed with the Raiders; Fano took snaps at the combine to show teams he could handle the pivot. No matter where he lines up, he has the size (6-foot-6, 311 pounds), agility and technique to keep quarterback Lamar Jackson's uniform clean. Fano didn't allow any sacks last season.

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

There's a chance we see more two-tight-end sets in Tampa Bay with coordinator Zac Robinson's offense coming to town and the loss of receiver Mike Evans in free agency. So, I'm not sweating the Cade Otton re-signing as a major deterrent to the Bucs looking at Sadiq as an option in the middle of Round 1. Sadiq is the clear top tight end in the draft class, and he was one of the biggest winners of the combine, running a 4.39 in the 40-yard dash at 241 pounds and leaping 43½ inches in the vertical. That explosion is obvious on the tape, too. He had 560 receiving yards last season, and a lot of it came after the catch.

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

After going defense at No. 2 with David Bailey, the Jets should take a look at the receiver class at No. 16. Just look at the depth chart. There's Garrett Wilson (coming off a knee injury) and then ... Adonai Mitchell? Isaiah Williams? No one on this team hit 400 receiving yards last season, and the Jets still haven't added another receiver this spring. It won't matter if it's Geno Smith, Ty Simpson or Joe Namath under center if the Jets can't find more pass-catching threats. Cooper had 937 yards and 13 touchdowns last season.

17. Detroit Lions

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

Freeling has a huge 6-7, 315-pound frame and long 34¾-inch arms, and he can erase pass rushers with his quickness and handwork. His 18 starts of experience might worry some teams, but I'd bet Detroit would be happy to land Freeling in this range. He has a ton of potential, and the Lions were 31st in pass block win rate last season (55.5%). Because Freeling played left tackle at Georgia, Penei Sewell could stick on the right side, too. Freeling would replace Taylor Decker at LT, with new signee Larry Borom also getting plenty of reps. It'd be a key move in getting this team back to the postseason.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

Along with many evaluators, I've been projecting Thieneman to Minnesota since before the combine. There's still uncertainty around Harrison Smith's status, but it's sort of irrelevant because the Vikings have to start planning for the future at safety whether or not Smith is back there in 2026. Defensive coordinator Brian Flores would have Thieneman lined up all over the place to create havoc. He can create turnovers (eight career interceptions), too.

19. Carolina Panthers

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

Carolina might decide to use this pick to help quarterback Bryce Young on offense. The 2023 No. 1 draft pick took a step forward last season, but the offense was still 25th in ESPN's Football Power Index. Even so, getting an impact safety to pair with Tre'veon Moehrig behind the Panthers' really solid cornerback duo could be the team's next savvy move on defense after signing edge rusher Jaelan Phillips and linebacker Devin Lloyd. And drafting McNeil-Warren would actually help Young -- by getting him the ball more often. McNeil-Warren had five interceptions and an incredible 10 forced fumbles over four seasons in college.

20. Cleveland Browns (from DAL via GB)

Denzel Boston, WR, Washington

Whether it's two or three first-rounders for the Browns, they have to leave Day 1 with a new receiver. Their receivers caught four touchdowns all season in 2025. But put Boston opposite Jerry Jeudy, and things are looking up. After all, Boston had 11 touchdowns himself last season. His dependable hands and ability to box out defenders with his strength make the quarterback's job a lot easier.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Vega loane, G, Penn State

I'm working off the assumption that Aaron Rodgers will be in black and yellow once more next season, but frankly, No. 21 is too early for Ty Simpson -- or any other QB -- regardless of what the depth chart looks like on April 23. I think it's more likely Pittsburgh takes a signal-caller on Day 2. Instead, the Steelers can use this pick to beef up the protection in front of their to-be-determined passer. loane plays with pure power, wrenching defenders out of the way. But he's also pretty swift on his feet at 6-4 and 320 pounds. He would be an easy swap for Isaac Seumalo, who left in free agency.

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Peter Woods, DT, Clemson

That sound you hear is the Chargers' brain trust collectively slamming the war room table when the Steelers snagged loane one pick before they came on the clock. Los Angeles gave up 60 sacks last season, tied for the second most. A lot of that had to do with the injuries to tackles Joe Alt and Rashawn Slater, and the Chargers did make a few moves on the interior in free agency, but that still has to be a focus for the team at the draft.

Let's pivot, though, to the interior on the other side of the ball. The Chargers signed Dalvin Tomlinson, but he's 32 years old. Woods could be a long-term fixture at 3-technique. He's as strong as they come, and he'd help plug the middle against the run and try to tap into his pass-rushing potential as he gets acclimated in the pros.

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

The Eagles don't typically let future needs become current problems. General manager Howie Roseman is tactful in how he keeps the roster stocked with depth and future replacements. The question here, though, is whether Roseman will add the next in line behind receiver A.J. Brown (trade candidate) or offensive tackle Lane Johnson (turning 36). The value is better for the latter in this projection, and Miller is a perfect fit after playing over 3,500 snaps at right tackle in college.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

This could be a good draft day for Cleveland. Proctor and Boston would tick the two biggest need boxes, and finding McCoy -- one of the top cornerback prospects in the class -- at No. 24 would be the cherry on top. Of course, McCoy hasn't played a football game since 2024; he tore his ACL in January 2025 and sat out all of last season. But the tape is really good, and his ball skills (six interceptions in two seasons at Oregon State and Tennessee) are tremendous. Denzel Ward, Tyson Campbell and McCoy would form a solid trio at the position.

25. Chicago Bears

Zion Young, EDGE, Missouri

The Bears' attempts to give Montez Sweat a running mate off the edge have fallen short, but Young could finally be the answer. He piled up 6.5 sacks, 46 pressures and 18 tackles for loss last season, showing a mix of power and quickness. The Bears are suddenly legit contenders in the NFC, but their 35 sacks last season tied for seventh fewest in the league. I mentioned this in my last mock draft -- in which I also had Young to Chicago -- but it's worth repeating: The Bears haven't used a top-50 pick on an edge rusher since Leonard Floyd went ninth in 2016. It's time to get a little more aggressive at the position during the draft.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

26. Buffalo Bills

Keldric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

Would the Bills consider another first-round cornerback after going with Maxwell Hairston in 2025? Would they continue to hammer the receiver position? Would they even consider a trade back if another team started seeing Ty Simpson fall?

All valid options for a perennial contender. But I have Buffalo taking a chance on a prospect with a ton of impressive physical traits and upside. Faulk is scheme-versatile, and he can make an impact in the pass rush and against the run. His production didn't take the expected jump last season (he went from seven sacks in 2024 to only two in 2025), but getting him in the building with Greg Rousseau and Bradley Chubb could unlock his potential.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Max Iheanachor, OT, Arizona State

The 49ers are still working toward a resolution with Trent Williams on his contract situation, but this pick works regardless of the outcome. The legendary left tackle is turning 38 during training camp this summer, meaning San Francisco has to think about the future no matter what. Iheanachor started 31 games in college, has long 33⁷/₈-inch arms and is quick out of his set. But he's also relatively new to football, having never played before 2022. He could use a little time to develop before eventually becoming the guy.

28. Houston Texans

Christen Miller, DT, Georgia

An already elite defense gets better. Houston can put Miller next to Sheldon Rankins on the interior to push the pocket and create more pass-rush opportunities outside for Will Anderson Jr. and Danielle Hunter. The other option would be considering an offensive lineman, but it'd be a slight reach to go get someone on the interior. So, let's keep this defense strong and replenished.

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

After opting for offense at No. 9, the Chiefs can use one of the picks they got back for Trent McDuffie to replace him. And after also losing Jaylen Watson in free agency, this cornerback room is really hurting for talent. Hood is long and physical, and he has had 17 pass breakups over the past two seasons. Kansas City could still add to the position beyond Hood with one or two of its seven remaining picks outside Round 1.

30. Arizona Cardinals (from MIA via DEN)

Ty Simpson, QB, Alabama

The Kyler Murray era is over, but I'm not putting a lot of stock in Jacoby Brissett and Gardner Minshew being anything more than bridge options. The Cardinals could absolutely wait until 2027 to find their next franchise QB, and this small trade up at the end of Round 1 wouldn't keep them from doing so anyway. But there's an opportunity for Arizona to land a talented passer at good value.

You might have heard that Simpson has started only 15 games, and that lack of experience is a concern. But he is also accurate, mobile and smart in the way he dissects opponent defenses. He threw 28 touchdown passes to only five interceptions last season. Why not take a swing at the most important position in the game?

31. New England Patriots

Akheem Mesidor, EDGE, Miami

Mesidor is supremely talented, with 12.5 sacks, 58 pressures and 11 run stops in 2025. But he's also 25 years old and has some injury history over his long six-year college career. If the Patriots are comfortable with the durability risk, they could absolutely use his production. Their 35 sacks tied for seventh fewest last season, and swapping in Dre'Mont Jones for K'Lavon Chaisson was the team's main change on the edge this offseason. Mesidor could quickly become a feared disruptor in the AFC East.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – MEL KIPER JR.

32. Seattle Seahawks

Jadarian Price, RB, Notre Dame

Seattle has to make every pick count, with four total selections (least in the league) and picking at the end of each round. I originally considered projecting Arizona to trade up into this spot simply because the Seahawks would welcome any additional draft capital, but I wasn't convinced we'd actually get an in-division trade like that involving a quarterback pick. Instead, Seattle stays home and closes out Round 1 with our second running back off the board.

Kenneth Walker III signed in Kansas City, and Zach Charbonnet is working back from a torn ACL. Price might not have been the RB1 at Notre Dame, but he can be one in the NFL. He's powerful and fast, averaging 6.0 yards per carry over his career and scoring 11 touchdowns last season.

Last Updated: April 15, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

As Albert Breer noted on our show last week, the Raiders' decision has been trending this way since the fall, and it was solidified when Dante Moore returned to Oregon. Since then, the process has been about confirming Mendoza as the guy with standard predraft checkpoints, including a recent Zoom with Tom Brady.

Behind the scenes, Mendoza has already been preparing for the transition, working with Brian Griese on the nuances of an NFL system (likely Klint Kubiak's). His private workout and visit in Bloomington functioned more like an early install than a typical predraft stop.

The Raiders have prepared for this the right way. Signing Kirk Cousins gives them a veteran bridge and allows Mendoza to develop on a proper timeline—very much in line with the Brady philosophy of not rushing young quarterbacks.

Mendoza is transitioning from a shotgun-heavy, RPO-based offense to a scheme where he'll take roughly 50 percent of his snaps under center, with an emphasis on wide zone play-action and quick, timing-based decisions. But there's nothing in Mendoza's background to suggest he won't handle it. It's just a new system, a new language, and a new pace. Las Vegas is committed to giving him the time he needs to develop.

2. New York Jets

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

This pick has come full circle. My early intel was Bailey to the Jets at no. 2 because he's the most proven pass rusher in the class. Then there were folks in the league who thought the Jets—as they're building for 2027, when they'll land their QB—might prefer the “higher upside” guy in Arvell Reese because they have time to develop him.

Now we're back to Bailey, and it's close to a foregone conclusion in NFL circles.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

While the Jets are miles away from playoff contention, HC Aaron Glenn needs to build positive momentum in 2026. Bailey gives them an elite pass rusher immediately. He'll take his lumps as a run defender, but the real value at edge (the league's second-most valued position) is pass rush production.

Pairing Bailey with Will McDonald IV will give the Jets a strong, young defensive foundation.

3. New Orleans Saints (from ARZ)

Arvell Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

Traded from ARZ: The Saints trade Nos. 8, 42, and a 2027 second-rounder to the Cardinals for No. 3. If the Saints stick and pick at No. 8, there's some buzz about Arizona State WR Jordyn Tyson being a favorite in the building. But defensively, edge and corner are clear priorities, and coordinator Brandon Staley is looking for very specific prototypes—guys with explosive burst off the edge and high-IQ cornerbacks with the versatility to pattern match and play both man and zone.

If they go corner, Mansoor Delane would be a clean fit, but because edge is the second-most premium position in the NFL behind only quarterback, moving up for Reese would make a lot of sense. If the price is right—I'm projecting pick No. 42 this year plus a 2027 second-rounder—it'd be exactly the type of deal that GM Mickey Loomis has never been shy about making. He even explained to us at the Senior Bowl why he believes so strongly in going up to get a player the Saints truly covet.

From Khalil Mack to Joey Bosa to Tuli Tuipulotu to Leonard Floyd to Chase Young, difference-making edge prospects come in different shapes, sizes, and 40 times, but they all share one trait: elite takeoff speed. Reese fits that mold. He may not be fully polished, but his 1.58-second 10-yard split (94th percentile over the past three drafts) shows up on tape with explosive get-off speed. Plus, Staley values versatility across all three levels, and Reese's background as an off-ball linebacker convert would give the defense real flexibility.

THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

4. Tennessee Titans

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

Similar to Bailey to the Jets at No. 2, Love to Tennessee at No. 4 was the sense I was getting coming out of the combine, and I probably shouldn't have moved away from it in Mock 3.0. Yes, the rookie salary scale would make Love a top-10-paid running back before he even takes an NFL handoff, and yes, there's a decade-long track record of top-10 RBs not winning a Super Bowl with the team that drafted them. But that's more an indictment of those organizations than of the players themselves, as Leonard Fournette, Christian McCaffrey, Saquon Barkley, and Bijan Robinson all landed in less-than-ideal situations early on.

This Titans situation is different. It's a new regime that has already reshaped the roster, particularly on defense, with the additions of Jermaine Johnson II, John Franklin-Myers, Alontae Taylor, and Cordale Flott. More importantly, they have a second-year quarterback in Cam Ward—now paired with Brian Daboll and an improved offensive line—who's in a critical stage of his development. At this point, it's about surrounding him with playmakers.

Love fits that vision perfectly. He's 6 feet and 212 pounds with excellent vision, power behind his pads, loose feet, and 4.36-second 40 speed, which makes him a high-end runner. But what really elevates him for Tennessee is his versatility. Love's dynamic impact in the passing game (10.4 yards per catch last season) and his reliability in pass protection make him a true three-down factor.

5. New York Giants

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

This pick is one of the clear pressure points in Round 1. I went back and forth between Mauigoa and LB Sonny Styles. John Harbaugh has a rich history of elite linebackers anchoring his defenses dating back to the Ray Lewis days, but with a young quarterback in Jaxson Dart, improving the offensive line has to be the priority. Giants quarterbacks were sacked 48 times last season (tied for 23rd) and pressured on 35 percent of dropbacks (25th).

I even reached out to former coaches and personnel who've worked with Harbaugh to get a sense of which way he might lean, and while linebacker and safety are important, there's a belief he would go offensive line in this scenario.

Taking Mauigoa after signing Jermaine Eluemunor—with both players capable of playing right tackle or sliding inside to guard—would give the Giants valuable flexibility to get their best five on the field. Mauigoa is massive, at 6 feet, 5 1/2 inches and 329 pounds, and he was a three-year starter and 2025 team captain at Miami. His arm length is a bit shorter than ideal, but it doesn't show up as a major issue on tape. He's a powerful run blocker with impressive range for his size, and he more than holds his own in pass protection.

6. Dallas Cowboys (from CLE)

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

Traded from CLE: The Cowboys trade Nos. 12, 92, and a 2027 second-rounder to the Browns for No. 6. Defensive coordinator Christian Parker covets athleticism and intelligence at linebacker for his scheme, and Styles checks both boxes. A former safety, Styles measured in at 6-foot-5 and 244 pounds (the biggest LB in the class) and still ran the fastest 40 (4.46 seconds, tied with Reese) and the fastest 10-yard split (1.56 seconds, tied with Namdi Obiazor) among LBs while also posting the top broad jump (11 feet, 2 inches) and setting a record for players 6-foot-4 or taller with a 43.5-inch vertical since 2003.

Beyond the off-the-charts testing, Styles is widely regarded as one of the smartest players in the draft. One executive told me that he'll run a company when his football days are over. He should step in and improve the football IQ of this defense and help clean up the play at the second and third levels.

If there's any question about the value in trading up for an off-ball linebacker, just look at what the Eagles did last year: Vic Fangio and Parker moved up for Jihaad Campbell, and his impact showed up immediately.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

7. New York Jets (from WAS)

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

Traded from WAS: The Jets trade Nos. 16, 44, and 140 to the Commanders for No. 7. The Jets have plenty of draft capital, and they're not interested in sitting back at 16 and watching the top three receivers come off the board. In this scenario, they use their second of two Round 2 picks (No. 44) and a fourth-rounder (No. 140) to move up and secure the most complete wide receiver in the class in Tate.

They were on the wrong side of history last season as the only team to play at least 16 games without a single receiver topping 400 yards (Garrett Wilson led the way with 395 in just seven games), and that has to change.

Tate brings the profile they're missing. He's over 6-foot-2 with massive 10 1/4-inch hands, which helped him secure 85.7 percent of his contested catch opportunities in 2025. He's not a pure burner, with 4.53-second 40 speed, but plenty of top NFL receivers have lived in that range, and Tate wins where it matters as an exceptional deep route runner with strong ball skills.

With Tate at X and a healthy Wilson at Z, the Jets would finally have the kind of perimeter firepower needed to stabilize the offense and properly support a future franchise quarterback from the loaded 2027 class.

8. Arizona Cardinals (from NO)

Spencer Fano, OT, Utah

This would be a home-run move for GM Monti Ossenfort. He lands the right tackle in Fano to help finish off the offensive line rebuild while also picking up additional draft capital this year (no. 42) and next year (Saints' second-rounder), giving Arizona real flexibility to get aggressive in its pursuit of a franchise quarterback in 2026 and/or 2027.

Arizona's issues up front were clear last season, as it allowed the fifth-most sacks in the league (59) and struggled to run effectively outside the tackles. Fano directly addresses both problems and helps an improving unit that added Isaac Seumalo in free agency.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

The discussion about Fano's arm length is real, but that hasn't shown up as a major issue on tape. He started 12 games at left tackle as a freshman and then logged 24 starts at right tackle over the past two seasons. He's an excellent athlete who has consistently protected at a high level, and his mobility was a key factor in Utah's outside run and screen games. At 6 feet, 5 1/2 inches and 311 pounds, Fano tied for the fastest 40-yard dash among offensive tackles over the past three years, and his 32-inch vertical (72nd percentile) highlights his lower-body explosiveness.

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

Don't rule out a move up for the Chiefs—they've spent significant time evaluating top pass rushers Bailey and Reese. It also wouldn't be a surprise if Rueben Bain Jr. were the pick here, and there have been some rumblings about interest in Kenyon Sadiq as well. As usual, Brett Veach is doing a great job of keeping everyone outside the building guessing.

That said, I've been getting a lot of questions from teams about Tyson and where he might land, which is typically my biggest indicator that a player's going earlier than expected. The long-term questions about his knee aren't as big a concern in Kansas City as they might be elsewhere, as the Chiefs are looking to win now with Patrick Mahomes still in his prime.

A healthy Tyson is arguably the best wide receiver in the class. He's a 6-foot-2-plus target who consistently separates and is a reliable option (1.6 percent drop rate last season), traits that Mahomes desperately needs at the position.

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

The Bengals' defensive issues were clear last season, as they allowed 7.8 yards per attempt (29th) and 33 passing touchdowns (tied for 29th). There's a strong case to be made for addressing the front with more pass rush help, which could put Rueben Bain

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

Jr. in play. Cornerback is arguably a bigger need, making Mansoor Delane a logical option as well.

But the prevailing feeling around the league is that Cincinnati won't pass on the opportunity to draft an Ohio State star in this spot, and Downs is more than worthy of the 10th overall pick. His game draws comparisons to two of the best safeties of the modern era: Eric Berry and Earl Thomas, both top-15 picks who went on to multiple Pro Bowls.

11. Miami Dolphins

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

Delane is the best player available in this scenario, and Jeff Hafley would be thrilled to land him. The Virginia Tech transfer thrived in his lone season at LSU, developing into a true shutdown corner while excelling in both man and zone coverage. He's exactly the type of versatile, high-IQ defensive back that Hafley values in his aggressive, disguise-heavy scheme that leans on mixed coverages.

What stands out most on Delane's tape is his football intelligence—particularly how seamlessly he transitions from man to zone—along with how natural and effortless he looks when the ball is in the air. The testing backs it up, too, as the 6-foot, 187-pound corner boosted his stock with a high-4.3 run at LSU's pro day.

12. Cleveland Browns (from DAL)

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

I've been told by multiple sources that the Browns have significant interest in Proctor. Taking him at no. 6 would be a reach, and he likely wouldn't make it to 24, so this becomes a logical solution. By moving back just six spots, Cleveland picks up no. 92 (Round 3) and a future second-rounder (valuable capital for a potential QB move in 2027) from Dallas while still landing a player it views as the potential final piece of its offensive line overhaul.

Proctor's evaluation is a bit of a roller coaster. The tape is inconsistent, and the weight fluctuation—from around 390 pounds to 365 during the season to 352 at the combine—raises legitimate concerns. But at 6 feet, 6 5/8 inches and 352 pounds, he's a rare mover, posting a 5.21-second 40 and a 32.5-inch vertical. Offensive tackle is a traits-driven position, and Cleveland is an analytics-driven organization. This is exactly the kind of bet it's willing to make.

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

All chips are in on the Rams' 2027 season, and Lemon is the best available prospect to support that plan. He may not have elite size or top-end speed for the position, but he's built "Ram tough," he's as reliable as it gets at the catch point, and he consistently generates yards after the catch with excellent contact balance and body control.

The production backs up the tape: Lemon averaged over 3.0 yards per route run against both man and zone coverage during his college career. Since 2021, only five other receivers have done that: Jaxon Smith-Njigba, Jaylen Waddle, D'Wayne Eskridge, Ja'Marr Chase, and DeVonta Smith.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Rueben Bain Jr., EDGE, Miami

The Miami edge is a power-based, relentless defender who produced at a high level in 2025 (54 tackles, 15.5 TFL, 9.5 sacks, plus a forced fumble and an interception). Adding him to a group that already includes Trey Hendrickson, Tavius Robinson, and Mike Green would give Baltimore a much-needed boost off the edge after finishing with just 30 sacks last season (tied for the third fewest in the NFL).

From what I've been told, Bain could still go as high as no. 9 to Kansas City, but his arm length is a real concern and may contribute to a draft-day slide (no edge with sub-31-inch arms has gone in the first round in at least two decades). It's worth noting that teams have known about and investigated Bain's involvement in a fatal 2024 car crash for months, so this projected slide is not a reflection of that news.

Guard Vega loane and TE Kenyon Sadiq are also very much in play for the Ravens here.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Akheem Mesidor, EDGE, Miami

Improving the pass rush is an absolute must for Todd Bowles's defense. Mesidor brings exactly what they're missing—he's a polished, productive pass rusher with a deep arsenal of moves, change-of-direction quickness, violent hands, and a relentless motor. There are some age and durability concerns (he'll be a 25-year-old rookie and has dealt with various injuries), but this is a team focused on the present, not a second contract. And from what I've heard, most teams view his durability risk as moderate.

Production-wise, he checks out. He had 12.5 sacks, a 21.3 percent pass rush win rate (just behind Bain and Bailey in this class), and four forced fumbles in his final college season. That's the type of impact the Bucs need off the edge.

16. Washington Commanders (from NYJ via IND)

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

By moving back from No. 7 to No. 16, Washington is able to recoup its second-round pick while adding an extra fourth-rounder, bringing its total draft capital to eight selections.

The bigger picture is this: The Commanders have a young star at quarterback in Jayden Daniels but not nearly enough playmaking talent around him. New OC David Blough is looking for size and run-after-the-catch physicality on the outside, and Cooper checks those boxes.

He would step in as an immediate starter, and his inside-out versatility would give Blough flexibility in three-receiver sets, where Cooper could work alongside Terry McLaurin and either Luke McCaffrey, Jaylin Lane, or Deebo Samuel.

With or without the 30-year-old Samuel, there's a clear role here for Cooper, as neither Treyton Burks nor Van Jefferson nor Dyami Brown has reached even 30 catches in any of the past three seasons. Cooper's physicality, toughness, strength through the catch, and ability to generate YAC with contact balance and body control make him an ideal fit.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

He'd line up opposite McLaurin and give Daniels a big, reliable target who can consistently win in contested situations.

17. Detroit Lions

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

The Lions had one of the worst pass-protecting offensive lines in the NFL last season, and you could argue that no high-level starting quarterback was more affected by pressure than Jared Goff. Fixing that has to be a priority.

Proctor is the tackle most commonly mocked to Detroit, and while his traits might be more enticing, Miller's tape is far more consistent.

Miller is 6 feet, 6 3/4 inches and 317 pounds with 34 1/4-inch arms, and he ran a 5.04-second 40, posted a 32-inch vertical (72nd percentile among the last three OT classes), and put up 32 bench reps (the best among offensive linemen at the last three combines).

He also brings experience and reliability, with 54 career starts, and is widely viewed as one of the highest-character players in the class. He's all about consistency and grit, which makes him a natural culture fit for Dan Campbell's Lions.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Denzel Boston, WR, Washington

The Vikings had real issues catching the football last season, and the situation hasn't exactly improved. With Jalen Nailor now in Las Vegas, they're currently planning to give Tai Felton and his three rookie receptions a starting role. That's a problem.

This pick might feel a bit rich for Boston but based on conversations I had with a couple of teams over the weekend, the gap between him, KC Concepcion, and Omar Cooper Jr. isn't nearly as wide for some teams as the draft community may think.

It really comes down to stylistic preference, and for Minnesota, the need is clear: a big, physical outside receiver to complement Justin Jefferson and Jordan Addison.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

Boston fits that mold perfectly. His ball skills—including a 77 percent contested catch rate—stand out, and he brings the size and physicality this offense is missing. He also pairs well with a mobile quarterback thanks to his natural feel for uncovering downfield in scramble situations. As the new era begins with Kyler Murray under center, this would be a strong, clean fit.

19. Carolina Panthers

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

Only the Jets and Buccaneers got fewer receiving yards from their tight ends than Carolina last season (638), so there's a clear need for a difference-maker at the position who can help Bryce Young attack the seams and the middle of the field. Sadiq may not grade out quite as high as Tyler Warren or Colston Loveland did a year ago, but if you're comparing the three purely from an athletic standpoint, he's the most explosive.

That athleticism shows up on tape and was on full display at the combine, where he ran a 4.39-second 40 (an all-time record for tight ends) and posted a 43-inch vertical and 11-foot-1 broad jump—both in the 97th percentile among TEs over the past three years.

20. Dallas Cowboys (from GB)

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

Dallas addressed its linebacker need earlier in this exercise, so now the focus shifts to the secondary. The Cowboys gave up 35 passing touchdowns last season—second most in the NFL behind only the Jets (36)—so getting help on the back end is a priority.

There's been plenty of buzz linking the Cowboys to safeties such as Caleb Downs and Dillon Thieneman, so it wouldn't be surprising if they picked Thieneman if he's available.

That said, you could make a strong argument that cornerback is the bigger need, and McCoy offers outstanding value here. He's a top-10 talent who slides to no. 20 largely due to concerns about his knee after he tore his ACL, PCL, and MCL in January 2025. He looked excellent at Tennessee's pro day—running in the 4.3s and moving well in position drills—but medical evaluations remain mixed.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

When healthy, McCoy is a sudden, fast ball hawk with real toughness. He may not be quite at the level that prospects like Patrick Surtain II and Derek Stingley Jr. were, but he's not far off—comfortably in that next tier.

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Vega loane, G, Penn State

This would be a dream scenario for the Steelers, especially with Pittsburgh hosting the 2026 NFL draft. Not every fan base would be thrilled about taking a guard in Round 1, but this city would absolutely embrace it—particularly with loane stepping in to replace veteran Isaac Seumalo at left guard.

At 6 feet, 4 1/4 inches and 320 pounds, loane is a powerful, physical presence who consistently moves defenders in the run game. He's not an elite athlete, but he more than makes up for that with awareness, balance, and play strength, grading out as a high-level pass protector.

22. Chicago Bears (from LAC)

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

Traded from LAC: The Bears trade Nos. 25 and 129 to the Chargers for No. 22. Last season, the Bears allowed 61 completions of 20-plus yards (second most in the NFL) and 13 passing touchdowns of 20-plus yards (tied for the most), and four of their top five defensive backs in snaps—Jaquan Brisker, Kevin Byard, Nahshon Wright, and C.J. Gardner-Johnson—are now gone.

Thieneman brings the range and coverage ability to help clean up those numbers and fill a positional need immediately. He's both the best player available on my board and the type of rangy, coverage-oriented safety that DC Dennis Allen wants.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

I love this fit. Lane Johnson missed the final eight games of the 2025 season with a Lisfranc injury—including the wild-card loss to the 49ers—and will be 36 at the start of the regular season.

This is the perfect time to plan for the future at offensive tackle. Freeling isn't polished after just 18 starts at Georgia, but he has elite traits worth developing.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

KC Concepcion, WR, Texas A&M

The Browns addressed offensive tackle earlier in the round, so now the focus shifts to adding a (badly needed) playmaker. In 2025, Cleveland's receivers were last in the league in receptions (117), receiving yards (1,467), receiving touchdowns (four), and first downs (68).

Enter Concepcion, who would step in immediately as a reliable, big-play option in the slot. Isaiah Bond has flashed some upside, but with just 18 catches last season, he's difficult to rely on in a starting role right now and is better suited as a WR4 or WR5.

It's also worth noting that the league is higher on Concepcion than the public thinks. Many teams I've spoken with have him graded as a WR4 or WR5 in this class. The main concern is his tendency to drop passes in traffic, but outside of that, he's a dynamic YAC threat who found pay dirt 30 times over the past three seasons. His ability to transition quickly up field after the catch, combined with his vision and stop-start quickness, really stands out on tape.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

25. Los Angeles Chargers (from CHI)

Chris Johnson, CB, San Diego State

The Chargers have more pressing needs at IOL, IDL, and edge—I get it. But with Vega loane off the board and the considerable depth at defensive tackle on day two, this feels like a spot where they can pivot. I've gone with Keldric Faulk here in the past, but this time I'm leaning Johnson in a bit of a surprise pick that would elevate a cornerback room that's solid but unspectacular.

Donte Jackson was the top performer in that group last season, while Tarheeb Still and Cam Hart—both 2024 fifth-round picks—continued to develop. Adding Johnson, who is generating more buzz in league circles than people probably realize, would give the Chargers an immediate upgrade and long-term stability at the position in a division featuring Patrick Mahomes, Bo Nix, and now Fernando Mendoza.

As for why Johnson over Colton Hood, who ranks higher on many boards, it comes down to scheme fit. DC Chris O'Leary leans heavily on zone-match concepts, which align perfectly with Johnson's strengths: quick processing, man-zone versatility, ball skills, and physicality in the run game.

26. Buffalo Bills

Keldric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

I get the strong sense that the Bills would like to add a wide receiver here, but it's hard to see them moving up without a second-round pick, and in this scenario, six receivers are already off the board. Even for those in the room pushing for another target for Josh Allen, there are a few important factors to consider.

First, although Buffalo won't pick again until no. 91, there will likely be impact receivers (think Malachi Fields, Elijah Sarratt, or Deion Burks) available there. Second, Faulk represents excellent value at no. 26. The production at Auburn wasn't eye-popping, and I understand why some scouts question his ceiling as a pass rusher, but his skill set is unique, he just turned 21, and, at minimum, he's already a very strong run defender.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

Third—and most importantly—the Bills have a real pass rush problem, and that’s not something Allen can fix. They ranked 27th in pass rush win rate (31 percent) last season and managed just one sack across two playoff games. Even if you’re skeptical about Faulk’s pass rush upside, his ability to hold up against the run will help keep the rotation fresh and create better situations for others to get after the quarterback.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Caleb Lomu, OT, Utah

This is a forward-thinking move for San Francisco. The 49ers would draft Lomu with the plan to develop him into the starting left tackle by 2027, as Trent Williams is set to turn 38 in a few months.

Lomu shows impressive natural instincts for the position, though he’s still relatively inexperienced, with just 24 starts (all at left tackle) over the past two seasons.

He’s a bit high-cut and could stand to add more bulk, but he’s a high-level athlete with the quickness, balance, and mirroring ability you look for at the position.

I don’t see him kicking inside to guard in 2026, but that’s up to Kyle Shanahan and his staff. Either way, this is good business. Draft, develop, and have your next left tackle ready to go on a rookie deal for four years.

28. Houston Texans

Max Iheanachor, OT, Arizona State

The Texans already have one of the most complete rosters in the NFL—now the focus is getting C.J. Stroud back to his rookie form. The best way to do that is by ensuring the protection and run game remain strong. Houston added RT/OG Braden Smith and RB David Montgomery to pair with Woody Marks, but bringing in a young tackle such as Iheanachor would help solidify the foundation long term.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

Iheanachor gives Houston flexibility to get its best five offensive linemen on the field—potentially with him at right tackle and Smith kicking inside to guard—a competition that would sort itself out in training camp.

He's still developing, particularly working on his hand placement and occasional lunging, which makes sense given that he's relatively new to football after growing up in Nigeria and not playing high school football. But the traits are undeniable, and his progression in a short amount of time has been impressive.

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

The Chiefs feel confident that they can scheme around their current cornerback group, even after losing Trent McDuffie (trade) and Jaylen Watson (free agency) to the Rams. But if Hood—who would be a clean man-to-man fit in Steve Spagnuolo's system—falls into this range, the pick may be too good a value to pass up.

Hood brings a physical, aggressive play style with the ability to turn and run vertically (verified 4.44-second 40 speed). He's still developing his instincts when the ball is in the air, but the traits, competitiveness, and confidence are all there for him to grow into a high-level starter.

30. Arizona Cardinals (from MIA via DEN)

Ty Simpson, QB, Alabama

Traded via MIA: The Cardinals trade Nos. 34, 143, and 183 to the Dolphins for No. 30. Simpson's strengths and flaws have been dissected to no end, so rather than rehashing all of that, here's the logic for Arizona.

The Jets have interest, but I don't get the sense they're willing to move up—they'll likely sit at 33 and see if he's still on the board. It's not a lock they'd take him, but he'd definitely be in play for them.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

That creates an opportunity for Arizona. After trading down from no. 3 to no. 8 and adding extra capital this year and in a QB-rich 2027 class, they're in a position to take a calculated swing. The cost (a fifth- and sixth-round pick) is minimal, and they'd land a quarterback with legitimate starting upside who fits first-year HC Mike LaFleur's system. Just as importantly, it would give them a full year to evaluate Simpson internally before deciding how aggressive they want to be in next year's quarterback market.

31. New England Patriots

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

This is a strong value pick late in Round 1. McNeil-Warren is one of three potential first-round prospects the Patriots brought in for a 30 visit, and if last year is any indication, that matters, as the majority of Mike Vrabel and Eliot Wolf's picks came from that visit pool.

New England did add Kevin Byard in free agency after losing Jaylinn Hawkins, but Byard is 32 and on a one-year deal, so there's still a long-term need at the position.

While the offensive and defensive lines may be higher priorities—especially if the anticipated A.J. Brown move happens after June 1—this pick checks both the value and future need boxes.

McNeil-Warren has average top-end speed and comes from a non-P4 program, but he's a smooth mover with quick processing, toughness, and confidence—all traits the Patriots likely valued during his visit. He's also a proven playmaker, finishing 2025 with five pass breakups, three forced fumbles, and two interceptions.

32. Seattle Seahawks

T.J. Parker, EDGE, Clemson

A lot of people want to plug Jadarian Price in here as Seattle's immediate replacement for Kenneth Walker III, and while I wouldn't rule it out entirely, it feels a bit rich at this spot.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE RINGER – TODD McSHAY

More likely, GM John Schneider will stay patient and let the board come to him, targeting the highest-graded player at RB, CB, or edge. And if the right trade-back opportunity doesn't materialize, Parker would make a lot of sense.

Parker was viewed as an ascending talent entering the 2025 season, but things didn't quite go as planned (which was the case for several Clemson prospects). NFL teams seem to think there were some off-field factors—including getting married during the season and adjusting to a new defensive coordinator—that contributed to the uneven year.

Physically, though, the traits are clear. At 6 feet, 3 1/2 inches and 263 pounds with 33 1/8-inch arms and verified 4.68-second 40 speed, Parker is a power-based edge who can collapse the pocket and set a strong edge against the run. Based on his 2024 tape and Senior Bowl performance, he still profiles as a first-round talent, making this a potential high-value pick for Seattle, and one that helps offset the loss of Boye Mafe in free agency.

Last Updated: April 7, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

Barring any major -- and completely shocking -- news, this is all but a done deal. Mendoza has franchise QB traits and having Kirk Cousins in the building will help him acclimate to the pro game. The real question now: What can the Raiders do with their other nine picks to build this roster up around Mendoza?

2. New York Jets

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

This will likely be either Bailey or Ohio State's Arvell Reese -- New York was 31st in sacks last season with 26 -- but I have to think Bailey is the guy for the Jets. He is a polished pass rusher with proven production, tying for the FBS lead in sacks (14.5) in 2025. He can be a Day 1 disrupter off the edge.

3. Arizona Cardinals

Arvell Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

As part of the loaded NFC West, Arizona has to face three of the NFL's best teams twice every season, and the defense was frankly not very good last year, allowing 28.7 points per game (29th). Reese fills a need in Arizona as a potentially elite pass rusher, and I've heard rave reviews on what he can bring off the field from coaches. With the changing of eras in Arizona, the Cards should be seeking out new cornerstone pieces like Reese this month. Speaking of which: One wild card to watch here is Notre Dame running back Jeremiyah Love.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

4. Tennessee Titans

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

I interviewed Titans general manager Mike Borgonzi for "The Schrager Hour" in March, and he made pointed statements about Robert Saleh's previous teams always having "waves" of pass rushers. That might suggest Tennessee could think about Bailey or Reese if they are still on the board, or perhaps even Miami's Rueben Bain Jr. But I just don't think the Titans will pass on Love. This is a dynamic player who can do it all. He ran for 1,372 yards and 18 touchdowns last season.

5. New York Giants

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

New coach John Harbaugh referred to the offensive line as a "work in progress" at the league meetings. That's not what you want in front of a franchise quarterback who has shown a tendency to use his legs. But Jaxson Dart would love Mauigoa, a road paver with positional versatility. Mauigoa is expected to be the first offensive lineman off the board.

6. Cleveland Browns

Spencer Fano, OT/G, Utah

Fano is a rare prospect in this draft in that he has true versatility across the entire offensive line. He can play tackle and guard, and he even took snaps at center during the combine. Because he might not be viewed as a pure left tackle, sixth might be seen as too rich. But with two picks in the first round, look for Cleveland to get an O-lineman with at least one of them. And Fano is a talented, moveable piece along that line.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

7. Washington Commanders

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

I believe Washington is going to go defense; it gave up 6.0 yards per play in 2025, tied for third worst. Styles shows a lot of the same traits that Fred Warner has displayed in San Francisco, and GM Adam Peters -- who came from San Francisco -- knows what Warner has meant for the 49ers all these years. Styles had 77 tackles as a sideline-to-sideline defender last season and then lit up the combine with a smooth 4.46 in the 40-yard dash and a 43½-inch vertical jump. I like this fit.

8. New Orleans Saints

Rueben Bain Jr., Edge, Miami

New Orleans said farewell to many defensive leaders this offseason, as Cameron Jordan, Demario Davis and Alontae Taylor will all likely be elsewhere next season. (Jordan is still a free agent.) And short arms be damned; the powerful and disruptive Bain is viewed as a top-10-worthy prospect after a 9.5-sack season. This seems like a good match.

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

With a top-10 pick for the first time since 2017 -- when the Chiefs took some guy named Patrick Mahomes -- Kansas City can go in a variety of directions here. Cornerback and edge rusher are certainly options. I still think finding offensive playmakers is a major priority, though, especially with Mahomes coming off the ACL injury. Tyson pops more than any other receiver in this draft class; he just needs to stay healthy.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

Delane allowed a low 31.3 passer rating when targeted last season and is viewed as the top corner in this class. Cincinnati could look at a few different options here, and while another early-round pick on a defensive back might not be the most popular choice, it could make a lot of sense. The Bengals need a true shutdown guy on the outside.

11. Miami Dolphins

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

Miami has seven picks in the first three rounds, becoming just the second NFL team to have such a haul (2024 Cardinals). And with Tyreek Hill and Jaylen Waddle gone, and the sizable investment under center in Malik Willis, the Dolphins have to address the WR room. New coach Jeff Hafley (who coached with Ryan Day in San Francisco and at Ohio State) and GM Jon-Eric Sullivan have countless contacts at Ohio State, and the whole program raves about Tate. He could bring some juice to Miami.

12. Dallas Cowboys

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

Buckeyes defensive coordinator Matt Patricia told me on "The Schrager Hour" that Downs will be the smartest player on whichever team drafts him and should be a face of the franchise. The Cowboys need that on defense, even if safety isn't valued the same as pass rusher or cornerback. Downs could team up with Jalen Thompson and Malik Hooker on the back end and help curtail the big plays that hurt Dallas last season (gave up 54 plays of 25-plus yards, most in the NFL). If he's on the board, he would be a steal at No. 12.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

Lemon fits with a lot of what the Rams do on offense. And taking the 2025 Biletnikoff Award winner would be a sign that the Rams are truly all-in to win in 2026, potentially Matthew Stafford's final season. But this pick would also have the long term in mind, with Davante Adams entering the final year of his deal and turning 34 in December.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

What better way to show Lamar Jackson and Ravens fans that the Baltimore offense isn't going anywhere without offensive coordinator Todd Monken or former TE2 Isaiah Likely than by drafting a supreme talent like Sadiq? One of the stars of the combine, Sadiq ran a 4.39-second 40-yard dash, the fastest time for a tight end since at least 2003. He also caught 51 passes last season, the most ever by an Oregon tight end. Mark Andrews is back in Baltimore, but he's now in his 30s, and this offense likes having multiple impact players at the position.

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

McCoy had an outstanding 2024 but missed all of 2025 with a knee injury. But he is a legit No. 1 corner when he's healthy. McCoy has a 77-inch wingspan and is viewed as one of the top two CBs in this class, alongside Delane. By the end of last season, Tampa Bay was relying on some very inexperienced players at the position, and it did not add anyone in free agency to replace Jamel Dean.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

Every GM I speak to seems to love Cooper. He's fearless and tough as nails -- and he produces, with 937 yards and 13 touchdowns last season. The comp I've heard is Deebo Samuel, and I don't think that's too wild to consider. The Jets are all about creating strong culture right now and building with guys who want it more than the ones lining up against them. That's Cooper. He'd be a great complement to Garrett Wilson.

17. Detroit Lions

Olaivavega loane, G, Penn State

I'm not sure there's a more "Dan Campbell" player in this draft than loane. He's 6-foot-4 and 320 pounds, and he plays with a mean streak. loane didn't give up a single sack and was an All-American last season at Penn State. Nice fit on the interior for the Detroit line.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

McNeil-Warren is a tall, rangy safety who plays with high energy and is vocal in the defensive backfield. We're still not sure if Harrison Smith will be back at 37 years old, but McNeil-Warren can be the torchbearer once Smith does choose to call it a career. He had five picks over the past three seasons.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

19. Carolina Panthers

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

Freeling's physical traits are going to get some attention this month. He's 6-foot-7 and 315 pounds with long 34³/₄-inch arms, and he has the quicks, running a 4.93-second 40. Freeling has played both left and right tackle, too. He could be a key long-term building block for Carolina in protecting for Bryce Young and opening holes for Chuba Hubbard and Jonathon Brooks.

20. Dallas Cowboys (from GB)

Akheem Mesidor, Edge, Miami

Mesidor is one of the older players in this class, having just turned 25 years old, but he also might be the prospect most ready to make an immediate impact. He was an absolute menace for Miami, and he'd immediately become one of Dallas' top pass rushers off the edge. Mesidor tallied 12.5 sacks and 17.5 tackles for loss in 2025.

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

T.J. Parker, Edge, Clemson

Alabama's Ty Simpson is still available, but I'm expecting Aaron Rodgers to return to Pittsburgh for another season. On defense, the Steelers started getting younger along the line with the Derrick Harmon pick a year ago, and I wouldn't think they're done there. Parker has played a big role on the Clemson defense since his true freshman season, with 21.5 sacks over his three years there.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

Miller started every single game over his four years with Clemson (54 starts). And for a Chargers offensive line that was ravaged by injuries last season, taking the quintessential iron man of this tackle class at No. 22 makes sense. Miller could provide depth behind Joe Alt and Rashawn Slater, and even slide inside to guard.

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Denzel Boston, WR, Washington

Boston is electric, and Washington coach Jedd Fisch and Eagles general manager Howie Roseman are longtime college buddies. Some NFL sources I have spoken to have Boston as the second or third wideout in this class. And if the Eagles take him, A.J. Brown's future becomes all the more interesting and will undoubtedly hit the A Block on "Get Up" on Friday morning coming out of the draft.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

KC Concepcion, WR, Texas A&M

Concepcion is a do-everything wideout who averaged 15.1 yards per catch in 2025 and can also be a key playmaker in the return game. I've had multiple sources compare Concepcion to Zay Flowers. New offensive coordinator Travis Switzer and new coach Todd Monken both had Flowers in Baltimore, and they could get creative with how they use Concepcion in this offense. I had the Browns going with an offensive tackle at No. 6, but they need a playmaker, too.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

25. Chicago Bears

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

Proctor is a mass of humanity. He weighed in at 358 pounds at his pro day -- but he can move. If he keeps his weight down, Proctor has as much upside as any tackle in this class. And frankly, I think he is going earlier than No. 25. But with Ozzy Trapilo out and Braxton Jones' uneven play, Chicago would be happy with this outcome. General manager Ryan Poles is often credited for the Trey Smith and Creed Humphrey picks in Kansas City, and he has the chance to add another star to the list.

26. Buffalo Bills

Kayden McDonald, DT, Ohio State

This might be the highest you'll see McDonald going in a mock draft at the moment, but I'm hearing significant first-round buzz on him. A massive run defender, McDonald would be a good fit in Buffalo, where the Bills ranked 30th against the run last season (5.1 yards allowed per carry).

27. San Francisco 49ers

Caleb Lomu, OT, Utah

San Francisco's offensive line could be in flux if things don't get cleared up with Trent Williams' contract. And to be honest, even if the Niners and Williams work out his deal, the team still has to be thinking about the future; Williams will be 38 years old next season. Lomu played left tackle for the Utes last season, and although his game is still a work in progress, he's worthy of a first-round grade. He didn't allow any sacks in 2025.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

28. Houston Texans

Max Iheanachor, OT, Arizona State

One of the players with the biggest upside in this class, Iheanachor is still relatively new to football. The Nigerian-born tackle got to the United States when he was 13 years old and picked up the sport in just the past few years. Still growing and learning, he could be a home run pick if a team is patient and capitalizes on his upside. Houston is always looking for talent on its O-line as the front office works through another makeover of the unit.

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

Hood was highly productive last season, with 10 pass breakups despite Jermod McCoy being out of the lineup opposite him. Kansas City lost three key defensive backs in free agency (Trent McDuffie, Jaylen Watson and Joshua Williams), so there is a big need. Hood -- the nephew of former pro Roderick Hood -- brings a pro-style mentality and a knack for being around the ball.

30. Miami Dolphins (from DEN)

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

I thought about Georgia linebacker CJ Allen here, but I went with one of the fastest players at this year's combine in Thieneman. But he's much more than just that 4.35 speed. His film reveals a versatile player who can cover, tackle and lead a defense. It's a new era in Miami, and Jeff Hafley has expertise in coaching up defensive backs.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

ESPN – PETER SCHRAGER

31. New England Patriots

Keylan Rutledge, G/C, Georgia Tech

This might not be the same level of surprise as the Patriots' Cole Strange pick was a few years back, but I haven't seen anyone put Rutledge in Round 1 yet. It could happen. In talking to teams over the past few weeks, Rutledge is viewed as a Day 1 or Day 2 prospect. He allowed just two sacks over 43 career starts. At this point, the Patriots need to protect Drake Maye, and even if it's viewed as a reach on draft day, this could be the guy to get the job done.

32. Seattle Seahawks

Jadarian Price, RB, Notre Dame

Believe it or not, Notre Dame has never had two running backs selected in the first round of the same NFL draft. In fact, only four running back tandems from the same school have ever been selected in the first round in the same year. But Price is the No. 2 running back in this class and would provide some nice pop to the Seattle offense after the departure of Kenneth Walker III via free agency. He had only 113 carries last season but turned them into 674 yards and 11 scores.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

Last Updated: April 1, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

This is quite the rocket-ship ride from a two-star recruit ranked the 140th-best quarterback in the Class of 2022 to the first pick of the draft. Along the way, the Miami native, initially committed to Yale, progressed from throwing 30 touchdowns and 16 interceptions in two seasons at Cal to posting a 41-to-6 TD-to-INT ratio while leading Indiana to a 16-0 season and the national title.

The Raiders desperately need a QB, and Mendoza seems to be the best option in what is not a deep quarterback draft. The 6-foot-5, 236-pounder made his biggest strides last year in improving his footwork, his pocket feel and his discipline in tying his eyes to his feet, according to his Hoosiers coaches.

2. New York Jets

Arvel Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

I think this is the surest bet for future stardom in this draft. There's a handful of other guys with really high ceilings; Reese not only has a sky-high ceiling but an extremely high floor, too. Point blank: Not even the Jets can screw this one up.

3. Dallas Cowboys (from ARZ)

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

Projected trade: Dallas receives pick No. 3; Arizona receives picks Nos. 12 and 92

Arizona really needs O-line help, but this spot seems too high for what is available in this draft, so trading back is the Cards' best move. The Cowboys didn't get Maxx Crosby and still could use more juice attacking offenses. They would love for Reese to fall here, but Bailey is another true difference-maker in a draft that isn't all that deep with them.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

4. Tennessee Titans

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

Last year, the Titans took Cam Ward with the first pick. By grabbing Love, by far the best back in this draft and a more dynamic talent and more complete player than last year's No. 6 pick, Ashton Jeanty, the Titans will help their second-year QB immensely.

5. New York Giants

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

The Giants have loaded up on some Freaks List honorees in recent years and Styles is about as freaky as they come. The fit here makes a lot of sense with the Giants' talent up front and Styles' ability to roam the field as a former safety. At 6-5, 244 pounds, with almost 33-inch arms, he ran a 4.46 40 in Indianapolis and his jump numbers were even more impressive — 11-2 in the broad jump and 43 1/2 in the vertical. He started 41 games for the Buckeyes and was a co-captain. He also received the program's Block "O" award, honoring his toughness, accountability and character. He made 82 tackles and 6.5 TFLs on a star-studded defense in 2025.

6. Cleveland Browns

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

A former five-star recruit who lived up to his hype, Mauigoa was a three-year starter for the Hurricanes and team captain of a squad that made it to the national title game. The Browns need a lot of help up front, and the 6-5 1/2, 330-pounder should be a good fit. Some scouts told The Athletic they think he might be better as a guard (he has 33 1/4-inch arms). His coach, Mario Cristobal, has raved about Mauigoa's versatility, power and technique, saying he could play at any of the five offensive line spots and do well.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

7. Washington Commanders

Rueben Bain Jr., EDGE, Miami

There's been a lot of chatter about how Bain, the most dominant D-lineman in college football in 2025, would become the first edge rusher in over two decades to get selected in the first round with sub-31-inch arms. At 6-2, 263, Bain has an arm length of 30 7/8 inches. He was still a nightmare for opponents. His production and intangibles are as good as you'll find. He also had more to do with changing the culture of a Miami program that had been spinning its wheels for two decades than any other player. He was just a relentless ass-kicker.

8. New Orleans Saints

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

The Saints could use a D-lineman here, but with Bailey and Bain gone, they'll look to a familiar spot: a program that has done well for them with wide outs. Michael Thomas caught a ton of passes for the Saints, and Chris Olave caught 100 passes last season. The 6-2, 192-pound Tate isn't a blazer, clocking a 4.53 40 with a 1.61-second 10-yard split, but he's a very good route runner and has a really good feel for space. Ohio State's receiver pedigree also helps boost his stock. Every top guy over the past decade or so seems to have a very high floor, and that feels like the case with Tate.

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Spencer Fano, OL, Utah

Andy Reid is in position to fill a big need with a top protégé of his old BYU teammate Kyle Whittingham. The 21-year-old Fano started 11 games as a freshman at left tackle before spending the past two seasons as the starting right tackle. The 6-5 1/2, 311-pounder doesn't have ideal arm length to play at left tackle (32 1/8-inches), but he moves exceptionally well. Fano clocked a 4.91 40 at the combine, had an impressive 4.67 shuttle time and vertical jumped 32 inches. He did not allow a sack in 2025 on 382 pass-protection snaps, per PFF.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

The decision here is Downs or LSU's Mansoor Delane, the draft's top corner. My gut tells me that it'd be really hard for Cincinnati to pass on a star player from Ohio State who has excelled in a lot of big games and has a winning pedigree to go with off-the-charts football intelligence.

Downs made a name for himself quickly in college football, leading Alabama in tackles as a true freshman in 2023 by a huge margin before transferring following Nick Saban's retirement.

11. Miami Dolphins

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

This could be a wideout, as Miami has a big need after trading Jaylen Waddle, but I think the Dolphins go with the best corner rather than picking between Makai Lemon and Jordyn Tyson here.

The Virginia Tech transfer was a bright spot for the Tigers in a disappointing 2025. The 6-0, 187-pounder was a true lockdown corner, not allowing a touchdown pass all season while opponents connected on only 40 percent of passes thrown in his direction, per PFF. Delane, a former high school wrestler, picked off two passes, had 11 pass breakups and made 45 tackles.

At one point, there was a big question about his speed, but sources inside the LSU program shot that down by pointing out they have a bunch of speedsters on offense and Delane never had an issue keeping up with them. At LSU's pro day, he further strengthened his case by clocking a 4.38 40 last week.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

12. Arizona Cardinals (from DAL)

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

With Mauigoa and Fano gone, Arizona goes with a tackle whose stock has risen throughout draft season. Freeling, who has almost 35-inch arms and almost 11-inch hands, clocked a 4.93 40 along with a 33 1/2-inch vertical and a 9-7 broad jump at the combine — all really impressive numbers for someone listed at 6-7 and 315 pounds. He did start for only one season at Georgia, at left tackle, but he is an intriguing talent.

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

The L.A. native stayed home to play at USC and will have a short commute for his family to watch him in the NFL. Sean McVay should have a lot of fun with Lemon, who was by far the best player in the program the past few years. USC defensive coaches thought he would've been the team's best cornerback if he had played on that side of the ball. His instincts, quickness and toughness are that good.

Lemon was USC's go-to guy whenever it needed a big play or a spark. He won the Biletnikoff Award as the nation's top wideout, catching 79 passes for 1,156 yards and 11 TDs. He also had two rushing touchdowns.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

Baltimore could use some O-line help and has some pretty good options here, but the Ravens make a point not to bypass big value. This feels like one of those spots.

McCoy missed all of the 2025 season after tearing his ACL but displayed some elite skills in 2024, when he had four interceptions and nine pass breakups. He allowed only one touchdown pass in 640 snaps that season, and it came against the great Jeremiah Smith in the first-round Playoff loss to Ohio State.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

McCoy was a Texas high school state champion in the long jump and triple jump and also made all-state in baseball. If he was able to play last season, he might've overtaken Delane as the top corner in this draft. It feels like he's still just beginning to blossom.

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

Signing Al-Quadin Muhammad takes away some urgency from needing an edge here and linebacker can come a bit later. Sadiq is a rare athlete who was a matchup nightmare in college. At 6-3, 241 (he was 255 entering last season), he has exceptional burst and explosiveness. It showed up in a big way at the combine, when he ran a 4.39 40 with a 1.54 10-yard split to go with a 43 1/2-inch vertical and 11-1 broad jump. Sadiq will be a weapon in the screen game as well as a deep threat, although he had only one catch of more than 30 yards last season. He's also shown to be a capable blocker. The one negative with him has been inconsistent hands. One Big Ten coach compared him to Vernon Davis.

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

The Jets could also go with Omar Cooper Jr. or Denzel Boston here but pencil them in for the star who made more than his share of spectacular plays as the Sun Devils went from being a mess to the Playoff in 2024. Tyson won Big 12 Offensive Newcomer of the Year after catching 75 passes for 1,101 yards and 10 TDs, but he did miss the Big 12 title game and the CFP quarterfinals due to a broken collarbone.

Last season, Tyson and Arizona State were derailed by some injuries. He has had an assortment of injuries in his college career, but he is a gifted playmaker. Tyson seems to really have benefited from his time with ASU WR coach Hines Ward, the former Steelers great. There are elements of Ward's legendary grit and toughness in how Tyson plays. At 6-2, 203 pounds, Tyson has good size and is really strong for a wideout. He did 26 reps on the bench at the combine.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

17. Detroit Lions

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

With no more Taylor Decker, Detroit needs help at tackle. The Lions have had a lot of luck with Iowa products, so why not grab an Iowa native?

The 6-7, 352-pound Proctor, an All-American in 2025, has as much potential as any O-lineman in this draft. He moves quite well for his size and is an explosive athlete, having vertical jumped 32 1/2 inches at the combine despite weighing north of 350 pounds. How many other guys this enormous can do a backflip like he can? His 5.21 40 is impressive given how massive he is.

Alabama coaches I've spoken to are big fans of Proctor. He lost the weight last year that he was asked to lose, and a year before, when he tore his labrum in pregame warmups in their opener, he came back in the next game and played the rest of the season with it.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

With the great Harrison Smith now 37 and uncertainty about whether he'll retire, Minnesota can grab one of the best defensive players in this draft in the ball-hawking Thieneman, a 6-0, 201-pound freak of an athlete. He made 306 tackles and eight INTs in his three college seasons. At the combine, he ran a 4.35 40 with a 1.52-second 10-yard split, vertical jumped 41 inches and broad jumped 10-5. That elite athleticism shows up on tape too, and it has since he first got to Purdue, where old Boilermakers coaches say he was the best player in the program from his first day on the team.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

19. Carolina Panthers

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

Even though it added Jaelan Phillips in free agency after picking Nic Scourton last year, Carolina still could use another edge to crank up the defense GM Dan Morgan is looking for. But this big safety from the MAC is too good to pass up here. The 6-3 1/2, 202-pound McNeil-Warren ran a 4.52 40 at the combine after a third-team All-America season in which he became just the second Rocket in almost two decades to make the AP All-America teams (Quinyon Mitchell is the other).

McNeil-Warren made 77 tackles and had three forced fumbles and two interceptions. Rival coaches watched him on tape and were surprised why someone at a Power 4 conference wasn't able to lure him away from the MAC, but he did miss almost half of the 2024 season due to injury (though he still made 61 tackles).

20. Dallas Cowboys (from GB)

Denzel Boston, WR, Washington

Dallas has an interesting choice here between the 6-4, 212-pound Boston and Indiana's Omar Cooper Jr., who is smaller but came up big for the national champions in 2025. Boston caught 125 passes for 1,715 and 20 TDs over the past two seasons. Washington coaches who were around Tetairoa McMillan (the 2025 NFL Offensive Rookie of the Year) when they were at Arizona say the Panthers' first-rounder is more fluid and has better body control, but Boston is faster and also has strong hands and is very competitive — much like McMillan.

One big plus with Boston: He is physical and smart and was a dynamite special teams player.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

Pittsburgh lost Calvin Austin but can grab the dynamic Hoosier standout, who is best remembered for his acrobatic touchdown catch, where he contorted his body in the back of the end zone to win the game at Penn State. The 6-0, 200-pounder, who ran a 4.42 40 at the combine with a 1.55-second 10-yard split, had 69 catches for 937 yards and 13 touchdowns in 2025. IU coaches loved his versatility and see a lot of Deebo Samuel in his game. The former high school basketball star also has great body control, which was quite evident in his spectacular catch to beat Penn State.

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Vega loane, OG, Penn State

No NFL head coach loves physicality like Jim Harbaugh, and with guards Zion Johnson and Mekhi Becton gone, the Chargers sorely need help in the trenches. The 6-4, 320-pound Penn Stater who everyone calls “Vega” should be a good fit. He’s a pure guard and is in the road-grader mode. He got himself in better shape in 2025 and showed a lot of improvement. According to PFF, loane didn’t allow a single sack or QB hit in 311 pass blocking snaps.

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Caleb Lomu, OL, Utah

Philly had a superb O-line for a long time under Jeff Stoutland, but now he’s gone, and some of the Eagles’ stalwarts are getting up in age. Deals for right tackle Lane Johnson and left guard Landon Dickerson are now structured to be up after 2027. Lomu started at left tackle for the Utes the past two seasons, although Utah’s offensive system was much different last year, when it shifted away from a pro-style attack to more of a QB run scheme.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

Opposing coaches felt like Lomu was one of the best linemen they faced in 2025, but his teammate, Fano, was a bit better. At 6-6, 313 pounds, Lomu (33 3/8-inch arms) has better length than Fano but isn't quite as athletic. Still, his 4.99 40 with a 32 1/2-inch vertical jump and 9-5 broad jump were better than some of the coaches I spoke to were expecting from him.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

KC Concepcion, WR, Texas A&M

With the Browns getting some O-line help earlier with Mauigoa, receiver is the big need to help spark a suspect offense. Concepcion's wheels should help a lot. This guy has dazzling playmaking ability. He's stronger than you think at 6-0, 196. In 2023, he was the ACC Rookie of the Year at NC State, with 839 receiving yards and 320 rushing yards, averaging almost eight yards per carry. At A&M last season, he averaged 14 yards per offensive touch. He is a terror for opponents as a punt returner, averaging 18.2 yards and taking two back for touchdowns in 2025. He'd be projected to go sooner if his hands were more reliable. Last season, he had seven drops, according to PFF.

25. Chicago Bears

Akheem Mesidor, EDGE, Miami

If McNeil-Warren were still on the board, Chicago would've loved to scoop up the big safety, but Mesidor fills a big need too. The Ottawa native, who began his college career at West Virginia, was the other edge guy on a Miami D-line that gave QBs nightmares. Mesidor had 17.5 TFLs, 12.5 sacks and four forced fumbles in 2025. Like his teammate Rueben Bain, the 6-3, 265-pound Mesidor was at his best in Miami's Playoff run, notching 5.5 sacks.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

26. Buffalo Bills

Cashius Howell, EDGE, Texas A&M

Von Miller was the first explosive speed rusher with great get-off from Texas A&M that Buffalo brought in, though Miller came late in his career. The Bills hope Howell can give them some of the juice the other Aggies great gave the Broncos when he first left College Station.

The 6-2, 253-pound Howell lacks ideal length. His arms measured only 30 1/4 inches, but he turned heads at the combine when he clocked a 1.58-10 second split on his 4.59 40. Like Miller, Howell can really bend — maybe not quite as well as Miller, but few ever could. Howell, who began his career at Bowling Green, should be a pass-rushing force for Buffalo. He had 14 TFLs and 11.5 sacks in 2025.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Keldric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

With three safeties already off the board, it's a stretch to think the 49ers can address that need at this spot, so they grab the Tigers' big edge. The 6-6, 276-pound former five-star recruit with 34 3/8-inch arms didn't have the production or the impact a lot of recruiting folks expected coming out of high school. He had only two sacks in 2025 after posting seven in 2024, his second season at Auburn. People at Auburn really like this guy, and he's an intriguing talent. At the combine, he displayed some impressive explosiveness in the testing, vertical jumping 35 inches and broad jumping 9-9, impressive for someone this big. At Auburn's pro day, he clocked a 4.67 40, also very impressive.

28. Houston Texans

Kayden McDonald, DT, Ohio State

This is a need spot for Houston, and McDonald is a load against the run. He's 6-2, 326, and just turned 21. McDonald was a force for the Buckeyes in 2025, making 65 tackles with nine TFLs and three sacks. He also forced two fumbles. Against Texas to start the season, he had eight tackles, the same as he had against Miami to finish the season. That's a lot of production for an interior D-lineman.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

The Chiefs have a big need here and they take the Volunteer over Clemson's Avieon Terrell and Ohio State's Davison Igbinosun. The 6-0, 193-pound Hood, who has 31 3/8-inch arms, tested well in Indy, running a 4.44 40 to go with a 40-inch vertical jump and a 10-5 broad jump. Hood pulled off the unique triple of going to three schools in three years, starting at Auburn, then playing at Colorado before finishing in Knoxville and making it a three-and-out. Last season, Hood had 50 tackles, 4.5 TFLs, one pick six and eight pass breakups.

30. Jacksonville Jaguars (from MIA)

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

Projected trade: Jacksonville receives pick No. 30; Miami receives picks Nos. 56 and 203

With Miami grabbing Delane earlier in the draft, the Dolphins can address their need for a receiver here, but there's not one worth a late first-round pick, so they deal with Jacksonville, which needs a defensive tackle. The 6-2, 300-pound Woods is an extremely powerful, big athlete who some coaches at Clemson thought would be a top-five pick when he finished his career.

Last offseason, he clocked a 4.86 40 at 310 pounds and bench pressed 490 pounds. His 2024 film was probably better than his 2025, but that also reflected a program that backslid. He had 40 tackles and 3.5 TFLs last year.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS THE ATHLETIC – BRUCE FELDMAN

31. New England Patriots

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

Miller, a former wrestler, started 54 games for the Tigers. The 6-7, 317-pounder with 34-inch arms had a strong week at the combine, running a 5.04 40 with a 32-inch vertical and a 9-5 broad jump as well as 32 reps on the bench press.

32. Seattle Seahawks

Avieon Terrell, CB, Clemson

The run on Clemson players continues. This is a big need for Seattle, as is running back, but this spot seems too high to grab Arkansas' Mike Washington Jr. or Notre Dame's Jadarian Price. The younger brother of Falcons first-rounder A.J. Terrell is 5-11, 186 pounds. He tested OK in Indy, jumping 34 inches and posting 10-3 in the broad jump. The 2025 season was a huge disappointment for Clemson, but don't blame Terrell; he made a ton of plays. He had 46 tackles (4.5 for loss), three sacks, 11 pass breakups and a Clemson-record five forced fumbles.

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

As long as Tom Brady does not decide to add STARTING QB to his list of daily tasks, a new era for the Raiders begins with Mendoza.

2. New York Jets

Arvel Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

The Jets pick Reese, showing confidence in the uber-talented Ohio State product's ability to make a smooth transition to full-time pass rusher.

3. Arizona Cardinals

Ty Simpson, QB, Alabama

Last year, I opined in one of my early mocks that Jaxson Dart would go to the Giants with the third overall pick, but I didn't stick with the pairing as the process unfolded. Dart, of course, ultimately ended up with New York after Big Blue traded back into the first round and selected the quarterback at No. 25. This year, I think Simpson ends up with the Cardinals, even if this is not the spot where they pick him.

4. Tennessee Titans

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

After kicking off their offseason roster renovation with a bunch of spending in free agency and a couple trades, the Titans are thrilled to add perhaps the best edge rusher in the draft.

5. New York Giants

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

What helps young quarterbacks? Explosive players making explosive plays. You're welcome, Jaxson Dart.

6. Cleveland Browns

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

Playmakers have been at a premium for the Browns, who stay in state to find their new starting receiver.

7. Washington Commanders

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

The Commanders must get younger and quicker on defense. The dynamic Styles could replace Bobby Wagner or learn from the six-time first-team All-Pro if Washington re-signs him.

8. New Orleans Saints

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

Last year, the Saints hit on QB Tyler Shough in the second round. This year, they give him more support on the perimeter.

11. Miami Dolphins

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

New QB Malik Willis gets what all passers want: a tight end who can make game-changing plays.

12. Dallas Cowboys

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

The Cowboys' defensive makeover continues with the addition of the All-American corner from the Bayou.

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

14. Baltimore Ravens

Spencer Fano, OL, Utah

Wherever Fano is asked to play, he will be a huge addition for the Ravens' front.

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Akheem Mesidor, EDGE, Miami

The Bucs won't turn down a chance to add a tough, productive pass rusher.

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

His March 31 pro day is among the most anticipated by scouts this spring. If he aces that test, Jets fans praise this pick.

17. Detroit Lions

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

I've been saying it throughout the process: Proctor just feels like a Lions offensive lineman to me.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

The Vikings find the perfect replacement for Harrison Smith.

19. Carolina Panthers

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

A slot-routes master with a ton of toughness, Lemon complements 2025 OROY Tetairoa McMillan and gives QB Bryce Young another dynamic option.

20. Dallas Cowboys (from GB)

CJ Allen, LB, Georgia

Allen helps improve the Cowboys' defensive culture through his willingness to collide with opposing players carrying the ball.

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

The Steelers' receiving corps got a boost from the acquisition of Michael Pittman Jr. from Indianapolis, but why stop there?

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Vega loane, OG, Penn State

The Chargers have been remaking their interior offensive line. loane would be a nice, nasty additional piece.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

Caleb Lomu, OT, Utah

The Browns continue to rebuild their offensive line with Lomu, who will compete right away for the left tackle spot.

25. Chicago Bears

Peter Woods, DT, Clemson

Woods fills a need for the Bears, providing more pressure from the interior.

26. Buffalo Bills

Keldric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

After acquiring WR DJ Moore from the Bears, the Bills count on Faulk to provide consistent pass-rush pressure. I won't be surprised if Buffalo decides to continue bolstering the receiver room here, though.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

Miller set the school record for career snaps at Clemson, and he was excellent against Penn State in the Tigers' bowl game last season.

28. Houston Texans

Kayden McDonald, DT, Ohio State

One of the top defenses in the league gets to develop this young, rising prospect.

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

Hood fills a need, adding toughness and coverage ability. Defensive backs coach Dave Merritt is one of the best in the game.

30. Miami Dolphins (from DEN)

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

This rangy ballhawk cushions the departure of five-time Pro Bowl safety Minkah Fitzpatrick.

31. New England Patriots

Max Iheanachor, OT, Arizona State

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

ESPN – FIELD YATES

Last Updated: March 24, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

The draft starts at No. 2, as this pick has been etched in stone basically since the order was decided. Mendoza's Heisman-winning season displayed superior accuracy, arm strength, ability to scan the field, clutch production and good in-pocket mobility.

The Raiders worked hard in free agency to beef up the roster around Mendoza, specifically landing the best available offensive lineman in center Tyler Linderbaum. One area Mendoza will need to work on is being under center. He did that just 3% of the time in 2025; NFL teams played under center on 34.9% of snaps in 2025.

2. New York Jets

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

A busy free agency period has the Jets' defense in an improved place compared with the end of last season, with the team adding linebacker Demario Davis and two EDGE rushers (Kingsley Enagbare and Joseph Ossai). But New York should still draft for value at this spot.

Bailey happens to thread the needle of taking a player with a grade commensurate with the No. 2 pick and at an area the team must continue to invest in. His 14.5 sacks in 2025 was tied for the most in the FBS, as he plays with a lightning-quick first step and an aggressive approach to pass rushing. No Jets player had over eight sacks last season.

3. Arizona Cardinals

Arvell Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

After Arizona released Kyler Murray, its offseason has signaled that drafting a quarterback is a logical outcome. But the Cardinals are not going to reach for one here.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

Like the Jets, the Cardinals can add to their recent front-seven investments, which include EDGE rusher Josh Sweat from last free agency.

Reese is a unique defensive player in this class, playing a hybrid position at Ohio State as an off-ball linebacker and pass rusher. He has massive length at 6-foot-4, explosive athletic traits and major upside if the Cardinals keep him at EDGE rusher. Reese said at the combine that he hasn't "scratched the surface" as a pass rusher. He generated 19 pressures on a mere 97 pass-rush reps in 2025.

4. Tennessee Titans

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

The Titans don't have a glaring need at pass rush after trading for Jermaine Johnson and signing John Franklin-Myers. But new coach Robert Saleh shouldn't mind more help at linebacker behind Johnson, Franklin-Myers and defensive tackle Jeffery Simmons.

Styles has put together about as good of a final season and predraft process as you could ask for. He dominated on the field in 2025, finishing with the third-highest tackle percentage in the FBS (97.5%). Then at the combine, he posted the highest vertical jump by an off-ball linebacker since 2003 (43½ inches) and ran the fastest 40 at his position (4.46). Styles is instinctive and long at 6-5, with the versatility to cover or blitz as a former safety.

5. New York Giants

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

Downs has been a dominant force longer than any other defender in this class. The former Alabama and Ohio State All-American is a shapeshifter, deploying down in the box against the run or patrolling the back end with excellent coverage range.

The Giants made strides in their safety room over free agency, adding Jason Pinnock and Ar'Darius Washington as help alongside Jevon Holland. But in a league where successful defenses deploy three safeties with greater frequency, what doesn't appear as a major need for the Giants should not be dismissed. This would make Downs the highest safety drafted since Eric Berry in 2010.

6. Cleveland Browns

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

The Browns' most obvious needs are at wide receiver and offensive tackle -- despite plenty of new additions -- and I've been an advocate for considering Georgia's Monroe Freeling here to fill the left tackle need. But Tate is rated four spots higher than Freeling in my individual rankings, so let's go with the sure-handed wideout.

Tate averaged 17.2 yards per reception in 2025 and had just one drop. He's versatile and can stretch the field for new coach Todd Monken, posting 875 receiving yards and 10 touchdowns. No Browns receiver had over 650 receiving yards or two touchdowns last season.

7. Washington Commanders

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

I'd argue the floor of Love would be at No. 7, as this would be a home run move for the Commanders with their only pick of the first two rounds. While the team signed veterans Rachaad White and Jerome Ford in free agency, make no mistake that the RB room has more than enough room for Love. Seventh-round pick Jacory Croskey-Merritt is Washington's only returning RB from 2025, when he recorded 805 rushing yards (team high) and just 68 receiving yards.

Love is the most dynamic offensive player in this class, running a 4.36-second 40-yard dash at the combine and averaging 10.4 yards per catch in 2025. He would immediately alleviate pressure on quarterback Jayden Daniels, also adding value as a pass protector.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

8. New Orleans Saints

Rueben Bain Jr., EDGE, Miami

Defensive end Cameron Jordan could be out of New Orleans for the first time in his 15-year career, as he's still a free agent despite 10.5 sacks in 2025. Regardless of whether Jordan returns, the Saints need to be mindful of adding youth to their pass-rush group.

Bain has hands of destruction that allow him to be a forceful rusher and tenacious run defender. Some evaluators are questioning whether he has the length (30⁷/₈-inch arms) to win as frequently at the NFL level, but he's a well-rounded player who had 18.5 tackles for loss and 71 pressures in 2025. Per ESPN Research, no EDGE rusher over the past two decades has been drafted in the first round with sub-31-inch arms.

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

The Chiefs are in desperate need of more big-play receivers, as Xavier Worthy hasn't been a consistent spark plug for them the past two seasons. Tyson is the most explosive wide receiver in the draft and neck and neck with Carnell Tate for WR1 in my rankings. He has very good size, acceleration, unique run-after-catch skills and field-stretching ability.

Tyson dealt with a hamstring injury in 2025 and previously suffered a broken collarbone and ACL tear, but he changes an offense when healthy. He had 50 catches, 732 yards and six touchdowns in the final six games of the 2024 season.

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

Cincinnati has addressed the defense in free agency, but a hole at cornerback opposite of DJ Turner remains unanswered. Delane has strong man-coverage technique and ball skills to go along with good size at 6 feet, 187 pounds. He finished up his college career with a season at LSU after three years at Virginia Tech.

Delane's season in Baton Rouge solidified his first-round status, as opposing QBs completed only 27.7% of their passes when he was the targeted defender (the third-lowest rate in the FBS). Cincinnati allowed a completion percentage of 65.2% last season (19th in the league).

11. Miami Dolphins

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

New general manager Jon-Eric Sullivan has referenced building his roster from the inside out, and Mauigoa would be a big boost to an offensive line that needs it. Miami ranked 24th in pass block win rate and 29th in run block win rate last season.

Mauigoa is a steady, well-built pass protector with raw power and the ability to get to the second level. Right tackle Austin Jackson recently agreed to a reduced and restructured contract that's over after next season, so Mauigoa could slide in there.

12. Dallas Cowboys

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

One of the true wild cards in this draft is McCoy, as he's a top-10 talent but has not played or worked out for scouts since an ACL tear in January 2025. He is expected to participate in Tennessee's pro day March 31, which will help solidify this ceiling if he's healthy.

At his best, McCoy is the top coverage cornerback in this class, with exceptional length (77-inch wingspan), ball skills, patience and timing to disrupt wideouts. In a full 2024 season, he had four interceptions and seven passes defensed. The Cowboys need all the cornerback help they can get after finishing last in yards per dropback allowed (7.3) and total pass breakups (30).

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

The Rams don't have many glaring needs, so there's an argument for them to draft a player who can boost their Super Bowl odds immediately. However, Freeling is too good of a prospect to pass up if the board fell this way. He has the most upside of any offensive lineman in this draft, with excellent size (6-7, 315 pounds) and athleticism (4.93-second 40-yard dash).

With only 18 starts under his belt, Freeling would need time to develop into a left tackle at the next level. In Los Angeles, he would have the chance to be a sixth offensive lineman for a season, as Alaric Jackson is the current starting left tackle.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Spencer Fano, OL, Utah

The Ravens lost Pro Bowl center Tyler Linderbaum to the Raiders in free agency, while their starting guards (Daniel Faalele and Andrew Vorhees) ranked 32nd in pass block win rate last season. Baltimore signed guard John Simpson to a three-year deal, but it could continue to beef up its interior offensive line with this pick.

Fano spent the past two years at right tackle and has experience at left tackle, but his 32½-inch arms have convinced some evaluators that he would be better at guard or center. He practiced snaps for NFL teams after his combine workout in Indy. No matter what position Fano ends up at, he has premier fluidity and movement skills (4.91-second 40-yard dash) for an offensive lineman.

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Akheem Mesidor, EDGE, Miami

An improved pass rush is a must for Tampa Bay after it tied for 18th in total sacks last season (37) and lost defensive end Logan Hall in free agency. The relentless Mesidor would help achieve that goal, coming off a College Football Playoff run where he had 5.5 sacks in four games.

Mesidor was primarily a defensive tackle at West Virginia before reshaping his body and skill set to play largely from the EDGE at Miami. He has an impressive get-off and nuance as a rusher. While he turns 25 before the draft, most view him as a top-15 player off ability alone.

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

Despite his moderate size at 5-11, 192 pounds, Lemon's breakout season in 2025 launched him into conversation with Jordyn Tyson and Carnell Tate for the best receiver in this class. His hallmarks are his toughness, run-after-catch skills and strong hands. His catch radius is better than you'd expect for a player who is built more like a slot receiver, leading to 20 contested catches over the past two seasons.

For the Jets, Lemon's firepower is necessary to take some attention away from Garrett Wilson. Outside of Wilson, no Jets receiver had over 30 receptions or 350 receiving yards in 2025.

17. Detroit Lions

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

Left tackle is a sizable need for Detroit with the departure of Taylor Decker after 10 seasons. Proctor is a sizable answer to the problem -- literally -- at 6-7, 352 pounds. He has power when he gets his hands on defenders in the running game as well.

Proctor's tape had up-and-down moments during his final college season, as sometimes his foot quickness was overmatched by EDGE rushers. But the upside is immense for the 20-year-old left tackle, who started all 40 games he appeared in at Alabama.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

18. Minnesota Vikings

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

As Minnesota awaits word on whether safety Harrison Smith will return in 2026, coordinator Brian Flores' defense is in need of a player who can offer similar ability to limit explosive plays downfield and cover well in the slot. Thieneman had six interceptions as a true freshman at Purdue, displaying exceptional ball skills, range and overall play. He finished up his career with one season at Oregon and had a dominant combine, which included a 4.35-second 40-yard dash.

19. Carolina Panthers

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

Throughout this recent run of first-round picks at tight end, Sadiq separates himself with elite athleticism. At the combine, he posted a 4.39-second 40-yard dash (tight end record), 43½-inch vertical jump and 11-foot-1 broad jump.

Sadiq would add an element of explosive run-after-catch ability for Carolina, which needs another dynamic option next to wide receiver Tetairoa McMillan. Sadiq had to bide his time at Oregon playing behind current Rams tight end Terrance Ferguson, but he led all FBS tight ends in receiving touchdowns in 2025 (eight). He more than holds his own as a blocker, too.

20. Dallas Cowboys (from GB)

R Mason Thomas, EDGE, Oklahoma

Thomas is my type of football player as an explosive, powerful and relentless pass rusher. Plus, he has heavy hands and a nasty attitude when defending the run (21 run stops over the past two seasons). Thomas dealt with an injury for part of the 2025 season, but he still finished with 6.5 sacks and 23 pressures in nine games.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

The Cowboys must keep hammering away at their pass rush to find some semblance of what they had with Micah Parsons. Dallas traded for EDGE rusher Rashan Gary to boost this same initiative.

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Olaivavega loane, G, Penn State

The clear-cut best guard in the draft is loane, who also happens to fill the Steelers' biggest need other than QB. Isaac Seumalo, who started at left guard in Pittsburgh for the past three seasons, left for the Cardinals in free agency. And I continue to believe that Aaron Rodgers will decide to play one more season with Pittsburgh.

loane is a physical, rugged guard who shows crunching power at the point of attack. He was exceedingly reliable at Penn State, meaning he could be a plug-and-play starter for new coach Mike McCarthy. loane ranks 14th among my top overall prospects.

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

In this year's deep safety class, McNeil-Warren has a strong shot to be the third one off the board in the first round. He is extremely fluid and long, with great play vision and natural disruption skills. He forced three fumbles in 2025, while recording 12 pass breakups and five interceptions over the past three seasons.

The Chargers have needs at EDGE and guard to address in the draft, but safety is a sneaky area where they need to get younger. Derwin James Jr. will be a 30-year-old free agent next offseason.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Omar Cooper Jr., WR, Indiana

Though wide receiver A.J. Brown is still with the Eagles, the fact that the team reportedly had discussions for a trade tells you it's still possible something happens after June 1, when it becomes more palatable from a salary cap standpoint. Of course, Philadelphia would be thin long term at receiver without Brown, which is where Cooper could help. He's one of the best players in space from this class, averaging 7.3 yards after the catch in 2025. Plus, he can block extremely well downfield, which would fare well for running back Saquon Barkley.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

Caleb Lomu, OT, Utah

Cleveland's patience at left tackle pays off here by landing Lomu, who held down that spot opposite of Spencer Fano for the past two seasons at Utah. Lomu did not surrender a sack in 2025, but he must become a more physically formed tackle with improved strength at 6-6, 313 pounds.

Lomu is a balanced pass protector and an accurate striker in the running game. He would fill a gigantic need for the Browns by sliding in next to the team's three recent O-line additions: right tackle Tytus Howard, guard Zion Johnson and center/guard Elgton Jenkins.

25. Chicago Bears

Zion Young, EDGE, Missouri

The Bears need to keep investing in EDGE rushers after tying for the worst pass rush win rate in 2025 (28.8%) and not signing any big-time free agents. Young would be a good fit here because of his play style. He uses heavy, power hands and his 6-6 frame to engage and run through offensive tackles.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

Young also has some versatility to reduce down inside on sub downs and rush effectively because his sturdy frame can withstand contact. He had 6.5 sacks and two forced fumbles in 2025.

26. Arizona Cardinals (from BUF)

Ty Simpson, QB, Alabama

With a hat tip to my pal Jordan Reid – the thought leader behind the Cardinals trading up for Simpson – Arizona can execute its own version of what the Giants accomplished in 2025. New York landed EDGE rusher Abdul Carter at No. 3 before trading up to take quarterback Jaxson Dart at No. 25. After taking Arvell Reese up top, the Cardinals can land the clear-cut second-best quarterback in this class here.

Through the early part of the 2025 season, Simpson stood out with his ability to navigate the pocket and throw with accuracy and power when he can set his feet. With Jacoby Brissett and Gardner Minshew on Arizona's depth chart, the team can bring Simpson along methodically. All 15 of his collegiate starts came this past season.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Keldric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

The Niners need to work on their EDGE group, though a big boost will come from the returns of Nick Bosa and Mykel Williams from injury. Faulk is an intriguing prospect whose tape was better in 2024 than 2025 (7.0 sacks compared with 2.0, respectively). But his skill set is too good to ignore: He's 6-6, 276 pounds with positional versatility and stout run defense. A defensive line coach will see the potential to develop Faulk into a much more consistent rusher, as he won't turn 21 until September.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS ESPN – FIELD YATES

28. Houston Texans

Peter Woods, DT, Clemson

Woods might have the biggest range of the prospects we've discussed so far. His ardent believers feel he could go in the top 15, while skeptics don't see him as a first-round talent.

Woods is an explosive but undersized defensive tackle whose production left a lot to be desired with just 5.0 sacks in the past two seasons. The right scheme would allow him to take his disruptive first step into opposing backfields frequently. Houston has the best defense in the AFC, but it could use some youth at defensive tackle, where Sheldon Rankins is 31 years old.

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Cashius Howell, EDGE, Texas A&M

The Chiefs haven't had two first-round picks since 2022, when they drafted cornerback Trent McDuffie and EDGE rusher George Karlaftis. While the former was traded this offseason (to land this pick), the latter needs some help on the EDGE.

Howell was the SEC Defensive Player of the Year after racking up 11.5 sacks in 2025, displaying an excellent first step, ability to bend the EDGE and closing speed. He lacks the optimal length for an EDGE rusher with just 30¼-inch arms, but that is offset by his ability to get underneath and around offensive tackles.

30. Miami Dolphins (from DEN)

KC Concepcion, WR, Texas A&M

Following the release of Tyreek Hill and trade of Jaylen Waddle, Miami's wide receivers group is inarguably the thinnest in the NFL. Adding Concepcion would be a step in the right direction. He's among the most explosive players in the class, hauling in 25 receiving touchdowns in just three seasons and taking two punt returns to the house in 2025. However, Concepcion lacks massive size (6 feet, 196 pounds) and must clean up drops (seven this past season).

31. New England Patriots

Denzel Boston, WR, Washington

The Patriots linger as a team in the A.J. Brown sweepstakes, though as I mentioned above, no deal involving Brown is likely to be made until after June 1. New England's only 1,000-yard receiver from 2025 (Stefon Diggs) was cut, and the signing of Romeo Doubs doesn't complete its WR room.

The 6-4 Boston would give the team better size than it has in its current corps. He is a smooth-moving, versatile wideout who could make splash plays with quarterback Drake Maye. Boston hauled in 20 touchdowns over the past two seasons, and he dropped only four of his 209 career targets.

32. Seattle Seahawks

Avieon Terrell, CB, Clemson

Terrell put together a disruptive final season at Clemson, as the younger brother of Falcons cornerback A.J. Terrell Jr. forced five fumbles in 2025 (after three in 2024). Though Avieon Terrell is on the smaller end (5-11, 186 pounds), that ability to punch out the ball would make him a good asset for a Mike Macdonald defense that had the sixth-most takeaways last season (25). Plus, he is a natural coverage corner who could take some of Riq Woolen's vacated snaps.

Last Updated: March 17, 2026

1. Las Vegas Raiders

Fernando Mendoza, QB, Indiana

Las Vegas used free agency to reel in three-time Pro Bowler Tyler Linderbaum at center, which should aid in Mendoza's development. I still expect the Raiders to add a veteran quarterback this offseason, so they won't need to rush the rookie onto the field.

2. New York Jets

Arvell Reese, EDGE, Ohio State

I go back and forth between Reese and Texas Tech's David Bailey here. Reese, with experience playing on the line and off the ball, gives the Jets more scheme flexibility in their 3-4 defense.

3. Arizona Cardinals

Francis Mauigoa, OT, Miami

Arizona lands the draft's top offensive lineman in Mauigoa. He's a plug-and-play guy at right tackle.

4. Tennessee Titans

Jeremiah Love, RB, Notre Dame

Tennessee addressed a lot of its defensive needs in free agency, which frees the team up to take my No. 2 player in the draft to help Cam Ward.

5. New York Giants

Sonny Styles, LB, Ohio State

Styles would be a monster playing behind the Giants' dynamic front line.

6. Cleveland Browns

Carnell Tate, WR, Ohio State

It feels like the Browns need to land an offensive tackle and receiver with their two first-round selections. In this simulation, they're willing to gamble that a Round 1-caliber OT will be waiting for them at Pick No. 24, selecting the highly enticing Tate here.

7. Washington Commanders

Rueben Bain Jr., EDGE, Miami

Washington was aggressive to fill needs at edge rusher in free agency. Bain has the versatility to play from the edge on early downs and then slide inside in sub packages, making him a nice complement to Odafe Oweh and K'Lavon Chaisson.

8. New Orleans Saints

David Bailey, EDGE, Texas Tech

With few young, established pass rushers on the roster, New Orleans could use some fresh legs off the edge. Bailey gives the Saints a true fastball to throw at opposing offenses.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

NFL MEDIA – DANIEL JEREMIAH

9. Kansas City Chiefs

Spencer Fano, OL, Utah

Fano can start immediately at right tackle and eventually kick inside to guard if necessary. The Chiefs will have excellent information on him because of Andy Reid's relationship with former Utah head coach (and former BYU teammate) Kyle Whittingham.

10. Cincinnati Bengals

Caleb Downs, S, Ohio State

The Bengals can take the best defensive player available here. Downs has versatility, and his Big Ten pedigree will be well received by Cincinnati's decision-makers.

11. Miami Dolphins

Mansoor Delane, CB, LSU

There are still a lot of holes to fill on Miami's roster. The Dolphins solve a corner spot with Delane, one of the draft's most consistent players on tape.

12. Dallas Cowboys

Jermod McCoy, CB, Tennessee

McCoy's draft range is somewhat difficult to predict, considering he missed all of last season with an ACL tear and we have yet to see him work out for scouts. His 2024 game film is excellent, though.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS NFL MEDIA – DANIEL JEREMIAH

13. Los Angeles Rams (from ATL)

Makai Lemon, WR, USC

According to NFL Network Insider Ian Rapoport, the Rams were in on trade discussions for Eagles star A.J. Brown, which points to their desire to add at receiver. Lemon has the characteristics they covet in wideouts, with toughness, strong hands and the ability to pick up yards after the catch.

14. Baltimore Ravens

Jordyn Tyson, WR, Arizona State

Tyson would be a fun new weapon for offensive coordinator Declan Doyle, who might see some similarities between the Arizona State product and a player he coached with the Bears last season, Luther Burden III.

15. Tampa Bay Buccaneers

Akheem Mesidor, Edge, Miami

Tampa Bay lands a productive pass rusher (35.5 college sacks, including 12.5 with Miami last season) who can set the tone off the edge with his physical play.

16. New York Jets (from IND)

Omar Cooper Jr. , WR, Indiana

Cooper would be an awesome complement to veteran receiver Garrett Wilson. The former Hoosier is a tough pass catcher who can play inside and outside.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

NFL MEDIA – DANIEL JEREMIAH

17. Detroit Lions

Monroe Freeling, OT, Georgia

Freeling has the most upside of any tackle in this year's draft -- and the Lions have a void to fill at the position after parting ways with Taylor Decker.

18. Minnesota Vikings

Dillon Thieneman, S, Oregon

I wanted to find a different option for the Vikings after slotting Thieneman here in my last mock draft, but every time I do this exercise, the Oregon safety ends up staring me in the face at Pick No. 18. He's a perfect fit.

19. Carolina Panthers

KC Concepcion, WR, Texas A&M

The Panthers add more firepower for Bryce Young. With his ability to separate before and after the catch, Concepcion forms a strong pass-catching trio with Tetairoa McMillan and Jalen Coker.

20. Dallas Cowboys (from GB)

T.J. Parker, EDGE, Clemson

Parker is a polarizing player this year after his production dipped in 2025. But he had a strong finish to the season, and he followed that up with an impressive performance at the Senior Bowl.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

21. Pittsburgh Steelers

Blake Miller, OT, Clemson

Parker is a polarizing player this year after his production dipped in 2025. But he had a strong finish to the season, and he followed that up with an impressive performance at the Senior Bowl.

22. Los Angeles Chargers

Vega loane, IOL, Penn State

The Chargers thank their lucky stars that their need on the interior matches up with the best player still available. loane would be their most talented guard.

23. Philadelphia Eagles

Kadyn Proctor, OT, Alabama

When it comes to addressing needs, GM Howie Roseman tends to be a year early instead of a year late. Right tackle Lane Johnson is under contract through 2027 -- but the Eagles get some insurance for the 13-year veteran now. Proctor could also slide inside to guard if needed.

24. Cleveland Browns (from JAX)

Caleb Lomu, OT, Utah

Cleveland's gamble back at Pick No. 6 pays off, as a left tackle prospect with first-round talent is still available here. I'm not projecting any trades in this mock, but if the Browns do indeed take a receiver with their initial first-round choice, it will not shock me if they look to move up from No. 24 for an OT.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

NFL MEDIA – DANIEL JEREMIAH

25. Chicago Bears

Emmanuel McNeil-Warren, S, Toledo

McNeil-Warren has the size, length and playmaking ability to fill the void left by Jaquan Brisker -- in fact, I believe EMW would be an upgrade at the position.

26. Buffalo Bills

Cashius Howell, Edge, Texas A&M

The level of concern about Howell's lack of length (30 1/4-inch arms) will vary from team to team, but his first-step quickness is unquestioned after he posted the fastest 10-yard split (1.58 seconds) of any player from the defensive line group at this year's NFL Scouting Combine. New Bills DC Jim Leonhard comes from Denver, where the Broncos won off the edge with Nik Bonitto and Jonathon Cooper, who both ranked among the top five at their position last season in average get-off, per Next Gen Stats.

27. San Francisco 49ers

Kenyon Sadiq, TE, Oregon

This is the second time I've mocked Sadiq to the 49ers this year. He would be an amazing new toy for Kyle Shanahan.

28. Houston Texans

Chase Bisontis, IOL, Texas A&M

There are a lot of similarly graded interior offensive linemen that I have in the second-round range. I have a feeling one of them is going climb into Round 1. In this case, Houston stays in state to add Bisontis.

2026 NFL MOCK DRAFTS

NFL MEDIA – DANIEL JEREMIAH

29. Kansas City Chiefs (from LAR)

Colton Hood, CB, Tennessee

The Chiefs land one of the most complete cornerbacks in the draft. Hood can cover and play the run, filling a big void in a secondary that is being rebuilt.

30. Miami Dolphins (from DEN)

Kedric Faulk, EDGE, Auburn

The Dolphins will need to address wide receiver after dealing away Jaylen Waddle, but they are armed with a lot of Day 2 picks to find value at that spot in a year with a deep class at the position. Miami fills another major need with Faulk, who has the versatility and athleticism to fit well in Jeff Hafley's defense.

31. New England Patriots

Kayden McDonald, DT, Ohio State

McDonald gives New England a run-stopping force on the interior. He can do the dirty work and let Milton Williams get up the field.

32. Seattle Seahawks

Jadarian Price, RB, Notre Dame

I see a steep drop at the running back position this year after Price. He would slide right into the mix in Seattle, with Kenneth Walker III departing and Zach Charbonnet coming off injury.
