GAME PREVIEW

The Las Vegas Raiders will host their first-ever primetime contest at the Silver and Black's brand new Allegiant Stadium this coming Monday, Sept. 21, at 5:15 p.m. PT. The matchup marks the first contest between the two clubs since the 2016 Week 1 thriller that concluded with a 35-34 Raiders victory. The all-time series between the two clubs stands tied at six wins apiece with one tie, as the Raiders look to begin 2-0 for the first time since 2017 and improve their all-time record on Monday Night Football to 41-29-1, with the team's last MNF contest against the NFC South coming in 1991. The Monday Night Football clash between the two clubs will commence on ESPN with the broadcast carried by Steve Levy, Brian Griese, Louis Riddick and Lisa Salters, while also being aired on Westwood One Radio with Kevin Harlan and Kurt Warner.

The Silver and Black marched into Bank of America Field in Week 1 to face the Carolina Panthers and came away with a 34-30 victory to begin 2020 1-0. Setting the tone on offense was RB Josh Jacobs, who became the first running back in team history to register three rushing scores in a Week 1 contest. In command of the offense was QB Derek Carr, who tallied his 19th career fourth-quarter comeback on a drive that culminated in Jacobs' third score of the day and the game-winning touchdown. Carr finished 22-of-30 on the day with 239 yards through the air and one touchdown, earning his Raiders-record 33rd game with a passer rating over 100.0 (107.5), surpassing Raiders legend QB Ken Stabler's 32 such games. Jacobs rushed 25 times for 93 yards in addition to his three scores and also logged four receptions for 46 yards. The rookie weapon WR Henry Ruggs III was also a contributor, notching three receptions for 55 yards including a 45-yard catch-and-run, while also posting two rushes for 11 more yards. On defense, S Johnathan Abram returned to the lineup after missing the majority of his rookie campaign due to injury and led the club with 13 tackles (nine solo), tied for the fourth-most by a Raiders defensive back in team history and most since DB Charles Woodson posted 14 on Nov. 16, 2014 against the Chargers.

The Saints come to Las Vegas following a Week 1 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers at home by a score of 34-23. Following Week 2's contest, the Raiders will travel back to the East Coast to face the New England Patriots in Week 3, while the Saints will return to Louisiana to host the Green Bay Packers.

SNAPSHOT VS. SAINTS

Overview: Head Coach Sean Payton enters his 14th season at the helm of the Saints after a 13-3 record and third-straight NFC South division title in 2019. New Orleans enters Sunday's contest 1-0 after defeating the Buccaneers, 34-23, in Week 1. The Silver and Black won the last contest in the 2016 season opener by a score of 35-34. The Raiders and Saints are tied in the all-time regular season series at 6-6-1.

Offense: Entering his club-record 15th season with the Saints, QB Drew Brees holds the NFL records for career passing yards (77,576), TD passes (549) and completions (6,885). In Week 1 of the 2020 campaign, Brees became the NFL's all-time leader in pass attempts (10,191), surpassing Brett Favre's 10,169 attempts. Brees completed 19-of-30 passes for 160 yards and two touchdowns, surpassing Peyton Manning for second-most multi-touchdown games in his career, with 166. RB Alvin Kamara recorded his 14th career multi-touchdown game, finishing the game with two touchdowns, 51 yards receiving and 16 yards rushing. RB Latavius Murray had a team-leading 48 yards rushing on 15 attempts. WR Emmanuel Sanders added a receiving touchdown, while TE Jared Cook recorded a team-high five receptions for 80 yards. Two-time All-Pro WR Michael Thomas was limited to a career-low three receptions, finishing with 17 yards receiving in the season opener.

Defense: Now in his second stint in New Orleans, Dennis Allen enters his fifth full season as the team's defensive coordinator in his eleventh campaign with the club. New Orleans' defense has ranked in the NFL's top five the past two seasons in both run defense and sacks. In Week 1, the Saints recorded three sacks, one each for DE Trey Hendrickson, LB Demario Davis, and DE Carl Granderson. The Saints' defense held Tampa Bay QB Tom Brady to a 78.4 passer rating, recording two interceptions. S Marcus Williams recorded his 11th career interception and CB Janoris Jenkins recorded a 36-yard interception return for a touchdown, the eighth of his career. CB CJ Gardner-Johnson finished with a career-high 10 tackles and DE Cameron Jordan recorded four tackles in his 145th consecutive game played, good for second in club history. The Saints have not allowed an opposing running back to rush for over 100 yards in 44 straight games dating back to November of 2017.

WHAT TO WATCH FOR IN 2020

The Raiders offensive line not allowing a sack in consecutive weeks to start the season for the first time since Weeks 1-2 of the 2009 season.

Coach Gruden recording seven victories to surpass Art Shell for third-most victories (57) by a head coach in franchise history.

S Johnathan Abram leading the team in tackles for the second consecutive game after tying for the fourth-most tackles (13) by a Raiders defensive back in team history in Week 1.

QB Derek Carr completing 367 passes (totaling 2,509 in his career) to surpass Matt Ryan for most completions in NFL history through a player's first seven seasons. Carr's 2,120 completions through his first six seasons stand as second in NFL history to Peyton Manning, while his 1,759 completions through his first five years mark an NFL record.

Carr recording a passer rating of 100.0 for the second consecutive game. Carr broke Ken Stabler's record of 32 such games in Week 1 to become the franchise's all-time leader.

Carr completing 300 passes for the seventh consecutive year, joining Peyton Manning as the only players in NFL history with seven seasons of 300 completions in their first seven years in the NFL.

Carr completing 328 passes to join Matthew Stafford as the only players in NFL history with five campaigns of 350 completions in their first seven seasons in the NFL.

Carr passing for 3,000 yards to join Andy Dalton, Peyton Manning, Cam Newton and Russell Wilson as the only players in NFL history with at least 3,000 passing yards in each of their first seven seasons.

Carr passing for 2,934 yards to enter the Top-5 in NFL history (Drew Bledsoe - 25,966) for career passing yards in a player's first seven seasons.

Carr passing for 4,000 yards for the third time in his career. Carr is the only Raiders quarterback in franchise history with multiple 4,000-yard campaigns.

Carr recording 19 touchdown passes, joining Peyton Manning, Dan Marino, Russell Wilson, Eli Manning and Matt Ryan as the only quarterbacks in NFL history with at least six seasons with 20 touchdown passes in their first seven years in the NFL.

Carr recording seven touchdown passes to set a franchise record with 151 career touchdown passes, surpassing Ken Stabler's record of 150.

Carr recording 15 touchdown passes to rank in the top-10 all-time for most touchdown passes through a player's first seven seasons in the NFL.

Carr recording 26 touchdown passes to become the seventh player in NFL history with 170 career touchdown passes in their first seven seasons in the NFL.

Carr recording one fourth-quarter comeback to surpass Matt Ryan for most such comebacks (20) in NFL history through a player's first seven years. Carr's 18 through his first six years and 16 through his first five years are both NFL records.

Carr becoming the first player in Raiders history to record multiple seasons with a passer rating of at least 100.0.

DE Maxx Crosby recording 9.5 sacks to become the franchise's all-time leader in sacks through a player's first two seasons in the NFL (since sacks became an official statistic in 1982 - Anthony Smith does not qualify while being on the Reserve/Injured List during his rookie season in 1990).

Crosby recording 10 sacks to become the first player in franchise history with at least 20 sacks in his first two seasons in the NFL (since sacks became an official statistic in 1982 - Anthony Smith does not qualify while being on the Reserve/Injured List during his rookie season in 1990).

Crosby becoming the first player in Raiders history with two double-digit sack seasons to begin his career.

Crosby becoming the 16th player in NFL history to begin his career with two double-digit sack seasons.

RB Josh Jacobs becoming the first running back in franchise history to begin his career with back-to-back 1,000-yard rushing campaigns after setting the franchise rookie record with 1,150 rushing yards in 2019. Jacobs is the only player in franchise history with over 1,000 rushing yards during his rookie campaign.

Jacobs rushing for multiple touchdowns in back-to-back games for the first time in his career. Jacobs has four such games through his first 14 career contests, tied for fifth-most all-time.

Jacobs rushing for 100 yards for the sixth time in his first 15 career games after setting a rookie franchise record with five in 2019.

Jacobs rushing for 469 yards to become the franchise's leader in rushing yards (1,712) through a player's first two seasons, surpassing Hall of Famer Marcus Allen's 1,711 yards.

Jacobs becoming the 33rd player in NFL history to rush for 1,000 yards in each of their first two seasons.

Jacobs becoming the first player in franchise history with 2,000 rushing yards in his first two seasons.

Jacobs rushing for 100 yards in five contests to become just the 13th player in NFL history to record 10 100-yard rushing contests in their first two seasons. Jacobs would become the first player in club history to accomplish the feat.

A Raiders running back recording 30 attempts in a single game for the first time since Dec. 16, 2012 (Darren McFadden).

WR Hunter Renfrow recording 49 receptions to become the fourth player in Raiders lore to record 100 receptions in his first two years in the NFL.

Renfrow recording 55 receptions to rank second all-time in Raiders history with 107 receptions in his first two seasons.

TE Darren Waller becoming the second tight end in Raiders history to record multiple 100-yard receiving campaigns, joining Todd Christensen.

Waller joining Christensen as the only tight ends in franchise history with multiple seasons of 90-plus receptions.

Waller becoming the first tight end in franchise history to record 90 receptions and 1,000 receiving yards in back-to-back seasons.

TE Jason Witten recording 59 receptions for his 16th career season with at least 60 receptions, the second-most in NFL history. Only Pro Football Hall of Famer Jerry Rice (17) has more such seasons.

Witten recording 21 receiving yards to become the second tight end in NFL history with 13,000 receiving yards, joining Pro Football Hall of Famer Tony Gonzalez (15,127). Witten has 12,979 career receiving yards.

A WIN WOULD...

...give the Raiders a 2-0 record to start the year for the first time since 2017, while marking the first time since 2005 that Head Coach Jon Gruden began a season 2-0.

...improve the Raiders record to 41-29-1 all-time in Monday Night Football contests.

...give the Raiders three straight victories on MNF, and four consecutive Primetime wins, dating back to Dec. 24, 2018.

...give the Raiders a 7-6-1 advantage in the all-time regular season series against the Saints.

...mark the Silver and Black's second straight victory against the Saints, and fourth straight against an NFC South opponent dating back to the 2016 season.

JON GRUDEN

Jon Gruden returned as head coach of the Oakland Raiders on Jan. 9, 2018, welcoming back one of the most respected and successful coaches in the storied history of the Silver and Black. Gruden, who was first introduced as head coach of the Raiders over 20 years ago, served four seasons with the Raiders from 1998-2001.

Gruden has compiled a 107-102 (.512) regular season mark as a head coach with the Raiders and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (2002-08), and a 5-4 record (.556) in postseason contests, which includes a victory in Super Bowl XXXVII.

In his second season back with the Silver and Black, Gruden oversaw the continued development of quarterback Derek Carr and an offense that proved explosive and dynamic in helping the team nearly double its win total from the previous season. Under Gruden's tutelage, Carr set a franchise record and ranked second in the NFL with a 70.4 completion percentage (361-for-513) and snapped a career high with 4,054 passing yards, becoming the first Raider to eclipse the 4,000-yard mark twice in his career. Carr was particularly dangerous in third-down situations, posting a league-best 14 TDs and a 127.4 passer rating, the eighth highest in the NFL since 1991.

The youngest head coach in the NFL at age 34 upon his initial hire by Raiders Owner Al Davis in 1998, Gruden posted a 38-26 record (.594) and led the Silver and Black to back-to-back AFC West titles in 2000 and 2001. He guided the Raiders to an AFC Championship Game appearance in 2000, a campaign in which the Raiders set a franchise record with 479 points and led the NFL in rushing (154.4 avg.).

In all, Gruden-led teams have claimed five division championships and have recorded six seasons with nine-or-more wins. As a head coach, he has seen 22 different players combine for 40 Pro Bowl selections. In addition, Rich Gannon was tabbed for the Maxwell Club's Bert Bell Award as the league's Most Valuable Player in 2000 and four players who Gruden tutored as a head coach have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame: Jerry Rice (2010), Warren Sapp (2013), Derrick Brooks (2014) and Tim Brown (2015).

Gruden spent seven seasons as head coach of the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, finishing his time there as the winningest coach in franchise history by compiling a 57-55 (.509) regular-season record, while leading the Buccaneers to three division titles and a 3-2 mark in the postseason, including a Super Bowl XXXVII victory, becoming the youngest head coach in NFL history to win a Super Bowl.

Prior to beginning his initial tenure in Oakland, Gruden was a seven-year NFL assistant, helping his teams qualify for the playoffs five times. Gruden spent three seasons (1995-97) as offensive coordinator for the Philadelphia Eagles. He was the NFL's youngest offensive coordinator at age 31.

Before joining Philadelphia, Gruden worked for three years at Green Bay from 1992-94. He served as an offensive assistant to head coach Mike Holmgren in 1992 and spent the 1993 and 1994 seasons as Green Bay's wide receivers coach. Gruden worked as offensive assistant to head coach George Seifert with the San Francisco 49ers in 1990.

Born August 17, 1963 in Sandusky, Ohio, Gruden attended South Bend (Ind.) Clay High School and was a three-year letterman at quarterback at the University of Dayton, graduating in 1985 with a degree in communications. Gruden and his wife, Cindy, a former University of Tennessee cheerleader, have three sons, Deuce, who is in his first season as an assistant strength and conditioning coach for the Silver and Black, Michael and Jayson.

SEAN PAYTON

Since he was hired as head coach of the New Orleans Saints in 2006, Sean Payton has established himself as one of the NFL's most successful coaches. He's led the Saints to eight playoff berths, six NFC South titles and in 2009 captured the franchise's first World Championship with a 31-17 win over the Indianapolis Colts in Super Bowl XLIV. Payton's 140 regular season and post-season wins in his NFL head coaching career are 26th all-time. He has a 140-84 overall record (.625), including eight postseason wins after the franchise had won only one playoff game prior to his arrival. Payton holds the club's top win total and winning percentage. In all, Payton-led teams have claimed six division championships and have eight seasons with ten-or-more wins, while claiming the No. 1 seed in the NFC twice.

Payton's presided over the NFL's most prolific offense since his arrival, leading the league in net yards per game in 2006, 2008, 2009, 2011, 2014 and 2016, the only six times the Saints have led the league in offense and first in scoring in 2008 and 2009. Ranking in the top ten offensively every season since Payton arrived, the Saints have the third-longest streak (14 seasons) in the NFL since the 1970 AFL/NFL merger. In team history, the Saints have scored at least 45 points on 25 separate occasions with 21 of these outputs occurring under Payton's watch. Defensively, New Orleans has finished in the top five twice (2010 and 2013). He has also sent a total of 63 selections to the Pro Bowl, including a franchise-record 11 in 2019, and he and his staff have earned the honor of coaching the NFC squad following the 2006 and 2017 seasons.

Despite missing QB Drew Brees for five contests, the 2019 Saints won 13 games, including seven on the road, both for the second consecutive season and captured the NFC South division title for the third straight time. His six division titles are tied for third among active head coaches.

Payton was hired as the 14th head coach in Saints history on Jan. 18, 2006 after serving as a member of the Dallas Cowboys coaching staff from 2003-05 under 2013 Pro Football Hall of Fame inductee Bill Parcells. Prior to his final season with the Cowboys, Payton was promoted to assistant head coach/passing game coordinator and was responsible for the team's play-calling after serving as assistant head coach/quarterbacks from 2003-04. In 2005, the Cowboys tied for second in the NFC with 318 first downs. When he arrived, Dallas had ranked 31st in passing the previous year but immediately improved to 17th.

Payton went to Dallas following four years with the New York Giants (1999-2002), the last three as offensive coordinator after spending his first season as quarterbacks coach. He solidified his reputation as one of the game's brightest offensive minds in his first full season as coordinator, when the Giants captured the NFC title and went to Super Bowl XXXV. New York scored 328 points - the club's highest total since 1990 - and finished 13th in the NFL in offense.

Payton has had particular success tutoring quarterbacks. Brees has thrived since arriving in New Orleans, as he holds or has tied a total of 27 club career, singleseason and single-game records, 13 of them NFL marks. Since signing with the Saints, Brees has completed 5,742 of 8,352 attempts (68.8%) for 65,068 yards with 467 touchdowns and a 101.3 rating. He has led the NFL in passing yardage a league-record seven times and in completion percentage six times.

Payton was born Dec. 29, 1963 in San Mateo, Calif., and raised in Naperville, Ill., Payton has a daughter, Meghan and a son, Connor.

Raiders 34, Panthers 30

- The team recorded their first victory as the Las Vegas Raiders.
- The Raiders now hold a two-game win streak over Carolina, improving their all-time regular season series record against the Panthers to 4-3.
- The win marks the fourth time in the last five seasons that the club has opened with a Week 1 victory, improving to 29-32 (.475) all-time on NFL Kickoff weekend.
- Head Coach Jon Gruden earned his 50th career victory with the Raiders, and improved to 6-8 (.429) all-time in season-opening games.
- The win marks the Raiders third straight victory against NFC South opponents dating back to the 2016 season and improves Las Vegas' all-time record against the division to 24-18-1 (.558).

Game Themes

- For the fourth time since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger, the Raiders' offense did not surrender a sack in the season opener.
- The Raiders started two rookie receivers in their season opener for only the second time since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger, with Henry Ruggs III and Bryan Edwards getting the start in today's contest. (Last: Darrius Heyward-Bey and Louis Murphy in 2009).
- The Raiders 34 points in the contest are the second-most by the club in a season-opening game since 1990.
- QB Derek Carr finished with a 107.5 passer rating, improving to 23-10 in career games recording a passer rating of at least 100.0 and surpassing Ken Stabler for most such games in team history.
- With three rushing TDs in today's contest, RB Josh Jacobs tallied his fourth multi-rush TD game in just his first 14 career contests, tied for 3rd-most all-time in NFL history.

NFL Debuts

- CB Damon Arnette
 - o Arnette finished with four tackles (two) and one pass defended in his NFL debut.
- WR Bryan Edwards
 - o Starting in his NFL debut, Edwards and Henry Ruggs III became the first Raiders' rookie receiver tandem to start in the season opener since Sept. 14, 2009 (Darrius Heyward-Bey and Louis Murphy).
 - o Edwards finished with one catch for nine yards in his NFL debut.
- WR Henry Ruggs III
 - o Starting in his NFL debut, Ruggs III recorded his first career reception on a 45 yard pass from QB Derek Carr to setup a 1-yard TD run by RB Josh Jacobs on the following play for the Raiders' first points of the season.
 - o Ruggs finished with three receptions for 55 yards, while adding two rushes for 11 yards.

Raiders Debuts

Individual Highlights

• S Johnathan Abram

o Led all players with 13 tackles (nine solo) in today's contest. His 13 total tackles are tied for fourth-most by a Raiders defensive back in a single game, and most by a Raiders DB since Charles Woodson recorded 14 tackles (Nov. 16, 2014 at SD).

o Carr led the offense down the field on the Raiders' second offensive possession of the game, orchestrating an eight-play, 75-yard drive that was capped by RB Josh Jacobs' 1-yard TD run to give the Raiders their first points of the season.

o On the Raiders second TD of the contest, Carr orchestrated an eight-play, 75-yard drive lasting 3:09 that culminated with a 23-yard TD reception by WR Nelson Agholor to put the Raiders up 17-12 with 2:00 remaining in the first half.

o Carr finished the contest completing 22-of-30 attempts for 239 yards with one TD for a passer rating of 107.5.

o Carr has now posted a passer rating of at least 100 points (107.5) in 33 career games (23-10 record). His 33 such games surpassed QB Ken Stabler for most in team history.

o Carr orchestrated his 19 fourth-quarter comeback in his career. Carr was the NFL's record holder of fourth-quarter comebacks through his first six seasons (18).

o In two career contests against the Panthers, Carr has completed 48-of-68 passes (70.6 percent), averaged 8.1 yards per pass attempt, thrown three TDs against one INTs and earned a passer rating of 103.4 to improve to 2-0.

o Has 1,685 pass yards (337.0 per game) & 11 TDs vs. one INT for 108.9 rating in 5 career games against NFC South.

• RB Josh Jacobs

o Registered the first points by a member of the Las Vegas Raiders on a 1-yard rushing TD, which capped off an eight-play, 75-yard drive in the first quarter.

o Recorded his second rushing TD of the contest on a 7-yard TD run, capping off a six-play, 49-yard drive to extend the Raiders lead to 27-15 with 5:33 remaining in the first quarter.

o With three rushing TDs in today's contest, Jacobs tallied his fourth multi-rush TD game in just his first 14 career contests, tied for fifth-most all-time in NFL history. The only players with more such contests: Eric Dickerson (6), Marcus Allen (5), Curtis Martin (5), Ickey Woods (5).

o Jacobs is first Raiders player to ever rush for three TDs in a season opener and first player in the NFL with three rushing TDs in season-opener since Mike Gillislee (NE) did so in 2017 and only the third such occurrence since 2010.

o Jacobs joins WR Tim Brown as the only other Raiders player with three TDs in season-opener (vs. Ten in 1997).

o Jacobs became the first Raiders running back to record three rushing TDs in a single game since Latavius Murray did so in 2016 (11/6/16 vs. Den.).

o His three TDs on the ground tie a single-game franchise record.

o Joined Lawrence Phillips (1996-97) as the only players with at least 2 rushing TDs in Week 1 of both their rookie season and second season.

o Jacobs became just the second running back in NFL history to record five combined rushing TDs in Week 1 of his rookie and second season, joining Lawrence Phillips (1996-97).

o Jacobs has surpassed 100 scrimmage yards in Week 1 of 2020. Last season, Jacobs was the only rookie in the NFL to average over 100 scrimmage yards per game (101.2 avg.), with the next closest being 82.9 (A.J. Brown).

o Jacobs recorded a team-high 93 yards rushing on 25 carries (3.7 avg.) with three TDs, adding 46 yards receiving on four receptions (11.5).

Additional Notes

- K Daniel Carlson converted on FG attempts of 20 and 54-yards and was true on all four PATs. His 54-yard FG marks a new career-long.
- DT Maurice Hurst and DE Carl Nassib combined to record the Raiders' first sack of the season, taking down QB Teddy Bridgewater for a loss of 10 yards in the third quarter.
- TE Darren Waller had a team-high six receptions, marking six-plus receptions in 3 of his past 4 contests dating back to 2019.
- P A.J. Cole punted three times for 127 yards (42.3 avg.) with a long of 52 yards.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders — who began play in the American Football League in 1960 — enter their 61st year of professional football competition, including the last 49 as a member of the National Football League.

In six memorable decades — the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and 2010s — the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three world championships of professional football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 22 playoff seasons, finished 35 seasons at .500 or better and played in 44 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s.

The Silver and Black are the only AFC team — and one of just two NFL teams (Minnesota) — to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only three original AFL teams to have captured three world championships of professional football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980.

In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

With four postseason victories, the Raiders were the first of the AFC West teams to win multiple postseason contests in the new millennium by six years.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During the memorable 61 years in Oakland, Los Angeles and now Las Vegas, the Raiders won 474 league games, tied 11 and lost 432.

"Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization during the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium as shown by their domination of pro football.

More than 20 of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced six Coaches of the Year.

In addition, 72 Pro Bowl players have earned 204 Pro Bowl selections representing the Silver and Black. In 1970, as the Raiders began their second decade of play, the merger between the AFL and NFL became a reality on the field. In the 1970 through 2012 period of interconference play, the Raiders compiled a remarkable 92-77-1 record against present National Football Conference rivals.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 — "Monday Night Football." The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build a 40-29-1 record in Monday night play. In the 50 years of this series, the Raiders are 18-9-0 in "Monday Night Football" games at home.

Through the decades — the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s and now the 2010s — the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports.

Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

THE GENERAL MANAGER

Mike Mayock was named General Manager of the Raiders on Dec. 31, 2018, becoming just the third general manager in Raiders franchise history. Mayock previously served as an Emmy-nominated analyst and draft expert for the NFL Network and handled color commentary duties in the broadcast booth for both college and NFL games before joining the Silver and Black.

Mayock applied his expertise in player evaluation immediately, providing his own stamp on the Raiders' roster. His moves in free agency brought Pro Bowl tackle Trent Brown, wide receiver Tyrell Williams and defensive back Lamarcus Joyner to the Silver and Black during the 2019 early free agency period. The Raiders brought in a larger free agent haul in 2020, signing 12 new unrestricted free agents to address needs on both sides of the ball. The Raiders signed several potential starters on defense, bolstering the defensive line with the additions of defensive tackle Maliek Collins and defensive end Carl Nassib, the linebacker corps by signing Nick Kwiatkoski and Cory Littleton, while adding safeties Damarious Randall and Jeff Heath to the secondary. On offense, Mayock tabbed quarterback Marcus Mariota and future Hall of Fame tight end Jason Witten to provide depth and leadership.

Mayock's second NFL Draft with the Silver and Black in April saw the Raiders add speed, toughness and a desire for competition, identified as key "Raider traits," with seven picks through just four rounds. Roster needs at wide receiver and cornerback were addressed early, as explosive Alabama wide receiver Henry Ruggs III, the fastest player in the draft, and versatile Ohio State cornerback Damon Arnette were taken in the first round. Without a second-round pick, Mayock used three third-round selections to nab playmaking running back Lynn Bowden Jr. from Kentucky, South Carolina wide receiver Bryan Edwards and Clemson linebacker Tanner Muse. On the draft's third day, Mayock used a second draft-day trade to move up and select Clemson guard John Simpson, the fifth player plucked from "Death Valley" by the Raiders in two years, before rounding out the class by drafting Louisiana Tech cornerback Amik Robertson later in the fourth round.

In his first NFL Draft at the helm, Mayock and Head Coach Jon Gruden used four picks among the top-40 players selected to assemble a group of "foundational" standouts. The Raiders selected defensive lineman Clelin Ferrell from Clemson with the fourth-overall pick before adding Alabama running back Josh Jacobs and Mississippi State safety Johnathan Abram with late first-round selections. Mayock executed two trades on the draft's second day to move back to the 40th-overall spot, selecting Clemson defensive back Trayvon Mullen and netting additional fourth and fifth-round picks. The Raiders were involved in five draft-day trades in total, trading up in the fifth round to pick Clemson wide receiver Hunter Renfrow, helping complete a draft haul that earned plaudits from around the NFL.

In addition, five rookie free agents who signed with the Silver and Black immediately after the draft spent significant time on the active roster during the 2019 season, including fullback Alec Ingold, who was selected as Pro Bowl alternate, and punter A.J. Cole, who placed 33 punts inside the 20-yard line, tied for the third-most in Raiders history.

The Raiders' 2019 rookie class registered as one of the most immediately impactful in team history, producing the PFWA Offensive Rookie of the Year Award winner in Jacobs, while rookie defensive end Maxx Crosby, a fourth-round selection, finished the year as an AP Defensive Rookie of the Year finalist. As a whole, the 2019 draft class led the NFL in sacks (14.5), touchdowns from scrimmage (17), rushing yards (1,167), rushing touchdowns (seven), rushing first downs (60) and yards after catch (676), while finishing second in receptions (107), receiving yards (1,112) and first-down receptions (62).

Prior to assembling talent for the Raiders, Mayock's NFL Draft analysis had been one of the most respected voices among media, NFL front office personnel and team scouting departments. His expertise featured within the NFL Network's extensive coverage of the NFL Draft, including the show "Path To The Draft," as well as the network's exclusive coverage of the NFL Scouting Combine and the Reese's Senior Bowl.

Outside of the studio, Mayock served as the television analyst for the Philadelphia Eagles' preseason games since 2015. He also served as a game analyst for NFL Network's broadcasts of the Senior Bowl and East-West all-star game, as well as preseason analyst for the Minnesota Vikings for several seasons.

In 2010, Mayock became the color commentator for NBC's coverage of Notre Dame football, teaming with play-by-play announcer Tom Hammond. In January 2011, he teamed with Hammond to call NBC's broadcast of the NFC Wild Card playoff game between the New Orleans Saints and the Seattle Seahawks. The following year, he called an AFC Wild Card contest featuring the Cincinnati Bengals and the Houston Texans.

Mayock teamed with Brad Nessler to call the NFL Network's Thursday Night Football package from 2011-2013. Prior to joining NFL Network, Mayock served as a college football analyst for ABC Sports (2001-03), Fox Sports Net (2000), and CBS Sports (1996-99). He also covered the NCAA Men's Basketball Tournament as a reporter for CBS (1997-99). From 1993-95, Mayock worked on ESPN's coverage of the Canadian Football League.

A 10th-round pick in the 1981 NFL Draft by the Pittsburgh Steelers, Mayock then played for the New York Giants from 1982-83. He is a member of the Boston College Hall of Fame, where he captained both the football and baseball teams. Mayock graduated from Boston College in 1980.

Mayock and his wife Amanda have four children (Leigh, Michael, Mackenzie and Jack).

SILVER AND BLACK IN PRIME TIME

- The Raiders will host all four of their primetime games in 2020: Monday Night Football contest against the New Orleans Saints on Sept. 21, an NBC Sunday Night Football game against the Tampa Bay Buccaneers on Oct. 25, an NBC Sunday Night Football matchup against the division-rival Kansas City Chiefs on Nov. 22, and a Thursday Night Football contest against the Los Angeles Chargers on Dec. 17.
- The Silver and Black's primetime slate in 2020 marks the most appearances since their five contests in 2017. Additionally, their four contests at home mark the most primetime games hosted by the Raiders in franchise history.
- This will mark the Raiders' 71st contest on Monday Night Football and fifth consecutive year after opening the 2019 season on Monday night at home against the Denver Broncos. The Silver and Black took last year's Monday Night Football contest, which marked their second straight season opening the season on Monday Night Football. This year's matchup against the New Orleans Saints will be on ESPN with simulcast on ABC.
- The Raiders hold a 40-29-1 all-time record in Monday Night Football contests.
- The Raiders will appear on Sunday Night Football two times in 2020, marking their first appearance since 2017 when they had three contests on SNF.
- Since 1978, the Raiders hold a 19-20 all-time record in Sunday night contests. Las Vegas holds a 1-0 record against Tampa Bay and 1-4 record against the Chiefs on Sunday Night Football.
- The Thursday Night Football contest against the Chargers will mark the eighth between the two clubs on Thursday. Las Vegas has played no other team more on Thursday than the Chargers, holding a 6-1 record. In last year's Thursday night matchup, the Raiders defeated the Chargers 26-24 to earn their third consecutive contest on TNF. The Thursday Night Football contest against the Chargers will be televised on FOX with a simulcast on NFL Network and streamed live on Amazon.
- On Thursdays, the Raiders are 11-11 all-time, including a 3-4 record on Thanksgiving Days.

2020 DIVISIONAL BREAKDOWN

AFC WEST: Denver Broncos, Kansas City Chiefs, Los Angeles Chargers

- The Chiefs finished 12-4 and won the AFC West crown for the fourth consecutive season, while claiming a victory in Super Bowl LIV.
- The Raiders finished 3-3 against the AFC West in 2019, defeating the Denver Broncos at home on Monday Night Football in Week 1 and sweeping the Chargers for the first time since 2016.
- Since divisional realignment in 2002, the Raiders have posted a winning record in the AFC West twice: 4-2 in 2002 and 6-0 in 2010.

AFC NORTH: Cleveland Browns

- The Raiders are 48-39 (.552) all-time against the AFC North, with an overall record of 13-10 against the Browns after last defeating the team in 2018, 45-42 in overtime.

AFC SOUTH: Indianapolis Colts

- Las Vegas owns a 43-38 (.531) combined all-time advantage against AFC South opponents, and will face the Colts for the third consecutive year after traveling to Indianapolis in Week 4 last season.

AFC EAST: Buffalo Bills, Miami Dolphins, New England Patriots, New York Jets

- The Raiders are 78-67-4 (.538) all-time against the AFC East. The Silver and Black have played the most games (43) against the Jets, holding a 23-18-2 advantage in the all-time series.
- The Raiders went 2-2 against the AFC East in 2017.

NFC SOUTH: Atlanta Falcons, Carolina Panthers, New Orleans Saints, Tampa Bay Buccaneers

- The Raiders are 24-18-1 all-time against the NFC South. The Silver and Black are tied in the all-time series against the Falcons, while holding a 4-3 lead over the Panthers and a 7-2 advantage against the Buccaneers.
- The Silver and Black last played the division in 2016, finishing 3-1, with their lone loss coming to the Falcons in Week 2.

2020 SCHEDULE STATS

- The Raiders have a 208-243-8 all-time record on the road.
- Las Vegas will play in nine different stadiums during the 2020 regular season, including opening their new home in Allegiant Stadium.
- The Raiders have played more road games in Arrowhead Stadium than in any other stadium, followed by Empower Field at Mile High.
- The Silver and Black will visit one stadium for the first time in club history in 2020 (Mercedes-Benz Stadium), while also becoming Las Vegas' first NFL team.
- The Raiders will travel to the Eastern Time Zone five times this season, with trips to the New York Jets, Carolina Panthers, New England Patriots, Atlanta Falcons and Cleveland Browns. The Silver and Black play only one opponent in their time zone, traveling to Los Angeles to face the divisional-rival Chargers.

RAIDER ROOKIES

In Week 9, the rookie class of 2019 accounted for all four touchdowns on offense - two from RB Josh Jacobs and one apiece from TE Foster Moreau and WR Hunter Renfrow - the first such occurrence in franchise history dating back to the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger. Additionally, the Raiders as a rookie unit have combined for more scores than any other rookie class last season.

The rookie class scored at least one touchdown in seven consecutive games from Week 4 against the Indianapolis Colts to Week 11 against the Cincinnati Bengals. They have failed to reach the end zone only five times this season: Weeks 2, 3, 12, 13 and 15. In Week 11, the Raiders tied a franchise record for most touchdowns by a rookie class in one season, tying the 14 scored in 1982 by the rookie class. In Week 14, they set a new club record with 15.

OFFENSIVE ANCHORS

KEEP YOUR CARR CLEAN

In Week 1 of the 2020 campaign, the Raiders made a statement, surrendering zero sacks against the Carolina Panthers defensive front. It marked just the fourth time since the 1970 AFL-NFL Merger and second consecutive year in a row that the Raiders have held their opponent to zero sacks in the season opener.

----- NFL SACKS SURRENDERED IN 2020 -----

Rk.	Team	Sacks

3t.	Indianapolis	1
3t.	Kansas City	1
3t.	L.A. Rams	1
3t.	New Orleans	1

The Raiders held four opponents without a sack in 2019. After doing so against the Broncos in Week 1, the team held the Bears' defense to zero sacks in Week 5 for just the second time since 2017. The team followed up that performance with two more shutouts: one in Week 7 against the Green Bay Packers and again in Week 8 against the Texans. At the time, the Packers were the only team in the league with two players that each had at least five sacks on the year. The Raiders were one of five teams in the NFL that held at least four teams without a sack.

ANCHORING THE LINE

Since arriving to the club in 2015, C Rodney Hudson has been an integral part of the Raiders success up front. Dating back to his arrival, the offensive line has surrendered just 156 total sacks, the sixth-fewest allowed in the NFL during that span.

----- NFL SACKS SURRENDERED SINCE 2015 -----

Rk.	Team	Sacks
1.	Saints	125
2.	Steelers	134
3.	Ravens	146
4.	Patriots	148
5.	Rams	151
6.	Raiders	156

Anchoring the line once again in 2019, C Rodney Hudson was ranked by Pro Football Focus as the NFL's No. 2 center last season. He tallied 1074 snaps and did not to surrender a sack, while allowing just one hit and four quarterback hurries. To put it in perspective, no other center with at least 1,000 snaps in 2018 allowed fewer than eight hurries. In 2019, Hudson did not allow a sack in 527 pass-blocking snaps and led all offensive linemen in the NFL with a 99.7 pass-blocking efficiency rating by PFF.

CARR'S INSURANCE

In the 2019 free agency period, the Raiders bolstered their offensive line, adding Super Bowl Champion, 6-foot-8, 380-pound offensive tackle Trent Brown into the mix of an already talented group of lineman up front. The addition of Brown gave the Raiders starting front five that averages a height of 6-foot-5 and weight of 336 pounds. Brown has started in 55 of his 58 total appearances in his career and has started in all three postseason contests. He helped hold four different opponents to zero sacks last season, making the Raiders one of only five clubs in the NFL to have four such games. Brown also paved the way for the first 1,000-yard rookie rusher in franchise history and earned his first Pro Bowl nod. According to Pro Football Focus, Brown surrendered just one sack in 326 pass blocking plays before being placed on IR.

CLELIN FERRELL

DE Clelin Ferrell was drafted in the first round (fourth overall) of the 2019 NFL Draft. A prolific three-year starter at Clemson, Ferrell started in all 44 appearances and helped the school capture two National Championships in 2016 and 2018. Over his career, he totaled 166 tackles, including 50 for loss, 27 sacks, seven passes defended, five forced fumbles and two fumble recoveries. Ferrell's career sack total ranked tied for fourth in Tigers history, and he left Clemson as just the second player in school history to tally two first-team All American honors from the Associated Press. He also became just the third player in Clemson history to earn the first-team honor as either a freshman or sophomore. As a senior in 2018, Ferrell won the Ted Hendrick's Award, given to the nation's top defensive end.

Ferrell was an immediate starter on the defensive line as a rookie, rotating in at both defensive tackle and defensive end, making his presence felt as both a run-stopper and pass-rusher. A look below shows Ferrell's stat line from his first 16 contests.

HARRIS' HOUSE CALL

S Erik Harris recorded two interceptions, including one returned for a touchdown, in the first quarter of Week 10's contest for the first time since Joe Haden did so in 2013. He's just the sixth player to do so dating back to 1991. It was Harris' second interception returned for a touchdown this season, after intercepting Jacoby Brissett in the fourth quarter of Week 4's contest against the Colts to seal a Raiders victory. Harris was the first Raider to return two interceptions for a touchdown in a single season since Thomas Howard did so in 2007.

Harris ranked tied for second in 2019 with two defensive touchdowns.

CARR AT THE HELM

QB Derek Carr was named the Raiders' starting QB heading into the 2014 season, becoming the first rookie QB in team history to start in Week 1. Carr has grown into one of the league's top QBs, as he became the second QB in NFL history to complete at least 300 passes in each of his first six seasons. In 2019, Carr became the first quarterback in franchise history to pass for 4,000 yards in multiple seasons, while also setting a new franchise record for completion percentage (70.4 percent). Carr completed 361-of-513 passes for a career-high 4,054 yards, 7.9 yards per attempt and 100.8 passer rating. In 2018, Carr set a new franchise mark for most consecutive pass attempts without an interception (332), while also setting an NFL record for most completions (1,759) through a player's first five years in the NFL. Carr ranks first in club history with 22,793 yards through the air and third with 143 passing scores. In 2016, he became the first QB in franchise history to throw for 3,000 yards in each of his first three seasons and led seven fourth-quarter comebacks en route to winning the NFL's Castrol Edge Clutch Performer of the Year award.

HIGHLY RATED

Over the past six seasons, Carr has emerged as one of the league's leading passers. His passer rating improved by 14.5 points from his rookie season in 2014 to 2015, and by 5.6 more in 2016, helping him post the 10th- and fourth-best ratings in franchise history. Carr bounced back in 2018 with the third-best mark of his career, earning a 93.9 passer rating. In 2019, Carr earned the best mark of his career as he became just the second player in franchise history to surpass the 100-point passer rating barrier. Carr finished the season ranked ninth in the NFL in passer rating among qualifying passers. Here is how Carr's 2015, 2016, 2018 and 2019 seasons stack up among the best passing campaigns in Raiders history:

----- RAIDERS SINGLE-SEASON PASSER RATING -----

Rank	Player	Year	TD/INT	Rating
1.	Ken Stabler	1976	27/17	103.4
2.	Derek Carr	2019	21/8	100.8

9.	Jeff George	1997	29/9	91.2
10.	Derek Carr	2015	32/13	91.1

*Note: Min. 14 attempts/game.

Carr also became the only quarterback in franchise history with at least four seasons with a 90-plus passer rating, breaking his tie with Rich Gannon's three such seasons. He also ranks tied fourth in NFL history with four such seasons in his first six years in the league.

COMEBACK CARR

Carr has orchestrated 20 game-winning drives in his career. His 18 fourth quarter comebacks in his first six years are the most in NFL history through a quarterback's first six seasons. In Week 1 of 2020, he registered his 19th fourth quarter comeback. Shown below are the 20 combined drives:

- 17-play, 80-yard TD drive (7:21) vs. Kansas City on Nov. 20, 2014 (9-yard TD to James Jones)
- 9-play, 80-yard TD drive (1:44) vs. Baltimore on Sept. 20, 2015 (12-yard TD to Seth Roberts)

Carr's 17 such games through his first five seasons rank first in club history, with Tom Flores' six such games ranking second. Among all quarterbacks in NFL history under the same criteria, Carr's 17 games with at least three touchdown passes are currently tied for sixth-most with Matthew Stafford and Johnny Unitas.

KEEPING IT 100

Carr has posted passer ratings of at least 100 points in 33 career games (23-10 record) after his performance in Week 1 of 2020. With his 33rd such game, Carr has surpassed Raiders legend Ken Stabler for most in franchise history.

THROWING FOR SIX

Carr has enjoyed one of the most prolific starts to a career in NFL history, especially when it comes to finding the end zone. His 53 TDs rank second most by any NFL player through his first two seasons, trailing only Dan Marino (68). And although his 2016 season was cut short due to injury, he continued his stellar start to his career by throwing 28 more TDs in his third season. His 144 TDs are tied for 9th-most in the NFL since 2014.

Carr crossed the 100-touchdown barrier just 60 games into his NFL career, the quickest to reach 100 passing scores in Raiders history. By doing so in his first four seasons, Carr joined Dan Marino, Peyton Manning, Andrew Luck and Russell Wilson as the only quarterbacks in NFL history to toss 100 touchdowns through their first four seasons in the league.

RAIDERS ELITE

Carr threw 32 TD passes in 2015, giving him the second most TD passes in a season in franchise history behind Daryle Lamonica's 34 TDs in 1969. Lamonica also threw 30 TDs in 1967, making he and Carr the only Raiders to throw 30-plus TD passes in a season.

4,000-YARD CLUB

With 185 yards in the 2018 season finale against the Kansas City Chiefs, QB Derek Carr surpassed the 4,000-yard barrier for the first time in his career. Carr became just the third quarterback in franchise history to hit the mark, joining Carson Palmer and Rich Gannon. Carr set himself apart in 2019, becoming the first quarterback in Raiders history with multiple 4,000-yard campaigns, as his 4,054 passing yards in 2019 rank second in club history to only Rich Gannon's 4,689 in 2002. He currently holds three of the top-5 single-season passing performances in club history.

FRANCHISE RECORD

In Week 2 of QB Derek Carr's sixth year in the NFL, he cemented himself as the club's all-time passing yards leader with a 16-yard completion to TE Darren Waller in the second quarter, breaking the record held by Hall of Fame QB Ken Stabler since 1979. Carr became just the 15th quarterback in NFL history to surpass 19,000 passing yards in 80 career games or less, as his 19,196 yards ranked 12th through a player's first 80 career contests. A look below shows the club's top-5 passing leaders in franchise history. He surpassed the 20,000 barrier in his 84th game.

Carr also became the only quarterback in franchise history to throw at least 20 touchdown passes in five seasons, breaking a tie with Rich Gannon and Daryle Lamonica with four such seasons.

TD-INT RATIO

Among Carr's great talents as a quarterback is his ability to protect the ball and minimize turnovers. Through the first seven years of his career, there have been few to ever do it better than Carr when it comes to touchdown-to-interception ratio.

Carr's 2.31 TD-INT ratio (144/62) is tied fourth-best in NFL history among QBs with 3,000-or-more attempts. Shown below is the elite company Carr has joined with those numbers:

MADD MAXX

DE Maxx Crosby was drafted in the fourth round (106th overall) of the 2019 NFL Draft. Crosby appeared in 37 contests during his career with Eastern Michigan, starting in all 24 games in his final two seasons with the school. Over his collegiate career, he totaled 162 tackles (73 solo), including 41 for loss, 20 sacks, one interception returned for a touchdown, four passes defensed, eight forced fumbles and four fumble recoveries. Crosby's tackles for loss and sack total over his career both rank second in Eastern Michigan lore. As a senior in 2018, he notched his second All-MAC First Team honor, becoming just the third defensive player in school history to garner the accolade in consecutive seasons and just the fourth Eagle defender overall to earn the honor twice over their career.

Crosby became a game-changer on defense during his rookie season and finished with the second-most sacks by a rookie in franchise history.

JOSH JACOBS

With the 24th overall selection in the 2019 NFL Draft, the Raiders selected RB Josh Jacobs to be their bell-cow back out of the University of Alabama. After earning the starting role at the conclusion of his first training camp, Jacobs made his rookie debut on Monday Night Football at home against the Denver Broncos. With 23 carries for 85 yards and two rushing scores, while adding one reception for 28 yards, Jacobs became the first player since RB LaDainian Tomlinson (2001) to tally two rushing TDs and 100 yards from scrimmage in his rookie debut. Jacobs also became the first player in franchise history to score two rushing TDs in his NFL debut. Since then, Jacobs took the NFL by storm, becoming the first rookie in franchise history to earn two NFL Offensive Rookie of the Month honors (October and November), while racking up five 100-yard performances and also breaking RB Marcus Allen's franchise rookie rushing record set in 1982 for total rushing yards and 100-yard contests. Jacobs also became the 21st player in NFL history with 1,000 rushing yards through his first 12 career contests. In Week 1 of 2020, he picked up right where he left off as a rookie, becoming the first player in Raiders history to score three times on the ground in a season opener.

- o With 811 rushing yards after his ninth game, Jacobs became just the 16th player in NFL history with at least 800 rushing yards through his first nine games.
- o With two rushing touchdowns in Week 9, Jacobs tied for third-most rushing touchdowns (six) by a Raiders rookie in franchise history (J.D. Smith - 1960).
- o In Week 9, Jacobs became the first rookie since Ickey Woods in 1988 to have two-plus rushing touchdowns in three of his first eight career games.
- o In Week 9, Jacobs tied Marcus Allen for most 100-yard rushing games (three) by a rookie in franchise history.
- o In Week 9, Jacobs became the first Raiders player since RB Latavius Murray in 2016 to record three games with multiple two rushing touchdowns in a single season.
- o In Week 9, Jacobs became the 20th player in NFL history to surpass 700 rushing yards (740) in his first eight career contests.
- o In Week 9, Jacobs became the fifth player in the Super Bowl Era with two games of 120 rushing yards and two-plus rushing touchdowns over his first eight career games, joining Billy Sims (1980), Hall of Famer Eric Dickerson (1983), Julius Jones (2004) and Adrian Peterson (2007).
- o In Week 9, Jacobs became just the 12th player since at least 1950 to log 700 rushing yards and have six rushing touchdowns in his first eight games, joining Leonard Fournette (2017), Ezekiel Elliott (2016), Todd Gurley (2015) Doug Martin (2012), Adrian Peterson (2007), Julius Jones (2004), Marshall Faulk (1994), Eric Dickerson (1983), Billy Sims (1980), Earl Campbell (1978) and Alan Ameche (1955).

ROOKIE RECORD HOLDER

----- RAIDERS ROOKIE SINGLE-SEASON MARKS -----

Rank	Player	Year	Rushing Yards
1.	Josh Jacobs	2019 (13 games)	1,150
1.	Marcus Allen	1982	697
2.	Arthur Whittington	1978	661
4.	Greg Robinson	1993	591
5.	Bo Jackson	1987	554

Jacobs also broke a tie with Marcus Allen for the most 100-yard rushing games as a rookie in club history with his fourth in Week 11.*

DARREN WALLER

In 2018, TE Darren Waller was signed by the Raiders off of the Baltimore Ravens' practice squad. Waller flashed his athleticism in his second game as a Raider in Week 15 that year against the Cincinnati Bengals, posting a then-career-long 44-yard reception and 21-yard rush in the same contest. Last offseason, Waller built upon his strong finish to the 2018 campaign and earned the starting role out of training camp. In 2019, Waller led the team in receptions and receiving yards. Waller's receptions (90), receiving yards (1,145), receiving touchdowns (three) and first-down receptions (53). Waller broke the club record and led the NFL among his position group with five 100-yard contests en route to being selected a Pro Bowl alternate and completing one of the finest seasons by a tight end in Raiders history. Waller led all tight ends in 100-yard contests this season and placed second in both receptions, receiving yards and yards after the catch (570).

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

History made: Las Vegas Raiders open first season with win

By Ed Graney

September 13, 2020

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — History will remember Sunday in the strangest of ways. Las Vegas has its NFL team, all right. Fortunately for it, recent shortcomings didn't repeat themselves.

The Raiders opened what has already proven to be a bizarre 2020 season by traveling east and taking down the Carolina Panthers 34-30 at an empty Bank of America Stadium.

So this is it. Beautiful structures featuring regular-season games for the country's most popular sport while being unoccupied by fans due to COVID-19. Funny. Such a deserted existence just might have helped the Raiders pull this thing off.

Piped in crowd noise ain't the real thing, folks. Not the same at all. So when the Raiders marched 75 yards in nine plays over 4:21 to take the lead for good in the waning moments, their focus appeared supreme.

An 'historic win'

It might be just a start, but it's a promising one, given how it ended. The team that didn't finish nearly enough with touchdowns in the red zone last season was 3-for-4. The only time the Raiders didn't convert for six points when possessing the ball inside the 20, a Daniel Carlson field goal gave them three.

Raiders quarterback Derek Carr quoted scripture afterward, but there was nothing divine about that final Las Vegas drive. Just good execution and an oh-so-helpful pass interference penalty against Panthers linebacker Tahir Whitehead. Yes, the former Raider.

Las Vegas probably doesn't win this game last year and not because its home was in Oakland. Probably doesn't walk away smiling like Sunday. New season. New chapter. New home.

"It's a historic win for me," said Jon Gruden, who began his third season with the team since returning as head coach. "It's a historic win for our all players and our entire organization. Everybody got game balls, and I'm going to see if I can get hundreds of game balls to pass out to some of our season ticket-holders."

Gruden said the Raiders would have loved to go back to Allegiant Stadium and debut on Monday Night Football on Sept. 21 in front of a full house, but since that is not possible, they wanted to win the opener against Carolina for the fans. "Like I said when I started, hopefully our fans back home saw something they liked," he said.

How things got here

Such a long and interesting road it took to get here. March of 2017. That's when NFL owners voted 31-1 in favor of the Raiders relocating from Oakland to Las Vegas. It doesn't become reality without the vision and leadership of Las Vegas Sands Corp. Chairman and CEO Sheldon Adelson. Raiders owner Mark Davis said as much moments after the vote became official at an Arizona resort.

It doesn't happen without the promise to build Allegiant Stadium. A $750 million tax subsidy approved by the Nevada State Legislature made it impossible for owners to dismiss Las Vegas. Loath the heck out of Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones if you want. The Raiders likely aren't approved to move without his influential voice in the room before ballots were cast. Jones carries the weight of an offensive tackle.

It wasn't a perfect beginning here by any means. A defense that has struggled stopping most anyone for some time now never could find much rhythm or consistency. It did manage the game's most important stop when stuffing the Panthers on fourth-and-1 from the Raiders 46 and 1:23 left in a four-point game.

That was fairly enormous, as was the fact new Panthers offensive coordinator Joe Brady didn't call for all-everything back Christian McCaffrey to get the ball. You're not at Louisiana State any more, Joe. Even the Raiders can play a little defense when needed. Seriously.

It's true that history can't be unlive, but there's nothing wrong with creating an original version of it. That's what the Raiders did Sunday. The Las Vegas Raiders at that.

"We moved to Vegas from Oakland and while we miss those guys, Raider Nation is forever," said safety Johnathan Abram. "We have a new home in Las Vegas and it feels amazing to get the first win as the Las Vegas Raiders."

Of course. It's 2020.

'Special' Josh Jacobs more than holds his own in RB duel

By Adam Hill

September 13, 2020

One of the best dual-threat running backs in the league put his full array of talents on display during the season-opener between the Raiders and Panthers on Sunday in Charlotte.

Christian McCaffrey was also on the field.

Josh Jacobs proved he was up to the challenge as he outshined the consensus top fantasy football pick and continued to establish himself as one of the league's elite backs with 25 carries for 93 yards and three touchdowns for the Raiders in Sunday's 34-30 win.

"I'm not going to put any more pressure on him than he puts on himself," coach Jon Gruden said. "I'm the son of a backfield coach, so I've seen a lot of running backs for a long time, But that was a little bit like Walter Payton used to play. It was hot as hell and he got beat up early, but he insisted on coming back and getting the ball as a runner and receiver.

"He deserves some national attention. I hope you guys give it to him."

Jacobs will get plenty of headlines after a sensational performance, the fourth multiple-touchdown game of the 14 he has played in the NFL. The second-year star also backed up all the offseason talk about his improvements in the passing game with career-highs of four catches and 46 yards.

"That's the thing I worked on the most in the offseason," Jacobs said of his role in the passing game. "That's what I was trying to build on. Just to see the team has confidence in me is huge."

It was on the ground where Jacobs did all of his scoring, including the game-winning touchdown from six yards out with 4:08 to play.

Gruden and quarterback Derek Carr both referred to Jacobs as "special," a term the 2019 first-round pick out of Alabama laughed off.

"I just feel regular, honestly," he said. "I had a pretty good game, but there's a lot I can correct. I know there's a couple plays I look back and think, 'Dang, I missed a backdoor cut there.' That's the kind of thing I try to hold myself to is having a perfect game and try to come back better next week."

Very few of those mistakes were noticeable to anyone but Jacobs.

He scored the first touchdown in Las Vegas Raiders history from 1-yard out after a long pass to Henry Ruggs.

His second score capped a pivotal drive in the third quarter that gave the Raiders their biggest lead. Jacobs had a 29-yard reception on a second-and-14 play to jumpstart the drive, then took it in on third-and-1 from the 7.

On the final drive, Jacobs got things started with an 18-yard reception from Carr and then scored on his second straight carry from inside the 10.

Of Jacobs, Carr said, "The things people don't see, like him without the ball, him blocking, how much defenses bite on play-action when we fake the ball to him. That's a quarterback's dream.

"The thing about us is we don't care about stats. We just want to do our job when our number is called. Josh did his job exactly how he was supposed to today."

That team concept was evident in how well the Raiders' offensive line played in front of Jacobs despite losing star right tackle Trent Young early and then his backup Sam Young not long after.

Jacobs knew he would still have plenty of room to operate.

"I have the ultimate faith in our offensive line, no matter who is in the game," said Jacobs, who mentioned the instruction the linemen receive from offensive line coach Tom Cable. "I know how he prepares them, I know how they work. So to me, I knew there wasn't going to be a drop-off. I knew they were prepared ... whether it was the passing game or the running game."

Jacobs had plenty of success in both.

Raiders rally past Panthers in debut as Las Vegas' team

By Vincent Bonsignore

September 13, 2020

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The Raiders were down to their third-string right tackle. They had just coughed up two straight touchdowns and a two-point conversion to inexplicably surrender a big lead, and with a little more than eight minutes left in their season opener against the Carolina Panthers, they needed to drive 75 yards for a go-ahead touchdown.

Either that or hop on a plane for the long trip back to Las Vegas while trying to make sense of a bitterly frustrating loss.

"A gut-check drive" is how Raiders coach Jon Gruden put it. This time a year ago, that would have been too tall an order.

But in a sign that things might be different for these Raiders, Derek Carr drove them the length of the field over nine plays — facing a third-down just once — with Josh Jacobs racing around the edge on a 6-yard touchdown run to put them back on top.

Not long after, the defense stuffed the Panthers on fourth-and-1 to preserve a 34-30 win in their first game as the Las Vegas Raiders. The key was the must-have, late-game drive that Carr engineered, taking full advantage of the arsenal now at his disposal.

"My mindset is that we are equipped to accomplish what we need to accomplish," Carr said. "I'm proud of our guys for coming back and winning that game."

Here are three keys to the victory:

Carr comes through

Carr finished Sunday's season opener 22 of 30 passing for 239 yards and one touchdown, which translated to an impressive quarterback rating of 107.5.

He was at his best when the Raiders absolutely needed it, the game-winning march one of two long go-ahead drives he conducted after the defense gave up leads. He also drove the Raiders on two third-quarter scoring drives to put them ahead 27-15.

Carr didn't come close to throwing an interception while spreading the ball around to nine receivers. And throughout, he managed the game at the line of scrimmage by continually getting the Raiders in and out of play calls.

"Derek Carr was great today, that's what we ask of him," Gruden said. "In a game like this, we didn't know much about our opponent. He made a lot of plays at the line of scrimmage, in the pocket."

Never more so than on the game-winning drive.

"Especially when you have a 12-point lead and you have your guts taken out with a blown converge," said Gruden, referring to Teddy Bridgewater's 75-yard touchdown pass to Robby Anderson that gave the Panthers a 30-27 lead. "You're backed up. There's nobody here. All you can hear is the coaches screaming on the sidelines. To take the ball, use some uptempo plays. ... With your third-string right tackle in there, I'm really proud of our team."

Defense survives

The Raiders have a lot of work to do on defense after giving up 388 yards, including 75 yards on a blown coverage that led to the Panthers' go-ahead touchdown in the fourth quarter.

"Today was a very sloppy performance on the defense's part," said safety Johnathan Abram, who finished with 13 tackles. "We've got to go out and execute (better) than what we did. We gave up a few big plays."

But they also forced two three-and-outs to start the third quarter to help Carr and the offense build a 12-point lead. And with 1:22 left and the Raiders clinging to a 34-30 lead, they stopped the Panthers on a fourth-and-1 play at the Raiders' 46-yard-line to clinch the win. Cle Ferrell and Raekwon McMillan teamed up to tackle Panthers fullback Alex Armah for no gain.

The Raiders hope that stand is something they can build on.

"At the end the day, when the game is on the line, you gotta block all that out and line up and go," Ferrell said.

Good steps up

The Raiders opted not to dress reserve tackle Brandon Parker, hoping that swing tackle Sam Young would suffice as injury coverage. But Trent Brown went down in the first quarter with a calf injury and Young soon joined him with a groin injury.

That meant Good, the Raiders back-up guard, had to play right tackle the remainder of the game. It was the first time since 2018 that Good played tackle in a game.

Nevertheless, the Raiders' run game didn't miss a beat and Carr had a clean pocket throughout the game.

Gruden said Good "deserves a lot of credit for going over there at right tackle and playing the whole game."

The question now is, with Brown and Young banged up, how much more tackle will he need to play?

LAS VEGAS SUN

Victory for Vegas: Raiders hold on to beat Panthers, start 1-0 as local franchise

By Case Keefer

September 13, 2020

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The Las Vegas Raiders may need to get into touch with Wilson Sporting Goods and order a new crate of game balls for rush delivery after their season-opening victory over the Carolina Panthers.

Raiders coach Jon Gruden's excitement immediately following his team's 34-30 victory Sunday afternoon at Bank of America Stadium had him promising to hand off a hefty portion of the 780 game balls the team is allotted for the year. It's the best way he could think to celebrate and share the first win in Las Vegas Raiders' history.

"It's a historic win for me, it's a historic win for all our players and our entire organization," Gruden yelled in his postgame news conference. "Everyone got game balls and I'm going to see if I can get hundreds of game balls to pass out to some of our season ticket holders. We'd love to be going back to our stadium and debuting Monday night with everyone, but it means a lot. We're all emotional about it. We wanted to get a win for them."

The Raiders didn't make it easy on themselves but ultimately prevailed behind an extravagant offense that looks like it will fit perfectly in their new home of Allegiant Stadium across from the Strip. Second-year running back Josh Jacobs was its week 1 headliner, as he tied the single-game franchise record with a career-high three rushing touchdowns off of 93 yards on the ground in addition to four receptions for 46 yards.

Jacobs' final trot into the end zone, off of a six-yard handoff with four minutes left in regulation, was the game-winner. It capped a 75-yard Raiders' drive directed by quarterback Derek Carr, who completed 22 of 30 passes for 239 yards and a touchdown on the day, that was made necessary after the team blew a 12-point fourth-quarter lead.

"My mindset was we were equipped to accomplish what we needed to accomplish," Carr said. "I'm proud of our guys that we did it, for coming back and winning that game. I'm so happy for our fans, everyone who has struggled through COVID, lost their jobs and just wanted to see the Raiders win."

The reminders of the unprecedented circumstances that the game was being played under because of the global pandemic were ubiquitous throughout.

A Lil Wayne song blaring out of the speakers two hours before kickoff as Carr went through his warm-up routine could be heard from at least four blocks away. The noise and one dogged entrepreneur's lonely merchandise rack with Panthers' hats and shirts were the only signs of an NFL game taking place in downtown Charlotte during the pregame.

The scene was just as barren inside the 75,000-seat venue as the lone thing that ever blocked the constant glare of the sun off the lower-bowl Panther blue-colored seats was the occasional photographer, security guard or mascot cutting through the sections. The Raiders thought they were ready for games without fans, but quickly learned otherwise.

Gruden described it as odd to be able to hear everything his assistant coaches were screaming on the sideline, and a number of players noted that they didn't have "the juice" early.

"Just getting the jitters out, it was very different playing without fans," safety Jonathan Abram said. "Trying to get adjusted to that, we came out very slow."

The Raiders' offense went 3-and-out on its first appearance and the defense started even worse, allowing the Panthers to score on each of their first four possessions. Las Vegas was able to hold Carolina to field goals on three of those four scoring drives — a Christian McCaffrey a six-yard touchdown run being the exception — and that ended up being a saving grace.

Carr and Jacobs were able to shake off the slow start quickly and spurred two first-half touchdowns, giving the Raiders a 17-12 halftime lead.

Jacobs scored the first touchdown in Las Vegas Raider history as he pounded in from one yard after rookie receiver Henry Ruggs III took a 45-yard reception to the goal line. Ruggs' deep catch is in competition with the second touchdown for the Raiders' top offensive highlight of the day.

Right out of the two-minute warning before halftime, Carr lofted a perfect pass into the corner of the end zone that free-agent acquisition Nelson Agholor caught over his shoulder for a 23-yard score.

"He can air it out and we've got some guys that can go get it," Gruden said.

The Raiders' defense improved to start the second half after another newcomer, linebacker Nick Kwiatkoski, stuffed two straight plays near the line of scrimmage. The former Chicago Bear went to the locker room with a pectoral injury shortly afterwards, however, to add to a day where injuries piled up.

Starting cornerback Trayvon Mullen also missed time in the second half with an undisclosed injury before returning. Ruggs came down awkwardly on his knee on his final of three receptions, and though he also returned, he was less effective for the rest of the afternoon.

Right tackle Trent Brown played one series before a calf injury that had dogged him all training camp flared up, pressing veteran reserves Sam Young, who also ended up injured, and Denzelle Goode into expanded action.

"That was a championship effort by a lot of guys," Gruden said.

"We're going to have some growing pains at times but today was a great job by everybody finding a way to win."

Those growing pains are largely going to come from relying on young and unproven players on defense, as became painfully apparent in the fourth quarter. Despite high hopes for two second-year edge rushers, Clelin Ferrell and Maxx Crosby, the Raiders couldn't get any pressure, which allowed Carolina quarterback Teddy Bridgewater to routinely pick them apart with short passes.

Bridgewater, who finished with 270 yards and a touchdown on 22-for-34 passing, connected with McCaffrey for a pair of first downs near the start of the fourth quarter before the latter eventually rushed into the end zone from the 3-yard line for his second touchdown.

Once the Panthers got the ball back a couple minutes later, Raiders rookie cornerback Damon Arnette blew a coverage to allow receiver Robby Anderson to go 75 yards for a touchdown to put Carolina up 30-27 with eight minutes remaining.

Carr and Jacobs ignited for the game-winning drive to answer, though, and then the defense capitalized on their chance at a reprieve. On a fourth-and-1 play from the Raiders' 46-yard line with just more than a minute to go, defensive tackle Maleik Collins got a strong push as Ferrell and Raekwon McMillan swarmed in to stuff fullback Alex Armah for no gain.

That all but sealed the victory — one with significance that wasn't lost on Gruden.

"We can say whatever we want about the defense; they got the stop when we needed it," he said. "Fourth-quarter defense, fourth-quarter pass rush is going to be a big part of winning in this league. I'm just really happy to get a win for the Las Vegas Raiders, first win in history of the Raider franchise in Vegas and hopefully our fans saw something they liked."

THE ATHLETIC

Johnathan Abram and Josh Jacobs set the tone for Raiders' win over Panthers

By Vic Tafur

September 13, 2020

Derek Carr had his head down looking at plays on his tablet in the third quarter when he heard the missile launch.

"I just heard 'WHAPPP!,' and I looked up and it was 24," Carr said. "That stuff ignites a sideline."

Johnathan Abram, who wears No. 24, delivered the hit on Christian McCaffery that was the loudest moment of the Raiders' 34-30 road win over the Panthers. The safety brought the hammer and was all over the field for a defense that found its footing late in the season-opening win.

Meanwhile, running back Josh Jacobs sliced up the Panthers for 93 yards and three touchdowns rushing — including the 6-yard game-winner with 4:14 left — and 46 yards receiving.

"That was a little bit like Walter Payton used to play," Raiders coach Jon Gruden said. "It was hot as hell. He got beat up early. He insisted on coming back and he insisted on getting the ball as a runner and receiver. He is special."

Gruden is excited about his team's future, and second-year players Jacobs and Abram set the tone for a Raiders team that blew a 12-point fourth-quarter lead before driving for the late touchdown and making a fourth-down stand.

It was Abram's first game back after missing 15 last season with a shoulder injury.

"The energy he brings with some of those hits — we saw some on McCaffrey and some across the middle — it sets the tone," Carr said. "In this day and age, where we're not going to have fans this year and you're on the road, you've got to bring your own energy. You've got to bring your own juice, and he is that type of player that brings the energy and the juice."

Gruden said the Raiders are counting on Abram and the defense for even more next week against the Saints and then the rest of the season. He thinks they had a legitimate excuse on Sunday.

"Let's be honest, for your first game you've played in a long time," Gruden said. "These guys missed the offseason program. They missed a lot of work last year. You're out there with live bullets against McCaffrey, Teddy Bridgewater and a pretty good offensive team."

"I think they are going to get confidence and make improvements, but we've got to play way better on defense. And John is a big part of that, and we expect him to make sure that happens."

Abram said it felt great to be back on the field, but ...

"Today was a very sloppy performance on the defense's part," said Abram, who finished with 13 tackles, including nine solo and one for a loss. "We have to execute way better, but did we enough to get the win."

He thought the Raiders had some jitters in the first half.

"It's very different playing without fans," he said. "We came out kind of slow and it took us some time to get adjusted to that. The second half, we were able to get some momentum with the three-and-outs but next time we have to come out fast and finish strong."

Defensive end Clelin Ferrell came up with the big stop on the fourth-and-1 play in the closing minutes, but credited Jacobs and Abram with lighting the spark.

"(Jacobs) set the tone for sure," Ferrell said, "especially for the offense and everything they went through — losing big Trent (Brown) and then Sam (Young) ... and obviously Tyrell (Williams) is not on the offense and we have a bunch of guys hurt. To see him come in and run hard and carry us is a testament to who he is as a man."

"There is no quit in him. He went out and balled. That's my dawg."

Jacobs had his fourth multi-rushing touchdown game in just his 14th career contest, which is tied for third-most in NFL history. (Eric Dickerson had six in his first 14 games, while Marcus Allen, Curtis Martin and Ickey Woods had five each.)

"Josh is special," Carr said. "The things people don't see — Josh without the ball, Josh blocking, Josh in the play-action game, how much they bite when we turn around to fake the ball to him. That's a quarterback's dream when you have someone like that."

A 45-yard play-action pass to Henry Ruggs III set up Jacobs' first touchdown of the day, a 1-yard skip in the first quarter.

Jacobs finished with four catches for 46 yards to put him on an early pace to top his goal of 60-plus receptions after having 20 his rookie season.

"That's the thing I worked on the most this offseason," he said. "Trying to build my different routes and knowing certain leverages. To see that (Gruden) has confidence in me is huge for me."

And Jacobs did all that while watching good friend Abram lay some lumber.

"John is a character," Jacobs said, laughing. "On and off the field. The way he flies around and brings that juice to the defense, it's electric."

"I catch myself watching him like a fan. I am definitely happy to have him back."

Abram and Raiders fans are happy as well.

"It feels amazing to get that first win as a Las Vegas Raider," Abram said.

Five observations from the Raiders' 'historic' road win against the Panthers

By Tashan Reed

September 13, 2020

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — The atmosphere as the Raiders took on the Panthers on Sunday was essentially nonexistent. The stands at Bank of America Stadium were empty. The artificial crowd sounds were little more than background noise.

It was an awkward experience watching the swings of the game go without reaction from the press box, but that didn't impact the quality of football. Both teams battled it out. There was trash talk going in both directions. The coaching staffs, team personnel and players on the sidelines remained engaged. Lack of outside noise aside, it felt like the game mattered to everyone involved.

"It's a historic win for me," coach Jon Gruden said Sunday. "It's a historic win for all our players and our entire organization. Everybody got game balls. And I'm going to see if I can get hundreds of game balls to pass out to some of our season-ticket holders. We'd love to be going back to our stadium and debuting on Monday night with everyone, but it means a lot. We're all emotional about it. ... Hopefully, our fans back home saw something they liked."

Ultimately, the Raiders needed a game-winning drive to beat the Panthers 34-30. They'll have a lengthy layover before they make their Allegiant Stadium debut against the Saints on Monday Night Football on Sept. 21. Here are five observations from the first win in Las Vegas Raiders' history.

The lack of pressure from the defensive line is concerning

For most of the game, Panthers quarterback Teddy Bridgewater had all day to throw. He got off to a hot start in the first quarter and completed 5 of 7 passes while averaging 8.4 yards per attempt to help Carolina take a 9-7 lead. Although Bridgewater dropped to 5.0 yards per attempt in the second quarter, the Raiders had zero sacks and only one quarterback hurry at halftime against a mediocre Panthers offensive line.

"I wouldn't say it was more so what they did; I think it was more so what we didn't do," defensive end Clelin Ferrell said Sunday. "As a rushing group, it was a lot of things out there that, because of everything that's happened the last few months, we weren't accustomed to. But there's no excuses. We really just got to learn how to know our rushing lanes. And learn how to get off blocks; not rushing down the middle of people. Knowing who got the one-on-one and just winning the one-on-one. ... I feel like we definitely can make a very big jump as a D-line."

Defensive coordinator Paul Guenther alternated between 4-2-5 and 4-3 fronts and began to send more pressure at Bridgewater as the game progressed. The Raiders came up with their first sack early in the third quarter when Maurice Hurst and Carl Nassib teamed up to bring down Bridgewater despite a Carolina holding penalty. Besides that, they couldn't get much going: They finished with one sack and three quarterback hurries.

It wasn't a fatal flaw Sunday, but more talented offenses will be able to exploit the Raiders secondary if they're given that much time to operate moving forward.

Trent Brown aggravated calf injury as Raiders were hit by injury bug

Brown started the game at right tackle but didn't return for the remainder of the contest after the Raiders went three-and-out. On the sideline, the training staff was working on the same leg that had him listed as "limited" during practice Wednesday. He was upgraded to a "full" participant Thursday and was expected to be good to go. One drive was enough to tell that he wasn't.

Brown missed the vast majority of training camp due to the calf injury. While he was out, it was Sam Young who beat out Brandon Parker, who was designated as inactive before the game, for most of the first-team reps at right tackle. The 11-year veteran stepped in for Brown starting with the second drive. Young hurt his groin in the third quarter so Denzelle Good, who's normally a backup guard, stepped in at right tackle.

Regardless of who was in, the offense didn't miss a beat. The Raiders scored on five consecutive drives and didn't allow quarterback Derek Carr to be hurried or sacked once all game. The offense averaged a whopping 6.1 yards per play.

"I believe that they're the best group in the world," Carr said Sunday. "I love them. And that's not just the starters. All of them. In a COVID year, the mindset was, 'Man, we may have to keep some extra linemen. We might have to keep some extra guys just in case COVID hits.' Injuries happened and things happened and we went down to Denzelle Good playing right tackle. I'll let the coaches talk about how many reps he had at right tackle, but I think he did a pretty good job against some pretty good players.

"Anytime I don't get touched and we run the rock well, everyone should be praising the offensive linemen and giving them free food. I know, if my wife is listening, they're going to need some cinnamon rolls this week."

The entire offensive line played a role in that, of course, but right tackle could've been a weak link and it wasn't. That's impressive, but the Raiders have to be worried about the health of Brown, who's their highest-paid player. He suffered a season-ending pectoral injury last season and has gotten off to a rough start in 2020. They'll need him to be a consistent presence in order for the offense to reach its full potential.

Overall, it was a rough afternoon for the Raiders in terms of injuries. Henry Ruggs III caught three passes for 55 yards in the first half but suffered a knee injury on his third grab. Although he returned in the second half, he didn't register a catch. Middle linebacker Nick Kwiatkoski suffered a pectoral injury in the third quarter and missed the rest of the game. To recap, the Raiders had three players leave the game: Brown, Young and Kwiatkoski.

"I can promise you this: I was not expecting Denzelle Good to play right tackle; nor was (offensive line coach) Tom Cable," Gruden said. "It's unfortunate. We're very concerned. And hopefully, we get some good news on Nick, but we traded for Raekwon McMillan. We made sure Nick Morrow was going to be a part of our plans here. If need be, they're going to be good enough players to play. Because we got some good games coming up. We gotta get ready for (Drew) Brees and the Saints."

The defense couldn't get off the field

Christian McCaffrey had a good game: He had 23 carries for 96 yards and two touchdowns and caught three passes for 38 yards. He just wasn't transcendent, which is the goal when you're facing arguably the best running back in the league. The issue was that the Raiders allowed his supporting cast to find success as well.

Robby Anderson caught six passes for 115 yards and a touchdown. D.J. Moore had a solid outing with four catches for 54 yards. The defense was gashed for 6.0 yards per play. The Panthers converted 58 percent of their third-down attempts. The Panthers scored on six of their 10 drives for the game. The Raiders' saving grace was that half of those scores were only field goals.

Beyond the nonexistent pass rush, the secondary showed its youth. Bridgewater threw for only 251 yards but averaged 7.8 yards per attempt and made timely completions. Rookie cornerback Damon Arnette made the blunder of the game in the fourth quarter when he slipped on a double move by Anderson. Arnette grabbed Anderson and was called for holding, but Anderson still caught the pass and scored a 75-yard touchdown that gave the Panthers a 30-27 lead.

The offense responded, but lackluster defense nearly cost the Raiders the win.

The team displayed resiliency

The Raiders appeared to have the game in hand. They'd forced their first two stops of the game and scored on their fifth straight possession to take a 27-15 lead late in the third quarter. Instead, the Panthers scored back-to-back touchdowns with a stop sandwiched in between to take a 30-27 lead.

Suddenly, the Raiders found themselves trailing on the road with 8:29 remaining in the fourth quarter. Instead of folding, the offense engineered a methodical nine-play, 75-yard drive. On a crucial third-and-8, wideout Hunter Renfrow drew a pass interference call on former Raiders linebacker Tahir Whitehead that put them at the Panthers' 17-yard line. Two plays later, running back Josh Jacobs scored the game-winning touchdown on a 6-yard rush.

The Panthers got the ball back with 4:08 left in the game, so the contest was far from over. They picked up a first down, but the Raiders forced a turnover on downs by stuffing Panthers fullback Alex Armah on fourth-and-1. The defense ended a disappointing performance on a strong note. It doesn't make up for the unit's miscues, but the Raiders showed heart.

"It's an emotional game," safety Johnathan Abram, who had 13 tackles, said Sunday. "We fought hard all game. We weren't leaving here without this W. I told the defense before we went out there, 'This game is on us. We got to step up and get this win.'"

Carr was efficient, but Jacobs remains driving force of offense

Carr completed 73.3 percent of his passes and averaged 8.0 yards per attempt. He didn't hesitate to push the ball down the field and completed a pretty 23-yard touchdown pass to Nelson Agholor in the first half. Regardless of his strong showing, Jacobs stole the show.

The second-year running back had 25 carries for 93 yards and three touchdowns in addition to four catches for 46 yards. He was explosive, powerful and elusive. All three of his scores were 7 yards or fewer and his longest carry only went for 14 yards, but that's irrelevant. He was clearly the best player on the field Sunday.

"I'm not gonna put any more pressure on him than he puts on himself," Gruden said. "I've been the son of a backfield coach my whole life; my dad (Jim Gruden) coached at Tampa Bay and Notre Dame and I've seen a lot of running backs for a long time. That was a little bit like Walter Payton used to play. It was hot as hell. He got beat up early. He insisted on coming back. He insisted he get the ball as a runner and receiver.

"He's special."

Josh Jacobs outperforms Christian McCaffrey (barely) in Raiders' win

By Paul Gutierrez

September 13, 2020

Josh Jacobs picked up where he left off last season, when many saw him as being robbed of the NFL offensive Rookie of the Year award, and outperformed (barely) Carolina's all-everything back Christian McCaffrey in the Las Vegas Raiders' 34-30 victory.

Jacobs, who missed three of the Raiders' final four games last season with a shoulder fracture, rushed for a career-best three touchdowns (he had seven TDs all of last season) while running for 93 yards on 25 carries and catching four passes for 46 yards. McCaffrey, meanwhile, ran for 96 yards and two TDs on 23 attempts and added three catches for 38 yards.

Jacobs became the second player since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger to rush for at least two TDs in a season opener in his first two seasons, joining Lawrence Phillips, who did it for the Rams in 1996 and 1997. There were seven lead changes in the game.

Describe the game in two words: Football's back. And the Raiders looked sharp on offense, did just enough on defense and won a season opener in the Eastern Time Zone for the first time since 1983, the last time the Raiders (gulp) won a Super Bowl.

Troubling trend: You had to wonder how players would react to real-game hitting after an offseason devoid of exhibition games and, well, a true offseason program. The Raiders lost a pair of right tackles in starter Trent Brown (right calf) and his replacement Sam Young (groin), as well as starting middle linebacker Nick Kwiatkowski (pectoral). Rookie receiver Henry Ruggs III, meanwhile, tweaked his left knee late in the second quarter but returned, mostly as a decoy, for the second half.

QB breakdown: Derek Carr was the epitome of efficient, completing 22 of 30 passes for 239 yards and a touchdown pass to Nelson Agholor en route to his 19th career, fourth-quarter comeback victory. And Carr did it with a pair of rookies starting at receiver in Ruggs and Bryan Edwards. Carr got Ruggs involved early and often, hitting him on a 45-yard bomb to the 1-yard line, though had he hit him in stride, it would have been a score. Carr did place Agholor's touchdown perfectly into his arms with the over-the-shoulder throw into the end zone.

Pivotal play: The Raiders' defense in general, defensive end Clelin Ferrell in particular, holding on fourth-and-inches from their own 46-yard line with 1:23 to play, with the Raiders nursing that four-point lead. Why the Panthers gave the ball to fullback Alex Armah rather than McCaffrey is a mystery. But the Raiders will gladly take it.

Jacobs runs for 3 TDs as Raiders hold off Panthers 34-30

By Steve Reed

September 13, 2020

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Comparisons to all-time greats are a dangerous business. Raiders coach Jon Gruden apparently doesn't care.

Josh Jacobs followed his strong rookie season by running for 93 yards and three touchdowns, Derek Carr threw for 239 yards and a score, and the Las Vegas Raiders hung on to beat the Carolina Panthers 34-30 on Sunday to spoil Matt Rhule's coaching debut.

It was the Raiders' first game since moving from Oakland to Las Vegas.

"That was a little bit like Walter Payton used to play," Gruden said. "It was hot as hell. He got beat up early. He insisted on coming back and he insisted on getting the ball as a runner and receiver. He is special. He deserves some national attention — and I hope you give it to him."

Jacobs' 6-yard run around the right end with 4:14 left put the Raiders ahead for good after they'd surrendered a 12-point fourth quarter lead.

Jacobs laughed at being labeled special, and was more concerned about the yards he left on the field.

"There is still a lot I can convert," said Jacobs, who ran for 1,150 yards and seven TDs in 13 games in 2019. "I know there were a couple of plays I look back and, man, I missed the hole, I missed the backdoor cut. Things like that."

The Raiders scored on six of their first eight possessions against a young Carolina defense that started three rookies. But they needed a defensive stop to seal the victory.

Trailing 34-30, Panthers new offensive coordinator Joe Brady called a handoff to fullback Alex Armah — instead of All-Pro Christian McCaffrey — on fourth-and-inches at midfield. He was stopped at the line with 1:11 left. McCaffrey racked up 134 yards from scrimmage and scored two touchdowns.

Rhule took blame for the call the game,.

"It's a play we were all on board with," McCaffrey said, referring to Armah picking up a first down on a similar play earlier.

After going three-and-out on their first drive, the Raiders scored on five straight possessions to take a 27-15 lead.

Carolina battled back, turning heavily to their star McCaffrey late in the third quarter. He got 11 touches and picked up 64 yards on one drive that culminated in his 3-yard TD run. Later, Teddy Bridgewater found Robby Anderson for a 75-yard strike on a blown coverage. Bridgewater went back to Anderson for the 2-point conversion to take a 30-27 lead. The free agent pickup from the Jets finished with six catches for 115 yards.

Carolina's inexperienced secondary struggled at times, with rookie cornerback Tony Pride missing one assignment that resulted in a 45-yard gain for rookie Henry Ruggs III. Later, he allowed a 23-yard touchdown pass to Nelson Agholor.

It didn't help that Carolina's No. 1 cornerback Donte Jackson (ankle) went down early in the first quarter.

Of course, the Raiders started two rookies of their own at wide receiver: Ruggs and Bryan Edwards combined for six catches and 64 yards.

"My mindset isn't that we have two rookie receivers," Carr said. "My mindset is we are equipped to accomplish what we want to accomplish. I am proud of our guys for coming back and winning that game."

The only onlookers allowed into the stadium due to the coronavirus pandemic were about 40 staff and partners of the Panthers, who took in the game from some end-zone seats.

BRIDGEWATER'S DEBUT

Bridgewater replaced Cam Newton as the franchise's starting QB and finished 22 of 34 for 270 yards and one touchdown in his Carolina debut. He said he was brought to tears during the playing of the Black national anthem "Lift Every Voice and Sing" in pregame warmups, thinking about his own journey back to being a full-time starting QB following a horrific knee injury in 2016.

"I was thinking about the process and the journey," Bridgewater said. "I shed so many tears I had to run off the field early."

RACIAL JUSTICE

Eight Panthers knelt for the national anthem, including Bridgewater, while nine others raised their first in protest of racial injustice before the game at Bank of America Stadium. The Raiders stood side-by-side for the national anthem with no demonstrations.

Among the other Carolina players who knelt for the anthem were Kawann Short, Anderson, Stephen Weatherly, Yetur Gross-Matos, Pride Jr., Bravvion Roy and Brian Burns. Linebacker Shaq Thompson was among those who raised his fist.

Both teams stood earlier for the playing of "Lift Every Voice and Sing."

INJURIES

Raiders: Lost both right tackles to injuries: Trent Brown (calf) in the first quarter and Sam Young (groin) in the third quarter. That forced the Raiders to move guard Denzelle Good to right tackle. Gruden called it a "championship effort" by a lot of guys, including Good.

Panthers: Jackson was replaced by Rasul Douglas, who was signed off waivers by Carolina last week. Cornerback remains a position of concern for Carolina.

Inside the Raiders: 2019 first-round picks Jacobs, Abram, Ferrell come up huge against Panthers

By Jerry McDonald

September 13, 2020

Josh Jacobs was the heart and soul of the Raiders offense. Same goes for Johnathan Abram on defense.

And as for Clelin Ferrell, he assisted on the play that ensured the Raiders a 34-30 win over the host Carolina Panthers Sunday.

Jacobs rushed for 93 yards on the day, and made good on Jon Gruden's offseason insistence that he become part of the passing game with four receptions for 46 yards. Jacobs had touchdown runs of 1, 6 and 7 yards and was the most productive back on the field.

Considering Christian McCaffrey was on the opposite sideline, that's saying something.

Abram led the Raiders with 13 tackles, nine of them solo stops, and delivered a crunching blow on McCaffrey in the third quarter.

Ferrell and linebacker Raekwon McMillan made sure Jacobs' third touchdown held up when they stuffed Carolina fullback Alex Armah on a fourth-and-1 play with just over a minute to play, enabling the Raiders to kill the clock and begin the season 1-0.

Going in to the 2018 season, the Raiders dealt Khalil Mack to the Chicago Bears, giving themselves three first-round draft picks the following offseason. Ferrell went No. 4 out of Clemson, Jacobs 24th with the Mack pick, and Abram at No. 25.

As Gruden said at the time, the trade will be debated "until the cows come home" but it was made with the future in mind. Like the deal or hate it, the Raiders don't win their opener without all three of the 2019 draftees.

Jacobs, who lost out to Kyler Murray a year ago as the NFL's Rookie of the Year after missing the last three games with a broken shoulder, picked up where he left off before he got injured in 2019.

"I've been the son of a backfield coach my whole life," Gruden said on a postgame Zoom call. "I've seen a lot of running backs for a long time. That was a little bit like Walter Payton used to play. It was hot as hell. He got beat up early. He insisted on coming back. He insisted he get the ball as a runner and receiver. He's special. He deserves some national attention. I hope you guys give it to him."

Jacobs' running ability comes as no surprise, given he rushed for 1,150 yards in 13 games as a rookie. Part of the plan was to involve Jacobs more in the passing game, and he had an 18-yard catch from Derek Carr during the nine-play, 75-yard drive that won the game.

"I mean, that's the thing I worked on the most coming in to the offseason," Jacobs said. "Just trying to build my different routes, whether it's extending them or stacking them or knowing certain leverages. Just to see that he has confidence in me is huge for me."

Carr, who threw 30 passes while the Raiders ran it 31 times, loves the balance Jacobs brings to the offense.

"Josh is special," Carr said. "The things that people don't see, Josh without the ball, Josh blocking, Josh in the play-action game and how much they bite when I fake the ball to him. It's a quarterback's dream."

Abram left the field with a torn labrum after last year's opener, going on injured reserve and missing almost all of his rookie year. He's been counseled to play with poise and abandon, while putting aside the reckless abandon. He was the best defensive player on the field against Carolina.

One third-quarter hit on McCaffrey had Carr looking up from his tablet highlight session and Jacobs fired up on the sideline.

"John is a character on and off the field. You just see the way he flies around and the way he brings that juice to that defense," Jacobs said. "It's electric. I catch myself watching him like a fan."

Abram is definitely keeping it under wraps in media settings, dodging questions about his big hit and stressing team goals.

"It felt great to be back out there today with my guys," Abram said. "Today was a very sloppy performance on the defense's part. We've got to go out and execute a lot more than we did. We gave up a few big plays, and when you give up big plays in this league, that's how you get beat. We were fortunate to come out with a 'W' today but overall we did what we needed to do to get the win."

Ferrell, who had a hand in the fourth-and-1 stop, gave credit to the Carolina offense to a point.

"The defense definitely did not feel it was how we needed to play," Ferrell said. "When the game is on the line, you've got to block all that out . . . I wouldn't say it was they did, it was more what we didn't do."

CARR AT HIS BEST

Hard to imagine Carr being much better than he was against Carolina.

Four touchdowns and two field goals in nine possessions. No turnovers. A short-of-the-stake third-down attempt to Jason Witten wasn't great, but his 23-yard strike to Nelson Agholor was a thing of beauty.

It came on third-and-2, when Carr didn't take the safe play and throw to Bryan Edwards on a drag route, instead dropping a dime to Agholor for the touchdown.

"In the huddle, he looked at me and said, 'If you come to me, just throw it in the end zone and I've got it,' Carr said. 'I said, 'I can do that.' We went to the line and sure enough, he made the play."

BOOKER'S SURPRISING ROLE

Devontae Booker played so well Sunday that Mike Mayock's decision to deal Lynn Bowden Jr. makes more sense.

Bowden wasn't ready to play, but Booker was. He had four carries for 29 yards and three receptions in three targets for 23 more. Booker broke tackles and ran decisively and with aggression.

If you'd have told me Booker would come away with 52 yards on seven touches while Jalen Richard had one catch for 15 yards there would have been some skepticism.

Bowden, given his late arrival in Miami, was not active in a 21-11 loss to New England.

MUCH NEEDED EXTRA DAY OFF

Trent Brown missed most of training camp and hurt his calf. No telling how long he'll be out. Backup Sam Young departed with an injury as well. Nick Kwiatkoski left in the first half with a pectoral injury, stripping the Raiders of their defensive signal caller.

Henry Ruggs III returned after a knee injury, but was little more than a decoy in the second half. It was a good sign he got sent to the interview zoom podium afterward, because he likely would have been held back from public comment if the injury was something to be overly concerned about.

Hard to know whether an extra day off will help any of those injuries, but luckily for the Raiders they don't play until Monday night against New Orleans.

WHERE'S THE RUSH?

The Raiders' inability to put pressure on Teddy Bridgewater is the most concerning development in Week 1. Maurice Hurst and Carl Nassib combined on the lone sack. On another play, a blitz by Cory Littleton resulted in a scramble gain for Bridgewater.

The Raiders probably won't be a big blitzing team and certainly don't want to be, given the youth in the secondary.

Johnathan Abram is happy to be back on the field following 13-tackle performance

By Raiders.com Staff

September 13, 2020

Johnathan Abram spent one game in defensive coordinator Paul Guenther's system last year before suffering a season-ending injury, but Sunday afternoon against the Carolina Panthers he looked like a five-year veteran.

In a 34-30 win, Abram led all defenders with 13 tackles and added one tackle for loss. After missing nearly all of last year with a shoulder injury, the former first-round pick looked healthy and fast on the grass today, pleasing his teammates and the coaching staff.

When Head Coach Jon Gruden and General Manager Mike Mayock selected Abram in the first round last year, they did it with the intention of him maturing into one of the best safeties in the league and becoming a tone-setter for the Silver and Black.

"These guys missed the offseason program," Gruden said about Abram and others following the win. "They missed a lot of work last year, he's out there with live bullets against McCaffrey and a Teddy Bridgewater, and a pretty offensive team, but we have to play better on defense and John's a big part of that, and we expect him to make sure that happens."

On numerous occasions Sunday, Abram delivered a booming hit on Christian McCaffrey and other members of the Panthers. Often times, No. 24 wouldn't be anywhere in the vicinity of the play, but he'd come out of nowhere and make a key stop. The former Mississippi State Bulldog's ability to jolt opposing players with the sound of thunder and strike faster than lightning was something the Raiders desperately missed last season.

"John is a character, on and off the field, but if you just see the way he flies around — he had like, 14 tackles today or something crazy like that," Josh Jacobs said postgame. "If you just see the way that he flies around and the way he brings that juice to the defense, it's electric. I'll watch him and catch myself watching him like a fan, so I'm definitely happy to have him back."

For nearly 12 months, Abram watched from the sidelines eager to unleash his talent on the field, but he stayed patient, knowing he'd finally have his chance. The added time in the playbook allowed him to understand the intricacies of Guenther's scheme and resulted in excellent communication against the Panthers.

Even though NFL analysts are considering this Abram's "rookie year," the 23-year-old doesn't have a problem speaking up like a veteran. Following the game, he expressed his excitement to be back on the field, but he was all business when it came to evaluating his performance along with the defense as a whole.

"It felt great to be back out there with my guys," Abram said. "Today was a very sloppy performance on the defense's part. We have to go out and execute way more than we did. We gave up a few big plays and if you give up big plays in this league that's how you get beat. We were fortunate to do enough to come away with a 'W' today, but overall we did what we needed to do to get the win."

With the pieces added this offseason, the Raiders are looking to take a big step forward on defense, and as Gruden said, Abram is a big part of that. As long as he can stay healthy, the expectations surrounding him are sky high, especially after his 13-tackle afternoon.

Resiliency in the trenches: How the O-line powered Josh Jacobs and the Raiders offense in a big win

By Levi Edwards

September 13, 2020

The Raiders can officially say they are undefeated since moving to Las Vegas.

The Silver and Black were able to pull out a hard-fought battle in Charlotte, NC, defeating the Panthers in the first game of the season, 34-30. The efficiency of the Raiders' offense was the deciding factor in this game, as they were able to come up with more than 130 rushing yards.

Second-year running back Josh Jacobs was characteristically excellent, putting up three touchdowns and 136 total yards, in addition to a number of eye-opening moves. But following the game, Jacobs said it was just business as usual.

"I feel regular honestly," Jacobs said after his hat trick. "I had a pretty good game, but I missed some things. There's a couple of plays I look back on, and I'm like 'Man, I missed the hole' or 'I missed the backdoor cut.' That's more of the things I try to hone myself on, trying to have the perfect game and trying to come back better next week."

Coach Gruden was extremely pleased with the play of his running back and knows that with Jacobs demanding a lot from himself, he can shift into a support role.

"I am not going to put anymore pressure on him than he puts on himself," said Gruden. "I've seen a lot of running backs for a long time, but that was a little bit like how Walter Payton used to play. It was hot as hell; he got beat up early, he insisted on coming back and insisted he got the ball as a runner and as a receiver. He's special, and he deserves some national attention."

Perhaps the biggest obvious improvement in Jacobs' game from Year One to Year Two is his work in the passing game. It's something Jacobs has prided himself on and something he's excited to showcase the rest of the season.

"That's the thing I worked on the most coming into the offseason," said Jacobs, referring to his route running and catching. "Just trying to build my different routes whether it's extending them or stacking them or knowing the certain leverages; that's the thing I've tried to build on the most. Just to see (Gruden) has the confidence in me is huge for me."

Quarterback Derek Carr also had an impressive game, making some smart, accurate throws in the pocket to move the ball down the field consistently throughout the game. He finished with 239 yards with a 73 percent completion rate, plus a gorgeous 23-yard touchdown pass in the second quarter to Nelson Agholor. Carr was able to give an Old Testament analogy to how his team was equipped to win this week.

"When God spoke to Moses, he said, 'What if they don't believe me when I tell them?' God said 'What's in your hand?' You see we've been equipped the whole time to accomplish what we want to accomplish," said Derek Carr. "I am proud of our guys that we did it, I'm proud of our guys for coming back and winning that game."

Carr was able to stay comfortable in the pocket and was sacked zero times by the Panthers' defense. This is even more of an impressive feat considering that both the Raiders right tackles — Pro Bowler Trent Brown (calf) and Sam Young (groin) — were injured early in the game, and the Raiders had to move backup right guard Denzelle Good to tackle.

"I believe they are the best group in the world," Carr said of his offensive line, a unit ranked No. 1 in the NFL by Pro Football Focus coming into the season. "Injuries happen, and things happen and we went down to Denzelle Good playing right tackle, which I'll let coaches talk about how many reps he's had at right tackle, but I think he did a pretty good job against some pretty good players. Anytime I don't get touched and we run the rock well, everyone should be praising the offensive linemen and giving them free food. I know if Heather, my wife, is listening, they're going to need some cinnamon rolls this week."

Gruden agreed.

"That was a championship effort by a lot of guys," Gruden said. "We lost Trent Brown after three plays, we lost Sam Young, and Denzelle Good deserves a lot of credit for going over there without any work at right tackle."

and playing the whole game. Derek Carr was great today, and that's what we asked of him in a game like this; he made a lot of plays at the line of scrimmage and in the pocket.

"I'm just happy to get a win for the Las Vegas Raiders. First win for the history of the Raiders in Vegas and hopefully the fans saw something they liked."

Quick Snap: Three observations from the Raiders' season-opening W

By Levi Edwards

September 13, 2020

Josh Jacobs is a grown man

The Raiders' 2019 first-round draft pick had himself a game today.

Jacobs continues to prove himself as the workhorse back of the future for the Raiders, finishing with 93 yards on 25 carries and three touchdowns. After saying he had worked heavily on his route-running this offseason, Jacobs also made some key plays in the passing game, averaging 11 yards per catch with 46 yards on four receptions.

Aided by a monstrous performance from his offensive line, Jacobs brought out his lunch pail and went to work from kickoff, running through gaps and punishing the Panthers' LB corps at the second level. And when he rested, backup Devontae Booker also gave the Silver and Black some solid production with 29 rushing yards and 23 receiving yards on three catches.

The O-line deals with adversity by dominating

Zero.

That's the number of times Derek Carr was sacked today. And it wasn't how the Coach Cable and the rest of the staff drew it up; injuries sidelined both tackles Trent Brown and Sam Young, and Denzelle Good was forced to slide over to play right tackle.

As mentioned above, Jacobs enjoyed a terrific game with a hat trick on the ground. Despite have injuries to both right tackles Trent Brown and Sam Young, the offensive line was more than able to hold their own with Rodney Hudson and Richie Incognito leading the way in the trenches.

The defense came up when it mattered.

The young Raiders secondary was definitely tested the way Coach Gruden expected the way they would be. Despite giving up 30 points, including a 75-yard touchdown reception to Robby Anderson, the young defense held their own in key situations.

Johnathan Abram and Trayvon Mullen were able set the tone for the young secondary, and the defensive line was able to come through with a key sack from Carl Nassib and Maurice Hurst to get a monumental stop in the third quarter.

The team collectively dug deep with a fourth-down stop with less than two minutes to go in order to get a pivotal turnover on downs to effectively end the game.

New city, new man: How Las Vegas has changed Raiders owner Mark Davis

By Vic Tafur

July 22, 2020

LAS VEGAS — Back before the pandemic, Raiders coach Jon Gruden hit the Las Vegas Strip pretty hard for a few days, sampling some of the prized steak houses, enjoying an Aerosmith concert and appearing on social media posts with comedian Carrot Top.

"I was getting pissed at him," team owner Mark Davis said, laughing. "He stole my 15 minutes of fame. I told him to go home."

While Gruden, a celebrity coach who used to be a TV star, is the face of the franchise, Davis holds the keys to the city. After years of struggling to get a new stadium in Oakland and then falling short in an attempt to move to Los Angeles, Davis sits in Las Vegas with a state-of-the-art, $1.85 billion stadium that is 98 percent completed and on track to be ready for the 2020 season.

Davis has immersed himself in the community since moving to Las Vegas last summer.

"The buzz has been unbelievable," Davis said in an hour-long sitdown interview on Saturday. "The fans here have just been so welcoming. They are stopping me and thanking us for coming, while I'm trying to thank them for bringing us."

Nevada Gov. Steve Sisolak first met Davis four years ago and is amazed by just how many people Davis talks to.

"Mark is an unusual character," Sisolak said in a phone interview Tuesday. "I have gotten to know a lot of wealthy and very powerful individuals, and Mark is the most unique of all of them. He is at his best, his comfort zone is with regular people. When he is on-site, he is always in the back talking to kitchen workers. And he will sign autographs until there is no one left. And you can tell he enjoys taking the selfies and chatting with these guys. He really gets close with people."

Allegiant Stadium may not have people cheering at games this season due to the pandemic, but it looks great and a visit last week saw workers looking back and admiring it at the end of their shifts.

"It's a phenomenal feeling," Davis said. "To get through the trials and tribulations and actually get it done on time. The pride that the workers showed in this building, man, they really did ... they loved working on it. Every three months before the pandemic hit, we would serve them a big-ass lunch and go through and thank every one of them. They just had so much pride in building this thing."

"You see them building hotels around here and you don't see the same enthusiasm about a project. They are the MVPs. I just can't thank them enough."

A new owner in a new city, Davis is also a new man.

After years of thinking that players should not protest or take a stand on issues while on the football field, he started changing his mind three years ago — before a weird game in Washington that Davis felt set the team back years. He has now reached a point where he is one of only a handful of NFL owners to say “Black Lives Matter” after the killing of George Floyd by a police officer in Minnesota and the subsequent protests around the country.

In a statement the team posted on social media, Davis said, “To watch a man be murdered by a uniformed police officer kneeling on the man’s throat for nine minutes while three uniformed police officers either assisted or stood by watching is disturbing in too many ways. To be honest I’m surprised that the resulting violence hasn’t been much worse.”

Davis has since met with Nevada Attorney General Aaron Ford, Clark County Sheriff Joseph Lombardo and Gruden about how they can make a positive social impact coming into the Las Vegas community.

“The initial thing is trust,” Davis said. “The officers need to trust the players and their families, and the players need to trust the officers so we can all say that we are on the same team.

“We discussed a lot of different programs and things that we can do. As soon as this virus is over, we’re going to get together and have an eye-to-eye and let everyone talk and speak from the heart, so we’re all starting on the same page. Starting in the local community is the quickest and most effective way for us to make a difference.”

Davis has also sat in on Zoom meetings that his players had to discuss social injustice.

“They are really stressing voting, and getting the word out how important it is to vote,” he said.

“Making sure people know how to register to vote. If you want change, that’s really the only way to go about doing it, voting. The players would also have mentorships with kids in the community and make appearances with officers in schools, together, showing that they are on the same team and it’s not us versus them.”

Players are planning to make a stand against police violence before games — possibly taking a knee during the national anthem — and Davis is fine with that. He wasn’t for a long time, but that changed just before that Washington game in 2017.

Actually, it goes back to 1968.

“I was 13 years old then and there was a lot of social change going on in the Bay Area — we had Berkeley, Hells Angels, the Black Panthers, People’s Park, the war in Vietnam,” Davis said. “We had all that going on and it’s so remarkable to me the violence that was going on then and the protests and kids getting the shit kicked out of them. And then what was going on in Los Angeles and across the country in Black communities.

“And now, today, people think we are in a tough situation with Black Lives Matter and George Floyd,” he said. “When you look back at ’68, I think people have been actually pretty calm about what’s going on now. You think about it, has anything really changed in 50 years? There’s been progress, but certainly not enough.”

Davis admitted that he didn’t know what to make of Colin Kaepernick’s 2016 protests during the national anthem at first.

"My hero was Tommie Smith," Davis said. "Fist in the air. Strength. That was quite a statement. I didn't see strength in Colin kneeling, and there was some confusion at first over what he was kneeling for. A little bit before that Washington game, I had told the players that while I was the first person for social justice and the Raiders are the first team in the world for social justice, I would prefer that if you had something to say, you don't do it in a Raiders uniform. Because then you're speaking for all 53 players and everyone that works in this organization. And they may not all agree with you."

Davis asked them to speak out after games and said he would stand with them then if they wanted. He thought the message was well received but wasn't sure what the players would do. Then, two days before the game at Washington, President Donald Trump called NFL players who kneeled "sons of bitches."

"Certain things happened and the national climate changed. Things got hot and that clicked me back to 1968," Davis said. "I called in Derek (Carr) and Khalil (Mack) and told them that I can no longer ask them not to say something while you're in uniform. And that if they were going to say something, say it with class and pride and try and say it as a team. There won't be a fine."

While Davis gave his blessing, there was still a lot of debate and uneasiness in the locker room going into the game. Coach Jack Del Rio clearly sided with Trump that players should not protest during the anthem. Carr and Mack, meanwhile, were not polished leaders and did not pull off the unified front, as some players kneeled during the anthem, others stood and many sat on the benches with their arms interlocked.

"Everybody took a different path," Davis said.

Carr took a beating that game, as the listless Raiders were dominated, 27-10, and would go on to lose four straight games to erase a 2-0 start to the season. The rumors spread that the offensive linemen let Carr get hit over the differences of opinion over the pregame protest.

The players on the team all deny this, and most point to the offense falling apart under new coordinator Todd Downing, with former linebacker Del Rio and offensive line coach Mike Tice getting too involved in the play calling.

But there was definitely something hanging in the air in the locker room.

"People respected that Derek stood," former Raiders defensive lineman Mario Edwards Jr. told The Athletic's David Lombardi in 2018. "It's a free country. But people definitely had their feelings about it. We had a group of people that sat and a group of people that stood, and that's where it really started separating.

"And then some people started getting upset like, 'OK, if you're going to sit now, how about you start doing stuff to actually make a difference? Don't sit down just to sit down because it's cool, let's sit down to make a difference.' So then we started pointing fingers and it started going downhill from there."

Davis can't imagine that teammates let Carr get hit.

"I wasn't inside enough to know what was really going on, and I take the blame for that," Davis said. "And it killed our team for the rest of that year. It tore at the heart of our team. It was a total defeat — socially, on the field, everything. It was a disaster. Just a terrible night. And it was my fault, because I was at the top of the food chain."

(Del Rio was fired at the end of the season, after Davis finally succeeded in his long-time courtship to get Gruden to return for a second stint as Raiders coach.)

Davis has been more demonstrative this time around, trying to steer the organization's response to police violence.

"I have taken a lot of criticism over saying Black Lives Matter," Davis said. "I am not backing some Marxist organization, it's just a clean statement. Obviously, all lives matter, but where we're at right now, we have to make clear that Black lives matter because a part of our society needs to hear that after what's been going on. We have to stop police brutality."

"We have two pandemics this year, social justice and COVID virus."

When Davis visits his new baby, his favorite two things about the stadium are the grass field and the 85-foot Al Davis torch, honoring his late father.

"Those were the two must-haves," Davis said. "Non-negotiable. I give all the credit in the world to (Arizona Cardinals owner) Michael Bidwill for taking the risk to actually do a grass field in Arizona that grows outside and actually rolls into the stadium, and then all of the help that they gave us. They helped effectuate that for our stadium. ... Football should be played on grass."

Davis stresses that while Allegiant Stadium is multipurpose, it was made for football.

"The sidelines are very tight and everybody is going to be right on top of the field," Davis said. "It's going to be exciting."

Fans have begun referring to Allegiant Stadium as "The Death Star" because some think it resembles the "Star Wars" space station, and Davis is over the moon about it.

"That's just spectacular," he said. "Disney is kind of excited that that name was attached to the stadium, as well. But that came from the fans. I love that."

While the Raiders won't announce the formation of a "Black Hole" fan section like there was in Oakland, it's already incubating. It will be in the end zone section that doesn't have a club area.

"If the fans want to consider that the Black Hole, they can absolutely do it," Davis said. "I don't try and tell fans what to do, I like organic. But it's very clear that that one end zone will be the Black Hole. A good amount of fans who were in that section in Oakland have bought seats in that section."

"That's part of our legacy."

There are roughly 9,000 fans from Oakland that have bought season tickets, Davis said.

"When I run into them when I am in the Bay Area, they tell me that it hurts that we left, but they understand why," Davis said. "Ninety percent are on a positive note. It's very heartening. The other 10 percent are very, very angry at me. But I am willing to talk to them and explain to them what the reasoning was. And for some, they were still mad after I tell them.

"I totally understand the passion and that they aren't forgiving."

Davis has always spent a lot of time talking to fans, often holding court in the lobby of the Napa Valley Marriott after training camp practices.

"Seeing what the A's are going through right now, knowing what a tough situation we were in," Davis said. "I wouldn't say getting a new stadium in Oakland was impossible, but it was pretty damn impossible. I think most of the fans understand that, and that's important to me."

Davis said the Raiders also have 8,000 fans coming from their other former home, Los Angeles, and he wonders what people are talking about when they say that the Raiders have lost the fever pitch that their fans had in Oakland.

"You hear people say that the crowd is going to be 50/50 with our fans and the opposing team's fans, but the only way the other team's fans get in is if our fans sell their tickets," Davis said. "Because they are all sold out. We have to win so that they don't sell their tickets, but I understand that if they can get $2,000 a ticket for the Chiefs game or Tom Brady game.

"I think a lot of people try to kiss it off and say we sold all the tickets to the hotels or the brokers, and that's the farthest thing from the truth."

It sounds as if there will be no fans at Allegiant Stadium this season, but Davis thinks fans will be pleased with what they see on TV. He thinks his team is set up to win and is particularly excited about the first-round draft pick who reminds him of his late friend, Cliff Branch. And of his father, late owner Al Davis.

"Henry Ruggs was the player I wanted for the last six months," Davis said. "My dad was always trying to replace Cliff with so many different types of guys. ... Speed, speed, speed and we really got away from that the last five, six, seven years. We really didn't have anybody that could run. Nobody could run.

"I watched Henry Ruggs and his speed and quickness and his strength were pretty impressive. And then if you see his baseball highlights, my God. He made some nice tackles on interceptions and he'll block too. He is a complete player. I was just so thrilled that we drafted him. Maybe that's the piece that we haven't had that's Raiders football. You throw it deep the first play and the safety is worried the whole game."

Ruggs is potentially the one new starter on an offense that has its quarterback, offensive line, running backs, receivers and tight ends back from last season. That familiarity should bode well as teams had to shelve their offseason workouts and now the preseason games have been canceled.

"There was so much talk this offseason about other quarterbacks and things of that nature, and having Derek (Carr) come back and the continuity he brings with how little time that players have to work together is probably a positive thing," Davis said.

Davis thinks the life came back into the organization when Gruden came aboard, but more so when the Raiders beat Mack and the Bears in London last season. They had traded away Mack, the former defensive player of the year, before the 2018 season for no immediate return as they awaited the future draft picks in 2019 and 2020. The two first-rounders turned out to be running back Josh Jacobs and cornerback Damon Arnette.

“After that Bears game, people realized that we hadn’t given away the ship with Khalil,” Davis said. “We have such good young guys today. They are really working hard this offseason. And it’s not the coolest weather.”

The new practice facility has outdoor and indoor fields, and Davis said the only person more excited than the players is Gruden.

“He is really excited,” Davis said. “The facility gives him an opportunity to do something he’s never had the opportunity to do — having everything at his disposal as far as the film-editing and the technology, the rooms, just everything.”

The Raiders will be having training camp at the facility starting next Tuesday, but Davis hopes to return to Napa next summer.

“I would like to continue to do it there,” Davis said. “It is one of the most beautiful places in the world and gives us ties back to our Northern California roots. Southern California is another possibility, but I just think there is nothing better than Napa.”

The Raiders have another year in their deal at Napa and Davis thinks extending it should go smoothly, though he senses other teams are “biting.”

The ribbon-cutting and the official opening of Allegiant Stadium may get pushed back due to the pandemic, but Davis says he knows he will be holding back tears whenever it does happen.

“This would have been my dad’s dream,” Davis said. “He would have loved the stadium. It has that imposing Raiders touch to it. It looks like a Raiders stadium. I think he would be happy too about the facility in Henderson and the ability that it gives us to be a 21st-, 22nd-century team.”

While his dad was always full speed ahead, Davis does look back and he said it’s important to him that people know he did everything he could to make it work in Oakland.

“If I didn’t try, I would have felt guilty,” Davis said. “I gave it my best and I don’t feel guilty one iota. I take a lot of blame for a lot of things where maybe I wasn’t prepared or made a bad decision — everything is from the heart — but on the trying to get us a stadium in Oakland, I did everything I could. Then, at our last home game, they took an edited video and made it look like I didn’t give a damn about the fans.

“I wanted to say that the city ran us out of town and was suing us, and the guy that runs the Coliseum was facing federal charges for inside dealing on the naming rights, but I didn’t ... and it came out looking like I didn’t care about the fans. When I think they are the best in the world.”

Former Coliseum Authority executive director Scott McKibben was charged in January for alleged violations of state conflict-of-interest laws for seeking a $50,000 fee in helping negotiate a stadium’s naming rights.

“He backtracked on the deal he made us on the price of the lease, and he gets caught for taking a kickback, and I haven’t heard a word about it since,” Davis said. “The Bay Area is one of the most beautiful places in the world, and the politics are the most dysfunctional I have ever seen anywhere.”

Davis was also hurt when the NFL chose the Rams and Chargers over the Raiders to move to Los Angeles, but processed it quickly.

“I have lost games before,” Davis said. “That’s how I have learned to live my life — you lose on Sunday, you’re pissed about it, I go to P.F. Chang’s on Monday, I have lunch and then I am on to the next week. We got our ass kicked in LA, and we went back to Oakland with our tails between our legs. And then McKibben backtracked and tripled our lease, and it was total disrespect. It was like, how are we going to work with these people?”

“Vegas had been after us for years, but I told them I will only talk to you if Oakland and Los Angeles don’t happen. Losing the LA vote was probably the best thing that ever happened for us.”

And for Nevada football fans and workers.

“This stadium has been a great thing for the community,” Sisolak said. “It created an awful lot of jobs, which I am really, really proud of. Mark has been a great partner. There are only 32 cities that get to call themselves NFL cities and it’s an honor to be one of them for the people in Nevada.

“Mark has won a fan base already. He is extremely supportive of the community, he’s at every sporting event and charity event. He has donated to our schools. He has jumped in with both feet and he has certainly changed the landscape of Las Vegas and Nevada forever.”

General Manager Mike Mayock

Man with the Plan: Raiders' GM Mike Mayock seeing vision through

By Adam Hill

September 9, 2020

Mike Mayock fondly remembers wandering the various playgrounds of West Philadelphia as a teenager in search of the best competition to test his mettle.

"You'd kind of hear where guys might be running that day and go find them," Mayock recalled during a phone call late in training camp. "I didn't care if it was Wiffle ball. Let's just go find a game."

It was that same search for competition that led him to leave behind a nearly two-decade run as a television analyst to serve as the general manager of the Raiders in December 2018.

Mayock employed the same passion and work ethic to his media job as he does to his front office gig with the Raiders, particularly his time spent as an NFL draft analyst.

It was a grueling process to prepare for the biggest three days of the year, but as soon as the draft broadcast wrapped, it was time to move on from all of the players he had spent so much time studying.

The son of a football coach wanted more skin in the game, as he describes it.

"When I was at NFL Network, I could prepare 10 months for the draft and feel really good about it afterwards, go out and have a beer and feel like you worked your tail off and did the best you could," he said. "But there's no connection to the individual players and the game, it's just a job well done."

That's not the case anymore. Now his meticulous research on every player coming out of college is put to the ultimate test. "You get to see these guys as more than just a commodity," he said. "You get to see them become fathers, husbands, brothers and men."

He also has to worry about trades, free agency, managing egos and the salary cap and making sure all those pieces work together when they take the field on game days.

"On Sunday afternoon for three-and-a-half hours, I'm ready to puke," the 62-year-old Boston College alum said. "That's what I missed. The butterflies, the nerves when every snap matters. That's what's been the cool thing for me is trying to build something different and special and on Sunday, you live and die by every snap."

A successful transition

It's a proving ground that sounds nightmarish, but Mayock insists he's a man living a dream.

"Everybody has a different definition of fun," he said. "My wife looks at me and just laughs. She's like, 'You've never had more fun in your life.' And she's right. At my age, to have the opportunity to do this, you kind of live and die a little bit every day because it means so much."

Not that he was unhappy with his prior professional life. After his brief playing career ended, Mayock went into commercial real estate and eventually broke into broadcasting.

He did a little bit of everything in television from sideline reporter in college football and the NCAA basketball tournament to calling games in the Canadian Football League to lead analyst on Notre Dame broadcasts.

It was the kind of versatility that once had him dreaming of being the first person to play in Major League Baseball, the NBA and the NFL when he was growing up.

Mayock was best known for his NFL draft analysis and had settled into that role, though there was always a sense he wanted to experience what was on the other side of the business. He knew it would have to be the right situation for it to work, however.

Mayock had been inside the facilities of just about every team in his time covering the NFL and the draft and had determined one of the biggest factors in the success or failure of a franchise was whether the coach and general manager were on the same page. He knew it was going to have to be the right fit if he were to move into the front office.

Mayock found it with the Raiders and head coach Jon Gruden and it didn't take long to figure it out.

While they had crossed paths many times in their roles as broadcasters, their first meeting about taking the general manager job for the Raiders took place in late 2018 when Gruden was wrapping up the first season of his coaching comeback.

The group of five or six people at Gruden's house included owner Mark Davis, but soon only Mayock and Gruden were talking.

"It was the easiest conversation I ever had," Mayock recalls. "It happened organically. It was just topic to topic to topic about football and on most of them we were aligned. I think the most important thing was just kind of the vision for how to build this franchise."

In addition to the chemistry, Mayock liked that Gruden had a 10-year contract. It afforded the duo the opportunity to remake the roster according to their vision of how it should be done with the security of enough time to see the process through.

They wanted to focus on building through the draft and augmenting through free agency in areas where they believed they could invest in impact players.

It helped that Gruden had turned assets like Khalil Mack and Amari Cooper into draft capital and salary cap space.

So they were aligned on how to build a team, but Mayock has long said a key part of their shared vision was what type of players they wanted to bring in.

Mayock stressed to his scouting department the importance of evaluating a player and not just his measurables.

"I like smelling the grass," he said. "I want to be out there. I don't want to just know the results of the 40 and the vertical jump. I want to see them work out. I want to go to dinner with them. I want to get to know them. I tell my scouts all the time that we can all watch the tape, put the reports in and evaluate, but what makes that kid tick? What's important to him? The better we do at that, the better overall scouts we will be.

"We want guys with a passion for the game of football," he said.

Football first

Anyone who has been at the team's brand new facility in Henderson before sunrise knows how important football is to the faces of the front office. Mayock typically arrives around 5:30 a.m. He insists he's never beaten Gruden to work.

The two usually share a coffee around that time to discuss the agenda for the day and whatever big picture issues may be pertinent at the time.

Together, they have turned over almost the entire roster. They believe they are far more talented, stronger, faster and better than when they started. They are certainly younger.

Mayock has confidence in what they are building, but he knows it doesn't matter until it's put to the test on the field. As much credit as he got for the success of the rookie class he put together in his first draft, he's quick to point out his team went 7-9 in his first season as general manager.

So, has the vision he and Gruden had for building the roster started to take shape?

"The answer to the question is we're getting more and more of our guys in the building, we're competing at a higher level, but it remains to be seen whether that translates on the field or not, which is most important," he said.

"I think we're slowly seeing what we wanted, which was guys to come in and compete their tails off," he continued. "We want guys that love to compete, that don't shrink from competition. That's probably why you've seen some of the guys that we've drafted from big schools, used to playing in big games, an opportunity to watch them compete in that type of atmosphere. As Jon and I are sitting here contemplating cutting to a 53-man roster, we kind of take a step back and say it's a lot harder this year. We've got more guys competing. There's more talent."

It's time to put it to the test. But Mayock doesn't have to seek out that competition like he did when he was a kid.

His work will be graded every week, starting with a road game in Charlotte against the Panthers on Sept. 13.

THE ATHLETIC

Raiders cornerback Damon Arnette's rise is about toughness and growth

By Vic Tafur

May 11, 2020

Ohio State co-defensive coordinator Jeff Hafley knew something was up when he saw cornerback Damon Arnette crawl off the field during the Buckeyes' Oct. 18 game against Northwestern. And then roll around on the ground on the sideline.

Arnette finally stood up, lifted his broken right wrist and made his way over to the headset, where he had a request to make of Hafley.

"He said, 'Coach, can you, um, call more zone? I can't use my right hand to press right now. It hurts too much,'" Hafley said in a phone interview Friday. "I told him to quit being a baby and to press with his left."

Arnette laughed back and said, "Alright coach, I got you."

Arnette, picked 19th overall by the Raiders last month, had surgery for that broken wrist just a week before the Northwestern game. During the Buckeyes' bye week.

"He is as tough as I've ever been around," Hafley said. "He was punching the ball out (with) his cast and smiling about it."

Was there ever any thought of maybe taking some time off after surgery?

"Never ... never. Never," Arnette said in a phone interview last week. "Because it took me about a month to even realize that it was broken."

He had broken the wrist during training camp and came out for one play that practice.

"They just taped me up and I went back out and finished practice," Arnette said. "The next day, I punched the ball out again and it hurt. So the next practice, they put me in a temporary removable cast. They wanted to see if it would heal on its own, but finally, I got an X-ray."

At one point in that first game back, at Northwestern, Arnette's right hand went numb.

"Just for a bit," Arnette said. "Hafley told me to play more with an outside presence, so I could use my left arm more. And I started playing off-man a little bit more the rest of the season and my footwork got better. And it helped my patience."

The Raiders couldn't wait to get started with the online meetings with their rookies this week — especially defensive backs coach Jim O'Neil.

"I love Arnette," O'Neil said in a phone interview last week. "He's the ultimate football player. He is an unbelievable competitor, and that comes across the first time that you talk to him."

"He is an old-school Raiders cornerback, and there are not a lot of guys like him that exist anymore. And he's not even close to his ceiling."

Many draft experts considered the 6-foot, 195-pound Arnette a reach at No. 19 overall. And part of that was because the All-Big-Ten second-team selection only ran a 4.56-second 40-yard dash at the NFL Scouting Combine. There also were character concerns.

First, let's address the 40. General manager Mike Mayock said the Raiders timed Arnette at 4.43, not 4.56. and replays do indicate that the official timer may have hit the button too soon at the start.

"It didn't feel like a 4.5," Arnette said. "And when I was training, I wasn't tracking a 4.5 ... my low was a 4.40. I was expecting be somewhere in the 4.4s."

Arnette didn't sweat the bad time too much. If you watch the film of his games at Ohio State, he certainly plays fast.

"I ain't a track runner," he said.

O'Neil said the Raiders not only didn't buy the 4.56 time but didn't care all that much in the first place.

"His playing speed is ridiculous," O'Neil said. "He has competitive speed. I don't care how fast the guy is opposite him, he is going to cover him."

The 40 time was one thing. But defending yourself against nameless reports that you have character concerns is another thing. Arnette was tagged as a potential problem off the field in practically every leaked scouting report.

It didn't, and still doesn't, sit well with him.

"When you hear character concerns, you think about big problems, big red flags ... woman beater, drug issues or run-ins with the law," Arnette said. "That's what you think of. It pissed me off because I don't want anyone thinking that about me. In my case, it wasn't none of that. I didn't have character issues.

"It was really more of the media confusing a man growing up, maturing, with somebody who has character issues. I was going through shit for the first time, maybe I said some things the wrong way, but that's different than being a grown-ass man with character issues who has done some bad things. You know what I am saying?"

Arnette, who turns 24 in September, graduated with a degree in communications.

"The road I was on," he said, "I was going through some stuff and I got through it. I am who I am. ... My maturity came in stages. Some people may get it on the first try, but I stuck with it and I figured it out and that's what that 2019 season was for me."

The NFL will make young men grow up some more, but nothing like fatherhood will. Arnette's son, Ace, is now three months old.

“Best thing that ever happened to me,” Arnette said. “It’s crazy, man. The fire and passion that I played with before ... after he was born and I realized that I am a dad, that flame just intensified times 10. Now, I am not playing the game just for me anymore.”

Mayock defended the pick on draft night, saying, “We feel like this is one of the most competitive football players in the entire draft. We don’t feel at all like it was a reach.”

Then, a few days later on SiriusXM NFL Radio, Mayock added, “We wanted a guy who wouldn’t flinch.”

Raiders coach Jon Gruden took it a step further, saying he’s not sure Arnette wasn’t the best corner in the draft.

“I liked Arnette as much as (Jeff) Okudah,” Gruden told SiriusXM of Arnette’s Ohio State teammate. “If you look at the production, Arnette’s got more production. He played last year hurt with a broken right wrist. I think he is the best tackler in this draft. I think he is an old-school bump-and-run Raiders cornerback that’s physical and nasty.”

Arnette and Okudah were a good fit together at Ohio State — “we’re both workhorses,” Arnette said — and they pushed each other, with Ohio State finishing 13-1 last season and Okudah going third overall to Detroit.

“I looked at it like he and I were the best cornerbacks in college football — 1A and 1B,” Arnette said. “Doesn’t matter who you want to list as 1A or 1B. I would take myself, but take me out of the equation and I would take Okudah.”

The two are close enough that Okudah would often ask reporters about his teammate’s draft stock during the draft process.

“I feel like if you love a redemption story, you respect Damon Arnette a lot, someone that had a lot of doubters his first four years at Ohio State,” Okudah said at the combine. “He just put his head down and kept working. Through a broken wrist, he put his head down and kept working.”

Arnette could tell the Raiders liked him early on in the draft process. Gruden doesn’t have much of a poker face.

“It was just how Coach Gruden talked to me, I could tell he meant what he was saying,” Arnette said. “It was just a different feel from how other teams were talking to me.”

Arnette was a big fan of Gruden’s after their first meeting.

“I could tell that he was a dog like I was,” Arnette said. “He was a hyped guy and he loved football, I could tell that right away.”

The Raiders knew everything about Arnette — Raiders assistant defensive backs coach Taver Johnson was the Ohio State cornerbacks coach in 2018 and O’Neil has been friends with Hafley for 18 years.

“I was a part of the interview process when he replaced me as a defensive assistant at Albany in 2002,” O’Neil said. “Between Hafley and Taver, we had as good an intel as I’ve ever had on a prospect.”

Though Ohio State finished 13-1 in 2018, the defense had a frustrating end to the season, allowing an average of 29 points over the last six games. But Arnette's potential was clear in Johnson's one season on the campus.

"You saw the physicalness, the toughness — you heard it as well because he does talk a little bit," Johnson said in a phone interview last week. "He needed to clean up some technique things, which you knew he would because he is a very smart player."

"Coach Johnson and I are great, but we struggled a bit as a team that year," Arnette said.

Arnette, in fact, was ready to enter the NFL Draft last year.

"My bags were packed and the flight was booked," he said. "The people at the (draft) training facility were expecting me to show up that coming Monday."

His father, who played basketball at Florida Atlantic, and Hall of Fame receiver Cris Carter, a friend of the family since Arnette was 6, were against the move.

"I think he really did himself a great deal by coming back to Ohio State and graduating," Carter said during a Pro Football Hall of Fame Twitter video interview before the draft.

Carter didn't think the combine showing would hurt Arnette, and he was right.

"He has good size. He is just a little under 6 foot," Carter said. "He has good speed, he has better game speed than he showed at the combine. At the combine, he was dealing with a couple of things — he had a hamstring and a back issue.

"He's also a kid that's been through adversity on and off the field. His junior year, he gave up a lot of penalties and he gave up some big plays touchdown-wise. He was graded a fourth-round pick and decided to come back. He definitely took better care of his body, was more mature, more of a leader. You could see him growing as a young man."

On the day Hafley arrived at his new job, he was told that Arnette "was already gone," but Hafley was able to get a meeting with him before his flight. It seemed like Arnette's dad and Carter were also in that room, as Arnette's mind was racing when Hafley turned on the game film from 2018 and started going over it with him.

Hafley started telling Arnette the ways he thought the corner could improve.

"I looked at the man in the mirror and realized that I had unfinished business personally," Arnette said. "And in the middle of the conversation with Coach Hafley, I stopped him and told him I was coming back.

"He wanted to introduce some new technique and he talked about his time in the NFL, but mostly it was me talking about becoming a better man."

Ohio State safety Jordan Fuller said Arnette came back a new person.

"From the moment he said he was coming back to school, you could see a change in his whole demeanor," Fuller said at the combine. "He was doing community service like going to schools, talking to kids about his journey, what to do, what not to do. ...

“He was a huge leader in our DB room. Giving speeches to the whole team, and he was definitely somebody that everybody listens to and takes really, really seriously.”

Arnette also became a projected top-50 pick as opposed to a top-100 pick.

“His whole mindset and approach to the game changed,” said Hafley, who is now the head coach at Boston College. “He learned how to watch film and he learned how to practice the right way. He learned how to see things differently, which will help him a lot in the league.

“He understood he had to show up on time and stay late. He learned how to take care of his body. He matured.”

The work paid off, as Arnette posted the lowest passer rating allowed (60.6) in single coverage in this draft class, according to Pro Football Focus.

“What you put on tape is what you are,” Johnson said. “You see that he loves the game. You see how much he cares. You can’t turn it on and off in this sport.”

Arnette never could turn it off.

He found football when he was 7 and the connection knocked him over. Literally.

“I was an aggressive child,” Arnette said, laughing. “My definition of playing was roughhousing. I took that type of energy to school and other people’s kids didn’t know what I was doing. I’d push somebody and expect them to get up, chase me and push me back. But ... instead of that, they would cry.

“And I would be like, ‘Why you crying? You’re supposed to push me back.’ So they found me the football release pretty quick. I remember my granddaddy asked me early on why I liked it so much. And I told him because I could finally push somebody without people getting mad at me. And the rest is history.”

Arnette went on to play for powerhouse St. Thomas Aquinas High in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., moving from receiver to outside linebacker and then to corner as a senior.

“My first time actually on an island was in college,” he said. “It was a good challenge that I found I was up for every time. I am super competitive. I can be a goofball at times, but when it comes to football, I become a different person.”

Arnette has relished his role as an underdog his whole career, “always getting the short end of the stick,” he said.

“I always knew how to scratch and claw,” Arnette said.

And that’s not going to change being a first-round pick.

His transition is not going to be ideal, as NFL facilities are closed during the pandemic and Arnette will likely miss 350-400 reps that he would have normally gotten in offseason workouts. But that’s just another reason Mayock “reached” and took him 19th, and didn’t risk trading back and losing out on Arnette.

"I think Damon will be very quick to adapt to the NFL," Hafley said. "He will be one of the most ready guys to play that there is. He has played a lot of football and has a lot of experience. He is the type of kid that you can drop on a field and he will figure things out very quickly. He is very instinctual and the game comes easy to him, and he is one of the most competitive guys you will ever be around."

Hafley was an assistant for the Buccaneers, Browns and 49ers before going back to college ball last season and knows what it takes to be a top NFL corner.

Arnette "has the makeup for it," Hafley said. "There is nothing that is going to faze the kid."

And don't mention to Hafley that Arnette may have been a reach at 19.

"I know it was a good pick," Hafley said. "If they didn't take him in the first round, I know there are other teams that would have. Teams were just being quiet about where they had him on the board."

"The Raiders got a really good one."

The hard truths that brought Damon Arnette back to Ohio State

By Bill Landis

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Damon Arnette came back to Columbus last January to get some clothes, his dog (a Staffordshire terrier named Legend) and to say goodbye.

He had made up his mind a few weeks earlier. The junior cornerback was forgoing his final year of college and turning pro. After Ohio State's Rose Bowl win against Washington, Arnette stayed in his room at the InterContinental Downtown L.A. hotel and skipped the team charter flight back home. He instead went to Dallas, where he was born and spent the first two years of his life before his family moved to Florida. There he would find an apartment and begin training for the NFL Draft. He didn't get the chance to say goodbye to teammates that he otherwise might not see for a while, with his head buried in draft prep and the team still in Columbus getting ready for its first spring under Ryan Day.

Missing the team flight sends a pretty strong message. So Arnette's appearance in the Woody Hayes Athletic Center that January day was surprising.

"Everybody thought I was gone," he said. "I had my whole little statement written up and everything."

At the time he had been playing the words of former Ohio State receiver and Pro Football Hall of Famer Cris Carter in his head.

"You're not ready for pro ball, man," Carter recalled saying. "You're not ready to play for a living."

Those words hit hard and nudged Arnette a bit off the path that would have ended with him leaving, but when he walked the halls of the Woody that day, he was still gone. The defense wasn't good last year. Playing in it wasn't fun. Arnette had become a bit of a lightning rod for criticism, along with a few other of his defensive teammates. He was about to get his third position coach and was facing a daunting class schedule if he wanted to get his degree before the 2019 season started. Turning pro wasn't just about chasing the money, it was about getting away and starting something new.

Arnette didn't meet his new coach that first day back, but Jeff Hafley reached him by phone on a Tuesday night and asked whether Arnette could come meet with him in his office Wednesday, the day before Arnette was set to fly back to Dallas and put all of this behind him.

That Wednesday was Hafley's first day on the job as defensive backs coach and co-defensive coordinator. Midway through a conversation with a man he didn't yet know, Arnette changed his mind and decided to stay at Ohio State for his senior season.

"I told him the truth," Hafley said. "I told him what we could do for him. I told him what I think he needed. I told him I watched his tape. I told him what I thought he could work on. I told him I'd have his back if he did everything. I was honest with him. That's it. I didn't sell him anything. I didn't promise him anything. I just told him the truth, and he made the decision to come back. I'm glad he did."

Why did Arnette, with one foot out the door, react so strongly to the words of a man he had just met?

"Because of what's happening now," he said last week. "I saw it when I was in that office. I saw everything that's happening now."

Ohio State opens its 2019 season Saturday against Florida Atlantic (Noon, Fox). As season openers go, it's not the sexiest of opponents. Though Lane Kiffin's offense could provide some intrigue and a sneaky good test for a defense that's looking to show why last year's performance, the worst in program history by more than one statistical measure, was an anomaly. There are individuals, Arnette among them, looking for some redemption and an opportunity to show that while whatever criticism came their way last year might have been warranted on some level, it shouldn't stand as the final verdict on their college careers.

If your immediate reaction to the idea of Arnette turning pro was "why?" you're not alone.

Arnette's position-mate, Kendall Sheffield, ended up getting selected in the fourth round of last April's draft. It was likely that Arnette would have either been selected very late, or not at all. Day knew that, Carter knew that and Hafley, who spent the previous seven years in the NFL, knew that. Arnette's father, Damon Arnette Sr., played eight years of professional basketball overseas and knows that the pro lifestyle isn't always what it's made out to be. "Junior" had all of that information available to him, but sometimes it's hard to see.

Here's what Arnette knew: Turning pro meant not having to come back to a situation that wasn't all that enjoyable last year. The position coach that helped recruit Arnette to Ohio State, Kerry Coombs, left in January 2018 to join the Tennessee Titans staff in a move that was surprising to many inside the Woody. Coombs was a media favorite for his energetic news conferences and his shoot-it-straight comments. It went beyond that for his players. Coombs had developed a strong track record of turning out first-round cornerbacks by coaching them up on press-man principles that became the staple of Ohio State's strong pass defense from 2014-2017. Coombs was a passionate coach who supported his players, and his absence left a void on the staff that never seemed to get filled last year.

"I didn't always get along with the coaches last year," Arnette said. "I had my fair share of issues. When Kerry Coombs left, he was somebody who always had my back no matter what I went through. After he left, I didn't have that love for any other coaches in the building like that. It just wasn't there, and I checked out early. I just didn't want to play for them no more."

Perhaps that had a hand in Arnette's up-and-down play last year. Among OSU's top-four coverage guys — Jeffrey Okudah, Shaun Wade, Sheffield and Arnette — Arnette had the highest adjusted catch rate allowed, 80 percent, according to Sports Info Solutions.

That was actually an improvement from 2017, and Arnette has only surrendered two touchdown throws in his career, but he's fielded his share of criticism on social media, including a direct message from one follower who told him he should go back to high school and pick a different sport.

Arnette has the kind of personality that draws people to him, but when he's in a bad way, that can have a negative impact on those around him. He's usually upbeat, but at a certain point constantly getting told how bad you are can weigh on you.

"(Strength) coach Mick (Marotti) said I have a charismatic personality, and I can either lead people up or down," Arnette said. "I never really looked around and saw that. I feel like last year I was selfish with that and didn't use that opportunity to lead people the right way. I really just did what I wanted to do, and then so did they."

Arnette also said he was too interested in living the college party lifestyle, and not focused enough on football or academics. If he was going to make the jump to the NFL after last year, he would be hardly leaving Ohio State in the best standing.

"Having the thoughts of leaving, the questions were: Was I the best player I know I can be? Did I leave everything out there? Do I regret anything? I couldn't check all of those boxes," Arnette said. "Then I was like, can you live with that? And I realized, no I can't."

Damon Arnette Sr. and Cris Carter met more than 20 years ago when Arnette Sr. was playing college basketball at Florida Atlantic and Carter was living in Boca Raton during his offseasons away from the Minnesota Vikings. Arnette Sr. could hoop. After transferring from Baylor, he scored 1,246 points in three seasons at FAU, which ranks No. 7 all time in program history. The former guard has the program's season-high scoring average (21.9 points), and he is one of two FAU players ever to amass 1,000 points and 500 rebounds in a career.

Damon Arnette Jr. was born in Texas not long after his father transferred to FAU. "Junior" and his mother, Montreana, moved to Florida for the summer before his father's senior season. Damon Sr. was spending some time working out at Carter's training facility in Boca and would sometimes bring his 2-year-old son with him. That relationship grew over time to where Carter is now a close friend of the family and trusted mentor of the younger Arnette.

Junior spent his first season at St. Thomas Aquinas High School in Fort Lauderdale playing receiver for Carter before moving to defensive back full time as a sophomore. That put Carter in a position to give him the hard truth during a phone call before the Rose Bowl.

"He was already gone," Carter said. "He was going to the pros. It's really hard to change that mindset because that's not just something they wake up with in the morning. That's something they've been thinking about all year, all season and it's hard for them to change their mind. Junior and I have had plenty of hard conversations. So me thinking he was gonna get offended? I mean, he was asking my opinion on the business that I know.

"I played in NFL for 16 years. The last 17, I've been covering the NFL. So I do understand some of the requirements and the transition. When you are a few classes away from graduating, when you can compete for a national championship, when you can work on your craft — be better at zone, be better at man-to-man — when you can provide leadership. People are gonna train you for free. I thought there were some maturity things he could work on, too. I would much rather have you play another year in college, be a dominant college player.

Unless they've got a five-star recruit or something that they're trying to put in your position, you've got to get as good as you can so you can get your draft position as high as you can."

That's one thing about Arnette, for as much criticism as he's received, he's going to be a starter again this year under his third position coach and under a new set of coordinators. It should be noted that this coaching staff could have let him walk and instead made every effort to keep him for one final season. He was a starting nickel corner two years ago and rotated through the outside positions last year. This year expect him to play a mix of both depending on the matchup.

"No one has ever taken his job," Arnette Sr. said. "With all the five-stars and the transfers, he's always been the low-hanging fruit, so to speak. But the reality is that nobody took his job."

And now Arnette feels like he's in a position to really shine in this new defense.

That's a common theme for every player we talk to, and perhaps that's just the natural demeanor for whenever something is new, particularly when last year was so bad. But right now there's a strong belief in what Hafley is teaching, and how he's going to let his defensive backs play.

"There was a connection that was made with coach Hafley," Arnette Sr. said. "I think he has the personality to shoot you straight but also know what he's talking about, to show you and at the necessary times make you feel comfortable that you're getting better. Sometimes athletes don't want to be told to do something just because 'I say so.' You have to explain why so they can go out there and feel confident in what they're doing."

And that has Arnette Jr. in a better place than he was in last year. He graduated this summer with a degree in communications, loading up on courses over the spring and summer sessions to leave him focused almost exclusively on football in his final year. He's "calmed down" off the field, and said now he spends his free time watching Netflix and FaceTiming his girlfriend.

He's not a captain but is aware of his impact on the team. As a senior, he's entrusted to lead anyway and makes cognizant efforts to keep a positive attitude, even on those days when practice is a grind and he's not actually feeling that great. That's all part of a maturation for a player who was ready to walk away a few months ago and is now staring at a future that has him excited for what's coming this season.

"This year it's the reset button, especially for me," Arnette said. "It's my last year. It's all or nothing, for real. The question is: Are we gonna play to what the talent level is and not let distractions come in between what we know we can do on the field?"

The connection he has with Hafley might not quite be what it was with Coombs, because they've only known each other a few months. But talking with Arnette, it seems like it's something close to that.

Before Ohio State has even played a game this year, Arnette already thinks he made the right decision to come back.

"I never really had a gut feeling to leave, but after talking to Hafley I had a gut feeling to stay," Arnette said. "After talking to him I got excited. If I was to leave with everything that's happening now? If I was on the outside looking in? I'd be so sad, for real. I'd be sad. So I'm happy I stayed."

'He took the long road': Raiders' Trent Brown still yearning to be recognized

By Tashan Reed

July 15, 2020

A few weeks after winning Super Bowl LIII with the Patriots in 2019, Trent Brown decided to get back to the basics as he headed into free agency for the first time in his career. He called his former offensive line coach at Georgia Military College, Joe Windon, and asked him to travel to Miami for an impromptu offseason workout session.

"I was like, 'Why don't you ask some other people?'" Windon said. "And he said, 'Yeah, there's just not a lot of people that I trust and that know me.'"

The duo spent four days in Miami primarily going over stance and start drills. Brown identified that he had an issue with his run blocking and coming off with power from a three-point stance, so Windon instructed him to widen his stance and slightly shift one of his feet back.

"We ran through it a couple times and he said, 'Imagine that: I got all these millionaires around me and I got to go back to my junior college coach to figure out how to come out of a three-point stance in the run game,'" Windon said, laughing. "As complicated as football may seem, it's really a pretty basic sport."

Being one of the best offensive tackles made Brown the highest-paid offensive lineman in NFL history when he signed a four-year, $66 million contract with the Raiders in March 2019 that included $36.75 million guaranteed. He started 11 of the first 12 games last season and allowed just one sack before a season-ending pectoral injury in the Week 13 loss to the Chiefs.

"It was really a freak play," Brown said. "It was something I do all the time. This one particular time, I just felt that pop. And I finished the rest of the game playing with one arm; literally, I didn't use that arm for the rest of the game. It didn't look like we had a shot at going to the playoffs, which if we did, I would've kept playing for sure, but it just felt like the smart thing to do."

The Raiders missed the playoffs in their final year in Oakland before relocating to Las Vegas. Brown is healthy and has focused on strengthening work, rest and recovery since ramping up his personal conditioning program in January. The 6-foot-8, 380-pounder has fortified his already massive physique.

"I've been lifting a lot more weights this offseason," Brown said. "I'm really the strongest I've ever been right now. I'm just trying to come into this season ready to make some things happen."

Brown, 27, is proving his "Greatest Underdog" nickname is more than just a catchy slogan to sell merchandise. It's something he continues to live despite the size of his bank account.

"I feel like everybody has a bit of an underdog chip on their shoulders," Brown said. "For those behind me, I just want to show those young guys and girls that it don't take nobody to believe in you but yourself and God. That's all the belief you need to make whatever you want happen in this life."

“Somebody gon’ notice it.”

Brown was born in Bastrop, Texas, but his father, Reginald, relocated the family to Albany, Ga., after getting out of the military and starting his career as a police officer. Reginald briefly played professional basketball in China before wrist and knee injuries ended his career. Brown’s mother, Tiffany, a schoolteacher, was a high school volleyball player, so it was only natural that Brown was a precocious athlete.

“I knew early on that he appeared to be very athletic,” Reginald said. “He could write and shoot a basketball or throw a football with both hands. He was a big child and I never let him play with kids his age. He never knew how good he could be because he always played up two or three years with kids older than him. So, he always thought he was just average, but as he got older and started playing with kids his age, he started to stand out.”

Eventually, parents of players on opposing teams began to question whether Brown was actually his age, so Reginald began to carry his birth certificate around with him. Brown had more of an interest in basketball than football early on, which is why he was limited to junior college options once he graduated from Westover Comprehensive High in 2011. Given GMC’s reputation for producing highly sought talent, his family’s military background and that it was only about two hours from Albany, it was the best overall fit.

“We saw his tape and you saw a really long, athletic kid that was still kind of raw from a technique standpoint, but he was so quick and agile for a kid his size,” Windon said. “And he hadn’t really played a lot of football at that point. We thought that we could bring him in and that his athleticism would take over pretty quickly.”

Brown enrolled that fall and started at tackle as a freshman. He excelled in pass protection due to his length and footwork, but he didn’t generate much push in the running game. In the ensuing offseason, he ballooned from 300 to 350 pounds.

“He had never really had an offseason where it was just lifting and training for football,” Windon said. “It worried me that he wouldn’t be able to carry that weight, but his agility and ability to move never changed. Him starting to lift weights on a regular basis with it geared toward being strong for football really took him from just being an athletic player to a physical player with athleticism.”

Brown was stronger and heavier and became a force in the run game. He also became mentally tougher and no longer complained about aches and pains. Outside of the improvements in terms of football, Brown also made strides when it came to becoming independent and self-sufficient. He mastered time management and stayed on top of his priorities. He initially committed to Georgia before his sophomore year but was turned off by inconsistencies within the recruiting process. He decommitted in September, signed with Florida in December and enrolled in May 2013.

“It was tough, honestly, because I was pretty much sold on Georgia when I was committed there,” Brown said. “It just was kind of a better decision to go where I would have to grow and where I didn’t know anybody. I would have to cultivate relationships and take another stepping stone toward becoming a man.”

Brown played in all 12 games and started the final five at right tackle his first year with the Gators. He was named the starting right tackle during spring practice in 2014, but the coaching staff approached him about switching to guard going into the fall. While he played in 11 games that season, he only made six starts and looked out of place. He was drafted in the seventh round in 2015 by the 49ers.

"When they asked me to play guard, I was just like, 'I'm helping the team so when it comes time for them to talk to the scouts and whatnot, they'll help me,'" Brown said. "But, obviously, that wasn't mutual and that's why I ended up going in the seventh round. It is what it is. I was able to show some versatility. Immediately when I was drafted to San Fran they knew, 'This guy's not a guard.'"

Brown played in five games as a rookie and started the final two at right tackle. The playing time proved valuable as he gained confidence in himself and his ability to play in the league. Once he had that in tow, he approached his first NFL offseason with a renewed drive.

He stood out for his uncanny agility and fluidity for someone his size, but also his tendency to pick up concepts and techniques quickly. Success is never guaranteed in the NFL, but his potential was undoubtable.

"What Trent always had to do was overcome himself," Windon said. "Sometimes he would lack confidence in what he was trying to do and that would allow external factors to affect him, but if he had confidence in what he was doing, there's nothing that he couldn't do. ... You just don't find too many people ever that are his size that move the way he does. And I think now he has a genuine passion for the game of football.

"When we first got him (at GMC), I think he kind of played football because he thought he could be successful. But I think now he has a genuine passion for the game of football. He's going to get even better as he continues to play and learn."

Brown started all 16 games with the 49ers in 2016 and appeared on track to do the same in 2017 before a season-ending shoulder injury. He was injured in a Thursday practice before the 49ers' Week 12 matchup against the Seahawks. After an MRI conducted by team doctors, he was told that he only had a small tear in the labrum in his right shoulder, so he returned the following week to play against the Bears.

"The whole game, I'm just feeling my shit," Brown said. "My hand is tingling. My hand is going numb and shit like that. Everybody was saying how proud of me they were and all this and that. My shoulder's not getting any better and they're still trying to make me play. So the next week, we play against Houston and I told them, 'I'm not playing.' So, of course, they're mad. I stood my ground and I didn't play."

Brown traveled to receive a second opinion from Dr. James Andrews, who told him and his agent that he would be risking his career if he continued to play. He had season-ending surgery on his shoulder the next day.

"That's the most major injury I've had thus far," Brown said. "It was kind of tough considering that my team was really shitting on me at the time. They didn't have my back at all with having surgery. They wanted me to continue playing and finish the season, which made no sense because we had no shot in hell of going to the playoffs. Me and my agent feel like they knew what was really going on, but they didn't say that."

The relationship continued to sour going into the offseason and the 49ers started shopping Brown during the 2018 NFL Draft. They dealt him and the 143rd pick to the Patriots for the 95th pick. Ironically, the deal aligned with a premonition his father had.

“The Super Bowl was in Atlanta so I had told him, ‘Boy, you gon’ play in that Super Bowl,’” Reginald said. “The night the draft was going on, he calls me and he says, ‘Aye pop, I think I’m finna get traded.’ When they finally announced it, I said, ‘Well, that dream looking real clear.’”

Brown felt betrayed by the 49ers but didn’t take a negative attitude with him when he reported to the Patriots. It became clear it was his best opportunity going into a contract year. He’d almost certainly make the playoffs and would have the chance to block for Tom Brady.

The Patriots drafted offensive tackle Isaiah Wynn, but a huge question remained at left tackle. Although Brown had only logged two career starts at the position, he set his sights on starting.

“They told me from Day 1, ‘We’re not gon’ give you anything; you got to earn the spot,’ which I did in camp,” Brown said. “I ain’t gon’ lie to you: I kind of felt like the man. For real. Just because I was able to go in there and play left tackle full time for Tom Brady. This is Tom Brady we’re talking about. ... It’s that much more motivation for all five guys up front. Shit, we did a hell of a job.”

Brown started all 16 games and was a key part of one of the best offensive lines. The Patriots finished 11-5 and beat the Rams 13-3 in the Super Bowl. While Brown’s contract was up, there was reciprocal interest in agreeing to a new deal.

He loved the organization, he and his family loved Boston and he loved winning. There was just one issue: money.

“It really was heartbreaking for both sides, honestly,” Brown said. “But they couldn’t afford me and the Raiders came with an irrefutable offer. And I felt like it just fit the whole story of the greatest underdog. ... Plus, I had to go get mine. When I got drafted, my signing bonus was $50,000. California taxes took half of that. I got two kids and my son was just born that Tuesday of Super Bowl week. I had to go get mine.”

The junior college product and seventh-round pick felt he’d been marginalized his entire life. Then, he felt disrespected by the team that drafted him and responded by winning a Super Bowl with his new team. He was changing teams again, but it was his choice. It was a storyline he couldn’t refuse.

“I was crying,” Reginald said. “I’m glad the Raiders invested in him. I’ve always told him that he was the best out there. I always put that in his head to accept nothing less than that. So when all this started to come together, I was just overjoyed. I’m thankful for the opportunity. It was well-deserved.

“He took the long road.”

In the midst of Brown’s on-the-field ascension, he was named as a defendant in a civil lawsuit filed last October by former girlfriend Diorra Marzette-Sanders that accused him of multiple instances of domestic abuse. He denied the allegations on social media.

According to Marzette-Sanders’ attorney, Waukeen McCoy, the lawsuit is still pending. McCoy said a hearing has been held and another is scheduled for July 22. An NFL spokesman told The Athletic that “the matter remains under review.”

Brown, who's still at his offseason home in Texas, isn't in a rush to get to Las Vegas with plans for training camp, the preseason and the regular season unclear. He'll relocate when it's time, but it's unclear exactly when that'll be.

"I just really hope that everybody makes smart decisions from top to bottom and not just use us as guinea pigs for a dollar," Brown said. "(They need to) really consider us as human beings and family men. Because the risk is not just us; we got to go home and see our families, if we can. We don't even know. It's just a lot of questions out there, man. I just really want them to make sure everything is safe and they're not just doing this to line their pockets."

Brown has also had his attention drawn to the social justice movement stemming from the death of George Floyd while in the custody of Minneapolis police officers in May. Given his ties to Georgia, the deaths of Ahmaud Arbery, who was killed while jogging in February in Glynn County, Ga., by three White men, and Rayshard Brooks, who was shot by police in Atlanta in June while at a drive-thru, particularly hit home.

"Just me being a Black male splitting time growing up between South Georgia and Texas, you can just imagine that I've seen and experienced some of the worst prejudiced shit that you could think of," Brown said. "I'm on board with the movement. I definitely know it's time for change. It's been time for change. I just hope that we can take strides in the right direction so that the next generation is not having to deal with all this."

"I got a daughter. I got a son. Hopefully, they don't have to deal with that. If getting police out of our communities is what they feel is right, I'm with that. Even though my dad is a police officer and that's how he was able to provide for our family, if that's what the new world holds, then I'm all for it." Whenever his focus returns to football, Brown has auspicious personal goals: He wants to win another championship, land another huge contract and make the Hall of Fame. No one knows whether playing a full season will be feasible, but Brown has put in the work to ensure that his — and the Raiders' — first year in Las Vegas is a strong one. There's a yearning for the opportunity to see the results.

"I'm like everybody else: I can't wait to see — if he's able to play — what's gon' transpire," Reginald said. "He's really been working hard. He's motivated. I'm just hoping we can have a season and see where it's gon' end up."

'He is a diamond': How wrestling helped shape Raiders DT Maliek Collins

By Vic Tafur

August 23, 2020

HENDERSON, Nev. — Technique wasn't a word you would have used when talking about Maliek Collins' high school wrestling career. State championship-winning wrestling career, to be clear.

Collins didn't pick up the sport until his junior year.

"A lot of those kids have been wrestling since they were knee-high," Center High (Kansas City) football coach Bryan DeLong said in a phone interview on Saturday. "Maliek didn't have all the moves like they did. He just threw people around. ...

"He would grab on to them, pick them up, slam them down on the mat and then they would try to run away from him and he would chase them."

Collins was 49-3 that first season and then 48-0 his senior season, winning the heavyweight state title. He pinned 82 of his opponents, but today the Raiders' new defensive tackle just has to use his wrestling skills to get around or through offensive linemen.

"It's big for leverage and like counter-rushing and things like that," Collins said Thursday. "But it also ... gets your hands out here so it makes your chest more available. So I try to get off of that since it's more of a grab and stop, especially when you're a heavyweight. So I got to keep my hands tight."

And the 6-foot-2, 303-pound Collins also has to carry some heavy expectations from the coaching staff. Coach Jon Gruden has said that the former Cowboy is "the key to the defense" and defensive coordinator Paul Guenther has compared Collins to Bengals All-Pro defensive tackle Geno Atkins.

"That three-technique in this defense has to raise hell," Gruden said last week, "and (Collins) has got to do it for us."

Collins is fine with Gruden talking him up and raising the bar.

"Yeah, he's singled me out a lot, actually," Collins said. "but I'm ready for it and he's demanding just like coach (Rod) Marinelli. And I know that's what I have to be."

As the defensive lineman who typically lines up on the outside shoulder of a guard and tries to explode into the gap, Collins has heard all about the great three-technique players from Marinelli, defensive line coach. The two were together in Dallas as well.

"Three-technique, you got to be the dog," Collins said. "You got to be the key. He has to establish things with his get-off. I mean, Keith Millard, that was the first one that I was introduced to from Marinelli. And then John Randle; of course, Warren Sapp. ...

"Not to say that I'm on their level yet or anything like that, but those are the people that I strive to be like or be more like."

Well, Collins did finish the 2019 season with an NFL-best 31 pass-rush wins against double teams, per ESPN.

Marinelli doesn't disagree with Gruden's assertion that the defense will go as Collins goes.

"Understanding that under-tackle position carries a lot of weight," Marinelli said Thursday. "The impact sometimes, you can get doubled a lot. You can get chipped a lot with a double. That creates, maybe, other opportunities for players. So it's not about numbers, it's about how you impact the game and the hustle, the effort and all those things. That's a centerpiece."

People assume that Marinelli brought Collins with him when he came from Dallas. But it was more about Gruden wanting his old friend on his staff and then quickly bringing up Collins.

"I think he's had a good, solid career in Dallas, but I think the climb is still ahead of him," Marinelli said. "I think he's got to keep working to get better and top it off. I think that's one of the things Coach Gruden saw, really."

"Coach Gruden did a great job of the evaluation of Maliek and stayed on it and stayed on it, and I had the relationship with him, obviously, but that was Coach Gruden selling it, doing it all. That one was all him. ... I love the guy, I'm glad he's here."

Collins, 25, signed a one-year, $6 million contract, betting on himself to have a big season, and lost 22 pounds so that he can be even quicker inside the trenches.

"I kind of just told myself I needed to be more disciplined on my diet," Collins said.

He sent a photo of himself in his new Raiders gear to DeLong.

"I asked him, 'What, do you have a waistband on? Where did that gut go?'" DeLong said, laughing. "He looked like a million dollars."

Collins is indeed back at his high school playing weight (though he had to wrestle at 285).

"He is a diamond," DeLong said. "He is a great kid. He is the best player I ever had and one of the best workers. ... What makes it a great story is that Maliek didn't play varsity until his junior year, and he was good that year but not dominant by any stretch."

"But he was a weight-room guy and did everything we asked, and we asked him to wrestle."

The sport really helped him turn the corner in football and soon Nebraska came calling.

"The speed, his hands, the toughness, the leverage, his ability to get low with his hips," DeLong said. "Senior year in football, he was lights out, a man among boys. He also played right tackle for us and he would drive young men 10-15 yards back play after play. You would feel sorry for the other kid."

DeLong had to catch himself. He is a proud Chiefs fan, as was Collins growing up, and Collins attacking a certain quarterback doesn't sit right.

"I had to warn him," DeLong said. "You better be careful, Maliek. You break off young Pat (Mahomes) and you won't ever be able to come home."

A second chance at finishing: Why an entire SC community is rooting for Bryan Edwards

By Andrew Ramspacher

September 16, 2019

CONWAY— Claudine Schofield's official title at Conway High School is community liaison and at-risk coordinator. For short, though, you can call her Mom, Auntie or Scho. She's the smiling presence of these hallways, a friendly face who seems like she hasn't met a stranger in 25 years in education.

A break in her morning allowed Schofield to play tour guide in late August. She made one phone call, knocked on the doors to three classrooms and stopped the principal to help a reporter go through a time machine.

It was 2006 and Homer Schofield was coaching a local flag football team that featured a talented receiver.

"He was a very polite and mild-mannered young man," Homer Schofield said, his words coming through the speaker phone in Claudine's office. "His favorite phrase to me was, 'Throw me the ball.'"

It was 2012 and Carlton Terry, then offensive coordinator at Conway High School, was watching the Tigers' future on a middle school field.

"Every time he touched the field, he did something special," Terry said while Rick James' "Super Freak" played quietly from his computer. "Other than his size, his ability really stood out as a man among boys at that time. So we felt like he would be special when he hit high school."

It was August 2015, Conway was coming off a 2-9 year and Tigers wide receivers coach Steve Parsley was looking for a sign of change in a preseason game.

"First play, it was a punt return and my man took that punt return to the house," Parsley said while Schofield briefly took over his math class. "He made two, three cuts down the sideline and I said, 'That's it right there. Bryan is the truth.'"

"He sparked our season."

It was present day and Yaminah Jordan paused her English class to greet Schofield — and sum up a few hours of reporting.

"When you say Bryan around here, people's hearts are going to fill up a little bit because they want to tell you something and they want to tell you what their contact has been with Bryan," Jordan said.

"That's why we all root for him and that's why we're all so proud of him."

"I never even taught the kid, but he walked these halls as a stand-up kid. We're very, very proud."

Bryan Edwards is five games into his senior season at South Carolina. In a perfect world, he ends it an SEC champion, as the school's all-time leading receiver and he ends it healthy.

A trip to Edwards' hometown reveals that Conway's people don't have to think hard to relive their best times with one of their favorite sons. Edwards is still talked about like he never left, like his respectful self still succeeds in class during the days and his athletic self still dominates on Friday nights.

"The only problem we ever had with Bryan," said former Conway coach Chuck Jordan, "was as a senior going into the playoffs, he hurt his knee."

What is Edwards looking for in his final games as a Gamecock? Why did he put the NFL on hold for a year? Perhaps it's the chance to finally complete a career his way.

"It's still in the back of my mind," Edwards said. "So obviously I'm going to go out here and I'm going to try and be real aggressive in closing out those goals I have."

'MINOR SETBACK FOR A MAJOR COMEBACK'

The mood changes a bit when the Bryan Edwards Time Machine is rolled back to Oct. 23, 2015.

Conway was 7-1 and ranked among Class AAAA's top 10 when it visited South Florence. State title aspirations were real for the Tigers, mostly due to having the best player on the field each week.

"Bryan's biggest attribute other than just being so good was that people had to start double-teaming him because he would just take over football games," said Peyton Derrick, Conway's quarterback at the time. "Our goal was always to get Bryan as many touches as possible."

Such a strategy came with constant adjustment. Defenses would always focus on Edwards, so what would Conway do to throw off opponents? How could the Tigers diversify Edwards' role to ensure their top play-maker kept his reputation?

Parsley won't soon forget a particular tweak he made before the South Florence game.

"I believe Bryan is an inside receiver because I like big, physical receivers and I had him inside the whole entire time," Parsley said. "And it's like I made a decision. I asked him, 'Bryan, you want to play some outside?'

Yes, sir.'

"And he went and played outside."

That's the position Edwards started from when he tore his meniscus. The in-game injury came without contact.

"It was a freak thing," Terry said. "We were lined up 2 by 2 and Bryan took off to go into a route and he just falls down. Of course we panicked. Our best player has gone down. We were hoping for the best, but kind of preparing for the worst."

A decorated career didn't get its proper ending. After 188 catches, 2,562 yards and 32 touchdowns in a Conway uniform — some numbers just short of passing Junior Hemingway in the school record books — he couldn't help the Tigers in their push for a championship in his final year. They lost in the first round of the playoffs on a night when Edwards was honored at halftime with his U.S. All-American Bowl jersey. He was on crutches.

“That season will always replay in my mind because it happened in Game 9,” Parsley said. “And we were on a roll because it was, ‘When in doubt, just throw it to Bryan.’ Bryan might be triple-covered and Peyton would find him and needle it in there, touchdown.”

“So that was the one season that’s always going to replay in my mind. What could have happened if Bryan would have been healthy?”

The question still lingers for Edwards, too. The kid who was offered major college scholarships at 13 — and originally committed to USC at 16 — feels he left high school missing something.

“It was real tough for me,” Edwards said. “I was approaching some records, some Conway High School all-time receiving records and I didn’t get a chance to finish that because of a knee injury.”

“I don’t know (if Conway would have won a state championship), but I feel like we would have definitely contended. We had a great team that year and we definitely left a lot on the table.”

Schofield was Conway’s career specialist when Edwards was there. She’s since changed titles and offices. The first decoration she put up in her new place was a laminated newspaper article from August 2015. The Sun News headline: “With key players back, Tigers eye winning ways.” The photo: Edwards.

Schofield calls Edwards a “bonus son,” a nod to their tight relationship that goes back to when Lance, her actual son, played flag football with Edwards.

When Edwards couldn’t play football anymore for Conway, Schofield noticed a naturally reserved teenager grow more muted.

“He was real quiet during that time,” Schofield said. “And men tend to internalize a lot, so he was a little more quiet than normal. Because getting hurt sucked. I told him, ‘Man, listen you’re going to be great. I’m excited about your future. Minor setback for a major comeback. You gotta know the comeback’s going to be real.’”

“And he’d say, ‘Yes ma’am. Yes ma’am.’”

SIGHTS SET ON HAPPY ENDING

Edwards re-committed to South Carolina after Will Muschamp replaced Steve Spurrier as head coach. He was back on the field for USC’s 2016 opener, catching a game-best eight passes for 101 yards as the Gamecocks won at Vanderbilt.

He’s missed one game in three-plus college seasons, a fact that’s allowed him to climb Carolina’s record books. With at least seven opportunities remaining, Edwards is within reach of becoming USC’s all-time leader in receptions (needs 18 more), yards (needs 466 more) and touchdowns (needs five more).

Edwards’ pursuit of these milestones officially continued Jan. 8 when he announced he’d be returning for his senior season. (CBS had projected him as a top-90 prospect for the 2019 draft.)

“My reason for coming back was I felt like I left a lot on the table,” Edwards said. “And I feel like the best version of me wasn’t out there last year and I feel like that’s what I’m going to put out there this year.”

He then playfully told a reporter to “buy a ticket” when asked what the best version of Bryan Edwards looks like. In Conway, though, such a purchase isn’t necessary. They know how to spot peak Edwards. They saw it in 2015.

Four years later, they’re seeking the happy ending one of their favorite sons deserves.

“That senior year probably did replay in his mind,” Parsley said, “just to come back and close the door on his high school-college career. To me, it felt like it was unfair that he didn’t get the things like finishing as Conway High School’s top receiver and closing the door and moving on to Carolina.

How Raiders DE Clelin Ferrell spent 18 weeks making sure you don't recognize him

By Vic Tafur

May 31, 2020

"Hey Cle," Mark Hall yelled across the gym. "Am I allowed to tell him your weight?"

There was a pause as a reporter waited on the other end of the line.

The answer came back: 275.

Clelin Ferrell, after some thought, decided not to be interviewed about his 18-week workout regimen in Miami this offseason. The Raiders defensive end said he would rather lay low for now, and let his play speak for him later.

Plus, he has Hall, his personal defensive line coach, to handle my questions. (I don't think Ferrell knew I was calling Hall.)

The 6-foot-4 Ferrell bulked up and put on 13 pounds after an uneven rookie season that saw the No. 4 overall pick finish with 4.5 sacks, five batted passes and 24 solo tackles.

"He's lean and mean and running pretty good," Hall said in a phone interview Wednesday. "We had a really good offseason and I know he can't wait to get to Las Vegas and put that product on the field."

Last season, Ferrell played at 262 pounds, and that doesn't count a food-poisoning bout in Week 5 in London that robbed him of 15 pounds. The last time we saw Ferrell, in January, he vowed to be a different player when he reported back to the team facility.

"You probably won't even recognize me. Seriously," Ferrell told me then.

OK, you probably will be able to recognize him, unless you're looking just at his hips and his lower body.

"We made sure he didn't lose any speed with the weight gain," Hall said. "And he is using his hips more — that's something he didn't use a lot last year. He is better able to attack angles now. He understands the angles better now."

While you binge-watched "Ozark" and "Money Heist," Ferrell was spending a lot of his downtime studying other masterminds — offensive linemen.

"You can't just go into the game and do what you want to do, you have to set everything up based on what they give you and have a plan for how you want to attack them," Hall said. "His defensive line IQ has definitely gone up."

Hall is a former player and coach at Grambling State who met Ferrell in his sophomore year at Clemson, as Hall was working with several players coming out of college.

Ferrell worked out with Hall a little bit last offseason in San Jose before committing to the 18-week grind this spring.

Ferrell has been joined by 49ers defensive end Arik Armstead — who Hall lived with and trained last season — and recently traded defensive tackle DeForest Buckner, as well as former Clemson teammates Christian Wilkins and Dexter Lawrence.

“Last year was more of an introduction to Cle,” said Hall, who has been doing this for 15 years now. “Then last season, I noticed some deficiencies in Cle’s game and the Raiders played him inside some, too. So he needed to put on some more pounds, especially in his lower body, and we polished up his pass-rush game.

“We also wanted to give him a better understanding of what offensive linemen are presenting to him, and how to finish against them. Clean his game up ... speed, agility, movement.”

Ferrell and the other defensive linemen were practically sheltering in place at the gym in Miami (owned by John Bosa, Joey and Nick’s father).

“Due to the pandemic, we actually had more time to fine-tune things,” Hall said.

Ferrell has worked with the group four days a week, Monday-Tuesday and Thursday-Friday, with Wednesdays set aside for recovery and film work. The players get the weekends off.

Eighteen weeks is a lot of time to plan out Ferrell’s weight gain and hip exercises, but those weren’t even the first thing on Hall’s to-do list.

“His first step was the No. 1 thing I wanted to work on,” Hall said. “How to use his power more, his approach to the offensive linemen and also his top-of-the-rush finish.”

Ferrell brought a team with him — his own chef, massage therapist and flexibility coach — to maximize the re-building process and ensure a better second season.

“Clelin is a very serious guy when it comes to his offseason and he has a budget set aside for that,” Hall said. “He just turned 23 (on May 17) but he’s very dialed to what he needs to do to be successful in this game.”

Ferrell is leaving Miami this weekend — he will continue to work with Hall year-round — and will soon be moving to Las Vegas. He has been meeting online with teammates and new Raiders defensive line coach Rod Marinelli, and is excited to get on the practice field when the leagues’ pandemic shutdown is over and coaches are allowed to get their hands on players again. (That could be in Napa, if training camp is still held there, or more likely in Henderson, Nev., at the soon-to-be-completed facility.) While the rest of the Raiders’ rookie class of 2019 made a big splash last season, Ferrell admittedly dealt with some jitters and growing (and stomach) pains. He has worked up a lot of sweat the last four and a half months to make sure that he has a much bigger impact in his second season.

“His work ethic is unmatched,” Hall said. “It’s crazy. I am working with all three of the Clemson guys, and it’s so obvious why they won national championships. Their willingness to learn and work and practice is crazy. We’re out here four hours at a time in this Miami heat, which is no joke, and I have to tell Cle to stop.” It turns out, we didn’t need to interrupt Ferrell from his workouts to talk about them after all.

Adopted as a child, Raiders' Alec Ingold wants to help unite other families

By Tashan Reed

July 20, 2020

For Raiders fullback Alec Ingold, there was no mystery as a child to the fact that he was adopted. He's biracial, Black and White, while his mom, Chris, dad, Pat, and sister, Sydnie, are White.

"Growing up that way, it was never a big secret or anything," Ingold said. "I was pretty comfortable with it by a very young age. I love my parents. It's mom and dad and it's nothing different, but at the same time, I always knew I looked different than the rest of my family. I never really had identity issues with that, but it was always there."

Regardless, there were some tough moments. It would hit him late at night while he was alone in bed that he didn't have a relationship with anyone whom he was related to by blood. He didn't have the same biological connection that all his friends and most others enjoyed.

Ingold eventually adjusted, which was made easier because of how he was raised in Green Bay, Wis. He never had an issue in the community related to his race and his parents emphasized the importance of knowing who he is as a human being before he even considered his skin color. He also forged a strong relationship with Sydnie and had an expansive network of friends that welcomed him.

Green Bay also sparked his love for football. His Sundays were built around two things: church and the Packers. The players were his superheroes and drove him to pursue the career he has today.

"It was about as picture perfect as you could imagine," Ingold said. "I just realized how fortunate I was to be placed in that family that was going to love me so much unconditionally and support me through everything I've been through."

Ingold, 24, has spoken to his parents and sister through text messages, phone calls and FaceTime calls multiple times a week since relocating to Las Vegas in mid-March. While he doesn't know his biological father, he's had contact with his biological mother. The Ingolds are tight-knit and genuinely love and care about one another. That sustained bond was the driving force behind his decision to partner with AdoptUSKids on July 14.

"I know for a fact that there's kids out there going through the same things I'm going through," Ingold said. "Whether they were adopted early or have recently been adopted, you have that self-realization that can be a little bit of a struggle sometimes."

AdoptUSKids is a nonprofit national project that works to help children and teenagers in foster care get adopted by "safe, loving, permanent" families. It simultaneously educates families about foster care and adoption while providing child welfare professionals with information and support. Additionally, it maintains the lone federally funded photo listing service used to connect waiting children with families in the country.

Through his partnership with the project, Ingold has become a part of its mission to raise public awareness about the need for foster and adoptive families and assists states, territories and tribes in recruiting, engaging, developing and supporting foster and adoptive families.

In the wake of the COVID-19 pandemic and the ongoing social justice movement surrounding the recent deaths of Black people at the hands of law enforcement, Ingold felt moved to use his platform. That's when he came upon AdoptUSKids, which he hopes others will use to do the same.

"I'm just hoping to speak to both sides: The kids that are in foster care right now and the kids that have been adopted, but also the prospective families," Ingold said. "That support system and that communication, everyone's life can improve from that. I just hope I can be an example for some kids going through tough times and help them understand that you can reach out and trust family members that aren't blood related. They can be your best friends. They can be more than you can even imagine.

"My family means the world to me. There's a lot of kids out there right now searching for that. Hopefully, being an NFL football player and opening up in that light will be able to show them that there's really so many opportunities and blessings that come with being a part of a family like that."

Ingold, who graduated from Wisconsin in 2019 with a personal finance degree, doubled down on his good deed by speaking to a group of Las Vegas high school students through the UNLV Young Executive Scholars Hospitality & Tourism Program, a four-week summer program targeting under-resourced youth in the Clark County School District. Ingold talked about his life and journey and stressed the importance of financial literacy.

"I'm trying to speak to as many kids that'll listen to try and give them some insight on what I've learned throughout my life," Ingold said. "Las Vegas is a community that's definitely going to be one and the same with the Raiders. Me and a lot of other teammates are trying to speak to the community about topics that are near and dear to our hearts so that we can create this relationship."

Ingold has also remained active physically, whether it's running in random parks or participating in the Raiders' unofficial 30-player workouts in Las Vegas. It's not convenient, but it's nothing compared to the adversity that he experienced early in life. He wants to be consistently accountable and reliable in his second season, so he's got to keep putting the work in. Dozens of other Raiders players have followed suit.

"I'm proud of working hard when things are tough," Ingold said. "A lot of guys that have moved out here, we've kind of found our rhythm and what it takes to work together. It's definitely bringing us together on the team, no doubt, with the move and the pandemic and an unknown season."

Ingold's involvement in the community in the meantime isn't a front. His desire to help others stems from how Chris and Pat helped him as a child.

"I've been blessed with the decisions people made to step out of their comfort zone and make that adoption decision from my biological parents to my (adoptive) parents," Ingold said. "There's so much in this world that we can offer one another. Any difficulties or adversity that I've been through, I'm going to try and share it with others so that they can get through their own adversities. If it's relatable, great. If they can take one thing away from whenever I'm speaking, awesome. But at the end of the day, it's just opening my heart up and letting people do what they need with it.

"Hopefully, we can all be better because of it."

LAS VEGAS REVIEW-JOURNAL

Raiders fullback Alec Ingold on a quest to be the best

By Vincent Bonsignore

March 28, 2020

MADISON, Wisconsin— With no safety net to protect Alec Ingold, the Raiders' second-year fullback, Brian Bott asked him if he needed assistance. Bott wanted to make sure Ingold was safe from a potentially dangerous fall if he didn't stick the landing.

Ingold, his face blush from nearly 30 minutes of nonstop work at Sports AdvantEdge gym, was having none of it. As he sized up the 4½ feet of stacked boxes in front of him, he grunted something along the lines of "get lost" to Bott, the personal trainer he's enlisted to help make sure his second NFL season is even better than his first.

Failure is not an option.

"No shortcuts," Ingold said earlier as he dragged himself into the gym. It was cold, wet and windy outside, your typical early March morning in Wisconsin. And it wasn't much warmer or inviting in Bott's workout facility. The whole place reeks of hard work.

What it lacks in fanciness, though, it more than makes up for in practicality and efficiency. A turf area provides sufficient space for short sprints and agility drills. Alongside it is a weight area consisting of all the equipment needed to build and maintain the sort of armored body necessary to function at the highest level of professional football.

The pictures hanging on the wall of past and present Bott trainees — Houston Texans star J.J. Watt, Seattle Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson and former Cleveland Browns star left tackle Joe Thomas among them — are proof that his means and methods work.

Ingold, who grew up 137 miles away in Green Bay and went to college at the University of Wisconsin, has the resources to go to any gym he wants. But he chooses AdvantEdge.

"Everything I need is right here," he said.

He wants to be the best fullback in the NFL. The journey to get there starts here most mornings at the crack of dawn.

Riding shotgun is Bott, the former strength and conditioning coach at the University of Wisconsin. The road map he's drawn up involves a five-day-a-week workout regimen designed to enhance Ingold's strength, speed, change of direction ability and quickness. Supplementing that is a strict diet inspired by the eating program used by The Rock in preparation for his role as Hercules.

A typical workout runs 90 minutes. The exercises and drills are divided into six or seven individual circuits, with each rep followed by a short recovery period.

"Catch your breath and go onto the next set," Ingold said.

The fast-paced series of explosive reps and rest periods mimic the start-and-stop nature of football. The format serves two purposes: As Ingold does his body work, he is also getting in his conditioning.

The emphasis on this day is lower-body strength, which is why Ingold was in a full sitting position trying to muster enough power and explosion to scale all those boxes in front of him.

The focus the following day will be on change of direction, a vital component for a ball carrier like Ingold. Already a big, tough, physical runner able to bully his way in short-yardage situations, the former high school quarterback can be even more effective if he can make more people miss.

It'll be on to a linear speed the next day, followed by another day devoted to change of direction. Ingold supplements his training days with six meals and 30 grams of whey protein and berries right before bed. He cuts back to four meals on nontraining days, plus the bedtime whey protein and berries snack.

Ingold began splitting time between Wisconsin and Las Vegas after recently closing on a new house in Southern Nevada. The coronavirus obviously threw a monkey wrench into things. But Ingold and a handful of his Raiders teammates found a Las Vegas gym that doubles as a therapy center. That means it can remain open during the shutdown as an essential business.

"We got pretty lucky," Ingold said.

Becoming a role model

His work ethic and discipline were instilled in him by his parents, Pat and Chris, while growing up in the shadow of Green Bay's storied Lambeau Field.

It's a family pairing for which divine intervention played a major role.

Alec was put up for adoption shortly after his biological mother learned she was pregnant. His maternal grandfather died when his mother was young, and she understood the difficulties raising a child as a single parent. She wanted better for her soon-to-be-born son. Upon relocating to Green Bay, she enlisted the help of an agency to find a stable family environment for him.

Pat and Chris Ingold were on a waiting list for adoption when they were put in touch with Alec's biological mother. Within a short time of their first meeting, a strong bond was established.

"She was like, you are it. This is the family I want him to be with," Alec's adoptive mother, Chris, remembers. "So it was definitely out of love."

For as long as Ingold can remember, his parents have been upfront and honest about his adoption. In fact, they encouraged him to meet his biological mother, who they remained connected to over the years, when he was in the third grade.

Only vague memories remain from the one-time meeting. But Ingold has no lingering desire to reconnect.

"For me, my mom is my mom and my dad is my dad and the family that raised me is my family," Ingold said. "I am so comfortable with my family and my situation. I'm very, very, fortunate to be in that situation."

Not that Ingold didn't experience moments of uncertainty and questions, including how much different he, as the child of biracial maternal parents, looked from his Irish-American adoptive parents and younger sister, Sydnie. Let alone that he was towering over his 5-foot-4-inch mother and 5-6 father by the time he reached fifth grade.

"I mean, there's night's where you go to sleep and you can get all caught up in like, no one wanted me, or I'm not blood-related to anyone that I know," Ingold said. "And there's that loss of like, you know, you see your friends and their parents and they follow in their footsteps. So it's different because you're with people that love you more than anyone or anything else. But at the same time, it's like, you can't see that reflection in the mirror. You can't visually see that connection 100 percent. So it's definitely a struggle to kind of just accept you for who you are, in your own skin."

As his career blossoms, Ingold hopes to use his NFL platform to be a role model for kids growing up in similar circumstances. "The older you get, the more you understand the whole situation," Ingold said. "It's something where in the future, I want to get involved in helping other kids deal with that."

Becoming a man

The NFL seemed an unlikely scenario three years ago when Ingold got benched heading into his junior year at Wisconsin. It was a humbling experience for a player who led the Badgers in touchdowns as a true freshman and split fullback duties as a sophomore, only to barely play as a junior. It left a bitter taste. But the more Ingold looked for other people to blame for the demotion, the more he realized he had only himself to blame.

"I wasn't being accountable," said Ingold, "It was at a point in my life where I had to look in the mirror and be like, 'Who am I going to be?' Like, 'What am I going to stand for?' "

With his senior year rapidly approaching and needing to commit himself like never before, Ingold pulled out a piece of paper and wrote down three questions:

Who am I?

Who do I want to be?

How am I going to get there?

He wanted his starting job back, first and foremost. But he also wanted to put himself on the NFL radar and get invited to the Senior Bowl and NFL scouting combine.

And he wanted to get drafted.

"So, I wrote down on a big sheet of paper every single thing I was going to do, from that summer to fall camp all the way through my senior year," Ingold said. "I wrote down all my goals. I put it on my wall where I'd see it every day."

The change was apparent.

"That's really when I knew that he grew up," said his father. "He was really faced with some adversity, and he chose to fight. We're extremely proud of the decision he made and the effort he put forth, day in and day out."

Ingold eventually achieved all of but one of his objectives. In spite of winning back his starting job and opening the eyes of the NFL and performing well at the Senior Bowl, where he worked under Jon Gruden and the Raiders coaching staff, and making the most of his scouting combine experience, last April's draft came and went without his name being called.

"One of the worst days of my life," he said. "You do everything right for such a long period of time, you're healthy, you're lucky, people are telling you you're the best fullback. Then you don't get drafted and it's like — I mean hindsight is 20/20 because absolutely the best thing that could have happened was me going to the Raiders — but it definitely didn't feel that way on draft day."

Once again Ingold looked himself in the mirror and asked himself: Was the goal to get drafted? Or was the goal to be an NFL player?

"And that was what helped me realize that, like, today wasn't really the goal," Ingold said thinking back to draft day. "The goal is September 1st and being on the active roster and earning a starting job. That's the goal. So it's almost like my vision grew. I was able to see who I really wanted to be. ... I was like, OK, so this is what I thought we were going after, but actually it's about something much bigger."

Living a dream

He not only made the Raiders, who scooped him up as a free agent, he became a key part of their short-yardage packages and a dependable blocker. Along the way, he got to return to Green Bay to play at Lambeau Field, the sacred football ground he worshipped as a kid.

Ingold had been on the field twice before — once at his cousin's wedding reception when he was in middle school and the other time as a star player at nearby Bay Port High School.

His family lost track of him during the wedding reception, only to finally find him alone in a dark room overlooking the field. As his dad put an arm around him, Alec said, "Wouldn't it be cool if I played here one day?"

Needless to say, it was a special moment when Alec took the field with the Raiders last October. In fact, Ingold had to take a second or two to collect himself and refocus on the task at hand.

His father can relate.

"There aren't many moments in life where you're standing up and you have to put your hands on your knees and just say wow," Pat Ingold said. "It was just unbelievable."

Ingold has his sights set on so much more, for himself and the Raiders as they begin their new life in Las Vegas. As a member of a deep rookie class that includes Josh Jacobs, Clelin Ferrell, Hunter Renfrow, Maxx Crosby and Trayvon Mullen, the younger generation of Raiders want to put their stamp on the storied franchise.

Bott wants to help him get there. In some ways Bott didn't just find a willing pupil in Ingold but also a kindred spirit. Right down to their taste in music, which some days includes the hard-driving rock that Bott grew up with back in the day.

"You can't listen to rap all the time," Ingold said, smiling.

Seconds after dismissing Bott's offer to spot him, the 6-1, 240-pound Ingold explodes into the air from a full seated position and, with legs slightly tucked, clears the padded boxes to easily stick the landing. As he confidently jumped back to the ground, smiling proudly at establishing a personal-best mark, Bott was waiting with a high-five.

'He's so motivated': Inside Raiders' TE Foster Moreau's recovery from a torn ACL

By Tashan Reed

August 28, 2020

Foster Moreau was among the group of more than 30 Raiders players who participated in unofficial player workouts in Vegas in June. The sessions provided the players the opportunity to stay active in an unprecedented offseason marred by the COVID-19 pandemic, but more importantly, it allowed them to build valuable team chemistry.

"I think just being with the guys and being around, having an understanding for who they are, not only as just football players but as people gives me a better understanding of what I am going into," receiver Zay Jones said Wednesday. "Just gelling, meshing with them, getting to know their families, getting to know their history and having that camaraderie, it really does translate onto the field. So now we're not just playing as individuals or playing for ourselves; we are playing for each other."

For Moreau, there was an additional layer of significance. His participation in the mock practices was another step forward as he continued to recover from the season-ending torn ACL he suffered last December. That time spent running routes at Olympia Sports Park was when he felt everything started to come together.

Just six months after surgery, he was already back at it with his teammates. The road to get to that point wasn't easy and was one he traversed largely on his own.

"I won't lie to you: It was difficult," Moreau said Monday. "But it puts you in a difficult situation where the guidance isn't really there every day. It's not an everyday-routine kind of thing. And that's what athletes and successful people thrive off of is to be able to monitor and veer their routine to cater it to the things that they need to do to be successful day in and day out."

The pandemic made it difficult for Moreau to meet up with people and stay on track with his recovery. He spent hours rehabbing by himself and self-monitoring the progress he made. He feels great now and has been a full participant throughout training camp, but it took a lot of work.

Despite his independent actions, Moreau still makes sure to credit those who helped him along the way. Raiders strength and conditioning coach A.J. Neibel and the training staff were his guiding force from afar throughout the process. When it came to the initial hands-on work, however, Moreau started elsewhere.

Moreau, who's from New Orleans and played at LSU from 2015-18, returned to his home state for his ACL surgery. Dr. Brent Bankston, who's LSU's orthopedic surgeon, conducted the surgery in Baton Rouge. From there, LSU director of athletic training Jack Marucci, associate athletic trainer Derek Calvert and the rest of the Tigers' training staff handled Moreau's day-to-day recovery. The second-year tight end's return to football was a multifaceted and unusual experience.

"It was tough, but I feel great," Moreau said. "And I think I'm ready to go."

Moreau was an overlooked recruit for most of his career at Jesuit High. He was “basically” a no-star prospect and was leaning toward Tulane when LSU had a scholarship available. The Tigers offered him in December 2014 after his senior season and he committed the following February, which gave him a bump to a three-star rating, according to the 247Sports Composite.

“He’s kind of self-made in that fact,” Marucci said Wednesday. “You look at a three-star athlete and they do carry a chip on their shoulder. They are one of the most productive groups in the NFL and most productive here when we bring them here. It really contributed to who he is today and how he was able to become very successful here.”

Moreau was able to process the game mentally at an elite level. He studied the game intensively and was able to figure out things quickly. Though he was mature and a hard worker from a football standpoint, he was immature as a person. He was comfortable with a scholarship at a Power 5 school in hand and relaxed. He was extremely talkative for a young player and wasn’t the best teammate.

That changed with time. Moreau grew to perform academically, stay active in the community, be a coachable player and treat everyone in the facility from the cafeteria workers to the head coach with respect. On the field, Moreau played 23 games his first two seasons and took over as the starting tight end his junior year. Going into his senior year he was awarded LSU’s No. 18 jersey, which is given to a high-character player considered one of the team’s leaders.

“It’s an honor to get that jersey,” Marucci said. “That goes through a lot of scrutiny. And there’s only so many guys that can wear that jersey; that’s a small club. For him to get that tells you who he is and what he’s done.”

Moreau was a full-time starter once again as a senior and caught 22 passes for 272 yards and two touchdowns. Those numbers aren’t notable, but he was also a strong blocker and displayed key intangibles.

“He’s a guy that left with a good name,” Marucci said. “Here’s a guy you can count on. They enjoyed having him here. When he was a young kid, I wouldn’t say that as much ... That’s what we love to see here. I think the program’s built that way, especially with Coach O (Ed Orgeron). He allows the young men to develop. There’s a standard of performance that we have and a standard of the type of players we want. We want smart and high-character players. And that’s what’s made our program. That’s why we won last year.”

Moreau was a part of building that winning culture and that was something that stood out to Raiders general manager Mike Mayock in the evaluation process for the 2019 NFL Draft. Moreau represented the type of player Mayock wanted and the Raiders took him in the fourth round.

The 6-foot-4, 250-pounder had a strong rookie season. He caught 21 passes for 174 yards and five touchdowns in 13 games. He started seven games and played a significant role in the offense before he tore his ACL in the Week 14 loss to the Titans. He learned valuable lessons despite the premature ending of his rookie campaign.

"A really good routine every day that I learned to follow and do a great job of understanding where I needed to allocate my time during the week in order to be successful on Sunday," Moreau said. "I carried that over and added some things into it. You learn to watch film better. You learn how to recover efficiently. You're not just doing ice and stim for the kicks of it or just because someone told you to go recover. You know exactly what you want to do during the week. And I think that's invaluable as a player: Knowing where to put your time."

Marucci and Bankston have been at LSU since 1996. In 2001, they developed an alternative method of conducting ACL surgery in which they use the hamstring tendon as their graft of choice. In a story that was published in The Advocate in 2018, Marucci said LSU had repaired 39 ACLs and had just one player suffer a re-tear, which is a 97 percent rate. He also estimated it took LSU players an average of only 4.8 months to return to practice from surgery.

"With the ACL, it's not about just trying to get guys back," Marucci said. "Yeah, you can get them back faster and more efficiently, but I think the main thing is you can get them into more of a normal state a lot sooner. What I mean by that is if you can get them more in a normal flow of what you do functionally, it's gonna pay benefits down the road. Because the longer you wait for all that, it's just going to hamper you at the end."

Their procedure allows them to be more aggressive early in the rehab process and get players back on the field sooner. Moreau was familiar with their history and, given his comfortability with the staff as one of their former athletes, decided to let them handle his surgery and rehab rather than going through the Raiders to do so.

It wasn't unusual for Moreau to be willing to go through an alternative recovery process. At LSU, he once had a case of mono, which can lead to the enlarging and potential rupture of the spleen. Moreau's spleen appeared large on an ultrasound, so he was held out of practice. Marucci theorized that since Moreau was a larger human than most, he had a larger spleen and that the organ had actually already returned to its normal size.

LSU held Moreau out anyway, but six months later he allowed Marucci to take another scan of his spleen and found that it was the same size. He was right, and the coaching staff let Moreau return to practice. That stuck with Moreau.

"He's very inquisitive on a lot of that stuff," Marucci said. "He was always very interested in trying to learn more. He understood that we went the extra yard in looking at all these different technologies. He knew we were going to have the latest and greatest of what's out there."

Moreau and Marucci received approval from Raiders head athletic trainer Rod Martin before Bankston conducted the surgery. The only issue was LSU was in the middle of its run to the 2019 national championship game. The team had to leave for the SEC Championship Game and College Football Playoff for prolonged periods of time, so Moreau had to begin his rehab elsewhere.

"He'd done some of his post-op care down in New Orleans at a physical therapy clinic," Calvert said. "Once we got back and everything got settled, he came and saw us pretty regularly on a daily basis doing his rehab."

Early on in Moreau's rehab, Neibel traveled to Baton Rouge. The COVID-19 pandemic had started to ramp up, but he toured LSU's facilities and checked in with Moreau. Moreau remained in constant communication with the Raiders throughout his rehab process. Within the first couple of months, Moreau was able to start jogging and running. Next came lifting weights. After that was football-specific workouts.

"He was able to use it as a break-in period to be able to get ready and get mentally confident for the season," Calvert said. "Because, in those phases of the rehab, you got to have the mental part. You got to feel comfortable doing those things. Whether it's that first time you jog or the first time you get in the weight room or that first time you catch routes on air with a quarterback, it's that mental process of being able to say, 'Hey, I feel comfortable doing this.'"

"It's good to see because he's such a hard worker. He's so motivated. He accepts the challenge. He wants to get better. He wants to do better. He wants to perfect his craft. He handled the rehab process like that. Like, 'All right, this is my next hurdle. This is my next thing. Let's attack this thing at 110 percent so I'm able to do those things sooner and get back onto the field.' It's a tribute to him and how well he did."

LSU was forced to shut down its campus due to COVID-19 in March. The staff couldn't get in the building any longer, which meant Moreau had to go back home to New Orleans.

"He was kind of in that last phase as he was returning before he had to report out there in Vegas," Calvert said. "He was doing a lot of his stuff at home. He's a hard-working and motivated kid; if he wasn't those things, you'd worry about it because he doesn't necessarily have all the supervision. ... I give him credit for that last stage before he was able to get back out there. He was forced to do that on his own just because of everything and how it went down with all the protocols."

Before Moreau reported to camp, he came out to Las Vegas for the player-run workouts. He felt back to being himself. There haven't been any hiccups throughout training camp. He hasn't had a limp. There's no swelling. He's looked smooth in individual and team workouts. The coaching staff hasn't attempted to hold him back, either. He's been full go.

Moreau is a part of a more crowded tight ends room this season. Darren Waller will be the starter once again, but the Raiders went out and signed former Cowboys tight end Jason Witten this offseason. Tight end Derek Carrier is also expected to make the roster. Moreau's spot on the roster is safe, but he'll have to push for playing time. Moreau has dealt with the situation by not setting benchmarks.

"Goals kind of work for certain people," Moreau said. "They really do. Sometimes you shatter expectations or you don't meet them. Shoot for the stars and you'll land on the moon. There's a bunch of little idioms that you can throw in there. But, for me, I really don't try to look at the future all that much. I really just kind of focus on the now and the present."

"I think that's the best way for me to live my life."

How Raiders RB Jalen Richard took ownership through marketing company Privé

By Tashan Reed

June 12, 2020

Jalen Richard stumbled upon a video on social media of former Minneapolis police officer Derek Chauvin pressing his knee into the back of George Floyd's neck last month. He had no prior context about the incident and didn't know that it'd already gone viral, but he found himself overwhelmed with emotion as the video unfolded and Floyd eventually died.

"It had me feeling some type of way," Richard told The Athletic over the phone Monday. "It's so many other names and so many other instances of black people getting killed by the police. It's crazy because it almost becomes the norm to see on social media, which is outrageous. That's why we're at the point where we at now."

Floyd's death has sparked nationwide protests, riots and discussion, but it also urged Richard toward making a contribution. He'd previously arranged a video chat with Real Talk Live, which is a platform that allows fans to interact with their favorite public figures, and decided to donate the resulting revenue to Floyd's family.

The company branded at the bottom of Richard's statement — Privé — is a marketing company that the Raiders running back co-owns with Rafiyq Cromwell. While the company started in March 2019, it's taken on a new form since Richard assumed partial ownership following the 2019 season.

"The overall focus of Privé is to provide full-service management and marketing solutions," Cromwell told The Athletic over the phone last week. "We want to make sure that we leave these guys with nothing to worry about but the game... We want everything to be relationship based and longevity based. We focus on brand partnership, brand management, concierge services, public relations, social media management and growth."

Richard went broke in the months after his rookie season in 2016. Since then, he's taken steps to improve his financial literacy and business savvy. His involvement with Privé and collaboration with Cromwell is another example of Richard's ongoing effort to solidify himself and his family for years to come.

"Football is what I do, but football is only gon' be here for so long," Richard said. "You got to set yourself up for things that you might want to do and might want to venture off to once you're done. It's only going to be a portion of our lives. I got a long life to live, so I'm just doing things and trying to be creative."

"For me, football has been everything to get me to this point. I understand that it's not gon' be there every day, so I got to find things that I like to do and things I enjoy. And, be an entrepreneur."

Growing up in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Cromwell saw things that most would consider abnormal. He was raised in what he described as the "inner city," but bounced around from the South side to the Hill District to the North side. He saw people get killed. He walked past "crack houses" on his way home from school. He refused, but was recruited by drug dealers. Many people he knew ended up either dead or in jail.

"I vividly remember that," Cromwell said. "I was one of the few that people never would let get into the streets or get into the BS. It was always a battle between myself or do I stay on the straight and narrow or do I fall victim to my surroundings and become a statistic?"

When Cromwell was only two years old, his father died of Leukemia. His mother Jackie Yvonne was still there to nurture, develop and protect him. She was also a provider. She's earned her bachelor's and master's degrees from Pittsburgh and is currently working on her Doctor of Philosophy degree. During Cromwell's childhood and adolescence, she was a Pittsburgh Public Schools principal. Now, she owns her own nutrition company: Jackie Yvonne Nutrition.

"Between her and my stepdad, they provided a great life for me," Cromwell said. "I grew up around some crazy stuff and I've seen a lot of crazy things, but my parents knew how to still provide a well-kept home for me in the midst of this chaos. I wouldn't be here today if it wasn't for my parents. My mom truly motivates me."

In order to further insulate Cromwell from his surroundings, Yvonne pushed him to get into sports. His granddad coached a baseball team in the neighborhood, so that became his first sport. He played on the same team as several future professional athletes such as DeJuan Blair, Greg Blair, DJ Kennedy and DeAndre Kane. Cromwell would later pick up football going into high school, but he needed some urging to do so.

"My mom actually had to force me to go to my first football practice," Cromwell said. "I didn't want to go, but then when I went, I fell in love with it."

Cromwell played defensive back and was good enough to draw interest from some Division I programs such as West Virginia, but he failed his ACT and had to enroll at the Community College of Allegheny County in 2009. While he couldn't play football, he trained Monday through Sunday with trainer DeWayne Brown, who owns Two Tenths Speed and Agility and has trained athletes such as Aaron Donald and Miles Sanders.

Eventually, Cromwell was able to transfer to Division II program Mercyhurst University in 2012, which is where his college football career began. Due to injury and a lack of playing time, he transferred to Slippery Rock, which is another Division II program, before the 2014 season.

When he was still in community college, Cromwell started his own brand called "Pick 6 Empire." It started as simply selling t-shirts, but by the time he enrolled at Mercyhurst it grew to where he had athletes at Grand Valley State, Edinboro University, Clarion University and Indiana University of Pennsylvania wearing his clothing. Once he got to Slippery Rock, he worked to formalize the idea.

"I knew that I wanted to create something for the underdogs to essentially get exposure to go to the next level with whatever that next level may be for them," Cromwell said. "It was building a familiarity within sports. By the time I got to Slippery Rock, it was a much more formulated idea.

"I knew no athlete was thinking that much about their business to create their own management and marketing company while they're playing."

Cromwell trained for his pro day at Corey Taylor Sports Performance in Louisville, Kentucky, after graduating from Slippery Rock in 2016. Richard, who'd just finished his career at Southern Mississippi, met him there while training for his own pro day.

"Rafiqq was coming in and grinding with us here and there," Richard said. "He wasn't there the entire time. He came and was doing little spurts. Whenever he came in, we just hit it off. We in that grind and I saw him working hard. You could respect that. We just hit it off from there."

Neither Cromwell nor Richard was drafted, but Richard made the Raiders' roster as an undrafted free agent. For Cromwell, it was clear his playing days were over, so he turned his full attention to marketing. He and former NFL defensive end Will Clarke came up together in Pittsburgh and remained in touch afterward, so he reached out.

"I said, 'Hey, man, let me take over your marketing. Give me a shot. Let me do something for you. You saw what I could do with my name and I'm not a huge name. You already in the NFL, just imagine what I can do for you,'" Cromwell recalled. "And he gave me a shot."

Cromwell didn't charge Clarke anything monthly, but made his money by taking a percentage of any deals that were agreed to as a result of his work. After a few successful partnerships, Clarke began to introduce Cromwell to his friends. From there, Cromwell worked with former NFL linebacker Terence Garvin, former Pittsburgh linebacker Todd Thomas and former CFL quarterback Greg McGhee.

In conjunction with working with his first clients, Cromwell also changed the name of "Pick 6 Empire" to "Dreamers Worldwide Sports Representation." Not long after he facilitated a deal between free agent NFL wideout Antonio Brown and Complex, he connected with Anth3m Sports Group CEO Joe Gilliland at Super Bowl 52. He joined as an athlete marketing representative in late 2017.

Cromwell worked with Cowboys receiver Michael Gallup, Saints cornerback Marshon Lattimore and free agent wideout Justin Hardy, but left Anth3m Sports Group in 2019 due to "personal reasons." That March, he launched Privé.

"I knew that I wasn't done with management and marketing," Cromwell said. "I just needed to have a fresh start with it."

Richard, who was coming off his fourth season with the Raiders, soon became the first athlete Cromwell signed. They'd remained in touch ever since training together in Louisville, but hadn't turned their relationship from a personal into a business one to that point. They met through Richard's agent, hashed out a contract and agreed to a marketing deal.

"He got at me about doing some marketing stuff for me and helping me with some off-the-field things," Richard said. "And it all sounded amazing to me: How everything was gon' go down and how they was gon' help me."

Midway through Cromwell and Richard's initial agreement, things started to pick up with Privé. It was then that Richard expressed interest in becoming part of ownership, but he wanted to continue to become more informed before jumping in.

"I was still expanding my knowledge on business, on money and looked at it as a great opportunity to collab with a friend," Richard said. "It was a good opportunity to work with a guy who I'd built a relationship with up to this point and to be able to do something that I want to get my hands in, which

Richard recognized that becoming part-owner while he was still an active player would be considered ahead of the curve and he wanted to be able to hit the ground running once it was formalized. He read business books, spoke to business owners who he’d met throughout his playing career and sought advice from mentors. Earlier this year, he earned a business certificate from Harvard Business School through its Crossover Into Business program.

It helped Richard’s comfortability that Cromwell had already established the company beforehand. He felt secure, trusted Cromwell and formally became co-owner of Privé on April 1.

“It’s not like I’m one of his homeboys that was riding with him when he got into the league and as soon as he got into the league I tried to start a company,” Cromwell said. “One of my biggest motivators was to help guys stop going broke shortly after retiring and build them something that can outlast their career... It was about building a legacy outside of football.

“He was able to see what I was able to do with some of the small resources I was able to use. And he knew that, if he was able to back me in any kind of way to take it to the next level, it could be done. It was really like, ‘We can’t sit here and say we want this for our guys and not exemplify it ourselves.’”

Obviously, Cromwell and Richard want to make money off Privé, but the mission is to help those in the industry of sports. They strive to create interactive relationships where clients gain knowledge of their own rather than completely passing off their marketing to someone else.

“We wanted to use the relationships that we have to continue to build and also pass it down to these guys,” Richard said. “A lot of guys get left or swept under the rug when it comes to marketing. It’s a lot more out there that guys can be having and taking control of.”

Privé has opened a physical office in downtown Pittsburgh, has plans to expand into Las Vegas later this year and hired former Robert Morris football player Donte Jeter as a player management representative. Richard’s presence has added credibility and built the perception that it’s a for-the-players, by-the-players company.

“We can express awareness in certain situations of how it would be as an athlete or what the industry is like from their perspective,” Cromwell said. “A lot of companies and marketing agencies — or even agents — can’t do that... Having him to be able to be connector for us with a lot of people in the NFL and some powerful trainers and coaches, that’s really one of the biggest things that has helped us. It’s resources, but also the ability to expand and move how we want to be able to move.”

As invested as Richard is in Privé, his primary focus remains the Raiders. With training camp drawing closer, he’ll soon begin to shift more responsibility to Cromwell and Jeter. Once the season arrives, he’ll largely be hands off. That doesn’t concern him.

Richard’s trust in Cromwell reaches back to the time they spent together training for their pro days. They’ve had extensive conversations about business, but also know each other’s families well. Richard hasn’t identified any reason to doubt him.

“He’s been with me for a couple of years through thick and thin and I’ve seen how he works,” Richard said. “I know how he is as a family man. I just trust him. That’s my decision on it. I’m not saying I’m gon’ be away from the company 100 percent. I’m gonna have downtime. I’m gonna have times to get on calls and times to do certain things. I mean, he steered my stuff and just the things he’s done for me. I believe that with the knowledge he’s spreading to those other guys and what we’re doing as a company that we’ll be just fine during the season.”

The long-term vision is for Privé to be a hub for creativity and growth. Their goal is to one day have facilities that cater toward athletes and artists. In the short-term, they simply want to become a prominent name in the management and marketing realm of football.

“Our motto is ‘Management Redefined,’” Cromwell said. “We want to show the world what we can do with the guys that we have now, how we can build their images, build their brands and create solid deals that give guys longevity within this company... Our biggest goal is to become a staple in this industry and to really solidify our name and show people that these athletes have a lot more to themselves than people see.”

“We want to be consistent for a number of years in this industry and not be a name that comes and goes.”

Privé keeps its number of clients private, but Cromwell said they reduced their number of clientele in an effort to restructure the company once Richard came onboard. They recently came to terms with former Wisconsin receiver Brandon White, who runs a training company for wide receivers called “Receiver Factory” that has six locations nationally. They plan to add either three or four more clients in the next few months.

Once the Vegas location is open, Cromwell will spend more time there in order to be closer to Richard during the season. They’ll be able to have face-to-face conversations and also take advantage of the expansive opportunities available in the city. Privé is still early in its development, but Richard and Cromwell have high expectations for its potential.

“I just want to see us helping a lot of people and helping a lot of athletes,” Richard said. “I want to see us really have great relationships with some great corporations and great companies and for Privé to just be a flourishing company and a company that’s a family and remains a family. I just want to help every one of our clients impact the way they want to impact.”

‘They’ve always had my back’: Local NFL draft prospect developed ‘warrior’ mentality from family

By Chirs Singleton

April 19, 2020

Edith Robertson recalls having a conversation with her now famous grandson — Thibodaux native and current NFL draft prospect Amik Robertson — when he was a rising young football star at Thibodaux High School a few years ago.

Edith said she wanted to get a Thibodaux High T-Shirt to show support for Amik and posed a question for him.

“I asked him, ‘Amik, what name do you want me to put on the back of my shirt?’ ” Edith said. “He said, ‘Maw-maw, put ‘Warrior.’ ”

Edith said she knew exactly why Amik picked that name. It was a way to honor the memory of her husband and Amik’s grandfather, Ephon Anderson Sr., who died in 2014.

“He said it was because his grandpa always told him he was a warrior,” Edith recalled. “That’s what I put on the back of my shirt. I still have that shirt.”

Years have passed, but it still means something to Amik, who said he remains motivated by the warrior nickname given to him by his grandfather.

“It inspired me a lot,” Amik said. “He helped me get through almost everything. He helped me develop a resilient mindset since I was a young kid. We had it tough growing up, but he told me never make excuses for myself. I had to fight through life like Tarzan through the jungle.”

After all of the adversity he has faced in 21 years of his life, the former Thibodaux High and Louisiana Tech University star cornerback said the warrior nickname perfectly defines who he is on and off the football field.

He grew up in a single-parent home when his father spent most of his childhood in jail.

He became a teenage father at age 15.

He suffered a knee injury that needed surgery before the start of a busy senior season of football at Thibodaux High.

He was overlooked and offered late by many major Division I college football teams because of his then-small, 5-foot-9, 175-pound body.

He has faced several setbacks this year, needing surgery to repair a groin injury, missing out on a chance to compete at the NFL’s Scouting Combine and dealing with the distractions of the coronavirus outbreak as he prepared for this year’s NFL draft.

Through it all, Amik has managed to become one of the top college defensive backs in the nation. Now he is on the verge of being selected in the early rounds of this year's NFL draft, which will be held Thursday through Saturday.

Amik said he credits his faith and support of his family for helping him get this far. They didn't have much, but they had each other.

"I knew my family believed in me. They've always had my back," Amik said. "They kept me strong. They helped make me the player and the man that I am today."

When he was young, Amik said, he promised his family he would become a professional football player one day. That day will likely arrive this week for Amik, who said he can't wait to get drafted and showcase his talents in the NFL.

"I'm in a blessed position. I tell people all the time that I have to take advantage of it," Amik said. "I had it rough growing up, but that's not an excuse. My goal is to keep going. I'm not only doing this for my family, but I have a community behind me. They are behind me 100 percent. It's a blessing that I keep taking advantage of this opportunity."

As always, his family will be there supporting him every step of the way. They'll be watching every pick of the draft until his name is called. When he finally gets that phone call from an NFL team saying he was drafted, it will be the start of a great celebration for the Robertson family and everyone in Thibodaux.

"It's going to be like fireworks in the sky," said Latoya Robertson, who is Amik's aunt.

Edith said Amik has worked endlessly to turn his dreams into a reality.

"I'm so happy. I thank God he made it," Edith said. "Deep in my heart, I know he's going to continue to make it because he's the type of kid that wanted better in life. I've always seen it in him. Since he was a little boy, this is what he always wanted to do. He wanted to be a football player. I'm so proud of him."

KIMA LOVES AMIK

Kima Robertson, Amik's mother, beams with pride whenever people come up to her asking about Amik or praising his accomplishments.

"It brings a lot of tears to my eyes," Kima said. "I get emotional. It's a feeling I can't explain. I'm so excited that I'm nervous. I'm proud of him. I love him so much."

Kima said she was 15 when she had Amik, naming him after her -- Amik is Kima spelled backward.

Amik said he didn't realize how important his name was until he got older.

"Growing up, I didn't like it, but she always told me my name was special," Amik said. "People always tell me about the big eyes that I have, which I got from her. I look at it as a gift. It helps me process the game and help me put myself in a position to make plays."

Kima said the early years of Amik's life were difficult, especially as a young single mother, but with the support of their family and community, they overcame it. There were times when people counted them out, especially when Amik was criticized for not being big, fast or strong enough to make it to the NFL, but his mother provided encouragement.

"It was hard, but he made it," Kima said. "I always knew he was going to prove them wrong. I always told him to keep his faith and work for what he wants. He can get it. This is what he wanted to do — play football. He worked hard for it and I think he deserves it. His dreams are coming true."

When he was in middle school, Amik said, he remembers making a promise to his mother that he would work hard to provide for his family and give them a better life.

"When I was in the eighth or ninth grade, with all the struggles, adversity and everything we went through, I told her soon that those days would be over," Amik said. "She believed in me. It made me proud to see the smile on her face. It's something that motivated me to keep going."

Amik said he cherishes his mother and values everything she has taught him.

"She taught me to be strong," Amik said. "My mom is a very strong woman. We had some adversities growing up. She took care of all her kids. She made sure that we always had it all. Even when we didn't have it all, she always made sure we had enough. I never can pay her back for that. I'll take care of her and make sure the rest of her life is a blessing."

OVERCOMING HARD TIMES

Amik went through most of his childhood without his father, Arthur Watts, in his life.

Watts served a five-year stint in prison due to drug-related charges from selling cocaine and missed the first five years of his son's life. After being released, he spent years working and trying to stay on the right path. When Amik was 11, Watts re-entered his life to assume his role as his father.

Since being released from jail, Watts said he wanted to step up as a role model and develop a strong relationship with Amik and his oldest son, DeQuan Pharagood.

"When I made up my mind and said I'm going to make this right, whatever their dream is, I'm going to support it, as long as they aren't out there doing the things that I did," Watts said. "We had a rough start. The first five years of Amik's life I was in prison. Quan suffered through that too. That's my fault. I don't blame anybody else for that."

Watts, who experienced a tough childhood of his own by growing up without his parents or family members around, has passed on stories about his life struggles to his sons. He has used his past mistakes as an example for his sons to stay on the right track in life.

Watts said he didn't have a father figure in his life but he wanted to "break the cycle" by being there for his kids.

"I prayed that it inspired the community to see that it could be done," Watts said. "That goes for parents such as myself that had a rough start and didn't make all the right decisions. I made some bad choices that I can't go back and change, but what I can do is do my best to make up for them and that's supporting his dream."

Despite what happened in the past, Amik said his father has provided valuable support and discipline since re-entering his life.

“Even though my pops made some mistakes in the past, I can honestly say he came into my life at the perfect time,” Amik said. “He came into my life when I needed him the most. He taught me a lot. The bond and connection we share now is like no other. I know the love is genuine and he’s extremely proud of me.”

Watts said Amik told him at age 12 that his dream was “to play in the NFL and make it to the (Pro Football) Hall of Fame.”

At first, Watts said he didn’t know how serious his son was, but after seeing his commitment to improving his craft and watching the way he impressed scouts and college coaches during area football games and camps, he was convinced.

“I knew then he was going to go to the NFL,” Watts said. “I knew then that he wanted it. That’s when I knew that he had what it took to go all the way. God had already prophesied it. God told me to tell Amik that he’s going to go to the league, but it’s going to take work and it’s not going to be a gimme. I knew he had the work ethic. I knew he was going to put in what it takes and I was right. That’s the God honest truth. God told me that. From that day forward, I didn’t believe nothing else.”

After watching Amik grow into one of the top college players in the country, Watts said one lucky NFL team will soon benefit from having his son on their team.

“I’m here to tell people that when the NFL drafts this kid, they are not just drafting a typical football player,” Watts said. “You are drafting an exceptional, hard-working, dedicated young man that will go to the limit for that team. He puts that team before anything.”

‘ALWAYS DETERMINED’

Anderson introduced Amik to football and signed him up to play in pee-wee football league for the first time at age 5.

From the first time he watched his nephew on the football field, Anderson said he sensed something special was in the making.

“He was always determined,” he said. “He loved football. He wanted to be the best of the best. He was always so into it. He dominated all the other players. He was real good from an early age. He had a tunnel vision. He just stayed focused and motivated.”

Amik said he credits his uncle for helping mold him into not only a standout football player but a responsible young man.

“He helped me fall in love with the game,” Amik said. “He’s a big reason why I’m so successful. He was the start of it. He brought me up playing football. As I got older, he taught me to always work hard. Even when you fall, just get right back up. Ever since, that’s just that way that I’ve worked.”

During his seventh-grade year at West Thibodaux Middle School, Amik said he realized he had a gift to become an NFL player.

"I knew I was the most talented out of everybody," Amik said. "I was faster than everybody."

Amik said he looked up to former Thibodaux High football standouts Trovon Reed and Greg Robinson, who both played at Auburn University and in the NFL.

When Robinson was selected with the second overall pick in the 2014 NFL draft, Robertson said it encouraged him to do the same.

DaQuan Pharagood, Amik's older brother, said he saw the potential early and encouraged Amik to make the most of his talents.

"I knew if he put in the work, he could do anything," said Pharagood, who is also a former Thibodaux football player. "As his brother, I had that faith in his ability. I didn't doubt him or anything. Not even just football but life first. We just motivated each other. I've never seen a guy just work so hard in my life. It's an amazing feeling to see my brother perform the way he has. It's a gift from God. He said he can make it to that level in the NFL and look where he is."

Delmonte Robertson, Amik's cousin, said the key was keeping Amik focused and out of trouble.

Though Thibodaux is a small city, Delmonte said it is easy to get caught up in a life of crime. Many young men have fallen into a life of drugs and violence on the streets, which has prevented many aspiring athletes and others from making their way out.

"I knew he had talent, but it was all about helping him stay focused and helping him keep his nose clean because the environment he was in, it was easy for him to fall," Delmonte said. "No matter how much talent you have, you've got to stay focused."

By the time Amik became a household name as an All-State football player at Thibodaux, Delmonte said everyone in his community knew he was destined for greatness.

"I've never seen anybody put in as much work as him," Delmonte said. "If practice started at 2 o'clock, he's out there at 1:30 putting in work before practice. If it ends at 5, he's out there at 6:30 putting in more work after practice. I never seen anybody do that before. With all the extra work that he's put in, he deserves everything that's coming to him."

THE BIG FACTOR

At age 15, Amik was forced to mature earlier than most of his classmates. During his sophomore year, he became a father of a young boy named Ayden Miguel Robertson.

Though the prospect of being a teenage father was terrifying at first, Robertson said it motivated him to step up to the plate and take care of responsibility at home, in school and on the football field.

"It matured me a lot. Ayden has played the biggest factor in this whole thing," Amik said. "Ayden got put into my life, and he pushes me every day. When I'm struggling, I just think about him. It just motivates me to push every single second of every single hour of every single day."

Nowadays, Ayden is a happy, smiling 5-year-old who loves to play football just like his father.

While training for the draft, Amik said he wanted to take time out to be there for his son. Their favorite activity is to play catch together.

Amik said he wants to build a great future for his son.

“I just want to give him the mindset to always believe in yourself when nobody else do,” Amik said. “I want him to always be there for his family because at the end that’s all you’ve got. I just want to leave a positive legacy for him.”

PRIDE OF THE FAMILY

If his family had its way, Amik would be the No. 1 overall pick in the draft and he would be selected by the hometown favorite team — the New Orleans Saints.

Thibodaux is only an hour’s drive from New Orleans, and it would give them a chance to attend his games often.

Many draft experts project Amik to be selected anywhere from the early second round to late third round.

“I’m a Saints fan, but wherever he goes, I’m with it,” Anderson said. “That will be my new team.”

Pharagood said the entire family can’t wait to see where he lands. After watching his brother work so hard over the years, he can’t believe the moment is finally here.

“It’s going to be a great feeling,” Pharagood said. “I’m proud of him. I just don’t want him to stop right now. I want him to keep going. I have faith that he will get it. All it takes is hard work. He’s going to get there. It doesn’t matter where he goes. I just want to see him go play football somewhere.”

Though Amik has grown into a sought-after football player, Edith said her grandson still remembers his humble beginnings. As an NFL player, Amik said he plans to return home often and give back to his community in Thibodaux.

“He wanted to be this person that everybody could look up to. He’s a good person in every way,” Edith said. “You’ll never hear negative talk come out of his mouth. He’s a humble person. I’ve seen it in him. He strived very hard to get where he is today.”

Anderson said he wishes his father — Ephon Sr. — could be here to see his grandson fulfill his dream of making it to the NFL.

“They were real close,” Ephon Jr. said. “He would be bragging so much about his grandson right now. He would be so proud. I can’t even put into words how much this means for us. We’ve never had anyone in our family come this far and do this. We’re all so proud of him.”

Amik said he remembers what his grandfather taught him about being a warrior and plans to carry that mindset into the next chapter of his life.

“It means a lot to me,” Amik said. “I promised him I would pick up his slack and take care of the family when he was on his death bed. I would be that young warrior he taught me to be. It will stick with me forever.”

Alabama WR Henry Ruggs finds purpose through loss of friend

By Chase Goodbread

August 27, 2019

MONTGOMERY, Ala. -- Henry Ruggs stood in the middle of Powelldale Drive, in the middle of the night, distraught with boiling emotion as a shouting match with his mother escalated. For the better part of a year, he'd kept quiet about his feelings regarding the death of his best friend, Rod Scott, and all the reasons he blamed himself for it.

In the weeks after the car accident that took Scott's life in March 2016, Ruggs tried grieving, hours upon hours, at the gravesite. He tried burrowing himself in his bedroom for days. Even many months later, when he announced his commitment to sign with the University of Alabama in a video tribute to Scott, he still wasn't ready to talk about it.

"I'm a bottled-up person," Ruggs said. "I keep a lot to myself."

But on this night, more than a year after the accident, there would be no privacy. His mother, Nataki, was finally demanding answers to some hard questions. And as the argument spilled from the Ruggs' home into the street, a few neighbors came outside to see what the commotion was.

Ruggs paced the asphalt. Running -- from problems, from uncomfortable situations, from anything he didn't want to be a part of -- had always been a way out for the Crimson Tide's star wide receiver. He learned at an early age that nobody could catch him when he turned on his natural gift for speed. If he angered his siblings, their first thought wasn't to come at him; it was, first, to block his exit. He used to approach the neighborhood dogs and baited them to chase him, just for the thrill of pursuit.

But there was no running from what happened to Rod Scott, at least not on that night.

Nearly three years have passed since that evening, and Ruggs is now one of the most explosive offensive threats in this year's NFL draft.

Scott, he believes, put him in that position. And keeping his best friend's memory alive through that pursuit has become what he lives for.

At the crack of dawn, Roderic Scott would have the doors open.

Ruggs' determination to be an NBA point guard was born here, at the Southeast YMCA, before hundreds of sunrises over Carter Hill Road in the Brentwood area of Montgomery, Ala. It stands next to Dannelly Elementary School, which didn't open its doors to students until 7:45 a.m., and Ruggs could shoot baskets at the Y until the school bell rang. If he got there at 7, the doors would be open. At 6? Door's open. Scott worked the front desk at the Y and did his best to make it a place where the neighborhood kids could stay off the street and out of trouble. If that meant opening early, that's what it meant.

Morning after morning, Rod Scott, Roderic's son, would launch his first shot before his dad could get all the lights turned on. The next kid to walk in the gym was usually Ruggs. When the Dannelly school bell rang at day's end, the pair ran straight back to the Y for more basketball. Scott's work ethic for the sport, even at a young age, was unlike anything Ruggs had ever seen. He was a year older than Ruggs, and a year wiser, too. Ruggs began getting his hair cut the way Scott did.

"They were best friends, but Henry always looked up to Rod," said Nataki.

In time, the two formed a bond that transcended basketball; they were not only inseparably close, they even adopted one another's mannerisms. They'd pick up breakfast at Starbucks before school together, and always ordered the same thing. They dressed alike, were roughly the same size, and even resembled each other. Years later at Lee High in Montgomery, to amuse themselves, they'd sometimes switch jerseys at basketball practice and answer to each other's names. They even had a few hand signals they used when they didn't want the rest of the room in on their communication. For those who didn't know them personally, they were often mistaken as brothers or even twins.

"As much as they could be together, they got together. It's like they were the same person," said Ruggs' brother, Kevontae.

Scott worked on his shot incessantly and eventually drew scholarship offers. Ruggs possessed incredible leaping ability, with a vertical jump of 40 inches. In their first season playing varsity basketball together, Ruggs was only a sophomore. He logged an estimated 40 dunks in game action at just 5-foot-9. Alley-oop passes from Scott to Ruggs, with chemistry and timing mastered over years at the Y, were always perfect.

Football was never Ruggs' sport, at least not until the day Scott convinced him it should be.

The stretch of I-65 North was slick with a steady rain on March 3, 2016, as the white Toyota Camry that Scott was riding in approached mile marker 221. The destination for five teenagers: Legacy Arena in Birmingham, to support the Montgomery Jeff-Davis girls' basketball team in a Class 7A state championship game.

Scott was one of three unrestrained backseat passengers, sitting between two friends when the car began to hydroplane shortly after 10 a.m., about halfway between Montgomery and Birmingham in Clanton, Ala. At a speed estimated by one occupant at 80 mph, the driver lost control and the car rolled over four times, resulting in an unspeakable tragedy. Scott, a high school senior who had signed to play basketball for Jacksonville State, was thrown some 50 yards from the vehicle and later died of head injuries.

Darian Adams, a former teammate of Scott's who now plays basketball for Troy University, was in that backseat, sitting behind the driver and to Scott's left. He was thrown from the vehicle as well, and his account of the accident is chilling.

"Rod was lighter than me, so I think he flew farther," Adams said. "I think I went through the windshield and he went through the sun roof, or it was the other way around. It was an awful experience. I asked the medics about Rod, and they wouldn't tell me anything."

It was a horrifying lesson in the importance of seatbelt safety: the driver and front-seat passenger, both buckled, suffered concussions and otherwise minor injuries. The three unbuckled teens in the backseat were all ejected; Scott died, Adams broke his neck, and the third spent months in a back brace. Adams underwent immediate surgery for broken C4 and C5 vertebra, but thankfully recovered full mobility; he led the Troy men's basketball team in assists last year with a permanent metal plate in his neck.

Along with head trauma, Scott also suffered collapsed lungs and underwent multiple surgeries after being airlifted to Montgomery's Baptist Medical Center South, where he died the following day.

"I knew if he couldn't be fully active the way he used to be, he wouldn't want that kind of life if it was just going to be halfway," said his father, Roderic. "We didn't have to make that decision. He was gone, but they got him on life support so we could say goodbye."

As he was being loaded onto an ambulance, Adams got a glimpse of the Camry.

"It didn't even look like a car anymore," he said. "The sides were crushed in, the roof was smashed down, all the glass was gone. There was no fixing that car."

Scott's death sent shockwaves through Lee High -- though he'd only been at the school for two years after transferring, he'd ingrained himself in the Class of 2016 not only on the basketball floor, but in the hallways with an engaging personality. The Montgomery Public School System dispatched more than a dozen grief counselors to Lee, setting them up in the school library. Enough students took advantage of the opportunity to pack the library for days following Scott's death.

"You're supposed to get closure, but I don't think this school got it," said Lee basketball coach Bryant Johnson. "It's still fresh for a lot of people."

After three years of advocacy from the Scott family, a new state law requiring backseat passengers to wear a seat belt, named for Scott, passed this summer and was signed into law by Gov. Kay Ivey in June.

Overnight, the flu hit Ruggs like a wrecking ball.

The day before Scott's death, he'd not even begun feeling the symptoms yet, and set a plan to drive his brother, Kevontae, and Scott to Birmingham the next day for the basketball game. Barely 12 hours later, he was curled up in bed-ridden misery. He threw up around 3 a.m. and battled a fever of 100-plus degrees. Not long before the three were supposed to leave, he told Kevontae he didn't feel up to going to the game, so Scott caught a ride with other friends.

Scott's father recalls the time on his phone read 10:16 a.m. when it rang with the worst news he's ever received. Minutes later, word hit the Ruggs home. Kevontae took Ruggs' truck straight to the hospital and had just arrived when Ruggs called and demanded he return to give him a ride. But Ruggs was too distraught to wait, and his instinct to run took over. He sprinted on foot to Baptist Medical, about a mile from his home. He ran so fast, his brother hadn't even gotten the truck off hospital property yet when he saw Ruggs, picked him up and turned back to the ER.

Henry got out of the truck and collapsed from a flu-driven exhaustion. Instant guilt set in. Rod wasn't supposed to be in that mangled Camry with other friends; he was supposed to be in Henry's truck, with Henry at the wheel and navigating them safely to the game.

If I'd not gotten sick, Rod would be OK.

If I'd just gone to the game sick, Rod would be OK.

Henry Ruggs' grief process was a slow one, in part because it began ensnared in thoughts like those. A determination to confront his grief privately slowed it down even more. Of all the students who took advantage of the grief counseling made available at Lee High, Ruggs wasn't among them.

He'd leave home often with no explanation, spending up to 10 hours a week in the cemetery at Scott's grave. When he wasn't there, he retreated to his bedroom. He would come out to eat but was otherwise reclusive and refused to discuss Scott's death even with family. Kevontae would try to coax his brother out of his room with pick-up basketball invitations, but to no avail.

"Who am I going to talk to?" Ruggs said, rhetorically, during a conversation at the Alabama football offices last summer. "Rod was it. I didn't have another friend like that. Rod knew things my brother didn't know. Things my parents didn't even know. I didn't even tell my family how many scholarship offers I had, but Rod knew it was 23."

Ruggs returned to school after a week but slept through classes and blew off track practice. When his grandmother died, he'd witnessed his mom grieve privately as well -- self-contained and stoic -- and because she wanted to be left alone in her time of grief, she respected Henry's wish for the same.

Just when Ruggs began to exit his shell, a frightening brush with his own mortality set back his progress. About a month after Scott died, Kevontae convinced Ruggs to come out of his room for a trip with a few friends to Cinnabon at Montgomery's Eastdale Mall. On the way back, Ruggs hit the gas while merging onto the highway when his right rear tire spun and caused his black Dodge Durango to swerve. He overcorrected with the steering wheel, and his truck spun three times around, the second of which put him, for an instant, face to face with an 18-wheeler. A head-on collision was missed, Kevontae said, by inches. The careening Durango finally came to a stop sitting sideways on the road, intact but for a minor scratch from contact with a highway guardrail.

As with Scott's accident, a steady rain had worsened driving conditions.

As with Scott's accident, three friends were in the backseat.

The similarities shook Ruggs' confidence as a driver and unraveled what little progress he'd made in getting over the tragedy. He had his brother drive him home from there and wouldn't get behind the wheel at all for another two weeks. When he did, he'd tremble visibly enough for his brother to notice. He'd avoid driving altogether if there was any sign of rain.

"That spin-out traumatized me again," Ruggs said. "When we got home, I was shaking and said, 'I'm sorry' to everyone, went in my room, locked the door and laid down."

If the pool table, massive flatscreen and endless sports memorabilia don't make it clear enough, the "Man Cave" sign on Tyrone Rogers' wall clearly spells out what the room in his home is for. A lot of the memorabilia is Cleveland Browns-related. Ruggs' coach at Lee High in Montgomery logged six NFL seasons with the Browns, peaking in the early 2000s. He now lives in Pike Road, Ala., just a short drive from Alabama State, where he played collegiately before the Browns gave him a chance as an undrafted free agent. He leans back on the tan leather couch in his getaway room and recalls exactly how a kid who could be among the first wide receivers chosen in the 2020 NFL Draft, once wanted nothing to do with the sport.

Ruggs had been a spectacular player, albeit a very smallish one, at McKee Junior High, but entered Lee High with no interest in playing. Coaxed to give it a try at the end of the season his freshman year, he was thrown one pass in the Generals' last game, a smoke route to the flat. He gained only 4 yards, but in doing so, he made half the defense miss. It was all Rogers needed to see to know Ruggs could be special. Ruggs, however, was turned off. Joining the team so late, he was issued whatever leftover, misfit gear could be found in a mostly empty equipment room.

"He got a kicker's helmet with a red facemask -- every other facemask was white -- and his shoulder pads were way too big," said Kevontae. "He said he was embarrassed to be out there. He thought he looked ridiculous."

Over the next two years, he was constantly reminded that 5-foot-9 guards in basketball rarely reach the NBA, that football would be a much smarter ticket, that his blinding speed and leaping ability would carry him much farther on the gridiron. It made him more determined to prove basketball doubters wrong, and his brief freshman experience with the football team just made him feel more like a basketball player.

As a sophomore, he didn't play football at all. The following spring, Rogers couldn't convince him to even come out for spring practice. But Rod Scott had seen him play at McKee and kept whispering the phrase "five-star" in his best friend's ear. He was convinced Ruggs could carry a five-star rating as a recruit in football if he would commit to it, and he was equally sure he would end up at Alabama.

It was a bold prediction. Only a few dozen recruits in the nation land the five-star distinction in a given year, and Ruggs had hardly played a varsity down at a time when five-star designations for the class of 2017 were already being assigned. But Scott was somehow sure of it; he even went to Lee basketball coach Bryant Johnson and asked him to encourage Ruggs to play football, too.

Initially, Ruggs would only put a toe into football water. He agreed so reluctantly to play, his preference was for as little time on the field as possible. Lee High linebackers coach Eric Hudson hoodwinked Henry, telling him that if he would just give football a try, he'd be used as a return specialist only. Ruggs wasn't happy when, soon after, he was thrown into a significant offensive role, but peer pressure was enough to keep him from fighting it.

By this time, 2017 signing classes were already half-built. Empty seats on the proverbial recruiting bus were disappearing, and still, the Alabamas and Clemsons of college football didn't even know who Ruggs was.

Just a few weeks into his first varsity season as a junior, he received his first scholarship offer. Rogers distributed only one game film for Ruggs in the midst of his junior year, and the offers took off from there. Within months, the offer from Alabama that Scott had predicted for him materialized.

And in a little over a year, Ruggs transformed from a basketball player with no desire to play football, to an elite football recruit coveted by almost every top program in America. He was ranked by 247sports.com as the No. 291 recruit in the nation just six weeks into his varsity career as a junior. But by National Signing Day of his senior year, he'd shot up to No. 24.

He even drew 247sports.com's five-star rating; something else Scott saw in him that nobody else did.

Not even Ruggs.

Inside the Alabama locker room, Ruggs holds something of an invisible crown. On a roster full of elite athletes, teammates generally recognize him as the Crimson Tide's fastest player. It's a title that carries automatic respect among players, as those who have held it before -- Dee Milliner, Amari Cooper, Tony Brown -- have all cashed NFL paychecks. At Alabama's 2019 junior pro day, NFL scouts reportedly timed him at 4.25 seconds in the 40-yard dash, a mark that would have been the fastest clocking in nine of the last 10 years at the NFL Scouting Combine.

But the status always faces challengers. Weeks after Ruggs' speed wowed NFL scouts, he had to fend off fellow receiver Jaylen Waddle in an impromptu race that aired on social media. The photo-close finish established Waddle as the heir apparent to Ruggs' crown.

When NFL Network recently posed a question on Twitter of how fast Ruggs would run at the combine, several of the receiver's former Alabama teammates put him at or below John Ross' record 4.22 seconds, including Waddle (4.22), RB Damien Harris (4.20) and CB Tevon Diggs (4.19). That blazing raw speed is a foundational element to Ruggs' standing among the draft's top prospects at the receiver position.

"He's got that big 40 time on him," said an AFC personnel executive. "He's a little more physical than (Alabama WR Jerry) Jeudy, a little more of a straight-line guy, and not quite as shifty. But the speed is completely legit."

Ruggs wasted no time translating that speed to the field at Alabama.

His first five career receptions, one catch against each of five opponents, all went for touchdowns. His first catch that didn't finish in the end zone, against LSU, went for 47 yards. He's been a walking big play for the UA passing game ever since, averaging 17.5 yards per catch over his career. Roughly one of every four catches (24 of 98) were touchdowns.

Whatever NFL prosperity comes his way, Ruggs will feel indebted to someone he'll never be able to pay back.

"It was always Rod who encouraged him the most to play football," said Nataki Ruggs. "It was always Rod."

Memorial services for Scott were held at Alabama State University's Dunn-Oliver Acadome, which can seat more than 7,000 people. It filled to capacity. Services were officiated by Lorenza Pharrams, who is both a pastor and the principal at Lee. All expenses were paid by an anonymous donor whose identity still remains unknown to the Scott family.

One of Ruggs' toughest reminders of the tragedy came when a Lee postseason basketball game brought him back to ASU, about a year after Scott's death, to play in the gym where he'd said goodbye to the friend he knows he'll never replace.

"Walking into Alabama State's gym even now, all we can see is a big black curtain pulled down and Rod's casket," Kevontae said. "And we had to play a game in there."

As a senior, Ruggs transferred his athletic spirit from basketball to football.

Even Johnson said he didn't play basketball with quite the same energy, while, by all accounts, he played football with a reckless passion he'd never shown before. Teammates noticed a change -- a hardened determination that drove him to be the first player on the practice field, the last to walk off it, and the new embodiment of Scott's relentless work ethic.

"Now he feels like he's not trying to make it for himself or for us anymore," Kevontae said. "He's trying to make it for Rod. He wants to prove Rod right."

And he's found all sorts of ways to celebrate his friend's short but impactful life.

Perhaps the most notable tribute follows the first touchdown Ruggs scores in any Alabama game. He holds up three fingers in a salute to Scott, who wore No. 3 at Lee High. His Twitter profile features a photo of his best friend's gravestone, which includes a quote from Scott: I will do something great. I will be something great. The quote is also tattooed on Ruggs' lower right leg. And when it was time to commit to Alabama, the school Scott had always pushed Ruggs to attend, Ruggs announced his decision with a video tribute to Scott.

"When he throws up the three fingers, it shows how much he cares," Roderic Scott said. "He does it so fast you can't always tell what he's doing when you see it on TV, but I started looking for it. Ever since the first time he did it, I've been glued to the seat whenever Alabama plays."

As Ruggs' reporting date for Alabama's workouts approached in the spring of 2017, Nataki pressed him more and more to talk to her about Rod's death. Was he focusing sharply enough on his own life to study as much as college would require? Was he past the guilt about staying in bed that day? Was he moving forward emotionally?

A maternal instinct in Nataki told her the time to leave her son alone had passed.

"My baby was about to leave me. It was days away. I had to know how he was doing dealing with this," she said. "This was momma's time now. I needed to know where his head was before he went to college."

On the night Nataki's curiosity and her son's privacy finally clashed in anger, the argument got loud around 10 p.m. Ruggs wouldn't be cornered and walked out of the house. Nataki, in turn, took the confrontation outdoors.

Kevontae knew what was coming. He went inside the house to put on a pair of sneakers.

"I saw the look in his eye; he was about to run," Kevontae said. "I come back outside, and he's already in the street. Then he put that 4.25 (speed) on me."

Ruggs took off in a full sprint. Kevontae took off behind him.

Ruggs took a right onto Tullis Road, then a left onto Antoinette Drive. From there, he ran west on McGehee, toward Carter Hill Road. Toward the Y. Toward Rod.

Kevontae, a former linebacker at Ole Miss who played at East Mississippi Community College last fall, is plenty fast himself. But he's not Henry Ruggs-fast, and he lost sight of him at times on the chase.

Ruggs ran all the way to Jeff-Davis High, the school Scott had gone to support when the Camry flipped in the rain, and sprinted around it twice. He discarded his shirt, to make it more difficult for Kevontae to see him. He sprinted across the street, to Dannelly Elementary, and circled the building where he and Rod had once sat and itched for the afternoon bell to ring. He ran from there around the Southeast Y, where the friendship with Scott was forged on the hardwood.

By the time Henry's exhaustion had finally allowed Kevontae to catch up to him, he was leaning against a truck in the driveway of someone he didn't know, on Rawling Road, catching his breath and coming to terms. He'd run from his pain for 2.8 miles before realizing it was just as fast as he was.

"I wasn't going to stop until I couldn't breathe anymore," Ruggs said.

Kevontae called for a ride because the brothers were too exhausted to walk back home. The cathartic experience brought a level of peace to Ruggs himself, who resolved to be motivated, not encumbered, by Scott's death. Nataki finally got clarity on her son's mindset with a long talk days later while helping to move him into Alabama's athletic dorm, Bryant Hall.

"If you put two guys in a room -- one working and one working with a purpose -- the guy with the purpose will win every time," Kevontae said. "That's Henry now, and Rod is his purpose."

Man of the House: How Clemson's John Simpson Made Himself an All-American

By Pat Forde

December 26, 2019

CLEMSON, S. C. — On the day last week when John Simpson became the first member of his family to graduate from college, he took time to send a text to a man four hours away—not a relative, but someone who played a vital role in helping the Clemson All-American offensive lineman reach this milestone.

Tommy Hall, proprietor of Halls Chophouse in Charleston, needed to see what Simpson had accomplished. So Simpson sent Hall a picture of his brand new diploma, and Hall in turn sent the picture to everyone on his staff at the upscale steakhouse.

"They're all so proud of him," Hall said. "We love watching him. It makes you proud to see him succeed."

His path to football stardom, a college education and likely becoming a high NFL draft pick next spring wound its way through the kitchen at Halls, an institution in the Southern food Mecca of Charleston—and a restaurant Simpson and his family couldn't afford when he was growing up in the rougher north side of the city. But opportunity met necessity in ninth grade, when Hall was visiting local high schools looking to hire teenagers who weren't planning on going to college. It was part of the outreach program called Teach The Need, aimed at providing a restaurant-skills curriculum to low-income kids in the area.

Whenever Hall worked with high school students, he left them with this invitation: "If you want a job, come see me." They rarely did.

"You'd be amazed how many people wouldn't come see me," Hall said. "Jonathan did."

And so Halls hired its first high-school employee from the Teach The Need program. A relationship developed, and a mentorship formed.

Simpson was only 15 years old, but he already had been taught the value of work by his grandfather, also named John Simpson. And money was chronically scarce at home, bills piling up without being paid, creating a palpable familial stress.

"I'd sit in my room and cry," Simpson said, recalling difficult days as an adolescent—his father in prison, his mom working hard but struggling to make ends meet for her two sons, John and Jayden. "I felt like it was all on me to be the man of the house."

This is how he went about being the man of the house at a tender age—taking a job in addition to going to school and playing football. They taught big John Simpson how to tie his black tie with his white dress shirt, and how to work as a bus boy, food runner, server and greeter to the high-end clientele at Halls.

For three years, Simpson worked whenever he could around his football and wrestling schedule. Sometimes he worked the night after playing games, coming in with cuts and scrapes on his hands and arms. The Halls staff bandaged him up and he did the work—putting his long reach to work at the bigger tables, and applying his natural people skills to charm patrons.

Said Hall: “He had a smile that lit up the room. Great character. He was a teammate for everybody. Great charisma.”

Simpson developed during that time into a four-star college prospect, with schools from all across the South courting him. The decision “weighed on him hard,” according to Hall, who suggested he visit Clemson. Simpson narrowed his choices to Florida, LSU and Clemson, not committing until 2016 signing day.

Four years later, Simpson is one of the great success stories in a Clemson program littered with them.

Good enough that Swinney expects the 6-foot-4, 330-pound Simpson to be the highest drafted offensive lineman of his 11-year head-coaching tenure at Clemson. (The school has produced an annual litany of draft picks at virtually every position but offensive line. The Tigers haven’t had one selected at all since 2014, and amazingly haven’t had one picked higher than the third round since 1971.)

Simpson has a pro-level mix of power and athleticism (he was a standout wrestler in high school), plus the requisite nasty streak for the trenches. But those abundantly clear strengths aren’t the biggest reason why he was the leading vote getter this year when his teammates elected captains. Nor are they the reason Simpson was elected as Clemson’s offensive representative at Atlantic Coast Conference media days in July—where he showed up wearing a blonde wig, an homage to star quarterback Trevor Lawrence, by far the more well-known Clemson Tiger.

No, the reason John Simpson is so respected and beloved by his teammates is attributable to the subtle steel that kept him from breaking in some difficult times. As much as anybody, he has been the man of the house for Clemson football.

The family members who helped forge the resilience and character within No. 74 for the Tigers have driven damn near the entire expanse of America this week to see Simpson and his Clemson teammates play Ohio State Saturday night in the Fiesta Bowl.

The Suburban was rented Monday by Keyonna Snipe in Charleston. On Christmas Eve, she and a crew of friends and relatives drove 2 1/2 hours north to Rock Hill, S.C., and spent the night with her former father-in-law, John’s grandfather. At 4 a.m. on Christmas morning, they set out from Rock Hill for Arizona. The plan was for a great uncle to take the leg across Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana, to the Texas border. Then the eldest Simpson, a trucker by trade, was going to handle all of Texas. They would figure out New Mexico and Arizona later.

Estimated driving time: 30 hours.

But, hey, it's nothing the family hasn't done before. When John was a freshman in 2016 and Clemson was playing Ohio State in the Fiesta Bowl in another playoff semifinal, they made the drive. Last year, for the Cotton Bowl semifinal against Notre Dame in Arlington, Texas, they also drove.

Snipe hates to fly. But there is no distance large enough to keep her from seeing her boy play football, so off they went, burning up Interstates 20 and 10 across the southern United States.

"My mom is my rock, man," Simpson said. "I would do anything for her, and I know she would do anything for me."

Among the other things Snipe will do for her boys, in addition to cross-country driving: working the third shift assembly line at Cummins Turbo Technologies, making parts for turbocharged engines.

Third shift factory work isn't the most glamorous of lifestyles, but it does pay the bills. And frankly, Snipe said she's had worse jobs before. In her current position she and John have most of their phone conversations while Keyonna is driving home from the factory early in the mornings.

"I haven't been able to afford the best," she said. "But he was happy with whatever I bought him."

When John was younger, his rock often turned to the man she described as her rock, John Simpson Sr., for help. Although she was separated from the elder Simpson's son, John Jr., she has long considered John Sr. to be her father figure.

"My mom passed two years ago," Snipe said. "I never had my father in my life. He's just the best. He's not my father, but he is my father. He has never left our side."

This was a vow John Simpson Sr. made. He took it upon himself to do everything he could to end—or at least interrupt—the generational problems that had beset the males in his family.

John Sr. got out of prison in South Carolina in 2000. His son, John Jr., was finding trouble with the law as well. John Sr. made a vow to be a positive presence in the lives of his 11 grandchildren—10 girls, and young John.

"I was real messed up," John Sr. said. "But me being sick and tired of being sick and tired, I had to do something about it. I got down on my knees and prayed."

What came thereafter was an annual summer pilgrimage—all the grandkids came to John Sr., and worked in his lawn care business. Those old enough cut grass. The younger ones—as young as 4 years old—picked up trash.

"I was trying to teach them about hard work and to earn their way," Simpson Sr. said. "At the end of the summer, I would take them shopping before they went back to school. We would buy school clothes with the money they earned."

He also bought them all a pair of shoes for Christmas. The quality depended on the quality of their academic work.

"If their grades were good, they got to pick the shoes," he said. "If they weren't good, I picked the shoes."

During those summers, John Sr. would take his grandson to see John Jr. in prison in North Carolina. The visits were heartbreaking for young John.

"That was real hard," he said. "I remember leaving (prison), crying my eyes out. I didn't know the next time I'd see my dad."

What got him through?

"Football," he said, then laughed. "Football got me through."

Back home in North Charleston during the school year, the family was barely getting by in the Dorchester-Waylyn neighborhood, a dangerous area. The Charleston Post & Courier described it thusly in 2018: "In a state that is one of the worst in the nation when it comes to number of gun deaths, North Charleston is one of the most dangerous areas in South Carolina and Dorchester-Waylyn is one of the most dangerous areas in North Charleston."

Snipe moved her boys out of that neighborhood when young John transferred to Fort Dorchester High School, a decision that provided a springboard for his football career. John Sr. recalls getting a call from his grandson telling him how much he liked the new school and its football program, which provided two pairs of shoes for its players. For once, his grandfather wouldn't be left trying to special-order (and pay for) size-17 cleats.

But an improved athletic situation wasn't a familial cure-all. There was lingering bitterness.

"It was difficult for him when he was younger," Snipe said. "Kids want their fathers. He reached a point where he didn't want anything to do with him."

Today, though, with so many obstacles overcome and perspective gained, the bitterness is dissipating.

"My relationship with my dad has gotten better over the years," Simpson said. "I had to forgive. I'm not going to say it wasn't his fault, but everyone needs forgiveness."

Life was coming at John Simpson fast last week—past, present and future all colliding in an emotional mashup that has the customarily jovial big man suddenly sweating through his gray shirt and waving a hand in front of his watering eyes.

Present: The All-American offensive guard was sitting in the Clemson indoor facility, as the Tigers prepare for the game(s) that will conclude his college career. It was two days before graduation.

Future: The possibility of life-altering money—the kind his family has never had—looms in 2020. Past: He is talking, with remarkable candor, about breaking a generational cycle of incarceration for males in his family, blazing a new trail academically, becoming a beloved part of a championship football program.

And about the burden of being the man of the house while still a boy.

"I still feel like that sometimes," he admitted.
But what a man he's become.

Raiders' Darren Waller copes with the shutdown by exploring his musical side

The violins start in first, before the bass drops and the angry voice starts poking you in the chest. D Wall, or Darren Waller as Raiders fans and fantasy football players call him, wants to know how your paper is stacking up in his new single, "Profits."

The music video drops Friday, the second to be released off his "Wall Street" album. "SHSW" was a much more relaxing song, with a smiling Waller rapping about how he separated from the crowd, as the acronym indicates, Some How Some Way.

Most people know Waller's story of overcoming addiction, signing with the Raiders and quickly becoming one of the best tight ends in the NFL. Many don't know how serious he is about his music — he recently received his first royalty check. The $500 was the first money he has ever earned for his passion project.

"It's going great," Waller said in a phone interview last week. "Quarantine has provided a lot of time to lock in on improving my production and making new songs."

He is working on building a studio in his new house. Waller is back in Las Vegas, having returned from Georgia week ago. He is all moved in — after spending the past season and a half at the extended-stay hotel two blocks from the Raiders' old facility in Alameda.

"I grew to appreciate the proximity to the facility," Waller said, "because I would get there early for treatment and stay late for treatment."

The Raiders' new facility in Henderson, Nev., is on schedule to be finished next month, with the team's new stadium in Vegas set to be complete in July.

"It's quiet, but I really like Vegas so far and can really see myself enjoying life here," Waller said.

Waller gets up early and logs into the team's online meetings before hitting the field at a local park and working out with teammates Derek Carrier and Foster Moreau. (The team's newest tight end, Jason Witten, is in the process of moving from Dallas.)

"It's been pretty well organized, as far as the position meetings and getting a whole team meeting online," Waller said. "It's gone a lot smoother than I thought it would — I thought there would be a lot of connections dropping and a lot more difficulties."

"There is really good communication from the coaches to the players, so we know what we should be doing to be ready when the time comes."

Waller was very excited by the addition of Witten, an 11-time Pro Bowler with the Cowboys.

"I thought it was awesome," he said. "He is a great example of longevity and doing it the right way. His technique and his mental approach to the game kept him at the top and is going to put him in the Hall of Fame, so to have him in your room and be able to learn from him is priceless."

Waller said Moreau used to mention watching film of Witten, and that prompted him to do the same last year.

"There are things that caught me off guard watching him," Waller said. "He looks fast because he is great getting off the ball right at the snap, like no one I have ever seen — he will be ahead of wide receivers. So I am watching and thinking, 'I didn't know Jason Witten was that fast,' but it's that get-off and there are a lot of small details to his game that are just incredible."

Waller can't wait to get together with Witten and the rest of his teammates.

"I think we had another great draft class and we're putting together something special on both sides of the ball," he said. "We have a lot to offer Las Vegas, a lot of energy and we also want to do big things in the community."

Waller was also excited about the schedule, much fairer than last season's, when the Raiders were away from home for seven straight weeks.

"I feel that if we can get through last year's schedule, there is nothing we can't get through," he said.

The bar is high for Waller, in particular. A receiver in college, Waller is still learning the nuances of the tight end position and last season had 90 catches for 1,145 yards at 27 years old. And that's with defenses bracketing their coverage toward him after receiver Antonio Brown was cut and Tyrell Williams was injured.

"I see a lot of room for growth," Waller said.

He can block as well and is already among the handful of most valuable tight ends in the NFL. But Waller leaves the swagger to his rap persona.

"I try not to compare and say I am better than that guy," Waller said. "Saying I am the top dog doesn't do too much for me, because things change week to week. I just need to be the best me I can possibly be. That makes my life a lot simpler.

After football meetings and workouts every weekday, Waller works just as hard in the evenings, coming up with new beats. In many ways it's harder than being a professional football player.

"I pull the laptop open and ... I don't know," Waller said. "Sometimes I will go off a sample and try to flip that. Or I will play with some software that I found called Arcade and I try to create a melody. I just go through random sounds and click and play things on my keyboard until I catch something and I can hear something in my mind. And then I find another sound to layer it up.

"There is no one process. I could also be inspired by something I see or hear or some feeling I have. Something someone said to me can translate into a note that can spark a beat. It's random. ... I try not to press for it and let it just happen. I have taken a week off at times and when I come back to it, I really missed it. I just really enjoy it."

Teammates have remarked how on team flights Waller disappears into his laptop from wheels up to wheels down. And he has said he has missed the first bus from the hotel to the stadium on game days because he has gotten lost in his music.

Waller filmed all five music videos in a span of 39 days, each Saturday beginning in February, in the Atlanta area. He is also recording new stuff, with the same plan that he had last year — having enough songs to put out another project/album at some point during the season.

"I can mess around with a beat for fun during the season," Waller said, "but I don't get to spend an extended amount of time. So I like to get most of my music work done before the season gets going."

Waller recently started his own YouTube channel, and reaction to the music has been positive.

"I have put a lot of work into it and I think it sounds good. So it's definitely good to see other people like it because music is meant to be shared," Waller said. "It was dope to get that check, just because I never thought that was ever possible."

And yes, Raiders fans, that collaboration with teammate Maxx Crosby is still in the works.

"I sent Maxx a whole bunch of beats, so hopefully when he puts something out he will be using one of mine," Waller said. "He is a busy guy, and whenever he is ready to lock in, I am here for him."

Waller will put that song on his YouTube channel or on Instagram when the time comes. While the Instagram account is also popular, Waller winds up checking it almost every day for more important stuff than reactions to his music.

"People message me and tell me how they relate to my story and what they are going through, so I use that to have short conversions with them," Waller said.

Waller struggled with opiate and cocaine addiction when he first came into the league. He was suspended twice for failing drug tests, including for the entire 2017 season.

"I try and connect with fans on Instagram whenever I can and let them know that I see them and I am there, and that I am just a normal human being who had to overcome some stuff," Waller said. "Ever since 'Hard Knocks' (last summer), people have been able to relate to what I went through and I want to let them know that I appreciate them and what they are going through as well. And those talks give me a recharge because I am not perfect and I have doubts and I need to be picked up sometimes, too."

"People saying they look to me for inspiration gives me extra life sometimes."

Waller also started the Darren Waller Foundation a few months ago. There was a kickoff dinner scheduled for it on the Las Vegas Strip during NFL Draft weekend, but the pandemic wiped that out.

"Corona has us on hold, but we'll start having events as soon as Vegas is up and running again," Waller said. "We just want to educate people and put my story and the stories of others in front of the youth."

"Kids always envision who they want to be when they grow up, without really taking stock of their mental health and how happy they are going to be when they get there. Maybe kids ages 10 on up to 25, getting in front of them as well as having an online community, which can serve as a safe space. They can say whatever is on their minds.

"I am trying to put together things that I wish I would have taken advantage of when I was a teenager."

Music was one of the things that Waller turned to before he was sober, and it's been even sweeter for him since he cleaned up.

"On my first project, there are songs where I am talking about drinking or using drugs, and I was able to learn how to make music without doing that," Waller said. "I was afraid that once I got sober, my music was going to be trash — because you know, that's a big part of rap — but my stuff did get better and I was able to be creative without rapping about material things, drug, alcohol or talking about women in a crazy way. I was able to find my sound, find my pocket and still be confident and still feel like I could still put music out that people would want to listen to."
