DENVER BRONCOS QUICK HITS

The Denver Broncos and New England Patriots will meet on Sunday for the 46th time in the regular season with Denver holding a 25-20 all-time advantage in the series (16-9 at home). See Page 3

Denver Owner Pat Bowlen, who was inducted this season as the 28th member of the team's Ring of Fame, has guided the Broncos to the best win percentage (.613) in the NFL and the third-best win percentage in American pro sports during his tenure (1984-pres.). See Page 7

Under Owner Pat Bowlen, the Broncos have experienced more Super Bowl appearances (6) than losing seasons (5). See Page 7

With an 8-2 record this year, the Broncos are ensured their NFL-best 27th .500 or better record during Owner Pat Bowlen's 32-year tenure (1984-pres.). See Page 8

E.V.P. of Football Ops./GM John Elway has signed or extended the contracts of 14 players who have combined for 20 Pro Bowl selections with the Broncos. See Page 8

Since Elway was hired in 2011 (and coming off a 4-12 record in 2010), the Broncos have totaled the second-most regular-season wins (54) in the NFL. See Page 8

In his 31 NFL seasons, including his nine years as a player, Gary Kubiak has been a part of the second-most total wins (303) among active NFL head coaches. See Page 8

With six games remaining in the 2015 season, Gary Kubiak's eight wins are already tied for the fourth most by a first-year Broncos head coach. See Page 9

Broncos Offensive Coordinator Rick Dennison (12 yrs.), Defensive Coordinator Wade Phillips (24 yrs.) and Special Teams Coordinator Joe DeCamillis (23 yrs.) represent the most experienced trio of coordinators in the league with 59 combined years of coordinator experience. See Page 10

Broncos QB Brock Osweiler, who made his first career start last week against Chicago, posted the highest completion percentage (74.1) in team history by a player in his first career start in addition to passing for 250 yards and two touchdowns. See Page 14

Denver WR Demaryius Thomas ranks fifth in franchise history in both receptions (419) and receiving yards (6,133). See Page 15

Broncos RB Ronnie Hillman, who has started Denver's last four games, is currently tied for the sixth-most 100-yard rushing games (3) in the NFL this season. See Page 16

The Broncos, who lead the NFL in total defense (284.3 ypg), pass defense (190.6 ypg) and sacks (34), rank among the league leaders in nearly every significant defensive category through 10 games. See Page 19

Broncos OLBs Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware each rank in the Top 4 in NFL history (since 1982) in sacks per game among players who have appeared in 50 or more contests. See Page 18

PAT BOWLEN OWNERSHIP PROFILE

Broncos Owner Pat Bowlen, who is in his 32nd year with the team in 2015, has guided the franchise to an unprecedented run of success since purchasing the team in 1984.

* - Inducted as the 28th member of the Denver Broncos Ring of Fame in 2015.

* - Ranks as the second-longest tenured current owner in the NFL.

* - First owner in professional football history to win 300 games in his first 30 seasons.

* - Appeared in six Super Bowls (2nd most in history) during three different decades, capturing AFC Championships in 1986, 1987, 1989, 1997, 1998 and 2013.

* - One of five owners in history to win back-to-back Super Bowls (1997-98).

* - Broncos have posted the most regular-season wins (309) and have experienced the fewest losing seasons (5) during Mr. Bowlen's ownership tenure.

* - Denver is the only NFL team to win 90-plus games in each of the last three decades with Mr. Bowlen as the owner.

* - During Mr. Bowlen's ownership, every Broncos regular season and playoff contest has been sold out as part of the club's 46-year, 373-game sellout streak that is the longest in the NFL.

* - The Broncos own the NFL's best home record (184-68 / .730) in the NFL during Mr. Bowlen's ownership (1984-pres.).

* - Denver has led the NFL in attendance during Mr. Bowlen's tenure, drawing nearly 20 million fans to their home games from 1984-2015.

* - The Broncos have dominated the AFC West Division under Mr. Bowlen, posting more division titles (12), conference championship game appearances (8) and Super Bowl appearances (6) than any other club in the division.

* - The Broncos have played in an NFL-high 321 nationally televised games during Mr. Bowlen's ownership, a total that includes a league-best 178 primetime games.

* - Contributed more than $150 million to the construction of Sports Authority Field at Mile High, which opened in 2001, and commissioned $30 million worth of stadium upgrades during the 2013 offseason to improve the fan experience.

* - Mr. Bowlen has served on nine league committees during his ownership of the Broncos, including chair of the Broadcast Committee (2001-06) and co-chair of the Compensation Committee (2007-09) and the Management Council Executive Committee (2007-10).

* - Helped negotiate the NFL's $18 billion television contract in 1998, the most lucrative single-sport contract in history.

* - Played a key role in several extensions of the NFL's Collective Bargaining Agreement.

* - The Broncos have played eight international games in six different countries under Mr. Bowlen's ownership (7 American Bowls, 1 regular season game in London), marking the third-most such games in the league.

* - Mr. Bowlen has maintained a substantial profile in the community during his three decades as the Denver Broncos' owner, including donating more than $25 million to charitable organizations in the last 20 years.

* - Introduced as the majority owner of the Broncos on March 23, 1984; Mr. Bowlen and the Bowlen family acquired 100 percent ownership of the Broncos in July 1985.

HEAD COACH GARY KUBIAK

KUBIAK WINS FIRST SEVEN GAMES WITH BRONCOS

In leading the Broncos to a 7-0 record through Week 8, Gary Kubiak became just the fourth head coach since the 1970 NFL merger to win his first seven games with a team.

With six games remaining in the 2015 season, Kubiak's eight wins are already tied for the fourth most by a first-year Broncos head coach.

OSWEILER SET TO MAKE SECOND CAREER START

Broncos quarterback Brock Osweiler made his first career start in Week 11 against Chicago, becoming the 44th player in franchise history to start a game at quarterback. Selected by the Broncos in the second round (57th overall) of the 2012 NFL Draft, Osweiler was the 14th quarterback to start a game for Denver after being drafted by the club.

In addition to posting the highest completion percentage (74.1) in team history by a player in his first career start, Osweiler's 250 passing yards and 127.1 rating both represent the second-best figures for a player in his first career start.

Osweiler also joined Gary Kubiak as the last two quarterbacks drafted by the Broncos to earn a win in their first career start.

McMANUS SHOWS LEG STRENGTH

Broncos kicker Brandon McManus connected on all four of his field goal attempts (57, 56, 43, 33) against Baltimore in Week 1 with his 57-yarder tying for the fifth-longest field goal in Broncos history and his 56-yarder tying for the seventh-longest.

McManus joined St. Louis kicker Greg Zuerlein (vs. Sea., 9/30/12) as the only players in NFL history to convert two field goals of 56 yards or longer in the same game.

McManus has five field goals of 50 yards or longer on the season, tying for the second most in a single season in Broncos history.

COLQUITT A HOUSEHOLD NFL NAME

Denver's Britton Colquitt and Kansas City's Dustin Colquitt are the first brothers to punt in the NFL at the same time since 1941 (George and Wes McAfee).

The Colquitt family has produced four NFL punters, including Britton and Dustin's father, Craig, and uncle, Jimmy. Craig Colquitt won two Super Bowl rings as the Steelers' punter and Jimmy Colquitt played two games for the Seahawks in 1985. All four Colquitts attended the University of Tennessee.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES

DECADES OF SUCCESS

The Broncos are in their sixth decade of professional football, looking to build off a body of work that ranks as the most consistent in the NFL in terms of winning over the last three decades.

Denver is one of just four teams to record three 90+ win decades since 1960 and the only organization to do so in each of the last three decades.

Below is a look at the Broncos' record by the decade. In its 50-plus seasons of football, Denver has posted the sixth-most regular-season wins (452 / 452-384-10) in the NFL and advanced to the postseason 20 times.

BRONCOS REGULAR-SEASON RECORD BY DECADE

HOME SELLOUT STREAK

The Broncos have sold out every home game since the beginning of the 1970 season with the exception of two replacement games played during the 1987 strike (both games were sold out before the strike).

Denver has thus sold out 353 consecutive regular-season games, which marks the second-longest home sellout streak in the NFL. With postseason games factored in, the total reaches 373.

BRONCOS OWN NFL'S LONGEST SCORING STREAK

The Broncos' 367-game scoring streak is the longest active streak in the league. The streak, which began on Monday Night Football with a 16-13 overtime loss at Seattle on Nov. 30, 1992, is the second-longest such streak in NFL history.

In the impressive run, the Broncos have scored on their first possession 143 times. Denver has scored in the first quarter 236 times during the streak and has had it extended by halftime 339 times.

Denver has had to wait until the fourth quarter to extend the streak just six times.

22's TROPHY CASE

ANDERSON AT A GLANCE:

- A third-year player who in 2014 became just the fifth undrafted running back in NFL history to make the Pro Bowl.
- Appeared in 30 regular-season games (13 starts) and two postseason contests (1 start) for the Broncos during the last three years after making the 53-man roster as a college free agent in 2013.
- Emerged as a starter for the Broncos midway through the 2014 season and totaled 179 carries for 849 yards (4.7 avg.) with eight rushing touchdowns.
- Finished the 2014 season with 10 total touchdowns (8 rush, 2 rec.), marking the most by an undrafted Broncos running back in a single season.
- Led the NFL with seven rushing touchdowns in December 2014 to tie for the third-most rushing scores by an undrafted player in a single month in NFL history.
- Posted the top two rushing performances by an undrafted player in team history in back-to-back weeks in 2014 (167 and 168 yds., Weeks 11 and 12).
- Totaled two games with three rushing touchdowns in 2014, becoming only the second player in team annals (Terrell Davis, 3-1998) with multiple games in a season posting at least three rushing scores.
- Finished his rookie season with seven carries for 38 yards (5.4 avg.) while contributing in 22 offensive plays and 36 special-teams snaps for Denver.
- Saw action in all 25 games (2 starts) in two seasons at the University of California-Berkley and rushed for 1,135 yards and 12 touchdowns on 198 carries (5.7 avg.) after transferring from Laney College.
- Entered the NFL with Denver as a college free agent on May 1, 2013.

CAREER TRANSACTIONS: Signed by Denver as a college free agent 5/1/13.

88's TROPHY CASE

All-Pro (2nd team) (2) ..... 2013-14

THOMAS AT A GLANCE:

• A sixth-year wide receiver and three-time Pro Bowl selection who has played 79 regular-season games (65 starts) and opened all seven postseason contests for the Broncos during his first five seasons in Denver.

• Ranks tied for first in franchise history with 31 total games with 100-plus receiving yards—a figure that ranks second in the NFL since 2011 when he recorded his first 100-yard receiving output.

• Posted at least 1,400 receiving yards and 10 touchdowns in each of his last three seasons, joining Marvin Harrison (4) and Jerry Rice (3) as the only players in NFL history with three consecutive years producing those totals.

• Named to his third consecutive Pro Bowl in 2014—tying for the most selections by a wide receiver in Broncos history (Rod Smith)—after setting a franchise single-season record with 1,619 receiving yards and ranking second in team annals with 111 catches on the year.

• Set a franchise record in 2014 for most 100-yard receiving games (10), reaching the century mark in seven consecutive contests (Games 4-10) to tie for the second-longest streak in league history.

• Combined with teammate Emmanuel Sanders (101-1,404) to record the most receiving yards (3,023) and tie for the most receptions (212) by an offensive tandem in the NFL in 2014—marking the second time a pair of Broncos teammates posted 100-plus receptions in the same season.

• Established a Broncos single-game receiving yardage record with his 226-yard performance vs. Arizona (10/5/14) to earn AFC Offensive player of the Week recognition.

• Ranked second in the NFL with 14 receiving touchdowns and fourth in the league with 1,430 yards on 92 catches in 2013 to earn his second consecutive Pro Bowl selection and Associated Press second-team All-Pro recognition.

• Combined with teammate Eric Decker to represent the most prolific receiving tandem (2,718 yds.) in the NFL in 2013.

• Selected to his first Pro Bowl following the 2012 season in which he caught 94 passes for 1,434 yards (15.3 avg.) with 10 touchdowns, ranking fourth in the league in receiving yards and posting the second-most 25+yard receptions (18) in the NFL.

• Fueled Denver's 29-23 win against Pittsburgh in the AFC Wild Card round (1/8/12) with his four-catch, 204-yard performance that included an 80-yard game-winning touchdown reception on the first play of overtime.

• Totaled eight receptions for 97 yards (12.1 avg.) with one touchdown in his NFL debut vs. Seattle (9/19/10) to mark the second-most catches by a Broncos rookie in his pro debut and become just the ninth player (since 1970) to record at least eight catches in their first NFL game.

• Finished his career at Georgia Tech ranked fourth in school history in receiving yards (2,339), fourth in touchdown catches (15) and seventh in receptions (120).

• Averaged nearly 20 yards per reception during his collegiate career, posting the fifth-best receiving average (19.5) for a career in Atlantic Coast Conference history.

• Selected by the Broncos in the first round (22nd overall) of the 2010 NFL Draft.

WARE AT A GLANCE:

- An 11th-year outside linebacker and member of the 2000s NFL All-Decade Team who ranks second among active players and 10th all-time with 133.5 career sacks.
- Earned his eighth Pro Bowl nod in his first season with the Broncos in 2014 to tie for the most selections by an active NFL defensive player.
- Spent his first nine NFL seasons in Dallas and was selected to start in seven Pro Bowls as a Cowboy in addition to being named first-or second-team All-Pro by the Associated Press on seven occasions.
- Registered double-digit sack totals in eight of his 10 seasons, including league-leading marks in 2008 (20.0) and 2010 (15.5)—one of five players in NFL history (since 1982) to lead the league in sacks on multiple occasions.
- Ranks second in NFL history with a sack rate of 0.82/game during his career, trailing only Pro Football Hall of Fame defensive end Reggie White (0.85/game) among players appearing in at least 75 games.
- Owns 32 career multi-sack games, including eight contests with three sacks and one game with a career-best four sacks (at Philadelphia, 10/30/11).
- Forced 34 fumbles, including 28 strip-sacks, during his career to rank fourth in the NFL since he entered the league in 2005.
- Recorded a career-best 20 quarterback takedowns in 2008 (seventh most for a single season at that time) to earn NFC Defensive Player of the Year honors from the KC Committee of 101 as well as NFL Alumni Pass Rusher of the Year recognition.
- Posted a sack in 10 consecutive games (2007-08) to tie former Broncos defensive end Simon Fletcher for the longest sack streak in league history since the statistic became official in 1982.
- Played outside linebacker in the Cowboys' 3-4 base defense during his first eight seasons and was chosen as the only two-time winner of the Dick Butkus Award (2008, '11), given to the top linebacker at the high school, collegiate and professional levels of football.
- Named NFC Defensive Player of the Week on four occasions: (Week 16 - 2005; Week 15 - 2008; Week 15 - 2009; Week 3 - 2010).
- Named AFC Defensive Player of the Month on one occasion: (Sept., 2015)
- Totaled 201 tackles, 27.5 sacks, 58 tackles for a loss and nine forced fumbles during his collegiate career at Troy University, earning Sun Belt Conference Defensive Player of the Year honors as a senior in 2007 after leading the Trojans to their first-ever bowl appearance.
- Joined the Broncos as a free agent on March 12, 2014.
- Selected by Dallas in the first round (11th overall) of the 2005 NFL Draft.

(—the second number is the percentage the quarterback has put his team in position to score, allowing for missed field goals and subtracting those drives ended by the clock and replaced due to injury. Quarterbacks who leave the game during a drive only get a replacement credit if team goes on to earn at least one first down. Blocked punts for safeties counted as drive ended by punt; —does not include plays when not at helm or not truly setting a play in motion, i.e., muffed punts/kneel downs/spiked balls: Manning 5-for-[-4], Osweiler 1-for-[-1]; Opponents 6-for-[-6]. (3 & outs includes all drives without first downs, minus FGs and clock.)*

Denver 19, Baltimore 13

Sunday, Sept. 13, 2015 • 2:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Partly Sunny, 88º, Wind NW 13 mph • TIME: 2:56 • ATTENDANCE: 76,798

Gary Kubiak earned a win in his Broncos head coaching debut as Denver outlasted the Baltimore Ravens 19-13 in a defensive battle at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

Two key defensive interceptions—one returned 51 yards for a touchdown by cornerback Aqib Talib and one by safety Darian Stewart in the end zone with 36 seconds remaining—helped Denver to its ninth-ever win without an offensive touchdown.

The Broncos' defense set the tone of the game from the opening snap, forcing the Ravens to punt on their first drive. The Ravens finished the first half with only 38 yards of offense and had four drives result in punts.

On Denver's first possession of the game, quarterback Peyton Manning led the Broncos 48 yards and converted four key first downs, three of them coming on receptions by wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders. This set up a 57-yard Brandon McManus field goal, the fifth-longest field goal made in Broncos history.

McManus converted a 56-yard field goal on Denver's next drive, becoming only the second player in NFL history with multiple field goals 56 yards or more in a single game.

Baltimore kicker Justin Tucker made a 52-yard field goal with 6:47 in the second quarter to put the Ravens on the board, and McManus added another from 43 yards out in the final seconds of the second quarter to give Denver a 9-3 halftime lead.

Denver received the kickoff to open the second half but turned the ball over on its third play from scrimmage. Ravens cornerback Jimmy Smith picked off Manning at the Denver 24-yard-line and returned the interception for a touchdown, giving the Ravens a 10-9 lead.

Baltimore expanded its lead to four after Tucker converted a 44-yard field goal early in the third quarter.

The Broncos struggled to move the ball in the third quarter, punting three times and gaining only one first down on four drives.

Talib gave Denver a much-needed jump start at the end of the quarter by intercepting Flacco and returning it 51 yards for a touchdown.

Denver's defense held Baltimore on its next possession but the Ravens were able to pin the Broncos on their own 4-yard line after a 57-yard punt by Sam Koch.

The Broncos put together a gut-check 17-play, 81-yard drive that took 10:56 off the clock in the final quarter and resulted in McManus' fourth field goal of the game—this one from 33 yards.

The Ravens drove to the Denver 16-yard-line in the final two minutes of the game, but Stewart sealed the win against his former team by wrestling the ball away from tight end Crockett Gillmore in the end zone.

With the win, Denver improved to an AFC-best 36-10-1 all-time in regular-season openers.

Denver 31, Kansas City 24

Thursday, Sept. 17, 2015 • 7:25 p.m. CT • Arrowhead Stadium • Kansas City

WEATHER: Cloudy, 87°, Wind S 13 mph • TIME: 3:23 • ATTENDANCE: 76,404

The Denver Broncos made history with their NFL-record 13th consecutive divisional road win in a 31-24 come-from-behind victory against the AFC West-rival Kansas City Chiefs at Arrowhead Stadium.

With his 256 passing yards and three touchdowns against the Chiefs, Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning joined Brett Favre as the only players in history to reach 70,000 career passing yards. Overcoming a rough start to the game, Manning rallied the Broncos to a game-tying touchdown with less than a minute in regulation before the defense sealed the win with its last of five takeaways.

Kansas City was in control early as its offense drove 70 yards on its first possession. The Broncos were able to keep the Chiefs off the scoreboard when safety David Bruton Jr. stripped running back Jamaal Charles at the 5-yard line and safety Darian Stewart recovered.

The Chiefs finally broke through as Charles capped a 78-yard Chiefs drive with a 34-yard touchdown run that put the home team up 7-0. Rookie cornerback Marcus Peters gave Kansas City a 14-0 advantage when he stepped in front of a Manning pass and returned the interception 55 yards for a touchdown.

The Broncos battled back, scoring twice in a 1:43 span before halftime to even the score at 14-14.

Manning started Denver's scoring by hitting wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders for a 16-yard touchdown pass.

On the Chiefs' next drive, cornerback Aqib Talib recorded his 29th career interception—and his second in as many weeks—to give the Broncos possession at the Chiefs 15-yard line. The Broncos capitalized on the takeaway as Manning connected with tight end Virgil Green in the back of the end zone for a 1-yard touchdown.

Denver held Kansas City to a field goal to open the second half and forced the Chiefs to punt on their next three drives. Broncos kicker Brandon McManus helped Denver keep pace, converting a 54-yard field goal with 3:18 remaining in the third frame.

Midway through the fourth quarter, cornerback Chris Harris Jr. thwarted another red zone scoring attempt by the Chiefs as he intercepted quarterback Alex Smith on the Denver 10-yard-line.

Kansas City forced a Broncos three-and-out following the interception and used the momentum to take a 24-17 lead on an 8-yard touchdown run from Knile Davis with less than three minutes remaining the game.

Denver 24, Detroit 12

Sunday, Sept. 27, 2015 • 8:30 p.m. EST • Ford Field • Detroit

WEATHER: Indoors • TIME: 3:19 • ATTENDANCE: 62,920

The Denver Broncos improved to 3-0 for the 13th time in team history and earned their second consecutive road win by beating the Detroit Lions 24-12 in a Sunday Night Football match up at Ford Field.

The Broncos' reinvigorated offense, which operated exclusively out of the shotgun and pistol formations, helped quarterback Peyton Manning post his 92nd career 300-yard passing game (31-of-42, 324 yds., 2 TD, 1 INT). Denver also benefited from 10 points off three turnovers as the defense limited Detroit to just 4.3 yards per play on the night.

Denver started strong defensively, forcing three punts and a turnover on Detroit's first four possessions. Linebacker DeMarcus Ware was in on two sacks of Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford, who was under pressure throughout the game.

The Broncos seemed poised to score after cornerback Bradley Roby's early interception, but on the first play of the second quarter, Lions defensive tackle Haloti Ngata tipped a Manning pass that safety Glover Quin was able to intercept.

Denver's offense responded after a Lions punt and Manning led the Broncos on a 12-play, 80 yard scoring drive, capped by running back Ronnie Hillman's 1-yard touchdown run.

Detroit followed with a rushing touchdown on their next drive, a 1-yard-run by running back Joique Bell. On the Lions' extra point attempt, cornerback Aqib Talib blocked the kick to preserve Denver's lead.

Up 7-6 with 1:03 remaining in the half, Manning went back to work, finding wide receivers Bennie Fowler and Demaryius Thomas for key first-downs. On fourth-and-1 near midfield, Manning hooked up with Thomas along the right sideline for a 45-yard touchdown to give Denver a 14-6 halftime advantage.

The Broncos opened the second half with a fumble that the Lions capitalized on with a 16-yard touchdown pass from Stafford to running back Ameer Abdullah.

Safety T.J. Ward helped the Broncos stop the Lions' two-point conversion and Denver maintained a 14-12 lead entering the final quarter.

Broncos kicker Brandon McManus converted a 48-yard field goal midway through the fourth to give Denver a five-point advantage. The score was set up by a Detroit fumble that was forced by Shaquil Barrett and recovered by Malik Jackson.

On the Lions' next drive, safety David Bruton jumped a Stafford pass and intercepted it with 3:37 remaining in the game.

The offense responded for Denver as Manning found wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders for a 34-yard reception and capped the drive with an 11-yard touchdown pass to tight end Owen Daniels for the game-sealing touchdown.

4 Denver 23, Minnesota 20

Sunday, Oct. 4, 2015 • 2:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Cloudy, 60º, Wind NE 9 mph • TIME: 3:00 • ATTENDANCE: 77,029

The Denver Broncos used a late field goal and a last-minute takeaway to stay perfect on the season with a 23-20 win against the Minnesota Vikings at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

The Broncos won their first four games for the eighth time in franchise history and quarterback Peyton Manning recorded his NFL-record seventh career 4-0 start.

Denver found success on the ground, recording its first 100-yard rushing game of the season with 144 total yards and a touchdown. Meanwhile, the Broncos largely contained Minnesota's potent rushing attack that featured All-Pro running back Adrian Peterson.

The Denver defense, which totaled seven sacks from seven different players, pressured Vikings quarterback Teddy Bridgewater early and forced consecutive punts to start the game.

Kicker Brandon McManus gave the Broncos a 3-0 lead by converting a 33-yard field goal on Denver's opening drive. Minnesota attempted to tie the game early in the second quarter, but kicker Blair Walsh's 38-yarder sailed wide left.

On Denver's ensuing possession, running back Ronnie Hillman raced 72 yards for a touchdown—the fourth-longest scoring run in team history—to give the Broncos a 10-0 lead.

Both teams added field goals in the second quarter before a Manning pass at midfield was intercepted by Vikings linebacker Anthony Barr with 32 seconds remaining in the half. Minnesota capitalized on the Denver miscue with a 4-yard touchdown pass from Bridgewater to wide receiver Mike Wallace and narrowed the score to 13-10 at halftime.

Manning orchestrated an 8-play, 80-yard drive to open the second half highlighted by a 43-yard completion to wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders. On fourth-and-goal from the 1-yard line, Manning found tight end Owen Daniels wide open in the end zone to extend the Broncos' lead to 20-10.

The Vikings used a fourth down scoring play of their own to answer early in the fourth quarter. Peterson, who was held to 30 rushing yards through three quarters, scored on a 48-yard run on 4th-and-1 to trim Minnesota's deficit to 20-17.

On Denver's next drive, Manning's pass to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas was intercepted by Minnesota safety Harrison Smith near midfield. The Denver defense was able to keep Minnesota out of the end zone as the Vikings settled for a 33-yard field goal from Walsh to tie the game at 20-20.

The Broncos responded with a field goal drive of their own as McManus converted a 39-yard kick with 1:51 remaining.

With the Vikings driving to win or tie the game, Broncos safety T.J. Ward recorded his second sack of the game, forcing a Bridgewater fumble. Linebacker Von Miller recovered the fumble to seal the Broncos' fourth consecutive win.

5 Denver 16, Oakland 10

Sunday, Oct. 11, 2015 • 1:25 p.m. PDT • O.co Coliseum • Oakland

WEATHER: Sunny, 72º, Wind W 10 mph • TIME: 3:02 • ATTENDANCE: 54,500

In an AFC West divisional match up, the Denver Broncos' defense turned in another clutch performance with a late interception return for a touchdown to boost Denver to a 16-10 win over the Oakland Raiders at O.co Coliseum.

Up 9-7 midway through the fourth quarter with Oakland driving, cornerback Chris Harris Jr. recorded his second interception of the season when he picked off Raiders quarterback Derek Carr on a pass up the middle and returned it 74 yards for a Broncos touchdown.

With the win, the Broncos extended their NFL-record divisional road game win streak to 14 consecutive victories.

The Denver defense established control early, keeping the Raiders off the scoreboard in the first quarter for the fifth consecutive week to begin the year. The Broncos' first-quarter shutout was made possible when nose guard Sylvester Williams blocked Raiders kicker Sebastian Janikowski's 38-yard field goal attempt with 2:39 remaining in the opening frame.

The Broncos were first to score as kicker Brandon McManus converted a 25-yard field goal to open the second quarter.

Oakland then orchestrated an 8-play, 80-yard scoring drive to take a 7-3 lead on a 3-yard touchdown pass from Carr to fullback Marcel Reece.

After the teams exchanged punts, Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning executed a long drive in the final three minutes of the second quarter. However, on third-and-5 from the Oakland 9-yard line, Manning was intercepted in the end zone by Raiders safety Charles Woodson to preserve Oakland's four-point lead at the half.

On the Raider's first offensive play of the second half, Broncos linebacker Von Miller beat his blocker and strip-sacked a surprised Carr to give Denver the ball deep in Oakland territory.

The Broncos capitalized on the takeaway, using a 20-yard McManus field goal to narrow the Raiders' lead to 7-6. Oakland was forced to punt on its two ensuing drives of the third quarter, while McManus delivered on a 52-yard field goal to regain the Broncos' lead, 9-7.

On Denver's next drive, Woodson intercepted Manning again near midfield, but the Raiders failed to turn the takeaway into points as Janikowski's 40-yard attempt sailed wide left.

With the Broncos holding a two-point lead midway through the fourth quarter, Oakland drove into field goal range. On third-and-5, Denver called a zero blitz and Carr's rushed pass landed in the hands of Harris Jr., whose 74-yard interception return gave the Broncos a 16-7 lead.

With under two minutes remaining, the Raiders benefited from a 48-yard interference call on Denver to set up a 50-yard Janikowski field goal. The Broncos recovered the onside kick to preserve the six-point win.

Denver 26, Cleveland 23

Sunday, Oct. 18, 2015 • 1:02 p.m. EDT • FirstEnergy Stadium • Cleveland

WEATHER: Sunny, 47º, Wind NW 20 mph • TIME: 3:44 • ATTENDANCE: 67,431

The Denver Broncos remained perfect on the season in a late back-and-forth 26-23 overtime win against the Cleveland Browns in front of 67,431 fans at FirstEnergy Stadium.

With the victory, Broncos Head Coach Gary Kubiak became just the eighth head coach since the 1970 NFL merger to win his first six games with a team.

Denver kicker Brandon McManus began Denver's scoring effort for the day, connecting on a 29-yard field goal with 2:52 left in the first quarter.

In the opening seconds of the second quarter, Browns quarterback Josh McCown looked for receiver Travis Benjamin but instead was intercepted by cornerback Aqib Talib, who returned the ball 63 yards for a touchdown—his second defensive score of the season.

The teams combined for five punts and a missed field goal the rest of the half as Denver entered the break with a 10-0 lead.

Cleveland opened the second half with an 8-play, 74-yard drive that was capped by an 11-yard touchdown pass from McCown to tight end Gary Barnidge.

With 5:38 remaining in the third period and Denver holding a 10-7 lead, outside linebacker Shaquil Barrett, in his first NFL start, strip-sacked McCown and recovered the ball at the Cleveland 41-yard-line. The Broncos turned the takeaway into three points on a 25-yard McManus field goal.

McManus added another kick in the first two minutes of the fourth quarter, converting a 39-yarder to give the Broncos a two-score advantage, 16-7.

The Browns responded on their ensuing drive, as McCown found Barnidge again up the middle for a 14-yard score.

When the Broncos regained possession, a tipped Manning pass was intercepted by Browns linebacker Karlos Dansby, who returned the ball 35 yards for a touchdown to give Cleveland its first lead of the day. The Browns attempted a two-point conversion, but McCown's pass fell incomplete.

On Denver's very next offensive play, Manning found wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders deep down the right sideline for a 75-yard touchdown to regain Denver's lead, 23-20.

The Browns added a 26-yard field goal from kicker Travis Coons in the final minutes to tie the game at 23-23, and safety David Bruton intercepted McCown on the Denver 31-yard-line with 53 seconds on the clock to force overtime.

After Manning was intercepted on the Broncos' first possession in overtime, Denver's defense came up big with two sacks and a tackle for loss to force a Cleveland punt.

7 Denver 29, Packers 10

Sunday, Nov. 1, 2015 • 6:30 p.m. MST • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Partly Cloudy, 61°, Wind SW 9 mph • TIME: 2:52 • ATTENDANCE: 77,075

In only the fourth matchup of 6-0 teams in NFL history, the Denver Broncos used 500 yards of offense and a stifling defense to defeat the Green Bay Packers 29-10 and improve to 7-0 for just the second time in club annals.

A crowd of 77,075 was on hand to witness Owner Pat Bowlen being inducted as the 28th member of the team's Ring of Fame.

Also in attendance to help celebrate Bowlen's induction was the owner's first World Championship team from 1997 that beat the Packers in Super Bowl XXXII.

The Denver defense, which held Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers to a career-low 77 passing yards, extended its first-quarter shutout streak to seven games by forcing Green Bay to punt on its first three drives.

Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning, who completed 21-of-29 passes (72.4%) for 340 yards, orchestrated three consecutive scoring drives to give the Broncos a 17-0 advantage midway through the second quarter.

On Denver's second possession of the game, running backs C.J. Anderson and Ronnie Hillman combined for 37 yards on six carries and Manning hit tight end Virgil Green and wide receiver Demaryius Thomas for big first-down plays. The 9-play, 83-yard drive was capped by a 1-yard Hillman touchdown run.

Manning found Thomas deep again on the next drive as the two connected on a 47-yard completion down the left side. Hillman finished the drive with a 15-yard scoring run.

The Broncos' defense forced the Packers to go three-and-out and quickly returned the ball to Manning and the offense, which went 51 yards on eight plays. Kicker Brandon McManus converted a 50-yard field goal to complete Denver's first-half scoring with 7:46 remaining.

The Packers finally got on the board by bookending halftime with scoring drives. With 2:58 remaining in the second quarter, running back Eddie Lacey punched in a 2-yard touchdown run to narrow the Broncos lead to 17-7 at the half.

On Green Bay's opening drive of the third quarter, kicker Mason Crosby converted a 56-yard field goal to draw within one score of the Broncos.

Manning put together another long drive in response, connecting with Thomas twice and handing the ball to Anderson, who went 28 yards up the middle for a touchdown.

After the Packers were forced to punt, McManus added a 24-yard field goal to give the Broncos a 27-10 lead with 12:25 remaining.

The Broncos' defense ended any comeback hope for the Packers as linebacker DeMarcus Ware strip-sacked Rodgers deep in Green Bay territory resulting in a safety and a 29-10 lead.

With the win, Denver's Gary Kubiak became just the fourth head coach in NFL history to win his first seven games with a team.

Indianapolis 27, Denver 24

Sunday, Nov. 8, 2015 • 4:25 p.m. EST • Lucas Oil Stadium • Indianapolis

WEATHER: Sunny, 54º, Wind ESE 5 mph • TIME: 3:06 • ATTENDANCE: 66,894

Despite overcoming a 17-point deficit in the first half, the Denver Broncos lost their first game of the season, falling 27-24 to the Indianapolis Colts at Lucas Oil Stadium.

Entering the game at 7-0 for the second time in team history, the Broncos fell behind early and committed two costly turnovers to snap their win streak.

Indianapolis began the scoring with a 7-yard touchdown run by Colts running back Frank Gore midway through the first quarter to end Denver's seven-game streak of opponent shutouts in the opening frame.

The Colts extended their lead on their ensuing two drives, one on a 43-yard Adam Vinatieri field goal and the other on a 3-yard pass from Colts quarterback Andrew Luck to tight end Jack Doyle.

The Broncos struggled offensively during the first half with their first six possessions resulting in five punts and a turnover.

When it seemed that Denver would take to the locker room trailing by 17 at the break, Broncos safety Omar Bolden ran back his first career punt for a touchdown as time expired in the second quarter to close the gap to 17-7 at halftime.

The Broncos built on their end-of-half momentum to hold the Colts scoreless in the third quarter and pull even with Indianapolis just 10 minutes into the second half.

On Denver's first drive of the third quarter, Manning found wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders deep down the middle for a 64-yard touchdown pass on 3rd-and-14.

After forcing a three-and-out from Indianapolis, Manning went 6-for-7 on Denver's next drive to set up a 29-yard field goal by Broncos kicker Brandon McManus that evened the score at 17-17.

Less than a minute into the fourth quarter, the Colts retook the lead on an 8-yard touchdown pass from Luck to Colts running back Ahmad Bradshaw, capping a 12-play, 80-yard drive.

Manning and the offense responded, driving 80 yards of their own for a game-tying, 1-yard touchdown pass from Manning to tight end Owen Daniels, who finished the game with a team-high 102 yards on six catches.

Vinatieri broke through the scoreboard gridlock on Indianapolis' next drive, drilling a 55-yard field goal to give the Colts a 27-24 advantage with 6:13 remaining in the game.

On Denver's next offensive play, Manning's pass to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas was intercepted on a diving catch by Colts cornerback Darius Butler.

The Colts, aided by two third-down conversions and four Broncos penalties, were able to drain the final six minutes off the clock to prevent Denver from tying or winning the game.

Manning, who threw for 281 yards against his former team, came up two yards shy of tying Brett Favre for the all-time career record.

9 Kansas City 29, Denver 13

Sunday, Nov. 15, 2015 • 2:30 p.m. MST • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Mostly Sunny, 64º, Wind NE 5 mph • TIME: 3:22 • ATTENDANCE: 76,973

The Denver Broncos had their seven-game win streak against the Kansas City Chiefs snapped as they dropped their first AFC West matchup of the year by a score of 29-13 at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

Denver struggled offensively from the onset, the only highlight being quarterback Peyton Manning's first-quarter pass to running back Ronnie Hillman in which he passed Brett Favre's record of 71,838 yards to become the NFL's all-time leader in passing yards.

The Chiefs forced five turnovers and six punts on Denver's first 11 offensive possessions, shutting out the Broncos through three quarters.

Despite Kansas City's average field position starting beyond its own 47-yard line, Denver's defense gave up just two touchdowns on the day while forcing six Chiefs field goal attempts.

The Chiefs turned their first of four interceptions off Manning into seven points as running back Charcadrick West scored on a 4-yard run to cap a 5-play, 31-yard drive in the first quarter.

Chiefs kicker Cairo Santos converted four field goals (48, 49, 34, 33) in the opening half to give Kansas City a 19-0 lead at the break.

Kansas City recovered an onside kick to begin the second half, and Santos added a 50-yard field goal early in the third quarter to extend the Chiefs' lead to 22-0.

With 6:34 remaining in the third quarter, Broncos quarterback Brock Osweiler replaced Manning behind center. He led Denver's offense inside the Kansas City red zone before the Chiefs picked him off in the end zone for their fifth interception of the day.

Kansas City capitalized on the takeaway as West took a short pass from quarterback Alex Smith and weaved 80 yards for a touchdown, giving the Chiefs a 29-0 edge with 11:10 to play.

Osweiler rebounded to direct a 12-play, 80-yard drive that was capped by a 1-yard Hillman touchdown run with 5:27 remaining. The ensuing two-point attempt failed, but the Broncos were able to avoid their first-ever shutout at home.

After Santos missed on his sixth field goal attempt—from 48 yards out—the Broncos marched 62 yards on five plays and scored on a 7-yard touchdown pass from Osweiler to wide receiver Andre Caldwell.

The Broncos' final tally pulled them within two scores of the Chiefs but the ensuing onside kick was recovered by Kansas City and the visiting team was able to run out the final 1:45 of the game.

In the loss, which snapped Denver's 11-game home winning streak, Osweiler completed 14-of-24 passes for 146 yards with one touchdown and one interception (72.6 rtg.).

Linebacker Von Miller recorded his fifth sack of the season to become just the third player in team history with at least five sacks in each of his first five seasons.

10 Denver 17, Chicago 15

Sunday, Nov. 22, 2015 • 12:02 p.m. CST • Soldier Field • Chicago

WEATHER: Sunny, 29º, Wind SSW 9 mph, Wind Chill: 21º • TIME: 3:01 • ATTENDANCE: 62,483

Making his first career start on his 25th birthday, Denver quarterback Brock Osweiler led the Broncos to their eighth win of the season in a 17-15 victory over the Chicago Bears and former head coach John Fox at a chilly Soldier Field.

With game-time temperatures in the 20s, Osweiler completed 20-of-27 passes for 250 yards and two touchdowns with his 74.1 completion percentage representing the highest mark in team history for a quarterback making his first start for the team.

The Broncos surged to an early lead on their first possession of the game with a four-play, 74-yard drive that ended with a 48-yard scoring pass to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas. The play marked Denver's first opening-drive touchdown of the season.

The Denver defense went to work from the start, keeping former Broncos offensive coordinator Adam Gase and quarterback Jay Cutler under wraps and holding Chicago to 1-of-4 on red zone opportunities.

In the first half, the Broncos held the Bears to three punts and two field goals on their five possessions. Bears kicker Robbie Gould converted 46-yard and 37-yard kicks on consecutive drives in the second quarter to narrow the score to 7-6.

With 3:40 remaining in the half, Osweiler orchestrated a 13-play, 82-yard drive with significant help from tight ends Vernon Davis and Owen Daniels to drain the final minutes off the clock. Kicker Brandon McManus drilled a 24-yard field goal as time expired to give Denver a 10-6 lead at the break.

Midway through the third quarter, Broncos inside linebacker Danny Trevathan intercepted Cutler at the Chicago 39-yard-line to set up another scoring opportunity for the Broncos.

Running back Ronnie Hillman, who rushed for 102 yards on 21 carries (4.9 avg.), attempted to give Denver a two-score lead on 4th-and-1 from the Bears' 2-yard line, but his feet got tangled up with Osweiler's following the handoff and he was unable to convert.

After taking over on downs, the Bears drove 79 yards on eight plays and finished with a 37-yard field goal to again draw within one point of the Broncos, 10-9.

Denver extended its lead on the first possession of the fourth quarter as wide receiver Cody Latimer corralled his first career touchdown reception—a 10-yarder on third down—to help extend the Broncos' lead to 17-9.

The Bears' following two possessions were stopped by Denver—the first on a Broncos goal-line stand and the second when outside linebacker Von Miller strip-sacked Cutler and defensive end Malik Jackson recovered at the Denver 33-yard-line.

Chicago had one final possession with less than two minutes remaining and found the end zone with 24 seconds left to cut the defect to 17-15. However, the Bears' rushing attempt on their two-point conversion try was stopped as Denver's defense sealed the win.

Pat Bowlen made Denver Broncos a family

By Mark Kiszla
Denver Post
October 29, 2015

They are Broncos for life and wanted to thank Pat Bowlen for inviting them into the family. Ed McCaffrey, Jake Plummer and Rod Smith sat around a table at the team's Dove Valley headquarters. Outside, in the parking lot, the luxury cars of current Denver players sat gleaming in the Colorado sun.

"When you think about it," Smith said, "Mr. B paid for all these friggin' cars."

When Bowlen is enshrined Sunday night in the Ring of Fame, the ceremony will serve dual purposes, as a way for the Broncos and their fans to thank the franchise owner of 32 years for all the victories, but also to allow a city to blow a kiss as an opening farewell to a 71-year-old man battling the cruel curse of dementia.

The tougher the goodbye, the deeper the love.

As curator of the local NFL franchise since 1984, Bowlen's work is distinguished by two Super Bowl rings and defined by a love affair between a team and a town so strong it is now nearly impossible to say Denver without thinking Broncos.

Everybody knows the big stuff. Here's a peek at all the small ties that bind teammates forever and transform a football franchise into a family.

"I broke my leg on a Monday night game," said McCaffrey, recalling a gruesome injury late in his nine-year Broncos career, when he got hurt against the New York Giants on opening night of the 2001 season.

What followed were months of grueling rehabilitation for McCaffrey. The veteran wide receiver would arrive at dawn to ride a stationary bicycle at the team's practice facility. And who would be pedaling and dripping sweat alongside him? Mr. B.

In 2004, Plummer was filled with grief over the death of dear friend Pat Tillman, who quit the Arizona Cardinals to join the Army Rangers and fight in Afghanistan. The Broncos and every other league team wore a No. 40 decal on their helmets for a single game to honor Tillman, but Plummer was offended when informed if he wore the sticker all season it would be a violation of the NFL's uniform code.

"The NFL was fining me and telling me to take it off, so I had to take it off," Plummer said. "I was upset by it, and Mr. Bowlen knew that."

So what did Mr. B do? He ordered a large replica of the No. 40 sticker installed near the 40-second play clock at the north end of the stadium in Denver.

"And that was solely for me," Plummer said. "I wanted to honor (Tillman) more than just one game out of the season. Mr. Bowlen could see that, sense that and feel that. To do that, it meant a lot. He cared about me."

With Mr. B in charge, there was never a wall between the owner's suite and the locker room. On Friday afternoons during the season, Bowlen would put on his favorite pair of oversized Hollywood sunglasses, venture down the stairs from his office to argue about college football with players during lunch, with everybody predicting outcomes of games.

"They're sitting there with the owner of the club, and players are cracking jokes on him," said Smith, remembering how teammates would poke fun at Bowlen's beloved Oklahoma Sooners. "And I'm thinking: 'That's not real smart.' "

As gratitude for working alongside Mr. B was expressed, what struck me was the common orange thread that runs from Smith to McCaffery to Plummer and so many alums who will be in the stadium to salute Bowlen. As a player, each man made big plays, but more than that, McCaffrey, Plummer and Smith were genuinely loved by teammates.

In a business where roster turnover of 40 percent per year is not uncommon, football franchises strive to create a sense of family. Mr. B got'r done. The Broncos have won through the decades, in no small part because the way Bowlen ran this organization fostered friendships that endure far longer than the here-today, gone-tomorrow nature of the NFL.

"Everything starts at the top," Smith said.

With time, everything fades and even the most vivid memories slowly drift away from the man who built the Broncos. Because nothing is truly forever, it makes us cherish it all while we still can, from the Super Bowl heartaches to the joy of being able to finally lift the Lombardi Trophy and shout "This one's for John!" Whether it's the construction of a new stadium or that goofy fur coat he wore on the sideline way back in the day, the details in Bowlen's mind have grown fuzzier, because that is the curse of Alzheimer's disease.

During halftime of the game against Green Bay, however, 75,000 voices will fill Sports Authority Field at Mile High with a hymn of praise for Bowlen, with the tears being drowned out by cheers.

But, for me, there was another little scene last week that spoke even louder to the enduring strength of Bowlen's legacy.

When the cameras were turned off, the recorders put away and the interview was done, Eddie Mac, Jake the Snake and Rod did not want to leave. They lingered, telling tall tales, punctuated by a slap to the shoulder and a laugh from deep in the belly. Just like brothers do at a family reunion.

You cannot spell Broncos without Mr. B.

Bowlen's insatiable competitiveness defines his ownership

By Troy Renck
Denver Post
October 30, 2015

It would not have been possible to invent a better owner for the Denver Broncos than Pat Bowlen. He was perfectly cast even if he seemed an initial mismatch.

Who was this Canadian walking the sidelines in a fur coat? The perception of Bowlen missed the reality of why he fit so well. Bowlen possessed a rare combination of skills for someone with the corner office: he was insanely driven, creating the highest expectations, yet refused to meddle.

"He had a way of applying pressure to people in the building," Broncos president Joe Ellis said with a smile. "But he never made it about himself, ever. Never. He was never going to do that."

Courage of conviction, a defined vision — with humility? Find the number of professional sports owners who fit this description. It's a small list and typically starts and ends with the organizations which have won championships.

What will always resonate with me as Bowlen enters the Ring of Fame on Sunday night is his competitiveness. It's unfortunate he won't be able to attend as he fights the good fight with Alzheimer's, a disease that has affected so many families, including my own. But Bowlen's presence, his spirit, will resonate.

I didn't know Bowlen as well as previous beat writers covering the Broncos for The Denver Post. I interviewed him a handful of times in group settings during the 1996-2000 seasons. My appreciation grew when I returned to NFL coverage last year and recognized Bowlen's fingerprints on the team's success through its record and upgraded facilities.

It always comes back to winning with Bowlen. He understood that the team was a community treasure. He owed it to the fans to put the best product on the field. That was easy given his motivation to win. It must be an insatiable at the professional level or brace yourself for decades of misery. Under his watch, the Broncos had more Super Bowl appearances (six) than losing seasons (five).

This is not an accident of good fortune.

Yes, Bowlen was once labeled the "Canadian." But he loved football. He played wide receiver at Campion High School in Prairie du Chien, Wisc. At the University of Oklahoma, he made the freshman team before recognizing he was too small to continue playing. It didn't change his appetite for the sport or his willingness to push himself in athletics.

Bowlen became a triathlete. He trained through a broken collarbone, mangled ankles and a bad back. Most agree when your best player is your hardest worker, success follows. In the Broncos' case, Bowlen rolled up his sleeves and exhibited toughness more suited for those in shoulder pads.

An anecdote provides an explanation of the Broncos' success under Bowlen's watch and why Sunday night will be so memorable to so many. For years long after the players departed from practice, Bowlen would sneak into the weight room. He would hop onto the StairMaster, pulling on elbow pads. Yes, elbow pads.

They were necessary because he rubbed his arms raw on the side rails as he churned his legs setting the record on the machine, eclipsing former Broncos strength coach Rich Tuten.

Be great at everything. Even when no one is looking. That was Bowlen. And why this franchise was so lucky to call him boss.

"He has such passion," said Broncos longtime athletic trainer Steve Antonopulos. "He wanted everyone in the organization to be successful at what they did. He set the standard. As his friend I can tell you no one deserves this honor more than him."

Broncos CEO: 'I don't think we should drop our standards, ever'

By Lindsay Jones
USA Today
January 14, 2015

The most stunning sound at Sports Authority Field at Mile High on Sunday was the booing.

It wasn't just smattering of disgruntled fans, but boos from before halftime that grew louder by the end of the Denver Broncos' 24-13 divisional playoff loss to the Indianapolis Colts – a loss that precipitated another coaching change.

The booing was the type of sound the front office couldn't ignore, and the Broncos are starting their third head coaching search since 2009.

Team president and CEO Joe Ellis spoke with USA TODAY Sports about the decision to part with coach John Fox, the state of the Broncos franchise and the future of quarterback Peyton Manning on Tuesday.

It was Ellis who in 2011 was the driving force behind hiring Elway to run the Broncos front office, and last summer Ellis assumed the title of CEO when Pat Bowlen, who is suffering from Alzheimer's disease, had to place his ownership into a trust. As in 2011 when the Broncos hired Fox, Ellis will be involved in the coaching search, but the final decision will be made by Elway.

Q: What role did you have in this decision; what was the process like with John Elway?

A: We talked about it at length. John Fox did what we needed him to do four years ago. And we owe him a great debt of gratitude for that. It's just a situation where felt that, to get to that next level, it was time to move in a different direction and bring in something else.

Q: From a big-picture perspective, what is the state of this franchise? How set are you to win right away with a new head coach? Is the championship window still open?

A: I think it's a good group of players and some good coaches -- we'll see what the staff is that comes here with the new guy. I think our organization is positioned, starting with the players, to continue to be successful. I don't think we should drop our standards, ever. That's just not what was in (owner) Pat Bowlen's DNA, and it's not going to be as long as we are here trying to do his work the way he wants it done.

Q: But how much of that ability to win right away is tied to Peyton Manning?

A: You heard John say it today, we want him back. I mean, this is one of the game's greatest players, and you know, for much of the season, he performed at a very high level. But it's a decision that, as John said, Peyton will have to make. I think our opinion is a player of that stature is entitled to make that kind of decision on his own and on his terms.

Q: But when you look around the NFL, the teams that win consistently are the ones with a quarterback. If Manning doesn't return, how confident are you that this team will have a viable quarterback without him?

A: It is. It is. The quarterback is more than half the battle. That's a challenge I don't want to think about until we know what the future is. As I said, I think we hope Peyton returns.

Q: How do you think this decision will be met by your fans? Was it hard to hear boos at Mile High on Sunday?

A: I think they'll be energized and excited. I think our fans are very, very smart and they understand the nature of this business. They understand what our mission is, what we're about here, and they have as much passion and energy and devote as much passion and energy to it as we do. They really do. We're on the same page with what they want, I believe. You know, they are all disappointed. I think it's discouraging to watch them be disappointed. I think disappointed is an overused words these days, so I'll take it up a step and say it is discouraging, frankly. But we don't have any time to sit around and mope and feel sorry for ourselves.

Q: What's the urgency to get this coaching search done?

A: We're fast at work right away. And that's what happens` when you have one of these transitions. You don't sit and thing about last Sunday for four days. Now, when we lost to Baltimore a couple years ago, that took a long time to get over. This one was bad, we had a terrible taste, but we have to wipe it out of our mouth and find ourselves the best head coach we can.

John Elway, Hall of Fame quarterback, has built the NFL's best defense

By Frank Schwab

November 4, 2015

Derek Wolfe isn't the first guy you think about on the Denver Broncos' defense. He's probably not second or third and maybe not even seventh or eighth.

And Wolfe was just named the AFC defensive player of the week.

This is why the Broncos have the best defense in the NFL, and arguably the NFL's best defense in many years (of course, the 2013-14 Seattle Seahawks might say there is no argument). Broncos general manager John Elway put great thought and effort into assembling a defense that doesn't have a weak link among the starters and plenty of starting-level players coming off the bench. Elway, one of the greatest quarterbacks ever, is credited for landing Peyton Manning in one of the great free-agent coups in NFL history, but he has done some of his best work assembling Denver's defense. Elway used all of his available resources, whether it was high draft picks, finding undrafted stars, getting players who came cheaper because of off-field issues, spending big money in free agency or getting a free-agent bargain.

2009: S David Bruton (fourth-round draft pick)

Bruton is the only player on the 2015 defense who Elway inherited. Mostly a special teams player through his career, Bruton has excelled this season in his role as a safety/linebacker in the dime package. Elway is responsible for retaining Bruton, signing him to a three-year, $4.5 million deal before the 2013 season.

2011: OLB Von Miller (second overall draft pick) and CB Chris Harris (undrafted free agent)

In many ways it shouldn't be surprising that Elway has built arguably the NFL's best set of cornerbacks and the league-leading defense in sacks. When Elway played he studied cornerbacks and pass rushers during the week. And at the 2011 combine he admitted cornerbacks and pass rushers are the positions he felt most comfortable scouting.
"I know what I liked to go against and I know what I did not like to go against," Elway said. "The way I thought about guys and when I was watching film, was more about playing against them."

When the Broncos had the second pick in 2011, many thought they'd go with defensive tackle Marcell Dareus. Defensive tackle was a huge need. Instead, Dareus went No. 3 to the Buffalo Bills and has been an excellent player there.

Instead, Elway went with a player who might have reminded him of Kansas City Chiefs foe Derrick Thomas: Texas A&M outside linebacker Von Miller.

"Dareus is going to have a long career and a great career and he is a great player," Elway said after that draft. "I really think that we looked at Von and the difference to me was that he is one of those guys that comes along once in 10 years and a guy that has a chance to be dynamic on the football field. He is a guy, as I have said so many times, when you turn on the film you do not need to know what number he is."

Miller might not be Thomas — few in NFL history have been — but he's one of the best pass rushers in the league, a former All-Pro and a foundation player of the Broncos' defense. Elway couldn't have made a wrong call between Miller and Dareus, but he likely has no regrets about his decision.

Harris came at a much different price. He was an undrafted free agent. And you have to get a little lucky with those players. If the Broncos really thought Harris would blossom into one of the NFL's best cornerbacks, they would have drafted him. Instead they gave him a $2,000 signing bonus after he wasn't picked. But credit the Broncos' brass for this — they saw right away that Harris was one of those rare undrafted free agents.

"I can still remember the first time we took the field, and the first two practices, he stood out. And I said, 'We have something here,'" Elway said when Harris signed a $42.5 million extension last year. "I think it's about the mentality. A lot of times you get in those first couple practices, especially those young guys, you see them, they get intimidated by all of a sudden being here and they're on the field with the Denver Broncos. And Chris was not a guy who looked out of place out there."

The Broncos' 2012 draft shows the value of late picks in building a defense from top to bottom. Wolfe was a second-round pick, Denver's first pick after Elway traded back and out of the first round. Then with Denver's last two picks they nabbed Jackson in the fifth round and Trevathan in the sixth. And in the fourth round the Broncos took Omar Bolden, who has been a contributor at safety (though he has been injured much of this season).

Elway talked about being more comfortable in his second draft. That led to a few very good picks.

Wolfe was considered a bit of a reach in the second round. But he had the mentality Elway liked, spending his teenage years working on a farm in a tiny Ohio town.

"You can see that's what makes him the player that he is, and that's what will make us hungry on defense," Elway said after the draft. "He's going to rub off on a lot of guys, because he's got a motor that doesn't stop."

Trevathan was considered undersized, and was working through an injury in the pre-draft process, which didn't help his stock. The Broncos got great value on him, and Jackson too.

Trevathan, when healthy, has been a tackling and play-making machine. Wolfe and Jackson are both similar players: fantastic run defenders at about 290 pounds who are also athletic enough to also provide a pass rush. None of these three are superstars, but they're good players who contribute in a big way to the depth and overall strength of the defense. This was a crucial draft for Elway and the defense.

It is probably safe to say Williams has been a bit of a disappointment, given his draft status. But he does fill a role as a big, 313-pound run-stuffing interior defender. Nose tackle was a need and at least the Broncos got someone who can contribute there.

“He was a guy that we’ve been looking for, a young anchor in the middle of the defensive line, for some time and were able to find a good one that has a chance to be a great one,” Elway said after the draft.

Marshall was a nice find. A 2012 fifth-round pick by the Jacksonville Jaguars, he had been waived three times by the Jaguars when the Broncos signed him to their practice squad at the start of the 2013 season. He spent almost the entire 2013 season on Denver's practice squad before being signed to the active roster in Week 17. Then last year, Marshall was Denver’s leading tackler. Elway talked about how well he thought Marshall would fit in the defense. It was another no-cost find that paid off big.

2014: CB Bradley Roby (first-round pick), OLB DeMarcus Ware, S T.J. Ward and CB Aqib Talib (unrestricted free agents), OLB Shaq Barrett (undrafted free agent)

This was the offseason that showed Elway had a high priority to build a top defense. He wasn't a GM who leaned offense based on his playing background. And he wanted a defense with a fierce identity. The Broncos didn’t need Roby necessarily, considering they had two of the NFL's best cornerbacks already, though Harris was coming back off an ACL injury. But a nickel cornerback isn’t a luxury in today’s NFL; you better have a good one. In Roby, Denver got a corner who could probably be a regular starter for 25 or so other NFL teams. It was also a smart move to nab the best player available. Elway said Roby was the highest rated player left on Denver’s board “by a long shot.” Elway has consistently preached that the Broncos will draft the best available player regardless of need.

The Broncos also took a bit of a chance on Roby; Elway said “there’s no question” Roby would have gone before No. 31 if he didn’t have off-field red flags. He has had no public off-field incidents since he was drafted. Roby was also the kind of tough, aggressive defensive player Elway wants.

“He’ll stick his nose in there in the run game and he’ll tackle, and he’ll fit right in with the defense we’re putting together right now,” Elway said after Roby was picked.

Without three strong cornerbacks, the Broncos might not be able to play the style of defense they do now. The Broncos can be aggressive up front because they know all three cornerbacks can hold up in man coverage. Against the Packers, that style was a huge reason Denver held Green Bay quarterback and reigning MVP Aaron Rodgers to 77 passing yards.

Barrett was a nice low-key depth addition, an in-state college player at Colorado State who had a great preseason this year and has been a nice contributor as a pass-rushing outside linebacker.

The Broncos also had an incredibly aggressive offseason in free agency in 2014. Remember Elway having an appreciation for corners and pass rushers? He got Talib, a big, physical corner who can turn in a pick-six on any play, and Ware, possibly a future Hall of Famer who was let go by Dallas in a cost-cutting move and looked like he might be losing a step.

“We know from watching on tape how much more football he has in him,” Elway said after signing Ware.

Elway was right. Ware has played very well with the Broncos with 15.5 sacks in 22 games. Ward, an aggressive, hitting safety, rounded out the trio of big-money signees. The Broncos spent about $60 million in guaranteed money on that trio.

The Broncos were coming off a season in which they had the highest-scoring offense in NFL history and made the Super Bowl. But Elway knew, after losing to the defensive-minded Seattle Seahawks in the Super Bowl, that wouldn't be enough. And he wanted defensive players who played a certain aggressive style.

"The philosophy was to try to get the best football players with the right mentality," Elway said the day before training camp opened in 2014. "I think that we've got to get to be where we're a complete football team. We can't rely on 18 (Peyton Manning) to win it because he can't win it by himself. So I think what we've done defensively, especially with DeMarcus Ware and the leadership ability there, and Aqib, as well as T.J. and the leadership that they've brought is the defense to have their identity. And they want to have their identity, take pride in what they do and not have to rely on that offense to bail us out."

One of the biggest moves for the Broncos wasn't for the roster, but in hiring Wade Phillips to be their defensive coordinator to replace Jack Del Rio, who took the head-coaching job with the Oakland Raiders. Phillips, out of football in 2014, is a tremendous coordinator and he is having a fine season.

Ray fell in the first round in part because he was cited for possession of marijuana before the draft. That didn't deter Elway.

"He was very remorseful. He realized he made a mistake. He told me it wasn't going to happen again. We feel like we've got a great support system for him," Elway said.

Ray is injured now but is a pass-rushing menace who should be able to help late in the season and beyond this year. Like Roby, the Broncos didn't necessarily have a strong need for Ray. But he was a player Elway had ranked so high that he traded up to select him at No. 23 overall.

Smith was a low-cost veteran signing who provides depth, and the Broncos stuck with him even when he was investigated on a criminal complaint of child abuse. Smith has not been charged.

Stewart signed a two-year, $4.25 million contract this past offseason, a modest investment to make sure the Broncos had a veteran (Stewart played five years with the Rams and Ravens before signing with Denver) to replace Rahim Moore at free safety. Moore signed a three-year, $12 million deal with Houston this past offseason. Elway has made sure through his moves that there are simply no weaknesses to exploit on Denver's defense. The same mentality applied to signing Walker to a two-year, $4 million deal. Walker, a former Chief, has provided solid depth in a rotational role.

The Broncos don't spend many snaps with any liability on the field due to Elway's efforts in using all possible outlets to build a deep, fantastic defense.

How John Elway, a former quarterback, constructed one of the Broncos' best defenses

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
October 25, 2015

The depth chart read like a Pro Bowl roster, but John Elway hedged his bets.

It was in the middle of the preseason and Elway, after viewing a joint practice with the 49ers, was asked about a Denver defense that had already unveiled its renewed aggression and enviable depth after two games.

The wins were meaningless but the statistics — 11 players contributing to 12 sacks — spoke volumes.

"We feel pretty good," Elway said. "We feel good about the talent on paper, and I'm always cautious about that until we get out and play because everybody's got to play together."

Months earlier, the Broncos had left their fans and Elway, the team's general manager, dismayed with an early playoff exit. The coaching staff had been overhauled, the list of questions seemed to grow by the day and the expectations set as high as ever.

The fire Elway had long sought and expected from his teams had been doused. A number of key players left in free agency soon after, prompting Elway to revamp and restructure. He went to work making a handful of smaller, less expensive deals that, although unheralded at the time, have become vital in reshaping the Broncos' defense.

A Hall of Fame quarterback who's considered the greatest player in Broncos history, Elway led the franchise to five Super Bowl appearances. But since moving to the front office in 2011 he has left, arguably, a greater mark on the defensive side of the ball.

Through the draft and free agency, he has taken flyers on players other NFL teams passed over or discarded. He has spent big on stars but also developed up-and-comers. He has, in four years, built a defense that could end up as the franchise's finest ever, all while some of his high-round offensive draft selections (namely running back Montee Ball and wide receiver Cody Latimer) have floundered.

Through six games, the Denver defense has scored four touchdowns, amassed league highs in takeaways (17) and sacks (26), and allowed only 281.3 yards per game. It has not only prevented defeats but won games, filling in for an offense that has lacked rhythm and consistency — rarities on a Peyton Manning-led team.

"That's what we want to be," cornerback Chris Harris said. "I remember watching 'Monday Night Football Countdown' and hearing (ESPN's) Ray Lewis say that we're just good, we're not great. That's something that motivates us on the defense, to be great. We want to go down as one of the top defenses ever."

Construction of this group didn't come without criticism and risks. And it wasn't erected overnight.

Harris a super acquisition

Elway laid the foundation four months into his tenure as executive vice president of football operations when he used the No. 2 overall pick in the 2011 draft on Von Miller, a Butkus Award winner from Texas A&M whose pass-rushing skills and physical gifts would help turn around a defense that ranked as the league's worst in total yards (6,253) and points allowed per game (29.4) the previous season.

But it was a move after the draft, that July, that ranks among Elway's finest. He took a chance on Harris, an undrafted cornerback out of Kansas. Harris signed with the Broncos as a free agent, and used Champ Bailey as a mentor before turning into the leader of the secondary. Harris hasn't allowed a touchdown in coverage since Nov. 24, 2013.

Elway then went to work rounding out the front seven, finding gems low in the draft and developing others with the help of veterans. Defensive end Derek Wolfe came first, selected in the second round of the 2012 draft at No. 36. End Malik Jackson, one of the Broncos' most efficient defenders, was taken in the fifth round (No. 137). Danny Trevathan, a linebacker out of Kentucky who had drawn comparisons to Wesley Woodyard in college, was selected in the sixth round (No. 188), with a pick Denver received from the Jets as part of the Tim Tebow trade a month earlier.

In 2013 the Broncos welcomed defensive tackles Terrance Knighton (free agency) and Sylvester Williams (draft) — the former helping to turn the latter into the defense's anchor at nose tackle before leaving in free agency this past March. That year also marked the arrival of Brandon Marshall, a linebacker tossed aside by the Jaguars. Initially signed to the Broncos' practice squad, Marshall was promoted when Miller went down with a knee injury late that season and has since turned into the quarterback of the defense, calling out plays and leading the defense in tackles last season (110) and this season (48).

But the biggest and most expensive defensive installments were saved for 2014, when, in the span of 24 hours that March, Elway doled out $110 million for cornerback Aqib Talib, safety T.J. Ward and defensive end DeMarcus Ware. Two months later, Elway took another gamble, on Bradley Roby, a cornerback out of Ohio State whose draft stock fell because of an off-field incident but someone who has been a valued contributor as a nickel back.

Smaller moves were also made that would prove beneficial to this defense down the road. A Colorado State linebacker named Shaquil Barrett was among the Broncos' 15 undrafted free agents signed that May. Barrett has 3½ sacks and a team-high three forced fumbles this season.

"When I first came in, Quinton Carter, my fellow Las Vegas native, he told me, 'Man, just keep working hard. They're going to give you opportunities,' " Marshall said. "And I saw and they did. This organization gives guys opportunities. Look at Shaq. He got his opportunity and now he's doing well."

Welcome back, Wade

The finishing touches for this Denver defense came this past offseason. The line was bolstered by veteran free agents Vance Walker and Antonio Smith. The linebackers got yet another pass rusher in first-round pick Shane Ray, whom Elway traded up to select at No. 23. The secondary found its missing piece in safety Darian Stewart.

But the glue to bind it all was signed off the street: Wade Phillips was brought back as defensive coordinator when the Bengals refused to let Vance Joseph interview. Phillips has turned a good defense into the league's best after scrapping Jack Del Rio's 4-3 alignment and installing his version of the 3-4.

Phillips turned loose a blitzing, quarterback-swarming attack.

The Broncos rank third in the NFL in opponent quarterback rating (58.9) when blitzing in passing situations. They are the only team to have kept opponents scoreless in the first quarter of every game. And they rank among the top five in the league in several categories, including total defense (281.3 yards allowed per game, No. 2), scoring (17 points per game, No. 4), third-down percentage (.316, No. 2), sacks (26, No. 1) and interceptions (nine, No. 2).

The defense has taken the spotlight. And it was Elway, a man remembered for The Drive and The Helicopter and his pair of gleaming Super Bowl title rings as a quarterback, who signed off on the group that is turning heads with its depth, pick-sixes, sacks and game-winning plays.

"He's just being John Elway," Miller said. "Every year I've felt like we've had the perfect pieces. This year is no different, but I feel like this is our best team."

The Bronco Blueprint

By Peter King
MMQB.com
September 30, 2015

Sometimes things happen pretty fast in the NFL, and you don't really notice them until you look up one day and say, "My gosh, Denver can play some defense."

Then you start looking into it, and you say, "My gosh, John Elway's a pretty good architect."

Think of times in football history when a great player transitioned to the front office. How many have really worked out? Ozzie Newsome in Baltimore, to be sure. Hall of Fame safety Larry Wilson ran the Cardinals for 17 years, but never built a champion, or even a playoff team. Most great players find other things to do with their lives, things that require less than 24/7 dedication. Elway did that for a while, selling cars and running a restaurant and an arena football team.

But this is his fifth year managing the Broncos, and his fingerprints are all over the roster. Everyone thinks of Elway's role in luring Peyton Manning to Denver, convincing him to restart his career in Denver in 2012. That's been the biggest reason why Denver is 41-10 in the regular season since opening day 2012. But the defense, which surprisingly has more of Elway's imprimatur than the Denver offense, is no longer just along for the ride. It's driving the bus.

First things first: Why do this, at the time in Elway's life when a football obsession wouldn't be the priority for a fifty-something man?

"What I found out about myself," Elway said from his office Tuesday, "is I enjoy having a scoreboard on the weekend."

He went on. "Nothing will replace playing. But football is what I know best. To be able to get into it and run a team and have the opportunity to use all the assets I've learned, to put them all together, to be the architect, is a great challenge. I tell these guys here all the time what a gratifying feeling it was to work to build a championship team. I felt that as a player. I want to give these guys a chance to feel that.

I want to give them the best opportunity to win one of those."

I'd have thought Elway would be focused more on offense than defense, being a Hall of Fame quarterback. Not that he's neglected the area around Manning, but three points to be made about Elway's defensive obsession:

• Denver is ranked 30th in the league on offense and first on defense through three weeks.

• In the five Denver drafts Elway has run, he's chosen a defensive player first.

• Of the 20 defensive players with the most snaps in 2015 for Denver, Elway was responsible for bringing 19 into the fold in the past five years. The only player to precede Elway: reserve safety and special-teamer David Bruton.

"I guess, looking back to where I've come from, it might surprise you, but I have a defensive base," Elway said. "My first 10 years in the league with [coach] Dan Reeves, we were very good on defense, first with Joe Collier as defensive coordinator, and then with Wade Phillips. I guess my philosophy came watching how we were set up defense first when I played. Run the ball next, then the passing game complemented that. I wanted to be good on defense, and then I wanted to be as talented as I could be on offense. The way I saw it, if you're good on defense, you always have a chance."

For Denver, if you're deep on defense, you've always got a chance. His first draft pick was Von Miller in 2011. He got a stereo rush guy, DeMarcus Ware, in free agency in 2014, and filled in with draft picks (Sylvester Williams, Malik Jackson, Shane Ray) and undrafted free agents (Shaquil Barrett) and street free agents (Brandon Marshall, Antonio Smith). But the strength, I think, is the secondary. Elway has imported three prime corners in three different ways—through the draft (slot corner Bradley Roby), in undrafted free agency (Chris Harris) and unrestricted free agent Aqib Talib. Who has three premier corners today? The safety group is just as diverse.

One is Bruton, who speaks to former Eagle and Bronco Brian Dawkins often about little edges to the position. "I study ballcarriers," Bruton said, "and I get a lot of help from Dawk. How ballcarriers carry the ball, how we should attack it. He's big on ripping it out, and he seems to know something about a lot of guys still playing even though he's retired. I think it helps us that because so many of the guys study the game so well we have a good idea where it's going. We've got ball-hawking guys everywhere."

Elway has figured out the equation to succeed today on defense. He could have built a great secondary, but it won't look so great if he hasn't built a front that gets significant pressure. "You need the pressure," said Elway, "but if you don't have three good corners it's not going to work. You're playing 50, 60 percent three corners now, so you need to have depth there now, more than when I played."

It's strange to think of Denver this way, with Manning playing almost a subservient role. But it's the defense that's played the biggest role so far, and the defense that will have to be huge if the Broncos are going to unseat the Patriots atop the AFC. The Broncos have moderately good offenses—Minnesota, Oakland and Cleveland—on the horizon in October. But November will be tougher: Aaron Rodgers and the Packers on Nov. 1, a date at Indianapolis the next Sunday, and a Thanksgiving weekend match with the Patriots that could be New England's biggest challenge all season. It's in Denver. If the Broncos are healthy, it'll be interesting to see how New England blocks Miller and Ware—and how Brady attacks the diverse secondary.

Come Nov. 29, the world will be hyping Brady versus Manning, perhaps for the last time. But Elway knows it's more Brady versus Talib/Harris/Roby. That's what the architect of the Broncos has done to a storied rivalry, and you won't hear Manning complaining about it. For once, Manning knows he doesn't have to score in the thirties every week to have a good chance to win big games.

Now, onto your email:

ON QUARTERBACK SENIORITY

I don't know what Ed Hochuli said to Cam Newton but from watching football on Sunday, there is definitely different levels of contact allowed on QBs based on their standing in the league. If you watch young mobile QBs (Colin Kaepernick, Cam Newton, etc) when they scramble and slide feet first, they always get a little shoulder to the chest from a defender. It doesn't get called, which is fine. However, if this is Tom Brady or Aaron Rodgers or Peyton Manning or other traditional veteran QBs, it is always a penalty if they are touched after a slide. Hochuli might not have said it but I think refs definitely make players earn that extra protection.

—Bryan, San Diego

Two seasons ago, in a story I did about a week in the life of an officiating crew, I watched Gene Steratore get graded negatively for a borderline hit on a no-name quarterback, Case Keenum. The men who grade the officials' performance are not looking at flags on QB hits and saying, "If this is Tom Brady, I have to be sure that we protect him." You believe that Brady and Manning are protected more zealously than mobile quarterbacks, and you are certainly entitled to your opinion. I'm just not convinced at all that guys like Manning get breaks and guys like Newton do not.

EQUAL BYE WEEK
I know that you will be hard pressed to find anyone outside of New England or Tennessee feeling sorry for Patriots and Titans having to take a bye in Week 4, but why is this still happening in today's game? The timing of a team's bye week has an advantage/disadvantage to teams. To those taking a bye this early, they now need to play 13 consecutive weeks while others only have to do so for stretches of 8-10.

How about this solution:

NFC teams have their bye in Week 8 while the AFC teams have theirs in Week 9. You schedule division games during these weeks to help provide games that non-fans would want to watch and you can even brand it as NFC Week and AFC Week. You would provide each conference with a level playing field with its direct competitors. Why has this never been done?

—David P., Richland, Wash.

That certainly makes a lot of sense. The problem is byes are put into place not for football reasons, but for television reasons. You can't have a week in the middle of the season where you take away eight of 16 games and you can't have a week where you take away, for instance, all of the Fox games with the NFC games and then another week where you take away all the CBS games with the AFC games. In a perfect world, you would do something that would be very equal like that. But that would simply take away too much inventory on a Sunday for the NFL to ever consider it.

ON DAILY FANTASY HYPOCRISY
Can you please explain to me the NFL's sudden decision to embrace the online fantasy football sites FanDuel and DraftKings? For a league that is so openly opposed to gambling, isn't this an obvious contradiction? These sites are nothing more than organized gambling rings. It seems as though this is just a blatant cash grab by the NFL. Why isn't there more of a reaction?
— John, Erie, Pa.

The MMQB is in the process of working on a story on these fantasy sites and the league's attitude towards them. You ask a legitimate question and I want to give it a thoughtful answer, not a knee-jerk one. Give us a week or so and I'll make sure that we publicize our stories so you can be sure to read them and see how the NFL explains its position on this.

BYE-BYE BRADY
While I appreciate that Tom Brady is a once in a generation talent, can you PLEASE reduce your coverage of him? Or, maybe you should start a new column called The MMTB: The Monday Morning Tom Brady column. With a column dedicated to Tom Brady you can get it all out of your system and we can read about other 1,695 players in the league.

—Tim L.

The Patriots as of this morning are either the best team in football or one of the very best. Tom Brady, at 38, is probably having the best year of any old player to ever play the game, and he's doing it after one of the most tumultuous offseasons a player has ever gone through. I appreciate your suggestion, and you are not the first one to tell me I am all Tom Brady all the time. But this would be my suggestion: skip the Brady stuff. I write approximately 10,000 words in my column each Monday morning. This week, I wrote 624 words on the Patriots and Brady—that leaves 9,376 words to the other teams and other events of the week for you to enjoy.

WILDCAT WONDERS
How about a little love for my alma mater, Kansas State University, from which matriculated your two most dangerous return men, Darren Sproles and Tyler Lockett?
—Jim Spencer, Wichita, Kan.

You got it. Good job, Wildcats. There must be something about Manhattan, Kansas, that breeds NFL return men who cannot be tackled.

MISSING MONTEE
I find it strange that Montee Ball hasn't been signed with a team. Can you help me understand why a team wouldn't take a chance on him as a backup RB?
—Bill J.

I'm a bit surprised by that, too. I think, and this is just a gut feeling, that people looking at his 2014 tape see a running back who rarely makes more than what is there. Although he had some strong impact toward the end of his rookie year, he didn't follow that up in 2014. Part of that is because he was plagued by a groin injury, which ended up finishing his season. But the Broncos have always been the kind of team that is the land of opportunity for running backs, and Ball simply didn't make the most of his. It does seem like he should get another chance and I will be surprised if he didn't.

Gary Kubiak enters first year of the job he was made to do

By Troy Renck
DenverPost.com
July 26, 2015

On Aug. 2, 1976, Gary Kubiak walked off a plane and into the rest of his life. Just 14 years old, he absorbed the enormousness of the Kansas City Chiefs' Arrowhead Stadium, the exhilaration, the screaming fans, the red and yellow seats, the white scoreboard staring from above the top deck as if it were a robot raising its hand.

Kubiak caught his breath as he jogged onto the field for the preseason game. He knew how lucky he was to be a ballboy for the Houston Oilers, throwing training camp passes to Earl Campbell and Mike Barber at Sam Houston State. The players treated him like one of their own, knowing he was a rising high school football star. But this — well, this was different.

The experience resonated in a way that makes Kubiak smile 39 years later.

"That was the first pro football game I ever went to. (Coach) Bum Phillips took me to Kansas City that day," Kubiak said. "I still remember as a kid going into the stadium, chasing the balls. That was my first day. I was part of pro football."

On Friday, Kubiak enters training camp in his 22nd season as an NFL coach but his first as the boss of the Broncos. He inherits a team with Super Bowl aspirations. He landed the job in part because a pair of numbing playoff exits overshadowed four consecutive AFC West titles by the John Fox-coached Broncos.

General manager John Elway sought a head coach who could inspire the Broncos to "never stop kicking and screaming," especially in big games, which haunted Fox's tenure.

"Hopefully you have that mindset every day, every week, not just one week. There's no substitution for playing hard," Kubiak said. "You have to compete all the time, not just when you think it's appropriate."

He relishes the pressure that comes with high expectations.

"I was part of this organization for many years. I know where they expect to go, that they expect to win Super Bowls," Kubiak said. "It's something you want to be part of. Does it make it tougher? I don't know. People can say what they want to say, but this is why I do what I do. That's why I love to go to work every day."

The job found Kubiak in January when Fox and the Broncos mutually parted one day after a stunning home playoff loss to the Indianapolis Colts. Kubiak, 53, was content to stay with the Baltimore Ravens as their offensive coordinator, after eight seasons as coach of the Houston Texans. He told the Chicago Bears and New York Jets — and anyone else who would listen — that he wasn't interested.

Then Elway, his roommate when they were players, called.

"He's always had strong feelings for Denver. He spent so much time there, time he enjoyed," longtime NFL coach and mentor Mike Sherman said of Kubiak. "Going to Houston was home. But when you think of his career, really Denver is going home. This is kind of a unique opportunity to end it where it started."

Kubiak will stand in the middle of the field Friday at Broncos headquarters at Dove Valley, surveying the buzz of activity from his familiar spot with hardly anyone noticing him. He coaches football because he enjoys the grind, embraces the challenge. It's difficult, uncomfortable and liberating.

Like the truth.

What he thinks

Kubiak doesn't have a problem telling people what he thinks. Consistency and honesty are staples in his life. They remain the central themes when talking to people who watched him grow from a record-setting quarterback at Houston's St. Pius X High School to a Texas A&M star to a reliable backup with the Broncos, and a reason they predict he will succeed with Denver.

"As a coach, when you get kids, you spend a lot of time trying to smooth out problems," said former Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum. "With Gary, he didn't have any rough spots. He's always been mature with a great value system from Day One.

"I first met him when he was 17, and he hasn't changed a bit. What you see is what you get. Try to find someone who has a bad word to say about him. You can't. He could have ridden off into the sunset, but there's nothing that would mean more to him than to come back to the Broncos and have a great run."

Had Kubiak embarked on his second head coaching job elsewhere, shrugged shoulders would have greeted the announcement. He went 63-66 in eight seasons with the Texans (including 2-2 in the playoffs), turning a 2-14 team into a two-time division champion. He didn't fail as much as he didn't finish the job, undermined by awful quarterback play in 2013, which led to his firing.

In other cities, he's Kubiak. In Denver, he's "Kubes," well-known for saving the Broncos in a Monday night game at Washington when Elway had the flu from, as legend has it, chipped beef on toast from President George H.W. Bush's table at the White House. And again in 1992 when Elway rallied the Broncos past the Oilers in the playoffs, a breathtaking comeback that required Kubiak to handle a low snap setting up David Treadwell's 28-yard field goal with 16 seconds left.

Few would argue Kubiak's merits as a brilliant offensive mind, a man who learned from Mike Shanahan, Bill Walsh and Alex Gibbs. Kubiak has been creating mismatches for three decades, camouflaging repetitive zone-blocking schemes with multiple personnel groups and formations. He owns three Super Bowl title rings as an assistant with the San Francisco 49ers and Denver, where he helped Elway transform seamlessly from electric to acoustic in his final two seasons as a player.

Kubiak will be heavily involved in the Broncos' offense. He looks to establish the run to open the field for play-action passing. The idea is to ease the pressure and reliance on quarterback Peyton Manning the way Kubiak did when he ran the Broncos' offense in Elway's final two championship seasons.

"It should only help a quarterback when you run the ball," Kubiak said. "It's what you have to be doing if you want to be a physical football team."

During his 20 seasons as an offensive coordinator or head coach, Kubiak's running game averaged a ninth-place NFL finish, including eighth last year with Baltimore. The Broncos ranked 15th in rushing last season.

As for play-calling, Kubiak says: "That's something I've been doing my whole career. I love it. That's where my competitive juices flow, calling the game."

And yet, there is that record with the Texans — under .500. It raises questions about whether Kubiak is running from a cliché about nice guys and where they finish.

"He treats you the way you wanted to be treated. It creates the false narrative that he's strictly a player's coach, that he's too easy on guys. That couldn't be further from the truth," said veteran offensive tackle Eric Winston, who played for Kubiak in Houston. "He shoots straight. It's not about him. That's the thing. Some coaches yell just so they can be seen yelling. It's never about him. He's not coaching for attention. He's coaching to win.

"In our meetings, they were some of the most uncomfortable I have ever been in. He holds players to a high standard. Sometimes you want to be as small as you can in that chair. If you don't hear your name, it's a great day."

Slocum gave Kubiak his first coaching job, at Texas A&M in 1992, after his playing career ended in Denver. He knew he couldn't keep his former quarterback long because he was too talented, something he showed while coaching running backs such as All-American Greg Hill.

"Players loved him. And he didn't think he had all the answers," Slocum said. "As a head coach, you have every right to be demanding, but you don't have the right to be demeaning. Gary leads with class."

Kubiak brings a reputation for rolling up his sleeves. On a typical morning, he shows up at Dove Valley at 5 a.m. Even after he suffered a mini-stroke in 2013 during a nationally televised game, Kubiak never considered leaving coaching. He changed his diet, and when he was supposed to be taking it easy, he would leave Texans headquarters, then sneak back in to do more work.

"He gets things done. If you are there, you are there to work," said Sherman, who helped Kubiak understand how to watch game film at Texas A&M and later joined his staff in Houston. "You aren't there to tell stories and play games. There's no wasted time. That's Gary. You always know where you stand. There's no hidden agendas, which is why his assistants are so loyal to him."

"Be accountable"

When a new head coach arrives, the franchise gives him the opportunity to redecorate. The Broncos' team meeting room featured multiple slogans the past few years. Kubiak replaced them with a single saying in huge, bold letters across the back wall: "Be accountable."

"People ask if he can be stern enough," said Hall of Fame tight end Shannon Sharpe. "I was in meetings with him for seven years. He knows what to say and when to say it. He lets you know when you don't make a play you should have. But he will also be the first to admit his mistake. He will say, 'I have to do a better job. That's on me.' As a player, you can't help but respect that."

Six months into Kubiak's tenure here, Broncos president Joe Ellis referenced the meeting room when asked for an anecdote. To him, it captures Kubiak.

"Simple, straightforward, honest, that's Gary," Ellis said. "That's who he is as a leader in his dealings with everyone in the building."

Elway formed a strong bond with Kubiak, first as a roommate. Kubiak joked that his most important job was to take calls and tell people, "John's not here." They competed at everything, from cards to pingpong.

Kubiak learned early how to lead. He began his freshman season at St. Pius X High School in Houston standing 5-foot-9 and weighing 135 pounds. He wore size-11 cleats, foreshadowing a growth spurt. But opportunity couldn't wait for his body to sprout. With the Panthers struggling through a clumsy season, coach Rene Hancock had Kubiak start the second half in a game against Beaumont Kelly. Kubiak completed 14-of-17 passes for 179 yards.

Four years later, Kubiak left St. Pius as Texas' all-time prep passing leader with 6,190 yards, winning three consecutive titles at a time when high school running backs Eric Dickerson and Craig James were stealing the headlines.

"When he broke the record, one of the officials stopped the game," Hancock told reporters a few years ago. "I sent the managers out to get the football. The officials said no — they wanted me to come get the football. I congratulated Gary, and Gary looked up into the stands and said, 'Can I go tell my parents, "Hi"?' That touched me. It was equally important that he go tell his parents. That's what Gary is like. That's the kind of person he is and the kind of leader he is."

Kubiak and his wife, Rhonda, have three sons — Klint, Klay and Klein — and all three played college football. Klein now is an intern with the Broncos, Klay is a teacher, and Klint is the wide receivers coach at Kansas. It brings Kubiak back to his days as a ballboy. Oilers owner Bud Adams was a Kansas graduate, and Kubiak's presence at practice sure wouldn't hurt the Jayhawks' recruiting efforts.

"I guess that is kind of how I got the job. I don't know if that was legal or not," Kubiak said. "I don't think they were too mad I went to A&M. Klint's at KU, so they got a Kubiak eventually."

The Broncos did too. With Kubiak pegged at one point as Shanahan's successor, the Texans prevented a move. Kubiak's team was on the rise when the Broncos fired Shanahan after the 2008 season. Houston is Kubiak's hometown. But Denver, in many ways, is home. When he steps onto the practice field this week, Kubiak will be in full view, eyes staring at drills, looking for ways to improve.

He is a coach. In a complicated world, it's that simple.

"There's a ton of things that people should know about him," Winston said. "I think there was an unfair characterization of how it ended in Houston. I really thought if we had a healthy quarterback in 2011, we could have won it all. With (Kubiak), no one has anything negative to say. It's not because they are scared. It's because he's as genuine a guy you will find in this league. You respect it, especially when youare away from it. He will make the Broncos better. He teaches guys how to be professionals, how to be men. He will win games and have a profound impact on lives."

DeCamillis delivers on promise as special teams coach

By Ben Swanson
DenverBroncos.com
October 23, 2015

The Broncos had won their first preseason game of 2015, but Joe DeCamillis returned from Seattle disappointed. Seahawks wide receiver Tyler Lockett had burned the Broncos' special-teams squad for 204 yards on one punt return and four kick returns, including a 103-yard runback for a touchdown.

Luckily it was just the first game; there would be plenty of time to correct errors, and eventually the roster would be whittled down to make for a less variable special-teams unit.

Criticism came from multiple directions after the miscues in Seattle — even from his own home.

"The great thing about it is, when you go home, you have such support from your wife," DeCamillis joked. "No, not so much. She's the worst critic. She's like, 'We're not even going out. You played pitiful. I don't want to be around you.' She just wants accountability just like I do."

But Dana DeCamillis isn't just any Broncos fan. Before she became Dana DeCamillis, she was Dana Reeves, daughter of Broncos Ring of Fame head coach Dan Reeves.

Dan didn't join his daughter in offering Joe any tips this time, but DeCamillis knows he can count on the man who showed him he could make it in the NFL.

In 1988, Dan and his wife, Pam, headed out on the road to Laramie, Wyoming. They were going to watch an All-American wrestler, but this wasn't exactly a scouting trip of the normal type for the Broncos head coach.

The wrestler, DeCamillis, had been courting Dana while the two attended the university, and Dan came to the realization that he had better meet this young man if things were getting serious.

"I just knew that she was all excited about this guy she was dating and we hadn't even met him yet and she was talking about getting married," Dan recalled. "Wait a minute. We haven't even met this guy yet!"

DeCamillis was a Denver-area native who had been an excellent high school football player, and a particularly outstanding wrestler, which continued into his collegiate years. He grappled and pinned opponents en route to being an All-American in 1988 as a senior in the 167-pound weight class.

So Dan and Pam watched him wrestle, and they learned what many of DeCamillis' opponents did during a match against him.

"He was tough as nails," Dan said.

DeCamillis, who remains sixth in Wyoming wrestling history with 121 career victories, is sure he remembers the match.

“I think I won, I know that,” he said, with a confident smile. “Or did I win? I’m not sure.”

OK, well, regardless of how he came out in the match, DeCamillis came out of the weekend having impressed the Reeves family considerably.

Once DeCamillis completed college, he began work on a graduate degree while helping coach Wyoming’s wrestling team. He viewed teaching as his career path, and so he began immediate preparation with his sights set on becoming a teacher, as well as a high-school football and wrestling coach.

But then he got a call from Dan. The Broncos head coach told him there was a job opening for an assistant position, and he wanted DeCamillis to take it. The Broncos had an innovative strength and conditioning coach in Al Miller, and DeCamillis could pick up essential wisdom and experience.

At first DeCamillis turned him down. He didn’t want it to seem like a case of nepotism, and he wasn’t sure he was ready to handle such a job.

Reeves was insistent, however. He called a second time, and then a third.

“If you can’t do this job,” Reeves told him, “well, I’ll fire you.”

Convinced, DeCamillis joined the Broncos’ coaching staff.

“We had Al Miller,” Reeves recalls. “He needed somebody and Joe had been a wrestler at Wyoming and I had watched him wrestle. […] He was getting out and had a great work ethic and I thought he’d be good, and he really excelled with a good teacher because Al, I thought, was one of the best weight coaches.”

Technically, DeCamillis’ position was Assistant to GM and Head Coach, but he had a number of responsibilities, which included some work on special teams in his second year. He moved up to Administrative Assistant in 1990 and then Defensive Quality Control from 1991-92.

To begin, DeCamillis worked with the Broncos’ special teams coach, Harold Richardson, and then got in contact with two coaches to help him on his way. The first was Mike Nolan, then a Broncos linebackers coach who had also coached their special teams in 1987 and 1988. The second was Mike Westhoff, an innovative force in Miami as the Dolphins’ special teams coach.

DeCamillis began studying with those two gurus and got his first special teams coaching position when Reeves was fired in 1992 and then hired as the Giants’ head coach.

“So when I got fired here and got hired in New York, I decided to make him the special teams coach,” Reeves said. “It was tough on him because he was the coach’s son-in-law and everybody said that’s how he got the job but he did a tremendous job. He’s a great teacher and that’s what coaching is.”

In his first year, DeCamillis helped turn around the Giants’ major weakness: covering punt returns. They improved from 27th to third in the NFL in punt coverage, with just 5.6 yards allowed per return. A year later, the Giants improved from 27th in kick return yards allowed per attempt to 13th. During his four years in New York, the Giants also scored on six kick returns, the fourth-most in the NFL during that period. But after a terrific first year in which the Giants made the playoffs, the team struggled in the three years that followed. Reeves would make his next coaching stop in Atlanta, and DeCamillis would go with him.

Following a disastrous 1996 season in which they went 3-13, the Falcons desperately wanted to bounce back to respectability, and DeCamillis brought an enormous positive impact to their special teams. They jumped from 28th to No. 1 in punt return yards allowed per attempt and from 25th in kick returns allowed per attempt to 16th.

Atlanta had much more sustained success than the Giants, including a Super Bowl XXXIII appearance against the Broncos. DeCamillis' units made high marks in different areas from year to year and though Reeves left the Falcons in 2003, DeCamillis stayed for another three seasons.

Since then, he has lived the coach's life, making stops around the league, where he's consistently left a positive impact. With his return to his hometown to coach the Broncos, a prodigal son of sorts has come back to the place where he thought he didn't belong.

Reeves had confidence in DeCamillis' ability in 1989 when he first convinced the former wrestler that he could work in football, and in the years that followed, DeCamillis proved him right.

"It's been great," DeCamillis said in August. "You get to work with a bunch of guys, guys that have to make it. That's important and, you know, you get a chance to hopefully get them a start. We saw Shannon [Sharpe] out there [at practice] today; he was one of the guys that that's how he made it his first few years, or his first year, I know that. That's a challenge and it's fun to see those guys graduate, really, to be honest with you."

The feeling of graduation is certainly one DeCamillis can identify with, too, because that's exactly what he did in his first few years working in the NFL. He exceeded his expectations, took on more responsibility and earned his way to become one of the most well-respected coaches in his field.

"Joe's a great teacher," Reeves says, "and I think he's evolved into one of the better special teams coaches in the league."

Dennison’s experience will help as offensive line faces uncertainty

By Jim Saccomano
DenverBroncos.com
June 1, 2015

The injury to starting left tackle Ryan Clady is an obvious blow to the Denver Broncos. However, as Offensive Coordinator Rick Dennison said after practice Thursday, "The biggest disappointment is for Ryan himself."

It is very disappointing for a fine young man and excellent player. Nevertheless, the reality is that the football season moves forward no matter what.

“I love being coached,” said Quarterback Peyton Manning about Dennison.

Of course, it goes without saying that Manning loves being coached. Especially when the coaching is at a high, intelligent and stimulating level.

And therein lies the solution.

Let John Elway and the Broncos' personnel bring in talented players—which they've been doing since Elway’s return to football operations—and let the coaches coach.

A significant part of everything the team does on offense will fall under the wing of Dennison. Rick has been a favorite of mine ever since he arrived as an unheralded free agent linebacker from Colorado State University.

He made the team and played for the Broncos from 1982 to 1990, a nine-year span in which he played both defense and special teams.

Before returning to Dove Valley this year, he previously coached the Broncos from 1995 to 2009. During that time he worked as an offensive assistant and special teams coach, before coaching the offensive line and finally becoming offensive coordinator.

If you weren’t counting, those above cited years make him the longest tenured Bronco player and coach combination of all-time. 2015 is Rico's 25th overall season in Denver.

He also has a master's degree in Aeronautical Engineering from CSU. So, while it is quite true that coaching football is not rocket science, Dennison is in fact a rocket scientist.

Manning's comment is a hint at the preparation and intellect that Dennison brings to his work coordinating the offense. As he said after Thursday’s practice, "All good players—great players—love to be coached."

Coaching does not so much involve the yelling and screaming that gets air time in short video clips. Instead it involves meetings, planning, questions, answers, challenges and feedback—things that belong in a classroom setting, which is where they spend a great deal of time. They spend more time in the classroom than they do on the field.

So, the loss of Ryan Clady is a tough pill to swallow. But, as Dennison said, "We're going to do what we do best. We are the 2015 Denver Broncos."

Not any other version. Not any other year.

We would all do well to remember that it is only late May. It's a long way from the start of the new season.

When asked how concerned he was about not knowing who would be at left tackle Dennison said, "I'd like to go into the first game [knowing who will be on the line]. Preseason, I could care less what we are thinking."

He says the team will go into the first regular season game "knowing what we are going to do."

I really enjoyed watching Dennison's career evolve during his previous time in Denver. There never seemed to be a job he was given that he could not do. And, of course, he was a member of five Super Bowl teams in Denver: three as a player in the 1980's, then consecutive world championships of Super Bowls XXXII and XXXIII in 1997 and 1998.

The development of young players is a key part of coaching and we have coaches here with a proven track record. Elway has said that in addition to free agent talent the young guys we have should get a chance to grow and develop.

Head Coach Gary Kubiak, Dennison and offensive line coach Clancy Barone are veterans of the professional football offenses. They understand the diversity of offenses that each new season brings.

There is a lot of offseason left and plenty of time for roles to be filled. Sometimes that can happen in a way that no one ever considered. Young guys can take the field and make it happen.

I have a world of confidence in this coaching staff and so, too, should Broncos fans.

It is never just about one player. That is why football is the ultimate team game.

We all feel terrible for Ryan Clady and wish him a quick recovery. But in the meantime, there is big-time coaching talent evaluating players and positions. I have every bit of confidence in the final product.

Wade Phillips stays light on his feet while his Broncos defense becomes elite

By Lindsay Jones
USA Today
October 30, 2015

No video proof seems to exist, but enough Denver Broncos defensive players swear that it happened, so it's apparently true: Wade Phillips did the Whip and Nae Nae.

You know the dance, the one that accompanies the song Watch Me and took over the Internet and football end zones over the past year. Everyone from O'Dell Beckham Jr. to J.J. Watt to Riley Curry to Jimmy Fallon was doing it.

And if it would endear Denver's 68-year-old defensive coordinator to his new players, then Phillips was going to do it, too. So as he passed through the locker room one day, Phillips stopped in a corner occupied by several defensive backs. Then he Whipped and Nae Naed as his players roared.

"He ain't good, but he'll try," defensive end Antonio Smith told USA TODAY Sports.

Phillips shook his head Thursday afternoon when told his players had dished about his moves. He's not the dancer in his family, he said, as those honors belong to his wife, Laurie, and daughter, Tracy. But Phillips loves all sorts of music, not just the country he was raised on in Texas, and listening to rap and hip hop connects him to his players.

"I can bounce to the beat, sort of," Phillips told USA TODAY Sports. "I just enjoy it, and I enjoy being around them, because they help me be younger all the time, too."

With stars like outside linebacker Von Miller and cornerback Aqib Talib helping to revive Phillips' career, he has turned the Broncos into the most ferocious defense in the NFL heading into Sunday's marquee game against the Green Bay Packers — they're undefeated, like Denver — and reigning NFL MVP Aaron Rodgers.

It will likely take a special performance from Phillips' group to stop Rodgers, but the Denver defense has been making spectacular plays seem routine so far. The Broncos have allowed the fewest yards in the NFL, the fewest points in the AFC and have recorded a league-high 26 sacks and AFC-best 17 takeaways. The defense has come up with game-winning or game-saving saving turnovers in each of Denver's six wins and scored four of the team's 13 touchdowns.

And to think, Phillips was unemployed last year and no interviews were forthcoming after he was fired by the Houston Texans following the 2013 season.

He stayed connected to the NFL through his son, Wes, who coaches tight ends for the Washington Redskins. He'd travel to watch Wes coach in person, or he'd call him after every game to discuss what happened, just like Phillips' father, Bum, used to do with him.

But it wasn't the same as running his own defense. He worried that after a year away, and with the lack of interest in him in 2014, maybe another chance wouldn't come.

“You hope they go on what your record is, but it doesn't always happen,” Phillips said.

Broncos coach Gary Kubiak, who was Phillips' boss for three years in Houston, didn’t need a reminder of that record and brought Phillips back to Denver, where he had served as the defensive coordinator from 1989 to 1992 and head coach in 1994 and 1995. Phillips was reunited not just with Kubiak, but with Broncos general manager John Elway as well as pass rusher DeMarcus Ware, whom Phillips built his Dallas Cowboys defenses around.

“A lot of guys ask me how was Wade, and I was like, 'You guys are going to love him.' He can utilize the athleticism, we can be aggressive, we can make big plays,” Ware told USA TODAY Sports.

Phillips installed his preferred 3-4 scheme, but his players say their success isn’t just due to the new alignment. It’s a combination of talent at every level, including elite pass rushers and cornerbacks, and Phillips’ knack for putting them into the best spots to excel.

“It's about what they can do, not what I can think of,” Phillips said.

It certainly helped that Phillips inherited a loaded group that allows him to be creative with his formations and blitz packages. He flip-flops Ware and Miller on each side of the line, calls stunts to generate interior pressure and will blitz his inside linebackers and safeties. Phillips allows his corners, Talib and Chris Harris, to be aggressive in man coverage and devised schemes to get third safety David Bruton onto the field.

“He’s just been on point, every game with his playcalling," said Harris. "There hasn’t been a point in a game where I’ve been like, ‘Man, why are we calling this?’ I’ve never had that with coach Wade.

"There have even been times in a game, where I’d be like, ‘This would be a perfect time to call this coverage.’ And he calls it. I mean, he’s just been on point.

"And he’s cool, man.”

Wade Phillips: Harris Jr. and Talib the best CB duo he's had

By Ben Swanson

August 11, 2015

In 38 years of NFL coaching, Defensive Coordinator Wade Phillips feels that this 2015 Broncos team has the best starting cornerbacks of any team he's ever been with, even rivaling those he's coached in the Pro Bowl.

With a Pro Bowl selection apiece in 2014, Chris Harris Jr. and Aqib Talib certainly have the accolades to their name to justify such praise. Harris had perhaps the best season of any cornerback in the league last year with the highest rating by Pro Football Focus and highlighted by the fact that he didn't give up a touchdown all year. Talib, meanwhile, put up a terrific season of his own, punctuated by four interceptions, of which two were returned for touchdowns.

"They're probably the best," Phillips said. "I've had a lot of really good corners. The latest, the guys in Houston, were really good, but these guys are the best, I think, that I've been around. They rate with the Pro Bowls that I've coached. They're that kind of players."

Talib's big plays in camp drew rave reviews, especially from Head Coach Gary Kubiak, who said: "To me, the difference in this league between a good corner and a great corner is guys that have ball skills. [...] That's what separates him. If he gets his hands on the ball, like I told the guys the other day, 'Let's go to work,' that will be a touchdown, not just turnover."

In turn, Talib discussed Harris' rise as a prominent defender.

"I love it. It's my little brother," Talib said. "It's like my little brother getting the recognition that he deserves. [It's] long awaited, so I'm as happy for him as anybody."

However, the position's talent runs deep into the roster at cornerback beyond Talib and Harris, Phillips added.

"They're really talented, and our other guys — [Bradley] Roby's coming along and [Tony] Carter's coming along."

The skills at the position have been a big point of discussion when it comes to their abilities in helping the defensive line and linebackers put pressure on opposing lines and quarterbacks. They certainly seem poised to do that for Phillips' defense.

As icing on the cake, should Harris and Talib be selected to the Pro Bowl again, it would mark the first time a cornerback duo made the Pro Bowl in multiple years in the free-agency era, and the first time at all in the last 25 years.

first coaching job. I knew I would love to stay and I'm fortunate that it all worked out for me and Rosie, my wife."

Barone also is centrally involved in the return to the zone-blocking scheme.

"There is that learning curve about how you adjust it, why you adjust it, when do you adjust it — all those types of things," Barone said. "That's probably part of the fun of it, to teach them the overall big picture."

Although the Broncos have shuffled their No. 1 offensive line during the first three days of camp, most noticeably giving veteran Ryan Harris looks at right tackle, one of the constants has been rookie Ty Sambrailo, the second-round draft choice from Colorado State, at left tackle. That has reinforced the impression the job of succeeding the injured Ryan Clady is Sambrailo's to lose.

"Ty got a ton of reps during the spring," Barone said. "I don't see Ty as a rookie mentally anymore. Now, he hasn't seen any live game reps in this system, but as far as the mental reps and the time-on task and meetings, he is not a rookie in my mind."

Even when he was coaching tight ends, Barone never was accused of lacking enthusiasm. So it would be unfair to say he has been re-energized. So let's just say that he's kicked it up a notch.

"I wake up and just sprint to work every day," Barone said. "It's a blast."

How Broncos QB coach Greg Knapp helped Peyton Manning transition to new offense

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
November 5, 2015

No matter the city, no matter the opponent, the routine always is the same. Five and a half hours before kickoff, Greg Knapp, the Broncos' quarterbacks coach and passing-game coordinator, pulls up to the empty and eerily quiet stadium. The time is Knapp's, a few hours of serenity for his pregame workout. His third-down calls, his red-zone calls, the reminders he'll issue his quarterback during an offensive series filter through his mind as he runs up and down, up and down the stadium stairs.

"It's my zen," he said. "It's my way to get into game mode. It's my way of preparing, because we only get 16 regular-season games and hopefully a few more after that."

Knapp's routine is a constant. His life is on the sideline, even moreso as Peyton Manning's translator in coach Gary Kubiak's new zone-blocking, stretch-run offense.

This season Knapp stands on the sideline, relaying the plays from Kubiak and offensive coordinator Rick Dennison to Manning. He is Manning's dispatcher during a series and his guide in between, often sitting next to him on the bench to study upcoming plays.

A middle man, a teacher, a manager, a sounding board — Knapp is more than his title suggests. And this season, especially, he has perhaps the toughest job on the Broncos' staff.

After spending two seasons with Kubiak and Dennison at Houston (2010-11), then two in Denver with Manning before the coaching overhaul in January, Knapp is the common denominator among all and has been relied upon to marry the styles of his coach and quarterback.

"He could translate a lot of things and was a great kind of bridge and still continues to be," Manning said. "You spend a ton of time with your position coach, so we spend a lot of time together. He's really helped me a lot the past three years."

But as he's steered Manning through the nuances of the new system, he's also guided him through the latter part of his career. Drawing on years of experience in working with quarterbacks young and old, up-and-coming and elite — Steve Young, Matt Schaub, Michael Vick, Carson Palmer, Jeff Garcia — Knapp has helped Manning alter his ways to overcome deficiencies, much like a golfer needing to change his swing.

"There are some things Peyton has had to do mechanically to help improve his passing, because from a physical standpoint, the years have taken their toll," Knapp said. "His arm is not quite as strong as it used to be. But what he's picked up on is his footwork and lower-body mechanics to get his throwing on time and in rhythm, and that's something I got trained on as a young coach, and I truly believe."

Knapp, a former quarterback at Sacramento State, has worked for six NFL teams since 1995. His quarterbacks have combined to be selected for 11 Pro Bowls, and five have turned in 4,000-yard seasons.

The great ones, he says, yearn to be coached and be coached hard. But Manning's ability not only to absorb information, but also draw from his experience at the line of scrimmage set him apart.

"Sometimes he'll have recall on a play that I have not remembered and you have to say, 'Hey, you're right. That's exactly what you did see, and we do have to change our mindset on a certain read or progression,' " Knapp said. "It keeps you on your toes."

Through the first seven weeks of the season, the criticism of Manning was heavy as he adopted Kubiak's ways. But a 340-yard performance in a victory against Green Bay in Week 8 reversed judgment, if only temporarily. The 39-year-old, many were reminded, still can carry his team to big victories and still pick apart defenses.

And the 39-year-old, with a little help from the sideline, can adapt.

"That gives you an example of what great players want to do," Knapp said. "They're not satisfied staying the same."

Broncos crunch the numbers in crunch time, now more than ever

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
October 9, 2015

The Denver Broncos offense has run three plays on fourth down this season and scored touchdowns on two of them. Now that's some fun with numbers.

Those key plays are likely the byproduct of an afternoon meeting, usually on Friday, that Broncos coach Gary Kubiak has with Broncos' director of football analytics Mitch Tanney, a former college quarterback who was once the national runner-up for Division III Player of the Year.

"It's really good; it's a comfort zone as a coach," Kubiak said following Friday's practice. "When you're calling plays and involved in the game and yet you're involved in the time, all of a sudden, you've got somebody up there who is totally involved in that. I just listen to him, 'Hey, Mitch, talk to me here. What do you think?' He's in my ear the whole time. It's a very comforting thing. What I do every Friday afternoon … I go spend about an hour with him upstairs and we just review what's going on around the league and how would we have handled things. I think it's a new addition that's very much warranted. I'm glad to have him."

Last winter, Broncos executive vice president of football operations/general manager John Elway, a self-avowed "numbers guy," was sorting through a pile of resumes in search of the right person to add a stepped-up analytics program to the team's way of doing its football business.

Tanney, who worked for the Chicago Bears previously as well as Stats LLC, is in the coaches' booth during games and on a headset to communicate with Kubiak.

"He's always thinking ahead," Kubiak said. "As a coach, your mind is on the play and his mind is on everything else that's going on. He's been very impressive and the thing that I like about him is that he played. He's an ex-player, so he has a real perspective of some of that, too, I think."

Those discussions came into play when the Broncos kept the offense on the field for fourth-and-1 situations against the Detroit Lions and this past Sunday against the Minnesota Vikings.

In Detroit, it was a Peyton Manning pass to a leaping Demaryius Thomas for a 45-yard catch-and-run for a touchdown just before halftime. Last Sunday it was a 1-yard pass from Manning to Daniels for a score on a fourth-and-goal from the Vikings' 1.

This week, Manning touched on what those kinds of plays mean for an offense when the coach tells the players to go for it.

"When he [Kubiak] calls that, he's displaying confidence in you," Manning said. "It's nice when you can come through for him and the coaches to make him glad that he did it and make him say that it's OK to do it again. Where if you don't get it, the next time that it comes around, who knows which way you'll go."

As far as what Tanney usually advises on fourth down, Kubiak said; "I can tell you what analytics guys say on fourth down: They say, 'go for it,' every time."

Why has C.J. Anderson succeeded? It's as much about his mind as his moves

By Andrew Mason
DenverBroncos.com
September 10, 2015

If you're going to line up behind or alongside Peyton Manning in the backfield, you'd better know what you're doing.

But Manning will help you. Seventeen previous seasons and a lifetime immersed in football make him a human library of information. But to access the information, you have to walk through the door, go up to the desk and ask. He encourages his teammates to seek him out if they're uncertain about a concept, but he won't hold the door open.

Few have taken greater advantage of that resource than running back C.J. Anderson. Manning would remind his fellow Broncos to ask him questions "all the time," and Anderson accepted the open invitation.

"I got the opportunity to play here, and I'm playing with probably the greatest to ever know everything before it's coming," Anderson said. "I'd be an idiot not to pick his brain.

"I always go up to him and ask him a question when I can, just to make sure we're on the same page. At the end of the day, he's the commander, and if you can get on the same page as him, the ball will come your way more -- which is always good," Anderson continued, a smile crossing his face, "and good things always come out of it."

Good things for Anderson -- and the Denver offense as a whole, as well. After becoming the first-teamer following Ronnie Hillman's foot injury in Week 10 of the 2014 season, Anderson gained more yards from scrimmage than all but one running back (Pittsburgh's Le'Veon Bell). He also emerged as one of the league's best blockers at his position, and ranked sixth among all running backs from Weeks 10-17 in ProFootballFocus.com's pass-blocking rankings.

"He's been in a lot of situations, whether it's two-minute drills or faced a lot of blitzes, he's seen a lot of defenses and he's really a bright player," Manning said. "I think he has a good concept of what defenses are doing. He can see, especially when you're back there in the shotgun, he and I are talking a lot. He kind of has an understanding of which way the defense is rotating, so he knows where the blitz might occur."

That's not to say he's perfect, but moments like the one in the preseason where NaVorro Bowman raced through the A-gap and Anderson couldn't guide him away from Manning in time are the exception to the rule.

"Now I have the offense, and now I'm going into it with the confidence that I have and understanding what we're trying to do, and now me and him are on the same page," Anderson said. "It's a lot better that I'm back there and I can go, 'Hey, this is coming, this is going to happen,' and he looks at me, and he trusts me, and it happens, and then he goes, 'Man, good call.'"

That's a long way from the brief appearances he made during his rookie year. During the 2013 season, Anderson played 25 snaps -- a season-high 10 of which came late in the Broncos' 34-31 Week 12 loss at New England.

"I was still swimming, and [Manning] was telling me what to do, and that kind of bothered me, because at that one time and moment, I feel like I wasn't at my best at what I do -- which is pretty much knowing everything that's going on.

"[In] my rookie year, if I would have said something, he probably would have looked at me like, 'You don't know what you're talking about.'"

Quite the opposite is the case now.

"He has used his playing time, his repetitions and his young career really to his advantage and to make him a more confident player," Manning said. "The more you know what you're doing, the more confident you are. He's really done a good job taking advantage of those reps."

But it's not just about asking questions or studying the playbook. Some of it has to be innate.

Anderson takes understandable pride in his natural intelligence. As he said last year when noting his caution and change to a new helmet after he suffered a preseason concussion, "I'm a Cal guy, so I love my brain."

"I think one of my biggest attributes was football I.Q. I don't know if it's something you can coach. [Running backs] Coach [Eric] Studesville calls it a gift," Anderson said. "For me, that's always something that's been the next level to my game. I feel like I'm always at my best because I know what's coming before it comes a majority of the time."

There are plenty of running backs with some combination of attributes: speed, quickness, the ability to read blocks, pass-protection instincts and the intelligence to quickly diagnose a defense's intent. Few have all of these. Anderson is one of those select running backs.

As a runner's career progresses, he might lose a half-step of straight-line speed, or a half-tic of quickness in his cuts. But he can compensate with a greater understanding of the cerebral aspects of his position.

That's where Anderson knows he can grow. The more the Pro Bowler asks questions of Manning, and the more defensive looks he sees and learns how to diagnose, the better he gets.

"It just feels good to grow and keep working," he said. "You can learn every day."

Kenny "Night Train" Anunike on right NFL track

By Nicki Jhabvala
DenverPost.com
August 9, 2015

The call came Oct. 26, 2013, in Blacksburg, Va. On a third down in the red zone against 14th-ranked Virginia Tech, Duke's defensive coordinator, Jim Knowles, requested "The Train," a play he designed for his speedy 6-foot-5, 260-pound defensive end.

"He kept telling me, 'Coach, you call that and I'll get it done. I'll get a sack or I'll make something happen,' " Knowles said.

On cue "The Night Train" delivered, roaring through the line, beating one, two blocks before hitting Virginia Tech quarterback Logan Thomas. The ball came out of Thomas' hands and was ruled incomplete, setting up a field-goal try on fourth down.

No good.

The Night Train helped Duke post a 13-10 victory, its first over a ranked team in 19 years. It was a historic moment for a program that coach David Cutcliffe was in the process of restoring.

It also was a moment of validation in the six-year career — yes, six — of Kenny "Night Train" Anunike, a member of Cutcliffe's first recruiting class.

Anunike (pronounced AN-NU-NICKY) wears a new number now, and the blue on his jersey is a darker hue. But the Night Train is still running and he's making a strong impression in his second season with the Broncos through the first week of training camp.

Dig a little deeper and you will find there's much more to the lineman than a box score shows.

Higher education helpful

In 1979, Kenny's father, Emmanuel Anunike, left his village and all that he knew in Onitsha, Nigeria, and hopped on a plane bound for Boise, Idaho, in search of a better life and a better education.

"That concept 'Only in America,' where you can come here with almost nothing and become something spectacular, something great — that appealed to me," Emmanuel said. "It was something I wanted to be a part of."

Emmanuel had been raised by a father who had lived much of his life with only a second grade-level education because his mother couldn't afford school fees. It was a hardship Emmanuel didn't want to endure.

He now has three degrees — a bachelor's in architecture, a master's in urban studies and a Ph.D. in educational leadership — and works as an energy specialist for the Ohio Development Services Agency in Columbus.

From an early age, Kenny, the oldest of four siblings, was taught the value of higher education.

"That's my Nigerian culture," he said. "That's what we do. We get our education because without education, you have nothing."

There's a joke in the Anunike family that Emmanuel buys grades. But he's a picky shopper.

"I don't buy B's," he said. "I buy A's. If you get A's, you get something for that. But no B's."

To play football, as he loved, Kenny had to balance the A's with the X's and O's. And with the X-rays that all too often came along with football.

Kenny arrived at Duke in 2008 as a tight end and a biological anthropology and anatomy major. He redshirted his first season to recover from his first knee surgery. After two more surgeries on his left knee and a switch to the defensive line, he finally was on track to have his best season yet in 2011, recording his first two career sacks on Stanford star Andrew Luck. In the first three games, he made a conference-leading four sacks.

Then he suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament. Again.

Nearly every high was met with a low throughout Anunike's college career. Five, actually — four surgeries on his left knee, one on his right ankle.

"He was on a first-name basis with just about every doctor at Duke," said Dave Harding, a former Duke captain and offensive lineman. "Just when you thought Kenny was done for his career, he would fight back, and each time he came back, he'd have a better season than he had before."

Despite making regular appearances in the operating room, he wasn't about to quit football. Kenny had a routine and an education that made him better suited than most to handle recovery.

It helps when your anatomy professor also is your surgeon.

After being granted a sixth year of eligibility, Anunike left Duke in 2014 with 15 career sacks, 148 tackles, two bowl game appearances, numerous scars, one bachelor of arts degree and almost a master's degree.

Next stop on The Night Train: the NFL.

Textbooks and playbooks

It's hard to imagine how a power forward-sized player could be overlooked, but Anunike was. No NFL team was willing to draft a guy with more surgeries than full seasons in his college career.

The Broncos took a flier, signing him as an undrafted free agent a year ago. But Anunike couldn't escape his history. In the third quarter of the final preseason game, at Dallas, Anunike went down with an elbow injury. He was placed on injured reserve and sent back to rehab. Back to waiting. Back to hoping his health would hold out for more than a few games.

He also went back to what he knew best — balancing textbooks and playbooks. He was one course shy of completing his master's degree in liberal studies and had made a promise to his father that he would do so.

"I'm trying to be like him," Anunike said. "That's where I get my ambition. That's where I get my drive."

Anunike reached out to Dr. Deborah T. Gold, a professor of medical sociology at Duke, about setting up a long-distance system so he could finish his degree while rehabbing in Colorado.

"I know he's a great kid and has the best of intentions, but man, how is he going to find time?" Gold thought. "And yet, he was able to compartmentalize and to focus on this, which was important to his family, but also, in a very realistic way, was important to him."

His 50-plus-page thesis: "Coping with Injury: How High-Performance Athletes Mitigate the Biopsychosocial Consequences of Sports Injury."

Kenny graduated this past May, but has yet to see his degree.

"I gave them the address of my house in Ohio, put my dad's name on it and had them send it straight to him," he said. "This was for him. I had work to do here."

The work already has started to pay off, but it's far from finished.

Anunike has packed on about 13 pounds this summer to get to 273. But the Broncos' defensive line coach, Bill Kollar, would like to see him add a few more. If he can, there might be an opportunity for Anunike to play on a line whose depth has dwindled in recent weeks.

A spot on Denver's 53-man roster is where The Night Train is headed next. And his father, whose wish was granted with the master's degree, is on board.

"The reason I came to America, to fulfill my dreams — I can tell you this football thing is his dream," Emmanuel said. "I'm not bugging him for any education again. He's done it. It's all about football now."

Anunike files

Height: 6-foot-5
Weight: 273 pounds
NFL: Second year; 2014 undrafted free agent; injured in 2014 preseason game at Dallas; placed on injured reserve
College: Duke, 2008-13; tight end turned defensive lineman
148 tackles (50 solo), 15 sacks, four forced fumbles
Four knee surgeries (2008, 2009, 2010, 2011), one ankle surgery (2013)
Bachelor's degree in biological anthropology and anatomy
Master's in liberal studies

Shaquil Barrett Shapes Up

By Robert Klemko
MMQB.com
November 12, 2015

Shaquil Barrett remembers vividly the weigh-in at the 2014 East-West Shrine Game in St. Petersburg, Fla. You strip down to your compression shorts, wait to hear your name called, walk across a stage and stand on a scale to be weighed and thoroughly picked over by the prying eyes of middle-aged men. Barrett believed he'd made a lasting impression that week, and he was right, though not for the reasons he imagined.

Two years removed from Colorado State and now with the Broncos, Barrett was browsing social media early this season when the Timehop app alerted him to a years-old photo of himself oozing out of a skin-tight dark green No. 56 jersey.

Serious muffin top.

"I didn't realize how bad I was until I saw that picture," he says. "How come nobody told me I looked like that?"

Nobody had to tell Barrett why he wasn't drafted a year ago; teams were scared off by his 24% body fat as a 6-1, 250-pound rush linebacker. The Broncos asked him to sign as a free agent and stashed him on the practice squad last season while he transformed his body. Eighteen months later Barrett is emerging as a playmaker on a defense full of them. He's expected to get his second start this weekend against the Chiefs in place of the injured DeMarcus Ware.

"It's great for a coach because he's the example," says Broncos coach Gary Kubiak. "You use him as an example when you're trying to keep your young guys going, trying to keep a backup going. You say, look at what he's done for this team. You never know when your opportunity's going to come."

Barrett's opportunity came late last month against the Browns. Ware was injured, and it was widely assumed that rookie Shane Ray, the 23rd overall pick in the 2015 draft, would get the start at outside linebacker. But the staff couldn't deny Barrett, who'd been impressive in a limited role to that point—13 tackles, two sacks and two forced fumbles in 97 snaps—and he cashed in on the opportunity, collecting nine tackles, 1.5 sacks, three tackles for loss, a forced fumble and a fumble recovery against Cleveland.

The question was raised more than once: What's this guy been eating? Turns out the mild-mannered linebacker's success in 2015 has more to do with what he's not eating.

"In college I put sugar on my spaghetti or lasagna," Barrett says, drawing out the 'ah' sound in 'college' in a manner specific to Baltimore's inner city, where he grew up. "That's why I have to stay away from pasta, because the only way I can eat it is with sugar."

Ok, but how much sugar?

"I think I used to put like seven packs of sugar on spaghetti to make it taste edible."

Oh no.

“Yes.”

Barrett thought nothing of it at the time; nutrition wasn’t a priority for him at Colorado State (he didn’t meet a dietician until senior year), and it wasn’t a priority in his household either. Barrett transferred to Colorado State from Nebraska-Omaha after his freshman season in 2011 and brought along his now-wife, Jordanna. They were married in a Colorado courthouse and had their first of three children that winter.

Jordanna worked steady jobs in food service, including a run at Starbucks in Fort Collins, to support the family. Barrett was getting scholarship assistance from Boys Town, the boarding school in Omaha where his working-class parents sent him and his brother as teenagers. (Barrett says he was unmotivated at City High in Baltimore.) The $5,000 scholarship was a fine supplement until CSU put him on full scholarship, requiring he no longer receive outside aid. With Jordanna working nights and Barrett having no intention of cooking anything more complicated than a burger, he turned to fast food—McDonald’s and Wendy’s were favorites—and when she did cook meals they were typically fried, and, after Barrett had his say, drowned in sugar.

“The college budget and a healthy diet don’t really fit, because the healthy food always costs more,” Barrett says. “And it wasn’t really what we were thinking about. We always paid the rent first so we’d at least have a roof.”

Under those circumstances, Barrett collected 12 sacks as a Colorado State senior and set a Mountain West record with 20.5 tackles for loss. That winter his new agent and former bodybuilder Edy Jackson wrote up a nutrition plan and enlisted Jordanna to execute the meals. Well on his way to a healthier lifestyle, he arrived in Denver the next summer and met with one of the few full-time dieticians employed by an NFL team to evaluate his diet.

“We have a one-on-one consultations with new players during training camp, and I have them walk me through a typical day,” says Bryan Snyder, Denver’s full-time registered dietician since 2009. “With Shaq it was about balancing his diet and portion control.

“With some players it takes a couple of weeks to start the process. I met with Shaq in the morning, and at the end of the day, after he lifted, he came to me like, where’s my recovery shake? He was holding me accountable.”

Seeing Barrett grab the bull by the horns is something everyone at Broncos HQ would soon get used to.

“The job is never too big for him,” says linebacker Von Miller. “I admire that about him. He’s got three kids so, he never gets rattled.”

Says linebacker Danny Trevathan: “He’s desperate to succeed, to survive, to make it. Guys like that make this league.”

That Barrett landed on an NFL team with the proper resources to remedy his particular shortcoming was something of a dice roll. By Snyder’s count, only 12 teams have full-time dieticians on staff (the group meets at each combine, when schedules permit). When Snyder got the job in 2009, the Broncos put Snyder in a small office far away from the cafeteria and continued to outsource meals to local caterers for five years, until the team built a kitchen space and hired chefs during the 2014 season.

“Before we had our own kitchen, we would lose guys,” Snyder says. “By November, 10 or 15 guys would be getting fast food for lunch. This year I’ve only seen outside food brought in one time, and I think it was a make-the-rookie-go-get-food situation. The credit goes to [team president] Joe Ellis and [GM] John Elway and Mr. [Pat] Bowlen to free up the resources to do it right.”

Barrett’s daily intake now consists of the following: Egg-beaters, oatmeal and turkey bacon for breakfast (a meal he rarely ate in school), some combination of fish, chicken and salad for lunch and dinner, and two protein shakes prepared by Snyder’s staff.

His body fat for the last 15 weeks: 11.5%, down from 24% at his worst at Colorado State.

Barrett says the physical transformation gave him a quicker burst and increased muscle mass, allowing him to concentrate on the finer points of pass rushing. He’s fourth on the team in sacks with 3.5, half a sack behind both Miller and Malik Jackson and three behind leader DeMarcus Ware. The Broncos rank No. 1 in yards and points allowed due in no small part to the depth provided by unheralded linemen Derek Wolfe and Vance Walker, defensive backs Bradley Roby and David Bruton, and Barrett, who spends a chunk of his time studying Miller and Ware on film and mimicking their trademarked moves.

“Von has a speed, stutter, bull-swipe kind of move that he gets a lot of sacks with, Barrett says. “I can do it in practice, but I haven’t done it effectively in games. D. Ware—when he rushes, he’s technical with it. He’s got his steps down, and his steps will match his hands every time.”

While Miller and Ware are the headliners, Denver’s defense is crowded with homegrown, diamond-in-the-rough success stories. Chris Harris Jr., a second-team All-Pro last season, was undrafted out of Kansas in 2011. Trevathan, who led the team in tackles in 2013 before fracturing his kneecap last August, was chosen in the sixth round out of Kentucky in 2012.

“We can’t all be drafted in the first round,” Trevathan says. “Having guys like Shaq is what makes a team great. He wasn’t pictured to be a playmaker, but he stepped up.”

If he hadn’t, and football hadn’t worked out—as it often doesn’t for UDFAs— Barrett says he probably would’ve been a police officer. He and Jordanna might still be carefully budgeting funds just to make rent, and Jordanna might not get the second wedding they’re planning in February 2016—the real deal this time, with 200-plus guests and formal wear for the Barrett brood. Embracing the diet plan and giving up the sugar buffet was a matter of necessity, not choice.

“I had to,” Barrett says. “I wanted to give myself the best shot I could to make an impact on the team. I see it as an opportunity to give my family a great life.”

Shaquil Barrett keeps getting everyone's attention with his play

By Jeff Legwold

October 20, 2015

With the cameras and notebooks closing in on Denver Broncos linebacker Shaquil Barrett just minutes after the Broncos had earned an overtime win over the Cleveland Browns, some of Barrett's teammates couldn't resist trying to make Barrett lose his composure.

David Bruton Jr., Omar Bolden and Kayvon Webster fired in some verbal volleys toward a player who gets a little more well-known with each well-timed sack, forced fumble or impact play he creates.

"Sack for Shaq, sack for Shaq, sack for Shaq," the three chanted. "Shaq Diesel," they added with a nod to Shaquille O'Neal, to go with "Shaq Attack." Through it all Barrett held up and maintained his composure until the three defensive backs dropped in ...

"Kazaam, baby, Kazaam."

The reference to O'Neal's less-than-critically-acclaimed 1996 film caused Barrett to break into a rolling laugh. But it's been that kind of ride for Barrett, who had spent most of the 2014 season on the practice squad.

Barrett started against the Browns in place of DeMarcus Ware, who was held out because of a back injury. Barrett finished with nine tackles, 1.5 sacks, three tackles for loss, a forced fumble, a fumble recovery and a near interception.

Barrett is now second on the team in sacks, with 3.5, part of the Broncos' league-leading 26 sacks.

"You just see everybody making plays on this defense and you want to be one of those guys too," Barrett said. "I just want to make something happen whenever they put me out there."

With an offseason change in his diet, a little more first-step quickness and the fresh-start opportunity that comes with a new coaching staff, Barrett has simply been a revelation. A guy who makes the most of his snaps, whether it is the 10 snaps he played against the Detroit Lions or the 71 he played Sunday.

Asked Monday if, shortly after he was hired by the Broncos this past January, if he had seen Barrett's potential when he looked the video of last season's practices, Broncos coach Gary Kubiak offered a smile.

"That'd be easy for me to say right now," Kubiak said. "I think everybody knew they had a guy that was a surprise, who had done a lot of good things and that they thought could be a good player. Then when we got into the minicamp and stuff, he just kept showing up. It's fun to watch stuff like that. It's fun to watch those guys become pros and just gain confidence. This guy gets his hands on the ball -- not only the turnover that he knocks loose, but he had another one. He tipped the quarterback's hand and had a chance for an interception there. As coaches, and I know other players, too, watching their buddies become players like he has ... it's fun for everybody to see."

The Broncos will need Barrett to keep up the progress in the coming weeks. Rookie outside linebacker Shane Ray suffered an MCL sprain in his right knee Sunday and is expected to miss several weeks, while Ware's back is always a potential trouble spot. Ware is expected to play Nov. 1 when the Broncos face the Green Bay Packers, but Barrett will get spot duty behind Ware and Von Miller.

Asked what Barrett's ceiling might be, given his meteoric vocational growth in recent months, Kubiak said he didn't to set limits.

"I hope we don't know, I hope he just keeps coming," Kubiak said. He's going to get a great opportunity here. Of course, DeMarcus [Ware] we're hoping is back here when we get back to work for Green Bay. He has earned the right to go on the field ... One thing about this league, if you ever step out there and do it, they can't take it away from you if you keep doing it."

Omar Bolden Living Positive

By Jeff Otte
Children's Hospital Colorado
October 26, 2015

Three months into his senior season at Arizona State University, Omar Bolden was running a scrimmage when his knee buckled and pitched him to the ground in pain.

"No one even touched me," the Denver Broncos safety recalls. "I was just running. It just didn't make any sense."

He'd torn his left ACL — a ligament that stabilizes the knee — fairly common in contact sports for players of any age, often resulting from a rapid pivot or change in direction, as it did in Bolden's case.

It couldn't have happened at a worse time.

Bolden had his sights set on the NFL draft, and the injury would put him out for the rest of the season. "I was really disappointed," he says. "I thought I'd lost my opportunity to enter the league."

The worst pain wasn't physical — it was emotional. But after a few weeks of feeling down, Bolden knew he needed a way to change his perspective. He found it in what he calls "Positive Living," a mantra that morphed into a calling card: Bolden now helms the Positive Living Awards, which go to Broncos fans making a difference in their communities (the prize is two tickets to a Broncos home game, there are six total prizes — one for each home game — and anyone can nominate), and he likes to hand out Positive Living wristbands as a reminder that life, as he puts it, is "about 10% what happens and about 90% how you react to it."

He started with what was right in front of him then: getting back in the game.

"Some things in life are just out of your control," Bolden says. "I tried to focus on the things that were in my control, like getting up each morning with a positive attitude and approaching rehab like it was a real job. It gets tedious. There's three or four months where you feel good, but you know you're not good, and you're just kind of stuck in the middle. But I made a promise to myself I was going to put my all and my everything into getting healthy every day, and I knew I was racing the clock."

Bolden did, of course, get drafted by the Broncos. And in the end, he says, the experience emotionally prepared him for the next step in his career.

"Every kid in the NFL comes from a program where he was a star. You get to this level and everyone around you is a star. It was the first time in my life I'd ever been served a slice of humble pie, you know? You go from being The Guy to being one of the guys."

But Positive Living pays off: Bolden is now a star of this season's stellar Broncos defense. And to any young athlete taken out by injury, Bolden says there's a bright side: "You're never alone. If you play sports, 9 times out of 10 somebody else has gone through it — even in non-contact sports, there are injuries that happen all year. But if you continue to work hard and do right by people, you're going to catch a break. It may not come when you want it to, but it'll come."

Broncos David Bruton wants to make jump from special teams ace to just 'special'

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
September 29, 2015

In some ways for Denver Broncos safety David Bruton Jr., whether he's being called "awesome" by his head coach these days or getting some live broadcast love during a primetime appearance for the team, he's an overnight sensation that's been seven years in the making.

But with the Broncos' first-year coaching staff has come the kind of playing time Bruton has always hoped for in the first place. And after spending his first six seasons as a special teams ace who could play on defense if needed, Bruton is now a key contributor on the league's No. 1 defense.

"It's always fresh to kind of break that label a little bit," Bruton said. "I've been heralded as a special teams guy for years and I can't necessarily downplay it. I've been here in the league and here with the Broncos for that reason for so long. Having a fresh set of eyes, going out there and competing and still building on what I started last year, it's definitely great. I'm relishing the opportunity and the moments and taking full advantage of any chance that I get."

Three games, and three wins, into the season for the Broncos and Bruton has made plays to help seal two of those victories. He created the interception opportunity for safety Darian Stewart in the season-opening win against the Ravens and intercepted Detroit Lions quarterback Matthew Stafford in the closing minutes this past Sunday.

For the season Bruton is not only up to his usual business -- he's tied for the team lead in special teams tackles -- but he's played 59 percent of the defense's snaps and has a sack, the interception, three passes defensed and forced a fumble.

"It's been awesome, hasn't it?" said Broncos coach Gary Kubiak. "It's been special ... We're only three weeks deep and he has been a factor in every week -- just very proud of David."

Bruton began to carve out some room for himself on defense in last season when he finished with 17 percent of the defensive snaps for the season – 188 plays – those largely on passing downs. It was more than he's had in most of his seasons -- he started two games in 2010 to go with three games (one regular-season and two in playoffs in 2011) -- but not as much as he had hoped to have.

But after Rahim Moore's departure in free agency this past season offseason left plenty of playing time up for grabs -- Moore was one of two Broncos' defensive players to play more than 1,000 snaps in 2014 -- Bruton said throughout the spring and summer he considered himself to be a viable option, that he considered "myself as a starter."

Bruton started the opener when T.J. Ward was suspended for a violation of the league's personal conduct policy and has played in the team's dime package (six defensive backs) in the second and third games. But because of Bruton's versatility in coverage, or lined up as a weak-side linebacker at times in some of the specialty looks, defensive coordinator Wade Phillips has been willing to play the six-defensive back look on a bigger variety of down-and-distance situations.

Bruton's interception against the Lions, when he cut underneath Calvin Johnson to first tip, and then catch, Matthew Stafford's throw, came on a third-and-12 situation. Johnson was beyond the first down marker, in Broncos' territory, when Bruton intercepted the ball in a game Denver led by five points at the time.

"It was just a formation where we knew what was coming," Bruton said. "They've had a high tendency to show a particular play ... We were just alert ... It was just a great read and I got just enough depth to be able to get a hand on the ball and control it."

With left tackle Ryan Clady on injured reserve, Bruton, who was a fourth-round pick by the Broncos in the 2009 draft, is the longest-tenured player with the Broncos on the team's current roster. And in the right-place, right-time department, the team's defensive staff figures to keep putting him in the lineup given they want to play a long list of players to keep everyone fresh and given the way Bruton has produced when he has played.

The Broncos used 20 different players for at least two snaps on defense in the win over the Lions.

"All of our personalities get a chance to show [on defense]," Bruton said. "Not to say that we're arrogant, but we're very confident players, and the fact that we're playing so well definitely boosts our confidence even more ... I alluded to what coach Phillips mentioned the first day in OTAs. We have our own assignments, but our responsibility is to get to the ball."

Veteran Colquitt chooses to lead by example

By Allie Raymond

Entering the 2015 offseason as the longest-tenured specialist isn't something that punter Britton Colquitt expected or thought about.

"It's not something you think about all the time," said Colquitt of his veteran status. "I guess I don't feel that old."

Colquitt might not be 'that old', but with 80 regular-season and seven postseason game appearances under his belt after seven years with the Broncos, the punter has more than enough experience to help lead the group of young specialists.

"I try to lead by example," said Colquitt. "I've got to really work hard, show what it means to be a pro. I'm still learning that. I still look for more ways that I can do things to make me a better player and just try to lead by example."

With the addition of first-year Special Teams Coordinator Joe DeCamillis, Colquitt's experience is invaluable to the specialists. His professionalism and attitude hasn't gone unnoticed by DeCamillis.

"The biggest thing is… you want to see to a pro… and I think he is," said DeCamillis of his first impressions of Colquitt. "He's done a great job so far. It's a different system for him, it's a little bit different – what we're asking him to do - and he's bought in completely so far. So we've got to keep him on that path and so far he's been hitting the ball excellent."

The franchise career leader in gross (45.5) and net (39.0) punting average, Colquitt is already feeling comfortable under the direction of DeCamillis.

"It's going really good, he's a great guy, a great coach obviously, he's been around a lot of years, so he knows what he's doing," said Colquitt. "With us, the specialists in particular, he's big on working and looking at film and stuff like that and that's something that at our position you could easily get away from.

"He's a coach who's there pushing you, but also is cool off the field and just a fun guy to be around. So I think he's definitely going to make an impact and guys are already starting to buy into his ideas."

Each year as a Bronco, Colquitt not only gains more experience, but also becomes more comfortable. When asked what differences he's noticed this offseason in comparison to 2014, Colquitt says it hit him this year that Denver feels like home.

"I feel like now that I've been in Denver going on seven years, its feels more like home," said Colquitt. "Like I'm a real part of this organization, whereas before, you're kind of just hoping. It's not that I'm complacent, I just feel like I have more pride in this team and more of a reason to want to help us to do well and win."

Owen Daniels heating up as red zone threat, Peyton Manning's safety valve for Broncos

By Cameron Wolfe
Denver Post
October 6, 2015

A surprisingly shaky start on offense is not quite what tight end Owen Daniels expected when he signed a three-year, $12 million deal with the Broncos in March.

Up to this point, the veteran has been used mostly as a blocker to help a struggling offensive line. Daniels' value has come not from the amount of production, but when he has provided it.

In back-to-back games, quarterback Peyton Manning found Daniels in the end zone for touchdowns.

Sunday vs. Minnesota, it was fourth-and-goal from the 1-yard-line. Two runs up the middle by running back Ronnie Hillman got stuffed on second and third down plays. Coach Gary Kubiak knew the offense needed a touchdown, not just for the game, but for the team's overall confidence.

So Kubiak drew a misdirection play-action lob pass to the man who could sneak behind the unsuspecting defense, Daniels.

"You just have to think to yourself, just catch it," Daniels said after the game Sunday. "It seemed like it was in the air forever, but Peyton did a great job of getting it there."

"That's kind of the hardest throw and the hardest catch," Manning said. "He's so open that you don't want to overthrow him, but Owen has to be like, hurry up, let the ball get here. I'm glad that it ended up in his hands."

The touchdown put the Broncos up 20-10 in the third quarter, and although the Vikings would score again, the touchdown was effectively the game winner.

Daniels said it's all in the formation. Nearly all the Broncos' successful plays have come out of the two-tight ends formations. Along with Daniels' touchdown reception, Hillman's 72-yard touchdown run came out of that same personnel and it was sprung by Daniels making a block.

"You force a defense to make a decision. Do they want to keep their base personnel in there to stop the run or do they want put a nickel guy in there to stop the pass," Daniels said. "Either way, whatever they decide to do we have to make them wrong. We have had a lot of success with that specific personnel grouping."

It's a staple of Kubiak's system. Bait the defense with the run, then hit the tight ends and crossing receivers off the play action passes. And Daniels expects to see a lot more of it going forward.

He's expecting to get the ball more too once the offense can get the run game rolling.

Daniels did his research before he came to Denver. He knows about Manning's love affair with the tight end. And he saw former Broncos tight end Julius Thomas, now with Jacksonville, total 151 catches, 1,277 yards and 24 touchdowns in his last two seasons in Denver.

So Daniels knows his time to shine is coming no matter what the capacity. He's on track for 244 yards this season, which would easily be the lowest number of his career.

"I think we can get him involved more," Kubiak said. "That's a nice problem to have. You're trying to get those guys touches so they can affect the football game."

Daniels could get a jump start against Oakland this week. The Raiders have given up an NFL-most 388 yards and six touchdowns to tight ends this season. A trip to the Bay might be the perfect vacation for a veteran heating up on offense.

"If I gotta be the guy to make a play, then I'll happily be that guy," Daniels said.

Tight ends have had good success against the Raiders this season

Week 1 vs. Cincinnati — Tyler Eifert, nine receptions, 104 yards, two touchdowns

Week 2 vs. Baltimore — Crockett Gilmore, five receptions, 88 yards, two touchdowns

Week 3 at Cleveland — Gary Barnidge, six receptions, 105 yards, one touchdown

Week 4 at Chicago — Martellus Bennett, 11 receptions, 83 yards, one touchdown

One incomplete pass showed potential of Vernon Davis' impact on Broncos

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
November 10, 2015

The Denver Broncos called one pass play to Vernon Davis on Sunday.

In a perfect world, it would have resulted in the kind of scoring play the Broncos hoped for when they made the trade for Davis last week.

The Broncos decided the price was right and added Davis to an offense that needs him for the postseason. And they plotted, schemed and drew on the proverbial drawing board in the hopes of using Davis plenty against the Colts.

They even added a three-wide receiver, two-tight end formation to the offensive mix -- with no running back -- and utilized it twice against the Colts.

“He needs to play more and he will,’’ said Broncos coach Gary Kubiak. “We had him involved early in the game.’’

And with just under seven minutes remaining in the first half, one of the plays the Broncos had so carefully drawn up last week -- Davis out wide in single coverage against a safety the team believed he could run past -- was there for the taking.

At the snap, he sprinted past Indianapolis safety Colt Anderson and was free up the right sideline. All quarterback Peyton Manning had to do was get the ball from point A to point B. Anderson, however, hooked Davis’ left arm, which prevented him from getting to the ball on what would have been a touchdown reception. Instead, Manning's pass bounced across the turf for an incompletion.

It was the only time the Broncos threw the ball to Davis, as he played nine snaps overall in the 27-24 loss.

“I spent most of my time on the sideline watching O.D. (Owen Daniels), (Virgil Green) and those guys,’’ Davis said. “I was just continuing to learn, just feed myself the game plan and get everything down so that I can go out there, be comfortable and just play ball. That's what it's about.’’

Still, this formation isn't going anywhere since Kubiak has spoken many times about the importance of working out of a two-tight end set. He believes it makes defenses more predictable, gives the Broncos additional options in pass protection and adds some bulk to the run game.

The Broncos believe Davis’ speed, which he displayed on the incomplete pass, will potentially force defenses to pull a defender or two out of the middle of the field to cover him, depending on where the Broncos put him in the formation.

“The ball didn't come his way due to coverage or whatever took place, but we were trying to get him the ball,’’ Kubiak said. “We got a matchup that we wanted one time that we had worked all week -- getting him on a go route on the safety -- that we missed ... There was a conscious effort to try to get him the football.''

Part of the issue Sunday was the Broncos found themselves behind midway through the second quarter, 17-0, and as a result, they went to more of a no-huddle approach. That limited Davis' ability to make plays because Manning does so much at the line of scrimmage with the play calls.

Davis had only practiced with the team three times before the Colts game, so his ability to work out of the no-huddle set was limited.

"Coach told me prior to the game that I would be limited so that I could get comfortable with everything in the system,'' Davis said. "I agreed. I said, 'Yeah. I'm with you 100 percent. I think that I need to get everything so that, when I go out there, I can be on the same page as Peyton. I don't have to worry about asking questions; I can just go and play.'"

Daniels finished the game with 102 yards on six catches and one touchdown -- it was his first game with Denver where he had more than 50 yards receiving -- and Kubiak believes there are more games like that in the future for Daniels and Davis.

"No doubt,'' Kubiak said. "Vernon is going to have an impact for us.''

For Vernon Davis, dreams really do come true

By Andrew Mason
DenverBroncos.com
November 4, 2015

Wednesday was Vernon Davis' first day in a Broncos uniform. The No. 80 jersey on his torso, the mid-autumn nip in the air, a new blue helmet on his head ... for the 10-year veteran tight end, it all felt real -- as real as it gets.

But then Davis would turn to see Peyton Manning in the No. 18 jersey, and all of a sudden, the reality of a Wednesday practice gave way to surreality.

Sometimes dreams do come true.

"I don't know if [Manning] knows, but I've been dreaming about this guy," Davis said. "Where I came from, I just had to accept what I had. Not knocking those guys -- Colin [Kaepernick] and Alex [Smith] were really good. They were good at their craft.

"They were good quarterbacks, but we're talking about Peyton Manning. It's a whole other level. We all know that, so it's a bit overwhelming, but once I get out there, get going and get used to the way that he's doing things it'll be all good."

Denver and the chance to catch passes from a Hall of Famer at the cusp of setting two more league records is a dream. But it's not perfect, and Davis admits that he will "miss everything about being a Niner."

However, he doesn't miss where the team stands now. Just 22 months removed from their third consecutive NFC Championship Game appearance, the 49ers are in free-fall, having lost six of their previous seven games leading up to this week's change from Kaepernick to journeyman Blaine Gabbert. The 49ers' descent started last year, when the 49ers limped home with an 8-8 finish that included a 42-17 Sunday Night Football throttling in Denver. And it wasn't a coincidence that Davis' production dipped last year, as well, with his lowest totals in receptions (26), yards (245) and touchdowns (two) since 2008.

Davis' 2014 decline was stunning, given that in 2013 he matched his career high with 13 touchdown catches, scoring once every four receptions.

“Everyone is asking that question: 'Where did I go?' If you look at San Francisco, look at the year when I started to drop off," Davis said, referring to 2014.

"What happened with the team? They started to fall all in. There were so many things going on, so much turmoil. No one really excelled. No one really had success. As a team, we didn't have success.

"If the team's not having success, the chances are that I'm not going to have success. That's what it is."

But these Broncos are 7-0 and coming off their most comprehensive performance of the season. The passing, rushing and play-action attacks worked in perfect cohesion, matching the league-leading performance of the defense.

Although Davis, will need a little time to get adjusted to the offense and Manning and to settle into a role among the Broncos' collection of tight ends, this appears to be an environment that will bring out Davis' best.

"To be here -- I can feel the energy. There are so many leaders on this team," Davis said. "That's what it takes. It takes that. You have to have leaders and guys that are willing to come out, work hard and just get better. Even in the locker room, everyone is extremely nice.

"Everyone's together. The synergy is there. It's all there and you can feel it. The first day I walked in, I was like, 'Wow. I can feel it,' and when I got here, no one was even here. I could just feel the environment. It's just a beautiful thing. I'm ecstatic to be here today. Hopefully, I can remain here."

That's a possibility to which Executive Vice President/General Manager John Elway is open.

"We get a chance to know him these final nine or 10 weeks this year, and maybe he's back next year. Who knows? We'll see what we've got," Elway said.

"We still think he's got a lot of football left in him -- not only this year -- whether it's here or somewhere else. We'll visit that and see what happens."

For now, Davis will enjoy the moment, as his dream becomes reality -- which he hopes brings him closer to another dream, that of his first world championship.

"I've never played in an offense like this before," Davis said. "I don't know what's going to happen, but I know it's going to be damn good. I know that it's going to be good. I can feel it."

Vernon Davis reunited with Broncos strength coach who helped him set combine record

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
November 4, 2015

The memorable blur of Vernon Davis took shape in a warehouse in Tempe, Ariz., in January 2006.

The University of Maryland tight end was one of many at his position that year hoping to gain notice from NFL scouts at the combine. With the help of Luke Richesson, then a trainer at Athletes Performance Institute (now EXOS), Davis packed on pounds of muscle. He developed his core and he improved his stability. He put in hours of work to add inches to his vertical leap and shed time off his 40-yard dash.

The next month at Lucas Oil Stadium, where cameras and scouts homed in on the 6-foot-3, 254-pound kid with braids, Davis clocked 4.38 seconds, still the fastest time by a tight end at the combine.

Davis, a two-time Pro Bowler who was acquired by the Broncos in a trade with San Francisco on Monday, has in recent seasons shown signs of a player with more than nine years of pro football wear and tear on his body. But the speed hasn't dissipated, and it's one of the many reasons Broncos general manager John Elway brought Davis to Denver, where he is reunited with Richesson and where he is expected to bolster an offense in transition.

"He's always been a guy that's — maybe two or three years ago he had 13 touchdown (catches) and is a guy that can really stretch the field, has tremendous speed and athletic ability," Elway said. "He's one of those guys at tight end that really catches your eye all the time."

Elway got a closer look at Davis when the Broncos hosted the 49ers in two joint practices before a preseason game this year. He saw what scouts saw in 2006, confirming that the 31-year-old could help fill a void on Denver's roster.

Through the first seven games of the season, the Broncos boasted an impressive defense and a shaky offense, with production from their tight ends seemingly nonexistent. After losing tight ends Julius Thomas and Jacob Tamme in free agency in March, the Broncos signed Owen Daniels and re-signed Virgil Green. They drafted the young but athletic Jeff Heuerman in the third round, but the hope of using his speed and athleticism was quickly dashed by a season-ending knee injury during minicamp.

The team with no Plan B had to find one.

The addition of Daniels and the blocking of Green wasn't enough — especially through the first six games of the season when the two combined for only 123 receiving yards and three touchdowns. And especially in Gary Kubiak's offense, which relies heavily on tight ends and often features two- and three-tight-end packages.

"We were surviving with Owen and Virgil," Kubiak said. Then Owen gets hurt in Cleveland, so we had a little problem on our hands. If anything, (signing Davis) settles us down."

For the past two seasons, after his second 13-touchdown year in 2013, Davis's performance tailed off with the 49ers, a symptom, he says, of poor play from the team as a whole. It's been 19 games since he caught a touchdown pass. In six games this season, he's caught 18 of 30 passes targeted for him for 194 yards (10.8 avg.).

But the speed, the vision of that 4.38 time flashing across the time clock at Lucas Oil Stadium in 2006, hasn't been forgotten. On Sunday, when the Broncos face the Colts at Indianapolis, Davis will return to the place where it all began, with Richesson on the sideline.

"I did some great things with him," Davis said. "He helped me to prepare myself for the combine and I went out there and gave it my all. It's good to see him again and be back with him again. I know that he's going to help me continue to grow.

"It feels like I'm a rookie all over again."

Davis facts

An inside look at the two-time Pro Bowl tight end Vernon Davis, who was traded from San Francisco to Denver on Monday:

— His 4.38 40-yard dash at the 2006 NFL combine still is tops among tight end prospects.

— Had 13 receiving touchdown catches in both 2009, 2013

— One of his brothers is Colts cornerback Vontae Davis.

— Davis majored in studio art at the University of Maryland.

— He started the Vernon Davis Foundation for the Arts to promote art education among disadvantaged youth.

— He's passionate about acting, which he has said he hopes to pursue after football.

— Davis has been the honorary captain for the U.S. curling teams in two Winter Olympics.

— He's been dreaming of playing with Peyton Manning since he left college.

Bennie Fowler makes most of chances to carve out role

By Jeff Legwold

October 16, 2015

The distance Denver Broncos wide receiver Bennie Fowler has come in the last year can be measured by his jersey's tour of Oakland.

In the moments that followed the Broncos' 16-10 victory over the Oakland Raiders, Fowler wasn't wearing his No. 16. At that time an NBA champion -- Golden State Warriors forward Draymond Green -- had Fowler's jersey in hand, with big plans on his mind.

"That's my boy," Green said as he waited for an elevator at field level in O.co Coliseum. "I'll be putting this up ... I'll get it in a frame."

Longtime friends Fowler and Green both went to Michigan State and are Michigan natives, and Fowler was happy to hand over the game-worn jersey with the grass stain on the left shoulder.

"Happy about it, because I did wear it in a game," Fowler said. "I think the coaches trust me, Peyton [Manning] trusts me and I've had some opportunities."

Fowler and Jordan Norwood have clawed their way up the depth chart and on to the field in the offense as the third wide receivers. Manning has thrown the ball to each of them in key situations and each has moved past Cody Latimer on the depth chart.

Latimer, a second-round pick in the 2014 draft who has been working through a groin injury in recent weeks, has not been able to turn plenty of practice heroics into game-day success.

And while Norwood has largely played in the slot, Fowler is a big-bodied receiver, at 212 pounds, whom the Broncos have played on the outside and in the slot as well. Fowler leads the team in yards per catch -- 15.3 -- and of his seven receptions this season, six have gone for first downs.

With a 41-yard catch Sunday against the Raiders, Fowler also has the fourth-longest pass play of the season for the Broncos.

"Every time that he goes out there, he makes a first down, so that helps out," Broncos offensive coordinator Rick Dennison said. "If we make a first down, it's him and Jordan right now. We're throwing to those two guys. ... Bennie just goes out, he's a big man, he can run and catches the ball."

Fowler spent the 2014 rookie season on the Broncos' practice squad after signing with the team as an undrafted free agent. Fowler likely would have been drafted had he been able to play in all four of his seasons at Michigan State, but he had suffered foot fractures in 2009 and 2011.

He had played both his junior and senior seasons for the Spartans, but many teams still considered him a medical risk.

"I still thought I could make an opportunity," Fowler said. "I played my last two years, I was healthy those two years, so I didn't really worry about it. If it would have happened my senior year, then maybe I would have been worried the NFL might not happen."

Fowler also didn't take his season on the practice squad as a slight; he made it into a learning experience.

"Why wouldn't you?" Fowler said. "You're playing with Peyton throwing the ball, and learning from [Demaryius Thomas] and Emmanuel [Sanders]. I looked at it like a redshirt year, you have those in college and I had mine in the NFL."

Fowler's transition into the league has also been smoothed by the fact Michigan State, unlike most college programs, plays plenty of press coverage -- the Spartans' defensive backs are physical with receivers at the line of scrimmage. Many young receivers have a difficult time initially in the NFL because they suddenly have to battle just to get into their routes, something they didn't have to do often in college.

There was also the matter that Fowler often faced Spartans cornerback Darqueze Dennard -- the first-round pick of the Cincinnati Bengals in the '14 draft -- in practice each day.

"I knew, when you face Darqueze Dennard every day and he's going in the first round, that tells you that you can play in the league," Fowler said. "I was comfortable getting off press coverage too and a lot of guys struggle with that when they first come out. I just want to keep getting in the right spots, have Peyton keep trusting me and have the coaches keep trusting me to do the right thing."

Max Garcia: "Don't feel sorry for me"

By Mike Klis

Whatever joy there may have been inside the Denver Broncos' locker room for the signing of Evan Mathis, it was tempered by the realization Max Garcia had lost his starting job.

"Don't feel sorry for me," said Garcia, whose days as the Broncos' No. 1 left guard are numbered until Mathis gets in shape. "I'm happy to be a part of this team. I'm content with the situation. I'm just going to keep striving to get better."

That type of maturity explains why Garcia almost pulled off the upset and became the starting left guard even though he is a rookie who wasn't drafted until the fourth round.

It wasn't Garcia so much as Broncos' general manager John Elway didn't want to stack three offensive linemen with zero NFL playing experience – rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo, Garcia and center Matt Paradis – together in front of star quarterback Peyton Manning.

And the best blocker available to break up those baby Broncos was Mathis, an 11-year NFL veteran who is coming off back-to-back Pro Bowl appearances.

"We needed a little bit of experience, especially on that left side," Elway said. "Evan's able to bring that plus a Pro Bowl-caliber type player. … Max has a tremendous career ahead of him. This has nothing to do with how Max was playing."

Keep in mind, the Broncos only gave Mathis a one-year deal. Garcia can get his job back next year. He had moved ahead of Ben Garland as the Broncos' top left guard in the second week of training camp.

Garcia started the first two preseason games at left guard and he'll be with the No. 1 unit Saturday against the San Francisco 49ers as Mathis probably won't play until the regular-season opener Sept. 13 against the Baltimore Ravens.

"It's part of the business, part of the game," Garcia told 9NEWS Thursday. "I feel like it's a good move for the team. I'm not going to take it personal by any means. I know the coaches have been impressed with me, they have confidence in me, they have trust in me. I think this is for the overall betterment of the team. It's a good move. I'm still going to prepare like I'm the guy like I've been doing."

Virgil Green versed in versatility

By Allie Raymond
DenverBroncos.com
September 1, 2015

Standing at an imposing height of 6 feet 5 inches with what looks like 255 pounds of sheer muscle, tight end Virgil Green says and looks like he can do just about anything.

But that's not quite the case.

"I can't draw," Green says, smiling. "My dad's really good at drawing, my brother's really good and I would try to draw and none of my artistic designs would ever come out decent."

While art may not be Green's strong suit, he says it's really the only thing he can't do. That's a bold statement, but one look at Green could make anyone believe it. "If I can try it, I can pretty much probably do it," Green said.

Not only has Green played most positions on the offense—including a few practice snaps on offensive line (though none at quarterback)—since his arrival in Denver four years ago, but he's also played a laundry list of other sports since he was a child. Green played football, baseball, basketball, track and field and soccer.

Combined, each has made him the all-around athlete he is today.

"Just being versatile – being able to do different things," said Green of what all those sports taught him. "Basketball, you have to be able to play defense and offense. So, I think that helps out athletically."

At Tulare Union High School in Tulare, California, Green lettered four years in basketball and a year in track and field. In basketball, he played power forward and in track, he participated in sprints, vertical jumps and even threw the shot put.

"I didn't start playing football until I got to high school," Green. "I was a basketball guy, I loved basketball, wanted to play basketball in the NBA. It didn't work out that way. I turned out to be a lot better at football, and I only went out because all my friends play, and that's how it all began."

In football, Green had the opportunity to showcase his talents and versatility across a multitude of positions before finding his fit.

"I played linebacker to start — outside linebacker — and then my junior year, they moved me to tight end, receiver," Green said. "Then my senior year I played wide receiver."
After a successful high school campaign, Green and his family were faced with a new challenge in his college recruitment.

"It was crazy," Green said. "My dad, he didn't play football or basketball or anything. He road dirt bikes for a living, growing up. He knew everything you could know about dirt bikes, but we didn't know too much about the recruiting process and things like that. We just went with our gut with how things felt. Nevada seemed like the right place for me to go."

At Nevada, Green moved back to tight end but continued to line up at different positions on offense in the Wolf Pack's scheme.

"In college, especially for a tight end, you have to play all positions, really," Green said. "To me, for any tight end at any level, you've got to be able to play multiple positions because it creates mismatches. It creates havoc for defenses and that's kind of what our coach demanded for us at Nevada. I carried the ball in college before, I've gotten a pitch, and I've gotten a shovel pass. I've pretty much done it all at the tight end position."

After sitting out his first season at Nevada due to injury, Green tallied 939 receiving yards on 72 receptions and added 11 touchdowns in his three seasons. From 2007-10, Green helped the Wolf Pack rank fifth in the nation with 500.2 total yards per game. As a senior, he recorded a personal-best 35 catches for 515 yards with five touchdowns, earning him first-team All-Mountain West Conference honors.

Those stats were good enough to get him a ticket to the 2011 NFL Combine in Indianapolis at Lucas Oil Stadium where he had his shot at proving his athleticism to scouts from all 32 teams. Upon his arrival, Green was heralded for his superior ball skills, something that could easily be attributed to his time on the basketball court. He was a top performer in the 40-yard dash, vertical jump, broad jump, three-cone drill and 60-yard shuttle — just like his days as a track and field athlete. Green excelled in the vertical jump, a common measure to show a player's explosiveness. His 42 1/2-inch vertical ties for the eighth-best mark all-time and the second-best for a tight end in NFL Combine history.

Four years later, he is still a vital part of the Broncos offense. Primarily a blocking tight end in his rookie season, Green saw action in 15 regular-season games while blocking for the league's No. 1 rushing attack (164.5 ypg). In his career, Green has amassed more than 200 receiving yards and averages nine yards per catch.

Last March, after four years with the Broncos, Green decided to re-sign and spend three more years playing in the orange and blue.

The choice was easy for Green and his wife Marianne, a former Nevada basketball player.

"I've built so many different relationships out here," Green said. "I work with United Way, my financial advisor lives out here, my wife has a job out here, it just all pretty much fit the puzzle for what we're trying to do in our life."

With the addition of new Head Coach Gary Kubiak and Offensive Coordinator Rick Dennison this spring, Green is excited and looking forward to the changes on the offense. In the first preseason game at Seattle, Green was the sole Bronco to haul in a touchdown on the night.

"Virgil is obviously a really good athlete," Tight Ends Coach Brian Pariani said. "Playing in this system is going to be really good for him because we're tight end-friendly. He has skills, he can catch the ball. You're able to see him put his foot in the ground and run away from people and he's had a chance to make plays not only in practice, but he had a chance to go do it in a game. Once somebody does it in a game, no one can take it away from them."

Green echoed Pariani's sentiments on the offense. Against the Seahawks in August, he led the team in receiving with five catches for 45 yards.

"Somebody asked me earlier after the game if I think it is a tight end-friendly offense and I felt like the first three passes of the game, I caught three balls," Green said. "So that's pretty friendly to me. I just think it can do a lot of things in the run game and in the pass game and we can win a lot of games with that."

Green also has impressed Kubiak this year beyond the X's and O's.

"Virgil's a warrior," Kubiak said. "He's beat up, he's had a finger, he's had a toe, you name it — Virgil has not missed a day."

That fighter attitude ties into Green's goals for the 2015 season. Not one for losing, he's committed to bringing a championship home to Denver no matter what.

"To me, I only play this game for one reason: It's for championships," Green said.
"My wife always tells me that I'm a sore loser and she's correct. I am a sore loser. I hate losing, I don't want to lose, I don't accept losing, I pretty much don't care how the game goes as long as we come out with the 'W.' I don't care how many touchdowns I have in a game — if we lose, it doesn't matter. It doesn't count. It's all about winning."

He may not be an artist, but Green is poised for a breakout season, and fans and coaches alike will be able to see his unique palette of skills and how much it can add to the Broncos offense.

Don’t Call Me Underrated

By Chris Harris Jr.
The Players’ Tribune
September 17, 2015

I’ve always been an underdog.

In college, I had a great career. I started every game. I had the second-most tackles in Kansas history. I was one of the best players, offense or defense, in the nation.

When draft day came around in 2011, I sat in a room with my family and friends waiting for my phone to ring.

But it didn’t ring. I wasn’t drafted at all.

There’s a huge stigma to going undrafted. Not a lot of people talk about it, but there is. For a guy who’s drafted, and in particular drafted high, you’re allowed to make so many more mistakes. People want you to succeed, and any shortcomings you have are viewed as temporary. An “adjustment phase.”

When you’re undrafted, you just don’t have that same margin for error. You have to go above and beyond — and then above and beyond that.

Like a lot of guys who were snubbed in the draft, I play with a chip on my shoulder. Every play is an opportunity to prove wrong everyone who did not recognize my talent.

As an undrafted player, you’re playing every game against a team that passed on you … with every single pick they owned. Other coaches, other players and even some members of the media assume there must be a reason you were not drafted.

Why?

Because if you do make one, they can think to themselves, “Oh. That’s why he went undrafted. Okay. We’re fine. We did our jobs.” And that’s the stigma you don’t hear as much about. It’s not just that everyone thinks you’re a fringe player. It’s that, in this weird way, everyone wants you to be one.

Name. Pedigree. Reputation. They’re hard to overcome.

Luckily, I came in with veteran players who didn’t care about any of that. And I mean I got really lucky. I got two all-timers: Brian Dawkins and Champ Bailey. Out of everyone in the league, those were probably the two best and most professional guys to be able to play under. I got both of them. And once they saw I could play, nothing else mattered. They wanted to win. Pretty soon they were fighting our coaches to put me in.

I made first-team All Rookie that year. And I’ve been playing on an elite level ever since.

But still, there's that stigma. Even after you prove yourself, it follows you around. It's the difference between having and lacking pedigree: When you have it, you're "confirming." When you lack it, you're "proving."

Sometimes, it's in subtle ways. When I tore my ACL last January, a lot of people wrote me off. Most guys, if they tear their ACL at 25, people are optimistic. But with me, for whatever reason, it was like, "He won't get it back. He's on the downside now."

I came back in seven months, which shocked people. Then I put up a Pro-Bowl and All-Pro season, which shocked them even more.

Earlier this summer, the football analytics site Pro Football Focus released their annual list of the Top 100 players in the NFL. I came in at No. 4 — behind only J.J. Watt, Aaron Rodgers and Justin Houston.

When the list came out, some people made a big deal about my ranking being so high.

But to me, it honestly didn't seem strange at all.

To arrive at their rankings, Pro Football Focus uses a lot of advanced metrics — high-end stats and high-end film. But at the same time, they really only use one metric, and it's the simplest one there is: performance. I'll quote them: "This list is based solely on 2014 play. Nothing that happened in previous years or may happen in the future is accounted for. This isn't about class or talent; it's about form throughout 2014."

And that's what separates the PFF list from other lists. It's name-blind, pedigree-blind and reputation-blind. It asks one question: Did you perform? And it measures one thing: How did that performance stack up against the rest of the league?

There are two main things you want from a cornerback: First, don't give up touchdowns. And second, don't give up big plays. I didn't give up a single touchdown last year. And I didn't give up a single play over 22 yards. Zero and zero. If I was a pitcher in baseball, I'd have pitched a shutout — for an entire season.

A couple of months later, NFL Network released its own Top 100 list. In a way, it was the complete opposite of the Pro Football Focus list. This one, voted on by players, had no defined criteria.

And when a list's criteria are "undefined," what that really means is they're defined by our default settings — the instinctive ways that we judge people: Name. Pedigree. Reputation.

So when the NFL Network list came out, I didn't even need to look. I could already guess. And I guessed right.

Remembered by facts and forgotten by opinions: That's the life of the undrafted underdog in the NFL.

So, yeah, I know I'm not the most famous player. I know I'm always going to rank higher on certain lists than others. But I know who I am. I know what I'm capable of. And I know there is only one way to make sure that people never forget my name.

Win the Super Bowl.

By Troy Renck
DenverPost.com
August 9, 2015

Ryan Harris remembers when he quit baseball. A hulking first baseman at Cretin-Derham Hall school in St. Paul, Minn., he buckled on his first curveball.

"I jumped out of the way," Harris said of his freshman year. "I couldn't hit it."

The right offensive tackle watched teammate Joe Mauer, who struck out once in high school, slug all pitches and figured it was time to move on. The two teamed on the gridiron. Mauer, a quarterback, turned down Florida State to join the Minnesota Twins. Harris went to Notre Dame, beginning a journey that has resembled a slalom course on his way back to the Broncos.

Once too young, once too injured, Harris believes he has found the right team at the right time. At age 30, the 6-foot-5, 302-pounder holds the Broncos starting job at right tackle, five years since he last played in Denver and two years since he worked for coach Gary Kubiak in Houston.

"Every year you grow," Harris said. "I understand so much more how the little things matter. At the same time, time is running out on my career to win a championship. It was always the goal, but now getting older and hopefully wiser, I just really want that championship. And I think it's just a great opportunity to do so here."

Harris made Denver home since the Broncos drafted him with the sixth pick of the third round in 2007. He played 46 games in four seasons before a back issue sidelined him. His career in limbo, Harris bounced back in Kansas City last year, starting 15 games. As a free agent, his phone rang, but the offers weren't serious.

"I am not going to lie, that surprised me because I thought I played well," Harris admitted.

The Broncos were one of the teams to begin preliminary talks in mid-May. Everything changed when Harris' good friend Ryan Clady, someone he considers family, suffered a season-ending torn ACL in his left knee May 29.

Added for depth, Harris supplanted Chris Clark a few days into training camp. Kubiak has witnessed a change in Harris since their time together in Houston.

"I can say this: Ryan is a little different guy this time around. I really see a hunger from him. I know he's a little older. I think he sees an opportunity here," Kubiak said. "He's taking care of himself a lot better. We'll see where it goes. But he's doing a good job."

As a player ages, no detail becomes too small. Harris improved his training, his diet. He sleeps more. Everything from his prepractice routine to his drill work reflects his experience.

"You see quarterbacks come out onto the field early to warm up, but few others," Harris said. "I like to get out there and get my hips warmed up, move around and start thinking about the points of emphasis. And this (zone-blocking) scheme is familiar. I can play and not think as much. I also know how teams try to attack certain plays."

Training camp brings challenges. Harris stays humble by squaring off frequently with edge rusher Von Miller, who turns tackles into turnstiles.

"He's making me a better player," Harris said. "I am taking nothing for granted. Believe me."

The Broncos boast a chilling amount of youth up front. Harris and Louis Vasquez have played 15 NFL seasons. The remaining three players now starting — center Max Paradis, left guard Max Garcia and left tackle Ty Sambrailo — have played zero combined NFL games.

It's a curveball most weren't expecting. Harris understands the anxiety but insists it can work.

"Don't worry, we got this," said Harris on what he would tell fans. "The first year I started in 2008, Ryan Clady was a rookie left tackle, Chris Kuper hadn't played and was at right guard and I was at right tackle. That whole season together, we allowed (12) sacks. You are not something until you are, and we believe we will be a great part of this team."

Ronnie Hillman breathes life into Broncos' run game

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
October 4, 2015

Broncos coach Gary Kubiak explained, succinctly, what needed to happen.

After three games and three wins and three shaky offensive showings, Kubiak still was searching for a run game that, in January, validated his reasoning to move to the zone-blocking scheme. Heading into Sunday's game against Minnesota he still was searching for the performances that helped running back C.J. Anderson to his first Pro Bowl a year ago and could help alleviate the pressure on 39-year old quarterback Peyton Manning.

So Kubiak issued the challenge last week. Sometimes, he said, despite all the changes on the offensive line in front of them, the running backs have to create their own space. They have to make defenders miss.

On Sunday, in the Broncos' 23-20 victory over the Vikings, the backs met the challenge. After gaining just 171 yards rushing through three games, the Broncos ran for 146 yards on 22 carries.

It was Ronnie Hillman, a backup, who did the most to breathe life into a run game that had been on life support, gaining 103 yards on 11 carries.

In the second quarter, Hillman fielded a pitch to the left from Manning out of the pistol formation and bolted through the scrum and up the left sideline 72 yards for the score and a 10-0 lead. It was the fourth-longest run from scrimmage in Broncos history.

"You always need something to spark the running game," Hillman said. "This week, it was just our time."

Kubiak described it as a "huge play," but one wasn't enough to change his plan on how to use Anderson and Hillman.

"We're going to play them both. I think they both improved over the course of this past week. We banged pretty good on Thursday and I think they responded," Kubiak said.

The opportunities and the handoffs kept coming to Anderson, even after Hillman's score. But so did the frustration.

On third-and-10 in the final seconds of the third quarter, Anderson plowed through the line for a gain of 9 yards. He slapped the ground and stood up with a glare of dissatisfaction, knowing he came up short.

"There were a couple big runs that I knew I could have had if I stepped out of a tackle," said Anderson, who ran for 43 yards. "So I was really more frustrated with myself. I wasn't frustrated with what was going on. It was more with me, in breaking the tackle and getting out of there."

Anderson had a huge run with the game on the line. After a defensive holding call on Minnesota moved the Broncos to the Vikings' 38-yard line with the game tied at 20 and the clock at 2:20, Anderson burst through the line for a 13-yard gain. That set up Brandon McManus for a game winning 39-yard field goal.

"A lot of lanes today," Anderson said. "It's up to me and (Ronnie) to step out a little bit more on tackles so we can get what we want. But give credit to the O-line. They played their (butts) off today, and that's what you love as a running back. It's up to us to make that one person miss so we can have those big runs, like Ronnie had."

The Broncos' offensive line continued its dance. A shoulder injury to starting left tackle Ty Sambrailo forced Kubiak to call up Michael Schofield, a second-year player who, before Sunday, had yet to take a regular-season snap. Schofield moved in at right tackle, with veteran Ryan Harris shifting to the left.

In a blocking scheme that requires the line to migrate to one side, pull the defense along with it and open up quick and tight lanes for the backs to run through, the new front five had to work in unison with little practice.

"I think the O-line just got tired of the outside noise," Hillman said, "and they started giving us lanes."

But from Kubiak's vantage point on the sideline, the call was answered by more than the young faces in front of Manning.

The Broncos showed their running game. There were warts, but there also were yards.

"We asked a lot out of them and I think they're starting to respond," Kubiak said. "Hopefully, we took a step in the right direction running the ball."

A run for the books

Ronnie Hillman's 72-yard touchdown run in the second quarter tied for the fourth-longest in Broncos history. Here's a look at his company in the books:

Rank Player Opp. (Date) Yards

1. ... Gene Mingo ... vs. Oakland (Oct. 5, 1962) ... 82 yards

2-T. ... Floyd Little ... at San Francisco (Oct. 25, 1970) ... 80 yards

4-T. ... Ronnie Hillman ... vs. Minnesota (Oct. 4, 2015) ... 72 yards

4-T. ... Joe Dawkins ... at Kansas City (Oct. 7, 1973) ... 72 yards

Malik Jackson nominated for NFL Salute to Service Award

By Cameron Wolfe
Denver Post
November 10, 2015

With November being the NFL's Salute to Service month and Veterans Day on the horizon, it's good to note the Denver Broncos are doing their part.

The Broncos nominated defensive end Malik Jackson for the NFL Salute to Service Award, which every year honors a league member who has shown exemplary interest and time into helping the military community.

Jackson was chosen due his work as a spokesman for Helping Hands with Freedom. The organization's purpose is to help military families and children dealing with circumstances of death, injury or deployment in their family.

"We want to raise money for military families to be able to pay bills, pay for necessities—food, water, washer and dryer—things we take for granted sometimes," Jackson said via Broncos' press release. "They have had hard times, so it's one of those things you're trying to help them do something big."

The fourth-year defensive end has been an integral piece to the Broncos' No. 1 ranked defense. Jackson has 27 tackles, 3 1/2 sacks and countless more quarterback hits.

His aggression on the field is a stark contrast to his compassion off of it.

Jackson's newest venture is with Helping Hands with Freedom's Lucky 7 for Kids Campaign. The purpose is to raise money by encouraging 100,000 people to donate $7 to the campaign in order to achieve the goal of $700,000. All donations go to Helping Hands for Freedoms' four military youth program areas: Life Enrichment, Sports & Education, Life Assistance and the Dream "Chaser" Program.

Jackson is one of 30 nominees for the award. The winner will have a $25,000 donation made in his/her name to the Military Aid Societies of each branch of service by USAA.

The two finalists for the award will be announced in January. The winner will be announced the night before Super Bowl 50 at the NFL Honors award show.

"I think we can start doing something big, especially during the Salute to Service month with the NFL," Jackson said via Broncos' press release. "It's just $7 a person. If you can do that, it would be great and go a long way. We're trying to take it to the next level. It's a blessing that the NFL does something like this. It's just something that shows we can give back to these people who have given so much."

Jackson held a kid's football camp in Colorado Springs this past summer. He granted complimentary entry for children of military families.

By Cameron Wolfe
Denver Post
October 23, 2015

Football is played differently in the trenches. It's nasty, gritty, smashmouth ball, exactly how Broncos defensive end Malik Jackson likes it.

Denver's strength is its defense, but the headliners are typically all-pro outside linebackers Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware or ball-hawking cornerbacks Aqib Talib and Chris Harris.

Jackson is fine with that. He prefers the dirty work and for quarterbacks to hear him before they ever see him.

"You try to hit him and make him feel you," Jackson said. "Of course you want him to get up and play again and go home to his families, but bruised up."

In overtime, Cleveland took over at Denver's 39-yard line after intercepting a Peyton Manning pass, five yards away from game- winning field goal range.

On first down, Cleveland double-teamed the 6-foot-5, 293-pound Jackson, hoping to prevent him from making a play. They did. But the double team helped free outside linebacker Shaquil Barrett with a one-on-one advantage on the edge which he used to stuff Browns back Robert Turbin for a three-yard loss. On second down, Jackson used his speed to bypass his man and crushed Browns' quarterback Josh McCown for a defensive linemen's dinner and dessert — a sack.

"All you do all week is watch film thinking: how can I get a sack?" Jackson said. "When you get one, it's just pride. You represent your family with the name on the back of your jersey."

The sack pushed the Browns back to third-and-21 at midfield, leading to a punt, after which the Broncos drove for the game-winning field goal.

Each sack increases the price tag of signing Jackson, who will be a free agent at season's end.

"That's the guy that should be getting a lot of praise," defensive end Antonio Smith said, pointing toward Jackson's locker. "He's now in a role where he can dominate offensive linemen all game."

A 2012 fifth-round pick out of Tennessee, Jackson has led the Broncos defensive linemen in tackles in each of the past two seasons, despite being a three-year reserve with only eight career starts coming into the season. This season, he was handed the reins as a full-time starter.

"I try to come in, game in and game out and just ball," Jackson said. "(I) try to do as much as I can to show these coaches and Mr. (John) Elway what I can do and that they can lean on me for years to come."

Penalties have been the one thing holding Jackson back from a potential Pro Bowl level. Every week it seems he has a costly personal foul.

In Oakland, he drew a flag for tossing the ball at Raiders' receiver Michael Crabtree in retaliation, an act Broncos coach Gary Kubiak called childish. In Cleveland, it was a face mask penalty on McCown that negated a Jackson sack.

Kubiak has talked to him about the penalties and Jackson said he understands they need to be decreased. He said there's often a thin line between being aggressive and committing a penalty, which he's working to straddle.

While Jackson's discipline can be challenged, his production is not up for debate.

Jackson is tied for second on the team in sacks with 3.5. He has played 69 percent of the team's defensive snaps, the most among defensive linemen.

"Malik has worked really hard to get better. I think he's a better practice player right now than he was, say two months ago," Kubiak said.

Now, it's up to Jackson to keep proving his worth.

Darius Kilgo has shown Broncos he has a nose for the quarterback

By Jeff Legwold

August 25, 2015

If there is a do-the-dirty-work, get-no-endorsement-love position in the NFL, nose tackle might be it.

Or, as former long-time Denver Broncos defensive coordinator Joe Collier put it; “You’re basically asking someone to eat up all the blockers so somebody else can make the play."

But in a preseason quirk that's unlikely to carry over to the regular season, one the current sack leaders for the sack-happy Broncos is rookie nose tackle Darius Kilgo.

Kilgo had two sacks in the Broncos’ 14-10 preseason win in Houston on Saturday night and is tied with linebacker Shaquil Barrett with two preseason sacks.

Overall the Broncos have a league-leading 12 sacks in their two preseason games, with 11 players having had at least a half sack, but DeMarcus Ware isn’t one of them. And Von Miller has just one in limited duty so far, a strip-sack on Seahawks’ quarterback Russell Wilson in the preseason opener.

Asked Monday if the team's nose tackles -- Kilgo or Sylvester Williams -- have reminded the Broncos’ more accomplished pass rushers of their sack prowess, Williams said;

“We try to stay away from messing with those two guys," said Williams with a smile. “We know when the regular season comes where the shining is going to come from, so we just take out shine where we can."

When the Broncos made the change in coaching staffs and implemented a 3-4 defense, it meant they were on the hunt for somebody to play the nose tackle. Terrance Knighton would have been a natural for the job, but Knighton did not receive much interest from the Broncos in free agency, so he signed with the Washington Redskins.

Both defensive coordinator Wade Phillips and coach Gary Kubiak believed Williams was a fit, and he has been, but the Broncos need two players at the high-impact, heavy-lifting position. Marvin Austin Jr. had been Williams’ backup in the offseason program, but was derailed by injuries and is now on injured reserve with a groin injury. The Broncos are expected to reach an injury settlement with Austin which would make him a free agent.

That has left Kilgo, a sixth-round pick in this past April’s draft, with an opportunity which he has taken full advantage of. However, having been a nose tackle at Maryland, Kilgo might have the Broncos player who actually had the most experience playing the position in a 3-4 defense.

“I think he's been showing a lot of progress," Williams said. “Really since day one, since I’ve first seen him play to now, I think he's shown a lot of growth. He's a strong guy -- perfect for the nose tackle position. The thing about Kilgo is that he's a hard worker and he gives 100 percent to get better every day. Every day I see something different that helps him improve as a player."

"I'm just trying to work as hard as I can," Kilgo said. "I want to learn and work ... help this team."

WR Cody Latimer joins fight against cancer in honor of dad

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press
October 2, 2015

When Denver Broncos receiver Cody Latimer was 11, his father was diagnosed with colon cancer.

The two had not lived together since his parents divorced when Latimer was a toddler. After surgery and chemotherapy, Colby Latimer became a bigger part of his son's life: picking up Cody from school, taking him out for pizza and playing basketball together.

Cody didn't notice his dad losing weight. The older Latimer was a 6-foot-3, 240-pound linebacker at Bowling Green until his junior year when bi-polar disorder and manic depression ended his college career.

Cody doesn't remember the whites of his dad's eyes starting to turn yellow. Doctors thought it was hepatitis. But when they went in to check on his liver, they found the cancer had returned.

Colby Latimer was 38 when he died in 2005.

Cody, then 12, lost the father he'd only just found.

"He just came around like every day that last year. Me and him grew real close," Latimer recalled. "And then he was just gone. That's why it hurt so much."

In his last year, Colby Latimer showered his son with love and never talked about his own health.

"His dad was just one of those people that never complained about anything," said Tonya Dunson, Latimer's mother. "He always saw the best in everything. He would tell you everything was going to be OK."

Latimer inherited his father's athleticism, only he figured his future was on the hardwood. Although one of his high school teammates was Adreian Payne, who now plays for the Minnesota Timberwolves, it was Latimer who led Dayton Jefferson Township to a small-school Ohio state title in his junior year.

"I thought I was going NBA," Latimer said.

His mother encouraged him to play football. She saw a lot of Colby in her son and thought he could transfer his basketball skills to the football field.

"He wanted to play pro sports, but my gut feeling was he had a better chance of doing that playing football," she said.

Because there were only 13 other players on the football team at the 225-student school, Latimer played safety, linebacker, wide receiver, running back and even punter.

"I never got off the field," he said. "My senior year, I started getting a lot of scholarship offers for defense, which was crazy."

Michigan State wanted him as a safety, Ball State as a linebacker.

"But I wanted to catch touchdowns," Latimer said.

So, Indiana it was.

After a standout career for the Hoosiers, the Broncos drafted Latimer in the second round in 2014.

Earlier this year, another family member died of cancer. His mother's aunt, Ana "Lala" Vigay, who looked after Latimer and his little brother when their mother was working full-time and going to school, died at age 73.

"Cancer runs on both sides of my family," said Latimer, who spends some of his off days visiting young cancer patients.

He also raises money for the American Cancer Society by donating proceeds from T-shirt sales on his personal website www.thecodylatimer.com that he launched this summer.

Like his career, his cancer awareness and fundraising efforts are just getting started, Latimer said.

"It's just going to be bigger," he said. "I just got to wait until I get a bigger name."

He's working on that.

Latimer received an invitation to Peyton Manning's annual passing camp at Duke this spring and got plenty of snaps with the starters during Demaryius Thomas's protracted contract stalemate. So far this year, Bennie Fowler and Jordan Norwood have worked in the slot ahead of him.

The Broncos still believe the exceptionally sure-handed Latimer will start showing up on Sundays.

"He's a special young man," coach Gary Kubiak said. "He's young in his career and handles himself tremendously. I know we're sitting here and want things to go faster for him football-wise and they will happen because he's made of the right stuff. He's got all his priorities in line."

By playing in the NFL, Latimer is honoring both his mother's wishes and his father's memory.

When he first tried football at his mother's request and realized he was good at it, "I said, this is coming from him, this athleticism, because football wasn't my thing," Latimer said. "I'm still raw at it now. I'm learning. But it was his legacy. He couldn't get this far but I did."

With records come game balls, and Peyton Manning has a museum's worth

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
November 15, 2015

A game ball is given in recognition of a job well done.

The game ball from the Denver Broncos' game against the Kansas City Chiefs on Sunday is beyond that. It is validation of what Denver Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning has done for a career, a remembrance of being a part of something much larger.

"Game balls -- game balls are how you remember things sometimes," Broncos linebacker DeMarcus Ware said. "You can look right at them and remember everything right away. They're painted, got the date, the score, the teams. They're a story every time. And Peyton? He's got a lot of stories."

The story Sunday was told in the city of his second NFL chapter as Manning added one of the most difficult NFL records to achieve to his already-crowded résumé. With his 4-yard pass to Ronnie Hillman, he set the record for career passing yards. Manning, who has 71,871 yards after Sunday's loss to the Chiefs, passed Brett Favre on the all-time list.

Manning added the milestone to the substantial list that includes most passing yards in a season, most career touchdowns, most touchdowns in a season, most 4,000-yard seasons, most 300-yard games and most games in a career with four or more touchdown passes.

And someday, perhaps, the game ball will be displayed in a room somewhere. A big room. A really, really big room.

"Think about it: Peyton is probably winning 10 game balls a year, 10 a year at least," Ware said. "So, that's 170 before this year, at least, so he'll be right up at 180 when this year is over. I usually get maybe seven game balls every year, and I've got them all in a bin and someday I'll build some place to put them so I can sit and look at them, enjoy them, remember the games. But Peyton, he would need a museum, something that big. Yeah, a museum."

Manning will go into the Hall of Fame five years after he retires. This is his 18th season, and with each passing week it seems he hits another benchmark. But the record Sunday represents longevity, excellence, durability, a little luck and countless hours of preparation, all wrapped up.

"Peyton would never talk about any of that," linebacker Todd Davis said. "That's not what we see from him. He's got too much humility for that. But we all know, we all know the numbers and there isn't anybody in this locker room that doesn't want to help him set every record that can be set. We're all going to look back someday and say we were there. And a game ball from that day, if you can do that, then that's even better. You could look at that and it would all come back."

Manning has traditionally steered clear of talking about what records mean to him. He called Sunday's game "one of those important division matchups," and didn't acknowledge any disappointment, at least beyond losing a game, about last Sunday's stumble in Indianapolis, to his former team, that left him three passing yards short of the milestone.

He also swatted aside any discussion of the standings, the playoffs and the additional parts of the league's record book he put his name into against the Chiefs.

"We're trying to win every game, that's your job is to try to win every game that you play," Manning said. "We're disappointed about [last] Sunday, but we have to move on, have to learn from it and hopefully it can make us better. That's what we're trying to do this week is to correct some of those mistakes and try to be better the next time."

The wins, the memories, the work, the teammates, the coaches, time spent -- it's all there.

"Question is how many animals have lost their lives to make those balls? I think he's got a decent farm by now," tackle Ryan Harris said. "He's got to be at least 10 a year, at least, if over-under is 150, I'm taking the over. He could put one in every Papa John's.

"That passing yards record, that's 41 miles? I'd love to know how long it would take if me and you just threw a football back and forth to each other, how long it would take to get to 41 miles. How much time would that take? And to have not just one person, but four, five, six, maybe seven people running at you. The bottom line is no question, every single guy on this team feels fortunate to be on the same team with him. And there will be a time when we look at a game ball, hopefully, and remember it all."

Winning big on Brandon Marshall's gamble

By Woody Paige
Denver Post
October 10, 2015

Brandon M. Marshall, who was born and raised in Las Vegas and played college football at the University of Nevada, gambled.

And he won the jackpot.

Marshall could have been playing for the Oakland Raiders on Sunday. He might have been playing for the Jacksonville Jaguars. Marshall once was told he shouldn't be playing anywhere in pro football.

He will be playing Sunday for the Broncos as the No. 1-ranked inside linebacker in the NFL, according to Pro Football Focus. He has a rating of plus-8.7. Next on the list, at 5.3, is the Jets' David Harris.

Although others on the league's top-rated defense have been named players of the week, or the month, Marshall is the Broncos' MCP (most consistent player).

After being drafted by Jacksonville in the fifth round of the 2012 draft, Brandon was cut by the Jaguars three times. The Jags considered him a JAG (just another guy).

"My (position) coach said I wasn't good enough to play in the league, and I should find another profession," Marshall told me. "I was determined to prove him wrong."

When he was released the last time, at the end of training camp in 2013, Marshall pondered three alternatives: quit, take an offer to join the Raiders' practice squad or sign with the Broncos.

"I knew Denver was stacked (at outside linebacker)," Marshall said. "They had Von (Miller) and Danny (Trevathan). I had a better chance to play with the Raiders."

But first he made a phone call to former Jaguars teammate Terrance Knighton, then the Broncos' Pot Roast.

"He said if I worked very hard, I'd have an opportunity with a great team, and who knows what would happen?" Marshall said.

Knighton also sold the Broncos on the young linebacker, and the Broncos added him to the practice squad Sept. 2, 2013.

On Dec. 23, Miller was diagnosed with a torn ACL and declared out for the postseason. Marshall was elevated to the roster Dec. 24.

"Greatest Christmas gift I could ever get," he said. He played in the regular-season finale and three postseason games, including the Super Bowl.

A year ago, Marshall was supposed to be Trevathan's backup. But Trevathan suffered a knee injury before the regular season, and Marshall became the starter at weakside linebacker as well as the defense's play-caller.

All he did was lead the Broncos in tackles with 110, and his ninth start was his best. He recorded 13 tackles (11 unassisted) against ... guess who: the Raiders in the Broncos' comeback victory at Oakland.

He added 15 more the next week and became an "overnight star."

Soon after, I was talking with Marshall and brought up the fact he was a serious contender to make the Pro Bowl.

"That would be incredible, especially because of what happened to me in Jacksonville," he said.

Marshall prematurely had to end the interview because that night he was hosting a clothing drive to benefit domestic violence victims, and his mom, Barbara, had arrived in town.

"I'm trying to make her proud of what I'm doing on and off the field," he said.

Three days later, Marshall tore up his foot in a game at San Diego. He missed the final two regular season games but returned, albeit injured, to play in the divisional round playoff loss to Indianapolis.

Marshall is a classy, sharp young man. Now he's a cinch 2016 Pro Bowl candidate at linebacker.

When the Broncos switched to a 3-4 scheme under defensive coordinator Wade Phillips during this offseason, Marshall moved inside. Miller and DeMarcus Ware are outside. There were suspicions that Marshall was too small (238 pounds on a 6-foot-1 frame) and maybe too fragile after foot surgery to handle inside duties. But he and Trevathan (back from his own surgeries) have teamed to give the Broncos a terrific Bran-Dan Tan-Dem.

Playing every down, Marshall again leads the Broncos in tackles, with 33, and had the forced fumble on Jamaal Charles that led to the Broncos winning in Kansas City. Trevathan is second in tackles with 22.

The Broncos' greatest inside linebackers in the 3-4 were Randy Gradishar and Bill Romanowski. Marshall could someday rank with those two.

"He has speed and quickness; he can defend the run and the pass, and he's a special player. ... It's just a matter of how bad he wants it," Romanowski said.

Marshall didn't listen to his Jag detractor.

He bet on the Broncos instead of the Raiders, and his gamble paid off.

Brandon Markeith Marshall has made a name for himself.

Evan Mathis: "No. 1 priority was playing for contender"

By Mike Klis
9 News Sport
August 25, 2015

Feeling queasy about having three offensive linemen with zero NFL snaps of experience stacked together, Denver Broncos general manager John Elway decided he needed to insert a veteran.

The Broncos reached agreement on a one-year, $2.5 million contract Tuesday with left guard Evan Mathis, an 11-year player coming off two consecutive Pro Bowl berths.

"The No. 1 priority in finding a new place to play was playing for a contender," Mathis said from Scottsdale, Ariz. in an phone interview with 9News. "The Broncos weren't in the mix early on. They were kind of the darkhorse in the race. They emerged here late and I just couldn't turn down that opportunity."

Mathis had held out from the Philadelphia Eagles this offseason in protest of his contract that would have paid him $5.5 million this year. The Eagles responded by releasing him. Mathis took a substantial pay cut to play with the Broncos, although he can earn an additional $1.5 million -- $4 million maximum value -- if he hits incentives.

"But I also turned down an offer equal to what I would have made in Philly," Mathis said. "It was a decision to be on a team I thought had the best chance to make a run. And it's not all about the money. You can't put a price on peace of mind."

Mathis said he's ready to be a mentor to the kids on his flanks.

"I've been through a lot in my journey," said Mathis, who was selected out of Alabama in the third round of the 2005 draft by John Fox's Carolina Panthers in 2005 and has also played for Miami and Cincinnati in his career. "I think I've learned a lot, I think I have a lot to share with these guys as well as the technical aspects of the game. And then ultimately leading by doing the right thing. Taking care of my body. Playing as hard as I can play. Making the decisions in life that ultimately make me a better ballplayer."

It's a blow to Max Garcia, a fourth-round rookie from Florida who had been the Broncos' first-team left guard since the second week of training camp, and Ben Garland, the former Air Force Academy star who has been running as a second-string guard.

But it gives much needed experience to the offensive front protecting 39-year-old quarterback Peyton Manning. The Broncos also have veterans Louis Vasquez at right guard and Ryan Harris at right tackle. Mathis has been getting better as he's aged, as his two Pro Bowl berths came the past two years.

"My past four years have been my best four years by far," Mathis said. "I've just continued to learn and grow as a player."

Mathis says he's stayed in shape. He will take his physical exam for the Broncos at their UCHealth Training Center on Wednesday morning. it would be a surprise if the Broncos had Mathis practice and play this week against the San Francisco 49ers. The team usually has veterans condition on the side while observing practice.

Make no mistake, Mathis will start the regular-season opener Sept. 13 against the Baltimore Ravens.

"I'm in shape," Mathis said. "I'll have to get used to the altitude there."

And with that, Mathis said he had to click over to an incoming call. Peyton Manning was calling.

Brandon McManus delivers consistency when Broncos need it most

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
October 15, 2015

Before the start of the season, the NFL approved rules changes that moved point-after-touchdown attempts from the 2-yard line to the 15, with the hope of shaking the almost-perfect record kickers have had with extra-point attempts.

For many, those 13 yards have made a difference. But for Broncos kicker Brandon McManus, the game has been one of inches. Not yards.

Over the summer, McManus altered his technique to not only improve his consistency, but also regain the trust from Broncos coaches after his erratic first year when he connected on only 69.2 percent of his field-goal attempts and lost his job. With extra points now the distance of some field goals, the change has helped him in more ways than one.

"I basically was a two-and-a-half-step field-goal kicker, so I would take a jab step, kind of a six-inch step with my left foot. I completely removed that," McManus said. "I'm starting from my left foot pushing off, and it allows me to make sure I'm in the same spot every time when I take my plant step. That jab step could be six inches, could be seven inches, could be eight inches, but that one inch my plant foot is off could affect the accuracy."

Through five games, McManus has been 1-A to the Broncos' defense in leading the team to a 5-0 record. He's transformed from a twice-waived player into an invaluable asset. On a team where points have been scarce, his consistency and leg strength have often saved the Broncos' offense.

Twice Denver has won without an offensive touchdown, putting the onus on McManus' leg and the defense's reads. Against Minnesota, a kick by McManus was the game-deciding score. He has scored 47 of the Broncos' 113 points to tie for the league's second-largest scoring total by a kicker, and has made four kicks from 50 yards or farther.

While many kickers around the league are struggling, McManus has been perfect, going 12-of-12 on field-goal attempts and 11-of-11 on extra points.

"Best kicker in the league," said Broncos running back Kapri Bibbs.

Kickers have converted 95.1 percent (347 of 365) of their extra-point attempts, down from 99.3 percent a season ago. ) They've made made 83.1 percent of their field-goal attempts, down a tad from 84 percent last year.

Week 4 was marred with missed attempts, including a 38-yarder by Minnesota's Blair Walsh in the second quarter against the Broncos. Sunday at Oakland McManus kicked four field goals in a six-point Broncos' victory. Raiders veteran Sebastian Janikowski missed a 40-yard attempt and had his 38-yard attempt blocked.

NFL kickers missed seven game-tying or winning field-goal attempts last season. They've already missed four this season.

"McManus has been the special teams MVP in four out of five games," Broncos coach Gary Kubiak said. "That's a good thing. He's kicking extremely well. Not only on his field goals, which speak for themselves, but he's been kicking off well, too."

Also better than last season.

McManus has booted all 28 kickoffs for the Broncos, putting opponents, on average, at the 20-yard line. And he's improved his touchback percentage to 78.6 percent, up from 70.3 percent.

"He's kicking great," Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning said. "He's doing well on kickoffs. He's kicking with a lot of confidence. He's doing a heck of a job, and I'm really glad he's on our team."

McManus vs. NFL

Brandon McManus improved his kicking technique in the offseason and has been perfect in field-goal and extra-point attempts this year, when many kickers have struggled.

|---|---|---|---|---|

In terms of sacks, Von Miller wants to turn 'close' into 'close the deal'

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
November 22, 2015

When Denver Broncos linebacker Von Miller was breaking it all down this week, his voice was quite hoarse.

Cold? Flu? No, that wouldn't be Miller.

"No, my voice is out ... with yelling and dancing," Miller said. "It's like a party at practice. It takes a lot out of me."

Practice may be like a party, but the games have been more like a morning-after headache. Because while Miller's coaches, teammates and opponents consistently say he is playing at an elite level, Miller has had a bit of a bumpy ride. He might be the league leader in the oh-so-close sack department.

Miller has fought through double- and triple-teams to collect five sacks so far. He's second on a team that leads the league with 32 overall. But that doesn't compare to the list of sacks Miller's almost had. It doesn't compare to the amount of times he's hit the quarterback, affected plays, and generally created problems for opposing offenses.

"Every game I've come close multiple times," Miller said. "But you know, you could go around the league and you could ask any pass rusher, 'How many times you get close?' That's just part of the game. The way I feel about me and my pass-rush ability, every time there's a pass I can get there."

Miller has had sacks in consecutive games just once this season -- against the Vikings on Oct. 4 and the Raider the following week -- and he hasn't had more than one sack in a game. That statistic alone is evidence this season has been different. Miller has had sack clusters in his previous seasons.

In 2011 he had six sacks in a five-game span, in 2012 he had seven sacks in a three-game span, and last season he had six sacks in a three-game span and nine sacks in a six-game span.

"When the numbers aren't getting there, it's kind of frustrating," Miller said. "I've been close. I've been playing really good football, this is probably the best football I've been playing since I've been in the league. Sacks, that's the exclamation point at the end of the sentence, but we're still writing headlines, so that's pretty good."

This year Miller has yet to put together that swirl of games, or even that one three-sack effort, that shakes things loose. But he, as well as defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, believe he's playing as well as ever, and perhaps better. Against the Lions earlier this season Miller did not have a sack and wasn't even credited with a tackle, but Phillips said the linebacker influenced almost every play.

As Phillips put it, "I believe he had ... out of 39 rushes, he got by his guy at least 30 times in the game. He had a heck of a game as far as pressure and people don't count that, but we do."

The game tape also tells the tale, with Miller drawing far more attention from opposing running backs and tight ends as extra blockers in addition to the offensive tackle in front of him. It was even more prevalent in Sunday's loss to the Chiefs, a game DeMarcus Ware missed with a back injury.

"(It's been) more than any other year, that's for sure," Miller said. "Think it's a league-wide trend, though -- I was talking to Justin Houston last week, this year they're not just going to let guys get a lot of sacks maybe. It's been a huge emphasis on that from offenses around the league. But I still think I can still get there and I think that game's going to come for me."

Head coach Gary Kubiak is confident in Miller too, saying, "Those sacks are going to come, just look at the way he's playing."

The Broncos face the Bears this week, and former Broncos assistant and current Bears offensive coordinator Adam Gase has been able to help cut down the amount of sacks Jay Cutler has suffered this season. Defenses have sacked Cutler just 12 times in eight games -- that's 1.5 per game, or the second-lowest rate of Cutler's career.

Cutler was sacked 0.7 times per game in 2008, his last season with the Broncos. In 2010, his second season with the Bears, he was sacked 3.5 times per game (52 times on the season). He was also sacked 38 times in 2012 and 2014.

Miller said none of that matters right now, that all he can do is stick to what he knows and keep doing what he does.

"I'm just going to keep the chill," Miller said. "I wish I could tell them to go line the tight end up on the other side and chip somebody else, say, 'Hey, offense, just put the tight end over there and let me rush right here,' but it doesn't work like that. That'd be a good plan, but I'll just keep going and do it the other way."

Von Miller, Broncos linebacker: "I'm a once-in-a-lifetime player"

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
August 18, 2015

Von Miller knew this question would come. He was just hoping for once, just for one year, he could evade the subject, even as the Broncos prepare to face the Houston Texans.

Does he really need to tell you once again what he thinks of J.J. Watt?

"You all ask me this every year," he said. "It's about the same week every year. J.J., he's an awesome talent. He's incredible, a once-in-a lifetime player, but I'm a once-in-a-lifetime player, too. I feel like I go out there and I can play with the best of them."

This isn't braggadocio. This isn't Miller feeding you a line for a salacious headline. This is Miller being honest.

Since he was selected with the No. 2 pick in the 2011 draft, Miller consistently has performed among the game's top linebackers, compiling 49 sacks and earning three Pro Bowl selections. But it wasn't until after his first two seasons that his role, his impact and his potential to do even more became apparent.

At least, not to him.

Miller's six-game suspension for violating the league's substance-abuse policy in 2013 delayed a start to a season that would eventually be cut short by a torn anterior cruciate ligament. The Year of '13 might be the lowest point in Miller's career, but looking back, he says perhaps it was necessary.

"Experience helped me," he said. "It helps everybody. You really don't have your priorities in order when you first get here."

When Miller is at practice now, he's in his element. The field is his sanctuary. His work is proof.

Miller returned from knee surgery last season to make 14 sacks, sixth in the league, and 59 combined tackles in the Broncos' 4-3 defense..

Now he's in the 3-4, which exploits edge rushers and ratchets up the quarterback attacks. It's a defense seemingly tailor-made to Miller, led by a coordinator in Phillips who is known to play to his players' strengths. Miller has a few.

"He's got tremendous speed and tremendous quickness, and a feel for the game," Phillips said. "Some guys can run fast, but they can't play football like he can. He can recognize where the ball is going quick and he can get to it."

The Broncos re-opened training camp to fans this season, and the thousands who have flocked to Dove Valley have been treated to a show.

There's Miller tearing through the young offensive line with ease. In Tuesday's practice he made a bee-line to Peyton Manning at least four times, whipping around the edge and bear-hugging the quarterback with his long arms."

There's Miller, turning attempted blocks by tackles Ryan Harris and Ty Sambrailo into a game of limbo.

And there was Miller on Friday in Seattle, pushing off Justin Britt then sneaking up on Russell Wilson for a strip-sack 39 seconds into the Broncos' preseason-opening victory.

Miller is eager to show he's the finest defensive player in the NFL, perhaps a necessary mentality for any player. But in true Miller fashion, he's just telling it like he sees it.

"He's been a dominant player for a while now," Phillips said. "I expect him to keep doing that."

Jordan Norwood took long way into Broncos' offensive plan

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
September 25, 2015

In a live-and-learn world, Jordan Norwood has discovered you can indeed cling to a dream with all of your might and still plan for the possibility it may not come true.

Sure, that was two long years ago and plenty of football road has been traveled along the way, but surf the web and an apparel company -- Deadstock Inc. -- still lists the Denver Broncos wide receiver as its "president and co-founder." Formed with two friends, the company was going to be part of Norwood's life after football.

"At that point, there was a lot of uncertainty," Norwood said this week. "I was pretty uncertain about what would happen, but I don't think I ever got to a point where I didn't think good things were still going to happen. So, it's a little bit on the back burner right now; it will still be there later."

Later will have to wait until, well, later. Because after being out of football in 2013 and on injured reserve in 2014 with the Broncos, Norwood has somewhat surprisingly, yet methodically, carved out a niche in the Denver offense as the No. 3 receiver. He has earned the trust of quarterback Peyton Manning; in the first two games, only Demaryius Thomas and Emmanuel Sanders -- two Pro Bowl receivers who each topped 100 receptions last season -- have been targeted more than Norwood.

Still, even as training camp rolled along, that No. 3 spot was tabbed as Cody Latimer's or veteran Andre Caldwell's. Instead, it has been Norwood's, and he claimed it as August drew to a close.

"What we're asking out of that spot, I think he's earned his keep," Broncos coach Gary Kubiak said. "I think he's done a really good job."

That's a guy who was released by the Cleveland Browns just before the 2013 season began. He had missed two preseason games with a hamstring injury, and though he had a couple of tryouts in the months that followed -- Cleveland and the Tampa Bay Buccaneers -- he was out of the league until the Broncos signed him to a "futures" contract at the end of that season.

"When I got cut, I had a place in State College [Pennsylvania], where I went to school, so I lived there for a little bit," Norwood said. "Then I moved to New York and worked out there, actually started the clothing brand at that point. But then the Broncos called."

A futures contract is indeed a chance, but it is also really just a sort of proposition. It's an invitation to a team's offseason program, but in many ways it's a four-month tryout, a kick-the-tires deal that can often end the moment the team believes it found somebody else with a little more potential.

Yet Norwood had climbed the Broncos' depth chart throughout last year's offseason program, as well as training camp, and was poised to make the roster when he tore his left ACL in a joint practice with the Houston Texans.

"When we first got him two years ago, he had bounced around a little bit," Broncos receivers coach Tyke Tolbert said. "He was kind of unknown to everybody, kind of at the bottom of the depth chart, but what he did is he worked ... his confidence went up, coaches' confidence went up, quarterbacks' confidence in him went up. So, they moved him up the depth chart and he just kept going. ... He's probably the smartest guy in the room, including me."

After a season on injured reserve, Norwood began the climb up the depth chart again -- this time passing Caldwell and Latimer, at least for the moment, and into prime playing time.

Norwood has played 68 snaps in the Broncos' two games, or 65 percent of the team's plays. That's all with a team that believes it will be in the Super Bowl conversation by the time January rolls around.

"I just want to play football; football is part of my family, my father is a football coach," Norwood said. "I guess I never really looked at it like, 'Oh, I got hurt' or 'Oh, I didn't make it this time.' The next step was always to get healthy or to keep working. So it's a blessing to get healthy and to have a chance to keep going, to have friends and family who always keep encouraging me. I had times when I thought, 'Man, I don't know if I can do this,' but the people around me wouldn't let me go without encouragement -- my parents, my siblings, my wife -- they believed like I believed."

For Brock Osweiler, it was all about the confidence -- his own, and what he inspired

By Andrew Mason

November 23, 2015

The only things that stood taller than Brock Osweiler near the shore of Lake Michigan were the skyscrapers that loom over Soldier Field to its north.

As they stand sentry over the home of the Chicago Bears, so, too, did Osweiler over his offensive teammates as they gathered in the huddle for his first snap as a starting quarterback Sunday.

But just because he's the tallest guy in almost any huddle he's ever entered doesn't mean he's not on everyone else's level. Osweiler looked into their eyes. He called the plays. He addressed his teammates same confident demeanor that he showed in one practice after another during a 42-month gestation that began with a rookie camp when he wore a different jersey number.

"You can't shake Brock," said RB C.J. Anderson. "I keep saying, 'Confidence, confidence confidence,' and that not just a cliché thing to say. He's a really confident guy. Not an arrogant guy, not anything like that, but he's confident in a way that makes his teammates confident in him."

"He was a super-confident guy as it is and he handles things like he's a starter -- or he's been handling things like he's been a starter every Wednesday this year. So, his confidence kind of bounces right off of us," said TE Owen Daniels. "His confidence in himself bounced off of us and we were really confident in what he can do out there. I think he played really well today."

Osweiler put in his time. He was ready for the opportunity afforded him because of Peyton Manning's multiple injuries.

No one could have been more prepared. He found targets as they burst open, capitalizing off the seams in Chicago's defense, and four plays after the first drive began, he had the Broncos in the end zone via a 48-yard touchdown pass to Demaryius Thomas.

The Broncos would never relinquish the lead in what would become a 17-15 win, and while Osweiler and the offense weren't perfect, they were good enough, only short-circuited by a collision of feet that scuttled what would have been a third-quarter touchdown run by Ronnie Hillman.

That was the only glaring mistake for Osweiler; and it was a miscue of timing; it is easily correctable and unlikely to happen again.

"I guess I tripped [Hillman]," Osweiler said. "I have to get my big feet out of the way. Those are those things that we will clean up.

"I think there was a series where we got the ball right around the 50 and didn’t do much with it. Those are the things that we will continue to fix. We are going to watch that tape tomorrow as a unit. We are going to see the good, the bad, the ugly and fix those things."

But damaging errors were few. He knew when to take the sack, when to throw it away. He didn't make the big mistake, and helped the Broncos finish without a turnover for the first time this season.

"He can do everything," said Head Coach Gary Kubiak said. "He's a very composed young man and the more he plays, I think, the better he's going to get."

Whether the Broncos won or lost, or whether Osweiler's rating was north of 120.0 or south of 60.0, his long-term viability as a starting quarterback was not going to be validated by one week. The next time he starts -- whether it's in one week against New England or later than that -- will be at least as important, because that opponent will have an entire regular-season game of footage that was not culled at garbage time.

But the first start could scarcely have gone better. He was in command on the field, on the sideline -- and before that, on Saturday night, when he addressed the team as part of its meeting the night before the game.

"His message was just [to say], 'I'm going to go out there, guys, and give you all I've got. I'm going to play with you guys. I'm going to play for you, and I'm not going to let you down. I'm going to do my job, and you guys are going to go out and do your job,'" recalled TE Vernon Davis. "That's exactly how he said it."

"It was a special moment. It was about a mentality: the mentality I wanted us to play with today as a team," Osweiler added. "That's what I talked about last night."

The message resonated.

"He set the right tone," Davis said.

And he did so in what might have been the perfect place for his career as an NFL starting quarterback to begin.

Like the tallest quarterback in Broncos history himself, the city of Chicago juts out from the landscape, towering over the gently rolling Midwestern topography and the flat expanse of Lake Michigan that bracket it.

This also the prototypical workingman's town. Flash and dazzle have never worked here, not unless they were accompanied by sweat and sacrifice to go along with it. Take the greatest basketball player who ever walked the earth, for example. Michael Jordan made his fame with mid-air artistry, but he was the best because he married his athletic gifts with dogged determination that bled into every facet of his game, which explains why he wasn't just the greatest offensive force of his era, but arguably the greatest defensive player, too.

This is a town of grit. Of putting your head down, shutting up and doing your job -- even when the only reward is the knowledge that you've done your best.

For three and a half seasons, Osweiler did that. He ached to play like his fellow quarterbacks in the 2012 class: Robert Griffin III, Andrew Luck and Russell Wilson. The clock ticked. His first contract expires after this season. Still, he waited, and while his desire to play was palpable, he never let it become a distraction for the team.

Instead of complaining, he took the chance to learn from Manning as an opportunity.

"Like I told the guys in Denver, and like I've told them for a couple years now, and I don't know if anybody believed me, but I really was telling the truth: I have not wasted a single day sitting behind Peyton," he said. "I fully recognize that he might be the greatest quarterback to play if not one of the greatest. I wasn't going to let one of those days go by where I didn't learn something. I've been very appreciative for my situation."

By turning his situation into an opportunity, Osweiler earned the respect of the locker room, player by player. Sunday, that patience paid off, because his teammates were ready to follow him wherever he led.

"Sitting behind a Hall of Famer is not easy, and he's learned and he took a lot of things from Peyton," Anderson said. "He can play ball. [John] Elway drafted him in the second round of the 2012 draft for a reason."

Osweiler still has much to learn. But he's off to a great start.

Brock Osweiler shows he's up to the task in Broncos' win

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
November 23, 2015

Denver Broncos coach Gary Kubiak has instituted a given into the players' schedules, one, they say, that is an opportunity for one of them to set the tone for things to come.

At some point during the week, Kubiak goes to a player and tells him he will speak at the team meeting the night before a game.

Who was Saturday night's choice? Newly minted quarterback Brock Osweiler, front and center.

"I was kind of thinking it would be Brock," said tight end Owen Daniels, who has spent all 10 of his NFL seasons on teams Kubiak has worked for. "It is something I know [Kubiak] likes to do, and if you've been around him a little bit, you knew this time around he was probably going to get Brock up there. And, you know, Brock did a great job."

Preach, kid, because on Sunday, his 25th birthday, Osweiler made his first regular-season start for the Broncos. It was a start he waited 43 months to make, and he was composed and efficient as the Broncos escaped the chilled Chicago lakefront with a 17-15 victory over the Bears.

Osweiler, having been tabbed to play in place of Peyton Manning, who is working through left foot, rib and shoulder injuries, finished 20-of-27 passing for 250 yards and two touchdowns. Demaryius Thomas caught the first TD in the first quarter and Cody Latimer the second in the fourth quarter.

The Bears certainly opened their defensive bag of tricks to try to rattle Osweiler, and he took his share of punishment on five sacks. But in the end, Osweiler put the exclamation point on it all when he simply took a knee on the game's final play.

"I was comfortable from the very first snap," Osweiler said. "If anything I was more anxious [Saturday] night than anything. I was just excited and ready to play football."

Osweiler's first pass attempt was a rather tidy just-get-him-going toss to Thomas that went for eight yards. His second throw, however, turned into a 48-yard catch-and-run touchdown by Thomas that seemed to put Osweiler squarely in the groove for the rest of the day. And it also enabled him to live up to the words he had spoken to his teammates Saturday.

"His message was don't worry about me," Daniels said.

Osweiler didn't turn the ball over, the Broncos cocooned him in a run game that pounded out a season-best 170 yards rushing, and the Denver defense stopped the Bears on a potential game-tying two-point conversion with 24 seconds to play.

Osweiler called his opportunity to speak to his teammates "a special moment," and called his first start "a great team win." Osweiler's teammates expressed, at least publicly, no surprise that things went the way they did, having seen Osweiler fill in for Manning in Wednesday practices all season.

"He’s like the nicest guy ever. He’s like super polite, but super confident," Daniels said. "We’ve been seeing him in the huddle on Wednesdays all year. … It wasn’t a new thing to have him in there."

"He did what he was supposed to do. He looked like Brock Osweiler, the same Brock Osweiler we’ve been seeing all year," linebacker Von Miller said. "We see it in practice and I was confident in Brock [Sunday]."

And when Thomas was asked if he had any concerns about whether Osweiler could handle Sunday’s business at hand, he said, "None whatsoever."

The Broncos are 8-2 and say the win reasserted what they can do as a team. The 10,000-pound elephant in all of the rooms can wait, the one about what the team would do if Manning were healthy and Osweiler were still playing well.

That potential dilemma is most certainly out there. Still, the most immediate concern when the Broncos arrive to work Monday will be Bill Belichick and the New England Patriots because they’re next on the agenda.

For now, for one frigid Sunday, Osweiler was everything the Broncos thought he could be. And maybe most important of all, the guy who always has said he "hasn't wasted a single moment" as Manning's backup for 43 months showed it was time well spent.

Brock Osweiler: 'I've prepared for this moment for a very long time'

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
November 18, 2015

There will be a time and a place when Brock Osweiler can finally wrap his head around the numbers, but the time isn't now and the place won't be behind center for the Denver Broncos Sunday against the Chicago Bears.

Osweiler has waited 43 months since the Broncos made him a second-round selection in the 2012 draft to make his first regular-season start at quarterback. The Broncos have played 57 regular-season games in that span, won three AFC West titles and played in one Super Bowl.

All the while Osweiler has lived the life of a future starting quarterback, sitting, watching and learning behind an established starter, in this case a future Hall of Famer in Peyton Manning, before getting tossed into the deep end of the NFL pool.

"I've prepared for this moment for a very long time,'' Osweiler said after practice Wednesday. "I haven't wasted a single day, I'm just going to stick to the preparation that got me to this point and I'll be ready to go on Sunday.''

The Broncos selected Osweiler in the second-round of the 2012 draft as an insurance policy of sorts. General manager John Elway wanted the team of have a prospect on the roster just after the Broncos had signed Manning. Not only to train, but a just-in-case option because at the time Manning's return from spinal fusion surgery was not the slam dunk it became.

Manning has made every start since signing with the Broncos, right up until Sunday's game. Having dealt with right shoulder, left foot and rib cage injuries of late the Broncos have put Manning on a treatment-only program -- no practice, no games -- for at least the near future.

And that makes Osweiler, after all of those flips of the calendar pages, The Guy for the moment.

"It's hard not play the what-if game and what's going to happen and if I'm ever going to start,'' Osweiler said. "I really did put all that aside and I tried to narrow my focus ... it truly worked for me. When I kept my focus just one day at a time, one week at a time, and only worried about that task that was at hand, I never really got into the whole am I ever going to start am I not going to start, I didn't really buy into the what-ifs.''

Still, that's a lot of weeks with a one-day-at-a-time approach. That's a lot of practices with little chance for any game action as a carrot to get through the weeks.

Asked what his approach would have been if he had to wait almost four years for his first NFL start, wide receiver Demaryius Thomas took a pragmatic approach.

"I would take advantage of it,'' Thomas said. " … Playing behind [Manning], that's like me playing behind … Shannon Sharpe, Rod Smith and Jerry Rice. [Manning] is a future Hall of Famer, Brock learned and now he gets a chance.''

“You can tell that he's excited to play,’’ said Broncos tight end Virgil Green. “... He looks to take control of the offense when he gets in that huddle. He's confident and we all have a lot of confidence in him.’’

For his part Osweiler said Wednesday he’s not looking to put “the weight of world’’ on his shoulders in a long-awaited start. Rather Broncos coach Gary Kubiak has told Osweiler to live in the moment.

Osweiler said he plans to seek Manning’s counsel later in the week and already he has asked quarterbacks coach Greg Knapp to describe how Knapp thinks a defensive coordinator would attack a quarterback making his first start.

“The things I’ve learned behind him, I don’t know where a quarterback gets elsewhere,’’ Osweiler said. “ ... I really have not wasted a single second in this building, in the room with Peyton.’’

It's a bad idea to give ax to Broncos center Matt Paradis

By Woody Paige
DenverPost.com
August 29, 2015

A year ago today, Matt Paradis was cut by Broncos Planet.

Today, he is the center of their universe.

"What a crazy ride I've had in football," Matt says.

Since Paradis showed up at Broncos camp last summer as a dicey sixth-round draft choice, he has been a red-haired, Paul Bunyan-sized mystery man. Who knew?

In the seventh grade, Paradis was the backup quarterback for Council (Idaho) Junior High.

"Mostly, I ran the quarterback sneak," he said.

He grew out of the position and into a lumberjack.

As a senior at Council High, Paradis, a defensive tackle and offensive guard, was selected the top eight-man football player in the state — despite tearing his ACL in practice before the championship game.

"The surgery was postponed," he said. "The doctor put a brace on my knee, and I played."

The Lumberjacks won.

Paradis received no football scholarship offers.

"Eight-man football, small town (population 839, counting crows), wrecked knee," he said. "I wasn't recruited. I decided not to attend college. I was going to work for my father."

Parents Michael and Janice Paradis own a cattle ranch (300 acres, 150 cows).

Football isn't that tough. When Matt was in kindergarten as the youngest of four children, his job every dawn was to drive the family's 1957 flatbed pickup while his father threw hay bales off the back. A 5-year-old kid can't reach the gas and break pedals.

"My dad put the car in second gear, made it roll, jumped out and got on the back," he said. "I stood on the seat and held the steering wheel."

Ultimately, Boise State coaches told Matt he could be a walk-on defensive lineman and a grayshirt while rehabilitating.

He earned an academic scholarship and selection as Boise State's best scout-team player. A season later he was asked (ordered?) to switch to center. Paradis started 26 straight games and was named all-Mountain West and selected for the national Hampshire Honor Society team.

The Broncos took a chance on Paradis. Previously the organization had drafted six Boise State players, including another offensive lineman No. 1 in 2008. Tackle Ryan Clady turned into a Pro Bowler.

Paradis was cut at the end of the 2014 camp, then signed a few days later to the practice squad, on which he spent the entire season — forgotten.

"The coaches thought enough to keep me around, and I just kept grinding and hoping," he told me Friday.

If he failed, Paradis would use his business economics degree to become a financial adviser.

The practice squad's other nine members picked Paradis to a mythical "Scout Team Pro Bowl."

"It was their idea of a joke," he said.

Paradis is funny, personable, intelligent, humble, strong as Babe the Blue Ox and a natural leader.

However, in the Broncos' 2015 media guide, Matt was listed in the back of the profile section with "other players." Just a guy (JAG). The Broncos had acquired veteran center Gino Gradkowski from Baltimore.

Matt might as well have been a 300-pound backup QB.

But Paradis wasn't disillusioned or delusional.

"I think I really developed as a player last year. It was like a redshirt year," he said. "This offseason I tried to soak up information and concentrate on technique, footwork, the new blocking schemes and calls, being more forceful. I think my consistency and work ethic must have gotten the coaches' attention. I appreciate their belief in me."

In camp Matt became the center of attention. He supplanted Gradkowski as No. 1 on the depth chart and started the first two exhibitions with rookies Max Garcia at left guard and Ty Sambrailo at left tackle.

"We bonded and helped each other out," he said.

Then, suddenly and shockingly on Tuesday, the Broncos signed free agent Evan Mathis, who was graded by Pro Football Focus in 2013 as the best in the league at left guard.

The center now is flanked by Mathis and another former Pro Bowler — Louis Vasquez. Those two have combined to play exactly 200 NFL games. Paradis has zero.

"Incredible," Matt says. "I'm very lucky. I couldn't even imagine starting and being surrounded by two great guards. I've got to work even harder to stay with them."

Could the interior offensive linemen — Mathis, Vasquez and Paradis — be the Broncos' MVPs?
A year from today The Council Kid could be All-World, too.

Broncos hope Tyler Polumbus' experience helps him adapt quickly

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
October 1, 2015

With Denver Broncos rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo a question mark with a shoulder injury he suffered in the team's win Sunday over the Detroit Lions, the team moved quickly to bring back a familiar face.

The Broncos signed Tyler Polumbus Thursday. After passing a physical in the morning Polumbus took part in the team's practice as Sambrailo was held out for the second consecutive day. Polumbus, who started his NFL career in 2008 when he made Denver's roster as an undrafted rookie and spent two seasons with the Broncos, has played in 101 games with four teams in his career.

He's played in offenses similar to the Broncos' current scheme. Polumbus was playing in Denver when offensive coordinator Rick Dennison was on the staff. He also played for Mike Shanahan in Washington and was with Atlanta this season where Kyle Shanahan, Mike's son, is the offensive coordinator. With Sambrailo still hurt, Polumbus has exactly the kind of profile the Broncos needed. He had only become available Tuesday when he was released by the Falcons.

"Obviously we walked out here on the field Wednesday with [just] two healthy tackles," coach Gary Kubiak said. "It's a concern and all of sudden [Polumbus] got let go ... there's a lot of people here familiar with him. [He's] played a lot of snaps we need someone here who has a lot of playing under their belt. And he's been active the last three weeks. So, it's a nice fit for us to pick him up."

Upon his arrival, at minimum, until Sambrailo is back on the practice field, Polumbus is an option as a swing tackle -- a backup who can play either left or right tackle if needed. The terms in the Broncos' offense isn't an exact match to what Polumbus has done in the past, but many of the concepts are the same, so his adjustment period should be shorter because of it.

"It's always good to have some familiarity," Polumbus said. " ... Fortunately for me I get to come back ... it helps in the transition."

For Wednesday's practice Ryan Harris, who last started 16 games in a season in 2008, and Michael Schofield were the team's healthy tackles. Kubiak has not said who would start for Sambrailo if the rookie can't play Sunday against the Vikings, but it's Harris who is the likely first option with Schofield on the right side.

However, if Sambrailo can't play Sunday and Polumbus settles in quickly the Broncos could move Harris to left tackle -- he has started the first three games of the season at right tackle -- and play Polumbus on the right side. In his career Polumbus has started six games at left tackle -- all with the Seattle Seahawks in 2010-2011 -- 51 at right tackle and three at left guard.

Asked following Thursday's practice if it was "realistic" for Polumbus to be in a position to play in some fashion Sunday, Kubiak said: "It has to be realistic ... If we need him we see him as the best possible option for us."

Kubiak has not given up hope that Sambrailo, who was wearing a sling on the injured left arm and shoulder, could play Sunday. Kubiak said Wednesday said Sambrailo may practice "hopefully tomorrow."

Shane Ray happy with increased opportunities with Broncos

By Cameron Wolfe
Denver Post
October 13, 2015

Rookies are expected to struggle in the NFL as they adjust to the pro game. Well, linebacker Shane Ray didn't quite get that luxury. With a defense as talented as the Broncos, if you don't play well, you don't play.

When he walks on the field on Sunday, he doesn't consider himself a rookie.

"That tag is taken away when you're thrown in the fire and your teammates expect a lot of you," Ray said. "I can't make an excuse if I mess up and say, "Oh well, it's because I'm a rookie.' "

Sacks in back-to-back games indicated how well Ray is learning.

It'd be easy for Ray, a 2015 first-round pick, to get down, facing the challenge of playing behind DeMarcus Ware and Von Miller. Even former Colorado State star Shaquil Barrett has gotten snaps in front of him after Barrett's impressive training camp and preseason.

But if Ray pouted about his lack of playing time, he wouldn't be prepared to step up if needed, such as happened Sunday in Oakland when Ware went out with back spasms.

Ray was ready and it showed. On the Raiders' second-to-last drive Ray bull rushed his way toward sacking Oakland quarterback Derek Carr. The sack led to an unsuccessful fourth-down play that all but ended Oakland's comeback bid.

With Ware's status for Sunday's game against Cleveland unknown, Ray could get more chances.

"It's not any more pressure, it's more opportunity," Ray said. "I can't control reps, but I can control my performance. I've been continuing to play better and make plays each week and that's not going to change."

In recent weeks, the injury bug has bitten the Broncos, allowing players to shine in backup roles. Ray is one of 11 players who have accounted for Denver's 22 sacks.

"That's confidence. That's something we preach all the time," Broncos coach Gary Kubiak said. "We kind of go into the game thinking that everybody is going to get a chance to contribute. Well, it's true."

Losing Ware for any length of time would be huge, but the Broncos are perhaps their deepest at outside linebacker, with Ray and Barnett in the wings.

"They're producing. They're getting the sacks, they're stopping the run and they're doing what they need to do to make sure that running back cuts back," defensive end Malik Jackson said. "They've just got to keep doing it and keep chugging away."

Broncos' Roby, filling in for Talib, already operates like 'a starter'

By Jeff Legwold
ESPN.com
November 12, 2015

When the Denver Broncos' defensive staff was put into place earlier this year, one of the items on their to-do list was to find ways for cornerback Bradley Roby to play more.

Roby, the Broncos' first-round draft pick in 2014, had played 75 percent of the team's snaps as a rookie with the old staff calling the shots. And many of those snaps came in the Broncos' nickel and dime packages or when they wheeled out a seven-defensive back look.

"You want to be in there, as much as they want you to be," Roby said. "But I felt like I could keep working on things, be better."

Eight games into this season, Roby has actually played less, but it feels like more because of the impact he's had. Roby has played 56 percent of the snaps, with 49 plays against the Lions and Packers the most in any game.

But that will change Sunday against the Chiefs. Thanks to Aqib Talib's one-game suspension, it will be Roby in Talib's spot in the Broncos' starting defense.

"I have great confidence in him," said Broncos coach Gary Kubiak. "Roby's played really well. He's a second-year guy with a lot of expectations and I think he's turned into a really fine pro. He's doing a good job."

But Roby has been in the starting defense plenty this season, and perhaps that's why his work thus far has that less-is-more feel to it. The Broncos decided quickly this past offseason that one of the ways to get Roby in the lineup on more early downs was to play him in the base defense.

However, with Pro Bowl cornerbacks in Talib and Chris Harris Jr., there was really no room in the lineup. So the Broncos tinkered with the idea of Roby at safety, something they call "single," as in using just one true safety -- usually T.J. Ward -- in their base 3-4 defense.

It allows the Broncos to defend the run with their base front, and it gives them three cornerbacks in coverage. And it's been at least part of the reason the Broncos are ranked No. 1 in the league in total defense, scoring defense, sacks and pass defense.

"He's really operated as a starter," Kubiak said. "We've been with three corners on the field a great deal because of the way our division is or the people that we've been playing. This week, I don't expect to be any different."

For their part the Chiefs have largely been a two-man affair in the passing game. Wide receiver Jeremy Maclin and tight end Travis Kelce are the only two players who have been targeted more than 26 times -- Maclin 61 times, Kelce 55.

And in these teams' Week 2 meeting earlier this season -- a 31-24 Broncos win, decided when Roby returned a fumble 21 yards for a touchdown with 27 seconds left in the game -- the Broncos spent almost as much time with five or six defensive backs in the formation (29 snaps, including penalties) as they did in their base defense (32 snaps). That means besides Roby, Kayvon Webster will see plenty of playing time, and rookie cornerback Lorenzo Doss could get some work on defense for the first time this season.

“A lot of guys got a bump up and we have to respond," Kubiak said.

“Obviously it's a blessing for me," Roby said. “You can't get put in a better situation as a cornerback than I got put in. It's a blessing. Everything happens for a reason, so I'm happy that it happened and I'm just taking advantage of it. ... I’ve said I want to be a guy they can trust and that they believe can make plays to help us win games. That’s what I want to do.

Emmanuel Sanders' maniacal work ethic, drive has been years in the making

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
September 26, 2015

Emmanuel Sanders awoke in his downtown Kansas City hotel room the morning of Sept. 17 knowing the day would be trying and tear-filled. Just as the past three Sept. 17s have been.

He said his prayers, then pulled on the focused but jovial expression he has worn so well in difficult times. Just as he has the past three Sept. 17s.

But this one — this one was different.

Stephanie Ann Sanders, his mother who died in her sleep in 2011, would have turned 45 on the night her son was playing in a nationally televised NFL game.

"It's always tough," the Denver wide receiver said. "But I just said hopefully I can go out and have a good game on 'Thursday Night Football' and at least be able to wish her a happy birthday."

Sanders' wish came true against the Chiefs. He pulled in eight passes for 87 yards and two touchdowns, the last one capping a game-tying drive late in the fourth quarter before Bradley Roby produced the Broncos' winning TD with a scoop-and-score fumble return.

When the final whistle blew, Sanders walked onto the set of NFL Network to tell of his feats then onto a plane, bound for Texas, to celebrate and shed more tears with family as they remembered his mother and their life together in Bellville.

It was a fitting tribute to the woman described as tender and tough, who helped to instill a competitive spirit that Sanders carries today.

One that, in his sixth NFL season and second with the Broncos, has helped him become Peyton Manning's leading target and the league's leading receiver on third down (11 catches for 117 yards and two touchdowns).

And one that, over the years, has been refined and enhanced to reach a level few in the NFL can match — or tame.

Brawls in Bellville

Josh Bryant knew that he and his cousin were wired differently when their friendly games as kids turned into brawls. There was that time Sanders smashed his cousin's head into a goalpost during a soccer game. And the time Bryant smashed a baseball bat across the head of Sanders, leaving a scar above his left temple that now glistens in the camera lights.

"I don't know what happened," Bryant said. "I probably lost and he probably bragged about it, so I hit him with a bat."

Bryant and Sanders, born a month apart, grew up as brothers in Bellville, a small town northwest of Houston. They, and nearly four generations of their family, shared a one-bedroom home where money was tight but the living was good. The two spent their early years idolizing their twin uncles who were bull riders before their other uncle, Josh's father, Howard Bryant, turned them on to baseball and football.

"He was the one who told us, 'Nobody owes you (expletive),' " Josh said. "We were out there at 6 a.m. hitting balls and my dad was like, 'If you want it, you gotta earn it.' "

Sanders believed as early as 12 that football was his ticket out of Bellville, a place he's proud to call home but where few ever leave. In high school, the possibility of playing in college became real, and he and Josh started taking campus tours and attending camps, including one at the University of Houston.

"There was this one play where Emmanuel was running a go route and the quarterback overthrew the ball really bad," Josh said. "Emmanuel ran out of bounds and dove onto the surrounding track. He knew if he did well, he might get offered a scholarship and he would be the first one in his family to go to college."

Houston would offer Sanders that chance. So would Southern Methodist, a school four hours away, in Dallas. Too far for his mother.

So one morning, with the help of Josh, Sanders disconnected the battery from his Pontiac Sunfire, pushed the car down the street and out of earshot from his sleeping mother, reconnected it and drove off, bound for his official visit before his mother could stop him.

"He came back and was like, 'I'm going to SMU,' " said Bryant, who would join him as his teammate and roommate a year later. "That was all she wrote."

"No stopping him"

In their two seasons together at SMU, Jeff Reinebold was a witness to Sanders' evolution from a raw receiver into a school record-holder who thrived in coach June Jones' run-and-shoot offense.

"We had a drill where we caught tennis balls and he wanted to beat the record every day," said Reinebold, who was the Mustangs' wide receivers coach from 2008-11. "Every competition was the most fierce. Once he learned how to harness that, there was no stopping him."

At 8 a.m. every Sunday, Sanders would join Reinebold in the film room, breaking down his routes and reads. In a system that required receivers to react to defenses, Sanders learned pieces of many pro schemes years before he would enter the NFL.

"Emmanuel wanted to be coached and he wanted to be coached hard," Reinebold said. "His expectation of himself was greatness. Not average. Whatever we asked, he would do."

They told him to get stronger, so he could stand up to the NFL defensive backs. So he worked with SMU's strength coach in the weight room. They told him to improve his pass blocking, so he honed his technique.

"He never saw SMU as his end point," Reinebold said. "There's a lot of guys who talk about that, but there aren't a lot who can be about it. He was about it every day."

Highs and lows in NFL

Sanders got a taste of pro success early after Pittsburgh selected him in the third round of the 2010 NFL draft. It was sweet at first, but it quickly turned sour.

A trip to the Super Bowl in 2011, in the Dallas area no less, ended in the second quarter because of a fractured foot. Surgery the next day was followed by another two months later and then one on his knee, in November. His time in rehab meant more time for Antonio Brown, a sixth-round draft pick, to become Antonio Brown, the Steelers' top receiver.

In the middle of it all, Sanders' mother passed away, not long after one of his uncles had died.

"When we lost his mom and our uncle, we talked about football more," Bryant said. "Friday nights before a game, when most guys go out to the club, we're talking about the first play of that Sunday's game."

The losses, the notion that football and life could be stripped from under him at any time with no warning, put Sanders into overdrive. His career season and first Pro Bowl in 2014 wasn't enough.

May never be enough.

This past summer, Sanders purchased a Jugs passing machine to spit out footballs when Denver coaches couldn't. Hours he spent, fielding catch after catch after catch, contorting his body every which way as the beat of the machine echoed like a metronome.

"Doesn't surprise me," said Broncos wide receivers coach Tyke Tolbert. "He loves to play and he loves to practice football."

After practices, Sanders is the last one off the field, often staying an extra 20 minutes, sometimes 40, fielding more passes to improve his technique. In meetings, he sits next to Tolbert, filling his notebook with his position coach's every word.

Emmanuel Sanders is always on.

"He's had the taste of success," Bryant said. "And success heals a lot of things."

Michael Schofield gives Denver Broncos a solid NFL debut

By Mike Klis

October 7, 2015

In his first-ever NFL playing time, Michael Schofield started at right tackle for the Denver Broncos in their 23-20 win on Oct. 4 against the Minnesota Vikings.

"There's definitely some things I need to work on, but I felt overall it was a real good first game," Schofield said.

Schofield received a -1.1 score from Pro Football Focus, which is notoriously tough on offensive tackles. Consider the Broncos' other two starting tackles, Ryan Harris and Ty Sambrailo, have received of -9.2 and -10.3 grades, respectively, from PFF this season.

"I think for a guy that played his first NFL football game, I thought that he played really well," Broncos head coach Gary Kubiak said of Schofield. "There are always going to be things that you have to get better at. He got called for a couple of penalties, just some alignment stuff that you have to go through to get better. I liked his effort, and I liked the way that he got to the second level. You can tell that he hasn't worked much with [right guard Louis Vasquez], just with them picking up some stunts and doing things that we have to improve upon."

Vikings defensive Brian Robinson was lined up across from Schofield before stunting inside and blowing past an unsuspecting Vasquez and subsequently sacking quarterback Peyton Manning.

Notes: Top-ranked Broncos defense has helped Trevor Siemian adjust

By Andrew Mason
DenverBroncos.com
November 16, 2015

Just as Brock Osweiler has been for the last three and a half seasons, Trevor Siemian now stands one play away from taking the snaps for the Broncos.

The seventh-round pick's preparation to this point has involved running the scout team. But that puts him against the league's No. 1 defense in yardage allowed per game and per play on a daily basis.

For every rookie, the biggest adjustment to the NFL involves getting accustomed to the speed of the game. If he can handle the speed of the Broncos' defense -- which is perhaps the fastest in the league -- he should be ready for game action.

"I'm lucky I get to go against the best defense in the league every week," he said. "I think it's given me an opportunity to go against obviously a really fast defense and get myself ready that way."

Although Peyton Manning's absence will cause a shift in the distribution of repetitions, Siemian expects that his practice workload won't look that different.

"Not a whole lot is going to change for me. I might get a couple of more reps [in practice]," Siemian said.

The biggest change will come Sunday, when he suits up for the first time in the regular season after being inactive for the last nine games. He'll be in familiar territory for the occasion; Siemian played his college football at Northwestern, just a 12-mile ride north on the Purple Line of the 'L' train from downtown Chicago.

"I really haven't thought about it too much, to be honest with you," he said. "We're just trying to get win No. 8."

SANDERS ON THE MEND: There were never any questions about Emmanuel Sanders' toughness, but his ability to press through injuries has hit near superhuman proportions after he played 23 snaps despite injuring his ankle last week.

Sanders emerged from Sunday's loss with another injury: to his finger. He's played through shoulder and ankle injuries the last four weeks, and also was evaluated for a possible concussion following a hit Sunday, although he was cleared to return and was soon back standing on the Broncos' sideline.

Despite the injuries, Kubiak expects Sanders to have a "normal week" of preparation.

"He's just another guy kind of beat up and everything, but I would expect him to have a normal week this week. It looks like he's headed in that direction," Kubiak said.

Darian Stewart more than a safety valve for Broncos

By Troy Renck
DenverPost.com
August 28, 2015

In an effort to create competition and microwave player evaluations, the Broncos held joint practices with the 49ers this past week. The prevailing silence was unsettling because it sat in stark contrast to the chirping of the 5,000 fans during training camp. There were no fights. No pushing. No shoving. And little talking, save for San Francisco linebacker NaVorro Bowman accusing an official of a hometown call on a juggling reception by Denver's Cody Latimer.

With one play, Darian Stewart returned the cacophony to the Broncos sideline by intercepting a pass by the 49ers' Colin Kaepernick. Denver's defense boasts 12 sacks this preseason, and with tempered optimism, general manager John Elway said it is the most talented defense since he arrived in 2011.

Interestingly, there is only one prominent new starter: Stewart. The conclusion remains easy to draw: Wade Phillips' 3-4 defense fits the personnel better, and Stewart's addition fortified a secondary that aims to be the NFL's best.

"No doubt," Stewart said. "That's the goal."

Signed as a free agent from Baltimore, Stewart took hold of the free safety position in the spring and has only tightened his grip over the past month as the Broncos face the 49ers on Saturday in their preseason home debut.

"Stewart has done a really good job, he's learned the defense, he really plays well," defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said. "He plays fast in the games. I like that about him."

Stewart struggled with inconsistency in Baltimore last season, losing his job at one point. However, he played his best game in the Ravens' playoff upset of the Steelers. Stewart replaced Rahim Moore, who signed with Houston as a free agent. They couldn't be more different. Stewart is softspoken. Moore is an energetic run-on sentence. Stewart seeks contact. Moore plays a deep center field.

Stewart's skill set makes him interchangeable with strong safety T.J. Ward, varying the defensive looks.

"The defense is just pretty much straight forward. That has helped," Stewart said. "I am believing what I am seeing. Playing with T.J. helps. You know you can count on him. He has your back. "

A stout 5-foot-11, 214 pounds, Stewart has made three tackles in 42 snaps in the first two exhibition games. With two new starters last season, the secondary required time to gain trust, finally coalescing in November. The communication has improved dramatically this season, helped by Stewart's quick learning curve.

"He's very smart and calm back there. That's what I like about him," Ward said. "You never really see him flustered, you never really see him out of position."

Performance and maintenance carry equal importance to Stewart. Playing at altitude and in a dry climate, leg issues are prevalent. Stewart has worked extensively on his flexibility.

"Every off day I find something to keep my body right, whether that's stretching or massage," Stewart said. "And it helps that Coach (Gary) Kubiak takes care of his players like he does. You are already seeing the results."

Through two games, the first-string defense has not allowed a touchdown. There are reasons to believe, Stewart insisted, that this is a preview not just another preseason mirage.

"It's just coach Wade. He challenges us. Everyone's job is to get to the ball," Stewart said. "When you have 11 guys with good speed, doing that, good things are going to continue to happen."

Stewart steps up

The Broncos feature only one defensive starter who didn't play regularly last season: free safety Darian Stewart. NFL reporter Troy E. Renck with a look at the newcomer:

— Considered playing college hoops at Memphis before choosing football at South Carolina

— -Made St. Louis Rams as an undrafted free agent in 2010.

— His first interception came against New Orleans' Drew Brees in 2011.

— Joined Baltimore Ravens last season, starting 14 games and delivering his best performance in playoff victory over Pittsburgh.

— Has made three tackles in two preseason games.

Broncos' Aqib Talib teaching the art of the interception

By Nicki Jhabvala
Denver Post
October 31, 2015

Aqib Talib knew the ending before the play clock started. Eight yards behind the line of scrimmage he stood, bent in his two-point stance as the processor in his mind scanned the Cleveland Browns' offensive formation and he awaited the call from Broncos defensive coordinator Wade Phillips.

Second-and-12. Twelve personnel — one running back, a tight end-receiver combo on each side of the line. Shotgun. Now they're motioning for "empty."

But Talib remained still, in his stance. Eight yards back. His mind still sifting through the possibilities before his eyes locked in. A quick double-take from Browns quarterback Josh McCown sealed his fate.

Game over.

Talib keyed McCown's three-step drop for final confirmation before quickly breaking in front of receiver Travis Benjamin to snag the pass and sprint 63 yards to the Cleveland end zone. Upon arrival, he stopped to blow kisses to the Browns' fans, as if to thank them for allowing him to display his work.

"Oh, I knew it," Talib said. "I knew if he threw it to my side I was going to score."

In six games the Broncos' secondary has nine interceptions, including a pair in each of four victories. Talib, an eighth-year cornerback who arrived in Denver in 2014, has claimed three and returned them for an NFL-high 123 yards, including two touchdowns.

The Broncos have a long history of great defensive backs, from Billy Thompson to Louis Wright to Champ Bailey, and many others in between. But in Talib's year and a half in Denver he not only has played a central role in the defensive resurgence of the Broncos, he has all but turned the interception into an art form — a calculated but graceful dance he seems to perform with ease.

The basic moves are learned and developed by observation in the days, sometimes weeks, before showtime. For nearly four hours a day, Talib sits in front of a screen, first at Broncos headquarters and then at his home, reviewing, rewinding, restarting game footage until an opponent's oft-used formations and its quarterback's tendencies are emblazoned in his mind.

"If you pay attention in meetings at all you have an idea of what the other team likes to do on first and second down, on third down, and in the red zone," he said. "Everybody has an idea."

He had an idea that the Browns would resort to a select few routes in a 12-personnel formation, and that McCown's lengthy windup might give away his plan. He had an idea that in Week 1, Baltimore's Joe Flacco would look to throw quickly when facing a blitz. Talib jumped in front of Steve Smith for the pick and 51-yard score. He also had an idea that in Week 2, given the situation and read from Alex Smith's three-step drop, he could break in front of Kansas City's Jeremy Maclin to steal a short pass.

"Aqib is a really smart, instinctive player," Phillips said. "He knows what's happening out there. In the Kansas City game right before the half when he intercepted the ball when he went out of the field, he said, 'Coach, they're fixing to throw it quick.' They threw it quick and he intercepted it. He's got that kind of mentality. He's into the game and he studies the guys that he's playing against really well."

Phillips' 3-4 scheme has created a ripple effect that starts up front. The scheme relieves the defensive line of some assignments so it can focus on pressuring the quarterback and forcing him to get rid of the ball quickly, often resulting in short routes by receivers. Talib's studies and quick first step allow him to "jump" the routes as soon as the ball leaves the quarterback's hands.

"Our cornerbacks are pressing and saying, 'I really have to make this play right here. I have to force a play,' and then (the opponent) ends up making a mistake," fellow cornerback Chris Harris said. "That's what we try to do."

Talib and Harris, who were teammates at the University of Kansas before joining forces again in Denver, have relied on their studies, instincts, experience and athleticism to guide them.

Harris' duties are often broader and more complex, playing in motion on the right side. He has two interceptions this season, including one he returned 74 yards for a touchdown at Oakland to seal a Denver victory.

"To me, they are top two tandem in the league," Bailey said. "Maybe the Jets are better, but they are right there. Chris is at the top of his game and still has room to grow. Talib is in his prime. You are seeing that. When you have corners like that, it makes all the difference."

That difference on defense has carried the Broncos through their first six games, leading them to victories in all despite a struggling offense.

Their biggest test awaits, though, Sunday night in Denver against Green Bay quarterback Aaron Rodgers, who is as heady in the pocket as the Broncos are in the defensive backfield.

But when Talib and Harris arrive at Sports Authority Field at Mile High on Sunday, they will do so equipped with more than a few clues to how it will all end.

Just as they always do.

For Mamma

By Demaryius Thomas
The Players' Tribune
November 16, 2015

The bent soda cans were everywhere. That's when I started to get a bad feeling. Every time I'd go outside to play in the yard, the cans were littered all over the grass. When I was really young, I used to think, "Why's everybody drinking so much soda all the time?"

But where we lived, you grow up fast. It didn't take long for me to put the pieces together. I noticed the chalky white powder, the little holes in the side of the cans. More than anything, I noticed the same familiar faces, and how their eyes looked.

They were using the cans to smoke crack.

There was a little trailer back behind where we lived where people would come and go. My mamma and grandma would go back there. They always told me to stay away from that trailer. I knew what was going on. I knew my grandma was running the operation. But I pretended that I didn't. I just acted like nothing was happening.

But one night, when I was 11 years old, I had a really bad dream. I told my mamma, "I feel like something terrible is gonna happen."

I was a mamma's boy. She had me at 15, so we were close enough in age where we could play basketball against each other. We used to play one-on-one and race in the yard all the time. I'll spare you the details about the environment we grew up in. You know the story. Drugs were just around. Dirt roads. Not much money to go around. My mom was doing what she thought she had to do to survive.

But I had this feeling.

"Mamma, something bad's gonna happen."

She told me everything would be OK.

A few months later … BOOM.

The loudest sound I ever heard. I was sleeping by the door when the men busted in. It was seven in the morning, right before school. The first thing I saw were the guns pointing at me. Big guns. Like in a movie. I didn't know they were police. I just saw guns and red dots flashing. They told me to get down.

I laid on the floor and they went into my mom and stepdad's room. They brought them out in handcuffs.

As they were walking my mamma to the police car, she said, "Can I please just take my kids to the school bus one last time?"

That's when I knew. Hearing that, even at 11 years old, I realized that I wasn't going to see my mom for a long, long time. It was real. She begged the police officers, and they agreed to let her walk us to the bus stop. When the bus pulled up, all the kids saw the police cars surrounding us. My mom kissed us on the cheek and waved goodbye.

The first thing the kids said when I got on the bus was, “Awwwww, ya’ll did something bad!” They started picking on me right away. You know how kids are. I looked out the window at my mom getting put into the police car.

I sat on that bus and told myself: Keep it inside. Don’t let them see it.

My father was in the military. My mother and stepfather and grandmother were locked up. From that day on, I was basically an orphan. I came home from school that day and I thought, Where do I go now? I was 11, so I couldn’t really work, but I still had to figure out a way to take care of my sisters. I told myself I was going to get a scholarship so I could get a degree and take care of my family. In the meantime, I had to do whatever I could. We were in rural Georgia. The good thing about rural Georgia is that you can always make some change working with your hands.

So I started pulling corn and pickin’ peas and butterbeans. Seriously, that was my job. I used to wake up at six in the morning and get to pullin’ before school. That’s hard work. Where I grew up, stupid situations were very easy to get into. I had a choice: the drug game, or the corn game. I kept thinking: just don’t screw up a chance to get to college. That was my light that I focused on.

My mom was eventually sent to prison in Tallahassee, Florida. I didn’t even get to visit her for years. The stability that I was used to was gone. I know that sounds crazy with the drugs all around me, but it was still a certain kind of stability. With my mom gone, my world was so empty. I stayed with whoever didn’t get mad at me that week. Aunties, my dad’s mother, whoever. I didn’t have much. If the house was burning down, I wouldn’t even have anything to grab. For real. Maybe a pair of shoes. That’s about it. I had three pairs of jeans I’d switch out.

It was lonely. I had no idea what I would do with my life. Or where I would be in a few years. At a certain point, I used to cry every night.

In fact, I’m gonna tell you this, just for all the kids out there reading this who are in a similar situation, who are holding it all inside. Even when I made it to the NFL, I’d cry some nights thinking about my mother, wondering if she would ever get out.

No amount of money, no amount of fame, no amount of anything in the world can replace your mother. I realized that holding it all in wasn’t good for me, and I reached out to a preacher who really helped me talk through it all. People think orphans are kids whose parents have died, but 80 percent of orphans in the world have at least one parent who is alive somewhere. There are millions of kids just like me all across the U.S., and hundreds of millions all over the world.

We rely on the kindness and the couches of others to get us through the day. I had multiple high school coaches who looked out for me. Multiple college coaches. Deacons. Pastors. Aunties. Uncles. Friends. If even one of those people had let me slip, would you even know my name? Maybe not.

I talk to a lot of kids who have parents in prison, or who left them when they were young for one reason or another. I know the anger. The pain. The fear. Especially the loneliness. They just want somebody to say, “I care about you.” But that doesn’t happen enough, so they get into trouble.

As men, as athletes especially, we don’t like to talk about love. We talk about brotherhood and all that, but not love. But it’s the most important thing in a child’s life. More important than the kind of school you go to, or what neighborhood you live in, or even if you grow up around drugs and violence. If you are loved, you’ll make it out.

For 15 years, my mamma was gone. She was in prison before I ever started playing football. She never got to see me take the field. Never got to see me graduate high school. Never got to see how I blocked my butt off at Georgia Tech running the triple-option and never complained, never quit. I didn't have much to hold onto, except that I knew she was proud of me.

This summer, I was back home in Georgia when I got the news. President Obama commuted the sentences of 46 nonviolent drug offenders. My mother was one of them. She was finally going to be free. She was going to get to see me play football. For the very first time. In the National Football League. She spent years making Thomas No. 88 jerseys with a Black Sharpie on her gray uniform. She watched me play in the Super Bowl on the prison TV. When I heard the news, I thought, Man, I'm finally gonna get to see her sitting in the stands in a real orange Broncos jersey.

I couldn't wrap my head around it. I still can't.

Recently, I've been getting asked a lot of questions about my mother. It's a little bit overwhelming. Her story is complicated. But this is what I want you to know about my mamma: She loved me. That's the most important thing in the world.

My mother finally got her freedom last week. She's restricted from traveling for 60 days, so I still have to wait a little bit to see her in the stands. But that's not what matters. What really matters is that I'm going to get to hug my mother again. I can call her any time I want now. I don't have to wait for her call. It's a small thing, but it means so much. She got her little cell phone for the first time. We've been talking a lot. She says she wants to race me. She still thinks she can beat me.

The other day, we were talking about what she wants to do when she gets out, and it made me realize how much time we had lost. She said, "You know what I want? I want to get a Walkman."

We got a lot of catching up to do, Mamma. I love you.

Demaryius Thomas hopes emotional reunion with mother comes sooner

By Andrew Mason
DenverBroncos.com
November 11, 2015

Demaryius Thomas can't wait to have his mother, Katina Smith, watch him play for the Broncos in person for the first time.

The wait will last just a little while longer. Smith, who had her sentence for drug trafficking commuted by President Barack Obama this summer, was released from a halfway house Tuesday, but she cannot travel for 60 days.

That timetable would make it possible for her to see Thomas play in the postseason, assuming the Broncos qualify for the playoffs. Given their 7-1 start, the team is in terrific shape to make sure that opportunity happens.

But Thomas hopes he can get his mother to Denver before then -- not simply so she can see him play, but so the son can give his mother the hug for which both have waited for so long.

"I'm hoping that it'll be here. I know that it'll be emotional. I'm sure that I'll break down and start crying," Thomas said. "I'm sure that she will too because it will be her first time -- even probably on the plane coming to Denver -- in Denver. It'll be a little emotional, but I'll be very excited."

The sooner they can embrace, and the sooner that Smith can come to Denver, watch her son and see the life he's worked to make for himself, the better.

“I have to talk to the probation officer. I hope that I can talk to him [Thursday] and see what we can do because I want to get her out here to a game before the season is over," Thomas said.

Thomas and his mother have been in constant communication; he estimates that he receives "probably 12" text messages a day from her.

“All that she's been talking about is racing me," he said. "She thinks that she can outrun me for some reason. That's all that she's been talking about."

As Smith leaves the halfway house, her readjustment will continue. Smith was in prison for 15 years, and a crucial step of her reintegration into society is adjusting to the myriad changes -- massive and small -- that have come to everyday life since the turn of the century.

"The other thing was that she wanted to get a Walkman," Thomas said. "People don't even use Walkmans anymore. We're going to try and get her some music on her new phone that she has."

But there will be no music as sweet as the sound of the crowd cheering her son, a moment that can't come soon enough.

"It's a little emotional. I'm excited about it and wish that she was here," Thomas said. "You have people saying, 'You're going to have a great game. Your mom is going to be around.' I'm happy still.

"I'm very happy and she's happy since we've been talking a lot more lately. The main thing is still just going out and trying to do my job."

But just because he remains focused on that doesn't mean that Thomas can completely conceal his excitement.

"He was walking around the locker room today showing everybody pictures of her," fellow wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders said. "It's just going to be awesome. That's going be an awesome experience. I can't wait to meet her. I'm happy for him. I'm happy for his family."

Broncos running back Juwan Thompson runs hard in memoriam

By Cameron Wolfe
Denver Post
September 2, 2015

Instead of celebrating his game-winning touchdown run in Saturday's 19-12 Broncos preseason win over the San Francisco 49ers, running back Juwan Thompson sat at his locker after the game kicking himself for a first-quarter special-teams blunder.

Thompson is usually tough on himself, but Saturday was different. He wanted that day to be perfect because of what it meant.

His grandmother, Hattie Marie Simon Griggie, would have turned 63 on Saturday if she had not lost her valiant fight with cancer two years prior. Thompson said he played the game in her memory.

"It was definitely on my mind," Thompson said. "I wanted to score a touchdown for her. And I'm happy I did."

Thompson said his family gets really emotional this time of year, and he was hearing about it from his mom up until a few hours before game time.

It started to get to him.

But he had a game to play. Once the pads were on and ankles were taped, it was all about football. And on first-and-goal from the 1-yard line, the Broncos called his number and he punched it in up the middle for six points.

Then, he followed it up with another run, right up the gut, for the two-point conversion.

"I think she would be real proud of me," Thompson said. "She never saw me play, but I think it would have made her smile to see me scoring a touchdown."

Running backs usually don't like to tackle, and some prefer not to be tackled, either. But Thompson is a little different.

He seeks contact. When he was the starting running back at Duke, he also moonlighted as the special-teams captain.

"He does whatever you ask him to do, big or small," running backs coach Eric Studesville said. "He understands a lot of his role, if he's here, is on special teams."

And that's how he made the team last season. He joined a crowded backfield with C.J. Anderson, Montee Ball and Ronnie Hillman already in Denver. But Thompson made himself a valuable commodity on special teams and as a short-yardage back, which allowed the Broncos to keep him active in 15 games.

Thompson's Twitter bio references Galatians 6:9 which says: "Let us not become weary in doing good, for at the proper time we will reap a harvest if we do not give up."

That defines Thompson's mind-set on special teams and how he got in the NFL as a whole.

He wasn't a star at Duke. In fact, he started just 24 of the 49 games he played and amassed only 1,244 yards over a four-year career.

As a senior, he was the team's starter to begin the year. By the end of the season, he had totaled only 355 rushing yards in 14 games.

Thompson was largely ignored in the draft process and was prepared to hang up his cleats before the Broncos saw his potential and signed him as a college free agent.

"I just wanted to give it a shot and see how much football I had left in me," Thompson said. "I was going to go to grad school (at Duke). I already got in and everything. But I worked my (behind) off. And I made the team."

Not only did he make the team, he was a key contributor. He rushed for 272 yards and three touchdowns and became the first undrafted rookie since 2006 to rush for two touchdowns in a game with his performance against San Diego in October.

"An opportunity is only an opportunity if you're in the position to take advantage of it," Studesville said.

Now, a year later, Thompson is in the same position again.

Coach Gary Kubiak noted Thompson's special-teams prowess as the main reason he has passed Ball in the running back rotation.

Still, Thompson is not ready to let down his guard. Hard work is how he got in the league, and hard work is how he'll go out.

Inside linebacker turns to 'Child's Play' for Danny Trevathan in his return for Broncos

By Troy Renck
Denver Post
September 24, 2015

The piercing eyes and fire red hair create squirms. And questions.

Linebackers create fear with hits, but art? Drawn on Danny Trevathan's left pectoral, the possessed doll "Chucky" stares back at onlookers.

"I was scared of clowns as a little kid, but not Chucky. Chucky's like my little brother," Trevathan said Thursday of his newest tattoo. "I have seen every one of the movies. I wasn't scared. I know they are kind of creepy. After awhile, you just catch on."

For Trevathan, the ink provides a peek behind the curtain, explains why, after multiple knee injuries, he leads the Broncos in tackles. He remains strong in his faith, devoted to his daughter. When he pulls on his helmet, though, he undergoes a transformation. It's too simple to say it's "Child's Play," but Trevathan competes with a fervor of a kid trying to earn his varsity letter.

"I think I like Chucky because I am a defensive guy, an aggressive guy," Trevathan said.

The scar on his left knee reveals how much he loves football and the challenge he faced at regaining a starting job. Poised for a Pro Bowl-caliber 2014 season, Trevathan wrecked his knee in training camp. He re-injured it twice during the regular season, requiring reconstructive surgery on his kneecap. Trevathan never doubted he would return, gaining confidence as he learned to trust pushing off his knee and stopping abruptly.

But at what level?

"I started to wonder if I could be my old self. It took some time, and it will still take some time. I am almost were I want to be," said Trevathan, who has made 16 tackles, 13 unassisted. "The beginning has been encouraging. During games I don't think about it. This defense is not hard, not hard at all. Be short with what you are doing and do it fast. If you mess up, do it at 100 miles per hour. I am getting there, but I am not satisfied. I am hungry."

Trevathan approached rehab like an oncoming blocker. He knuckles under to no one. Life in the trainer's room can be a lonely existence, creating a disconnect and loss of identity. Brandon Marshall, who flanks Trevathan at linebacker and spent time rehabbing his foot alongside his friend, saw a teammate determined to shape his future not wallow in the past.

"I always knew there was greatness in him, that he had the will and desire to come back. To me it looks like 2013 all over again," Marshall said of the season Trevathan finished with a career-best 124 tackles. "We discussed about how we were going to play together again and have success. Our goal was to be premier players."

The defense boasts a battery of stars, reflected in the statistics. The Broncos rank second in yards allowed (487) and takeways (seven). The concerns about Marshall and Trevathan's recovery from injuries have quietly dissolved.

"For starters, Greek (trainer Steve Antonopulos) had a great plan for them. He kept them moving forward. They are peaking at the right time," coach Gary Kubiak said. "Both are full go now. You are seeing two really good players, and the more they play together, it's only going to get better."

Beyond health, Trevathan and Marshall faced questions about their size in a 3-4 defense. They must be strong enough to shed blockers, but quick enough to guard running backs and tight ends in space. Marshall remains in the game on passing downs, logging 114 snaps, with Trevathan excelling against the running game, playing 70 snaps.

"Those guys back there are doing a good job of protecting us," defensive end DeMarcus Ware said. "Danny has the most tackles, and he came and told me that. I told him, 'you know, keep eating. You keep making those plays.'^"

It wasn't that long ago, nine months, Trevathan navigated the locker room on crutches. His comeback offers shades of fearlessness. Perhaps not surprising for someone with a horror icon on his chest.

"There are not too many linebackers in the league stronger and more aggressive than us. That's the type of player I am. I don't care how big you are. I don't care how wide you are, how physical you are and how you try to run people over," Trevathan said. "You have to bring your game to play me. I am getting back to my mean self. I am ready for anybody who thinks they can come here and take me on."

Louis Vasquez welcomes new leadership role with Broncos

By Cameron Wolfe
DenverPost.com
August 7, 2015

At first glance, Louis Vasquez would appear more likely to start, or better yet, end a fight than offer a helping hand.

The Broncos' 6-foot-5, 335-pound right guard is the biggest and most physically imposing man on the team. But you wouldn't know it from hearing him speak.

"He's not a rah-rah guy. Probably no one else can hear him except the guys in our (meeting) room," offensive line coach Clancy Barone said. "But he's certainly the leader in the room and has been so from Day One this offseason."

With the departure of left guard Orlando Franklin in free agency and left tackle Ryan Clady lost to a season-ending knee injury, Vasquez became the main source of guidance for a young, unstable offensive line.

Vasquez is exactly what he looks like on the field — a mauler and grinder, a guy you don't want face as a defensive player. Off the field, he prefers to lead by action. He believes you can show a lineman technique critique a lot better than you can tell him.

"My mentality is by the end of the fourth quarter, we want to feel your soul wilt in our hands. So I'm trying to instill that in the offensive line because it's dirty work. You might as well get nasty with it," said Vasquez, who was an all-pro and Pro Bowl selection in the 2013 season.

Last year Franklin operated as a vocal leader, and stood before the media on multiple occasions as the offensive line received criticism and dealt with desperate position shifts midway through the season.

Now Vasquez, 28, has been passed the torch with a less experienced group.

Vasquez represents the one known commodity. The Broncos could have four new starters on their offensive line, including rookie left tackle Ty Sambrailo and center Gino Gradkowski. Among the candidates at left guard — Ben Garland, Shelley Smith and Max Garcia — only Smith has made a start in an NFL game.

"They're all just big eyed and bushy tailed, trying to take in any information they can," Vasquez said.

Relationships are built in the offseason, so after witnessing Garcia's potential, Vasquez decided to take him under his wing. He made guiding Garcia's development into becoming an elite guard one of his primary missions. They work on pass protection after practices.

"As a rookie you don't take anything for granted, especially when you have an elite guard like himself just taking the time to give me some critiques. I'm always looking for someone to emulate," said Garcia, a fourth-round pick in this year's draft.

Barone said Vasquez has turned the film room into his personal classroom, often pulling Garcia and others aside not only to point out their mistakes, but to show them how to correct them.

Vasquez, a 2009 third-round draft pick from Texas Tech, was a similar player coming into the NFL. Like Garcia, he was a natural power run blocker who had to work hard on pass protection to become one of the best and well-rounded guards in the league.

In 2013, his first year with the Broncos after spending his first four with San Diego, Vasquez didn't give up a sack and was ranked 97th on NFL.com's 2014 list of the league's top-100 players.

"Louis is a stalwart. He's down there grinding every day. We have to tell him to take a day off," said offensive coordinator Rick Dennison.

He was well on his way to repeat his success in the 2014 season, but when the Broncos struggled to find consistency at right tackle from Chris Clark and Paul Cornick they kicked Vasquez outside. He struggled, posting a negative Pro Football Focus blocking grade for the season. He said he never was comfortable with the finesse position.

Now he's back at what he calls his home at right guard. His roommates will be different, and Vasquez admitted it will be a tough transition.

"Obviously, I miss my brother Manny (Ramirez). It's the nature of the beast; this business doesn't really care about your relationship with other players," Vasquez said. "Whoever is playing next to me, I have to elevate our level of play."

If the other four guys on the line turn in the work ethic and focus on technique that Vasquez does, the Broncos offensive line won't be much of a worry at all.

Vance Walker brings value, versatility in attempt to rebound with Broncos

By Troy Renck
DenverPost.com
May 22, 2015

Vance Walker found obscurity in Kansas City.

It wasn't supposed to happen this way. The Chiefs chased Walker in free agency last March, turning him into their prized offseason acquisition, and almost immediately he became lost on their depth chart.

Walker played well. If he played. He started twice and logged more than 20 snaps in only three games. Seen as a catalyst to an evolving defensive line mix, he turned into a casualty, released after one year.

"I dealt with that when it happened. It's an unfortunate situation. I can complain about it, but I've let it go months ago," Walker said last week.

For the Broncos, Walker's inability to crack the Chiefs' rotation might be the best thing to happen for them. He remained a productive, if sparingly-used player, last season. The Chiefs guaranteed Walker $3.75 million on a three-year, $13.75-million contract. The Broncos kept him from signing with the Seattle Seahawks when he agreed to a two-year, $4-million contract with a $1.5-million signing bonus.

Value and versatility make Walker an intriguing offseason addition in the highly anticipated switch to a 3-4 defense that, nonetheless, features uncertainty along the defensive line.

"It's obviously a priority as we move forward, and we'll play a lot of people," coach Gary Kubiak said.

Walker, 28, didn't produce as expected in Kansas City, unable to supplant Allen Bailey or Jaye Howard. The Chiefs saved $1.7 million in salary cap space by cutting ties. Their desire to move on doesn't mean Walker can't move blockers. Insert a DVD from last season, and you will see the 6-foot-2, 305-pound Walker line up from end to nose and everywhere in between on multiple series.

He has consistently done one thing well, making him a potential fit for defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, who looks "to put players in position to succeed."

Pressure Point

Vance Walker signed a two-year deal for $4-million with the Broncos, choosing Denver over Seattle. He will be counted on to provide versatility along the defensive line. A look at how he stacks up against the Broncos' two remaining defensive tackles from last season, according to Pro Football Focus:

| Defensive Lineman | QB Sacks | | QB Hits | QB hurries | Snaps |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Vance Walker | 2 | 1 | 8 | 238 | |
| Sylvester Williams | 0 | 3 | 13 | 468 | |
| Marvin Austin | 0 | 1 | 5 | 299 | |

Whatever you ask, T.J. Ward delivers

By Andrew Mason
DenverBroncos.com
October 8, 2015

With every game he plays, T.J. Ward becomes more and more the Swiss Army knife of the Broncos defense.

Drop into deep coverage? Check.

Blitz off the edge? Check, and double check, because it was his two sacks on blitzes Sunday that made him the AFC's Defensive Player of the Week.

A delayed blitz up an A- or B-gap? Check.

Short coverage on a tight end in the flat? Check; he helped neutralize Minnesota tight end Kyle Rudolph.

Line up in the slot against a tight end or a big wide receiver? Check.

Attack the run from the box? Few safeties have done it better in recent years, and that's one of the reasons why the Broncos targeted him in free agency 19 months ago.

Ward handled all of those responsibilities on the first two plays against the Minnesota Vikings last Sunday.

With fellow safety David Bruton Jr. also capable of such versatility, Defensive Coordinator Wade Phillips has only scratched the surface with the permutations of his secondary.

“Both those guys, you can move them around and do what you want to do with them," Phillips said last week. "Both of them can blitz, both of them can cover and both of them are smart. It's given us a lot of variables. It's hard for the offense to pick up who's doing what."

Last year, Ward had two sacks all season. He's matched that total in four games.

"Coach knows he's a great blitzer, so blitz him. That's what he's doing. He's calling his name, and they can't block him. It's something that we saw last year, but we didn't get him a lot of blitzes last year. We're starting to get him going, and you see what he did."

In 2014, Ward was involved in the pass rush once every 18.29 times he was involved in pass defense, according to ProFootballFocus.com, which charted him with 657 plays of coverage responsibility and 38 pass rushes. So far this year, it's once every 13.1 times, based on 10 pass rushes and 121 plays of responsibility in coverage.

"Coach Wade has been putting great game plans together. He's using me exactly how I wish to be used," Ward said, "so I'll just keep listening to [Defensive Backs Coach] Joe Woods and Coach Wade.”

"That's what we can do. We have a lot of guys that can come in and rush -- like me and T.J. are great blitzers," added Harris.

"[Phillips] is able to send us. But I haven't been sent yet!"

Maybe that's coming. After all, Phillips has a mental library filled with ideas and concepts culled over nearly four decades in the NFL. There's little that he hasn't used, and with versatile components like Ward that he can move around, Phillips can use him to set others up, too.

Phillips' defensive garage is filled with well-constructed tools. But there are none quite like Ward, who is six tools in one.

DeMarcus Ware and the art of the sack

By Troy Renck
Denver Post
October 3, 2015

A time existed when an NFL pass rusher operated like a Tyrannosaurus Rex. He pursued the quarterback with carnivorous instincts and little concern of his path to the sack. Those are the days of the dinosaur. Watch the Broncos' DeMarcus Ware, currently the top performer on the NFL's top defense, and it's easy to see how the much the game has evolved.

Ware, 33, boasts the best start of his career at an age when he should be considering broadcasting options. Pass rushers aren't supposed to get better when they get older, especially one who finished with just one sack in the final seven games last season.

Part of what sets Ware apart is film study, a constant processing of information. He has turned the art of the sack into a blend of analytics and brute instincts.

"I look at tape week in and week out on one guy who I am going to be facing. It's like a chess match. What would I do when this guy did that move? And I watch it 40 times, the same play over and over and over," Ware said last week. "I then see how he handled different types of rushers. Then I go back to that play. It's seared into my head once I go into the game."

It's third-and-7 in the Broncos' season opener. The Baltimore Ravens face an obvious passing situation late in the first quarter. Ravens left tackle Eugene Monroe stands across from Ware. He assumes a passing stance that Ware detects from his film study, recalling how Monroe reacted to a specific move off the edge. He calculates how the Ravens' offensive line will counter Von Miller rushing from the opposite side.

Ware decides on a power-punch move to create a short path to quarterback Joe Flacco rather than making a wide loop around Monroe. The hours of study produced the answer Ware sought. He broke free of Monroe and pulled Flacco down by his shoulder pads in a burst of brawn and brains.

"Once you get around the corner," Ware said, "you already know it's Christmastime now. I am thinking in my mind, 'Don't throw the ball, don't throw the ball.' Once Flacco started running, I knew from the film that he holds on to the ball the majority of the time in that situation. Once I get there, I still don't know if he has the ball or not. I always turn around and look. That's why you see me do that. I always come and I swipe and try to knock the ball out. I try to see if the ball is out or if he's on the ground with the ball. Getting that sack, that's the ultimate reward."

Ware uncovers clues of his craft each week, burying his head into his iPad. He's able to notice things that few in his own locker room can. A twitch, a head movement, a shoulder raise, the slightest inflection by the offensive tackle might tip him off.

"He does enough studying for about four or five of us. It definitely helps me, and not only me, but everybody in the meeting room," Miller said. "He'll watch film for like three or four plays and he'll have a tendency right there. He'll be like, 'The quarterback is lifting his hands.' He always has something just off one or two plays."

Welcome to the film room

The evolution of Ware was not televised. It occurred during his third season with the Dallas Cowboys in front of a TV in a linebackers meeting room. Ware began his career terrorizing quarterbacks, collecting 19½ sacks in his first two seasons and Pro Bowl honors in 2006. In 2007, Ware changed his approach at the urging of teammate and fellow pass rusher Greg Ellis, a productive but aging veteran. He gave Ware invaluable advice. Ware was gifted athletically. Everyone realized this. Ellis told Ware what he did away from the practice field could make him better than what he did during workouts.

"He pulled me aside and showed me this and that on film. I remember looking at the screen and saying, 'I don't see anything,' " Ware said. "The more I did it, the more I understood. Now I go in the film room with guys like (Broncos outside linebacker) Lerentee (McCray) and he says, 'I see it.' I realized I would never see it without putting in long hours in the film room."

Ware has become so adept at analyzing offensive sets that he has developed a code language with Miller. He will yell across to him using key words known only to them that tip off a protection scheme, or the right time to use a move they worked on in practice.

"It's the language that he can speak with me that he can't speak to rookies. It's advanced when he starts speaking like Chinese," Miller said.

Knowledge is power for Ware. He used to run by offensive tackles with alarming regularity, playing bigger than his 247 pounds. He long ago heeded the advice of Hall of Famer Michael Strahan, who told him to get lighter as he aged. He uses his hands as well as any pass rusher in the game, skills gleaned from countless sessions with mixed martial arts experts.

Back in Wade's world

Statistics lay bare Ware's success this season. He leads the AFC in sacks with 3½. He ranks first in quarterback hits with 11. Returning to a 3-4 defense with defensive coordinator Wade Phillips, who helped Ware average 16 sacks per season in their four years together at Dallas, accelerated his rebound.

"This defense is his baby," Broncos inside linebacker Brandon Marshall said. "This is his home."

That's only partly correct. Ware's residence is the backfield, via the film room. So confident was Ware in his revival, he bought a 1982 Red Bourdeaux — the year he was born. If successful the previous week, he savors a glass each Thursday.

"It tastes good," Ware said with a big smile. "So good."

The mystery of Ware, of how a player growing older appears to be getting younger, goes beyond his statistics. Watch the game, peel back the layers. Ware will set up the tackle, using a power move in a specific situation only to switch to a spin move when he needs it most in the fourth quarter. It's the equivalent of Clayton Kershaw eschewing his curveball for a changeup to strike out a hitter with runners on base.

Ware's September is a tribute to understanding the NFL's nuances.

"If you really want to excel, you really start paying attention to the small things. That became film study for me," Ware said. "Everybody has tendencies and little glitches. I have glitches. But when you understand what they are in an opponent, and you turn it into a sack on Sunday, it makes it all worth it."

Sack is in the bag

Broncos star DeMarcus Ware is experiencing a renaissance at age 33. NFL reporter Troy E. Renck examines the art of the sack with Ware, by words and numbers:

Ware's favorite move is the "stab and swipe," in which he gets his hands into the offensive tackle's chest and then uses his hands to clear or swipe past the blocker.

Ware's favorite move he has seen used by someone else? The "side scissor" by fellow former Dallas Cowboys pass rusher Greg Ellis. "He swipes through their hands underneath," Ware said, "and it works. I am like, 'Why do they keep sticking their hands out?' "

Ware's 3½ sacks this season lead the AFC. He was chosen the AFC defensive player of the month for September.

Ware's 11 quarterback hits lead the NFL, three ahead of Houston Texans star J.J. Watt.

Ware's 132½ career sacks rank 13th in NFL history, two behind Lawrence Taylor and Leslie O'Neal.

Sylvester Williams proving worthy to anchor Broncos' defense

By Cameron Wolfe
Denver Post
September 25, 2015

For Sylvester Williams, the pressure was building like an overfilled water balloon in the summertime. No more kid gloves. No more giving him time to adjust. No more talk of potential.

After two years of subpar-to-average play from their 2013 first-round pick, the Broncos took a leap of faith. They decided to let their mammoth nose tackle Terrance "Pot Roast" Knighton go in free agency and hand the torch to an unproven Williams.

The coaching staff admittedly was uneasy. They knew he had the talent, but could he put it all together on the field in a new system?

Through two games, the answer has been a resounding yes. Lost in the shuffle of the veteran-led, top-ranked defense has been Williams' play as the anchor in the middle.

It hasn't showed up much on the stat sheet, yet, but his value to the defense has been felt across the board.

"When we played 4-3 here last year, he was a little bit iffy on how to play and where he fits in the defense," outside linebacker DeMarcus Ware said. "But now he can use his athleticism to sort of push the pocket and get pressure on the quarterback."

Williams knows he cannot replace Knighton's personality or gobble up two or three linemen in the middle like Pot Roast. He's abandoned hopes of duplicating either.

Instead, Williams focuses on using his quickness and explosiveness to not just hold the line, but to break it.

"Obviously I want to keep the linebackers clean, but I also want to make some plays myself and show up on the highlight tape too," said Williams, who has four tackles through two games.

More specifically, he wants to redefine the nose tackle spot.

You wouldn't know it by looking at his 6-foot-2, 318-pound frame, but he's undersized for the spot. He added 12 pounds in the offseason just to get to his current weight, and he's far smaller than his predecessor.

After two disappointing seasons, Williams is treating 2015 as his breakout year.

He finally took Knighton's suggestion and stuck his head deep into they're going and you'll be ahead of the curve.

Another change was the addition of defensive line coach Bill Kollar, who wouldn't allow Williams to have another year of being hesitant and getting pushed around. Kollar demanded playmaking from the entire unit.

"He preaches that everyday," Williams said. "He keeps that fire under us."

The Ravens couldn't douse that fire in Week 1, rushing for only 73 yards (3.2 yards per carry average).

Kansas City running back Jamaal Charles got off for 125 rushing yards in Week 2, but defensive coordinator Wade Phillips said failure to contain the edge and missed tackles on the outside caused most of those problems.

Broncos defensive coaches give grades, plus or minus, on each play. For the first time in three years, Williams said, his grades are more positive than negative.

"He'll have a heck of a year. He's truly a hard worker," Phillips said. "He's got talent, but a lot of guys have talent and they don't work how he does."

Outside linebacker Von Miller isn't surprised when he see some of the moves Williams is doing in games.

"I'm the one telling him, 'You have to try some of this,' " Miller said. "It's exciting to start to see him develop into the type of player that we all know that he can be."

It wasn't long ago Ware and Miller were pushing Williams to perform better, to live up to his high draft status. Now, Williams is earning praise from two of the team's best players.

Derek Wolfe joins in on the fun on Denver's dominant defense

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press
November 5, 2015

Until last weekend, Derek Wolfe felt like he was missing out on all the fun.

He missed the first four games of the season while serving a suspension under the league's performance-enhancing drug policy. Watching Denver's defense steamroll opponents without him was hard enough but upon his return he realized he wasn't privy to all the inside jokes in the locker room and felt like an outsider.

He collected a smattering of tackles in his first couple of games back, but his biggest impact was an unfortunate one. It was his block of an opponent into Shane Ray's legs that sent the Broncos' first-round draft pick to the sideline with a sprained right MCL in Cleveland on Oct. 18.

Then, when the Broncos (7-0) shredded Aaron Rodgers and the previously unbeaten Green Bay Packers last week, it was Wolfe who led the way with a game-high seven tackles. That earned him a game ball from coach Gary Kubiak and AFC defensive player of the week honors.

"I'll tell you, if you turn the film on, he played super," Kubiak said. "Obviously, we played really good defensively, but he was special. It was his best game of the year. When you get an honor like that, everybody else is watching that film, too, so it tells you how well he played.

"I'm proud of Derek. I think that the best thing that I can say about Derek is when you miss a month, as a coach, you're scared to death of how a guy is going to come back. Derek took care of his business and when he came back, he was ready to play."

Safety T.J. Ward went down that same path, missing the opener while serving a suspension and then winning AFC defensive player of the week honors in Week 4.

He said Wolfe came back hungry just like he did.

"That's what happens when you sit out for any period of time. You should come back hungry," Ward said. "Wolfe played a hell of a game."

With edge rushers Von Miller and DeMarcus Ware hemming in Rodgers and the secondary led by Aqib Talib, Chris Harris Jr. and Bradley Roby stifling the receivers, the Packers' last hope was their ground game, and Wolfe shut that down, too. Eddie Lacy managed 38 yards on 11 carries.

Wolfe said he usually doesn't consider it a good game if he doesn't get a sack but those are hard to come by with so many premier pass rushers in Denver.

So, "I thank the Green Bay Packers for trying to run the ball at me," he said.

Wolfe did put one of four hits on Rodgers on the Packers' opening drive that set the tone for the worst game of Rodgers' career.

"I put a good hit on him. After watching the TV copy, he got up a little bit slow," Wolfe said. "I think that had a big impact. DeMarcus hit him a few times. We were all over him the whole game."

Andrew Luck is up next for the Broncos, and the Colts quarterback sure took notice of Denver's dismantling of Rodgers.

"It's not just what they've done this past weekend, it's what they've done the whole season," Luck said. "It's a heck of a defense with really good players. They're playing really well, probably as good as anybody in the league right now. Honestly, there's two premier edge rushers, three, four or five really good corners, tough safeties, inside linebackers, the guys on the interior of the D-line are all good.

"It's a well-rounded defense and you have to really fight for every yard."

The Colts (3-5) are tied with Houston atop their division but are 0-5 outside the awful AFC South.

To Wolfe, they're not a struggling team with an ailing QB who leads the league with a dozen interceptions despite playing in just six games, or one that just switched offensive coordinators, but the team that beat them in the playoffs 10 months ago.

"Yeah, that's my motivation," Wolfe said. "I mentioned that to the defensive line earlier today. I said, 'Don't forget. These guys knocked us out of the playoffs last year, so don't sleep on them.'"
