OAKLAND RAIDERS (0-2)

vs.

NEW ENGLAND PATRIOTS (1-1)

GAME PREVIEW

The Oakland Raiders will head out on the road the next two weeks, embarking on an 11-day road trip this Friday that will take them to New England for their Week 3 match-up with the Patriots on Sunday, Sept. 21 at 10:00 a.m. PT, and then an International Series contest in Week 4 against the Miami Dolphins in London. Oakland is making its first trip to Gillette Stadium since the 2005 season opener, which was a Thursday night contest after New England won the Super Bowl the year before. The game will also mark the first meeting between the two squads since Oct. 2, 2011 in Oakland. Last week, the Raiders fell to the Houston Texans, 14-30, in their home opener. The Patriots will be hosting their home opener this week, having started the 2014 campaign with two road games, including a Week 2 win over the Vikings in Minnesota.

The Raiders fell at home last week to the Houston Texans, 14-30. The offense was led by WR James Jones, who caught nine passes for 112 yards and one TD. The game marked Jones' first 100-yard receiving performance as a Raider. QB Derek Carr threw for 263 yards on 27-of-42 passing with one TD and two interceptions. RB Darren McFadden had 68 yards of total offense and one rushing TD.

New England turned in a stout defensive performance last week on the road against the Vikings, intercepting Matt Cassel four times and limiting Minnesota to just 217 yards of offense. RB Stevan Ridley led the New England rushing attack, gaining 101 yards on 15 carries with one TD. QB Tom Brady was an efficient 15-of-22 for 149 yards and one TD in the 30-7 victory.

Oakland will head directly to London following Sunday's contest and spend the week in England, before playing the Miami Dolphins on Sept. 28. The Patriots will travel to Kansas City to play on Monday Night Football against the Chiefs.

PATRIOTS SNAPSHOT

Overview: The New England Patriots host the Raiders in the team's home opener following a Week 2 victory on the road over the Minnesota Vikings, 30-7. The Pats rebounded after a divisional loss in Week 1 to the Miami Dolphins, 33-20, with a strong defensive performance, forcing five turnovers and six sacks. Head Coach Bill Belichick, now in his 15th season at the helm of the Patriots, earned his 200th career regular-season win in the game, bringing his overall record to 219-115 (19-9 in the postseason). With three Super Bowl championships as head coach, Belichick hopes to return New England to the playoffs for the sixth straight season and the 12th time under his guidance.

Offense: The Patriots offense has had historic success under the leadership of 15th-year QB Tom Brady, who holds the franchise records in passing touchdowns, yards, completions and career wins. Brady debuted for New England in 2000 and has since earned two Super Bowl MVP awards, two AP NFL MVP awards and nine Pro Bowl berths (five straight). Through the first two weeks of 2014, Brady has posted 398 yards on 44-of-78 passing (56.4 percent) with two TDs and a passer rating of 78.9. Sixth-year WR Julian Edelman has been his favorite target thus far, hauling in 12 passes for 176 yards (14.7 avg.) and one TD. RB Stevan Ridley, now in his fourth NFL season, leads the team in rushing with 33 attempts for 122 yards (3.7 avg.) and one TD.

Defense: New England boasts a talented defensive lineup, led by eight-year Patriot LB Jerod Mayo, who currently leads the squad in tackles with 19 (15 solo) through two games. Mayo's lone sack on the season has contributed to a pass rush currently led by DE Chandler Jones and LB Dont'a Hightower, who each have two thus far. CB Darrelle Revis is off to a fast start with his new team, posting one INT and three passes defended in 2014.

RAIDERS VS. PATRIOTS

HOUSTON TEXANS 30, OAKLAND RAIDERS 14

- The loss snaps a two-game winning streak for Oakland over the Houston Texans (10/9/11 and 11/17/13). The Texans improve their lead in the all-time series to 6-3 and the Raiders are now 1-4 in home games against Houston.
- Head Coach Dennis Allen is now even at 3-3 against AFC South opposition. The three wins are still tied for Allen's most against any division (three wins vs. AFC West).
- In games immediately following trips to the Eastern time zone since 2012, the Raiders are now 4-5 and 3-4 in home games.
- The Raiders remain perfect in the red zone this season, scoring a TD on both of the team's trips inside the 20 vs. Houston.
- In the fourth quarter, the Raiders converted on their first two fourth down attempts of the season as QB Derek Carr kept the ball and moved the sticks, and WR James Jones hauled in an 11-yard reception.
- The Raiders defense was held without a sack for the first time since Nov. 18, 2012 vs. New Orleans, a 23-game span.
- QB Derek Carr became just the second Raiders QB to start multiple games in his rookie season, the other being QB Matt McGloin (six games in 2013).
- RB Darren McFadden earned his first start of the season and finished the contest with 12 carries for 37 yards (3.1 avg.) and one TD. McFadden moves past Marv Hubbard (1,938 yards) and into fourth place on the all-time rushing list at O.co Coliseum with 1,951 career yards at home.
- WR James Jones scored the second Raiders touchdown of the game with a 9-yard catch in the fourth quarter. He also led the team in receiving and posted his 10th career 100-yard receiving game, his first with the Silver and Black. Jones finished with 9 receptions for 112 yards and one TD. The last Raider to have at least 100 yards receiving in a game was Rod Streater at the New York Jets on Dec. 8, 2013 (seven receptions for 130 yards).
- TE Mychal Rivera tied his single-game high with five receptions. His last five-reception game also came against Houston during the teams' last meeting on Nov. 17, 2013. Rivera finished with 31 yards (6.2 avg.).
- DE Justin Tuck blocked a Texans field goal by K Randy Bullock in the fourth quarter. The blocked kick marks the 20th blocked field goal by the Raiders since 1998.

A WIN WOULD...

...improve Head Coach Dennis Allen's record to 9-26 and end an eight-game losing streak for the franchise, which began following the win at Houston on Nov. 17, 2013.

...snap the Raiders' 14-game losing streak in the Eastern time zone. The team's last win in the East came on Dec. 6, 2009 over the Pittsburgh Steelers, 27-24.

...end a three-game losing streak against New England, with the last win coming at home on Nov. 17, 2002, 27-20, during the Raiders' most recent Super Bowl campaign.

...mark Allen's first career victory over the AFC East (0-3 entering the contest) in his first match-up with Patriots' Head Coach Bill Belichick.

WHAT TO WATCH FOR

- The offense remaining perfect in the red zone and surviving as the only team in the AFC and one of two teams in the NFL (Atlanta, 4-for-4) with a red zone percentage of 100 percent.
- The Raiders attempting a FG for the first time in 2014, the longest the franchise has gone without a FG attempt to open a season. Only three teams since the 1970 AFL-NFL merger have gone three games without an attempt (Dallas, 1989; San Diego, 1989; Houston Oilers, 1984). No team since 1960 has gone four games into a season without attempting a FG.
- QB Derek Carr throwing his fourth career TD pass to jump Todd Marinovich (3 in 1991) and David Humm (3 in 1975) and move into second place all-time among Raider rookies (Matt McGloin had eight in 2013).
- Carr rushing six times to tie McGloin (11) for the most rushing attempts by a rookie QB in franchise history. If Carr reaches the end zone, he will become just the second Raider rookie QB to score on the ground (Nick Papac, 1961).
- RB Darren McFadden rushing just one time to become the eighth player in franchise history to eclipse 900 rushing attempts. With 14 attempts, he will tie Marv Hubbard (913) for seventh in franchise history.
- McFadden gaining at least eight yards rushing to pass Pete Banaszak for sixth in franchise history. McFadden needs just 37 all-purpose yards to pass Chris Carr (5,395) and move into 10th on the Raiders' all-time list.
- WR James Jones reaching the end zone to join 21 other active players with at least 40 career receiving touchdowns. Jones is one of eight players to have caught a TD pass in each of the first two games this season.
- Jones amassing 37 receiving yards to pass Mike Siani (182 in 1972) for the most receiving yards through the first three games of the season in franchise history.
- TE Mychal Rivera totaling 31 yards receiving to become just the 15th Raider TE to eclipse 500 yards receiving in his career. With 43 yards, Rivera will pass Roland Williams (511) for 14th all-time among Raider TEs.
- S Tyvon Branch sacking the quarterback for the ninth time in his career, tying Stacey Toran for second on the Raiders' all-time sack list by defensive backs.
- S Charles Woodson intercepting his 58th career pass, tying him for 11th all-time with Emmitt Thomas.
- Woodson scoring his 14th career defensive TD to pass Rod Woodson and Darren Sharper for the most all-time. An INT-TD would be his 12th, tying him with R. Woodson for the most all-time.

HEAD COACHING MATCH-UP

DENNIS ALLEN

Dennis Allen enters his third season as Head Coach of the Oakland Raiders, having been named to the post on Jan. 30, 2012. The 18th head coach in franchise history, Allen has employed a steady, consistent approach while laying a strong foundation for success during his first two years in Oakland.

Already regarded as one of football's brightest defensive minds at the age of 41, Allen is the NFL's youngest head coach, more than five months younger than the league's next-youngest coach, San Diego's Mike McCoy. Through two seasons, Allen has demonstrated a commitment to fielding a tough, smart and disciplined football team that exemplifies his coaching philosophy of competition and dedication to the game.

Allen's squad made marked improvements in all three phases of the game during his second season as head coach. On offense, the Raiders ranked 12th in the NFL in rushing with an average of 125 yards per game, moving up 16 spots in the NFL rankings from 2012. Oakland's defense replaced nine starters last season, yet still improved in several categories. The defensive unit recorded 38 sacks, 13 more than the previous campaign, and tied for second in the NFL with 15 different players getting to the quarterback for losses.

In 2012, his first year as a head coach at any level, Allen guided an Oakland team in transition, posting a 4-12 mark. The 2012 Raiders were defined by offensive, defensive and special teams units that improved throughout the season, laying a foundation for future success.

With 18 years of combined coaching experience at the college and professional levels, Allen now enters his 13th NFL season. On six occasions during his 10 years as an NFL assistant, his team earned a playoff berth and four of those trips came after division championships. Allen's résumé includes a title in Super Bowl XLIV following the 2009 season, earned as a member of the Saints' coaching staff with a 31-17 victory over the Indianapolis Colts and league MVP Peyton Manning.

The NFL's second-youngest defensive coordinator when the Broncos hired him in 2011, he coordinated a defense that helped Denver claim the AFC West division crown and post a victory in an AFC Wild Card game. During his only year in Denver, despite starting three rookies most of the season, the Broncos improved 12 spots over 2010 in overall defensive ranking (from 32nd to 20th) and bettered their points allowed by eight spots (from 32nd to 24th).

Prior to joining the Broncos, Allen was an assistant coach for five seasons with New Orleans, first as assistant defensive line coach (2006-07), then as defensive backs coach (2008-10). In 2009, Allen tutored a secondary that played a key role in helping the Saints to their first Super Bowl victory. His unit accounted for an NFL-high six interception returns for touchdowns and totaled 22 picks on the season. Cornerback Tracy Porter, who later played for Allen in Oakland in 2013, sealed the Saints' Super Bowl title by returning a Manning interception 74 yards for a touchdown late in the fourth quarter of the season's final contest.

He originally entered the NFL coaching ranks under Head Coach Dan Reeves with Atlanta in 2002, and spent four seasons with the Falcons as a defensive assistant. During his stint in Atlanta, the Falcons qualified for the playoffs twice — as a wild card entrant in 2002 and as NFC South champions in 2004 — and played in the NFC Championship in 2004.

BILL BELICHICK

Belichick was hired by Patriots Chairman and CEO Robert Kraft on Jan. 27, 2000 and is in his 15th season as the team's head coach. In 14 seasons, Belichick has delivered three Super Bowl championships, five conference titles, 11 division crowns and 18 playoff victories, while posting an overall record of 181-69. Belichick directed the Patriots to victories in Super Bowls XXXVI (2001), XXXVIII (2003) and XXXIX (2004), and in 2007 he became the only NFL head coach to guide his team to a 16-0 regular season. From 2003 to 2004, Belichick directed the Patriots to an overall winning streak of 21 consecutive games, including the postseason.

From 2000-13, the Patriots won 72.8 percent of their regular-season games (163- 61), recording the highest winning percentage of any major American professional sports team over that span. Over a 100-game stretch from 2003-09, Belichick directed the team to an 81-19 record — tied for the best record in any 100-game span in NFL history. Belichick has led the Patriots to a winning record in each of the last 13 seasons. The only other NFL coach to have 10 consecutive winning seasons with one team since the 1970 merger was Tom Landry, who led the Cowboys to 16 consecutive winning seasons (1970-1985). Belichick's 19 career playoff wins are tied for second all-time, while New England's 14 playoff victories from 2000-09 are tied for the highest total in any decade in NFL history. Belichick has compiled a career playoff record of 19-9, with his .679 playoff winning percentage placing him seventh in NFL history.

Prior to joining the Patriots as an assistant, Belichick spent five seasons (1991-95) rebuilding the Cleveland Browns. By 1994, the Browns were again one of NFL's best teams, boasting the second-best record in the AFC. Belichick's first head coaching opportunity came following the 1990 season, when his defensive efforts with the New York Giants helped claim a second Super Bowl title in five years. At the age of 38, he became the NFL's youngest head coach. In his first season, Belichick began the rebuilding process by restoring the foundation of the aging squad he inherited. Following back-to-back 7-9 campaigns in 1992 and 1993, the Browns improved to 11-5 in 1994, a mark that is still tied for the second highest victory total in the 61- year history of the Browns franchise. The 1994 squad was defined by its defense, which allowed a league-low 204 points. In their return to the playoffs, the Browns defeated the Patriots, 20-13, in a first-round Wild Card game on New Year's Day 1995.

Eight former assistant coaches on Coach Belichick's staffs in Cleveland or New England have gone on to become head coaches at the NFL or collegiate level. One current NFL head coach and three college head coaches worked on Belichick staffs: Houston's Bill O'Brien, Alabama's Nick Saban, Iowa's Kirk Ferentz and Kansas' Charlie Weis.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders — who began play in the American Football League in 1960 — enter their 55th year of professional football competition, including the last 44 as a member of the National Football League.

In five memorable decades — the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the 2000s — the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three world championships of professional football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 21 playoff seasons, finished 34 seasons at .500 or better and played in 40 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s.

The Silver and Black are the only AFC team — and one of just two NFL teams (Minnesota) — to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only two original AFL teams to have captured three world championships of professional football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only four AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980.

In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

With four postseason victories, the Raiders were the first of the AFC West teams to win multiple postseason contests in the new millennium by six years.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During those memorable 54 years in Oakland and Los Angeles, the Raiders have won 434 league games, tied 11 and lost only 375.

"Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization during the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium as shown by their domination of pro football.

More than 20 of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced five Coaches of the Year.

In addition, 62 Pro Bowl players have made 181 Pro Bowl appearances representing the Silver and Black. In 1970, as the Raiders began their second decade of play, the merger between the AFL and NFL became a reality on the field. In the 1970 through 2012 period of interconference play, the Raiders have compiled a remarkable 92-73-1 record against present National Football Conference rivals.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 — "Monday Night Football." The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build an incredible 37-27-1 record in Monday night play. In the 43 years of this series, the Raiders are 15-8-0 in "Monday Night Football" games at home.

Through the decades — the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and now the 2000s — the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports.

Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

His career record as an NFL head coach is 29-33. He has also served five additional NFL seasons as an assistant head coach or coordinator.

Last year, Sparano tutored a shuffling offensive line through eight different starting combinations, the most in the NFL. His line paved the way for four different players to rush for 100 yards in a game, with the Raiders becoming the first team to achieve the feat since 1978. Sparano led a unit that took a big step forward, as Oakland rushed for 125.0 yards per game, which ranked 12th in the league, after the 2012 Raiders rushed for 88.8 yards per game.

From 2008-11, Sparano was the head coach of the Miami Dolphins. From 2008-10, the team posted a 15-9 record on the road, which tied for the third best road record in the NFL over that span.

With the Cowboys from 2003-07, Sparano served in various roles, helping develop a dynamic offensive attack. During those five years, the Cowboys qualified for the playoffs three times, including 2007 when they won the NFC East with a 13-3 record.

A native of New Haven, Conn., he and his wife, Jeanette, have three children, sons Tony and Andrew, who each played football at Albany, and daughter Ryan Leigh. The younger Tony is currently an offensive assistant with the New York Jets.

April, one of the NFL's most highly-regarded special teams coaches, was named to his current position by Raiders Head Coach Dennis Allen on Jan. 19, 2013, after serving as Philadelphia's special teams coordinator from 2010-12.

In 2013, Oakland's special teams unit ranked among the best in the league. On kickoff coverage, the special teams allowed just 20.4 yards per return, good for fourth in the NFL. April also helped first-year punter Marquette King lead the league in gross punting (48.9 avg.) and punts of 60-plus yards (10), while ranking sixth in punting yards (4,107).

April spent three seasons (2010-12) with the Philadelphia Eagles before coming to Oakland. In 2011, April successfully integrated both a rookie kicker, Alex Henery, and a rookie punter, Chas Henry, on his units.

Prior to joining the Eagles, April spent six seasons with the Buffalo Bills (2004-09). In three of those six years, he guided the Bills to the No. 1 spot in the annual Dallas Morning News rankings. April was named Special Teams Coach of the Year by his peers twice, in 2004 and 2008.

He joined the Bills after three seasons (2001-03) in charge of the special teams with the St. Louis Rams, where he helped the team to an appearance in Super Bowl XXXVI. As Pittsburgh's special teams coordinator from 1994-95, April helped the Steelers earn a berth in Super Bowl XXX.

Olson served four seasons with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, including the last three as offensive coordinator. Olson helped guide the Buccaneers to one of their best offensive seasons in team history in 2010, setting franchise records for yards per play (5.61), average per rush (4.64 yards), average per pass play (7.21), passer rating (96.2) and fewest interceptions thrown (six).

Prior to joining Tampa Bay, Olson spent two seasons (2006-07) as offensive coordinator for the St. Louis Rams. Under Olson's direction, the 2006 Rams became just the fourth team in NFL history to produce a 4,000-yard passer (QB Marc Bulger), a 1,500-yard rusher (RB Steven Jackson) and two 1,000-yard receivers (WRs Torrey Holt and Isaac Bruce). Bulger, Jackson and Holt were all selected to the Pro Bowl.

From 1997-2000, as quarterbacks coach at Purdue, Olson played a key role in the development of future Pro Bowl and Super Bowl-winning QB Drew Brees. Under Olson, Brees was a Heisman Trophy finalist in 1999 and 2000 while winning the Maxwell Award as the nation's most outstanding player in 2000. He was also a finalist for the Davey O'Brien Award as the nation's top quarterback in 1999 and 2000. JASON TARVER

Jason Tarver is in his third season as defensive coordinator for the Oakland Raiders. Tarver, who coached in various capacities with the San Francisco 49ers for 10 seasons, joined the Silver and Black after spending one year as Stanford's co-defensive coordinator.

Last season signified a major transition on defense for the Raiders, as Tarver's unit started 10 new players on defense. The defense showed significant improvement against the run, allowing 107.9 yards per game to rank 13th in the NFL after ranking 18th in the previous season. Oakland also held opponents to less than 40 yards on the ground three times during the campaign. The Raiders improved the team's sack count from the previous season by 13, with a remarkable 15 different players getting to the quarterback in 2013.

In 2012, Tarver's first as defensive coordinator, the Raiders ranked second in the NFL in total defense and fourth in scoring defense over the season's final four weeks.

As an offensive assistant for the Silver and Black (2010-11), Sanders worked primarily with the tight ends.

Before joining the Raiders, Sanders coached linebackers for two seasons at UC Davis. He also served as the assistant offensive line/tight ends coach at UC Davis in 2006, before becoming a graduate assistant at Utah State.

AL SAUNDERS

Al Saunders returns for his fourth season on the Oakland Raiders' coaching staff. Saunders has over 40 years of coaching experience, including the past 31 in the National Football League. He has been a part of 15 playoff teams, five division titles and one Super Bowl championship as an NFL coach and 20 times his offensive units have ranked first in the NFL in total offense, passing, rushing or scoring.

He served as the assistant head coach/offensive coordinator for Dick Vermeil with the Kansas City Chiefs from 2001-05. During his second stint with the Chiefs, Saunders' offense established 46 franchise records and exploded with 2,157 points, 262 touchdowns and 30,470 net yards, more than any other NFL team across those five seasons. In 2005, he was named USA Today's Offensive Coach of the Year as the Chiefs offense led the NFL for a second consecutive year.

His first NFL head coaching position came with the Chargers as interim head coach in 1986, following the resignation of Don Coryell. He spent two full seasons as the Chargers head coach.

A native of Hendon, England, he and his wife, Karen, have three children: sons Robert and Joseph, and daughter Korrin.

KELLY SKIPPER

Kelly Skipper enters his eighth season with the Raiders, the sixth in his present capacity tutoring running backs, after two years as tight ends coach. He has 26 years of coaching experience and has served as an offensive coordinator at the collegiate level.

Under Skipper's tutelage, FB Marcel Reece garnered his second-straight Pro Bowl selection and was named second-team All-Pro by the Associated Press. In 2010, Skipper oversaw a running game that ranked second in the NFL and set a franchise record by averaging 4.9 yards per attempt.

Before joining the Raiders, Skipper spent four seasons coaching running backs and special teams at Washington State. He also spent two summers, one with Seattle and one with Washington, as an NFL minority fellowship coaching intern. From 1998-2002, Skipper was on the coaching staff at UCLA, where he was offensive coordinator from 2001-02. He was an assistant at Fresno State, his alma mater, from 1989-97, beginning his coaching career as a graduate assistant before becoming a full-time assistant in 1991.

During the 2013 season with the Raiders, Smith helped tutor a defensive unit that included three new starters in veterans Nick Roach and Kevin Burnett and rookie Sio Moore. Roach recorded career highs in tackles (152) and sacks (5.5), playing every snap at middle linebacker, while Moore recorded 4.5 sacks in his first season and was named to the PFWA All-Rookie Team.

Smith was an offensive technical intern at Colorado in 2011. He coached at Santa Monica Junior College in 2010, assisting the tight ends and the defensive linemen. He also served as an undergraduate assistant coach at Cal Poly.

VERNON STEPHENS

Vernon Stephens joins the Silver and Black for his first season as the assistant strength and conditioning coach after spending six seasons (2007-12) with the San Diego Chargers in the same capacity.

During his time at San Diego, Stephens helped to oversee the team's year-round strength and conditioning program. He also spent time with the Jacksonville Jaguars during their offseason strength and conditioning program in 2002 and 2003.

Prior to working in the NFL, Stephens spent eight years in the collegiate ranks, including five years (1999-2003) as the head strength and conditioning coach at his alma mater, North Florida, and four years (2003-07) as the assistant strength and conditioning coach at Colorado.

Stephens began his coaching career at North Florida in 1999, starting the school's first NCAA strength and conditioning program. He served as head strength and conditioning coach for five years from 1999-2003, overseeing all 14 athletic programs, which encompassed approximately 230 student-athletes.

A native of Jacksonville, Fla., he and his wife, Tali, have two children.

TERRELL WILLIAMS

Now entering his third season as the defensive line coach for the Oakland Raiders, Terrell Williams previously spent 14 seasons coaching the defensive line at the collegiate level, four of which were at Purdue where he tutored several future NFL players.

In 2012, his first season with the Silver and Black, Williams tutored a veteran unit that included four players that posted three-or-more sacks on the year. During his coaching tenure at Akron, the Zips marked two firsts in program history when they won the Mid-American Conference championship game and played in the Motor City Bowl.

Williams got his first taste of the NFL in 1999 when he interned with the Jacksonville Jaguars, assisting the defensive line. He also assisted with the defensive line for the Dallas Cowboys in 2008 and with the Seattle Seahawks during training camp in 2007. Before his coaching career, Williams played nose guard at East Carolina University, helping the Pirates to a Liberty Bowl victory over Stanford in 1995 and finishing No. 23 in the final USA Today/ESPN poll.

Prior to joining the Raiders, Woods served as the defensive backs coach with the Minnesota Vikings for the past eight seasons (2006-13) and spent two seasons with the Tampa Bay Buccaneers (2004-05).

In 2012, the Vikings secondary helped the team to wins in the final four games of the regular season to finish at 10-6 and earn a Wild Card playoff berth. During the 2012 season, Woods tutored rookie Harrison Smith who tied for the team lead with three interceptions, returning a pair of the picks for scores to tie the Vikings rookie record.

During his time with Tampa Bay, the defense posted top-five defenses each of his two seasons, leading the NFL in total defense in 2005 and ranking fifth in the NFL in total defense and first in pass defense in 2004.

Woods was a four-year letterman as a safety at Illinois state, served as captain as a senior and earned first-team All-Gateway Conference honors in 1991.

Of the 42 trips the Raiders took inside the opponent's 20-yard line, the Silver and Black scored touchdowns on 25 of them. Thirteen of the scores came on the ground, while 12 were through the passing game.

ADDING SACKS

"You can never have enough rushers in the National Football League. It's all about affecting the quarterback ... I think we've really helped out our pass rush a lot." - Raiders Head Coach Dennis Allen

After racking up 38 sacks a year ago, the Raiders went out and continued to improve their ability to get to the quarterback this offseason. Bringing in accomplished sack artists such as DE LaMarr Woodley, DE Justin Tuck and DL Antonio Smith, and drafting young pass rusher LB Khalil Mack, Oakland's pass rush looks to improve upon last year's total. Defensive coordinator Jason Tarver has some new weapons to rush the quarterback with and here is a look at some of their career sack stats:

FREE AGENT ADDITIONS

Player	Sacks	Sack Yards	Forced Fumbles
Antonio Smith	41.5	262.5	10
Justin Tuck	60.5	397.5	20
LaMarr Woodley	57.0	391.0	9
Totals	159.0	1,051.0	39

* No. 5 overall pick LB Khalil Mack totaled 28.5 sacks for 217.0 yards and 16 forced fumbles during his collegiate career at Buffalo.

UNDRAFTED GEMS

Every preseason, hundreds of undrafted free agents vie for a spot on their team's 53-man roster. The Raiders have brought in numerous players that were not drafted, developing them into significant contributors for the Silver and Black.

- In 2013, P Marquette King posted numbers among the NFL's best in both gross average and punting yards. With 4,107 punting yards on the year, King finished sixth in the NFL, and led the league in gross punting with an average of 48.9.

- QB Matt McGloin made his mark on the NFL in his rookie season, making his first career start on Nov. 17, 2013 at Houston. In that game, McGloin became the first undrafted rookie to throw for three-or-more touchdown passes in his first NFL start since 1987. He also became just the second quarterback to throw for three touchdowns without an interception in his first NFL start since the NFL-AFL merger in 1970.

- WR Rod Streater, originally an undrafted free agent with the Raiders in 2012, has made a major impact since joining the team, totaling 104 receptions for 1,518 yards and eight TDs.

Below are some of the notable current Raiders who entered the NFL as undrafted free agents:

Player	School	Year	Team
LS Jon Condo	Maryland	2005	Dallas
WR Andre Holmes	Hillsdale	2011	Minnesota
G/T Austin Howard	Northern Iowa	2010	Philadelphia
P Marquette King	Fort Valley State	2012	Oakland
DE Benson Mayowa	Idaho	2013	Seattle
QB Matt McGloin	Penn State	2013	Oakland
FB/RB Jamize Olawale	North Texas	2012	Dallas
T Donald Penn	Florida State	2006	Minnesota
FB Marcel Reece	Washington	2008	Miami
LB Nick Roach	Northwestern	2007	San Diego
WR Rod Streater	Temple	2012	Oakland

SACKS & TURNOVERS

In their Week 1 contest at the New York Jets, the Raiders were able to force two turnovers (one S Charles Woodson interception and one CB TJ Carrie forced fumble/recovery). Oakland also racked up two sacks in the game, when S Tyvon Branch registered a 19-yard sack of Geno Smith on third down, knocking the Jets out of field goal range. When LB Sio Moore caused a sack-fumble, it marked the first time under Head Coach Dennis Allen and first time since 2011 that Oakland had forced at least two fumbles and recorded at least two sacks in their season-opener. The Raiders forced three turnovers and posted five sacks in their win over the Broncos on Sept. 12, 2011. Here is a look at the two games:

Date/Opp.	Sacks	Forced Turnovers	Result
9/12/11 at Den.	5	3	W, 23-20
9/7/14 at NYJ	2	2	L, 14-19

MILES AND MILES

Factoring in three trips to the Eastern time zone and one trip to England for their game in London, the Raiders will travel more miles than any other team in the NFL this season. According to Pro Football Reference, Oakland travels 36,106 miles in 2014, over 10,000 more miles than any other team. The team also has four trips of over 2,000 miles. Here is a look at the teams that travel the most in 2014:

Team	2014 Traveling Miles	2,000+ Mile Trips
Oakland Raiders	36,106	4
Seattle Seahawks	26,144	3
Dallas Cowboys	24,746	1
Miami Dolphins	24,546	1
Jacksonville Jaguars	22,230	2
San Diego Chargers	20,186	3
San Francisco 49ers	19,932	1
St. Louis Rams	17,850	0
Arizona Cardinals	17,728	1
Kansas City Chiefs	17,658	0

TOUGH TEST OUT WEST

This season, the AFC West and NFC West will be playing each other in the regular season for the first time since 2010. Combined, the two divisions had five playoff teams in 2013, and the Arizona Cardinals missed the post-season despite winning 10 games. Three of the NFL's "final four" teams from last year's postseason reside in their respective conference's Western division and both Super Bowl participants play in the West. Because of all this, the eight teams from these divisions have the eight hardest schedules in the league, based on their opponent's winning percentage last year. Here is a look at the teams with the 10 most difficult schedules:

Team	Opponents' 2013 Winning %
Oakland	.578
Denver	.570
St. Louis	.564
San Diego	.563
San Francisco	.563
Seattle	.561
Kansas City	.559
Arizona	.547
NY Jets	.520
New England	.516

INDIVIDUAL NOTES

A LEADER IN PICKS

S Charles Woodson, who posted nine interceptions when he won the NFL's Defensive Player of the Year award in 2009, is the NFL's active leader in interceptions. Woodson, in his 17th NFL campaign, has 57 interceptions, five more than Champ Bailey's 52. Woodson has five seasons with at least five picks in his Hall of Fame career.

LONG-TERM HAWK

Remarkably, S Charles Woodson has intercepted at least one pass in each of his first 17 NFL seasons. Woodson has joined an elite company of just one other player to intercept a pass in at least 17 consecutive seasons. He is now in sole possession of second place on this list, trailing only Hall of Famer Darrell Green. Woodson has four seasons of at least seven interceptions in his career.

WOODSON QUICK HITS

- Only two players in football history have ever won a Heisman Trophy, Associated Press Rookie of the Year, Associated Press Player of the Year and a Super Bowl in their career. Charles Woodson is one of them. The other? Former Raiders RB Marcus Allen.
- Since 1995, only four players have won both the Associated Press Defensive Rookie of the Year and Associated Press Defensive Player of the Year awards in their career - Raiders S Charles Woodson (1998 & 2009), Ravens OLB Terrell Suggs (2003 & 2011), former Bears LB Brian Urlacher (2000 & 2005) and Panthers LB Luke Kuechly (2012 & 2013).
- Woodson posted an interception touchdown in six straight seasons (2006-11), becoming the first player in NFL history to do so. No other NFL player has accomplished the feat in more than four consecutive seasons.
- In 2009, Woodson became the fourth player in NFL history (since sacks became an official statistic in 1982) to record at least nine interceptions and two sacks in a single season.
- Is the only player in NFL history to post at least seven interceptions and two sacks in back-to-back seasons.
- Became the first NFL player (since sacks became an official statistic in 1982) to record two interceptions, an interception touchdown, a sack and a fumble recovery in the same game when he posted all of those statistics on 11/26/09 at Det.

PLAYER OF THE WEEK

S Charles Woodson made his first memorable moment in his second stint with the Raiders just five games into last season. Woodson was named the Week 5 AFC Defensive Player of the Week last season for his performance vs. the San Diego Chargers on Oct. 6. Woodson posted eight tackles (six solo), one interception and one fumble recovery, which he returned 25 yards for a touchdown in the victory. With the touchdown, Woodson tied the NFL's all-time record for defensive touchdowns with 13.

TAKING IT TO THE HOUSE

The only thing better than forcing a turnover is turning it into a touchdown, and S Charles Woodson has done that just as well as anybody in the history of the NFL. Woodson is one interception-touchdown away from tying Rod Woodson's all-time mark, and just one defensive touchdown away from setting the all-time mark. With every touchdown going forward, Woodson will be adding a new note to the NFL record books.

In the game, Burris tied a career high with 14 tackles. Burris' 2012 campaign got off to a similar start, as the rookie linebacker stepped right in, started, and made an impact for Oakland in his initial season. He made 138 tackles on the year, most by a Raiders rookie since 1994, while starting 15-of-16 games he played in. Here is a look at his 2012 campaign:

BRANCH ON THE STOP

S Tyvon Branch has been one the most consistent Raiders since he was drafted in 2008. Branch enjoyed a breakout year in 2009, posting 124 tackles in his first season as a starter, leading all NFL defensive backs in that category. Branch followed it up by leading Oakland in tackles for 2010 and 2011. Additionally, Branch set a career high in 2012 with 146 tackles, good for second on the team. Branch was slowed down by an ankle injury in 2013, limiting him to just two games, but returned in Week 1 of 2014 with another impact performance, recording eight tackles, one sack and one pass defended. Here is a rundown of his totals since 2009:

DB SACKS

The Raiders have had many great defensive backs throughout their historic past, and Raiders safeties Tyvon Branch and Charles Woodson rank among them on the franchise's all-time sack list. Branch and Woodson rank tied for third and fifth, respectively, on Oakland's all-time sack list by defensive backs, and the Raiders are hoping they continue to move up in 2014. With one more sack, Woodson will become the first player since sacks became an official statistic in 1982 to record at least 50 interceptions and 20 sacks in a career. Here is a look at the Raiders' all-time sack list by DBs:

DJ AT CORNER

The Raiders' first-round selection (No. 12 overall) in the 2013 NFL Draft, CB DJ Hayden has come a long way. After suffering a life-threatening injury to his heart in November 2012, Hayden played a major role in Oakland's defensive makeover. In his rookie year, Hayden recorded 29 tackles and two PD. In the Week 5 win vs. San Diego, Hayden hauled in his first NFL interception, picking off Philip Rivers in the end zone to stop a potential Chargers scoring drive. His season was cut short due to a groin injury on Nov. 20, 2013.

INDIVIDUAL NOTES

STARTING CARR

Rookie QB Derek Carr was named the Raiders' starting quarterback heading into Week 1 against the New York Jets, becoming the first rookie quarterback in franchise history to start in Week 1. Oakland's second-round pick of the 2014 NFL Draft was solid in his NFL debut, finishing the game 20-for-32 passing for 151 yards, two TDs and a passer rating of 94.7.

Carr became the ninth Raider QB and second rookie to throw at least two TD passes in his debut. His 94.7 passer rating is the third highest for a Raider rookie in his first start and 12th among all Raiders starting QBs in their Silver and Black debut. Carr began his career nearly perfect, going 7-for-7 for 53 yards and one TD before throwing his first incompletion in the second quarter. He finished the first half 9-of-12 (75.0 percent).

In Week 2 vs. Houston, Carr rushed around the right edge for 41 yards, making it the second longest rush by a quarterback for the Raiders since 2000.

A three-year starter at Fresno State, Carr was a two-time Mountain West Offensive Player of the Year, becoming the third player in league history to win the award in back-to-back seasons. He was also a two-time All-American selection, having earned the honors in his junior and senior seasons. He established 27 school records and 21 Mountain West Conference records over his career, including yards (12,482), completions (1,086) and TDs (113).

Raiders pounded by Houston Texans in home opener 30-14

By Jerry McDonald

September 14, 2014

There are myriad factors why the Raiders have gone from negative to worse in the very first two games of the season, but leave it to Charles Woodson to present the unvarnished truth.

"We suck," Woodson said Sunday following a 30-14 loss to the Houston Texans at O.co Coliseum. "Now, that's about as blunt as I could put it."

Coming on the heels of a 19-14 road loss to the New York Jets to open the season, the Raiders left a sellout crowd of 54,063 booing, bitterly disappointed and heading for the exits early in the fourth quarter with the game out of reach.

The Texans took handle from the outset, outgaining the Raiders 150-three in the very first quarter en route to a 14- lead. Operating back Arian Foster rushed for 138 yards on 28 carries, which includes a five-yard touchdown run.

Foster also set up the first touchdown with a 40-yard bolt to the 1-yard line. Quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick completed 14 of 19 passes for 139 yards and touchdowns of 1 yard to J.J. Watt and 12 yards to DeAndre Hopkins.

Randy Bullock kicked three field targets for Houston from distances of 33, 39 and 46 yards.

The Raiders turned the ball over four times -- on fumbles by James Jones and Mychal Rivera and on two interceptions of passes by rookie Derek Carr.

"That's a recipe for acquiring your butt kicked," Raiders coach Dennis Allen stated. "I told the players, the only people that can adjust it are the men and women in that locker room, coaches and players. We've got to make a conscious decision that we want to get this thing changed."

It was 27- prior to the Raiders have been able to break by means of on a 1-yard run by Darren McFadden early in the fourth quarter, and they added a 9-yard Carr to Jones touchdown with 13 seconds to play.

Carr completed 27 of 42 for 263 yards, substantially of it coming when the game was lengthy decided. His second interception, by linebacker Brooks Reed, came as he was becoming hit by Watt.

The Texans utilised up almost the whole initially quarter on 80- and 70-yard touchdown drives, continuing a trend that reared its head with the initially-group defense in the preseason and has continued into the normal season.

"Defensively, we just never stop persons, in particular early in games," Woodson said. "Just about every 1st drive a group is able to go and get points. Today, it happened all day."

Foster gained 9 yards the initially time he touched the ball, later had a six-yard run and then ran 40 yards to the 1-yard line on a play that initially was ruled a touchdown, then overturned.

No matter. Fitzpatrick discovered Watt, in the game as an added blocker, alone in the end zone for the score.

"You can not commence off a game like that and allow the opponent to just run the ball down the field," Allen mentioned.

The Texans converted their initial 5 third-down possibilities and were 9 for 15 for the game even though the Raiders were 2 for 9.

The effect of the early Houston drives was to put the Raiders behind and unable to be persistent with their personal operating attack. Carr was the major rusher with 58 yards on four carries, such as a 41-yard burst on a read-selection play. McFadden gained 37 yards on 12 attempts with Maurice Jones-Drew sidelined with a hand injury.

"Houston, if you would describe their day, they had rhythm all day on offense, and we did not have any," center Stefen Wisniewski mentioned. "That is no way to place points on the board. We have to keep the ball and not turn it more than. We have to be better on third down, too."

Cornerback Tarell Brown promised to be specialist, put the game aside and move on to the subsequent a single.

It remains to be observed if the troubles can be worked out on the practice field, provided that Allen stated the Raiders had a good week of practice right after losing to the Jets in Week 1.

"It certainly don't matter. Practice don't win games," Woodson said. "Whatever we have to do next week to try and get a win, we have to figure out what that is. A very good week of practice definitely did not imply a win. We have to go back to the drawing board and figure something else out."

Raiders flop in home opener, fall 30-14

By Vic Tafur

September 14, 2014

It's a sick, helpless feeling, and we're not talking about the fans who got up early, came out and spent their hard-earned money on another terrible performance by the Raiders.

No. we're talking about the players. Safety Charles Woodson stood at his locker after a 30-14 loss to the Houston Texans in the home opener Sunday, trying to process an 0-2 start.

"We suck," Woodson said. "That's as blunt as I can put it. For whatever reason, defensively we just won't stop people. Offensively, we put the ball on the ground.

"Collectively, we look bad. It's frustrating because everything other people say about us, we're making them right. I am really embarrassed."

For the fans, too.

“When I came into the stadium today and I saw all the fans, everyone is optimistic for our first home game,” Woodson said. “They are excited to see their Raiders ... and what was that that we put out on the field today? I am embarrassed for this team and for the fans.”

The Raiders fell behind 27-0 before a couple of fourth-quarter touchdowns put a little cologne on the stinker at the Coliseum. It was their fifth straight loss at home, something they hadn't done since 2006-07.

Houston marched down the field on 80- and 70-yard first-quarter touchdown drives and didn't look back.

“That's a recipe for getting your butt kicked,” head coach Dennis Allen said. “I told the players the only people that can change it are in that locker room, coaches and players. We've got to make a conscious decision that we want to get this thing changed.”

It might take more than that. Allen said the team actually had a good week of practice. So, is the coaching lacking or are the players again just not good enough after back-to-back 4-12 seasons?

This year, after all, was supposed to be different. The Raiders had $64 million to spend on free agents after two years of fixing up a salary-cap mess. Some players even talked playoffs.

Raiders owner Mark Davis didn't use that word, but he wanted to see real progress and said this was a “no-excuses” season.

And that's why Allen is clearly on the hot seat already after his team laid an egg in the home opener. Several team officials were wondering after the game if and when Davis might make a move.

One of Davis' biggest questions: Allen is a defensive coach, the former defensive coordinator of the Denver Broncos, and yet the Raiders have not been good defensively his first two seasons. Allen supposedly has more talent this year than last but his defense has allowed 400 yards rushing in the first two games.

Davis, who grew up watching some of his late father's great teams, might be more embarrassed for the fans than Woodson is.

Especially after Sunday's result was never in doubt. Arian Foster ran for 138 yards and quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick threw two touchdowns passes to beat the Raiders with his third different team (Buffalo and Tennessee were the others.)

The Raiders couldn't run the ball in the first half (running back Darren McFadden had 17 yards on six carries) and rookie quarterback Derek Carr threw two interceptions. (Carr did throw a garbage-time touchdown to James Jones for the second straight Sunday, this one with 13 seconds left.)

Their defense looked old and slow as newcomers Justin Tuck, LaMarr Woodley, Antonio Smith and first-round pick Khalil Mack didn't do much. Fitzpatrick was hit one time all day.

Now the schedule gets difficult, with trips to New England and London (to play the Dolphins). And the Raiders have yet to play anyone in the tough AFC West or the even-tougher NFC West.

A Week 5 bye might offer respite for Allen — 8-26 as a head coach — if general manager Reggie McKenzie can persuade Davis to hold off on making a move for a couple of more weeks.

Allen was asked if he can change personnel or coaching schemes to improve his team.

"I think we go back and look at a lot of different things," he said.

For a team expecting to turn it around this season, Sunday's could have been considered a must-win game against a team that was 2-14 last season. The Raiders lost badly.

"I don't know what we need to do as a team going forward, but something is going to have to be done," Woodson said. "We've got to do better than what we did today."

LaMarr Woodley and Antonio Smith: Two of the Raiders' big free-agent defensive acquisitions do not appear on the stat sheet. Anywhere.

James Jones: Fumbled twice on the same play in the first half, but the receiver made fantasy owners happy with his second garbage-time touchdown (both in last two minutes) in two games.

Run defense: Has allowed 400 yards in the first two games. $64million in salary-cap space doesn't go as far as it used to.

Instant Replay: Raiders fumble away home opener

By Scott Bair

September 14, 2014

Raiders receiver James Jones caught a pass from quarterback Derek Carr, broke up field for what looked to be a big play. Assuming, of course, Jones was able to retain possession.

Texans cornerback Jonathan Joseph popped the ball out into the middle of the field. Jones scooped it up and sprinted for the end zone. He was a few yards away when Joseph stripped it again. This time, the Texans recovered.

That's two fumbles by the same guy on one play. You can't make this stuff up.

It also encapsulated the Raiders' disastrous Sunday afternoon, where nothing went right in a 30-14 loss to the Texans at O.co Coliseum.

It was an embarrassment of the highest order, one of the worst losses of the Dennis Allen era. It was a game where most every promising drive ended in a turnover. The defense couldn't stop Texans running back Arian Foster and made quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick look far better than he is.

The Raiders fell to 0-2 after losing yet another winnable game. They struggled in front of a home crowd that won't see them again until Oct. 12, when the season may have already spiraled out of control.

This game was lost early, with the Texans tallying 17 unanswered points on their first three series, which included improbable third-down conversions to keep drives alive.

The Raiders allowed Foster to run wild. He had 138 yards and a touchdown on 28 carries and was integral to the Texans' early lead.

Hopes of keeping the game close were dashed by Jones' wacky fumble, an interception by Carr and a fumble by tight end Mychal Rivera.

Running back Darren McFadden eventually ended the shut out with a 1-yard touchdown run early in the fourth quarter. It was far too late to consider a comeback, with Houston already at 27 points.

With 13 seconds left, Derek Carr hit James Jones for a 9-yard touchdown reception to make it 30-14.

Porous run defense: The Raiders run defense has been terrible in the early going. They gave up 212 rushing yards to the New York Jets last week, and allowed Foster and the Texans to run at will.

They gave up 189 total rushing yards, and have allowed a whopping 201 yards over the first two games.

Watt scores himself: The Raiders were justifiably wary of Texans defensive end J.J. Watt. He can single-handedly take over a game on defense, something he wasn't able to do against the Raiders.

They probably didn't think he'd strike on the offensive end. He came in as a blocking tight end in a goal line situation, but ran a little out route and was wide open for a 1-yard touchdown pass from quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick.

It was his first offensive touchdown, but it wasn't Watt's first time in the end zone. He returned an interception for a touchdown in the McFadden runs hard: Darren McFadden ran well for starter Maurice Jones-Drew, who missed Sunday's game with a hand injury.

McFadden was a physical presence, often running through opponents, not around them. He didn't have many chances, but McFadden finished Sunday's game with 12 carries for 37 hard yards and a touchdown. He also had 2 receptions for 31 yards.

No pass rush on either side: The Raiders' offensive line performed well against a tough Texans defense. Carr generally had time to throw and execute the offense.

The Raiders defensive line, however, did not have a good day. They didn't create pressure on Fitzpatrick or slow the running game in any way.

Injury update: Receiver Rod Streater suffered a hip injury in the second half.

Also, linebacker Sio Moore missed most of the second half with an ankle injury. Trainers attended to him on the field and on the sideline.

Sitting it out: Middle linebacker Nick Roach missed his second straight game with lingering concussion-like symptoms. Roach hasn't been able to pass the final portion of the NFL's concussion protocol, which is necessary to be formally cleared for contact.

Miles Burris started in Roach's stead.

Roach was formally ruled inactive on Sunday after being listed as questionable on the team's injury report. Quarterback Matt McGloin, running back Maurice Jones-Drew, safety Jonathan Dowling, guard Tony Bergstrom, tackle Matt McCants and defensive end Shelby Harris were also ruled inactive.

What's next: The Raiders have a normal practice week ahead before embarking on a two-game road trip. They play at the New England Patriots and then head to the United Kingdom for a "home" game against the Miami Dolphins at Wembley Stadium in London.

Raiders embarrassed after 30-14 loss to Texans

By Josh Dubow

September 14, 2014

Two long drives right down the field to open the game.

Four turnovers, including a bizarre, two-fumble play destined to end up on a bloopers reel.

The home opener for the Oakland Raiders had an all-too-familiar feel to the frustrated fans who have waited 11 seasons for a winning team.

Derek Carr threw a pair of interceptions, James Jones and Mychal Rivera lost fumbles and the Raiders allowed Arian Foster to run free all afternoon for 138 yards in a 30-14 loss Sunday.

"Collectively we look bad," safety Charles Woodson said. "It's frustrating because everything that other people say about you, we're making them right. It's almost like you allow other people to write your story and we're not going out there and doing anything about it. That's hard man. I'm really embarrassed."

Houston star defensive end J.J. Watt caught a 1-yard touchdown pass to cap the opening drive and Foster scored on a 5-yard run on the next possession for the Texans, who are off to a 2-0 start under new coach Bill O'Brien after losing their final 14 games a year ago.

The Raiders (0-2) have lost eight straight games dating to last season and have shown no signs that an offseason overhaul has fixed the myriad of problems in Oakland.

"This is not the same old thing," Carr said. "Those guys in that locker room are so determined to get this thing right. I don't believe it's the same old thing. We're going to get it right. I promise you that."

The day was summed up by James Jones' double fumble late in the first half. Jones caught a 20-yard pass from Carr late in the first half before getting stripped by Joseph at the Houston 35. Jones picked the ball up and ran toward the end zone, but Joseph knocked the ball out again from behind and D.J. Swearinger recovered at the Texans 3.

That was one of three turnovers in scoring territory by the Raiders. Carr moved Oakland down the field with a 41-yard run early in the second quarter only to negate that good play by throwing a pass that was intercepted by Kareem Jackson that set up Randy Bullock's first of three field goals.

Mychal Rivera then fumbled a catch early in the third quarter and Joseph returned it 49 yards to set up Ryan Fitzpatrick's second TD pass of the game, a 12-yarder to DeAndre Hopkins that made it 24-0 and got the boo birds out in earnest.

"They're excited to see their Raiders and what was that that we put out there on the field today?" Woodson said. "That's embarrassing. I'm embarrassed for this team, I'm embarrassed for the fans."

Fitzpatrick finished 14 for 19 for 139 yards to beat the Raiders for the third time in as many starts with as many teams. He led last-minute comebacks for Buffalo in 2011 and Tennessee last season before enjoying an easier win this time.

The Texans easily moved the ball downfield on the opening drive with help of Foster's 40-yard run.

On second-and-goal at the 1, Watt lined up at tight end and was wide open in the end zone when two Oakland defenders covered Foster. Watt caught his first pass since his days as a tight end at Central Michigan in 2007 to give the Texans the lead.

"We've been working on that for a while," O'Brien said. "Look, you've got a guy there who is such a great athlete at 6-foot-7, 290 pounds. He's got really good hands. You should probably try to get him in there once in a while on offense."

Watt didn't do much defensively until his hit on Carr led to an interception by Brooks Reed late in the fourth quarter.

Playing against the team that drafted his big brother David first overall in 2002, Derek Carr went 27 for 42 for 263 yards with a late TD pass to Jones and two interceptions.

Foster, who has back-to-back 100-yard rushing games in his return from back surgery last season, scored on a 5-yard run on Houston's second drive to make it 14-0.

The Texans outgained the Raiders 150-3 in the first quarter and things didn't get much better after that for Oakland.

"That's a recipe for getting your butt kicked," coach Dennis Allen said. "I told the players in there just now, the only people that can change it are the people that are in that locker room, coaches and players. We've got to make a conscious decision to get this thing changed."

NOTES: Justin Tuck blocked a late field goal attempt by Bullock, ending his streak of 16 consecutive made kicks. ... Raiders LB Sio Moore (ankle) and WR Rod Streater (hip) left with injuries.

Raiders coach finds right words to inspire rebuilt roster

By Vic Tafur

August 1, 2014

By all accounts - from players, coaches, media, fans, Napa Valley Marriott employees - the Raiders have had a very nice first seven days of training camp.

The team is getting better every day, and many players are pointing to last week - and jumping off on the right foot with head coach Dennis Allen's opening speech of camp.

"Coach Allen's speech in the first team meeting gave me chills," left tackle Donald Penn said.

Neither Penn nor Allen will reveal what the coach said, but Allen says that he wanted to "create the vision for this football team." He told the players in the converted hotel conference room on July 24, the night before the team's first practice in Napa, that he had confidence in them and that they could do great things this season.

The team's itinerary for this season was laid out, according to players, for all 16 regular-season games, the playoffs and the Super Bowl. It was the first time Allen has done that in his three years as coach.

"It wasn't the rah-rah stuff," fullback Marcel Reece said. "It was real. Not fake. The stuff he was saying made us want to get on the plane and play New York the next day."

The Raiders open the season Sept. 7 at New York against the Jets, and Allen has his team believing it's the first of many big steps.

"We want to be champions," Reece said.

Of the world?

"We want to be champions," Reece said again.

"Everybody was fired up the first night," tackle Khalif Barnes said. "Dennis is on a mission just like the rest of us."

Allen wouldn't confirm that he talked about the Super Bowl - "That's for me and the team to know" - but didn't dance around it too much.

"Put the goal out there in front of them and give them something to shoot for," Allen said. "I wanted these guys to know that I have confidence in them, and I wouldn't say that if I didn't feel it. ...

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"We don't play 16 games to play 16 games," Allen said. "We play 16 games to have a right to play for a championship."

After two 4-12 seasons, Allen and general manager Reggie McKenzie think the team is on schedule in Year 3 of new management's renovation project.

"Year 3 was the year we said we need to be able to make some noise, we need to be able to go out there and compete and bring this organization back to the championship level it's been at in the past," Allen said.

Allen appears more relaxed with reporters this season. While some other players said Allen has always been passionate, they also said the dial on the volume and intensity has been turned up a little bit.

Allen doesn't necessarily agree, but did say he does "a ton" of self-evaluation after each season.

"The one thing that I have tried to do is express to the guys that we're not going to let anyone outside our building set limits on us. And they've got to have a vision and a goal, and something out there that they're shooting for.

"I just want them to understand that we've got a chance to make some noise, when no one gives us a chance."

Barnes and Penn said the team has picked up where it left off after a productive offseason program, and it got a little kick in the pants the first night to get it going again.

"One of the reasons why we're jelling so well at camp is that there is a different vibe here," Penn said. "Everybody wants it. Everybody is putting in the extra work."

"We are going to win this year, and that's a fact," safety Charles Woodson said.

DEREK CARR

ESPN THE MAGAZINE

Sins of the Brother

By Seth Wickersham

May 1, 2014

ON THE DAY his big brother's career as an NFL starter ended, Derek Carr threw the ball with David on a high school field outside of Houston. The Texans had just released the elder Carr, five years after making him the first pick in the 2002 draft. David needed to clear his head on this March afternoon, so he grabbed his youngest brother, and they went out to play catch. Derek was 15 years old and a star quarterback at Sugar Land's Clements High, and even then he burned to finish what his brother had started. He would choose to play at Fresno State, just like his brother. He would become a devout Christian and marry young, like his brother. By the end of his senior season, he would rack up similar passing numbers and begin to seduce NFL scouts with the same quick release that had sold them on his brother more than a decade earlier. In fact, teams might now consider Derek Carr the top quarterback in this year's draft, if not for one unshakable liability.

His brother.

ON ANOTHER WINDY March afternoon, seven years later, David and Derek are once again throwing the ball on a high school field. The stakes have changed. David, 34, has been out of the NFL since last August, when the Giants became the fourth team to release him. Derek, 23, is perhaps the most intriguing quarterback in the draft, often mentioned as a sleeper alternative to Johnny Manziel, Teddy Bridgewater and Blake Bortles. Derek is wearing a Fresno State hoodie and a pair of hideous silver, blue and fluorescent green and yellow cleats that he received at the combine. "I told him he has to get his entire suit for the draft that color," David says.

There are no yard lines on the field at Bakersfield Christian High in central California, where Derek spent his senior year after the family returned home following David's release. The Carr boys guesstimate 10 yards and begin to warm up. Both are tall and strong, and most of their combine numbers are indistinguishable -- David ran a 4.67 40-yard dash in 2002; Derek ran a 4.69 in February. Both have that beautiful lashing throwing motion, almost too fast to track. A lifetime of catch has synced their habits. "We're like an old married couple," David says.

A player who is a near duplicate of a former consensus No. 1 pick would ordinarily have an advantage on draft day. But GMs face a rare conundrum in this case, unsure of how to grapple with scouting reports on Derek. On one hand, his 50 touchdown passes and only eight interceptions last season suggests that he has all the tools to be a franchise quarterback; Browns coach Mike Pettine calls him the "best natural thrower in the draft." But then there are the issues: Below-average poise and toughness within the pocket; will anticipate pressure and look to protect his frame instead of sitting in and delivering the ball.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

It's a valid rap. It's also arguably a fixable one. And given Carr's talent, it seems strange that pocket-pressure worries might drop him out of the first round. The problem is that his scouting report echoes what teams said about David -- after it became clear that his career was a bust. "It's an issue," says one NFC scout. "If their makeup is the same, then there is concern."

That's why Derek is grateful that someone is entirely committed to ensuring that his NFL career will not end up like David's.

That someone is his brother.

THE ONLY FAMILY that's produced as many gifted throwers as the Carrs is the Mannings, which is fitting because the only precedent for the beating that David Carr suffered in Texas is what Archie Manning endured in New Orleans. Surrounded by expansion-draft castoffs, David absorbed 249 sacks in his first five years. He never complained, even to family. But as years of hits set in, David began to look at the rush before he looked downfield, a quarterback's death spiral. "You try to rack your brain and ask, 'Why?'" he says now when asked about his career. "It was God's plan."

By 2007, David was considered such damaged goods that the Texans had no choice but to release him. After a season in Carolina, he had two stints with the Giants, playing behind Eli Manning. The first time David met Archie, the patriarch of football royalty gave him a hug and said, "I know what you went through, man."

"I'm glad to see you're walking," David responded.

David's time in New York provided a crash course on how an elite quarterback prepares. He watched Eli take ownership of the offense as if he were a coach, working late on Mondays and Tuesdays, most players' days off. He watched how game-planning sessions unfolded under quarterbacks coach Mike Sullivan, where questions flew and debates raged. It was everything David had been missing, and he realized that not knowing how to study had stunted his growth as much as leaky offensive lines did. Had he learned early on how to prepare, he says, "it would have been beneficial not only to myself but to the guys around me. Then you take more of an ownership of the team, and you're not just another guy in the locker room. You're a coach on the field. And that makes you a better player."

By the time he learned, it was too late. David wasn't signed after the Giants released him last August. Late in the season, he received an offer to be a backup -- at the exact moment he was at the doctor's office, where he learned that his 2-year-old daughter, Grace, had juvenile diabetes. He decided to be a dad, seemingly at peace with ending his career after 11 years, 65 touchdown passes, 71 interceptions and a 23-56 record as a starter. He spent fall weekends driving 110 familiar miles from Bakersfield to Fresno and watched from the sideline as Derek set 27 school records, breaking many of his own. He stayed up late with Derek after games, breaking down film. And when he began to hear the knocks on his brother -- the reports that ranked the quarterback with "the quickest release in the draft," in the words of one scout, as merely the fifth or sixth best at his position -- it became clear that Derek was paying for David's career.

After that, Derek's draft became David's cause. Derek moved into David's house in Bakersfield. David hired Sullivan, out of work after being let go by the Bucs, to coach his brother through the process. Driven by pride and regret and love, he put Derek in a cocoon -- lifting in the morning, throwing in the afternoon, film study at night. "If I had to take some bumps so he doesn't have to," David says, "so be it."

A FEW HOURS after the brothers' throwing session, David and Sullivan -- everyone calls him Sully -- sit at a Bakersfield Chipotle, going over the plan for tomorrow's practice, the first run-through of Derek's pro day. Usually, a college strength coach runs a pro day, but David asked Sully to plan Derek's, betting that an NFL mind will ensure that no GM leaves with questions. Each weeknight, Sullivan breaks down video with Derek, often until midnight. Sully provided Derek with a four-page work sheet to complete, the same one Eli uses. The questions -- Is the corner midpoint? Which safety is more aggressive? -- are intended to teach Derek how to watch film. David's role is almost that of a parent, a provider and protector who appreciates the instruction in a way his brother can't, all while wondering what if. "I never had any of this," he says.

While his coach and brother work, Derek sits at the other end of the table, telling funny stories about coaching David's 9-year-old son, Cooper, in flag football. (Yes, Cooper is a quarterback.) As affable as his brother is hardened, Derek carries himself with an easy command reminiscent of Tom Brady and Russell Wilson, as if doubt is a foreign concept. He's been riding a wave of underground buzz that began at the Senior Bowl in Mobile, Ala.

College all-star games are usually sand traps for quarterbacks, who are forced to spend all week throwing to unfamiliar receivers. But before the Senior Bowl on Jan. 25, the Carrs hatched an idea: Practice for the practice by gathering two of the receivers in New Orleans the week prior. It was the sort of tip Derek could receive only from someone who had been through it before, and it was a natural fit with the workaholic instincts that led him to arrive for film study at 6:30 a.m. many mornings last season. Derek was sharp in Mobile, and suddenly scouts began to argue that he was the draft's top quarterback: more mature than Manziel, stronger than Bridgewater, more consistent in his delivery than Bortles. Still, that one issue continued to dog him. "The problem," one NFC exec says, "is his genetics."

Of course, Derek considers it an honor to be compared with his brother. David is one of the most famous athletes to make it out of Bakersfield, one of those dust towns that seem to be surrounded by invisible walls. Yet David's pain has always been Derek's. As a kid, Derek would cry after his brother's losses and would join him in the film room to correct mistakes. He admires the way David was always "the same person" whether he was cheered or booed. "His career was not successful in the world's eyes," Derek says. "But to the people we listen to and respect, it was the most successful thing ever."

Derek has traced his brother's path consciously, as if to prove it wasn't the problem. He graduated high school early to get a jump at Fresno State. After partying too hard as a freshman, he rededicated his life to football and faith and was named the starter as a redshirt sophomore. He soon learned that he would be measured against his brother's real and perceived failures. In camp before his junior season, Derek suffered a sports hernia and hairline fracture in his pelvic bone. The coaches told him to avoid hits at all costs. So he unloaded at the first sign of pressure, often off his back foot. Derek still racked up 37 touchdowns against just seven interceptions -- the definition of toughness that scouts claim to crave. But some teams couldn't shake that familiar, familial skittishness in the pocket. "He took some undue criticism," says Fresno State coach Tim DeRuyter. "It was painful, and he never said a word."

And he internalized it all. During informal workouts before his senior year, Derek asked teammates to hit him after he threw. He never told the coaches. A few months later, against Boise State, Derek took a shot in the face as he released. The pass was caught. "The one question they had on me?" Derek says, leaning back at Chipotle and spreading his arms wide. "I answered it."

So he hopes. Until draft day, nobody truly knows how much the specter of David will affect Derek. Scouts swear that they evaluate each prospect on his own merit, but so much of quarterback evaluation is based on gut. So far, it's clear that -- unlike, say, Eli Manning -- Derek isn't getting the benefit of the doubt. At the combine, GMs and coaches asked Derek the ways in which he's similar to his brother. "We're both tough," Derek said. "And we believe that we can throw with anyone." They asked the ways in which he's not. "He's more quiet. I'll walk into a room and get to know eight people."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

One coach asked, "What did you think of David's offensive lines in Houston?" Sensing a trap, Derek smiled. "They're all great guys."

The coach chuckled, then tried again: "I didn't think they were very good."

Derek wouldn't bite. "That's your opinion," he said, and they laughed.

ALL OF THE questions carry the same message: Prove that we won't be burned twice. It has forced Derek to walk a line between self-preservation and loyalty. He makes it clear that "I'm not trying to be David -- I'm trying to be the very best Derek Carr I can be," and he adds that he patterns his game after Peyton Manning's. But Derek has always been haunted by the question that haunts his brother: What really happened in Houston? He wanted to learn for himself. Without telling anyone, he watched video of some of David's NFL games, analyzing them as a quarterback, not a brother. He saw a career killed in the crib, a victim of historically bad circumstances. "Man, can you get him some help?" Derek says. "I can promise you it wasn't No. 8's fault."

No. 8, of course, has tried to convince everyone that he has no regrets about his career, that he could be happy to live vicariously through Derek. But not even the most bruised quarterback of his era ever fully loses the itch to play. Working with Derek the past few months -- watching his younger brother benefit from his pain -- has "rekindled a little juice," David says. He has a career's worth of wisdom and is in the best shape of his life, an ideal backup. In February, David began to believe that maybe, just maybe, he could not only redeem his career through his brother but perhaps revive it. "Being out here and training and going through this process has shown me that I want to play, absolutely," David says.

THAT LEADS BOTH brothers to a Bakersfield gym on a March morning, carrying a sort of kinetic energy: We're gonna pull this off. Their agent has casually pitched them to teams as a package deal, even offering to stage a workout for David on Derek's pro day. David passed on that, not wanting to be a distraction. But he's motivated by the hope of one last chance, and he bolts into the gym in a sleeveless tee, ready to roll. A sleepy Derek is behind him, hoodie pulled over his face.

"How do you feel?" asks Eric Mahanke, their trainer.

"Like a million bucks!" David says.

They lie on foam rollers, ironing out soreness. Framed pictures of David's college and pro games surround them. David leans over to mess with his brother, whose legs ache. "Argh, not my quads," Derek says. "If you press them, I'll cry."

A Carr workout is not for everyone. They sometimes push David's 4x4 through the parking lot. They take pride in being tough after years of being accused otherwise. The other day, they heard commentators lament Derek's lack of pocket tolerance, so Derek downloaded a few plays of his getting leveled and hitting the pass, just to remind himself. "We laughed," Derek says, even if both of them knew that it wasn't really funny.

Back at the gym, Derek and David joke about splitting reps in this afternoon's practice. "If you pull one of those vet moves -- You throw, I'm too sore -- we'll fight," Derek says.

"I'll take the reps so that I can be the starter," David says, deadly serious. Then he shakes his head and smiles. "See, Derek's not ready."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

A FEW HOURS later, they line up opposite each other on a high school field yet again. It's blustery. David brought his favorite ball, worn and molded at the laces to fit his grip. Derek has a few different footballs and doesn't care which one they use. Scouts would consider that a plus. As he throws, David looks to the sideline and smiles. "The Cobra has arrived!"

The Cobra is their father, Rodger, a fit and tan 61-year-old. He taught the boys how to throw, using Dan Marino as a template. He's running routes today, his usual role. Both of Rodger's thumbs are jacked up after years of fielding bullets. David is responsible for the left; Derek for the right. To catch, Rodger raises his forearm to absorb the blow, which earned him his nickname. The inside of his arm is black and blue. Sometimes it goes numb.

Sullivan asks the brothers to practice shuffling over bags and then firing to Rodger, about 20 yards away. David goes first. He is smooth and polished, his throws quick and hard. A season off has brought him a greater appreciation for a simple drill that he took for granted years ago, a palpable urgency. Derek is slower over the bags, but his release is higher than David's, his passes more catchable. "Nice!" Sully says to Derek. "Nice throw!"

Next is a blitz drill, in which they throw as fast as possible under duress. Nobody mentions the obvious: This is the Carr drill. David goes first again. Out here, on air, he is decisive and smooth and accurate. Derek is rougher -- "I'm heavy metal; he's jazz," he says -- but his arm is lively, too much on one throw for Rodger to catch. "Cobra!" David says, smiling. "Come on!"

Moments later they all stand at midfield, going over the plan for pro day. David is in coach mode, thinking through every worst-case scenario. Derek is not as worried, and there's an ineffable tension between David's desire to control the future and Derek's willingness to overcome the unknowable. After David mentions a concern about what to do if some of Derek's receivers are hurt on pro day, Derek says half-mockingly, "That's like going into a game and saying, 'What if everyone gets injured?'"

"You've got to be ready," David says with an edge in his voice, "because you'll get one shot."

Most legendary quarterbacks share one very specific trait: They not only collect scars, they learn from them. Derek has collected David's scars. That he seems to have accepted and grown from that inheritance is the immeasurable quality that, if years from now he is a success, scouts will lament that they missed. On the field, both brothers are swaying back and forth, itching to throw. Sullivan explains the final route of Derek's pro day, a deep corner. "And that's all she wrote," he says. "That's a full and sufficient workout." "That's how I want it," Derek says, sounding confident.

Now it's time for a run-through. The first pass is a simple slant. David steps up eagerly. Back in 2002, he threw it better than anyone. But before David can fire, he catches himself. Suddenly it seems to hit him that it would be best if he stepped aside. "I can get my throws in anytime," he says, turning away. David kneels to snap the ball to his brother, who fills the void by throwing perfect spirals into the wind.

Raiders rookie Derek Carr has faced bigger tests

By Daniel Brown

September 6, 2014

BAKERSFIELD -- Derek Carr, who Sunday will become the first rookie quarterback to start a season for the Raiders, owes so much of his football philosophy to Gotham City that he used to wear a Batman shirt underneath his jersey.

His general philosophy is to be Bruce Wayne -- boring, methodical, buttoned-up. But a few times a game, when the Bat-Signal goes up, he'll throw on his cape and try to do something super.

Carr, 23, can be that way in real life, too.

There was that night last year in the neonatal intensive care unit, when Carr's newborn son was critically ill and his wife was on the verge of a breakdown. That was definitely a cape moment.

Dallas Mason Carr was born at 3:32 p.m. on Aug. 5, 2013, to Derek and his wife, Heather. They met as students at Fresno State, and when the quarterback decided to stay for his senior season rather than enter the NFL draft, they decided to get married and start a family.

On the day Dallas arrived, they were over the moon. But in the wee hours that night, Derek called his mom from the Clovis Community Hospital in a panic. The baby kept throwing up.

"That's OK, babies do that," Sheryl Carr assured him.

"No, mom, this is different. This is green. Something is not normal."

"Call me back if he doesn't stop and go see what the doctor says."

When the phone rang again at 2 a.m., Sheryl didn't need to pick up to know the situation was dire. "I answer the phone and he's just bawling," she recalled. Sheryl and her husband, Rodger, ran out of the house, hopped in the car and headed for the hospital.

Doctors and nurses had discovered that Dallas' intestines were twisted, cutting off the baby's blood flow. Intestinal malrotation, as it is called, requires surgery -- and the baby was being whisked by ambulance from Clovis to Children's Hospital Central California in Madera. One doctor told Derek that his son might not make it.

'WHO IS THAT MAN?'

Sheryl recounted this story Thursday in the kitchen of the family home in Bakersfield. With her Rodger at her side, most of this two-hour visit was filled with rollicking tales about raising three boys, two of whom grew up to be NFL quarterbacks.

But Sheryl tells this story to explain Derek's strength and maturity. More than once, she wipes away tears.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

The first surgery didn't fix Dallas' problem, and the baby was barely into the recovery room when he was summoned back for a second operation. Sheryl was watching the scene unfold when doctors came to take the newborn away from Heather -- for the second time.

"She's in a wheelchair. She's kind of in shock. She just had a baby. And when the doctor says we have to do more surgery, she says, 'I don't understand.' She starts panicking," Sheryl said.

Her voice catches. There's a pause.

"I was getting ready to console them. You'd think that a young man who has never had a child, at that moment of critical terror, would just fall apart. You're there to catch them.

"But Derek just grabbed Heather by the arms and said, 'We're going to go talk to the doctor and we're going to do what he says. Stop crying. He's our baby and we're going to take care of him. It's going to be all right.' And off they went.

"I was like, 'Who is that man?'"

Dallas Carr would require a third surgery, one that lasted more than five hours, but the kid ultimately pulled off his first comeback. The family recently celebrated his first birthday. His weight is in the 90th percentile for his age. The only hint that anything was ever wrong is the rapidly fading scar under his belly button.

ROOKIE TESTED QUICKLY

The ordeal helps explain Carr's response this week when reporters asked him about the pressure of starting in New York. The second-round pick is the only NFL rookie passer scheduled to start in Week 1.

It's a shocking ascension for a player taken in the second round, 36th overall. He was supposed to serve an apprenticeship behind veteran Matt Schaub, who came with a $4.5 million fully guaranteed salary and a $3.5 million signing bonus that was paid in March.

But Carr wrested away the job with a strong exhibition season, including completing 11 of 13 passes for 143 yards and three touchdowns against the Seattle Seahawks in the final game.

He has given the Raiders a spark not seen since the Rich Gannon days.

But pressure? Hardly.

"Everything that we went through in our lives in my family ... whatever happens in football it's just a game," he replied. "It doesn't matter if I go out and throw three touchdowns or I go out and throw eight picks. I'm going to be the same person.

"Obviously, as a competitor, I'll be mad. But I'm going to be the same person, because football is never going to define who I am."

Here, in the family home in Bakersfield, his parents understand too well how football tries to define people. David Carr, who is 12 years older than his little brother, was the No. 1 overall pick of the 2002 draft. It did not go well.

Hindered by a questionable supporting cast, David Carr was sacked an NFL-record 76 times as a rookie with the expansion Houston Texans. He also led the NFL in getting sacked in 2004 (49) and 2005 (68).

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"The hardest part was after the games. We'd go to his house," Rodger Carr, 62, said. "It looked like he just went through 15 rounds with Mike Tyson. I could see it. He was just beat up. I remember near the end, he said, 'Dad, I don't know if I can do this anymore.' "

David Carr played in the NFL through 2012 but never started after 2007. He finished his career with 65 touchdown passes against 71 interceptions.

In 94 career games, he was sacked 267 times. By comparison, Peyton Manning has been sacked just three more times -- but has played in 240 career games.

A talent evaluator recently told ESPN the Magazine that David Carr's struggles were so deep that they hurt his brother's draft stock by association. "It's an issue," the NFC scout told the magazine. "If their makeup is the same, then there is concern."

A PERFECT MENTOR

The Carrs see it the other way: David's pain will be Derek's gain. The eldest boy is teaching his brother how to avoid his mistakes -- as well as how to train, how to practice, how to lead, how to think. It took until late in his career, but David Carr eventually saw what a winning team was supposed look like. He served as Eli Manning's backup for the Super Bowl XLVI champion New York Giants.

These lessons are now Derek Carr's hand-me-downs.

"Derek may be 23, but he has Dave's 34-year-old brain in his head," Rodger Carr said. "I always say that David only had me to a certain point. The reason Derek is so far ahead is that he had his older brother. It's made a big difference."

Because the mentorship began early, the stories of Derek Carr's childhood sound far more Batman than Bruce Wayne.

Nate Thiessen, the assistant head coach during Carr's time at Bakersfield Christian High, tells one from Carr's first practice at the school. The family had just moved back to Bakersfield from Houston, and Carr was a senior looking to make an impression.

Thiessen was filling in for the vacationing head coach that day when Carr approached him with a proposal. "He's standing on the 45-yard line and he says, 'I'm going to throw five balls. If three of them hit the crossbar, you let me out of sprints tomorrow,' " Thiessen recalled.

The bet was on. But Carr needed only the first three throws -- boom, boom, boom! They all hit the crossbar. Later that day, the head coach called from his Hawaii vacation wondering how that new quarterback from Houston looked. "Is he the real deal?" the coach asked.

"If you just saw what I saw," Thiessen told him, "you'd know we're going to be fine."

The punch line came the next day. Carr ran every sprint anyway. He led the team in 100-yard gassers under the sweltering summer sun.

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Derek Carr earns Week 1 start, Oakland hopes he's here to stay

By Vic Tafur

September 3, 2014

It was a few weeks ago, way back when Matt Schaub was the no-doubt starting quarterback of the Raiders. Head coach Dennis Allen was asked, for what seemed like the 29th time, if he was sure about that.

Allen sighed. "I seem to get that question a lot," he said.

Well, he has to forgive reporters and fans for questioning him about Schaub. After all, general manager Reggie McKenzie and Allen went through three starting quarterbacks last season. And a different one the year before that.

All told, the Raiders have had 17 starting quarterbacks since Rich Gannon led the team to the Super Bowl after the 2002 season.

"Yeah, that's a big number," Gannon said. "Hopefully, they found one this year. It looks good."

He wasn't talking about Schaub.

Second-round pick Derek Carr has stolen the starting quarterback spot after a three-touchdown performance in the preseason finale Thursday. Schaub had opened the door by being ineffective the first three games, and then the coaching staff sidelined him with an elbow injury for the last game.

Yes, the same elbow injury that Matt Flynn - No. 16 of 17 on the list - had just before he lost the starting job last preseason.

Former Raiders head coach John Madden understands the excitement over Carr, just maybe not the rush to throw him into the fire.

"The Raiders haven't had a legitimate good starting quarterback in a long time," Madden said on his KCBS radio show. "Derek Carr looks like he is one. Now, it's too early to say that ... and if you think he is one, then you are looking at a block of 10 years, that he can be the Raiders' starting quarterback for 10 years.

"So ... one week or two weeks really doesn't mean a thing right now. It's the overall development. There have been a lot of quarterbacks that have been ruined by playing too early. And then there are quarterbacks like Peyton Manning that they threw in there, took his lumps and became one of the best ever."

Confidence not the issue

The Raiders traded a sixth-round pick for Schaub long before they knew Carr would be available in the second round of the draft. The former Pro Bowler's days with the Texans were numbered once he set an NFL record by having an interception returned for a touchdown in four straight games.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

But the Raiders, without using the word stopgap, said they were confident Schaub could regain the form he employed to put together five straight seasons with a passer rating above 90. They re-worked his contract, though, committing to him financially ($8 million) for only one season.

Then, the word "confidence" kept coming up. Former teammate Antonio Smith - now a starting defensive tackle on the Raiders - said that Schaub had it back. Schaub said he never lost it.

"You can't make it anywhere in this game without having confidence through the roof," Schaub said. "You're going to go through ups and downs as a player. It's how you bounce back from it."

The Raiders hoped he would. Schaub was the best player available, in the Raiders' minds, before the draft - and an upgrade over last year's starters, Terrelle Pryor (since traded) and Matt McGloin.

"We're not naive enough to think that switching teams is like flipping a switch, and he will go back to the quarterback that he was," offensive coordinator Greg Olson said in June. "But he has skills and he has some shelf life, and some determination."

"We think he is going to be a great quarterback for us."

Allen went so far as to say that Schaub was still a top-10 quarterback in the NFL.

Then the preseason started, and some warning signals from training camp got a little brighter. And they started flashing.

Whether it was a lack of arm strength, a sore elbow, or maybe an old foot injury that was preventing him from pushing off, Schaub's fastball had lost something. And it wasn't a great fastball to begin with.

Though there are plenty of quarterbacks who thrive with finesse, like Manning, NFL quarterbacks still need to get their passes on out patterns to the sideline with some zip. If not, pick-six.

This preseason, on passes of 10 or more yards downfield, Schaub was 2-for-13 for 56 yards and no touchdowns, according to Pro Football Focus. Carr, meanwhile, was 11-for-18 for 234 yards and three touchdowns. McGloin completed 21 of 40 for 364 yards and three TDs.

Grew up watching film

Schaub replaced David Carr as the Texans' quarterback, and now Carr's little brother is replacing Schaub in Oakland. Derek Carr, age 11, was on the stage the day Houston made David the No. 1 overall pick, and he grew up watching more NFL game film than cartoons.

He thrived at Fresno State, in a shotgun offense, but the Raiders loved his arm and his smarts, and grabbed him early in the second round. This after they had a chance to trade up and draft either Johnny Manziel or Teddy Bridgewater late in the first round.

Even as a second-round pick, Carr was the fourth-highest drafted quarterback by the Raiders since the 1970 merger. The other three? Marc Wilson (No. 15) in 1980, Todd Marinovich (No. 24) in 1991 and JaMarcus Russell (No. 1) in 2007.

The Raiders didn't look up the history. And they didn't expect, or even want, Carr to be a starter so soon, but here he is.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"Honestly, that is something for coach Allen to talk about," Carr said before he was given the Week 1 start against the Jets. "My job from Day 1, and what he said was, come in, compete and help this team win. That's what I'm doing. No matter if I'm in the fourth preseason game or on the bench, it doesn't matter, I'm just going to help us win."

Olson and quarterbacks coach John DeFilippo worked with Carr on his footwork, widening his base when he throws, in the offseason. Carr has looked good in the pocket, completing 11 of 13 passes for 143 yards and the three TDs against the Seahawks.

Carr is not one to give himself a pat on the back.

"I wanted to come out and just get better," he said. "It sounds, like, so cliché, but the more you know me, the more you'll know that's true ...

"There were some throws I missed in practice. I sailed one to Marcel (Reece), hit Charles Woodson right in the chest in practice, so I wanted to come out in the game and correct those things. To be completely honest with you, that's the kind of stuff that goes through my head. I don't want to hit Charles in the face, you know? I want to hit Marcel."

Center Stefen Wisniewski told Carr after the last preseason game that he was "less rookie" that day.

"That was good," Carr said. "I was less rookie and as long as we can continue to get less rookie, we'll be good."

Less rookie and, fans hope, less 21st century (so far) Raiders quarterback.

Raiders rookie Carr has high expectations for himself

By Vic Tafur

September 6, 2014

Mike Sullivan, the former NFL offensive coordinator, popped in the NFL game film to show Derek Carr something. It was back in March, when Derek's older brother, former No. 1 overall pick David Carr, had hired Sullivan to help prepare his brother for the NFL draft.

"I was showing him an interception, what the quarterback had done wrong, and he noticed that the quarterback didn't get involved in the pursuit of the player," Sullivan said. "Derek starts yelling, 'You gotta get that guy! Make him pay!' "

Sullivan said Derek Carr has a "real fighter's mentality, more like a mixed martial arts fighter than a quarterback," and is looking forward to seeing the rookie make his first start for the Raiders against the Jets on Sunday.

"I tell him to scale it back, but he'll probably head-butt a lineman or something on Sunday," Sullivan said. "He's almost too intense at times, but who doesn't want a vocal, intense, smart leader at quarterback?"

One who can throw. Like his brother, Derek Carr has the great arm and the quick release. But he's wired a little differently, probably because he watched all of the 249 sacks that his brother endured in five seasons with the Houston Texans. And he heard all the criticism as David Carr was proclaimed a bust.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

It's one of the reasons that the Raiders are not as worried about starting a rookie quarterback on the road as they probably should be.

"He's been around the game a long time," Oakland offensive coordinator Greg Olson said. "He's had the experience of watching his brother and even watching some of the adversity that his brother went through. I just think he's a mature kid, and I think he'll be fine."

Big brother

Sullivan coached David Carr in 2011, when he was the quarterbacks coach of the New York Giants and Carr was backing up Eli Manning.

He says that stylistically, David is more jazz to Derek's heavy metal.

Sullivan said he could tell that David thought he had not gotten the level of film analysis and game-planning in Houston that he was receiving in New York, and that it was probably too late for him. So he poured that knowledge into his brother.

Derek had already grown up watching NFL game film with his brother, but he cranked it up. Then David hired Sullivan to be Derek's quarterback coach after the younger sibling finished playing at Fresno State.

"Our first day, they were both throwing, and David looked tremendous," Sullivan said. "It was all the time he spent working out with and coaching his brother. ... It's been such a great resource for Derek, and why he's always been ahead of the curve.

"He was ahead of the curve going into the draft, and he was ahead of the curve going into an NFL training camp. It's why I wasn't really surprised that he won the starting job."

Derek quickly called David when he heard that he had beaten out Matt Schaub for the starting job.

"He was fired up," Derek Carr said. "He was excited for me. The whole family was excited, obviously, but at the same time it's just football. It was an excitement, 'Hey, congrats,' and then we went about our lives. In our family, football is not everything."

Bigger concerns

Derek and his wife, Heather, have a son, Dallas, who recently celebrated his first birthday. He is fine now, and won't know until his parents tell him some day that he almost didn't make it the night he was born.

Dallas' intestines were twisted when he was born, cutting off blood flow. He needed three surgeries to repair the intestinal malrotation but is healthy now.

"Everything that we went through in our lives in my family ... whatever happens in football, it's just a game," Derek Carr. "It doesn't matter if I go out and throw three touchdowns or I go out and throw eight picks. I'm going to be the same person.

"Obviously, as a competitor, I'll be mad. But I'm going to be the same person, because football is never going to define who I am."

Dallas smiles a lot, seemingly just as happy in life as his dad is to be playing quarterback for a living.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"That kid in you, when you're finally a starting quarterback, one of 32 people in the world doing this job, it's really cool," Carr said. "Don't get me wrong about me saying it's just football. I love what I do, and that's why I am so passionate."

Big letdown

Derek was disappointed that he didn't get selected in the first round, but he grew up a Raiders fan in Bakersfield.

"Every college kid wants to go in the first round growing up, but some people didn't see it that way," he said. "I'm glad they didn't because I ended up in a great spot, the exact spot that I wanted to be."

He was brought in to be Oakland's quarterback of the future, with Schaub manning the controls of an experienced team this season. But Schaub didn't play well, Carr did ... and the future arrived early.

In the preseason Carr had a 67 percent completion percentage with four touchdown passes, including a very pretty back-shoulder toss to Denarius Moore in a three-TD game against Seattle. Schaub completed only 51 percent of his pass attempts and did not throw for a touchdown.

"I like Derek Carr a lot," NFL Films producer and quarterback savant Greg Cosell said. "I think he is greatly improved in the preseason. The things I thought he needed improvement in, I saw, which tells me he is being coached well and is receptive to it."

Olson and quarterbacks coach John DeFilippo spent a lot of time on his footwork, widening Carr's throwing base and getting rid of a hitch. Sullivan texted Carr after the Seattle game to tell him how good he looked stepping up and sliding over in the pocket.

Big arm, too

The arm is still getting rave reviews.

"The quickness of his delivery, at times, reminded me of Aaron Rodgers," Cosell said. "I was an idiot when I first said that. Then James Jones said it last week. ... The back-shoulder throw in the Seattle game was about as good as it gets."

Carr was the fourth quarterback taken in the draft, but the only one starting this week. And he's the first Raiders rookie to ever start the opener at quarterback.

And he is the first Fresno State quarterback to start Week 1 in his rookie season since David started for the Texans in 2002. David completed only 53 percent of his passes that season, being intercepted 15 times and being sacked an NFL-record 76 times.

But that was then, and this Carr is new and improved.

"I called my brother because he's played the Jets seven times," Derek Carr said. "So we talked. I picked his brain, took notes ... picked Schaub's brain, picked the coaches' brains."

"I expect a lot."

Carr: Ending up a Raider worth long wait

By Scott Bair

May 9, 2014

The Raiders called to tell quarterback Derek Carr they'd drafted him No. 36 overall. The conversation didn't last long.

"I just said, I appreciate you calling, you know what you're getting," Carr said Friday on a conference call shortly after being drafted. "I'm going to come in and work, I'm going to come in and compete and I'm going to try and make the team better. I'm not a selfish guy, that's for sure, and I can't wait to get coached by those coaches."

The Raiders certainly know Carr well. They met with him at the Senior Bowl. They sent a fleet of powerful people to his pro day at Fresno State.

They watched Carr play. They knew well how he went about his business. They liked what they saw. "Love" might be the more operative word.

Sources indicated that Carr was the top quarterback on the Raiders draft board, and jumped at the chance to select him early in the second round.

It was far lower than most expected. Many thought Carr would go in the first round, no later than the mid-20s. But the fall of all quarterbacks impacted his draft status, with Johnny Manziel going No. 22 overall and Teddy Bridgewater went No. 32.

That makes for a long wait, especially when cameras kept cutting back to his Bakersfield home.

While it took longer than expected, Carr was happy with the outcome.

"You just sit there and wait for your phone to ring. It's weird," Carr said. "You sit there, you hope it rings with every pick that goes by. But I have to be honest, the way it worked out, the place I'm going and the coaches and players I'll be around, I couldn't be happier."

Carr felt that way despite the fact he may spend a season or two sitting behind veteran Matt Schaub. Carr is ready for anything, and emphasized that it won't impact his work ethic one bit.

"With them selecting me, I know their thoughts," Carr said. "They want me to come in, work hard, compete. Whenever I'm the quarterback, great. To me, it doesn't matter what the situation is – if I'm a starter, if I'm a backup, there to learn. My No. 1 goal is to help the Raiders win, and I'm going to do that. If I'm the starter, obviously on the field, I'm going to do my best to help them win. If I'm the backup, my role, it doesn't change. I'm still going to help the team win."

Raiders envision bright future with Derek Carr

By Phil Barber

May 11, 2014

When they took linebacker Khalil Mack with the fourth pick in the 2014 NFL draft, the Raiders explained that this league is all about affecting the quarterback. The team took the principle one step further on Friday, selecting Fresno State quarterback Derek Carr early in the second round.

One round later, they got their future franchise quarterback a little protection and drafted massive guard, Gabe Jackson of Mississippi State.

The Raiders were said to be interested in Carr for weeks. That sort of rumor rarely translates into draft-day action, but general manager Reggie McKenzie pounced on Carr when he was still available with the 36th pick. He was the fourth quarterback taken in the draft, after Central Florida's Blake Bortles, Texas A&M's Johnny Manziel and Louisville's Teddy Bridgewater.

"I think we were pretty excited," said director of player personnel Joey Clinkscales, standing in for McKenzie. "At the point in time of the draft, Derek was the highest-rated guy on the board. We were pretty comfortable at that pick taking him."

Clinkscales said the Raiders fielded several calls from teams who wanted the pick, and entertained the thought of moving down in the second round, though they never considered moving up.

Asked whether the team envisions Carr as its quarterback of the future, he said: "We took him in the second round. We would like to think so."

The only passers taken higher by the Raiders since the 1970 merger were Marc Wilson (No. 15 in 1980), Todd Marinovich (No. 24 in 1991) and JaMarcus Russell (No. 1 in 2007). And yes, you are forgiven if that list causes you to either tremble or double over in laughter.

Carr, who lives in Bakersfield (where he spent his senior year of high school), is practically an NFL lifer. He joined his older brother on stage at Radio City Music Hall at the age of 11 when the Houston Texans made David the first pick in franchise history in 2002, and was studying film with his sibling at 12. What's more, his uncle Lon Boyett was briefly with the Raiders in the late 1970s.

Derek followed David to Fresno State, and thrived. As a senior, he became the fourth quarterback in Division I history to throw for more than 5,000 yards and 50 touchdowns in a season, at one point attempting 305 consecutive passes without an interception. Carr finished eighth in Heisman Trophy voting.

Scouts loved his arm and his attitude, but questioned the system in which he played. The Bulldogs' offense ran almost exclusively from a shotgun formation, and Carr survived on short throws off one-step drops.

He helped dispel a lot of the suspicion with a strong performance at the Senior Bowl in late January. The consensus said he outplayed every quarterback at the event, which including Eastern Illinois' Jimmy Garoppolo and San Jose State's David Fales.

The Texans traded for Matt Schaub in 2007 to replace David Carr, who never developed into the franchise quarterback they were looking for. Now comes the possibility that the Raiders will groom Derek Carr to take over for Schaub, the expected 2014 starter whom they traded for in March.

Many Raiders fans, dubious of Schaub's ability to turn around a career that went off the rails last season, will be rooting for Derek Carr to assume the starting job right away. That's not the plan.

"He's a young quarterback," Clinkscales said of Carr. "We aren't expecting him to walk in the door and be the starter. We have a starter."

Carr sounded fine with that.

"If I'm the backup, my role, it doesn't change," he said. "I'm still gonna help the team win. How can I help Schaub during the game? ... Can I watch the safety? Can I watch the corners? Can I tell him when they were in this front, when they played this coverage, when we were in this formation they ran this coverage, brought this blitz on this down and distance? What can I do to help? All I'm here to do in Oakland is help that team win."

Jackson, who started 52 games at left guard at Mississippi State, is billed as a powerful and nimble-footed interior lineman who worked hard but occasionally lost focus in games. He joins a replenished pool of offensive linemen that includes free-agent signees Kevin Boothe, Donald Penn and Austin Howard.

The Raiders traded down in the third-round, snagged Jackson at No. 81 and gained a fourth rounder from Miami, No. 116. They have plenty of needs to address today. All in all, though, these guys seem to love how the draft is playing out.

"The Raiders need a little luck like everyone else," Clinkscales said. "We're excited about that."

TJ CARRIE

Raiders rookie TJ Carrie making good impression

By Vic Tafur

August 10, 2014

The first preseason game is a bigger deal than most people realize. It's the first time rookies put on their official jersey and take an NFL field.

Raiders cornerback TJ Carrie actually tried on his jersey a couple of times before he went to the game at Minnesota's TCF Bank Stadium on Friday night.

And then ... when warming up before the game he would ...

"I kept going back to the mirror to see how I looked," Carrie said. "And feel that experience again. Then I would leave and ... 'Man, I gotta check it again' ... 'Oh, we're taking the field, let me check it one more time.'

"It was an awesome experience, and I enjoyed it."

The Antioch native has definitely looked the part of an NFL player. The seventh-round draft pick has jumped to fourth on the Raiders' depth chart at cornerback, is one of the team's three punt-return candidates and he could be a gunner on punt coverage.

He had four tackles against the Vikings, and head coach Dennis Allen said that Carrie played well.

Carrie (6-foot, 204 pounds) had an injury-marred career at Ohio University, and Oakland general manager Reggie McKenzie said that's the reason Carrie was still on the board in the seventh round.

Carrie caught Allen's eye right away this summer with his penchant for being around the ball and making plays. Allen compared him to an undrafted player, Chris Harris, whom Allen had when he was the Broncos' defensive coordinator three years ago.

Harris made the 2011 All-Rookie team and has 27 starts and six interceptions the past two seasons.

"Nobody really knew anything about (Harris), and then every day you watch him practice and every day he's making a play that kind of catches your eye," Allen said. "We thought TJ had some ability, but I think he's more mature than maybe I would have known from a rookie DB coming in from Ohio.

"I've been very impressed with his knowledge of the game."

Carrie has had some help, as he knew teammates Taiwan Jones and Maurice Jones-Drew from growing up in Antioch and playing at De La Salle High. Jones-Drew has shown him how to take notes in meetings and helped him become a pro quickly.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"In order to be a pro, you have to come in and get acclimated to the system pretty fast, and that's from the mental, the physical part of it, and really understanding all the aspects and keys of the game," Carrie said. "So the adjustment is based on how you approach the situation, and I think I definitely have tried to approach it in a pro manner."

Carrie is looking forward to the team's trip to Oxnard (Ventura County) for practices against the Dallas Cowboys on Tuesday and Wednesday. And he will tell himself the same thing he told himself Friday, between peeks at the mirror.

"Remain calm, remain confident in the ability that I put on the field in the offseason workouts, minicamp and training camp," he said.

SHELBY HARRIS

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Former waiter Shelby Harris hungers to play

By Vic Tafur

August 2, 2014

Shelby Harris is obviously not your average rookie, having waited tables during what would have been his senior season after being kicked off the Illinois State football team.

It's the defensive end's turn to eat, and he has shown up to Raiders training camp hungry. The seventh-round pick has quickly made an impression as he looks to lock up a backup pass-rushing role.

"He had something taken away from him, and you can tell he doesn't want football to be taken away from him again," defensive coordinator Jason Tarver said. "The other rookies don't know that feeling, so you can see why it's different for Shelby.

"He is in the moment and taking advantage of his reps."

Harris had a sack when he got some first-team reps Friday, when Justin Tuck took the day off with a minor groin injury.

"It's a blessing to play in the NFL after not playing last year," Harris said. "I couldn't ask for anything better. ... It was exciting to get first-team reps, but it's business. I just put my head down and play football."

Harris was an all-Missouri Valley Conference selection in 2012, with seven sacks and 16 tackles for losses, but he was suspended for an unspecified violation of team rules and then dismissed from the team by head coach Brock Spack.

This after he was suspended at Wisconsin and forced to transfer.

Harris, who won't go into what he calls his mistakes, admitted that he lost hope briefly after being kicked off the Illinois State team but said his support system propped him up.

"Your family and friends keep you up, and they don't let it take you down too far," Harris said. "Honestly, it's made me into the person I am today. It's humbled me down and my head is on straight. ...

"I love being on the field and I will do anything to stay on the field. I refuse to let this be taken away from me again."

The 6-foot-2 Harris has dropped 12 pounds since the start of the offseason program, down to 273. He was at 285 for the draft because he didn't know if teams wanted to use him as a tackle or an end.

Harris is seen strictly as a pass-rushing end with the Raiders.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"I've seen a lot of improvement out of him," head coach Dennis Allen said. "He's a guy that we thought had some explosion and some pass-rush ability, so he's quietly begun moving himself up the depth chart."

Shelby Harris completes journey by making Raiders

By Josh Dubow

September 4, 2014

ALAMEDA, Calif. (AP) — Shelby Harris had no idea what his football future would hold when he was suspended for his final college season at Illinois State.

After spending part of his time off waiting tables in an Italian restaurant, Harris was able to get into good enough shape to persuade the Oakland Raiders to draft him in the seventh round.

Harris then showed enough in training camp and the exhibition games to earn a spot on Oakland's 53-man roster as a backup defensive lineman. Instead of viewing that comeback as an impressive feat, Harris said it is only the beginning.

"I knew the whole time I could make this roster," Harris said. "It was just a matter of going out there and showing them. It's a big step but the journey is not over. You made the roster but now what will you do? Are you complacent making the roster or are you trying to make a move up the roster and be able to play and make plays?"

Harris made a strong early impression in his start to his NFL career with one sack and eight quarterback hurries in limited time in the exhibition season. He has had ups and downs that would be expected after going more than 20 months without playing a game.

Harris was suspended for his final year of college at Illinois State for an undisclosed violation of team rules and kicked off the team. He previously had been suspended at Wisconsin and forced to transfer.

Harris does not want to talk about what led to his dismissal but says he was humbled by it and got an even deeper appreciation of playing football from his time away.

"Just watching all my friends and my teammates going out to practice every day, going out during the games, missing teammate camaraderie. It hurts," he said. "It hurts just because that's what you live for. When you play sports you live for being on the team, that teammate camaraderie."

The Raiders were willing to overlook Harris' transgressions to draft him in the seventh round in May because they believed in him as a person and player.

Harris had 14 sacks in three seasons at Illinois State and was an all-Missouri Valley Conference selection in 2012. But he was suspended from the team in March 2013.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

He spent his year away from football working out and playing basketball to stay in shape. He also got a job as a waiter before leaving to train for the draft in Indianapolis.

"I still feel like I'm not 100 percent back but I'm making strides every day," he said. "Just being able to be out here and perfect my craft every day. Every day it takes coming out here and working on it. I don't know when I'll be back and I don't know when I'll go past where I was but all I know is slowly I'm getting there."

The Raiders like what they have seen so far, even though Harris has shown some inconsistencies.

"I like Shelby and when he sets his mind and goes," defensive coordinator Jason Tarver said. "He's very smart, so sometimes he thinks too much. ... We line him up inside and outside and he can handle it mentally, but he just needs to go fast. But I do like where Shelby's progressing. As long as he works one play at a time, he's got a chance."

Harris' transition to the NFL has been helped by the presence of veterans like Justin Tuck, LaMarr Woodley, Antonio Smith and Pat Sims on the defensive line.

Harris said working with accomplished players like that was the best part about being drafted by Oakland and has helped ease his way back into football. He is confident he can contribute in the NFL and is excited about the chance to show it to everyone else.

"I can definitely play at this level," he said. "There's no doubt about it in my head. I can go out there and be an impact wherever I'm needed. I have the confidence to play in this league and I have the skill to play in this league. Now it's just to show everyone else that I have the skill to be able to play every day."

SEBASTIAN JANIKOWSKI

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders kicker Sebastian Janikowski works to improve

By Scott Ostler

July 20, 2014

The Raiders might be an improved team in 2014 - they're certainly due for an uptick - but it seems unlikely that they will blow out a lot of opponents.

So as training camp looms, forget about the quarterback situation, forget about all the new players. How's Seabass doing?

Well, kicker Sebastian Janikowski looks good and he says he's ready to rip. I caught up with him at Lake Tahoe, where he was playing in the American Century Championship.

His golf game could use some polish (it's already got plenty of Polish). Janikowski finished 47th in the field of 86 actors, athletes and assorted famous folk.

Because he's a big, powerful man who kicks footballs a mile, people expect Janikowski to hit golf balls straight and long.

"Yeah, that's not going to happen," said the man who has kicked a 63-yard field goal and once attempted a 76-yarder. Janikowski doesn't even use a driver. On the long holes he hits a three-hybrid, whatever that is.

Fortunately for the Raiders, Janikowski is still more serious about his kicking than he is about his golf. He said he normally stays home in Florida until it's time for training camp, but this year he came West two months early to work with long snapper John Condo and holder (and punter) Marquette King.

When Janikowski's effectiveness fell off dramatically last season, head coach Dennis Allen kept saying it was an 11-man problem. Yeah, not really.

It was more like a Janikowski and King problem. After 13 seasons of kicking out of the hold of his good pal Shane Lechler, who went to Houston as a free agent, Janikowski was breaking in a rookie holder.

When Janikowski missed two field-goal tries in a four-point loss to Tennessee, he indicated to sideline reporter Lincoln Kennedy that King's hold was the problem.

It was a momentary lapse by Janikowski, normally not a finger pointer. After that, he took great pains to accept blame for his low percentage (70, down from 91.2 the previous season) and all those misses (nine, up from three in '12).

"I'm not finishing," Janikowski would say. Or, "I just pushed it," or, "I'm too wide" with his step.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

There's no question that the three-man team had some rough moments, and Janikowski's offseason work with Condo and King is an indication that they know what we know.

"With Shane, we knew each other so well, that's a trust issue right there," Janikowski said. "He knew if I'm pushing the ball, he would tilt the ball in the different direction. So now I'm working with Marquette, and it's improving a lot."

It has to. The Raiders can't afford another 21-for-30 season from their kicker. Not acceptable, especially for the highest-paid leg in the game, and someone who has done this for 14 seasons.

Advanced age has been ruled out as a factor in last year's slump. Janikowski is 36, but says he compensates by working harder, doing more running and stretching, more work on weights on the stationary bike, and lots and lots of kicking.

"I don't think I've lost any distance," he said. "The power has always been there. My final step is so powerful, I've always had the power, since high school. ... I feel that I'm as strong as I was eight, 10 years ago."

He said he's also more stable, as in more mature. As a young player, Janikowski had a few scrapes with the authorities, was known to party a bit. Now, he's a team leader. Said he tries to lead by example, doing his work, getting to meetings early. It wasn't always that way.

"It's like (I'm telling younger teammates), 'Don't make the same mistakes I did,' " he said, "because obviously everybody knows, I made some mistakes."

He said when he was a young player, then-quarterback Rich Gannon pulled him aside and let him know he was falling short of Gannon's only acceptable level: perfection.

What was Gannon's exact message?

"We agreed to keep it private," Janikowski said with a smile. "It wasn't nice."

Janikowski is married; he and his wife have twin girls, 22 months old. That cuts into your golf time.

"But in my life, they cut in in a good way," he said. "I needed that. ... I've changed over the years. I'm more stable, fatherhood, work and stuff like that. Everybody goes through a process. You learn from it. What can I say?"

Janikowski said he appreciates his job more than he ever did, and sees no reason he can't kick effectively for another decade or more.

But to get that far, he'll have to get to get through this season. A big test, right?

"Every year is a test."

JAMES JONES

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP (OAKLAND TRIBUNE, CC TIMES, SJ MERCURY NEWS)

Raiders' James Jones: Once-homeless receiver returns home to give back

By Daniel Brown

August 8, 2014

SAN JOSE -- Judy Vargas was among the first defenders to cover James Jones. It did not go well.

The longtime worker at a San Jose homeless shelter used to chase the future NFL receiver around the corridors when play time was over. "That was me," Jones said, "always trying to run the other way when someone said, 'Come here.' She was one of the main people I was running from."

Vargas has it easier these days. Jones is back at the shelter, having made it clear he's never going away.

Jones signed a three-year, $11.3 million contract with the Raiders during the offseason. And though he'd always kept a connection to this shelter and to others who helped him escape the poverty of his youth, he had done so from afar. The former San Jose State star spent the first seven seasons of his NFL career with the Green Bay Packers.

The Raiders, of course, signed him not for his giving but for his receiving. Jones is coming off career highs in catches (59) and yards (817), despite playing through nagging injuries last season. A year before that, he led the NFL with 14 touchdown catches.

Jones, 30, has spent training camp in Napa angling for a spot on a depth chart that also includes Rod Streater, Andre Holmes, Greg Little and Denarius Moore.

On the night before camp opened, shortly after 5 p.m. on a Tuesday evening in July, the San Jose native went home -- or at least as close as he could get. The San Jose Family Homeless Shelter, where Jones and his mother, Janet, once spent several months has relocated down the road to here, on North King Road.

In anticipation of Jones' arrival, the cafeteria is speckled with residents wearing Raiders gear. Jones and his family, including his mother, spend the evening dishing out chicken, ribs, baked beans, cornbread, macaroni and cheese, salad and banana pudding catered by Famous Dave's Bar-B-Que. Jones wears plastic gloves and an apron to shield himself from the sauce.

People come back for seconds, which is the highlight of Jones' night. One of the things he remembers most about being homeless is that the food could be lousy.

"I've been in their shoes, where a lot of the meals daily are not that good. A lot of the meals still leave you hungry," he said. "(Tonight) you see the little kids coming back for seconds with a smile on their faces. One kid came up and said, 'This is real cornbread. The cornbread is so good.' That's why we come."

Vargas, in her 19th year on the staff, dines at a corner table. She is asked what it means to have Jones back, this time as an honorary co-worker. "I think he means inspiration," she said. "I think he means success. I think he means that if he can do it, then it's up them to succeed also."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Vargas' eyes scan the room.

"This can be just a pit stop," she said.

A few weeks earlier, Jones had given the residents food for thought. He gave a talk about his own life story, and how he had changed the plot line. Jones pulled himself up from his bootstraps and eventually strapped on cleats at the Super Bowl.

"He believes in hand up, not a handout," said his wife, Tamika, who met Jones while they were both students at San Jose State. "So anybody who can help them get on their feet, that's what he's interested in. It's not a sad time. It's a joyous time. It's a time to say, 'I know you're here, but this isn't the end.'"

Jones lived in and out of shelters from ages 8 to 14. His father, also named James, wasn't in the picture at that time. His mother, Janet, took James and his sister Desiree to a friend or relative's place on some nights and cheap hotels on others. When there was no money left, they went to homeless shelters like this one.

Jones wound up going to seven elementary schools. Packing never took long. His only two prized possessions were a backpack and a basketball.

"The worst part about being homeless is not knowing what your next step is, not knowing where you're going to lay your head next," he said, shortly after serving up the last plate of the night. "You only get a certain amount of time you can stay here. And once those three months are up, that's the scary time. Because now where are you going to go?"

Jones' life stabilized when he reached high school. He was 15 when he decided he could leave his mother's side and went to live with his paternal grandmother, Bernice Calhoun, who ran a strict home. Janet Jones, who had struggled to hold down employment, found a job and an apartment and came to all of James' games.

Jones thrived at Gunderson High, averaging 18.2 points on the basketball court, jumping 6 feet, 8 inches in the high jump during track season and starring as a quarterback, receiver and safety on the football team.

When he got to San Jose State, he and Tamika found each other through mutual friends. But it took many years before his future wife fully understood about his life to that point.

"Believe it or not, no. A lot of his friends from high school, and even in middle school, never knew he was homeless," Tamika said. "If somebody wanted to go to his house to play. He would just say, 'Oh, no. Not today. My mom said I can't have company.'"

Tamika found out many of the gritty details only after the Packers selected Jones in the third round of the 2007 draft. News stories detailed his odyssey of homelessness, and with each one Jones slowly felt more comfortable about opening up.

These days, Jones wants everyone to know his tale, especially those who are in his shoes. He started his own foundation, Love Jones 4 Kids, and became so active in the Green Bay charity scene that "I think the whole community cried when he left," said Mary Deckert, a board member of the Freedom House Family Live Advancement Center in Green Bay.

"Not just because he was a good football player, even if the was that, too, but just because he was a great guy. He was always humbled and never forgot where he came from."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Deckert recalled how Jones would help with annual community service announcements, pitch in with fundraising and stop by in person. He said that more than once he made friendships with the residents that continued long after he left.

"For him to come to the shelter and look somebody in the eye, somebody who feels totally worthless because they can't take care of their family, and say, 'You can turn this around' -- that means something to them," Deckert said. "If I say that, they just say, 'Yeah, yeah, yeah.'"

"What he does, it's priceless. You can't quantify the value of that to somebody in need."

Jones said he is continuing his connection to his Green Bay charities, even from his new East Bay address. He doesn't want to leave them in the lurch. But he concedes that it's extra special to be doing his charity work from the Bay Area.

"It's changed because I'm really giving back to my town, to my people," he said.

Desiree Lopez, who fled domestic violence to live in the shelter, was among those enjoying the Jones dinner. Lopez and her 9-month-old son were both wearing Raiders gear. "For someone like that to do something like this is just amazing to me," she said. "You don't see too many famous people coming and giving back."

She said she recently found a permanent home in Nevada and hopes to become a registered nurse.

Jones said that he still gets emotional on nights like this when he reflects on all he's been through. He even remembered the way Judy Vargas used to chase him around and tried to wrap him up, just like NFL defensive backs do these days.

"She wasn't as good as they are now," Jones said, "but she definitely got me ready."

Raiders' Jones: "I've got something to prove to the entire league"

By Scott Bair

August 22, 2014

GREEN BAY, Wis. – Raiders receiver James Jones is not the nostalgic sort. The former Green Bay Packer won't reminisce while driving to Lambeau Field for Friday night's exhibition. He won't wax poetic about streets he used to live on or cheese heads or the spots he used to Lambeau leap.

He'll certainly say hello to friends on the other sideline, but he's not playing to make the Packers regret not presenting a contract offer he couldn't refuse.

Jones is on a broader mission.

"I'm trying to prove something everyday, not only to the coaching staff, but to the entire league," Jones told CSN Bay Area earlier this week. "I've got a little chip on my shoulder, and I'm trying to prove it to the world to the league everyday that I can be a No. 1 receiver, that I can be one of those receivers that's talked about in the National Football League. It's bigger than the Raiders. It's bigger than (head coach Dennis Allen) and (coordinator) Greg Olson and all those guys. I've got something to prove about James Jones around the league."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Jones branched out after seven seasons in Green Bay, where he was a cog, albeit a vital one, in an efficient offensive machine. Quarterback Aaron Rodgers spreads wealth among several key playmakers, but frequently found Jones in the red zone. He had 14 receiving touchdowns in 2012, a total the Raiders would love to see repeated this season.

The San Jose native came to Oakland to be a No. 1 option, which is why eyebrows raised when he was listed second on the team's initial depth chart. Allen has said time and again that lineup was written in pencil, but it did catch Jones by surprise.

"I mean yeah, because I'm confident in my ability I feel like I'm one of the best receivers on the team," Jones said. "If I was on any team I would feel like that, even if I was next to Calvin Johnson I would feel like I'm one of the best receivers on the team so you expect to start. ... But we have a lot of talented dudes on this team, so the only thing you can do is go out there and make plays everyday and continue to build trust with the quarterbacks. When them lights come on that's when it matters the most."

His time on the second string didn't last long. He started last week's exhibition against Detroit and will do so again in Green Bay, where starters should see significant snaps.

Jones has made strides this preseason in a new offensive scheme, and the coaching staff has noticed. They believe he'll be a key contributor for an passing game still working out the kinks.

"He's playing more within the system," Olson said. "He's doing fine. There's not a lot that we really need to feel like we have to see from James Jones. He's a veteran player. He knows what he needs to do to get ready for the regular season."

Jones would like to build some positive momentum in his last extended bout of preseason game and believes the passing game will do so on Friday night.

"I want our offense to move the ball, and if I'm a part of that catching some passes then that would be good for me," Jones said. "I just want us to go in there to execute and move the ball well against their defense to get into a good rhythm going into week 1 so we're confident when we play the Jets."

MAURICE JONES-DREW

SAN FRANCISCO CHRONICLE

Raiders' Maurice Jones-Drew feels he has something to prove

By Vic Tafur

April 22, 2014

A fresh start Tuesday began with the "worst decision of my life," running back Maurice Jones-Drew said.

The new Raider jumped on the freeway from his home in Danville to get to Alameda for the first day of the team's offseason conditioning program.

"It took me 40 minutes to get here," Jones-Drew said. "That's ridiculous. I'm never taking the I-880 again."

The Oakland native and former De La Salle High School star wasn't late, but it would have been OK if he was. He's been working out at Cal since January with former De La Salle and Cal strength and conditioning coach Mike Blasquez. Jones-Drew is down to about 215 pounds and his goal is 208 (his playing weight at UCLA 10 years ago was 205.)

Coming off foot surgery, Jones-Drew rushed 234 times for 803 yards and five touchdowns with Jacksonville last season. He also had 43 receptions. He left with some bitter feelings, and after other teams viewed him as a backup, he signed a three-year deal with Oakland last month.

"My goal last year was to show people I was healthy again and finish the season strong," Jones-Drew, 29, said in an interview last week. "My goal this year is to be explosive again."

The 5-foot-7 Jones-Drew knows that no one sees him as an elite running back anymore, just three years removed from leading the NFL in rushing. He embraces the chip on his shoulder, just as the other experienced players who met the media Tuesday, defensive end Justin Tuck and wide receiver James Jones, do.

"You hear, 'This is a great team ... in 2009,'" Jones-Drew said. "Whatever."

Jones, who like Jones-Drew is from the Bay Area (San Jose), was deemed expendable by the Packers and was actually looking forward to the free-agency process. But...

"It was long. ... I got to see what people thought of me, and that's why I have a big chip on my shoulder right now and I'm excited and ready to go," Jones said.

Jones was asked what the new offense is going to look like.

"We're going to score 50 points a game. ... I don't know; it's the first day," he said.

How well the offense does will depend a lot on Jones, new quarterback Matt Schaub and the Jones-Drew/Darren McFadden 1-2 punch at running back.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Jones-Drew said his foot "feels phenomenal." He held off on surgery when he first got hurt because he wanted to get back on the field and help the Jaguars.

When he signed with the Raiders, Jones-Drew said he was "done wrong" by Jacksonville, and he recently elaborated.

"It's a business, and they're moving in a different direction, and I get that," Jones-Drew said. "Players are asked to be loyal, but the team has never been loyal to you."

"I led the league in rushing, my foot breaks and I come back out of shape to do the best I can to help the team. I gave them eight years. And then they just wash their hands of you."

Other teams that Jones-Drew visited wanted him to mentor younger backs - and Steelers coach Mike Tomlin almost sold him on it - but Jones-Drew feels he has "a lot left," he said, and wanted to compete to be a starter.

Jones-Drew thinks his running style and McFadden's complement each other well as far as sharing carries goes.

"But first, we're going to compete," Jones-Drew said. "Let's see if someone can win the job. I expect us both to be better coming out of training camp because of that competition."

"It's going to be fun. There's no reason we can't be one of the best 1-2 punches in the league."

Jones-Drew definitely has a leg up on the conditioning part.

"He has a lot left," former De La Salle coach Bob Ladouceur told Yahoo Sports Live. "The last couple of years, Maurice was a little bit ... not in the best shape that he's been in. This year, he went back to work in January and is in the best shape he's ever been in."

"He's going to have a really big year."

De La Salle alums Maurice Jones-Drew and Nick Holz reunited with Raiders

By Vic Tafur

July 27, 2014

It's not the typical assistant coach-player relationship.

"There are times I tell him to go out there and do this or that and he just stands there and looks at me," Raiders offensive assistant Nick Holz said.

Maurice Jones-Drew finds himself surprised sometimes when Holz is breaking down a part of the offense and it actually makes sense.

"Wow, you really do know what you are talking about," Jones-Drew will tell Holz.

It's only natural, actually.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

High school buddies don't usually respect each other's intelligence, and Jones-Drew, 29, and Holz were teammates at Concord's De La Salle High.

Holz still remembers what was probably the first of many double-takes of the 5-foot-7 running back's high school, college and NFL career.

Holz was a sophomore wide receiver at De La Salle High in 1999 when a certain freshman was called up to the junior varsity.

"Everyone's like, 'Who the heck is this guy?' He was like 5 feet tall ... and his legs are about as big as he is wide," Holz said. "And he started running over people then. And he hasn't stopped."

Jones-Drew, meanwhile, said he is not surprised Holz is already on an NFL coaching staff, and ties it back to high school practice.

"He's a hard worker and competes at everything," Jones-Drew said. "When he ran 40s in high school, Nick would always be in front come the 20th one because he was running 4.7 every time."

Holz went to Colorado as a walk-on. He played receiver and held for kicks. Guess who then played against the Buffaloes.

"His freshman year, one of Maurice's first games was UCLA at Colorado," Holz said. "You think this kid is going to be nervous, and he is in there for the huddle and he looks over to the sideline and says, 'Hey Holz, look at what I am going to do!'"

"I was terrified just being on the bench."

Holz tried his hand at coaching after college when another high school teammate's dad, former Raiders head coach Bill Callahan, and Holz were sitting around one day talking about the future.

"He asked me if I wanted to come to Nebraska, make $10,000 a year and sleep at a desk two nights a week," Holz said. "Who could resist that offer?"

Holz caught the coaching bug for good that year, in 2007, as the Cornhuskers' offensive quality-control coach and video intern. He went to Stanford as an assistant quarterbacks coach for four years, before switching to an all silver-and-black wardrobe in 2012.

He helps out receivers coach Ted Gilmore, does a lot of the playbook drawings and breaking down of video and gets call sheets ready for offensive coordinator Greg Olson. And runs the scout team.

Oh, and helps tutor an old high school buddy.

"It's been wonderful to be back with family and friends again, and one of them, Nick, has helped me learn the offense here quickly," Jones-Drew said.

"But I am still not calling him Coach Holz. Just Holz. Or Nick."

That's cool with Holz, who is just happy to pick up with an old friend where they left off 10 years ago.

"He was pretty much the exact same person then that he is today," Holz said. "He is a true professional. He does his job and has a great time doing it."

KHALIL MACK

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP (OAKLAND TRIBUNE, CC TIMES, SJ MERCURY NEWS)

Kawakami: Khalil Mack could end Raiders' first-round hex

By Tim Kawakami

May 8, 2014

Is this finally the end of the Raiders' first-round curse? No more fiascos? Really?

Maybe Buffalo linebacker Khalil Mack is the hex-ender, maybe he's everything the Raiders have wanted and needed for almost two decades -- and almost never got out of their first-round picks.

Mack, the Raiders' pick in the NFL draft Thursday, should be better than Rolando McClain or Robert Gallery, more focused than JaMarcus Russell, and healthier than Darren McFadden.

Mack should be more productive than Fabian Washington, Michael Huff or Darrius Heyward-Bey, and more instantly important than Sebastian Janikowski or Nnamdi Asomugha.

Mack should be the Raiders' best first-round pick since Charles Woodson in 1998, and my oh my, that is a very long time.

If you watched coach Dennis Allen beam and giggle minutes after the Raiders landed Mack with the fifth overall pick, you sure got a sense of how long ago it really was.

Allen didn't just look pleased that Mack fell out of the top four, after he was at times projected to go in the top three.

Allen looked relieved, relaxed, overjoyed and possibly set free.

Meanwhile, general manager Reggie McKenzie looked antsy and exhausted, but I think that's just how he gets during the draft. Or maybe hoping and waiting for Mack to get to them took a little toll.

"When we started this process, we were totally clear that we wanted to add some impact players to our football team," Allen said.

"This is an impact player. This guy will have an impact on our football team for the 2014 season, there's no question about that."

So, Reggie, if you had the first overall pick, would you still have taken Mack?

"I didn't have the first pick," the Raiders general manager said in a singsong voice.

"We liked Khalil. We liked him a lot."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Other teams -- the teams that have won over the past 11 seasons, while the Raiders have not -- have built themselves up using first-round picks as their foundations.

Not the Raiders.

They've either traded away their pick (in 2011 and 2012), been unlucky enough to watch the better players go ahead of them, watched good talents fade once they put on the Silver & Black, or simply whiffed the pick.

We'll still have to see how Mack performs -- remember, McClain was a highly acclaimed pick in 2010, and now he's out of the league.

But if Mack is who McKenzie and Allen think he is ... or even half of how they described him on Thursday ... he should be one of the Raiders' best players the first time he suits up.

The Raiders signed a slew of older veteran free agents a few months ago, just to hold things together in 2014.

The way to get this team to the same level as Kansas City or Denver or above, though, is to reload with true young stars, and Mack seems to fit that profile exactly.

A young star. A game-changing pass rusher who could keep sacking quarterbacks for a decade.

Someone who grades out "A-1" off the field, according to McKenzie.

When's the last time the Raiders had a blue-chipper like that? Usually, they're getting beat by those guys.

"Absolutely, I saw a lot of similarities between him and Von Miller," Allen said of the star Denver linebacker that he coached as a rookie in 2011.

"And the thing that really was attractive about Khalil Mack was the fact that he understands how to rush the passer. And he understands how to rush the passer with power."

After this, the Raiders can turn their attention to landing more and more playmakers.

Maybe they get a receiver, they definitely need a quarterback of the future -- really, they could use young talent at every position.

But it had to start with some good luck, and that came when Jacksonville surprised everybody by selecting quarterback Blake Bortles with the third pick.

That guaranteed that the Raiders would get either Mack or receiver Sammy Watkins.

I think they liked Mack better than anybody except No. 1 overall pick Jadeveon Clowney, and now we will see if the Raiders' faith is well placed.

"He's a real man," Allen said of Mack. "He's a football-first guy, and he's got tremendous work ethic, and he's a team player."

"Those are all things we look for in adding to our football team."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

It's easy to say that now, with Mack in the fold. Actually, it was easy to say and see that all these previous years, when there was nobody like Mack on this team.

There is now, at least one. That's a start.

Raiders' Khalil Mack a dream, former coaches say

By Jerry McDonald

May 16, 2014

University at Buffalo defensive coordinator Lou Teppa cringed when a local police officer told him he'd had an encounter with one of his players a couple months back.

"You hear that, you start to twitch a little bit," Teppa said.

Dennis Gilbert, a cop who is also the football coach at St. Joe's High in Buffalo, recognized Khalil Mack immediately. Mack approached Gilbert holding a small white purse he'd found in a snow bank.

"He wanted to know if we could find the owner," Gilbert said.

A fellow officer opened the purse to find an iPhone, credit cards, cash and jewelry. A short time later, the purse and its contents were returned to the grateful owner who had been retracing her steps a block away, frantic and losing hope for its return.

"You always hear the stories about kids who do the wrong things," Gilbert said. "Here's a good kid, doing the right thing, making the right decisions."

Even with the background checks necessitated for a top-10 pick, the Raiders hadn't heard of Mack's act of integrity. Even without it, they were convinced Mack was worthy of being the face of their defense for the next decade in making him the fifth pick of the NFL draft.

The Raiders rookie draft class, plus undrafted free agents and some players on a tryout basis, convened at the club's rookie camp starting Friday. Mack reportedly signed his rookie deal Thursday and was ready to go.

Mack, according to those who know him best, is described as earnest and hardworking, driven to be the best. It's only between the white lines where he shows an edge.

DIFFERENT MAN ON FIELD

"Off the field, he's the nicest, most humble, sweetest kid you could ever meet in your life," said Waides Ashmon, Mack's coach at Westwood High in Port St. Lucie, Florida. "On the field, he plays mad, with a chip on his shoulder, and that's exciting to watch."

Ashmon had been at Westwood for a month when an assistant told him about Mack, a junior basketball player who had recovered from a torn patellar tendon and hadn't played football since his freshman year.

"In the spring, my coach came into my classroom, picked me out of class and I have been playing football ever since," Mack said.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

As the two stood in the hallway, Ashmon saw a 6-foot-1, 215-pound physical specimen "with the muscles coming through his clothes" and asked Mack, "What do I need to do to get you on the football field?"

"He said, 'Coach, I would love to play. You've just got to talk with my dad,' " Ashmon said.

Ashmon pulled out his cell phone on the spot and made his pitch to Sandy Mack.

"I've never done this before, but I told him if you allow Khalil to come play for me, I promise he will go to college for free," Ashmon said.

Mack led Westwood with 140 tackles on a 10-2 team, but with only one year of varsity football in a talent-laden state, only Liberty University of Lynchburg, Virginia, was interested. However, when a Liberty assistant accepted a job at Buffalo, it helped land Mack a full scholarship.

"He just got overlooked," Ashmon said. "Coaches would come in and say he looks the part, but they didn't have enough film on him. I'd tell them, I don't care what y'all say, the kid's going to be a first-round draft pick in five years."

Tepper, the Buffalo defensive coordinator since 2012, has coached at nine schools since 1967 and put 20 linebackers on NFL rosters. At Illinois in 1996, when Tepper was the head coach, the Illini had linebackers Kevin Hardy and Simeon Rice taken with the Nos. 2 and 3 selections in the NFL draft.

"I've only had a few players who were what I call complete linebackers, that could play anywhere in a 3-4 or a 4-3 defense," Tepper said. "Oakland is getting someone with the talent to be a star at any of those positions."

'HE KNOWS HOW TO WORK'

Now 6-2, 251, Mack's ability to range sideline-to-sideline, rush the passer (28 1/2 career sacks) and strip the ball (16 forced fumbles) is enhanced by a will to prepare as well as to win.

"When he gets a tip sheet every day, he's got a highlighter out and works on it," Tepper said. "He knows how to work. He learns from written material, he learns from briefing material, he learns from walking through, and when the ball is snapped he'll play fast."

Mack finds motivation from perceived slights. He was so insulted by an EA sports video game that gave him a mediocre ranking of 46 that he made it his uniform number at Buffalo.

When an Ohio State assistant coach assessed Mack as "just a guy" going into the 2014 season opener, Tepper called Mack "JAG" all week. Mack responded with 2 1/2 sacks, a 45-yard interception return and nine tackles against the Buckeyes.

Buffalo head coach Jeff Quinn said Mack's drive reminds him of Joe Staley, the 49ers tackle whom he coached at Eastern Michigan.

"He's as gifted a player as I've ever coached," Quinn said of Mack. "He lives it and loves it."

Raiders general manager Reggie McKenzie said Mack "plays the game the way it's supposed to be played. He plays hard, he plays physical, he goes from snap to whistle. You might call it a chip on his shoulder, or you can just call it being a football player."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Mack's mother, Yolanda, an elementary school teacher, said of her son, "We all have something where we're a '10.' Khalil was always athletic, always competitive in that way. Even at 5 he was doing push-ups. He had these muscles."

Outgoing and team oriented, Mack entertained Buffalo teammates occasionally by singing and playing the guitar. His personality is in stark contrast to the last linebacker the Raiders took in the first round, the aloof and perpetually disinterested Rolando McClain at No. 8 in 2010.

Ashmon, who was with the Mack family in New York at the draft, laughed as he recounted the post-draft scene.

"He'll probably kill me for telling this story, but we were up in his hotel room that night, he strips off his shirt, and he's jumping around, saying, 'Let's play right now!,' " Ashmon said.

Raiders' top draft pick, Mack, a 'tough kid' - just ask Dad

By Vic Tafur

May 9, 2014

Yolanda and Sandy Mack walked into the auditorium Friday afternoon, a step behind as their son, Khalil, took the stage at the Raiders' introductory news conference for the first-round pick. They took a seat, and dad got his cell phone video camera working to record all the reporters' questions and his son's answers.

Sandy said he didn't think about Khalil making the NFL until his middle son was a freshman at Buffalo. He and Yolanda knew, though, that he could handle a collision after years of picking up after the wreckage from Khalil and his two brothers.

Sandy knew that they had raised a tough kid, who didn't back down from anything.

"Khalil has an older brother (LeDarius) that he was always bumping against," Sandy Mack said. "And there was no pity in our house. We have three boys and they're all a little rough around the edges."

Mack went on to wreak havoc in a storied career at Buffalo, with 18.5 sacks and 40 tackles for a loss his last two seasons, and the linebacker learned to hit hard at an early age. It wasn't one of his brothers, but a cousin, who fired him up when he was 11.

Johnny Gamble was also Mack's youth football coach when he was 11, and called him "soft" after one practice. He was teased about it all night, and then the next day came back to practice and hit another player so hard that he couldn't get up.

Buffalo must have heard that story, because defensive coordinator Lou Tepper waited until before last year's Ohio State game to try a similar motivational technique. Tepper told Mack that Ohio State had called him "just another guy." And then Tepper called him JAG the rest of the week at practice. Mack was so mad he called his dad.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"You could hear it in his voice, that was going to be a special game," Sandy Mack said. "I originally couldn't make it, but I had to make sure I was there after that call."

Mack had 2.5 sacks, a 45-yard interception return for a touchdown and nine tackles against Ohio State.

Now, he's ready for the next challenge, the NFL, and facing Peyton Manning twice a year.

"I can't wait, I can't wait to go out and play against some of the best players," Mack said.

During the draft process, Mack said he didn't worry about where he would wind up, but did think it was odd that the Raiders - who picked fifth - didn't fly him in for a visit. Then he would think about his meeting with general manager Reggie McKenzie and other team officials at the NFL combine in Indianapolis in February.

"I didn't think it would go well, right when it started," Mack said.

Mack told the Raiders that the first NFL game he saw was the Bucs beating someone bad in Super Bowl XXXVII.

Tampa Bay beat the Raiders in that game 48-21.

"They said, 'You're in the wrong room.' "

Raiders' McFadden eager to impress without the pressure

By Vic Tafur

June 18, 2014

There was a time - oh, every season for the past six years - when Raiders coaches, teammates and even owners Al and then Mark Davis would hold their breath every time Darren McFadden touched the ball.

Well, not this year. Oakland still would love to see the running back return to his 2010 form and stay healthy, but there is a lot less riding on him now and the kid gloves are off. The Raiders offered McFadden only a one-year, $1.65 million contract - which he surprisingly jumped on - and then brought in Maurice Jones-Drew to either beat out McFadden or share carries with him.

Oakland, throwing caution to the wind, even has McFadden returning kicks in offseason practice - something he hasn't even tried since his rookie season.

"I wouldn't mind it at all," McFadden said, on that being part of his new job description. "I returned kicks in college and I felt like I was pretty good at it, so I wouldn't mind it at all."

McFadden ran for 1,157 yards and caught for 507, with 10 touchdowns, in 13 games in 2011. But he hasn't been the same since, averaging 3.3 yards per carry the past two years while failing to stay healthy. He has missed 19 of the past 41 games and has missed 29 total in his six seasons.

McFadden, as always, remains upbeat.

"With me, I still feel like it's my rookie year," he said. "The years flew by so fast. As far as my body, I still feel like I'm still the same person I was coming in my rookie year. I just have more knowledge of the game."

If McFadden can be a playmaker again, and beat out Jones-Drew, the Raiders would be thrilled. If he can't, or gets hurt, the Raiders didn't risk much when McFadden accepted the modest contract offer in March. (In fact, only $100,000 of the deal is guaranteed if Oakland cuts McFadden during training camp.)

Jones-Drew, who averaged 3.4 yards a carry for Jacksonville last year coming back from a major foot injury, expects big things out of both himself and McFadden.

He thinks they will push each other, as well as second-year back Latavius Murray.

"When these pads get on, you're going to start to see what we're about, and that is running back by committee," Jones-Drew said. That "is going to help us, because we're going to be fighting every day to get the ball. I know Darren wants the ball just like I do. That drive is what's going to help us become a better backfield."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

It was only three years ago that Jones-Drew, 29, led the NFL in rushing, and Raiders head coach Dennis Allen thinks both running backs have a lot left in the tank.

"When you watch them practice, you see guys that still have explosion," Allen said. They are "guys that still have run skills, guys that can make people miss. ... I see a couple of guys that if they can stay healthy, they still have the ability to perform at a high level in this league."

Quarterback Matt Schaub said the Jones-Drew and McFadden combination is as good as the impressive Arian Foster-Ben Tate backfield he played with in Houston.

"Just all around," Schaub said. "Just their ability to understand the run schemes and how the blocking schemes work against different fronts, and understanding where the hole's going to be."

Schaub also thinks both are big weapons in the passing game.

"D-Mac has always been a great screen guy, as has MJD. ... I think just the complete nature of both of them and them complementing each other is going to be a big key to our success."

Raiders' Darren McFadden hoping to outrun the labels

By Scott Ostler

July 30, 2014

The first week of training camp must seem to Darren McFadden like the movie "Groundhog Day." For seven years, McFadden has arrived in Napa ready to rock and roll - eager, healthy and seemingly destined to take his place as one of football's elite running backs.

Then stuff happens. Injuries. Coaches fired. Scheme changes and raggedy surrounding talent, rendering McFadden's skills null and void. Flashes of brilliance, but mostly frustration and disappointment.

Maybe a better movie analogy would be "Lemony Snicket's A Series of Unfortunate Events."

Well, this time could be different. Stop rolling your eyes, Debbie Downer fans.

It's possible that this is the season it all will come together for McFadden, and the Raiders.

If you're skeptical, you're not alone. McFadden said other teams showed interest in signing him, but he came back to the Raiders for a bargain-basement $1.65 million contract, only $100,000 guaranteed.

And unlike past seasons, when the Raiders counted on McFadden to be their bell cow (to borrow a 49ers term), he's merely in the mix this time. The Raiders signed Maurice Jones-Drew to compete for the starting job. Fullback Marcel Reece dropped 17 pounds in the offseason.

It's a different scene for McFadden, for so long the golden guy. Now he's being asked to return kickoffs, which he hasn't done since college. Until now, he was too valuable, and maybe too fragile, for such risky duty.

It appears that the change of status has not dented McFadden's optimism and enthusiasm. He's never been a grumbler or slacker, and he seems to be attacking his new situation with the same old zest.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"I feel great," McFadden said after Wednesday's practice. "I feel like a rookie coming in. Training camp is just like being a rookie all over again. You're excited being out there."

Does he see this as a last chance?

"It's a new beginning," McFadden said, "but at the same time, I feel like it's all or nothing, so I'm going to have to go out there and perform and stay healthy on the field."

It can be done. Lest we paint his career to date as a total failure, remember the shining 2010 season. McFadden missed three games but still gained 1,157 yards on 5.2 per carry, flashing speed and power. He made people miss. He was dangerous.

That was what the Raiders had in mind when they drafted him No. 4 overall in 2008 from Arkansas. Was 2010 an aberration, or proof that McFadden can produce fireworks if you block for him properly and he's healthy?

The Raiders might be crazy to keep trying to tap McFadden's talent, but the temptation is strong. In his second NFL game, against the Chiefs, McFadden carried 21 times for 164 yards.

Then he injured a toe and missed three games, and when he returned, Tom Cable had replaced Lane Kiffin as head coach. Cable pretty much iced McFadden.

It's not all about coaching. Two seasons ago, some blamed McFadden's average of 3.3 yards on Dennis Allen's zone-blocking scheme. Last season, no more zone, but another season of 3.3 yards per carry.

If McFadden doesn't realize his potential this season, it won't be because he's damaged goods. He said he's 100 percent healthy and still jet quick.

"I'm going to run a 4.3 'til I'm 50," McFadden said. "As far as the exact (40-yard dash) time, I'm still a 4.3 guy. I don't feel that I've lost a step at all."

In six seasons, he has missed an average of almost five games per season to injuries. Seriously, that could be a good thing.

"I'm just now getting ready to turn 27," McFadden said, "so I feel like I still have a lot of football in me. I guess that's one of the bright sides of me being injured, you know? Less games took a lot of wear and tear off my body, so I still have a lot of years of football left in me."

Maybe. It would be great for the Raiders if it works out that way. McFadden would be the late Al Davis' last contribution.

For McFadden, this shouldn't be about money. He earned $60 million on his first contract. He probably could walk away from the game with his head up, write off the hard times to circumstances beyond his control.

But he has unfinished business, personally and with the Raiders.

"I had other offers," McFadden said, "but I wanted to come back here and be a part of Raider Nation. We've had some rough years here; I wanted to come here and be part of the turnaround."

Oakland Will Spend Money, Just Not All at Once

By Andrew Brandt

March 14, 2014

These are salad days for NFL owners. Forbes values 23 of the 32 franchises at over $1 billion, record-level television contracts are kicking in, and there are seven years remaining on a favorable CBA. With young players being squeezed (drafted players must sign four-year contracts at fixed rates) and older veterans being purged (just look at this week's waiver wire), those now carrying the banner for improved plater economics are the "sweet spot" free agents emerging from rookie contracts who are between the optimal ages of 25 to 27. Two days into free agency, the team to watch is the Raiders, who are flush with salary cap room like no other in 2014.

Under the leadership of the late Al Davis, the Raiders were reluctant to pay market price for coaches, executives and front office staff. But they were always willing to pay—and overpay—players. In the agent community, the best call one could receive was from Davis. He loved players: picking them, counseling them and paying them.

In Davis' later years, many of those contracts had consequences when the players didn't perform well. When new general manager Reggie McKenzie entered the picture two years ago, he turned the page on dozens of contracts with years remaining, leaving about $56 million in "dead money" in their wake. While other teams operated on a $123 million cap in 2013, the Raiders were left to compete with 60% of that number, roughly $75 million in negotiable dollars for their active players.

That was then; this is now.

Having atoned for previous contractual sins, the Raiders are now playing at an advantage compared to the rest of the league. They entered the 2014 league calendar with close to $60 million in cap room. And with their minimal spending last year and team minimum spending accounting ahead for 2013-2016, all eyes are on the Raiders' checkbook.

In its new financial era, Oakland allowed Jared Veldheer, Lamarr Houston and Rashad Jennings to leave while acquiring tackles Rodger Saffold ($42.5 million, $21 million guaranteed) and Austin Howard ($30 million, $15 million guaranteed). With their ample cap room, the Raiders likely structured those deals with disproportionate cap containment this year, allowing them to exit the contracts later, if need be, with little pain.

Raider Nation, judging from Twitter and media reaction, was not impressed. After a two year grace period, fans are restless. In their minds, it's time for a referendum on McKenzie. And then came word of a failed physical for Saffold, compounding the frustration. Evidently, the Raiders' medical staff had serious enough concern to not sign off on Reggie's strong interest in Saffold, while the Rams are willing to take him back despite any medical issues. While I am not qualified to evaluate Saffold and Howard compared to Veldheer or anyone else, I can comment on the man who made those decisions.

I worked closely with McKenzie for nine years in the Packers' front office. When negotiating contracts, I would often rely on him for unfiltered views on players that both the agent and I were using as comparables. He had vast knowledge of players from every team and made it very clear whom he liked and whom he didn't.

Reggie had his terms of endearment for players. He valued brute strength in linemen, both offensive and defensive, and would slow the film down to watch plays that showed one lineman physically overmatching another. In his Tennessee drawl he'd say, "Look at this big joker...BAM!" When Reggie referred to a player as "country strong," I knew that was a high compliment. He felt that way about several of the offensive linemen we had in Green Bay, especially Chad Clifton, and I'm certain he feels that way about Saffold (his medical issue notwithstanding) and Howard.

And the slow teardown that the Raiders just endured fits Reggie well. If Reggie is anything, he is deliberate. He walks slowly, he talks slowly, he eats slowly and he will build slowly. Saffold and Howard were supposed to be the first expenditures of the $60 million in cap room, and there will be more, with reports of veterans Justin Tuck, LaMarr Woodley and Terrell Thomas set to visit. Cap room doesn't have to be exhausted in March; it can be spent through December.

Reggie mirrors some elements of the two general managers we had in Green Bay. He has the courage of his convictions about players that Ron Wolf had, including blunt assessments of their talent. But Reggie also has the patience of Ted Thompson; he adheres to the draft-and-develop model of team-building. The latter means trusting scouts to constantly fill a pipeline of young talent, empowering coaches to play and develop young players, and identifying core players to secure contractually for the future.

I know the last thing Raider Nation wants to hear is a plea for more patience, especially after the Saffold twist, but a new era of cap prosperity has just begun. I admit to bias, but Reggie is consumed with finding the right players for his team, no matter how long it takes or where he finds them. Saffold and Howard, however uninspiring, were just the start of the book on 2014. Let's see how the chapters play out.

Raiders RB Murray back to full health

By Josh Dubow

August 10, 2014

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — Latavius Murray is finally getting the chance to show the Oakland Raiders what kind of running back he can be when healthy.

A year after his rookie season ended in training camp with an ankle injury, Murray is running with the power and determination that made the Raiders so excited to draft him in 2013.

Murray had seven carries for 28 yards and also caught two passes for 13 yards in the exhibition opener at Minnesota on Friday night. He is trying to earn himself regular playing time in a crowded backfield that also includes Maurice Jones-Drew and Darren McFadden.

"It definitely was exciting to get back on the field and get the ball in my hands again," Murray said Sunday. "I definitely feel 100 percent better compared to last year and where I was then to where I am now. I'm just excited now being healthy and going forward this year."

Murray came into camp last year with high hopes as a rookie but was nursing an ankle injury that hampered him throughout practice. After rushing for 29 yards on eight carries in his first exhibition game, Murray was shut down and underwent arthroscopic surgery on the ankle.

He spent the entire season on injured reserve, only able to watch his teammates play.

"It was tough," he said. "Anybody in that locker room, if you have to sit out and watch your other teammates play, it hurts. So, I took that mentality in the offseason to get better and work hard so it doesn't happen again this year."

With the Raiders uncertain with what they had in Murray, they brought McFadden back this offseason and also signed Jones-Drew. But they also expect Murray to be a big contributor as a runner, receiver and possibly even a kick returner this season as well.

Murray is a physical back at 225 pounds but also has breakaway speed, as evidenced by his 4.38 40-yard dash time. He was a big-play back in college at Central Florida, rushing for 37 touchdowns in his career and scoring six more as a receiver and one on a kickoff return.

He ran for 1,106 yards and scored 19 touchdowns as a senior, earning first-team Conference USA honors and becoming a sixth-round pick by the Raiders.

"It's obvious that when you go back in the mental picture of what you saw from him last year and what we've seen to this point this year, it's obvious that he was not healthy last year," coach Dennis Allen said. "I think now that he's back to being healthy, I think we're seeing a little bit more the type of back that we felt we were going to get when we drafted him."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Murray said his missed year wasn't a complete loss, as he was able to sit in meeting rooms, learn the playbook and see what it took to be a professional while rehabbing his injury.

Murray said that knowledge has helped slow the game down in training camp this year, when he has also been helped by Jones-Drew and McFadden.

The two veterans are trying to bounce back from rough seasons in 2013 and the competition at running back is pushing all three of the backs to be at their best.

McFadden ran 23 yards on his only carry Friday night and Jones-Drew had 24 yards on four touches.

"When you got a group of backs like that, you can get nothing but better every day in practice," Murray said. "When they're in their getting reps, they're making the most of it. So, you got to make sure you're doing the same thing when you get in there and just get better."

Finally healthy, Raiders RB Murray running like old self

By Scott Bair

August 11, 2014

NAPA – Raiders coaches were impressed by running back Latavius Murray at Central Florida. His tape showed a back with slashing power and breakaway speed, making him a real steal in the sixth round of the 2013 draft.

During the offseason program and early portions of training camp, Murray was a facsimile of his former self. There was a hitch in his giddy up, a sure sign something wasn't right.

"We thought, 'Man. This is a totally different guy than the one we saw on tape,'" offensive coordinator Greg Olson said. "It looked like he was running on bunions. There were some real, noticeable foot issues. He doesn't have any remnants of that now."

This preseason, Murray looks healthy, strong and poised to make an impact in the regular season. He feels light years better than last year, when his NFL career got off to a false start.

He played in just one preseason game before bowing to an ankle injury that required surgery. He rehabbed a while before realizing the joint still felt off. He had a second surgery in December to "tighten things up," and only felt normal again in May.

"It was a long road back," Murray said last week. "I'm so happy to be playing like myself again."

That's a good thing for the Raiders running game. Despite Murray's progress, Maurice Jones-Drew and Darren McFadden will do most of the heavy lifting. Murray could be a solid accent piece, one that offers youth and energy and size.

Fans are smitten by Murray's potential. It's easy to dream big with a back who is 6-foot-3, 225 pounds and runs the 40-yard dash in 4.38 seconds.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

At this point potential hasn't turned kinetic. He played well in Friday's preseason opener, but needs to build on that throughout this series of exhibitions.

Health breeds confidence, which should allow Murray to continue his ascent. He's also become comfortable as a kick returner.

"Before this camp, the last time I returned a kick I was in high school," Murray said. "I don't mind though. Anything I can do to help the team out. And, honestly, I'll take any opportunity to get the ball in my hands."

Exactly how often that happens remains a mystery. There are only so many carries to go around, and Jones-Drew is expected to take most of them. The Raiders are happy to have another weapon in the arsenal should they have to use it, especially one that looks as good now as he did in college.

"It's obvious that when you go back in the mental picture of what you saw from him last year and what we've seen to this point this year, it's obvious that he was not healthy last year," head coach Dennis Allen said. "I think now that he's back to being healthy, I think we're seeing a little bit more the type of back that we felt we were going to get when we drafted him. I think, to this point in camp and really through the first preseason game, he's done well."

MYCHAL RIVERA

Oakland Raiders Mychal Rivera setting his sights high

By Jerry McDonald

August 2, 2014

After finishing fifth in receptions among all NFL rookie tight ends last season, the last thing on the mind of the Raiders' Mychal Rivera was to enjoy the fruits of his labors.

"I really looked in the mirror at myself," Rivera said Saturday after the Raiders completed a controlled scrimmage. "I knew I could do a lot better than I did last year, even though people were surprised at what I did. I have high expectations of myself."

In his second year out of Tennessee, Rivera has his sights on a won-loss record far better than 4-12, and significantly better statistics than 38 catches for 407 yards and four touchdowns.

One of the highlights Saturday was the sight of Rivera splitting a seam between veteran cornerbacks Tarell Brown and Carlos Rogers and hauling in a pass inside the 5-yard line from second-string quarterback Derek Carr.

Rivera later caught a pass from Matt Schaub in the end zone.

"One of the guys that has shown the most improvement from a year ago is Mike Rivera," offensive coordinator Greg Olson said. "He looks more athletic. He's stronger. He's more confident. I said to him the other day and we said it in our meeting, there's a little bit of swagger to him this season."

At 6-foot-3 245 pounds, Rivera is a tight end in name only. He can line up in the backfield, split out wide and go in motion. Only occasionally does he line up as a conventional tight end.

"I tell people all the time I play four or five different positions," Rivera said. "I go through the playbook as an offensive lineman, I go through the playbook as a receiver and as a fullback," Rivera said. "Then you've got to look at the quarterback's eyes and see how he's going to play it. You've got to stay in your playbook all the time."

A sixth-round draft pick, Rivera displayed a knack for finding open areas almost immediately. Some of it is from preparation, most of it from instinct.

"I think he does an outstanding job with his feel in the passing game," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "He's able to make plays in a contested environment. Sometimes, with limited separation, he's still able to come out and make the play."

Rivera said his "swagger" comes from an offseason of hard work as well as self-confidence.

"I worked out every day, I kept my mind on football every day," Rivera said. "I used the 4-12 record as a motivating factor. I want to win in this league, and I want to be one of the best tight ends in this league. I see that as attainable. I can get that."

Raiders TE Rivera playing with 'swagger'

By Scott Bair

August 4, 2014

Raiders tight end Mychal Rivera had a productive rookie season. His 38 catches for 407 yards and four touchdowns were a solid start to an NFL career for the low-round draft pick out of Tennessee.

Rivera's take: Not good enough.

He set off on a rigorous offseason training program designed to build on last year's foundation. That mission was accomplished. The coaching staff can certainly tell.

"The guy who has shown the most improvement from a year ago is Mychal Rivera," offensive coordinator Greg Olson said. "He looks more athletic. He's stronger and more confident. He has a little bit of swagger to him this season."

Rivera has always been a confident fellow, but his faith is well placed. He's had an excellent start to training camp, an important achievement with a new quarterback in town.

Matt Schaub has an affinity for reaching tight ends, with several players posting career numbers working with the veteran quarterback. That fact wasn't lost on Rivera, who wanted to make himself a primary target.

"I knew that we were going to make a quarterback change and things were going to happen, and when Matt Schaub was that guy, the first thing I did was look at how many tight ends he'd thrown to, how many times," Rivera said. "I have been working together a lot. He's been working with the tight ends a lot; he's really vocal. He's a leader on the team. For the past couple weeks he's been grabbing us after practice, running routes, just trying to get better at our chemistry. I just can't wait to see what Matt does with the tight ends."

The coaching staff has also gotten creative with their tight end use. The Raiders will use Rivera in several different roles, from slot receiver to in-line blocker. They put him in motion to find a mismatch. They'll put him in the backfield like a fullback. The mental responsibility is huge, but it's an undertaking Rivera certainly welcomes.

"It's really challenging," Rivera said. "I tell people all the time I play four or five positions. I go through the playbook as an offensive lineman. Then I go through a playbook as a receiver, and then as a fullback. Then you have to go through it as the quarterback's eyes. You have to be focused all the time."

While Olson says he's become a more efficient blocker – clearly the weakness in his game last year – he holds real value as a receiver.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

“You can move him around, flex him out, put him in the backfield, use him in motion, and I think he does an outstanding job, really, with his feel in the passing game,” head coach Dennis Allen said. “I think he has a really nice feel of the passing game. And you know, he’s able to make plays in a contested environment. Sometimes, even with limited separation, he’s still able to come up and make the play. I think he’s improved a lot.”

Improvement doesn’t guarantee playing time this year. Rivera is fighting for reps with a healthy David Ausberry, a competition that ranks among the best in camp. The second-year pro has thrived in this environment and believes that it will accelerate his progress in the long run.

“If there was no competition, you would never be pushed to be better than you are now,” Rivera said. “The competition that me and Ausberry are having, that’s part of the reason why I’m doing good right now. Competition brings out the best in everybody.”

Matt Schaub embraces new beginning with Raiders

By Ann Killion
August 7, 2014

Matt Schaub is on his knees on the Raiders' practice field, facing an oncoming rush that is oblivious to the fact that his red practice jersey means no contact with the quarterback.

Within moments he is swarmed, being hugged and kissed by a trio of tiny blond daughters - Madison, 4, and twins Makayla and Mackenzie, who are almost 3. His wife, Laurie, snaps pictures with her phone.

Schaub, at this training camp, is the picture of a comfortable and confident man. Friday night in Minnesota, he starts the process of putting last season's horrors behind him. He is expected to start the Raiders' first preseason game and play at least a couple of series.

"I'm very excited," he said. "It's the first step in moving forward here with a new organization. A new beginning."

And it's the first step toward answering a question that flummoxed the NFL last season. Was Schaub's forgettable year in Houston a one-season aberration, or the beginning of the end for the 33-year old quarterback?

Going into the 2013 season, Schaub was riding a streak of five straight years with a 90-plus quarterback rating, putting him among the league's elite. He had led the Texans to consecutive division titles, the first playoff berths in franchise history, and Houston was thought by many to be a potential Super Bowl team.

Then it all fell apart. After winning the first two games, against San Diego and Tennessee, the Texans didn't win again. Beginning with the Titans game, Schaub threw a pick-six in four straight games, an NFL record. (Granted, three came against the premier defenses in the league, Baltimore, Seattle and San Francisco.)

In the Texans' sixth game, he was injured and replaced by backup Case Keenum, who had no better luck in eight starts and is now backing up Ryan Fitzpatrick. Schaub started the final two games of Houston's lost season, but by then it was clear he and the team needed to part ways.

"I never lost my confidence or faith in my abilities," he said. "Sometimes the snowball effect starts and you just can't find a way to stop it."

But Schaub became the face of all the Texans' woes. Coach Gary Kubiak, trying unsuccessfully to stay employed, appeared to lose faith. The fans turned their wrath on Schaub, even cheering when he suffered an ankle injury.

"It's a football town," Schaub said. "We progressed as an organization, went to the playoffs twice and lost in the divisional round two times in a row. The expectations were there. When you don't get the job done, that's just the nature of this business. Right or wrong."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

But fans' actions veered into a very wrong direction when some took to harassing Schaub by driving past his house and coming onto his property. He contacted Houston police and was concerned about his family's safety.

"A lot of that stuff happens when you're at work," he said, a shadow crossing his face. "This is a nice fresh start. A nice transition both personally and professionally."

Schaub never did what many pundits suggested: consult a sports psychologist.

"No, it never crossed my mind," he said. "I feel like I, mentally and emotionally, handle things the right way to begin with. And with my family and teammates, I felt like I had a really good support system. I felt like I was all right."

Included in that support system were other NFL quarterbacks. Schaub received calls of support during the season from former players like Steve Young and Kurt Warner.

"They called to lend advice or say, 'Hey, do you need to chat?' " Schaub said. "Guys who have been through ups and downs. You play this game long enough, you're going to have some really good times and some tough times. As a player, it's how you respond to that. How you're able to move forward."

Schaub has moved forward into the silver and black, a uniform historically kind to quarterbacks seeking rejuvenation. Schaub has not spoken to Jim Plunkett or Rich Gannon about following in their footsteps, but he's aware of the legacy.

"It's very intriguing to me," he said.

The Raiders are starving for stability at quarterback. It hasn't been there since Gannon retired after the 2004 season. Raiders fans, like those in Houston, have been known to turn on their quarterbacks, frustrated by years of ineptitude.

Rookie Derek Carr may be the quarterback of the future, automatically making him a fan favorite. That could create a tricky situation for Schaub, because there won't be a lot of patience if he struggles. But realistic Raiders fans should realize the team has so many questions and holes that Schaub is a far better option than overloading a rookie quarterback.

Schaub is excited about his new fan base.

"I've played here enough as an opposing player to know how they are," he said. "I'm ecstatic to be on the other side of it. Excited to get out there in front of our home crowd."

The first time he does that officially? In a karmic bit of scheduling, the home opener will be against Houston on Sept. 14.

"I'd be lying to you if I said guys don't circle their former team when they have them on the schedule," Schaub said. "I definitely noticed."

And he definitely will be ready to move forward with his new team.

Outspoken Sims likes direction Raiders are headed

By Michael Wagaman

August 6, 2014

NAPA, Calif. (AP) — If Oakland Raiders defensive lineman Pat Sims decides to go into broadcasting, it will have to be through satellite radio.

The 310-pound veteran isn't shy about offering his views on any topic, and his responses are raw and unfiltered.

Sims was that way a year ago when he openly questioned his future in Oakland and bemoaned the team's losing ways. He eventually signed a one-year deal worth $1.45 million to come back.

Nothing's changed since.

Sims is still one of the most outspoken players on the Raiders roster. Only now he's got more support along the defensive line and better depth behind him.

Asked if Oakland's defense will be the identity of the team because of all the changes made to the offense, Sims laughed.

"I don't give a care how good or how bad the offense is, defense is always going to be the identity," he said. "If you have the best defense, it really doesn't matter what kind of offense you have. I mean it does ... but Baltimore did it."

What about the addition of first-round pick Khalil Mack, who has been impressive through the first two weeks of training camp?

"Best rookie in the draft, period," Sims said.

The veteran defensive tackle also had a little fun with fourth-round pick Justin Ellis, a 335-pound interior lineman who carries the nickname "Jelly".

"Jelly's big, quick and strong ... kind of like me," Sims said. "He's going to be a great player. Not as quick as me though."

Sims is the only returning starter on Oakland's defensive line.

The Raiders overhauled their defense for a second consecutive year, bringing in veterans Justin Tuck and LaMarr Woodley and defensive tackle Antonio Smith to join Sims up front. Tuck, Woodley and Smith have a combined five Super Bowl appearances and three championship rings.

Oakland also drafted Ellis and signed C.J. Wilson to go with holdover backup Stacy McGee.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Sims is still the focal point in the middle of the line.

"I've seen a different demeanor out of Pat Sims this year, maybe a little bit different focus," Raiders coach Dennis Allen said. "He's come in and really competed hard and he's playing well for us right now. We're excited about (him)."

That depth is critical because Sims is coming off a season in which he started all 16 games and was on the field for 693 plays — nearly 150 more than he had any other season.

"We've got depth this year, something we didn't have last year," Sims said. "We couldn't sub. Some packages last year we only had a first team. We didn't have anybody to come in after us. So it's great to have somebody come in and give you a breather."

Sims had two sacks and 49 tackles in 2013, the second-most since his rookie season of 2008 when he was a third-round draft pick of the Cincinnati Bengals.

He had his best game of the season, and possibly of his career, during a Week 16 loss to San Diego when Sims made 13 tackles and one sack.

Four days later, however, Sims sounded very much like he had designs on playing elsewhere in 2014. Though he didn't come out and say it, Sims was unsure if the Raiders wanted him back or if he wanted to come back.

In the end the seventh-year veteran signed with Oakland, but not until after the flurry of offseason moves that also landed quarterback Matt Schaub and running back Maurice Jones-Drew.

"We started something and I just wanted to finish it," Sims said. "They wanted me to be a part of it so why not come back and finish it. We've got guys who can play many positions so (opponents) will never know where we're lining up at."

New sack specialist Antonio Smith's Ninja Assassin persona wins fans

By Vic Tafur

September 13, 2014

The Ninja Assassin may be confused for a second on Sunday afternoon.

Friend has become foe, and there will be a lot of people — in the stands — wearing masks at O.co Coliseum. But once he gets his bearings, Raiders fans can hope to see what the Ninja Assassin has been training for his whole life:

Attacking the quarterback and the running back and helping his football team win.

"I am looking forward to bringing him out," Raiders defensive tackle Antonio Smith said of his Ninja Assassin alter ego. "He and his defensive brothers can do what they were bred to do."

Making his home debut for Oakland, Smith will take off his pregame mask and go against his old Texans teammates of the past five years. He is looking forward to it.

"All masters always worry about how the progress of their young Padawans is doing," Smith said. "I'm looking forward to see how they've reached masterhood since I left them."

Smith had 18½ sacks the past three seasons. Just as he helped all-world defensive end J.J. Watt in Houston, Smith is occupying offensive linemen inside to help free up pass rushers Justin Tuck, Khalil Mack and LaMarr Woodley on the outside for Oakland.

Smith, 32, is not just a fun-loving guy with a gimmick who owns a couple of swords.

"Antonio Smith brings a presence to the defense," defensive coordinator Jason Tarversaid. "He plays every play as hard as he can. He had a good game (last week). He had tackles for loss. He pushed the pocket. He did well. I'm very glad he's here."

Tarver and safety Charles Woodson said Smith has one of the fastest get-offs on the team.

"He is as quick as anybody coming off that ball," Woodson said.

The Ninja Assassin didn't come to his mastery of unorthodox arts of war willy-nilly. He put in a lot of blood, sweat and tears, being cut twice by the Arizona Cardinals in 2004 and 2005 and playing for the Hamburg Sea Devils in NFL Europe in the spring of 2005.

"I thought it was a punishment, going over there, but the Cardinals told me it was so I could get reps at being the No.1 guy. ... I was naive back then," Smith said. "It ended up being one of the best experiences that I had, because it built up the character that I needed in this game."

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

Four or five defensive linemen went down — “I’m not lying, it took four or five,” he said — before Smith got his chance for Arizona. The first two sacks of his career came in a Dec. 18, 2005, game at Houston — against David Carr, Raiders quarterback Derek Carr’s brother — and Smith never looked back.

He started in the Super Bowl for the Cardinals in 2008 and then signed a five-year, $35million deal with the Texans. It was with Houston that he and teammate Mario Williams came up with the Ninja Assassin Slash of Death sack dance. After sacking the quarterback, Smith shows off his sword work and then fires off some ninja stars ... just in case.

Smith studied tae kwon do for seven years as a kid in northwest Oklahoma City, because he couldn’t play football. His mom wouldn’t let him.

“My mom kept me on lockdown,” Smith said. “I was a troubled child. She kept me in the house and said I couldn’t play football.”

How did he finally get out to start playing at 16?

“She got tired of me messing up the house,” Smith said.

Smith has also studied some Wing Chun and judo on his journey. Which brings him to the Coliseum on Sunday for what the O-1 Raiders hope is a winning showcase of ninjitsu.

“I can’t wait to see his celebration after a sack,” Woodson said. “I love having that guy around. Not only can he play, but just in the locker room, he is a bright spot. He keeps everybody light.”

JUSTIN TUCK

Justin Tuck taking Raiders youngsters under his wing

By Jerry McDonald

ALAMEDA -- Khalil Mack knows the look.

It could be a problem with the rookie linebacker's footwork, or that he didn't use his hands properly to disengage from a blocker. It's at that point that Raiders defensive end Justin Tuck will step in, the same way Michael Strahan did for Tuck nine seasons ago.

Mack, the No. 5 pick in May's NFL draft, drinks it all in.

"He'll give me that nod, and it's like, 'OK, what did I do this time?,' " Mack said. "J.T. is one of the best in the game and a cool person to be around. You learn a lot just by being around him."

Tuck, 31, is an avid reader who promotes literacy for school children, but it goes beyond a fondness for books. He reads people, reads situations and is fascinated to see how a story unfolds.

The tale started in Kellyton, Alabama, (population 217), continued with big-time college football at Notre Dame and eventually led to starring role in the Big Apple where Tuck became a two-time Super Bowl champion with the New York Giants.

Tuck will be back at MetLife Stadium on Sunday when the Raiders open the regular season against the New York Jets.

"There will be some history, some memories, but we're playing the Jets and not the Giants, so it's just an away game for me," Tuck said.

A self-professed "old soul," Tuck gravitated toward veterans as a young player with the Giants and understands that younger players are now gravitating toward him.

"I can see it, and it's humbling to know that," Tuck said. "I still remember walking into the locker room my rookie year and watching Michael Strahan as a person of influence and watching how he handled things.

"For someone like Khalil Mack, I want to make sure I do my due diligence to make sure he understands what this game can do for him and he gets the best of this game the way Strahan did for me."

Raiders defensive tackle Stacy McGee, in his second season out of Oklahoma, has paid close attention.

"You're playing alongside one of the greats of the game, learning about tendencies and all the things he's seen," McGee said. "He's got so much to share with us, and not just about football, but about life. And he's very humble and approachable."

Middle linebacker Nick Roach said, "Justin has such a strong influence he can pull other players along with him.'

As detailed in an E:60 feature on ESPN, Tuck ended up at Notre Dame purely by accident. Two recruiters in the area to scout another player ended up at a gas station after taking a wrong turn. When told the recruiters were in town to look at a linebacker, the attendant assumed they were talking about Tuck and directed them to Central Coosa County High.

Tuck, a tight end, defensive end and linebacker, had a big game and was offered a scholarship that night.

After starring at Notre Dame and leaving as the all-time leader in sacks with 241/2, Tuck lasted until the third round because of a persistent knee injury. His nine seasons with the Giants included 601/2 sacks and coming up huge in Super Bowl wins over the New England Patriots after the 2007 and 2011 seasons with two sacks in each game.

Despite 11 sacks last season, the Giants made no serious effort to sign Tuck for a 10th season, and the Raiders reeled him in with a two-year deal worth $11 million.

"You've been in one place nine years, and you know what to expect," Tuck said. "Now I don't know what to expect. We're going into our first game. I don't know how certain guys will respond to adversities or successes. It's all fresh. It keeps you on your toes and it's exciting."

Tuck has instituted MMA training with his usual fitness regimen and firmly believes that "age is a number." Coach Dennis Allen said, "He can still play at a high level and is primed for a very good year."

In New York, Tuck and his wife, Luran, founded RUSH to Literacy (Read, Understand, Succeed, Hope) to promote literacy among school children. Tuck made personal appearances at schools in New York, New Jersey and Alabama and donated more than 50,000 books.

The program is being continued in Oakland, with Tuck finalizing plans for his first appearance at a local school.

In 2011, Tuck authored a children's book called "Home Field Advantage" that included humorous accounts of his youth in Kellyton, growing up as the youngest of seven children -- including five older sisters.

Tuck said he's working on a second book that in a way mirrors his NFL career.

"I've written most of it, but I'm not finished with it yet," Tuck said.

MENELIK WATSON

Raiders OL Watson using less words, more action

By Scott Bair
July 31, 2014

Menelik Watson is tough to track down. Interview requests were made throughout the offseason, and the Raiders right tackle declined each one.

It's not like Watson had nothing to talk about. The 2013 second-round pick was in the process of rebounding from a rookie year plagued by injury. Improved health and increased work ethic has the Englishman on track for a breakout year. Everyone loves a good comeback story, but Watson wanted no part of it.

He insists it wasn't personal, Raider Nation. Watson just wanted to stay focused.

Last week, however, Watson broke radio silence. And, as he always does, the 25-year old discussed his mindset and newfound focus with color and candor.

"I had a mission in mind, which was to get my body back to where it needs to be," Watson said. "I guess that's part of the reason why I've been quiet with the media, because it's just really been about action. It's not about talking anymore, or saying I'm going to be this or I'm going to be that.

"Coming up, nobody knew who I was, and back then it was all about action. I'm just trying to get back to that, working and not talking, and just getting it done, because we have a lot to do this year. It's going to be a special year if we keep our minds to it."

Watson admits to flying blind somewhat last season, without understanding what it took to thrive at an NFL level. That's understandable, considering he had just two years football experience, just one at the NCAA level, before turning pro.

Combine that with a bit of a temper and you have the perfect climate for frustration. That was evident last training camp, when he re-aggravated a calf injury on his first day back. Watson stormed off to the side of the training room, slammed his helmet and sulked.

A calf injury was followed by knee problems that messed with his regular season, and kept him out of sync. Despite so many setbacks, Watson doesn't consider 2013 a lost season.

Valuable life lessons were embedded in all that adversity, and he's a smarter player for the experience.

"The couple of snaps that I had last year, sometimes I would get a little frustrated when I was out there and I had to deal with that," Watson said. "I had to learn how to get over a play, learn how to move on. I took a lot from last year, just from watching the vets and what they were going through and everything like that. It wasn't a wasted year. It was from a physical standpoint, a play and production standpoint, but it definitely wasn't wasted."

Watson is now a practitioner of preventative medicine, pouring significant effort into ensuring he stays on the field. He's taken most every first-team rep at right tackle since the start of the offseason program, and seems poised to start the season in that spot.

"I've been very impressed with what he's been able to do over there on the right side," head coach Dennis Allen said. "I think it helps him on a day-in and day-out basis that he's going against guys like Justin Tuck and LaMarr Woodley and Khalil Mack. That's going to do nothing but really get both sides of the ball better. He's done a good job, he's picking up what we're asking him to do offensively, his fundamentals and technique have improved and he's just got to keep continuing to work."

The offensive line is far bigger, stronger and deeper than a year ago, and figures to be a team strength. Much of that depends on Watson staying healthy and living up to his potential, something he struggled with a year ago.

"I love this game and it hurt a lot to have it taken away last year," Watson said. "This is a new year, and last year is behind me and that's where it's going to stay."

CHARLES WOODSON

BAY AREA NEWS GROUP (OAKLAND TRIBUNE, CC TIMES, SJ MERCURY NEWS)

NFL preview: Raiders' Charles Woodson right at home in wine country

By Daniel Brown

September 4, 2014

Even as the superstar face of his own wine label, Charles Woodson likes to mix things up with the vineyard's special-teamers. He and a Raiders strength coach once arrived for harvest time at 5 a.m. on the team's day off, each of them wielding shears and snipping grapes off the vine.

"We're just plugging away one bunch at a time, and all of a sudden you see this wave of guys -- whoosh! -- blowing through this vineyard," the eight-time Pro Bowl selection recalled. "We might have gotten three bunches off the vine by the time they finished the whole row."

Woodson tells this story with a glass of the finished product in his left hand, a 2008 cabernet sauvignon. This is his wine, his wine bar, his way of winding down. The defensive back sits in a corner booth of the Cult Following in downtown Napa so freshly removed from the Raiders practice field that he still is dressed in shorts and a silver-and-black Windbreaker.

TwentyFour wines, named in honor of Woodson's jersey number in Oakland, originated in 2001. It is an unusual pairing, the kid from small-town Ohio and the masters of the Napa Valley, but Woodson has found his niche with a well-reviewed cab that sells for $112 a bottle.

"He's really well thought of up here in the wine country," said Carmen Policy, a former 49ers executive who has his own acclaimed Casa Piena label. "A lot of people around here really roll their eyes, 'Oh, great, another celebrity who wants to put their name on the label.' But Charles is serious about wanting to produce a quality wine and about understanding the process."

Woodson, 37, enters this season on a one-year contract with the Raiders and, though he has said he has no plans to retire, it's easy to speculate that 2014 will put the cork in his Hall of Fame career. Woodson is two years removed from his last Pro Bowl selection and is one of only three players still active from the 1998 draft (Peyton Manning and Matt Hasselbeck are the others).

Whenever he does decide to hang 'em up, retirement sure looks inviting. He strolled into Cult Following about 20 minutes after practice, found a comfortable chair and a server who, without being asked, handed him a glass of the 2008 -- always the 2008.

The vineyard is down the road, about 25 miles on the St. Helena Highway, to Calistoga. From those 12 acres, Woodson expects to produce 1,200 cases of cabernet and 1,000 cases of sauvignon blanc this year.

The patch of land sits below the towering spectacle of Sterling Vineyards -- all 1,200 acres of it -- and the shadow serves as a reminder that Woodson is still just a role player here.

"You know that little cap on your bicycle that keeps the air in? That's how small we are compared to the rest of the wineries in the world," said Rick Ruiz, the director of operations for TwentyFour Wines.

Ruiz, a convivial Napa native who learned his craft at the Robert Mondavi Winery, keeps an eye on the reds and whites while Woodson is busy with football.

The two agree on everything about wine -- except for how they met. Woodson said it was through a promotional event at Raiders camp; Ruiz said it was in the tasting room at Mondavi, after he spotted the Heisman Trophy winner drinking a bottle he had worked on.

Woodson concedes the tiebreaker when Ruiz argues that he is much more likely to remember the day he met Charles Woodson than the other way around.

Either way, the friendship began in 2001, when Woodson was in his fourth season in the NFL -- and still a fledgling rookie when it came to wine. He lacked versatility.

"When I started trying wine, I started drinking merlot, and that's all I had," Woodson said. "I would go to dinner, and I'd see people drinking wine, and if I ordered anything, it would just be a merlot."

"Merlot. Merlot. Merlot," Ruiz said, still exasperated. "It got to the point where I told him, 'Charles, you're missing some of the best things in the world by only drinking merlot.' "

It took about six months of pestering, but Woodson eventually expanded his game. That was a turning point. Soon, Woodson wanted to know everything about the process -- from the agriculture to the economics to the marketing -- and started to impress Ruiz, 44, with his knack for pairing the right wines with any dish.

"Initially what drew me to it was that it seems to be a culture here in the valley, and there always seems to be a family atmosphere around wine," Woodson said. "People are truly into it. They come to the restaurant, they have their own bottle. They bring it in as a conversation piece.

"It was a culture. And I was interested in the whole deal. What is this all about?"

For kicks, they made a single barrel for charity -- merlot, of course -- starting in 2004. But a funny thing happened on the way to the glass: It was delicious.

"That's when we realized that we should start getting serious," Ruiz said.

With Gustavo A. Gonzalez, who also began his career at Mondavi, aboard as the winemaker, TwentyFour Wines had its release party in 2009, when they shared their '05, '06 and '07 vintages.

Among the early converts was Scott Lewis, the proprietor at V Wine Cellar, who said that Woodson's creation now ranks among the best cabs from the region, a conversation that includes Outpost, Melka Wines and Policy's Casa Piena.

"Sometimes, with these vanity projects, people don't always put in the time and effort into making something great," Lewis said. "But Charles is like Carmen in that he put in his due diligence when it came to getting something to his liking. He's not a flash in the pan."

Woodson's beloved '08, for example, offers brier notes and black fruits. The oak is integrated but not overdone, as with so many luxury Napa reds. It's a big wine with firm tannins, but not saddled with the uber-ripe fruit that has become the industry standard.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

"What I'm trying to do as a winemaker is reflect Charles' taste, what he wants," Gonzalez said. "The reason we picked the vineyard we did is because it was the one most capable of producing his style."

In creating his own label, Woodson joined a deep roster of other sports figures that have made a name in the wine business, such as Tom Seaver, Dick Vermeil, Rich Aurilia, Jeff Gordon and Ernie Els.

All along, Woodson has retained the charity element. With every bottle sold, Woodson donates $10 to the C.S. Mott Children's Hospital at his alma mater, the University of Michigan.

At the time of the original release party, Woodson was in Green Bay, where he spent seven seasons monitoring his vineyard via text messages and emails back home. Ruiz also made frequent visits to Packers country, and the two delighted in converting cheeseheads into wine snobs. The wine events had fun with food pairings. (Handy tip: A bratwurst goes best with a red.)

Ruiz recounted those ambassador trips while standing amid the rows at TwentyFour vineyards on a soft summer morning. He plucked from a vine and held a single grape in the palm of his hand.

"This thing right here has built us a friendship with people for life. We have so many friends in the Midwest," Ruiz says. "So now our thing is, we're trying to get those kinds of friendships with the Bay Area people. One Raider fan at a time, we want to come toward them."

When Woodson returned to Oakland last season, he resumed trying to pair his reds and whites with the Silver & Black. TwentyFour Wines set up a tent in the parking lot on game days in an attempt to make Woodson's wine the drink of choice at tailgate parties -- the Raiders Libation.

At first, nobody bothered to look up.

"Even the cops looked at us like we were from Mars," Ruiz said. "And by the third home game, everybody was our new best friend. People started to realize that you can drink a Coors Light every day of the week. It's not very often you can taste a 2007 Calistoga Cabernet from Charles Woodson's vineyard, especially because we were limited in our production."

There is no winery to visit, but the public can meet at the vineyard by appointment. For now, Woodson steers people toward Cult Following, the wine bar on First Street in downtown Napa.

Next up are tentative plans for a Woodson wine tasting room to open in September, another place to toast one of the greatest careers ever put together by a defensive back. Woodson enters this season needing one more interception return for a touchdown to tie Rod Woodson's NFL record of 12. (Charles and Rod Woodson are not related.)

Charles Woodson's 909 career interception return yards also rank second among active players, behind Ed Reed's (1,590).

Once he is done picking off passes, Woodson can really focus on picking off those grapes. He will savor retirement soon, but he sees no reason to wait for the good life.

"I like to call my wines 'anytime wines,' " he said. "You just want to sit and open up a bottle and watch 'The Blacklist' on a Monday night? Open it up, and it's very easy. It's very approachable."

GREEN BAY PRESS GAZETTE

“Walking legend” Woodson returns to Green Bay

By Ryan Wood

August 21, 2014

Eighteen months have passed, but Green Bay Packers coach Mike McCarthy still remembers the conversation with general manager Ted Thompson.

An era had ended. Charles Woodson, the Packers' most important defensive player this side of Reggie White, was cut with two years left on his contract. His release was both dollars and sense. Woodson missed nine games with a broken right collarbone in 2012. In 2013, at the age of 37, he would count $10 million against the Packers' salary cap.

The cold, calculated business of the NFL bends for no one, not even an eight-time Pro Bowler and former league defensive player of the year. That unwritten rule didn't make the decision easy.

It remains one of the hardest days of McCarthy's tenure.

"When Ted and I sat down that day and the final decision is made, you go back to his first year and everything that was accomplished since then, and just how the whole dynamics of our football team changed," McCarthy said. "I mean, Charles was the NFL defensive player of the year. He had incredible success here.

"So yeah, definitely. That's definitely one of the tougher ones."

Woodson returned to the place his career started, signing with the Oakland Raiders last season. For the first time since his release, Woodson will play at Lambeau Field when Oakland travels to Green Bay for the third preseason game at 7 p.m. Friday. With retirement inching closer, it could be a final chance for fans to say goodbye.

A few "thank yous" would be well-earned.

"It'll be great to be lined up there in front of the Green Bay fans," Woodson told reporters in Oakland.

In 100 games stretched over seven seasons with the Packers, Woodson compiled a Hall of Fame résumé. He was one of the NFL's greatest playmakers, with 38 interceptions, 15 forced fumbles, 11½ sacks and 10 touchdowns (nine off interception returns) in Green Bay. No defensive player in the league found the end zone more often.

McCarthy isn't the only one with fond memories of Woodson. Packers quarterback Aaron Rodgers called Woodson one of his "all-time favorite teammates" earlier this week.

"Probably the most talented guy, most dominant player that I've played with during his stretch, from his time he got here until he left," Rodgers said. "I mean, he was so dominant in the secondary. ... He's a future Hall of Famer. I'm proud to be able to say I played with him, won a Super Bowl with him. He was a humongous part of that, and I really miss his presence around here."

Rodgers said Woodson played an invaluable role in his development.

Oakland Raiders Feature Clips

When he first entered the league, Rodgers practiced against Woodson every day while quarterbacking the Packers' scout team. Nothing like starting a career competing against a cornerback with 56 career interceptions. After Rodgers was promoted to starter following Brett Favre's departure, he continued taking reps against Woodson.

A friendship struck over time, two great players appreciating the other.

"I learned so much from him," Rodgers said.

For each on-field lesson, nothing enlightened Rodgers more than watching Woodson lead the team. The presence he brought inside the locker room, the way he made everyone on the Packers' defense better, went beyond the numbers.

Perhaps Woodson's greatest contribution to Green Bay came in the Soldier Field locker room following the Packers' win over the Chicago Bears in the 2010 NFC championship game. Rodgers retold the tale Tuesday of one of the most famous postgame speeches in franchise history. Woodson vowed the Packers would go see President Barack Obama — the Bears' unofficial First Fan — if he wouldn't go see them in the Super Bowl.

"White House on three," Woodson finished.

"Charles is a better speaker than I am to the team," Rodgers said. "I mean, he had an incredible ability from the first time he really got in there until he was done with us of being able to command the room. Charles had that presence when he walked into a room that — there's something with the energy and the charisma that he has — that he could really get everybody's attention and guys cared about what he said."

His words carried weight because few players performed at a high level longer.

Packers linebacker Brad Jones never told Woodson how much he meant to him. Inside the locker room, such sentiments usually go unshared. But when Jones was growing up in Lansing, Mich., during the 1990s, he wore the No. 2 jersey on his middle school football team. It was the same number Woodson wore while winning the Heisman Trophy at Michigan.

"I remember everything," Jones said. "I followed him for a long time. Again, things I've never told him — I hate that I'm saying this now — but I always looked up to him for a long, long time. I think the way he carried himself and the way he played, how he finished, I think it was easy for everybody to kind of look up to him.

"Somebody who is doing everything right — who'll study the film and then go out there and produce. He didn't make a big deal about it. The guy walked around here like it was nothing."

Jones said he and Woodson kept in touch over the past 18 months, but there's more than 2,200 miles between Green Bay and Oakland. Tonight, the distance will disappear. Jones is looking forward to sharing a stadium with Woodson once again.

"Going from your idol to your friend is a cool thing," Jones said. "He's a walking legend. It'll be really good to see him."
