BRONCOS OFFENSIVE NOTES

QUICKLY:

- * Adam Gase enters his second season as offensive coordinator for the Broncos after coaching quarterbacks for the club from 2011-12 and wide receivers from 2009-10.
- * QB Peyton Manning, who was signed by the Broncos on March 21, 2012, is the league's only five-time MVP and the NFL's active leader in nearly every major passing category.
- * Manning owns the second-most regular-season wins (173) by a starting quarterback in NFL history, trailing only Brett Favre in that category.
- * Manning is the NFL career leader in career touchdown passes (513), having broken Brett Favre's previous record of 508 touchdowns in Denver's Week 7 win against San Francisco.
- * Manning threw his 100th touchdown as a Bronco in his 35th game with the club to become the fastest player in NFL history to reach 100 touchdown passes with a team.
 - * Manning owns an NFL-record 10 seasons with at least 12 wins.
- * Manning has orchestrated an NFL-record 50 game-winning drives in the fourth quarter or overtime.
- * Manning's 27 career AFC Offensive Player of the Week honors are the most by a player since the award was initiated by the NFL in 1984.
- * Manning has been named to 13 career Pro Bowls to tie for the third-most selections in NFL history.
- * Manning threw an NFL-record 55 touchdown passes and 5,477 yards for Denver in 2013.
- * WR Demaryius Thomas has posted at least 100 receiving yards in each of his last four games to set a team record, and his 626 receiving yards in his last three games are the most in team history for a four-game stretch in a season.
- * WR Emmanuel Sanders produced his first three career 100-yard receiving outputs in Games 2-4 and posted a career-best three touchdown catches against San Diego in Week 8.
- * WR Wes Welker owns 860 career receptions to represent the most by an undrafted player in league history.
- * TE Julius Thomas owns three career games with at least 100 receiving yards and two touchdowns, representing one third of the total such performances by a Broncos tight end.
- * RB Ronnie Hillman totaled 100 rushing yards on 24 attempts (4.2 avg.) against the Jets in Week 6 to become just the fourth player in team history to rush for 100 yards in his first NFL start.

BRONCOS OWN NFL'S LONGEST SCORING STREAK

The Broncos' 347-game scoring streak is the longest active streak in the league. The streak, which began on Monday Night Football with a 16-13 overtime loss at Seattle on Nov. 30, 1992, is the second-longest such streak in NFL history.

LONGEST SCORING STREAKS, NFL HISTORY (Regular Season only)

Team	Games	Years
1. San Francisco	420	1977-2004
2. Denver	347*	1992-Pres.
Indianapolis	329*	1993-Pres.
4. Cleveland	274	1950-71
Minnesota	260	1991-2007

HOME SELLOUT STREAK

The Broncos have sold out every home game since the beginning of the 1970 season with the exception of two replacement games played during the 1987 strike (both games were sold out before the strike).

Denver has thus sold out 346 consecutive regular-season games, which marks the second-longest home sellout streak in the NFL. With postseason games factored in, the total reaches 365.

LONGEST HOME SELLOUT STREAKS, REGULAR SEASON, NFL HISTORY

(*—the second number is the percentage the quarterback has put his team in position to score, allowing for missed field goals and subtracting those drives ended by the clock and replaced due to injury. Quarterbacks who leave the game during a drive only get a replacement credit if team goes on to earn at least one first down. Blocked punts for safeties counted as drive ended by punt; —does not include plays when not at helm or not truly setting a play in motion, i.e., muffed punts/kneel downs/spiked balls: Manning 12-for-[-8], Osweiler 2-for-[-2]; Opponents 1-for-1.

THOMAS AT A GLANCE:

• A fourth-year tight end who appeared in 23 regular-season games (15 starts) during his first three years with Denver, totaling 66 receptions for 793 yards (12.0 avg.) with 12 touchdowns.

- Earned his first career Pro Bowl selection in 2013 after recording the most touchdowns (12) by a tight end in Broncos history (T-5th in the NFL) and contributing 65 catches for 788 yards (12.1 avg.).
- Owns two of the Top 3 receiving games by a Broncos tight end since 2000 and joins Pro Football Hall of Famer Shannon Sharpe as the only tight ends in team history with at least two 100-yard, multiple-touchdown games.
- Appeared in Denver's first four games in 2012 before being shut down for the rest of the season due to a lingering ankle injury.
- Saw action in five games (1 start) for the Broncos as a rookie in 2011 despite being limited by an ankle injury suffered in Week 2.
- Started in Denver's 2011 season opener vs. Oakland (9/12/11) and joined three other teammates as the first rookie quartet to start a season opener since at least 1968.
- Played just one season of college football after playing basketball for Portland State University and earned first-team All-Big Sky Conference by finishing third on the Vikings with 29 receptions for 453 yards (15.6 avg.) with two touchdowns as a senior.
- Participated in the East-West Shrine Game following his senior season and caught a 5-yard touchdown to go along with a two-point conversion for the West.
- Lettered four times in basketball for the Vikings, leading them to their first two NCAA Tournament appearances in school history (2008, '09) and finishing as the program's all-time leader in games played (121), career wins (78) and field goal percentage (.663).
- Selected by the Broncos in the fourth round (129th overall) of the 2011 NFL Draft.

CAREER TRANSACTIONS: Signed by Denver as a draft choice 7/27/11.

2014: Thomas led the team with seven receptions for 104 yards (14.9 avg.) with three touchdowns in the season opener vs. Ind. (9/7) and was named AFC Offensive Player of the Week... Was just the ninth time a Denver tight end has totaled 100 yards and multiple touchdowns (third time for Thomas) in a game... Caught QB Peyton Manning's 500th career touchdown pass in the first quarter vs. Ari. (10/5)... Broke the franchise record set last year for most touchdown catches (7) through the Broncos' first four games of a season in the fourth quarter against the Cardinals... Hauled in two touchdowns in Denver's road win at NYJ (10/12) to give him nine receiving touchdowns on the season to tie for the most in NFL history through a player's first five games (most among tight ends)... Marked his third contest with multiple touchdowns this season to set a Broncos record for a tight end.

2013: Thomas started all 14 games played and earned his first career Pro Bowl selection after finishing with 65 receptions for 788 yards (12.1 avg.) with 12 touchdowns... Tied for fifth in the league with his 12 receiving scores and passed Pro Football Hall of Famer Shannon Sharpe for the most touchdowns in a season by a Broncos tight end... Opened all three postseason contests and contributed 18 catches for 188 yards (10.4 avg.)... Caught five passes for 110 yards and a pair of touchdowns vs. Bal. (9/5) to represent his first career 100-yard receiving game... Set career highs in receptions (9) and receiving yards (122) while adding a pair of touchdowns at Dal. (10/6)... Recorded the second-longest scoring catch by a tight end in team history with his 74-yard touchdown at S.D. (11/10)... Set a franchise tight end record with his 11th touchdown catch of the season vs. Ten. (12/8)... Caught six passes for 78 yards (13.0 avg.) at Hou. (12/22), including a 25-yard scoring reception that represented quarterback Peyton Manning's NFL record-breaking 51st of the season... Led the team with 76 receiving yards on six catches (12.7 avg.) in his postseason debut in Denver's AFC Divisional Playoff Game vs. S.D. (1/12)... Paced the club with eight catches for 85 yards (10.6 avg.) in Denver's AFC Championship Game vs. N.E. (1/19).

2012: Thomas saw action in Denver's first four regular-season games before being declared a gameday inactive for the remainder of the season.

2011: Selected by Denver in the fourth round (129th overall) of the 2011 NFL Draft, Thomas played five regular-season games (1 start) and posted one reception for five yards as a rookie... Joined three other teammates who became the first quartet of rookies to start a season opener for the Broncos since at least 1968... Inactive for 11 regular-season games and two playoff contests due to an ankle injury sustained in Denver's Week 2 win vs. Cin. (9/18).

COLLEGE: Thomas, who played just one season of college football, saw action in 11 games (1 start) for Portland State University in 2010 and earned first-team All-Big Sky Conference honors after finishing third on the team with 29 receptions for 453 yards (15.6 avg.) with two touchdowns... Hauled in nine passes of 20 or more yards and produced 18 first downs... Invited to play in the East-West Shrine Game, where he hauled in a 5-yard touchdown pass and caught the ensuing two-point conversion to account for the West's only points of the game... Walked on to the football team during the spring after exhausting his eligibility in basketball.

PERSONAL: Thomas attended Tokay High School in Lodi, Calif., where he was a standout center and power forward on the basketball team... Helped lead Tokay to a 25-9 overall record and a Sac-Joaquin Section title during his senior year when he was named co-Player of the Year by The Record (San Joaquin)... Lettered four seasons in basketball at Portland State, setting school records for games played (121), career wins (78) and field goal percentage (.663)... Named to the Big Sky Conference All-Tournament Team in 2008 and '09, helping the Vikings capture conference titles and advance to the NCAA Tournament in both seasons... Averaged 10.8 points and 5.9 rebounds while shooting a school-record .671 from the floor as a senior... Graduated from Portland State with a degree in business administration... Julius Thomas was born on June 27, 1988, in Stockton, Calif.

Denver 31, Indianapolis 24

Sunday, Sept. 7, 2014 • 6:30 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Mostly Cloudy, 75°, Wind NW 6 mph • TIME: 3:13 • ATTENDANCE: 76,939

The defending AFC Champion Denver Broncos held off a late charge by quarterback Andrew Luck and the Indianapolis Colts to preserve a 31-24 victory at Sports Authority Field at Mile High on opening weekend.

Quarterback Peyton Manning connected with tight end Julius Thomas for a touchdown on three occasions in the second quarter, and safety Rahim Moore netted the first two-interception game of his career to lead the Broncos to their first win over the Colts since 2004

The Broncos notched the first score of the game midway through the first quarter with a 21-yard field goal by Brandon McManus, capping a 16-play, 77-yard drive.

On the ensuing possession, with the Colts driving, newly acquired cornerback Aqib Talib tipped a pass from Luck and Moore hauled in the deflected ball for his first interception of the game.

The turnover prompted a scoring flurry by the Broncos, as Denver's next three possessions ended with Manning-to-Thomas touchdowns passes of 3, 35 and 5 yards, respectively.

Luck put the Colts on the board on their final drive of the first half. The third-year quarterback went 6-for-6 passing for 62 yards and capped the drive with a 9-yard touchdown run to pull within 24-7 at the half

While the first half showcased the Broncos' high-octane offense, Denver's revamped defense was on display throughout the night, creating timely turnovers and earning critical stops.

After the Colts forced a quick Denver three-and-out to start the second half, Luck moved the Colts deep into Broncos territory, but on fourth-and-goal from the 1-yard line, the Denver defense, led by linebacker Brandon Marshall, stopped Luck's quarterback sneak short of the goal line to force a turnover on downs.

Indianapolis marched down the field on its next possession and moved into a first-and-goal situation at the Denver 4-yard line. After stops on back-to-back plays, Denver defensive end DeMarcus Ware sacked Luck on third down to force a field goal by kicker Adam Vinatieri that cut the Broncos' lead to 24-10.

Early in the fourth quarter, Denver running back Montee Ball scored on a 3-yard touchdown run.

Moore's second interception was sandwiched between fourth quarter touchdowns by the Colts. Rookie cornerback and first-round draft pick Bradley Roby deflected a fourth-down pass from Luck to wide receiver Reggie Wayne to thwart the Colts' final drive of the game.

The victory gave Manning (22-of-36 for 269 yards, 3 TDs, 0 INT, 111.9 rtg.) his first victory against the club he spent 14 seasons with from 1997-2011 and made him just the second quarterback to earn a victory against every NFL franchise.

Denver 24, Kansas City 17

Sunday, Sept. 14, 2014 • 2:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Partly Cloudy, 85°, Wind SE 7 mph • TIME: 3:08 • ATTENDANCE: 76,900

For the second week in a row, the Denver Broncos defense rose to the challenge in the waning moments to fend off a comeback, as Denver defeated Kansas City 24-17 at Sports Authority Field at Mile High Stadium, improving to 2-0 on the season.

A week after rookie cornerback Bradley Roby batted down a fourth-down pass from Andrew Luck to help the Broncos hold off the Colts, Denver defensive tackle Terrance Knighton deflected a pass from Chiefs quarterback Alex Smith on fourth-and-goal with 18 seconds left to nix Kansas City's comeback attempt.

Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning and the Broncos were in control through the first half, but the Chiefs played keep-away from the five-time MVP in the second half, possessing the ball for nearly 21 minutes through the final two quarters.

On the game's opening drive, the Broncos' offense marched 80 yards on seven plays, highlighted by a 48-yard pass from Manning to wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders on the first play from scrimmage. The drive continued with a pass-run-pass mix and ended with a 4-yard touchdown pass from Manning to tight end Julius Thomas. The touchdown catch was Thomas' fourth of the year, the most by a Bronco in team history through two games.

After a Chiefs field goal and a 2-yard touchdown run by running back Knile Davis put Kansas City up 10-7, Manning again took charge and drove Denver down the field. A 7-play, 75-yard drive culminated with a touchdown pass from Manning to tight end Jacob Tamme to put the Broncos back in the lead, 14-10.

The Broncos scored on their final drive of the half, as Manning connected on two critical passes to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas. The first of Manning's passes to Thomas was a 21-yard gain on third-and-6. The second connection between the two was a 12-yard touchdown pass, giving the Broncos a 21-10 halftime lead.

The Chiefs started the second half with a 19-play, 10-minute drive that ended with a missed field goal by kicker Cairo Santos, as the third quarter featured only one possession for each team and zero points.

Davis added a 4-yard touchdown run to cut Denver's lead to 21-17 midway through the fourth quarter.

Manning and Co. answered with a 7-play, 44-yard drive that ended with a 20-yard field goal by kicker Brandon McManus and put the Broncos up by a touchdown, 24-17.

Manning completed 21-of-26 passes (80.8%) for 242 yards with three touchdowns (143.9 rtg.) in Denver's win to mark the second consecutive week he posted three touchdowns and zero interceptions.

Sanders posted the first 100-yard receiving game of his career, totaling eight catches for 108 yards (13.5 avg.).

Seattle 26, Denver 20 (OT)

Sunday, Sept. 21, 2014 • 1:25 p.m. PDT • CenturyLink Fleld • Seattle, WA

WEATHER: Sunny, 70°, Wind SSE 7 mph • TIME: 3:33 • ATTENDANCE: 68,447

Despite a 14-point fourth-quarter comeback by Denver, the Seattle Seahawks toppled the Broncos 26-20 in overtime in a rematch of Super Bowl XLVIII at CenturyLink Field in Seattle.

The first half was largely controlled by each team's defense. After the clubs traded field goals in the first quarter, Seahawks quarterback Russell Wilson threw touchdown passes to wide receiver Ricardo Lockette and running back Marshawn Lynch, giving the Seahawks a 17-3 halftime lead.

The third quarter featured three possessions for each team, but neither squad found the end zone.

The Seahawks began their first possession of the fourth quarter on their own 8-yard line, but a sack by Denver defensive end DeMarcus Ware backed Seattle up to the 1-yard line. On third down, Denver's Nate Irving and T.J. Ward combined to tackle Lynch in the end zone, resulting in a safety to cut the Seahawks lead to 17-5.

On the Broncos' following drive, quarterback Peyton Manning (31-for-49 passing, 303 yards, 2 TDs, 1 INT, 85.7 rtg) connected with tight end Julius Thomas on a shovel pass for a three-yard touchdown to make the score 17-12. The touchdown catch was Thomas' fifth of the season, the most in Broncos history through three games.

The Broncos marched into Seattle territory on their next possession, but Seahawks safety Kam Chancellor intercepted a pass from Manning and returned it 52 yards, setting up a 28-yard field goal from Hauschka with 59 seconds remaining to make the score 20-12.

Manning took Denver 80 yards down the field in just six plays and 41 seconds, capping the drive with a 26-yard touchdown pass to tight end Jacob Tamme with 18 seconds remaining.

The Manning-to-Tamme scoring pass was Manning's 100th touchdown pass as Bronco, making him the fastest player in NFL history to record 100 touchdowns with a team (35th career game).

Manning then found wide receiver Demaryius Thomas, who made a leaping catch in the back of the end zone, to convert the two-point attempt and tie the game 20-20 to force overtime.

That would be the last time Denver's offense would touch the ball, as the Broncos lost the coin flip and Seattle took possession to begin overtime.

The Seahawks drove down the field against a Denver defense that had made key stops throughout the game but found itself winded in the waning moments. Seattle used several short passes and quarterback Russell Wilson scrambled to convert a pair of third downs before Lynch took a first-and-goal handoff from the 6-yard line and plunged into the end zone to clinch the victory for Seattle.

Denver 41, Arizona 20

Sunday, Oct. 5, 2014 • 2:05 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Sunny, 71°, Wind NW 10 mph • TIME: 3:16 • ATTENDANCE: 76,895

Denver quarterback Peyton Manning threw his 500th career touchdown pass en route to a record-setting 41-20 victory over the previously unbeaten Arizona Cardinals in front of a crowd of 76,895 at Sports Authority Field at Mile High.

The Broncos totaled 568 yards (92 rushing, 476 passing) to set a franchise single-game mark in that category.

The Cardinals received the opening kickoff and took their first drive into Denver's red zone before settling for a 33-yard field goal to take a 3-0 lead

Manning then orchestrated a 12-play, 80-yard drive, and the Broncos took a 7-3 lead on Manning's 500th career touchdown pass—a 7-yard toss to tight end Julius Thomas.

Arizona added another field goal on its next possession, and Denver carried a 7-6 lead into the second quarter.

On the Broncos' second possession of the second frame, Manning threw a short slant to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas, and Thomas weaved in and out of traffic for a 31-yard touchdown to give Denver a 14-6 lead.

Later in the quarter, Manning attempted a screen pass to Montee Ball, but Cardinals defensive end Calais Campbell intercepted the pass and returned it 23 yards to the Denver 5-yard line. Arizona running back Andre Ellington would score on the next play to cut Denver's lead to 14-13.

With 1:48 remaining in the first half, Denver's offense took over on its own 14-yard line. On the first play of the series, Manning again connected with Demaryius Thomas, who outran the defense for an 86-yard touchdown score. The long catch-and-run score was the fourth-longest such play in franchise history.

On the final play of the first half, Manning completed a 5-yard pass to wide receiver Wes Welker. The reception was the 850th of Welker's career, as he passed Broncos Ring of Famer Rod Smith for most career receptions by an undrafted player in NFL history.

Denver kicker Brandon McManus made a 44-yard field goal to open the scoring in the second half, and Arizona would later cut Denver's lead to 24-20 when rookie third-string quarterback Logan Thomas threw an 81-yard touchdown pass to Ellington.

McManus added a 41-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter, marking the first of three consecutive Denver scoring drives.

Manning found Julius Thomas again for a 12-yard score, and rookie running back Juwan Thompson scored his first career touchdown on an 8-yard run for Denver's final score of the game.

For the game, Manning completed 31-of-47 passes (66.0%) for 479 yards with four touchdowns and two interceptions (110.2 rtg.).

Denver 31, N.Y. Jets 17

Sunday, Oct. 12, 2014 • 1:02 p.m. EDT • MetLife Stadium • East Rutherford, N.J.

WEATHER: Sunny, 61°, Wind NE 5 mph • TIME: 3:16 • ATTENDANCE: 78,160

The Denver Broncos, boosted by a strong defensive effort and a balanced offensive attack, earned a gritty 31-17 road win against the New York Jets in front of 78,160 at MetLife Stadium in East Rutherford, New Jersey.

Denver quarterback Peyton Manning threw for three touchdowns and running back Ronnie Hillman (24-100) became just the fourth player in team history to rush for 100 yards in his first NEI start

The Broncos opened the game with a 5-play, 62-yard drive that ended with kicker Brandon McManus booting a 37-yard field goal to give Denver a 3-0 lead. The drive was highlighted by a 54-yard pass from Manning to wide receiver Demaryius Thomas on the first play of the game.

The Jets moved into Denver territory for the first time midway through the first quarter, and after a roughing the passer penalty gave New York a 1st-and-10 in the red zone, Geno Smith connected on his next three passes. His third completion was a 2-yard touchdown pass to rookie tight end Jace Amaro to give the Jets a 7-3 lead.

Denver would reclaim the lead in the second quarter when Manning scrambled around on third-and-goal from the 1 and flicked the ball to an open Demaryius Thomas in the end zone.

With 27 seconds remaining in the first half, Manning capped a 9-play, 80-yard drive with a 22-yard touchdown pass to tight end Julius Thomas to give the Broncos a 17-7 lead at the intermission. It marked Denver's fifth touchdown drive after the first half two-minute warning this season.

The Broncos would score on their first drive of the second half when Manning connected with Julius Thomas on a slant route for a 4-yard touchdown pass to give Denver a 24-7 lead. The receiving touchdown was the ninth for Julius Thomas, the most by a tight end in NFL history through his team's first five games of a season.

After Jets kicker Nick Folk added a field goal on the final drive of the third quarter, New York cut Denver's lead to 24-17 with a 2-yard touchdown pass from Smith to former Broncos wide receiver Eric Decker.

Smith and the Jets had a final opportunity with 56 seconds remaining, but a sack by linebacker Von Miller put New York at its own 1-yard line with 23 seconds left.

On the next play, Smith was intercepted by cornerback Aqib Talib, who returned it 22 yards for a score to seal the game for Denver.

Manning finished 22-of-33 passing (66.7%) for 237 yards and three touchdowns (117.9 rtg) while Demaryius Thomas (10-124) produced his second consecutive 100-yard receiving output.

Denver 42, San Francisco 17

Sunday, Oct. 19, 2014 • 6:30 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Mostly Clear, 67°, Wind NE 4 mph • TIME: 3:08 • ATTENDANCE: 77,047

Denver quarterback Peyton Manning became the NFL's all-time career touchdown leader in an historic 42-17 victory over the San Francisco 49ers in front of crowd of 77,047 at Sports Authority Field at Mile High Stadium in Denver.

Manning entered the game needing just three scores to pass Brett Favre on the NFL's all-time passing touchdowns list. After a pair of first quarter scoring tosses, Manning found wide receiver Demaryius Thomas near the front right pylon for an 8-yard score—the 509th of his career—to break the record.

The historic moment highlighted an impressive all-around performance by the Broncos, who jumped out to an early lead and cruised to their largest victory of the season.

Manning connected with wide receiver Emmanuel Sanders on a 3-yard scoring toss to cap Denver's first drive of the game. On the Broncos' following possession, Manning, who was a perfect 8-for-8 passing for 116 yards in the opening quarter, hit wide receiver Wes Welker for a 39-yard touchdown pass to carry a 14-0 lead into the second frame.

San Francisco kicker Phil Dawson knocked in a 22-yard field goal in the second quarter to cut Denver's lead to 14-3, but the Broncos answered on their next drive with Manning's record-setting pass to Thomas to extend the lead to 21-3.

The 49ers added a touchdown just before intermission as quarterback Colin Kaepernick went 5-for-5 for 87 yards on the drive, which ended with a 4-yard scoring toss to wide receiver Stevie Johnson. The Broncos led 21-10 at the half.

The 49ers' first drive of the third quarter ended when Kaepernick overthrew Johnson, allowing Denver cornerback Aqib Talib to notch his 25th career interception.

Denver took over, and Manning launched a 40-yard scoring strike to Thomas on the first play of the possession, giving Denver a 28-10 lead.

Broncos defensive end Malik Jackson sacked Kaepernick for a 9-yard loss to halt the following San Francisco drive, and Denver's quick scores continued. Manning threw a 49-yard pass to Thomas on first down, and after an incompletion, running back Ronnie Hillman scampered 37 yards for another Denver touchdown.

Hillman would add another score on Denver's next possession, as the Broncos took a 42-10 lead into the fourth quarter. San Francisco added a late score from second-string quarterback Blaine Gabbert to wide receiver Bruce Ellington.

Manning finished 22-of-26 for 318 yards with four touchdowns (157.2 rtg.). Thomas posted his third consecutive 100-yard receiving game, catching 8 passes for 171 yards and two scores Defensive end DeMarcus Ware finished with three sacks, and linebacker Brandon Marshall paced Denver with eight tackles.

Denver 35, San Diego 21

Thursday, Oct. 23, 2014 • 6:25 p.m. MDT • Sports Authority Field at Mile High • Denver

WEATHER: Partly Cloudy, 68°, Wind E 3 mph • TIME: 3:05 • ATTENDANCE: 76,907

In a meeting between two of the top teams in the NFL, The Denver Broncos extended their lead in the AFC West with a 35-21 victory against the San Diego Chargers on Thursday Night Football at Sports Authority Field at Mile High Stadium in Denver.

The Broncos offense utilized a balanced attack to rack up 425 yards, while the Denver defense collected two sacks and a pair of interceptions to cool down one of the hottest offenses in the NFL.

After a scoreless first quarter, Denver got on the scoreboard with a 2-yard pass from quarterback Peyton Manning to receiver Emmanuel Sanders, capping 7-play drive that covered 69 yards. Manning was a perfect 4-for-4 passing for 62 yards on the drive, including three completions to Sanders.

The Chargers answered with a 13-play touchdown drive that spanned 84 yards and ended when quarterback Philip Rivers found wide receiver Keenan Allen for a 2-yard score.

Denver's offense moved down the field quickly, as Manning completed four of his first five passes on the next drive. With 39 seconds remaining in the first half, Manning dropped an over-the-shoulder pass into the hands of Sanders, who crossed the goal line for a 31-yard touchdown to give Denver a 14-7 lead heading into halftime.

On the third play of the second half, Rivers' pass intended for Allen was intercepted by Denver cornerback Chris Harris Jr. The Broncos would score six plays later when the Manning-to-Sanders connection struck again for a 3-yard touchdown.

The three touchdowns for Sanders represented a career high and tied for the second-most receiving scores in a single game in team history

After another San Diego series ended with a punt, Denver drove 59 yards in four plays before rookie running back Juwan Thompson scored the second touchdown of his career on a 2-yard run, giving the Broncos a 28-7 lead.

San Diego answered with a 12-play touchdown drive to cut Denver's lead to 28-14, but Denver running back Ronnie Hillman rattled off 37-yard jaunt on the following possession to put the Broncos in Chargers territory.

Thompson scored on a 1-yard run four plays later to extend Denver's lead to 35-14.

The Chargers scored another quick touchdown on their next series, but Denver safety Rahim Moore ended the potential comeback when he picked off a deep pass from Rivers with 4:53 left.

Manning completed 25-of-35 passes (71.4%) for 286 yds with three scores (124.2 rtg), while wideout Demaryius Thomas set a team record with his fourth consecutive 100-yard receiving game (8-105).

Saccomano: Bowlen tribute is perfect

By Jim Saccomano denverbroncos.com October 20, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. - The Pat Bowlen statue and captioned material, all in bronze, is not only the perfect centerpiece for Ring of Fame Plaza, but is perfectly Pat Bowlen.

A number of years ago I was sitting in his office asking him what he would like, in particular, in his media guide bio. Typically, he said, "Nothing, it is fine just the way it is." But then we talked for some time, as per the routine, and along the way he said, "Jim, I want us to be number one in everything."

Not only did I have the lead to his bio, but he had uttered some of the words that define him and his organization.

I was honored to write the material for his tribute in the Ring of Fame Plaza and I included those defining words right under his name.

But I said those were some of the words that define him. Not all.

The other sentence he has said so many times is, "It's not about me."

Every single time anyone tries to praise him, to honor him, he says the same thing. "It's not about me."

And that is one of the reasons his ceremony was low-key, family-oriented and private.unveiled

No big media show for Pat Bowlen. He does not want it that way, never has or will.

But what he does want is to win, and that brings us to the other part of the Pat Bowlen tribute weekend.

The Broncos won big over a terrific team that happens to also be the one which he had a great rivalry with in terms of a race to supremacy during the 1980s and 1990s.

A win is the best way to honor Mr. B, and his team did that against the San Francisco 49ers.

Among so many traits, one of the ones that I have loved—and shared—over the three-plus decades of his ownership, is that he keeps it simple.

Many times we shared a laugh at teams that had convoluted "mission statements," long enough that most employees didn't even know it.

Win with class. Win and represent the team with class in everything you do.

That is about all there is to it for Pat Bowlen and his organization.

And the simple ceremony and fabulous statue, done by Brian Hanlon, is all of that.

And by the way, when we suggested the possibility of Ring of Fame Plaza to Mr. B, it was only in October of 2012.

He authorized it immediately, and it opened exactly one year later with 24 bronze and steel pillars representing the Ring of Famers. The Plaza is centered around the magnificent sculpture of "Broncos," commissioned by the owner and created in Florence, Italy.

Now three more Ring of Famers have been added this year and it is so fitting that Mr. Bowlen is the centerpiece of it all, looking at "his guys" who comprise the Ring.

He may always say "It's not about me," but former National Football League commissioner Paul Tagliabue once commented that Pat was at the center—oftentimes the very head—of every committee that advanced the league forward, whether by television or by collective bargaining.

And is also the only owner in history to have 300 wins in his first 30 years of ownership.

Not about him, but all about him.

His statue is perfectly placed and the perfect tribute.

And, of course, as fitting Pat Bowlen's feelings toward our fans, it is open and available, seven days a week, 24 hours a day, 365 days a year, and free of charge at all times.

Every Bronco fan should take the time to make a visit.

It is always all about the Broncos and our fans.

Statue of Pat Bowlen 'the recognition he so deserved -- but never sought out'

By Andrew Mason DenverBroncos.com October 18, 2014

DENVER -- How do you say, "Thank you," to a man who meant so much to making an organization one of the finest in professional sports? Words only begin to express the emotion behind them. Gestures, no matter how grand, are inadequate.

But what stands at the center of Ring of Fame Plaza outside Sports Authority Field at Mile High is a deep expression of gratitude, and a way to forever honor the legacy of Broncos Owner Pat Bowlen: a nine-foot statue in front of four plaques which commemorate his contributions to the community, his life and the Broncos' success -- which he always regarded as a collaborative accomplishment of the highest order.

"Pat has never sought the spotlight, and never asked for accolades during his 31 years as owner of the Broncos," said his wife, Annabel Bowlen. "To Pat, it is always everyone else that deserves the credit."

And at Saturday's unveiling, some of those key contributors were on hand: Pro Football Hall of Famers Gary Zimmerman, Floyd Little and John Elway, Ring of Famer and longtime Broncos staffer Billy Thompson, team executives, and Bowlen's friends and family.

"Pat's a friend, he's a mentor and he is someone who has clearly made a profound impact not only on the Denver Broncos but the NFL," Elway said. "He is getting the recognition he so deserved -- but never sought out."

A group of sponsors and community leaders called Club 32 -- in honor of the Broncos' first world championship, in Super Bowl XXXII -- made the recognition possible, serving as the benefactors behind the project.

Bowlen's children unveiled the plaques as the twilight settled over the nearby Rocky Mountains. His wife, Annabel, untied the ribbon over the blue drape covering the statue. Together, the family pulled back the drape to reveal the creation of sculptor Brian Hanlon, who also sculpted the busts of the Ring of Famers on the other side of the plaza.

The statue represents Bowlen in the commanding pose he held so often at field level on game days: arms folded, a chiseled face bearing a commanding look, and topped by the sunglasses so often seen as he watched his team go through its paces. It was a look that always gave the impression that his eyes glanced everywhere, at every moment.

And that was not far from the truth. There was not an area of the organization that Bowlen overlooked. Until he stepped away from day-to-day operations to focus on his fight with Alzheimer's disease, Bowlen ensured he had the right people for the jobs, and established a structure that allowed them to succeed to the best of their abilities.

That underscored his standing goal for the Broncos: to "be number one in everything." Those words are now immortalized on the second plaque from the left.

"It all starts with the owner," said President and CEO Joe Ellis, "and it all starts with the guy who, for 31 years, consistently had the same approach, the same mandate to his players, his coaches, his employees: and that was to be the best in everything, and put all our resources into winning championships, and if it didn't work out, come back next year and try to do it all over again each and every year.

"That's his legacy."

And what Club 32, Elway, Ellis and others recognize is that a statue of Bowlen is an appropriate way to honor the myriad accomplishments of the Broncos under his watch, both on and off the field.

"It's certainly a lasting tribute to Pat that fans can enjoy year-round, whether it's before a Broncos game in the fall, or on a Saturday afternoon in the spring," said Annabel Bowlen. "But Pat would be the first to say there would be no statute recognizing him if it were not for the hard work dedication and success of others."

In a way, the position of the statue reflects that. Instead of looking away from the stadium, as is often the case with statues that stand near sports facilities, this one is positioned so the statue faces the stadium he and the success of the Broncos helped create.

"Facing the stadium, facing the Ring of Famers, and also facing (the statue) of the horses, too, which is a big part of what Pat wanted when he was doing the stadium: the seven horses running toward the stadium," Elway said. "They couldn't have done a better job with it. It's just sad that Pat couldn't be here tonight, but we know that he's here in spirit.

"He's a guy that never sought the attention, so it's nice that we could be here to do this for him tonight."

And the area might be tweaked in the future.

On the third plaque from the left are representations of the Vince Lombardi and Lamar Hunt Trophies, with the championships the Broncos won under his ownership. There is space for more.

"Hopefully, it's room for Super Bowls, and hopefully, it's room for recognition as a Hall of Fame owner," Ellis said. "I think Pat deserves that, and I think we're all hopeful that sooner, rather than later, he'll get that kind of recognition that he deserves."

Bowlen is no longer an everyday presence at Dove Valley, but the final chapter of his and the Broncos' accomplishments on his watch remains unwritten.

Ellis co-hosts Habitat for Humanity build

By Lauren Giudice denverbroncos.com October 10, 2014

DENVER – Broncos President and CEO Joe Ellis and more than 30 of Denver's top executives ditched their ties for construction hats on Friday as they came together for Habitat for Humanity of Metro Denver's Annual CEO Build.

Ellis co-hosted the event with Habitat Denver CEO Heather Lafferty.

"It's been a blast working with all these CEOs and their representatives from around the city," Ellis said. "To be able to add something that has value and is tangible and benefits people who deserve the right to live in a safe and fun environment is incredible. Habitat for Humanity does wonderful things to give people great opportunities."

Executives from Denver companies including U.S. Bank, Denver Business Journal, Arrow Electronics and 9 News were in attendance. He worked alongside them and the future owners of the townhomes that were being built.

Ellis spent the morning on scaffolding preparing the siding of one of the townhouses. He was impressed by the turnout and the skills of his fellow builders.

He said working with Habitat for Humanity is extremely rewarding, especially when the future homeowners are onsite. Ellis noted that the work that Habitat for Humanity does changes lives and gives people hope.

"What you get out of it is a real recognition and understanding that what you're constructing and what you're helping to build is touching people directly and you're doing it alongside those people," Ellis said. "You're allowing people to live in environments that they weren't necessarily privy to or accustomed to previously and now they get to live in these safe, comfortable, clean homes."

The Sable Ridge Townhome development in Northeast Denver, where the build took place, is the largest project Habitat Denver has done locally. Once the entire project is completed in 2016, there will be 51 townhomes.

While Ellis participated in the event on Friday, the Broncos are year-round partners of the organization. The Broncos regularly work as a staff on build projects and incorporate build opportunities into organization-wide community days.

Lafferty said this event is especially exciting for the organization because people who are fierce competitors in business on a day-to-day basis come together for a day to work towards a common goal. She acknowledged that the work that Habitat does wouldn't be possible without volunteers and that the work done during builds like Friday's make a big impact on local families.

"The families that we're working with, these are hard-working families," Lafferty said. "Many of them work at our airport or down at the Anschutz Medical Campus or in the local economy here. They are essential to our economy and yet they don't have a good place to call home.

"In Denver one in four children live in poverty, many of those children don't have a good roof over their head. They don't have the stability of a good home. That's what Habitat provides is the ability for the family to have a stable, affordable and safe home - a place where they, as a family, can grow and thrive."

Elway hits the greens on eve of training camp

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press July 22, 2014

CHERRY HILLS VILLAGE, Colo. (AP) — The greens and not the greenbacks are what held John Elway's attention on the eve of training camp.

The Denver Broncos boss spent his last hours of summer vacation playing a nine-hole exhibition Tuesday at Cherry Hills Country Club, site of this year's BMW Championship, in a friendly foursome that included defending champion Zach Johnson.

Before teeing off, Elway told The Associated Press he hopes to get a long-term deal done with star receiver Demaryius Thomas within the next two weeks.

Elway would have preferred to reach agreement with Thomas before the Broncos report for training camp Wednesday, but he said the sides have exchanged proposals and "we're a ways apart right now."

Elway added that he doesn't want talks to drag beyond the start of the preseason Aug. 7, when Denver hosts Seattle.

"Well, we'll probably take it a week or two at the most into camp. Once we get into two weeks I don't want to go past that because that's when we start focusing on the season," Elway said. "So, hopefully we'll try to get something done here in the next couple of weeks."

Thomas was the lone bright spot for Denver in its blistering loss to Seattle in the Super Bowl, catching a record 13 passes (for 118 yards), including Peyton Manning's 100th TD toss with the Broncos. He caught 92 passes for 1,430 yards and 14 touchdowns last season, then added 26 receptions for 306 yards and three TDs in the playoffs.

The Broncos also want to sign Julius Thomas to a long-term deal following his breakout season, but Elway sounded less optimistic about reaching a deal with his big tight end, saying, "We've got an offer out to Julius that we haven't heard anything back on."

Both players are entering the final year of their contracts and signing them now would cap a very productive offseason for Elway, who landed DeMarcus Ware, Emmanuel Sanders, T.J. Ward and Aqib Talib in free agency.

In the exhibition benefiting the Evans Scholars Foundation, Elway, a scratch golfer, teamed with Charlie Rymer of the Golf Channel and played against Johnson and John Lynch.

Elway said he felt fortunate to play alongside Johnson, an 11-time Tour winner who was getting his first taste of the venerable golf course best known as the site of Arnold Palmer's comeback from a seven-shot deficit in the final round to win the 1960 U.S. Open.

"I've played with Tiger, I've played with quite a few of these guys," Elway said.
"They're all tremendous golfers. I'm a lover of golf, so it's always fun to be able to watch them play."

Speaking of Woods, Johnson was asked during a news conference if he would use a captain's pick on Tiger if he were Ryder Cup captain.

"I don't know," Johnson said. "I mean, as a competitor, I want him on the team. He's the best player I've ever played with. ... There are some guys that ooh and ah me, but he's the one that's done the most. His game never ceases to amaze me. I want Tiger healthy, bottom line, I want the man healthy. He's great for the game — when he's healthy, when he's playing. So, hopefully that's now."

Johnson said he wouldn't be surprised if Woods, who's been bothered by a bad back much of the year, made the team on his own accord. However, he'd have to finish at least third at the Bridgestone Invitational and PGA Championship to do so.

The BMW Championship, the third of four FedEx Cup playoff competitions, takes place Sept. 1-7.

"Selfishly, the only negative is it interferes with my football watching," Johnson cracked.

A winner should be crowned that Sunday in time for everyone to watch the Broncos open the season against Indianapolis that night, however.

Elway, who played a major role in bringing the BMW Championship to Denver as president of Cherry Hills in 2011, said he hopes the course becomes a regular stop in the rotation. Colorado has been without an annual PGA event since The International ended its run in 2006.

Notes: The Broncos released nine-year veteran TE Joel Dreessen (knee), who failed his physical Tuesday. "We're going to miss Joel," Elway said. "He was a big part of the turnaround when he came up from Houston three years ago. I feel bad for Joel, but he couldn't do it physically anymore." ... The Broncos also designed S Eric Hagg as reserve/retired. The third-year player, who was signed Dec. 31, appeared in 22 career games during his first two NFL seasons with Cleveland.

John Fox signs 3-year deal with Denver Broncos

By Mike Klis The Denver Post April 4, 2014

John Fox and Peyton Manning are in this together.

According to team sources, the Broncos gave Fox, their head coach, a two-year extension through the 2016 season. The Broncos' contract with Manning, their star quarterback, also runs through 2016.

With Fox, the Broncos tore up the final year remaining on the existing contract he received prior to the 2011 season, and gave him a new three-year deal that will pay him between $5 million and $6 million a year.

Manning will be 40 years old in the final year of his deal. Fox will be 61.

The Broncos' hope they grow happily old together.

The only problem is Fox and Manning have each attained enough success where complete happiness can only come with a Super Bowl title.

Fox's record says he has been a very good coach with the Broncos. Hired after going 2-14 in his ninth season with the Carolina Panthers, Fox was given a four-year contract at roughly $3.5 million a year by the Broncos with orders to turn around a team that went 4-12 in 2010 under coach Josh McDaniels.

Fox came through as in his three years he has led the Broncos to three consecutive AFC West Division titles and at least the second round of the playoffs.

In the past two seasons, the Broncos went 13-3 and 13-3 to earn the No. 1 AFC playoff seed each season.

There would be a horrific ending each season, though. The Broncos blew a second-round, 2012-season playoff game against Baltimore by allowing a 70-yard, game-tying touchdown heave with seconds remaining.

Fox needed a four-week medical leave in the midst of the 2013 season to recover from heart valve replacement surgery. He came back to guide the Broncos got through the AFC portion of the playoffs, only to get humiliated, 43-8, by the Seattle Seahawks in the Super Bowl.

Although Fox received his share of the blame for each season-ending defeat, the Broncos recognized the job he did throughout each season.

Paige: D-coordinator Jack Del Rio "made right choice" with Broncos

By Woody Paige The Denver Post August 24, 2014

The Broncos' defensive coordinator, and pro tem head coach last season, possesses a dedicated work ethic, determination and competitiveness defined by the Del Rio ancestry.

In 1907 a young Spaniard, whose last name meant "Of The River," and his wife were crammed with 2,200 other emigrants into "animal-like cages," it was reported then, in the hold of steamship Heliopolis docked at Malaga on the Mediterranean Sea. They were bound for a new life in the Pacific Ocean.

Forty-seven miserable days later — a voyage across two oceans and around the Strait of Magellan — the dazed passengers arrived in Hawaii. Fourteen babies had been born, but 19 children died. The Del Rio couple were among the 8,000 "contract employees," who had endured hunger and unrest in southern Spanish villages, lured to an "island paradise" with promises of a house, an acre of land, medical care and 20 gold pieces a month.

"My great-grandfather was a pineapple picker," Jack Del Rio told me.

The imported workers had not understood they would labor 16 hours a day 26 days a month at the blooming pineapple plantation on the northwest side of Maui.

"My grandfather (Louis Del Rio) was born by the banyan tree (one of the world's largest) in Lahaina," says Del Rio, who has visited the site. Maui has become one of the world's most popular vacation destinations, and the old pineapple plantation and the workers' homes have been replaced by a scenic golf course — "The Plantation" at Kapalua.

When their "contracts" expired in three years, 5,000 Spaniards left for another ocean trip — to California.

The Del Rio family settled in the Napa Valley area and, later, Hayward.

Louis found Hope ... Italian-American Hope Grasseschi. Their son, Jack Louis Del Rio, served in the Army, married, started his own business as a building contractor and wore a blue collar.

Jack Jr. was born in 1963 and would become protectorate of three younger brothers (James, Jason and Jeff).

In the summer the four boys lifted and loaded, and shoveled stuff, for Jack Sr. — and played every type of ball. At Hayward High School, Jack Jr. was the star on seven state title teams in football, basketball and baseball. He turned down an offer from the Toronto Blue Jays and played baseball and football at Southern Cal from 1981-84.

Del Rio was drafted into the NFL and developed into a tireless, tough Pro Bowl linebacker.

After his fourth season, while with the Chiefs, Del Rio finished college at Kansas. "I'm very proud that I was the first in my family to earn a degree," he said.

After 11 seasons as a player and six more as an assistant coach, Del Rio was the Jacksonville Jaguars' head coach for nine years. He was fired in 2011. John Fox offered him the defensive coordinator's position in 2012.

"I could lie on the beach for a year and collect my (contract) money or join the Broncos. My brother-in-law and 13 friends voted 14-0 that I should lie on the beach," Del Rio laughs.

"I made the right choice. The Broncos have a great coach, great organization, great city, great talent. And I knew John Elway would produce a winning team every year."

Last season, when John Fox experienced a serious heart issue over the bye week, then underwent surgery, Del Rio was the obvious selection for interim coach.

"It's like riding a bike. Only difference was I never had this good a bike before, one with Manning racing tires. But if we won, it was because we had an outstanding team. If we lost, it was my fault."

The Broncos won three out of four, and, oddly enough, Rio's overall head coaching record nearly reached .500 (71-72).

"I've thought about it. If we hadn't blown the game in New England, I'd be a winning coach."

He wants it.

"Sure, I'm anxious to be a head coach again. It has to be the right fit for some team, and that hasn't happened yet. But I'm so happy and satisfied to be right where I am."

In 2012 the Broncos ranked No. 2 in yards allowed. Struck by injuries and the loss of Elvis Dumervil and, for most of the season, Von Miller, the defense dropped off considerably last year. Now, Del Rio has new toys and repaired players.

"It starts with the edge rushers, and we've got two of the best — like we did in 2012. You put pressure on the quarterback, protect the backside with your secondary and stop people from running right at you, and that's what we have a chance to do this year."

The season also will include a particularly special day for Jack. He will be inducted into the USC Sports Hall of Fame.

"The school called and said they knew I couldn't be there because of the Broncos' season. I'd already looked at the schedule. That's our bye weekend (Sept. 28), plus USC is playing Oregon State."

Luke Del Rio, Jack's son and a graduate of Valor Christian High School, where he was the quarterback on the state championship team, is one of two candidates to be the Beavers' backup at QB this season.

"I'm thrilled to be with my son that day."

For more than a century, the Del Rio family has traveled long and hard, far and wide — beginning with a young man who courageously and adventurously left his home in Spain to pick pineapples.

In a pinch, Broncos' Gase made right call

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com January

JERSEY CITY, N.J. -- The Super Bowl is a long way from the crossroads that led to it.

A long way from the moment when Adam Gase felt doubt creeping in, the moment when he had started to feel he could be many things in his life but a football coach was not one of them.

"I remember sitting in an Applebee's, interviewing for an insurance salesman job," said Gase, the Broncos' offensive coordinator. "And him basically telling me I would have to move back to Mount Pleasant [in Michigan] and me thinking that was what I was going to do."

Yes, the guy who will be on the headset to Peyton Manning in Super Bowl XLVIII, the guy who called plays for the highest-scoring offense in NFL history, the guy Manning has called "a superstar" in conversations with some around the team was sitting in a restaurant just minutes from his parents' house, about to call for the check on his coaching career.

It was just after the LSU Tigers had won the 2001 SEC championship, and Gase, as an "eight grand a year" graduate assistant with student loans staring him in the face to go with the fact he "may or may not have been kicked out of grad school," was contemplating a future that was quickly becoming cloaked in uncertainty.

"It was just kind of that stage," Gase said. "... [LSU] was trying to find a role for me; that's not an easy thing to do at that level. I was back home to see my parents, and there was a part of me that was saying I might not go back [to LSU]."

At least until three friends -- Scott Angove, Nate Lambertson and Jeff Sablack -- who were, as Gase puts it, "beside themselves," got him to reconsider the notion of walking away. So Gase went back to LSU in 2002 and started stepping up the rungs from there. He went to the Detroit Lions, the San Francisco 49ers and the Broncos in the years and nameplates that followed.

He was a scouting assistant, an offensive assistant, a quality control coach, quarterbacks coach, wide receivers coach and quarterbacks coach. And then, when Mike McCoy left the Broncos to become the San Diego Chargers coach, Gase, at 34, was named the Broncos' offensive coordinator.

A short, a long and a winding road, all at the same time.

"He's bright -- very, very bright," Broncos coach John Fox said. "We knew his work. We knew how he handled himself. To me, when Mike left, it was a clear choice."

"I know there was a point when I thought it might not work," Gase said. "... I don't really think about sitting there in that interview anymore, but I'm glad I kept going."

Gase is not the product of a playing career that evolved into coaching once the onfield work was done. He is a product of from-the-ground-up work, of rolled-up sleeves to learn a profession. A process that started when he met current Baltimore Ravens defensive coordinator Dean Pees. Gase was in high school, and Pees was at Michigan State.

Pees visited Gase's high school, handed him a business card and said when he arrived at Michigan State the following fall, as a student, he should come to the school's football offices.

"When I was in high school, I enjoyed the sport a lot; I was just terrible at it," Gase said. "... And I think [Pees] was thinking more like equipment manager and that. What ended up happening was Dean said here's my card and come see me when you get on campus.

"... And I showed up, gave the secretary the card. She goes OK, and I sat in [Pees'] office for like an hour and he gave me a self-scout [personnel evaluation] from when he was with the Cleveland Browns. I had just gotten a computer for my graduation, and he said, 'You know how to use a computer?' And I was like, 'I've got a computer' and I hadn't touched it yet. I kind of figured out how to put that together and set it up in my dorm room. I went through a lot of ink cartridges."

That's where it started, the get-it-done side it took to help McCoy dismantle the Broncos' playbook in roughly a week in 2011 and reconfigure it as a read-option attack with Tim Tebow at quarterback. The same guy who helped to then dismantle that when Manning arrived in 2012 and retooled it again when he was promoted to be the team's primary playcaller.

His go-for-it aggressiveness is rooted in Mike Martz's "Greatest Show on Turf" offense that powered the Rams to two Super Bowl appearances. Gase calls Martz "a mentor, a guy who taught me so much." The attention to detail and the respect for the need to play some power football come from his time with former LSU coach Nick Saban to go with some things from Josh McDaniels' Patriots playbook as well as his time with Fox and McCoy that helped him see the bigger picture, the one where he had to understand what defenses were doing and why.

"Adam is just a guy that was ready," McCoy said. "He's smart, creative, works very, very hard, a guy I leaned on a lot in my time in Denver. And you can see he's had a big impact in what they're doing."

What the Broncos did in the regular season was make history. From Manning's statistics to Denver's push-the-pace philosophy to the pile of touchdowns, the Broncos pushed the envelope on offense to a spot that had not been seen before.

None other than John Elway, still considered the final word on most things football for legions of fans across the Front Range, has said "I wish I could have played for him" and characterized Gase's decision not to interview with the Minnesota Vikings and Browns for their head-coaching jobs while the Broncos were still playing as "studly."

"Being somebody that did not play in college or at the professional level, I had to learn as fast as possible," Gase said. "It was an adapt-or-die situation for me. I said that a lot, especially with Peyton. You go from running an option offense to all of a sudden the protections are 'you've got to be on it.' You have no choice but to figure out a way to speed up that learning curve."

The curve now has a Super Bowl on it. The one where Gase will call the plays Sunday against the No. 1 defense in the NFL.

"I'm grateful for the chance, grateful to everyone who helped me, grateful to be a part of this organization," Gase said. "And I'm excited to be in this position, in this job. It's what I want to do, and you know, it really has worked out OK."

Q&A with TEs Coach Clancy Barone

By David DeChant DenverBroncos.com September 16, 2014

Clancy Barone has coached Pro Bowl tight ends in Alge Crumpler and Antonio Gates. Find out where he thinks Julius Thomas fits in, and why the fourth-year tight end is just "scratching the surface."

You spent a long time coaching in college. How did the opportunity come about to jump to the NFL?

"When I was coaching at Wyoming I used to come down here. I knew Gary Kubiak – we worked together at Texas A&M. So Gary would let me come in and watch training camp and I got to meet Alex Gibbs. I started using a lot of his zone schemes when I was a coordinator and as a line coach. He got a job with the Falcons and I got a phone call from him that he was going to be going to Atlanta. Around the same time, Greg Knapp was going there as the offensive coordinator. I had known Greg since we were in college together. So it was kind of like the perfect storm. Both Alex and Greg were going to be on that staff and both of them knew me and wanted me to join them, so it was a no brainer."

Did it feel like a different experience jumping to the NFL?

"It was football. The biggest change is you're not monitoring classes, you're not having to recruit. You're drafting, not recruiting. And you have professionals. You get to deal with the best in the world, not just the best in your area of the country at that age."

With your background in the offensive line, do you see that as more crucial to the tight end position, with the intricacies of blocking?

"It's something that's a lost art with tight ends because most of them, their backgrounds are different than they were five, seven, 10 years ago. Now they're all former quarterbacks, former receivers, former basketball players who become tight ends. You rarely have a guy who was a linebacker, or a guy who was a tight end all through high school and college. So [blocking is] something that's totally foreign to them. You really have to go back to square one and start with the most basic fundamentals and work your way through it. But the thing is, they're also athletic and smart. They can usually handle it."

Is there less emphasis on coaching the passing game?

"Not at all. There's always details. It doesn't matter, who you have and how long he's been playing receiver. You go from being a receiver, an X or a Z receiver, and then you come to play tight end – that's a much different route tree. You have a whole lot more traffic, your vision is different, the ball gets to you quicker. It's a whole different world, moving inside to play tight end than outside where you have all the open space and territory."

With the evolving nature of the position, how do you manage all the different types of athletes and different styles?

"Everyone has their strengths and weaknesses. The key is to, as early as you can, identify what those are in all aspects with all your players in your room. Make your weakness your strength. If you can do A, B and C really well then let's worry about D, E, F. Let's really focus on those and make those better without ignoring the things you do well. Let's make you a whole tight end. Everybody hates the term "pass-catching tight end" or "blocking tight end." I don't believe we have either of those on this team. We have whole tight ends, guys that can do all three. They can pass protect, run block and run routes."

Take me back to 2011 when Julius Thomas and Virgil Green were drafted. What was your first impression of them?

"There's a certain thing you have to do when you go work these guys out on their campus to get a feel for them. It's not an easy process that I put them through. It's a full eight-hour day, sometimes longer, with film and chalk talks and field work and everything else. And I thought I had a very good feel for what those guys could do as young players.

"You can see that they're athletes from going to the combine and watching them on tape. But to see them mentally – are they mature enough to handle it? You can get a great gauge of that and how the learn, how they retain information and apply what they they've been taught and how fast they can turn it around."

After watching Julius Thomas work through his injuries in his first two years, what was it like to see him blossom last year?

"It was strange, I was going back and in my write up with Julius (as a rookie), I said because he doesn't have a great football background – he has no football background basically – I thought it would take him about three years to grasp it. And I knew he could do it because he's such a tremendous athlete and he's smart, he's mature. But I thought it was about a three-year learning curve. And last year I find out I should have played the lottery because that's how it worked out (laughing).

Now, the thing to his credit is when he was injured, he wasn't taking time off. He was in here, learning football, studying football. He was even running the scout team for us on defense just to learn more about football and not just his position, but the entire game in general. That's a huge credit to him. When he had the good success last year, obviously it was like yeah, I think he's back on schedule and this is the player we thought that we drafted. Now the big challenge for him and me is to do it again."

Despite his great year, he says you still push him as hard as anyone does. What else can you get out of him?

"He's scratching the surface. There's a lot more to get out of him. You have to keep pushing, pushing the envelope. The best thing about him is that he wants to be pushed. I'm sure he probably appreciates some tough love once in a while, a couple of harsh words to kind of get him back on track. It's a very emotional game sometimes. I get emotional with him, he gets emotional with me. At the end of the day, he's getting better every day, and that's all he and I both want."

You've worked with some great tight ends in Alge Crumpler and Antonio Gates. Where does Thomas fit in right now?

"He's different. Alge Crumpler was probably the most instinctive tight end I ever coached. One of the better all-around tight ends. There's nobody like him anymore in this league. He's a dinosaur. So that being said, that's not a fair comparison. Antonio Gates was a number one tight end recruit coming out of high school and was offered and signed a football scholarship to Michigan State. Whereas Julius had never seen a helmet until after he already had his bachelor's degree at Portland State and decided to go back and get his master's and play some football, for one year in the Big Sky. They all had different backgrounds, so it's hard to compare them accurately. The things they all had in common is great passion for the game, great students, and they can certainly take coaching."

Q&A with Quarterbacks Coach Greg Knapp

By Lauren Giudice denverbroncos.com October 7, 2014

Quarterbacks coach Greg Knapp, now in his second year with the Broncos, has coached five Pro Bowlers, including Peyton Manning. A veteran coach with 28 seasons of experience, he utilizes that as he works with Manning and the rest of the Broncos quarterbacks.

What is your coaching background and how did you end up with the Broncos?

"I was lucky enough to start my career in coaching at San Francisco in 1995 in the NFL. I coached college ball for nine years at Sacramento State. The synopsis or the connection to here is I was an LA Raider in 1987, '88, '89 and '90 in training camp. Mike Shanahan was the head coach for two of those years. He then became the offensive coordinator at San Francisco, I went to work at training camp at San Francisco for three years in '92, '93 and '94. Then he gets the job here but through that connection I met Gary Kubiak. Gary Kubiak knows John Elway and I know John Fox through the business so all those connections got me eventually to here. But I've coached in the NFL for 20 years. I was at San Francisco for nine, Atlanta for three, Oakland for two, Seattle for one, Houston for two, that's where I got to know Gary as a coach, and then a year in Oakland again and then I came out here a year ago."

Did bouncing around from so many different teams help you as a coach?

"It sure did. It helped my case to coach Peyton [Manning] and the other QBs in this room. I've been pretty lucky. I've coached a variety of very good quarterbacks in this league including Steve Young, Jeff Garcia, Matt Schaub, all guys that have gone to the Pro Bowl. I was with Carson Palmer in Oakland when he threw for 4,000 yards a couple years ago. So I've had a good variety of different types of quarterbacks including JaMarcus Russell and Michael Vick, some more athletic run around kind of quarterbacks. Along with that, of working with different quarterbacks, I've learned a couple different offenses including the West Coast as well as Gary Kubiak's offense, a little play pass and so I've learned to see the game from different viewpoints and then apply what fits with Adam Gase's offense here. I do have a set of beliefs that I believe in as far as quarterback play no matter what the offense is and how to train a guy to play at a high level and efficient."

How exciting was it joining Peyton Manning in Denver?

"Very exciting, but also challenging. It's a double-edged sword because you certainly enjoy that opportunity to work with a very, very great player but you also have to rise to the challenge to know that he's going to demand a lot because he on top of his game and it makes a for a very exciting job for me. I love that. I started my career coaching Steve [Young] who was one of the most cerebral quarterbacks that played the game at the time at that point and the schemes weren't quite as complex on defense then as they are now. But it helped give me a foundation to know, okay, I have to bring my "A" game, so to speak, to the office every day. The quarterback position is unique of any other one because they know there's a lot of pressure on them to succeed so they will prepare more than most to have success."

How did starting your career in the NFL coaching Steve Young affect you as a coach?

"It definitely set a standard of 'Okay, this is how I have to coach everybody' because that's all I knew. You learn from your experiences and I went to a place at that time in 1995 where they had just come off a Super Bowl victory. He had just set, I believe, the highest quarterback rating for a single season at that time and so practices were like games. So each day your preparation was like, 'this is a game today' on Wednesday. It's a game on Thursday, it's a game on Friday. It made sometimes the Sunday games a little bit easier. Not all of them, but some of them a little bit easier. It prepared me because I worked with him for five years on this is how you have to be as an NFL coach, especially if you are coaching quarterbacks. This is the preparation you have to put in to so that the player feels your teaching ability."

How does Manning compare to other quarterbacks you've coached?

"His preparation is second-to-none. His recall of experiences is very unique so he's got recall that challenges me as far as he can remember a certain play from a certain game, a certain touchdown pass, a certain defensive scheme. It's very impressive in how he can pull from that knowledge to know, okay, here's how I solve the issue that I had before now in this current play or current situation. He definitely identifies defenses extremely well because he spends a lot of time watching tape, identifying looks and where safeties are at, press alignment with defensive backs, linebacker alignments. So one of the hardest things I believe to coach in the NFL is for a player's process to occur during a play. From the snap to the throw, which is anywhere from four seconds or less, how much can that guy process and then apply? Because of his preparation habits, he's been able to do that at a very high level and a very fast level. It's very hard to teach that and he's obviously acquired it and it shows in his play."

How do you go about teaching quarterbacks an effective thought process during that time between snap and throw?

"You try to give them as many pre-snap indicators to help them delete decisions before they have to make their decisions. Certain looks will tell them, this is not the right the guy to go to or this is the guy I have to throw to. As much as they can learn pre-snap and acquire knowledge and delete decisions then they can be faster post-snap."

How have you seen Brock Osweiler and Zac Dysert develop since you began coaching them?

"They've definitely benefitted from having Peyton in the room and that experience from a player's perspective and I think it's natural for a young quarterback, the more experience they get in practice, which they do get in OTAs and training camp, hopefully that transfers over game experiences for us being more efficient and that showed up in preseason as well. It's a really good room for those two to be in because they're getting quite a few years of experience from the coaching and playing perspective on how to play the position."

How do you build upon last season's successes offensively?

"As you coach, you still strive for the perfect game. You still strive for the perfect play so you want consistency to show up as much as you can. Because of the variety of looks you're going to get from defenses, it's hard to keep consistency because you're going to get different looks from different defensive coordinators, different defensive schemes. So the challenge is to maintain as high of a level of consistency as possible."

What is the highlight of your coaching career thus far?

"There's been a variety. I've had a couple unique ones. One that was kind of surreal was I was with the San Francisco 49ers the week after September 11 in 2001. The NFL did not play that weekend after 9/11 so those games were scratched, it just so happened the following weekend our game was the Monday night game at New York to play the Jets. I don't know if you want to call it a highlight. But it was a very inspirational game in that it was surreal because it wasn't us against them, it was two teams on the field in front of a national audience to take people's minds off of the tragedy that just occurred and it was kind of special to be a part of that to help, in your little way, bring a little bit of relief of the day-to-day grind of what people were going through as far as the tragedies go. I did make the cover of Sports Illustrated that day because they took a panoramic shot of the stadium, the players on the field before they kick off. It was pretty inspirational."

Coach Q&A: Offensive Line Coach Dave Magazu

By Lauren Giudice denverbroncos.com September 9, 2014

Dave Magazu discusses his coaching history and the future of the Broncos' offensive line.

How did you go from being a defensive tackle at Springfield College to an offensive line coach?

"It was funny, my very first job I was going to be a graduate assistant at Ithaca College and I went there as the defensive line coach and when I showed up the offensive line coach never showed and the head coach Jim Butterfield, came to me and said 'Hey, I'd like you to work on the offensive side of the ball.' Then I kind of liked it and stuck with it for however many years it's been."

After working 24 years at the collegiate level before coaching in the NFL, how do you think coaching college players differs from NFL players?

"I think college kids have a lot going on. They have school, more time restrictions. The great thing about coaching in the NFL is the only thing you really have to really do is football all day. It's more of a job. They're here in the morning, work a full day and then they go home to their personal lives and college they have 9,000 things going on and it's a little bit different."

Does having so much college experience help in the NFL?

"I think football's football. The biggest difference I see is in college, you have a smaller offense and you practice more as far as the number of plays and as opposed to in the NFL, you have a greater number of plays and practice them less. I know that sounds funny, but that is reality. Sometimes you might not have an opportunity to practice everything on the call sheet during the week, but somewhere along the way it's been repped and it's a concept."

How beneficial has it been working with Head Coach John Fox for so many years? "I think the thing that's good about is I know what he expects. It's kind of like being married, I guess. I know some of the things he's going to say before he says them. We have a good working relationship so it's been a smooth transition for me."

How important is it having Ryan Clady back?

"I think the two most important things going into this year is obviously having Ryan back, because he's one of the be premiere left tackles in the league and moving Orlando inside. I think those have been two things that have helped us out tremendously."

Are you happy with progress of the line as players have been moving around so much?

"Yes, I still think we have a long way to go and we need to keep working on the details and being a little bit more specific. I think we've made a lot of progress and I like the direction we're moving right now."

How important is it for linemen to be versatile and able to play multiple positions? "I think the more you can do, the more valuable you are to a football team. I'm not going to move Clady around, he's going to play left tackle, but we have Orlando who can play right tackle if he had to, he could actually go over and play left guard and right guard if he had to. Louis [Vasquez] has played right tackle. Manny's [Ramirez] played guard. I think when you have flexibility, if God forbid, if there is an injury, you can play the next best guy and you might have to make two moves to get the next best guy on the field but it gives you different options."

How did that versatility help the line when Clady got hurt?

"That gave Chris Clark a lot of playing time, a lot of experience and whether it's on the right side or the left side, the mental part of it, at least he saw a lot of different looks. He experienced a lot of different things, so that's a positive."

How helpful is it for the offensive line to go against DeMarcus Ware and Von Miller in practice?

"I think that stuff is priceless. We do spend a lot of time working against the defensive line and some of the best experiences I've had with players making players better, we were in Carolina and Jordan Gross worked against Julius Peppers every day and it's good competition but they help one another. Here you've got DeMarcus, his expertise is rushing the passer. He's very detailed and he helps the tackles out along with Von and the rest of the defensive line. I think we do the same for them. We do spend a lot of time together, saying 'Hey, if you're doing this, I'm going to do that.' It's like a chess game. So if those guys keep exchanging what the next move is, both sides of the ball really do get better."

Coach Q&A: DL Coach Jay Rodgers

By David DeChant DenverBroncos.com August 25, 2014

Get to know Defensive Line Coach Jay Rodgers better in this week's Coach Q&A.

You played quarterback in high school and coached quarterbacks and wide receivers in college. What brought you to the defensive side of the ball?

"Well I think it was just the opportunity. I like to think of myself as a well-rounded coach, having coached both sides of the ball. When the opportunity to coach the defensive line here with the Denver Broncos came available, I jumped at the first opportunity, if it was going to be offered to me. It was and I took it."

Your brother worked for Coach Fox in Carolina. Did you know him at all before he came over?

"I didn't personally know Coach Fox. When he was named the head coach here, obviously my brother Jeff did. It worked out that I got to stay here and coach as a quality control for the first year or two, I believe. And I've been happy ever since. I've been happy to stay here in Denver, which is the only city I've coached pro football in."

What's the relationship with your brother like?

"Well I mean it's a great relationship. The fact that both of us who are in coaching are in the same spot is pretty unique. It's exciting for our family because they only have one place to travel to on the weekends. It's just been a great experience. A lot of coaches don't get to do that. There are a lot of brothers in the NFL, but not a whole lot of them get to coach on the same team, so it's been a great experience."

You deal with players of all different sizes. What's it like working with such a wide variety of styles?

"Well no matter what, each guy has their own tools that they play with, whether they're a heavier guy or a lighter guy. We like to put them in positions to showcase their skills. So that's what we try to do is gather a well-rounded group of guys and put them in positions to have success, which in turn will allow us to have great defensive success."

How did you deal with last year's injuries as Terrance Knighton and Malik Jackson stepped up?

"What we know is this is a long NFL season and not every team in the NFL will be injury free. So you'd like to be able to have a group of guys with great depth that you can plug in. When it gets to be their opportunity, they make the most of their opportunity. Last year, we had some guys go down, other guys stepped in, did a good job and now that everybody's back right now, it's just a deep, deep group of guys."

This seems like the deepest the defensive line group has been in a long time. Do you feel that way?

"I feel like we've got a good competition up front and on the edges and I'm looking forward to getting to that first game and seeing what we can really do."

How do you find enough work for all these talented players?

"Well you want to get the work that is needed. You don't want to overwork guys, you don't want to underwork guys, but the way practice is organized, Coach Fox does a great job of being able to separate each group and make sure everybody's getting their work in."

What is it that makes DeMarcus Ware so special?

"Well he's got a great work ethic and he's very intelligent about the game of football. And to have a guy in the room like that and be able to talk about his experience in the last few years of the NFL, to the guys who haven't been in the NFL as long, is invaluable. You always like a guy who's a coach out on the field and he can talk to those guys and say, 'Hey look, this has happened to me before. Why don't you try this?' And each player has to tailor their game to their own way, but it's good to have a guy who can relate those experiences to some of the younger guys."

Coach Q&A with Jeff Rodgers

By Ben Swanson denverbroncos.com October 20, 2014

Jeff Rodgers is now in his fourth year as the Broncos' Special Teams Coordinator, and has been coaching special teams in the NFL for 11 years. With new additions to his units this season, Rodgers has gotten them up to speed quickly with a focus on the fundamentals.: Broncos-49ers

How did you get your start in the NFL?

"My first year in the league was 2003. I was a graduate assistant previously at the University of Arizona. One of the guys I worked with there got a job with the Niners and recommended me for a job there and that was the first time I had coached special teams.

Before coming to Denver you previously worked with Coach Fox in Carolina. What was it—maybe technique, maybe style—that you think endeared you to Fox to give him the confidence to make you Special Teams Coordinator?

"It'd be tough for me to answer that for him. I think everywhere I've been, I just try to do the best job I could, whatever the task was. Usually good things happen as a result of that. We're a very fundamental and technique-oriented team. That's something coach always teaches, what to do and how to do it and seeing if guys can do it under pressure, so those two philosophies marry up pretty decent.

People see kickers often as just plug-and-play players in that there need not be as much of an adjustment period for them, but what challenges were there in bringing inBrandon McManus as the kicker on short notice?

"In terms of other positions, comparing the kicker to a right guard or a middle linebacker or a nickel corner or whatever, their job description is relatively easy as it relates to knowing what to do: kick the ball with accuracy on time and with hang time if it's a kickoff. So that part of it is a plug and play type deal. The parts that make it challenging, that does take time, is the field goal operation. There is a lot of different ways to snap the ball. There's different ways to hold the ball. Matt Prater was a guy who liked it held one way; Brandon likes it held a different way. We're fortunate to have the same snapper and the same holder as we did previously so we're only changing one of the three parts, but those guys, it's a continual process and it'll be that way really throughout the season. The guys who are the best in the league usually have that operation together for a year, two years, five years, so we're still working on that."

What have you seen from rookie Isaiah Burse in punt returns as he gets more comfortable?

"I think that's also a process. Rookie returners in this league, it takes time to adjust to the way the NFL punter punts the ball. It takes time to get to know guys in terms of 'Is this guy a directional guy? Is he going to kick with a lot of hang time? Is this guy going to end over end, rugby-type punter or is he just a straight traditional punter?' So there's those factors and he's doing a good job learning all that stuff, watching tape and getting to know the gunner matchups. How do we match up against those guys? Do we have two players blocking one guy or is it a one-on-one situation? All the situational things that come along with it, he's working through and done a good job of learning that stuff, but him, specifically, the more times a guy's under the bright lights, the better he's going to get. Last week was really the first time we had multiple opportunities in terms of return stuff. I think his quickness shows up. That's something he did a great job in college, making people miss. Last week he did a good job with that and I think he'll continue to get better throughout the season."

How easy does a veteran and teacher like David Bruton make your job?

"We're fortunate to have several guys in that role: David and Jacob Tamme. Nate Irving has been in that role in the past. Really since I've been here, almost that entire 2011 draft class is still intact, minus one guy. And those guys kind of grew up covering kicks together and have grown, obviously, into more expansive roles. That draft class was Quinton Carter, Virgil Green, Julius Thomas, Rahim Moore, Nate. All of those guys, being able to advance into more offense or defensive roles, have been able to kind of mentor the young guys and say 'This is where I started, this is what you've got to do, here's how you can help our team,' and what I think all those guys figure out is if they can earn a role covering kicks, they find their way on the field offensively and defensively. If you're inactive, it's not like you can go back in the locker room and put the pads on; you're out for that game. David is our captain, David is definitely the leader of that group. But those veteran players who have been in that role for multiple years, all those guys kind of share that burden."

How difficult is it teaching offensive and defensive players the other sides: tackling or blocking?

"A lot of our practice, even now, is fundamental work, and I think you continue to get better throughout the season. All these guys are great athletes and all enter the league being All-Conference players, All-American, whatever their respective positions are. So special teams, itself, is usually foreign to those players, but they're all great athletes. They're smart players who, whatever jobs we give them, it's important for them to do well, so they just continue to work on it. Usually it takes about four to five weeks into the season before those rookies really get a grasp of it. Our guys have really come on a little bit faster than some of the other groups we've had. There's five or six rookies playing every week for us on fourth down, so they've embraced it.

Like you were saying earlier, special teams work can be a way for players to get their foot in the door in the league and then prove themselves to earn bigger roles on offense or defense. What's the biggest rags to riches story you've seen?

"Well, specifically for our team, Chris Harris. Chris entered the league as an undrafted free agent in a lockout year, so he shows up, we're a new coaching staff, there's a real limited amount of tape on him from college, he's ninth on the depth chart at gunner, and that's ninth at left gunner, so there's 16 guys ahead of him, and that's just at gunner. He happened to get thrown into a game early in preseason and I believe he made eight tackles that year in the preseason out of, like, 16 coverage plays or something. He was a dominant gunner for us, really for the first half of the season in 2011 and he made so many plays special teams-wise, that the defense kind of took notice and started playing him in some sub nickel situations and he's starting for us later on that year, and that's hard to do. It's hard to enter the league as an undrafted guy and be starting at corner in the NFL in less than a year.

When Rick Upchurch was here a little while ago, he said he sees punters these days are more trying to get distance on their kicks and that back when he was playing, there were more coffin corner types. What's changed?

"Well certainly in plus-50, you don't see it as much, and the reason why is regarding that field position, you see a lot of pressure stuff. In order to put the ball on the sideline, you've got to walk and turn your body that way. Now there's ways to combat that, but if the best part of your protection is in the middle and you're walking toward the edge, you're bringing those rushers closer. What guys have figured out now is if they punt the ball with extreme hang time, they're going to have players down there in the returner's face to make him fair catch the ball or to even get to the goal line themselves and then catch the ball when the returner has decided he's not going to. Jeff Feagles was really the last guy who specialized in the technique of trying to put the ball out of bounds in a plus 50 area. Now I'd say 80 percent of the guys punting now are directional punters in the minus area. They're punting the ball for the minus 20, minus 30, minus 40. Most of the guys are directional punting toward one sideline or the other. That isn't what I'd consider coffin corner, and I'm sure that's probably what he was referring to."

Moreno, Studesville Earn Ed Block Courage Honors

By Brandon Moree DenverBroncos.com December 6, 2013

Running back Knowshon Moreno and Running Backs Coach Eric Studesville were both honored by the Ed Block Courage Foundation.

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – For their courage in the face of adversity, both running back Knowshon Moreno and his position coach Eric Studesville will be honored by the Ed Block Courage Foundation.

Moreno was selected by the Broncos as the 2013 Ed Block Courage Award winner and Studesville is receiving special consideration from the foundation for his perserverance in the wake of the sudden and tragic loss of his parents Al and Jan in June.

Moreno was selected for the Ed Block Courage Award honoring players who exemplify commitments to the principles of sportsmanship and courage. He is being honored for his work coming back from an ACL tear in the 2011 season and another knee injury in the playoff game in January to ultimately start each game of the 2013 season to date and lead the team in rushing. In addition to his rushing yardage, he's also caught 42 passes for 414 yards and two touchdowns – putting him well over 1,200 yards of total offense.

Studesville is in his fourth season as the running backs coach for the Broncos and is lead a unit that has scored 14 touchdowns and registered more than 1,500 yards this season. That group includes rookie Montee Ball who just had the first 100-yard rushing game of his career in the win against Kansas City.

Moreno has been the leading force behind the Broncos' success on the ground this season. He ranks seventh among all NFL running backs with 1,256 yards from scrimmage and is tied for the league lead at his position with 11 touchdowns.

With his current numbers, Moreno is one of just five players to have more than 800 rushing and 400 receiving yards this season and he is on pace to become the franchise's first 1,000 yard rusher with 500 receiving yards.

The Ed Block Courage Award is named in honor of Ed Block, the longtime head athletic trainer of the Baltimore Colts, who was a pioneer in his profession and a respected humanitarian. Recipients for the award are selected by their teammates for team effort as well as individual performance.

Q&A with Secondary Coach Cory Undlin

By Lauren Giudice DenverBroncos.com August 10, 2014

How is working with Jack Del Rio with both the Jacksonville Jaguars and the Broncos an advantage?

"Familiarity. I was with him as a head coach and now as a coordinator. I understand what he wants, which is probably the biggest thing. I know what he expects of me and I know what he expects of the players so I do my best to do exactly what he's asking me to do. But it's great when you've been around him for so long because of the system, I know the entire defense. Since we've been together it hasn't changed that much so it makes it great to be around."

What coaching path led you to the Broncos?

"I was coaching at my alma mater, Cal Lutheran University, it's a Division III school in California and then I took a GA job at Fresno State and then worked for Pat Hill, who was the head coach at Fresno State. Then Pat Hill introduced me to Bill Belichick, who he worked with at the Cleveland Browns. I ended up getting hired in New England. I was there for one year when we won the Super Bowl, which was Super Bowl XXXIX and then I was in Cleveland, I was there for four years, and then Jack Del Rio hired me in Jacksonville in 2009. I was with Jack there for three years and then Jack ended up getting hired by [John] Fox here and then was fortunate enough to be hired here."

Does having one Super Bowl win under your belt make you hungrier for a second ring?

"Absolutely. It makes you more motivated. Obviously to have the opportunity to go there and win it and then be in the same situation again, obviously the result was not what we wanted. But it absolutely, once you're there, motivates you to get back again."

Is it a challenge preparing this secondary for the season with so many personnel changes?

"First of all, when the changes are T.J. Ward, Aqib Talib and then even the young kids that we got with [Bradley] Roby and then our two undrafted free agents, the whole group has been awesome. The guys that are already in there were already obviously good players and good guys, they know the system and then to have the opportunity to be around T.J. and Aqib who are completely professional players, they know how to work, how to study. Their communication skills are excellent. It was actually pretty easy. You have to teach them so they know what the system is. But when you have guys like that in your room and you can tell them one time and they understand how to do it, it's very fortunate."

How has rookie Bradley Roby developed since he was drafted?

"Roby's doing good things, obviously that's why we drafted him, he's a good player. I think he's still in the learning process at this point, trying to get completely comfortable with everything we've got. I would say that every day he's been here he's gotten better and better. That's all you can ask from a rookie. Eliminate the mistakes and try to get him to play with technique on every snap. He is completely capable of that and if he can do that and keep going forward, he will be a big asset for not only for the defense, but this entire football team."

It's a Broncs tale for Bronx's Sam Garnes

By Lyle Crouse ESPN.com January 28, 2014

NEWARK, N.J. -- Sam Garnes is trying to help the Denver Broncos win a Super Bowl, yet he was asked Tuesday about his experience losing the NFL's championship game.

And the former safety didn't backpedal from the line of questioning.

"No, no," he insisted. "That's real."

In five trips to the Super Bowl, the New York Giants have lost only once. Garnes, a Bronx native, was the starting strong safety for that team, which fell 34-7 to the Baltimore Ravens in January 2001.

So Garnes, Denver's assistant secondary coach, imparts a clear message to the Broncos as they prepare for Super Bowl XLVIII against the Seattle Seahawks: You don't want to know what it feels like to lose this game.

"I tell my players, we're not interested in having fun for two weeks between the AFC Championship Game and the Super Bowl," Garnes said at Super Bowl media day. "We want to have a great time for several months [afterward]."

That approach has remained constant for Super Bowl teams through the years. Other aspects of the experience have changed, including media day.

"It's amazing. You've got fans here," he said as he surveyed the scene. "We didn't have fans in Tampa Bay's stadium [13 years ago].

"And now we're playing a cold-weather game, which at that time was unheard of."

Ah, yes, the cold-weather Super Bowl in East Rutherford, N.J. Cold, hot, whatever - Garnes, 39, is just happy to be home.

"Selfishly, I wanted to be here when they said the Super Bowl was in New York," said Garnes, who attended DeWitt Clinton High School in the Bronx and played for both the Giants and New York Jets during his seven-year playing career.

"Selfishly, I wanted to be here, and I will admit that, because this is a place I love.

All my players and coaches, they know much I love where I'm from."

Garnes -- who was quick to clarify that the Super Bowl is in the "Greater New York area; there's no disrespect to Jersey" -- looks forward to making the short trip to the Bronx from the Broncos' hotel in New Jersey.

"Right now we're busy," he said, "but as the week winds down, I'll have time to go over there and get me some of that good ol' Bronx pizza and get me some Chinese food."

He'll likely get a warm welcome wherever he goes. "I have a lot of family still in the area," he said. It's the perfect setting for Garnes' return to the NFL's marquee event.

"To come back to your home area and be a part of the Super Bowl," he said, "is a great feeling."

Austin adds Jr. to jersey to honor father

By Ben Swanson denverbroncos.com October 9, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — After losing the man who molded him, Marvin Austin Jr. honored his father as best he could with not only the effort he consistently brings on the field, but by adding that suffix to the 'Austin' on the back of his Broncos uniform.

When asked what the addition means to him, Austin said: "That's my father. That I'm proud to be his son. That's my actual name. So it's just another way that I can represent my father, another way I can make him proud. And it means something even more to me now that I've put it on my jersey."

After Austin Sr.'s passing on September 19 following a car accident, Austin said his father was a hugely formative figure in his life. The time since has been tough for him as he tries to avoid thinking too much about his father.

"I tried my best not to think about it, but sometimes they played, maybe played a song he liked or something like that and I'd think about it," he said. "But I tried to focus on playing and you know, not grieving."

The demanding pace of the football season has given Austin a bit of a beneficial distraction for him.

"Yeah it has definitely been a good way to keep my mind off my pops not physically being here," Austin said. "Also being around the guys just helps to keep me upbeat, helps to keep me in good spirits. So I'm thankful for being here with the team and all the guys, they've been a blessing for me."

The past month has been one of necessary unification for the defensive line amid difficult times off the football field. Malik Jackson also lost his father a couple weeks earlier, so the backing from their teammates has been key.

"Not even me and Malik specifically with our situation, but just in general, I think the group is very supportice and we want to help each other in whatever way we can."

Montee Ball: Ready for prime time

By Andrew Mason denverbroncos.com September 9, 2014

As a rookie, Montee Ball checked off all the "firsts" except one: first start. Now he ascends to the starting lineup, wiser, confident and poised for a breakout year.

So many moments that running back Montee Ball has experienced in the last 17 months are the manifestations of dreams realized. Taking the draft-day phone call from the team he grew up supporting and hearing John Elway's voice at the other end of the line. Receiving his first tips from quarterback Peyton Manning. Scoring his first touchdown. Rampaging over the arch-rival Chiefs for his first 100-yard game as a pro. Playing in the AFC Championship and helping his team to the Super Bowl.

But until now, he's never started in the NFL.

That is poised to change, and he has done everything possible to make himself ready, from hours studying the playbook, to adding bulk in the weight room, to strengthing his core, to filling special-teams periods in practice by joining quarterback Peyton Manning near an end zone and working on his routes, perfecting his sharp cuts and refining his timing.

He's ready. But if the starting call had come late last year, he would have been equally prepared to start, as he answered every question posed of him in his role as the No. 2 back behind Knowshon Moreno. The fumbles that dogged his early-season play stopped. He ran decisively. The game slowed down. A peace settled over him, and that bled to his play. When he checked in for veteran Knowshon Moreno, in the midst of a career season, there was no drop off.

Months later, Ball would reflect on his late-season improvement, which began with his first 100-yard game at Kansas City in Week 13 — one week after he lost a crucial fumble in the third quarter at New England. A calm confidence settled over Ball, which he would later describe as a "complete turnaround."

"You started to see it. I started playing better. A lot more confidence," Ball said. "I wish I had done that early on because I always tell myself, imagine where I would have been at, at the end of the year last year, if I started fast.

"So that's what I'm doing this year, starting fast and keeping it going every week."

Starting fast — and being able to do so because the game has slowed down.

"You can see it has slowed down for him, protection-wise especially," said Offensive Coordinator Adam Gase. "He is a natural runner, but with the schemes that we run we are trying to do things that fit him, as well."

Ball is also ready because of his exposure to Moreno last year. Ball saw the Moreno who was the product of ups, downs and injuries. He saw a running back who grew as a pass protector, having improved every year.

"His physical mentality that he had before every snap in practice and the game. He was a very, very physical runner," Ball said. "I most definitely am going to try to throw that into my game and be more physical in pass protection. He took a lot of pride in pass protection. I'm most definitely trying to steal that from him."

But to be physical, Ball needed to get stronger. He focused on upper-body work -"to protect the ball a lot better, take more hits, deliver a lot more hits and be able to pick up pass protection."

The first test of his physicality came early in training camp, when the Broncos broke into one-on-one pass-protection drills in which their running backs and tight ends face the safeties and linebackers. Day after day, Ball lined up against Danny Trevathan and Nate Irving. At times, he struggled. But at others, he held his own. He wanted to prove himself against the best the defense had to offer.

"It's going to make me better," Ball said.

But there was just one roadblock: a sharp pain in the right side of his abdomen that awoke him at 2:30 a.m. the morning of Aug. 4. Hours later, he was wheeled into an operating room to have his appendix removed Decades ago, this procedure would have sidelined him at least a month. In August 2014, he was back on the practice field 15 days later, and just four days after that, he was in the starting lineup for the third preseason game against Houston.

Against the Texans, Ball got the call on the game's first snap. And the second. And the third. By the end of the possession, he'd touched the football on five consecutive plays, accounted for more than half of the 66 yards gained and two first downs, leading the Broncos to a field goal.

Ball sat down. He had shown enough. The appendectomy was a memory. He had lost practice snaps, but little more. His body held up fine; just as important was that his mind did, as well — in how it handled the pounding to Ball's surgically repaired midsection.

"Yeah, that's pretty much exactly what it was, just to get used to getting hit and getting tackled and bringing that physicality to the game," Ball said. "It was more mental obviously because I was out for so long, but I'm glad that I had the opportunity to get some reps out there."

Two days later, Ball was back on the practice field. His body having responded to the hits against Houston, there was no question as to whether he would be ready for Indianapolis tonight. He went back to his usual work: snaps with the team, and work off to the side with Manning, perfecting his routes out of the backfield and the timing on each.

"I believe doing that stuff really helps," Ball said. "It really expands our offense and puts a lot of pressure on the defense by having a back that can catch the ball like that."

And it allows Ball to be everything the Broncos expected when they invested a second-round pick in him last year. It allows him to keep making his childhood dreams come true -- and, the Broncos hope, to actualize their ultimate dream for the end of this season, as well.

Bibbs stays with Broncos after Bills come calling

By Pat Graham Associated Press October 21, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — Running back Kapri Bibbs' big break is rather bittersweet since his good buddy and former Colorado State teammate was released to make room.

The Denver Broncos rookie was promoted from the practice squad to the active roster after Buffalo tried to sign him to bolster its injury-riddled backfield.

To clear space, though, Denver had to cut linebacker Shaquil Barrett, who was just added to the active roster last week.

If Barrett clears waivers, he could take Bibbs' spot on the practice squad.

"I know they're going to bring him back. They told me they were going to bring him back. So, that made me feel better, too, about it," said Bibbs, who rushed for 1,741 yards and scored 31 TDs last season for Colorado State. "I think my best opportunity and my future and my career would be better here. So, it all worked out for the best."

Undrafted out of college, Bibbs signed with the Broncos in May. He had a solid preseason in which he gained 84 yards on 19 carries and scored three TDs before being waived. He was later signed to the practice squad, along with Barrett.

Bibbs figured a call might come from the Bills after the weekend they had: Losing C.J. Spiller and co-starting running back Fred Jackson in a win over Minnesota. Jackson is expected to miss four weeks with a groin injury and Spiller was placed on the reserve injured/designated to return list Tuesday, a day after he had surgery to repair a collarbone injury.

"At this time of year, running back is just one of those positions where two guys can go down on the same team in the same week and the next thing you know two guys on the street have new jobs," Bibbs said. "It actually feels really good that Denver was willing to step up and do something to keep me on their roster. I think it speaks volumes about what they think about me."

Denver is already down a running back with Montee Ball recovering from a groin injury. That's opened the door for Ronnie Hillman, who's rushed for 174 yards and two touchdowns the past two games.

Bruton Jr. thrills students in Fuel Up to Play 60 kickoff

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com September 17, 2014

AURORA, Colo. — As a former substitute teacher, it's no surprise David Bruton Jr. looks comfortable in school settings.

He was back in form Tuesday to help kick off Play 60 and Western Dairy's Fuel Up to Play 60 "For the Love of Play" program by speaking to a gymnasium full of Aurora West College Prep Academy students. Focusing on nutrition, Bruton held an interactive session with the children as he went about the auditorium asking and answering questions about the vitamins and minerals that can help foster healthy development.

Being around so many children helped him return to that youthful state of mind. In hand, he had his bulleted list of reminders for his speech, but he tossed them aside. Bruton knew them, he said, but above all, he wanted a more free-flowing interactive experience for the kids. If they had questions, he answered them. Bruton ran around the room finding willing participants for activities or to call on to answer his questions.

He also emphasized the importance of physical activity, bringing children up to dance with him, Broncos cheerleaders and Miles. And in another quiz segment, children who weren't listening and incorrectly answered a question had to do pushups in front of him and their classmates, though that might have been a bit of an incentive for students who were also fans.

Representatives from Western Dairy and Aurora Public Schools, along with Cindy Kellogg, the Broncos' Vice President of Community Development, were on hand to present the school system with a $10,000 Denver Broncos Hometown Grant to benefit 10 district schools by expanding access to healthy breakfasts.

Healthy eating habits go hand in hand with healthy activity levels in forming a physically beneficial lifestyle, which Bruton knows firsthand.

"It's huge, not just during the season, but during the offseason," Bruton said. "We have to come back in shape and with good body composition and what have you. It's huge for us as NFL players if we want to have longevity in this league."

He noted the importance nutrition has in the body, physically, of course, but he also said that nutrition has a big impact mentally. "You have to be cognizant and able to concentrate in the meeting rooms. Eating well and putting the right stuff in our body allows us to concentrate and transfer what we learn about in the meeting room to the field."

Bruton, who was an extremely active child playing basketball and touch football, riding BMX, rollerblading and skateboarding, recognizes the effort that must be made today to combat today's challenges to youth wellness. "I'm not saying there's anything wrong with playing Xbox or what have you, but if that's all you're doing all day, and you're not getting out and you're not eating well or being active, it's not going to be beneficial for you in the long run."

Being able to speak to children on such a level to reach so many is something Bruton holds in high regard. "It means the world to me. It definitely is truly a blessing to have a platform such as being a Denver Bronco and an NFL player and to portray a message about being healthy and eating well. It's definitely imperative at our level to eat healthy and be active and be in shape, exercising. And to have that platform for a message for the kids, it's definitely a true blessing."

Bruton didn't have the privilege to hear that message when he was young. "I wasn't taught much about it," he said. "It was never really a huge issue, child obesity and what have you, but it's definitely an epidemic now that we have to tackle and as far as Fuel Up to Play 60 and Western Dairy Association, it's something we're grabbing by the horns and we want the kids to be active and be interactive in the program and take control of it."

The program's involvement at Aurora West College Prep Academy adds the school to the 73,000 participating schools with over 11 million participating students.

Bruton inaugurated a new class to those numbers, and did so by having a blast. "I have a lot of fun and make a lot of fun of learning, and I feel like a lot of teachers do," he said. "It's easy when you have kids who are willing to learn. It's definitely motivating as an adult and as a teacher."

As seen on Tuesday, if the students in that gym were any indication, they've got plenty of willing learners under their roof to increase a growing focus on healthy habits in nutrition and exercise.

Broncos Q&A: From cutting edge to dream come true

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post September 7, 2014

Isaiah Burse backed away from social media for a few hours last weekend. The confusion tore at him. Fans on Facebook were congratulating him for making the Broncos' 53-man roster. Problem was, he hadn't heard anything from the team. Saturday's 2 p.m. deadline hadn't passed. He seemed like a lock, but as Burse said, "I never take anything for granted." The eventual good news created reflection. He made the Broncos, a team with championship aspirations, as a punt returner and wide receiver. It was remarkable journey. He overcame family adversity, doubts about his size and going undrafted.

Q: What was the moment like when you realized you were officially on the team?

A: I would say it was a relief. I didn't want to play anywhere else. I didn't want to pack up and learn a new playbook. I was comfortable here. Every day, I thank God I got this opportunity. It was hard. I was getting all those "likes," like 500 on Facebook, before it happened. In my mind, I didn't want to answer because I didn't want to look dumb if I got cut. When I was sitting at the hotel, and knew I made it, I put my phone on silent for a few minutes and just sat back and said, "Man, my dream is coming true."

Q: Were you stressing out about it in the days leading up to the roster deadline?

A: It was hard. But one of the things that was stressing me out was that I am on the team. Where I am going to live? We had to get out of the hotel. It all came together. I will be moving in soon and getting a game check; that way I can get settled. I have an apartment ready. It's not furnished, so I have to get that going. But it will be nice to just focus on football and not be worrying about all that stuff. When you are not comfortable, it's hard to focus. I am feeling better.

Q: Hard to make your debut, even more difficult to make your debut on national TV? Any nerves?

A: I have to brace myself. It's going to be even more people there, and the fact that it's the start of the NFL season, it's going to be ridiculous. I am going to try to block everything out and just focus. The good thing is that the crowd is on our side. That will warm me up. I know I can make people miss. But I have to focus on ball security.

Q: Because of your size - 5-foot-10 and 187 pounds - why in the heck did you play football?

A: Ever since I was younger, I got it done. I loved the game. I always played up when I was little. They would ask me in college: "Are you going to get drafted? Are you too small?" I was always thinking, I don't understand that. Are you serious? There are so many people in the NFL smaller than me who are successful. Why can't I make it? Wes Welker is here, and he's smaller than me. There are so many dudes smaller than me, my size shouldn't be an issue.

Q: Growing up in Modesto, Calif., what was your favorite NFL team?

A: I liked the St. Louis Rams. "The Greatest Show on Turf." Isaac Bruce, Torry Holt. When I was in Pop Warner, I was a running back. Marshall Faulk was my favorite player. I wore No. 28. Marshall was my guy. I got to meet him. It was cool. He was the real deal.

Q: Will you try to save something from your first NFL game?

A: I hope to get a ball. I don't know. The memories of playing in that stadium in front of those fans will probably be enough for me. Obviously, I'd love to break a punt return.

Q: Who helped get you to this point?

A: At every level, there was always somebody there. I had people in my life help lead me in the right direction from Pop Warner to high school to college. I have been blessed in that way. And they are still around to this day, always wishing me words of encouragement. I wouldn't be here without all the help I got.

About Burse

2009: A two-way player for the Modesto (Calif.) Christian Crusaders, who went 15-0 and won the California Interscholastic Federation small school state title. Burse passed for 1,771 yards and rushed 1,826 yards.

2010: Made immediate impact at Fresno State with 696 all-purpose yards.

2011: Blossomed into electrifying return man, setting NCAA records for kickoff returns in a season (75) and kickoff return yardage in a season (1,606) and most yards returned per game (123.5).

2012: Named All-Mountain West honorable mention. Showed punt return skills, returning eight, including a season-long 29-yarder against Colorado.

2013: Working with quarterback Derek Carr, caught 99 passes for 1,026 yards and six touchdowns.

2014: Signed with the Broncos as an undrafted free agent for $12,500. Capitalized on opportunity last two preseason games after Jordan Norwood's knee injury, securing spot as punt returner and sixth receiver.

Reliable Caldwell Filling in Well For Thomas

By David DeChant DenverBroncos.com July 25, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Overshadowed by the excitement of the start of training camp has been the absence of one of the Broncos' most important players from the past two seasons.

Two-time Pro Bowl wide receiver Demaryius Thomas has been excused from the start of camp as he tends to the passing of his grandmother in Georgia.

One of Thomas' closest friends on the team is also the player who has stepped into his role through the first two days of practice, seven-year veteran Andre Caldwell. Caldwell said Thomas broke the news to him off to the side on Wednesday morning.

"I told him I'm there for him if he ever needs anything," Caldwell said Friday. "Somebody to talk to or a shoulder to lean on, I'll be there for him.

"It's definitely a bittersweet situation. I definitely didn't want it to come down to this for me to get in there with the first team."

Despite the circumstances, "Bubba" has stepped in seamlessly with Peyton Manning and Co. and been very productive in what is his third training camp with the Broncos. That should be no surprise, considering it's basically what he did all of last season.

In Week 1 against the Ravens, Caldwell only saw three offensive snaps, but turned in a 28-yard touchdown catch. A week later, he cashed in on six offensive repetitions for a 36-yard reception against the Giants. When Wes Welker missed games near the end of the season, Caldwell stepped up with his best performance of 2013, hauling in six catches for 59 yards and two touchdowns against the Chargers in Week 15.

"I just want to be consistent every day," he said. "Whenever my number's called, make the play and be one of those dependable guys, one of those guys coaches don't have to worry about.

"I know my assignments and I know what to do and I make the play."

In a sport that can produce season-ending injuries at any time, it's difficult to overstate how important that dependability could be. To have the coaches' trust and the ability to play any position makes Caldwell a key part of the offense, even though he won't start any games in 2014 if all goes according to plan.

Among receivers, the team also has promising rookie Cody Latimer, but it will take some time for the youngster to develop the timing and chemistry Caldwell has gained with Manning over the past two seasons.

"I think I've got his trust by now," Caldwell said. "But I just have to stay consistent, keep working with him, keep on getting open and when the ball comes, I've got to make the play."

In a few days, Thomas will return to the fold and things will look much like they did last season. But the coaches and Manning can rest easy knowing Caldwell is standing by in case something happens. In the meantime, he might sneak in for a play or two and catch a deep touchdown.

Carter's comeback 'seems like an eternity'

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com June 18, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- Quinton Carter, even as a student at the University of Oklahoma, always had a message for the young football players in front of him each summer at his annual football camp in Las Vegas.

As he faced the campers each year, at some point his message was about adversity and what it takes to rise above the difficulties that may come their way, about what to do if the road ahead was rarely smooth. And then, over the last two years, the words have been delivered from far different circumstances than ever before, they have come from the heart as well as his surgically-repaired knee.

"I've still done the camp even when I wasn't playing," Carter said. "And I really had to show them I was kind of living what I've been saying about not quitting, about working for what you want, about not letting tough times get to you or keep you from what you want to do. I didn't know how everything was going to work out, but you have to keep going."

Carter has not played a down for the Denver Broncos since Sept. 23, 2012, the third game of what became a 13-3 season. A player who had given the Broncos high hopes with a 49-tackle season in 2011, a year that included an interception of future Hall of Famer Tom Brady in the Broncos' playoff loss to the New England Patriots, saw everything change with one false step that buckled his knee.

Carter was injured in an indoor practice at a nearby suburban recreation facility that the Broncos have used when the occasional storm rumbles down eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains. That injury has become a two-year odyssey for Carter with multiple surgeries, including microfracture, to try and repair the damage.

"(I'm) just staying optimistic, keeping my mind on that big goal of returning and making a difference on the team through all the ups and downs," Carter said. "By far that's the most difficult point, but I'm here now just taking it a day at a time, getting better each day."

This past March, at the league meetings in Orlando, Broncos head coach John Fox hinted Carter was showing signs of being able to compete for time at safety by the time training camp and the regular season rolled around.

Carter, in the Broncos organized team activities and mandatory minicamp last week, has done some situational work with the starters as the Broncos try to sort out a safety position with two players -- Carter and Rahim Moore -- who were on injured reserve last season. The Broncos signed T.J. Ward in free agency and Ward will be an every-down player for the Broncos, at strong safety much of the time or as a weak-side linebacker when the Broncos go to some of their personnel groupings in the nickel.

But Carter can play his way into some down-and-distance work as defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio is always willing to play mix-and-match with everybody on the depth chart -- "our guys know if they're up and in uniform on game day, we'll find a place to play them."

"He's worked very, very hard," Fox said. "We've kind of seen what he's gone through and so far he really has shown he can contribute, a guy who played a lot of good football us as a rookie."

"I had thoughts of not playing again a lot, but I just stayed positive through the whole thing, had great support from the Broncos and kept working every day," Carter said. " ... I've been out for two years so it seems like an eternity since I've played. I'm ecstatic to be out here. I just sit out there and just take it all in. I'm really out here playing and getting a chance to play again. I'm truly blessed and thankful. I remember exactly the way I left off."

Carter's approach during his rehab has drawn raves from his teammates. Injured players, often relegated to early-morning work with the team's training staff, don't spend a lot of time around their teammates once the regular season begins.

But those who know Carter, including Broncos cornerback Chris Harris Jr., said Carter dealt with the ups and downs that come with working back from surgery with patience and focus.

"He just kept at it," said Harris Jr., who is currently working back from his own ACL surgery.

Carter said he recently spoke to Hall of Famer Rod Woodson. Woodson, who had microfracture surgery during his career, has been a coaching intern during some of the Broncos' offseason workouts.

"He came up to me and was just saying, 'don't get discouraged, you'll get back to exactly where you want to be'," Carter said. "He said he played 14 years after his surgery so that was really helpful.

"... I was always thinking, 'oh geez' every day," Carter added. "It's easy to be forgotten about in this business. It's a lot of a 'what have you done for me lately' type of thing. It's more the times at home alone when I'm just sitting there and I just have a lot of time to think, (that's) when it's hardest for me. It's a long time ago; it is what it is. I'm here now. I'm ready to make an impact this year."

Leukemia patient, Broncos DB share more than a name

By Stephanie Earls Colorado Springs Gazette January 18, 2014

When Carter Gates was 7, he discovered a passion for football.

Not just football, but the Denver Broncos. Not just the Broncos, but defensive back Tony Carter.

"With his name being Carter and having that on the back of the jersey, he thought it was so cool," said Carter's mom, Kelly Gates.

What began with a coincidence of names quickly turned to devoted fandom, and then to something deeper after Carter Gates got sick last spring.

At first, Kelly and Monty Gates thought their son had a stomach bug he couldn't shake. The boy was lethargic and nauseous, would rally for a few days, then fall sick. On April 30, not long after his eighth birthday, blood tests confirmed acute lymphoblastic leukemia, an aggressive form of blood cancer that most commonly strikes children.

The Gates were told to expect three-plus years of intense treatment by chemotherapy. The family began making regular trips from Colorado Springs to Children's Hospital Colorado in Denver, where Carter underwent up to five sessions a week.

"One of his favorite things to do when he went to chemo was wear his Tony Carter jersey," Kelly Gates said. "It made him feel strong and brave. I wanted to let Tony Carter know."

In July, she sent Tony Carter a Facebook message with a picture of her son wearing his No. 32 jersey while receiving chemotherapy. She wanted to thank the Broncos player for being a good role model and an inspiration. Without knowing it, he was helping her son get through chemo.

"I just wanted Tony to know, 'You made a difference,'" Kelly Gates said.

To the family's surprise, Tony Carter immediately responded with kind words and an invitation to a preseason practice.

When Kelly Gates shared the disappointing news that her son was too weak to attend, the football player adjusted course: How about a surprise visit at the hospital? On Aug. 30, Tony Carter came bearing gifts of Broncos gear - gloves, cleats, clothing, a signed game football - and spent several hours talking with Carter Gates as he received chemo.

"He just hung out with him. It was truly unbelievable," Kelly Gates said. "They chatted about everything from favorite books to football to who Carter was going to marry."

The two have kept in touch via phone calls and text messages. Each considers the other his hero.

"It's a feeling you can't really explain, to see a kid that's struggling with cancer. It makes my problems feel like not even problems," Tony Carter said. "I will always be around him and his family. That will never change."

Despite the ravages of the illness and the treatment, which involves frequent spinal taps, the boy's courage is an inspiration.

"Every time I see him, he's always smiling, happy. Even when he's not feeling his best, his spirit is great," Tony Carter said. "I'm just glad to be a part of it."

The fifth-year pro got the family tickets and field passes for an October game and visited with them before kickoff.

Prior to the Broncos' playoff victory last week, Carter Gates sent his hero a photo of himself wearing the gear Tony Carter had given him, with temporary team tattoos pasted to his bald head.

Below the picture he texted:

Tony Carter wrote back: "Sweet!!!!!"

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com August 22, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- It's easy to forget at times, lost somewhere in the record 606 points the Denver Broncos piled on the NFL last season.

Lost in quarterback Peyton Manning's 55 touchdown passes, the team's 13 wins and a Super Bowl trip. The fact that one of the team's elite players -- a "blue" as some long-time personnel executives refer to those at the top of any list -- played in just two games.

"That's an important part of our offense," Manning said. "We had guys, Chris Clark, step in and do a great job, but that's an important position and Ryan Clady is a great player."

That he is. And in plenty of conversations about where the Broncos can go from last season's remember-when performance on offense, Manning's precision in the preseason, Emmanuel Sanders' signing, the potential of rookie Cody Latimer, the development of tight end Julius Thomas and even the move of Orlando Franklin to left guard is all on the list things that will impact it all.

Clady's return from a foot injury suffered in Broncos' Week 2 last season is the most significant difference between how the Broncos will line up on offense in the opener and how they lined up in the Super Bowl.

It's a big enough difference that the Broncos' football boss, John Elway, will routinely end a run down about the changes on offense with "and we get Ryan Clady back."

"I think I definitely can make a difference," Clady said. "That's why I'm here -- to help the team out and make this a better team than we were last year."

Other than Manning's other-worldly 13 Pro Bowl selections, no other player in the Broncos offense has been named to more than Clady's three. In 2012 he was simply one of the league's best, surrendering just one sack all season as the Broncos made the transition from their read-option look in '11 to Manning's first season with the team in '12.

The Broncos then signed Clady to a five-year, $52.5 million deal before the 2013 season, a deal worthy of the cornerstone player he is in the team's plans to see him play just two games. And while Clark filled in admirably, the Broncos choices in terms of protections and their ability to send help elsewhere in the formation increase with Clady's ability to go solo against the league's best rushers.

When Elway has been asked about "foundation players" in roster building, quarterback and left tackle are still often the first two on the list.

"I always felt like if you knew the back side wasn't going to be a problem, as a quarterback you could have more confidence about your ability to get some things done back there," Elway said. "Ryan gives us that kind of player."

And much like Clady's practice battles with Elvis Dumervil were often highlights -- Dumervil has often credited Clady "with getting me to the Pro Bowl, working with him every day" -- Clady's battles with DeMarcus Ware have been good for both players.

As Mike Shanahan's final No. 1 pick in his Broncos tenure -- Clady was the 12th pick of the '08 draft -- Clady was in the Broncos lineup the last time the team practiced against another team in training camp. The Dallas Cowboys came to Denver with Ware, who was on the doorstep of what would be the third of his seven Pro Bowl seasons in Dallas, often lined up across from the then rookie.

"It was kind of a wakeup call for me because I was like, 'I don't know how long I'm going to last in the league going against like this every week.' It was definitely a challenge, for sure."

Clady said his surgically-repaired foot continues to feel better each week and he has not missed any practice time in the preseason.

"I don't think I'm quite there, but I'm getting there," Clady said. "It's close. It's just something you have to work into. It's the National Football League with the best athletes in the world. You can't just jump in off an injury and expect to be great. It takes some work, and I still have a little bit of time."

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com January 29, 2014

JERSEY CITY, N.J. -- OK, so the job description wasn't all that great.

First, replace a Pro Bowl left tackle, the we-can't-lose guy the Denver Broncos signed to a five-year, $52.5 million deal last summer.

Then protect quarterback Peyton Manning's blind side from a host of pass-rushers looking to get their hands on the future Hall of Famer and disrupt the Broncos' high-scoring offense.

Do all of that for a team that has had Super Bowl aspirations since July.

And, oh, don't screw up.

In a nutshell, that's what Broncos left tackle Chris Clark had tossed into his lap this past September when Ryan Clady, a three-time Pro Bowl selection, went to injured reserve. When the guy the Broncos often built their pass-protection schemes around, since Clady could go solo so often against the league's best rushers, went down, Clark was the one the Broncos turned to.

Clark had signed a two-year deal with the Broncos days before Clady moved to injured reserve. And suddenly a player who had started just six games in his previous three seasons with the Broncos was in one of the "foundation" positions. Broncos executive vice president of football operations John Elway, when asked what the foundation positions are, will routinely give quarterback, left tackle and edge-rusher as the top three.

"But I don't really feel pressure, I try my hardest to apply the pressure," Clark said. "It's about the job, it's not about 'Can he do it?' or 'Will I do it?' Being a backup, I felt that my back was against the wall and I still feel the same way -- guys look at me and they lick their chops. It's kind of what drives me to be successful."

There have been some bumps in the road for Clark to find himself in this spot. He was a Tampa Bay Buccaneers draft pick in 2008 and spent two years on the Minnesota Vikings' practice squad before the team waived him.

The Broncos claimed him off waivers a day later and Clark has worked his way into the Broncos' plans since. They've always liked what he's done in pass protection, his ability to work quickly in the team's no-huddle look, even as the Broncos have worked out of a three-wide receiver set 73.6 percent of the time in their 18 games so far.

As a result, the five offensive linemen are left to handle whatever the defense sends at Manning with the remaining Broncos in the formation usually in the pass pattern. During the regular season, no quarterback with at least 320 pass attempts was sacked fewer times than Manning. He was not sacked in two playoff games.

Manning was sacked 18 times in the 16 regular-season games, including six games when he wasn't sacked and five games when he was sacked just once. The Colts, with defensive player of the year candidate Robert Mathis working against Clark much of the time, had the most success with four sacks in Indianapolis' win on Oct. 20 at Lucas Oil Stadium.

Manning took several hard hits in the game, including a strip-sack that was forced by Mathis and another tackle from behind by Mathis when Manning re-aggravated an ankle injury that caused him to miss some practice time in the weeks that followed. Clark and the rest of the linemen were taking plenty of heat in the public domain at that point.

Or as offensive line coach Dave Magazu put it this week: "We were getting killed."

But the Broncos settled in during the weeks that followed, as did Clark. But given the Broncos spend so much time in an open formation on offense, it is no surprise their two edge protectors -- right tackle Orlando Franklin and Clark -- lead the offensive linemen in penalties. Franklin was flagged 11 times in the regular season, including one that was declined, while Clark was flagged seven times during the season, including four times over the past six games.

Still, with a 37-year-old quarterback coming off four neck surgeries, the Broncos would prefer their tackles take the occasional flag if it keeps Manning from taking an unnecessary hit.

"Chris Clark, who I think could be a starter for anybody else in this league, has been backing me and Clady up," Franklin said. "He stepped in for Clady in Week 3 and has definitely held his own."

In the Seahawks, the Broncos will see the most physical, active defensive front they've faced this season. Clark will likely find himself facing a combination of looks that put defensive end Chris Clemons, defensive end Cliff Avril or outside linebacker Bruce Irvin in front of him.

Clemons has been more of an early-down player, against some of the more power formations, while Avril and Irvin are two of the Seahawks' go-to guys in the pass rush. Broncos offensive coordinator Adam Gase said he makes no concession for Clark in the lineup at this point; what would be called with Clady in the game, against any defense, will be called with Clark, even in a Super Bowl.

"Chris has done a good job, we feel like at this point we can do what needs to be done," Gase said. "We run what's in the game plan and Chris, like the rest of the guys, have protected Peyton because they know that is job one."

"They rotate their guys a pretty good amount, so I watched film on all of them," Clark said. "... But this is an amazing feeling. As a kid, you dream of things like this and hope that this will come up one day. Now that it's finally here, man, I'm definitely enjoying it. You have to be about your business also, but I'm definitely enjoying the moment, because I know it's a short moment. [I'm] just going to take advantage of this opportunity."

Kickin' It with the Denver Broncos' Britton Colquitt

By Sam Adams Colorado Avid Golfer July 2, 2014

Golfers are labeled "athletes" with some reluctance. So are punters in football. Don't tell that to Denver Broncos punter Britton Colquitt, who is a pure athlete at heart—and a real good golfer.

How good? He's reached celebrity status. Colquitt received an invitation to play at the American Century Championship this month at Edgewood Tahoe Golf Course in Nevada. The tournament showcases a galaxy of sports greats past and present. Some in the field, like Hall of Fame wide receiver Jerry Rice, are pretty good golfers. Others, like Hall of Fame basketball player Charles Barkley, are not very good—but they show up for the fun of the event.

Colquitt's bosses, head coach John Fox and general manager John Elway, are in the field. Elway has participated every year at the celebrity tournament, which celebrates its 25th anniversary this year.

"What's crazy is, it's been on my bucket list ever since I knew about it, one day to play in it," said Colquitt, his ever-present smile lighting up a dark corner of the locker room at his home club, Colorado Golf Club. "It's come true a lot sooner than I thought."

Colquitt believes he will give a good account of himself in Tahoe. He is a 2.2 handicap, "though my game doesn't always show it." His best score is a 73, but Colquitt continues to work hard on different facets of his game with hopes of reaching his No. 1 goal—to shoot par for the first time ever.

"It changes for me," Colquitt said. "I really wanted to narrow down my irons and ball-striking. Lately I've felt myself hitting it pretty good off the tee, then I end up being about 100 yards or less . . . that's one of those places where you're so close you don't even know what to do. The trouble with that shot is, it's all feel. When it's feel, you just have to do it a lot.

"Of course, with golf every round there might be something different. Now it's putting. I was putting great, but lately I haven't been happy with it.

"Really, it's a little bit of everything. My putting might be on and my driving might be in the woods. I'm hoping to be firing on all cylinders in Tahoe."

Colquitt, 29, will have his older brother Dustin on the bag for the Tahoe tournament. Dustin Colquitt is the Kansas City Chiefs' punter. Last season he beat out his younger brother for Pro Bowl honors in the AFC, although Britton had a statistically superior season.

Their father, Craig, was punter for the Pittsburgh Steelers on two Super Bowl championship teams, and his brother Jimmy punted for the Seattle Seahawks. Punting is a family business —all four Colquitts plied their craft for the University of Tennessee— even though Britton also showed his athletic prowess as an allstate soccer player, while playing other positions on the football team at Bearden High School in Knoxville.

At 6-foot-3 and 200 pounds, Colquitt played safety and wide receiver—and was really good at both positions, according to his father. The threat of injury to their youngest son kept Colquitt's father and mother, Anne, on edge.

"Defensively, his instincts were great," Craig Colquitt said. "It was fun to watch. What ended it for me was, as a wide receiver Britton would go up for the ball. I was always afraid that eventually something would happen.

"In a playoff game, a guy tackled him from behind, between the knees and Britton buckled over. I went straight to the coach and said, 'Next year he's punting— and punting only."

Unfazed by the family's fear of injury, Britton went back to wide receiver in his senior season.

"I knew it would be my last chance to do something athletic, and then it would be punting from there on out," Colquitt said. "By the time I got to college, the level of competition had jumped so high ... I knew I couldn't run routes with those guys, whereas in high school I could.

"So it was easy to be 'just the punter.' But it's nice when you have all these great athletes saying they wish they were you, that they wish had your position. It reinforces that I can let go of the 'athletic' term and just be a punter.

"When it comes to punting and kicking, it is a skill. It's fun to see some of these big guys trying to kick a ball. They hit with their toes, trying to punt. The timing and mechanics of it, if you've never learned it, really, it's so much like golf."

Craig Colquitt taught his sons how to punt and how to play golf. Britton took to golf a lot quicker—and with more passion— than Dustin.

"Dustin is not as serious about golf as his younger brother is," Craig Colquitt says. "He talks during your backswing, your ball may disappear . . . he'll be an interesting caddie in Tahoe."

On the other hand, Craig says, "Britton's one of those people that can physically do anything. I'm not surprised by the golf." Golf, Britton says, has helped his punting—and vice-versa. He draws similarities between the two sports from his golf bag.

"Dustin and I talk about different punts and refer to them in golf terms, using different clubs in the bag," Colquitt says. He describes his NFL-best 67-yard punt at Atlanta in 2012 as a "3- wood or driver."

Colquitt puts the comparison into a historical perspective as well. "A lot of people talk about the 'rugby' punt, and ask what happened to the 'coffin corner' punt," he explains. "Well, back in the day golfers didn't have the 60-degree club. Now all these pros are hitting high and sticking it.

"That's kind of what the rugby punt is, because you're closer—almost at an uncomfortable position. If you're punting from your own 38, it's uncomfortable. A professional punter definitely can hit it into the end zone. Well, if you don't want to worry about that, pull out your 60-degree—which essentially hitting that rugby punt—and try to hit it high and stick it inside the 10-yard line.

"I guess the next biggest thing I learned, and it came from golf, is not to try to kill it. Most guys look smooth and create clubhead speed with their flexibility. It's the same with punting.

"Some of the best, highest and furthest punts I've hit, I felt like I didn't swing. You hardly feel it off your foot. Dad taught us that in golf, but it holds true in football.

"A lot of times in practice, my mind might be on golf, so I can relate it to don't try to kill it and throw my back out, and make a nice, easy swing."

If he could, Colquitt probably would play golf every day. But his seasonal obligations to the Broncos, who last year signed him to three-year, $11.7 million extension, along with the daily duties of marriage and fatherhood, prevent that from happening.

Colquitt and his wife Nikki have been married for three years. The couple has a two-year-old son, Nash, and three-month old daughter, Everly. On occasion, Dad will take Nash to the golf course. The toddler already has started an apprenticeship in the family punting business. "The other day we were in the basement. He put on his Broncos helmet and said, "Nash kick it," Colquitt said.

"He found a football and tried to swing his leg. He doesn't get the concept of dropping the ball on his foot, but he gets it pretty high."

Nikki Colquitt understands her husband's great passion for golf. She doesn't get in his way when he receives a text invite from Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning to hop a private jet for 54 holes at the exclusive Sand Hills Golf Club in Nebraska.

"But I mark those things on my calendar," she says laughing. "If he gets a little too excited about playing golf all the time., I'll say, 'You know, you just went on that trip ...'

"He gets to play whenever. But he is such a good dad and knows how hard it is to take care of two little ones. He doesn't try to play too much and stretch me too much. But he loves golf. It's his absolute favorite thing."

Marriage and fatherhood may take Colquitt away from golf a bit more than he'd like, but his wife has noticed a welcome change in his personality.

"In college, he was that same jovial, smiling guy—but he was wild," Nikki Colquitt said. "He went out, he partied and had a great time.

"Now he is the best husband, the best dad and he is so level-headed. He has matured so much."

On the football field Colquitt has delivered some outstanding kicks for the Broncos. But there's a mildly amazing statistic attached to Colquitt and the Broncos' record-setting offense in 2013.

Last season, Denver's offense produced more touchdowns (71) than Colquitt produced punts (65) in 16 regular season games. In one three-game stretch, Colquitt punted only three times—including a punt-less game in Dallas won by the Broncos 51-48.

"Sometimes it's kind of uncomfortable," Colquitt said. "It's hard to get into a groove. Back in the day when we were punting nine times a game, it was almost better because of the repetition.

"Now you have to be mentally strong, mentally ready for every situation. Even the Dallas game, there were seven times that I was about to run on the field and punt. But then we'd convert it on third down. "It's hard to say I want to punt, but it's my job."

Manning's proficiency may have limited Colquitt's playing time—and there were plenty of fourth-and-short situations where the quarterback has tried to wave off Colquitt as he leads the punting unit onto the field to a chorus of booing fans—but there is no rift between University of Tennessee alums. However, there might be some question as to who has the better golf game.

Colquitt recently partnered with Manning against Broncos tight end Jacob Tamme and retired wide receiver Brandon Stokley at Castle Pines Golf Club. In his first crack at the former home of The International, the punter carded a 78, the low round of the four. "I don't think Peyton blacklisted me from invite list," he jokes, but if Colquitt continues to boom punts on the football field while lowering his scores on the links, the number of celebrity golfing invites he receives is sure to rise.

Orlando Franklin: How football led me down the right path, and to protecting Peyton Manning

By Orlando Franklin YAHOO! Sports Shutdown Corner October 12, 2014

Denver Broncos offensive lineman Orlando Franklin is giving Yahoo Canada Sports an exclusive first-person account of life in the NFL. Franklin grew up in Toronto before playing at the University of Miami and was drafted by the Broncos in the second round in 2011.

Growing up in Toronto is definitely not the easiest. Don't get me wrong, I love Toronto. But there are certain parts where there's a lot of bad stuff going on. A lot of people think that because they hear Canada, they think 'Oh Toronto is so clean' that's all people outside of it really know. They don't understand how much stuff be going on in the streets. You can get caught up in the system and being a part of your environment.

I was born in Jamaica. My mother got a visa to go to Canada and knew some people in Toronto, so it was only right that she go to Toronto. I came up when I was three, my brother was nine. Me, and my brother and my mom were homeless at one point, we lived in a shelter for a year before we got community housing at Victoria Park and Sheppard. (I try to go back there as often as possible.)

When I was 13 I got arrested for the first time. Back then the cool thing to do was to rob kids your own age, just because they might have something you don't have. My friend and me robbed this kid and he ended up being in one of my classes at school. About three days later the police come knocking at my door. I got taken away for that. The charges got dropped but that was my first run-in with the law.

The second time, I was into some real bad stuff. Breaking into houses, stealing cars. I would go to school just to meet up with friends then go steal a car. That's what we thought was cool. When I was 15 I was arrested again for robbery, possession of a stolen vehicle and breaking and entering.

After that arrest I had an opportunity to really think about it. My mom left me in jail a little bit over a month to teach me a lesson. My brother told me I needed to be the good one, to go down the right path. After that I sat down and had a conversation with my mom and she said "What do you really want to do with your life?"

I had started playing football when I was seven. A couple of my buddies, Shawn and Neil, I would see them walking around with football equipment but I never really understood it. They said they would take me to practice the next week. I remember begging my mom to let me go to practice. I immediately liked it and it was a good thing for me – it got me out of my neighbourhood three days a week. Everyone told me I was good and I could make it. But I knew I couldn't make it if I stayed where I was, because I'm going to keep getting myself in trouble.

The hardest decision I ever had to make in my life was leaving Toronto and moving to Florida. My mom quit her job and moved to Florida for me. Six to eight months later the charges against me were dropped, my mom came back and I moved to Florida two days later.

The rest is sort of history. I finished high school in Florida, got a scholarship to the University of Miami, and was drafted in the second round by the Denver Broncos.

Now, I play on the offensive line and protect Peyton Manning, one of the best quarterbacks in NFL history. I think he ranks No. 1, he's gonna break every quarterback record known to man.

There's definitely added pressure protecting a guy like Peyton Manning. Being that he's an older guy, you know he doesn't have too many hits left in him. You have to take pride in pass blocking – you don't want to be the guy that gets him laid out. You have to be able to take care of your business. And it's definitely in the back of your mind – this guy is gonna be a first-ballot Hall of Famer.

He's a cool guy, too. A lot of people don't realize how much of a prankster he is off the field. On the field, he demands perfection – he'll get mad at you, he'll curse you out if you're not doing the right things. But he has to be able to trust his teammates in order to do the right things. His football IQ is ridiculous. He's a perfectionist so you want to do good for him.

He brings the best out of you. This is my third season playing with him, and he's definitely made me a better player. He's a guy that makes everyone around him better; he forces you to be at the top of your game.

For Broncos' Ben Garland, a roster spot isn't good enough

By Irv Moss The Denver Post September 5, 2014

When Louis Vasquez is asked to access his teammates on the Broncos' offensive line, he has a special description for Ben Garland.

An appraisal from Vasquez isn't taken lightly. He speaks from the vantage point of a first-team all-pro selection and an appearance in the Pro Bowl last season.

"He's a machine," Vasquez said of Garland, who played as a defensive lineman at the Air Force Academy, and just made the Broncos' regular-season roster for the first time in three tries. "We all make fun of him because no matter what, he's always working, as if he's a machine."

Garland knows no other way to play the game. But there's more to Garland's climb. He's had to learn a different part of the game, moving to the offensive line.

"The difference between playing on the defensive line and the offensive line is like night and day," Garland said. "Defense is a lot about reacting. To play on the offensive line, there's a need to understand how the other team's defense works and how the offense works together."

Garland spent last season on the practice squad, making the transition to offensive guard.

"In general there isn't anything you do on the offensive line that seems natural," Garland said. "You have to maintain perfect balance, but at the same time be extremely aggressive and powerful, and hit as hard as you can while under complete control. The body control and footwork are extremely different."

Garland credits tips from his teammates and coaches with helping him make the transition.

"Anything that Ben does, doesn't surprise you," Broncos coach John Fox said. "He was trained by the best in the business in our military. He's very smart and very tough. Ben got what he deserved (making the roster) and he worked very hard to get there."

That's not good enough for Garland.

"My goal always is to be the best in the league at whatever I do," he said. "Making an NFL roster is extremely tough. It could have gone the other way. I'm so happy the Broncos gave me the opportunity to try another position."

Garland would have gone back into the military if he hadn't made the Broncos roster. He had served in active duty in 2010-11 after graduation from Air Force.

"I always wanted to be an Air Force officer," Garland said. "But I always dreamed of playing in the NFL. It was like weighing one dream against the other. I'm happy with my decision."

Sunday he'll be at Sports Authority Field at Mile High for his first game as an NFL player.

An ankle injury has kept Garland off the practice field this week and will cause him to miss Sunday's game and possibly next week's game. But the Machine wants to get moving.

"I'm ready," Garland said after Thursday's practice. "I'm ready to go."

Virgil Green is Broncos' Mr. Versatility

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press October 2, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — Virgil Green has emerged as the most versatile member of Denver's offense.

Last month alone, the fourth-year pro from Nevada lined up as a traditional tight end, split out wide and in the slot, at H-back, halfback and fullback.

No wonder Peyton Manning lamented losing him to a concussion early in Denver's 26-20 overtime loss at Seattle last month, suggesting his departure forced the Broncos (2-1) to crumple much of their game plan.

Football fans tend to overlook Green, a member of the same 2011 draft class as Julius Thomas, a fantasy player's dream who has caught an AFC-high 17 touchdown passes since 2013.

Green is still searching for the end zone. He has 19 career catches and one carry. Yet, his coaches and teammates recognize his across-the-board importance.

"People don't notice the little things, but he's a very big part of our offense," wide receiver Demaryius Thomas said. "Without Virgil, our offense won't be able to run like we want it to."

They saw that at Seattle when Green went out in the first half and the Broncos fell behind 17-3 before Manning staged a furious fourth-quarter rally that tied it.

"I thought Virgil's injury was significant," Manning said afterward. "We had a good drive with him in there. Once he went out it limited some of the things we wanted to do (with formations), and I thought we became one-dimensional because of his injury and score. That is not what you want to do with these guys."

The two-tight end sets the Broncos rely on so heavily depend on Green's multifaceted skill set.

"His ability to be a dual threat for us in pass protection and run blocking" makes him so vital, offensive coordinator Adam Gase said Thursday. "And then he does enough in the passing game to where you can't fall asleep on him. He's a very powerful guy and brings a little different aspect for us at that position."

Green takes all these comments as compliments.

"It does mean a lot to me, but at the same token I have to be consistent. There have been times where I haven't been real consistent this year," Green said. "One of my focuses is to be consistent, especially in the run game, get things going for us because I know we're going to handle things in the passing game. But as long as I can move guys off the line of scrimmage and be consistent with it, our offense will be flawless."

Although Thomas is a Pro Bowler in line for a megadeal, Green insisted there's really not that much that separates the two fourth-year tight ends.

"I really don't think me and Julius are really all that different," Green said. "He's just had more opportunities. Athletically, I'm as fast as Julius. I can move just like Julius. I'm as smart as Julius. So, I don't think there's too much of a discrepancy there."

That's why he cringes at the notion that Thomas is a receiving tight end and Green is a blocking tight end.

"I think we have all-round tight ends," Green said. "If you look at our offense, I don't just line up and block. A lot of times I do go to fullback. Sometimes I am split out. So, we have a lot of versatile tight ends and I don't think that I'm just a blocking guy. If my number's called, I can do work, too."

Still, there are some obvious differences between the two.

"'Virg' does a great job of helping us in our run game," Thomas said. "He's a guy that goes out there and gets after it every single play. We can count on him to be a guy that's going to set the tone."

With a thicker upper torso, Green uses brute force to block whereas Thomas relies more on leverage.

"I take pride in moving guys off the line of scrimmage. That's my forte. But for Julius, he knows how to position and do things like that," Green said. "So, in that sense we're different because I want to be a bruiser."

Green would love to catch some TD passes like Thomas, who leads the NFL with five so far.

"Of course. If I were to sit here and say I wouldn't like to score touchdowns, that would be a blatant lie," he said. "But at the same token, I know my role in the offense and all I want to do is win. I want to win a Super Bowl."

Notes: For the first time since training camp started in late July, the Broncos had 100 percent participation at practice Thursday as S David Bruton (ankle) returned to action.

Chris Harris' big night for revamped Broncos defense: INT and a baby

By Lindsay H. Jones USAToday.com October 24, 2014

DENVER — The text message pinged through to Chris Harris' iPhone, the one left unattended but plugged in inside his locker, at 7:59 p.m. MT Thursday night, within seconds of Harris' game-changing, third-quarter interception of Chargers' quarterback Philip Rivers.

"Woo hoo a pick for Aria!"

It a text from Harris' wife, Leah, who was watching Thursday night's game from the couple's home south of Denver. Leah Harris was in the final hours of her pregnancy with the couple's first child, a daughter they will name Aria when she is born, likely sometime on Friday. The couple months ago scheduled Leah's labor to be induced overnight after this game, giving the expanded family several uninterrupted, football-free days together.

Harris pulled on a pair of jeans and a grey designer t-shirt late Thursday night after the Broncos' 35-21 win and hurried out of the locker room, heading right home to pick Leah up and drive her to a hospital in Castle Rock, Colo.

"Crazy night," Harris said.

He might as well have added what a crazy year it has been for him, as he has proven to be as important as any single player to the resurrection of the Broncos' defense. After Thursday's win, the Broncos' moved up one spot, to No. 5, in total defense, with the top-ranked run defense. The Broncos finished 2013 ranked No. 19.

Harris' Thursday night interception was his second of the season as he anchors what he and his fellow defensive backs have dubbed the "No Fly Zone." He entered Thursday's game holding opposing quarterbacks to a passer rating of just 33.5, according to Pro Football Focus, the lowest among starting corners in the NFL.

And yet, it was 285 days ago, or nine months, one week and five days ago, that Harris tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his left knee during the divisional playoff game against San Diego, an injury that knocked Harris — who had played the most snaps of any Broncos defensive player last season — out of the AFC Championship game and the Super Bowl.

"If I didn't get hurt, if I didn't tear my ACL, we wouldn't be having a baby right now," Harris said, laughing. "It just timed out. She's a Super Bowl baby."

Harris spent the spring and summer going through the arduous rehab process, determined to be back on the field for the Broncos' opening day in September. To do so, his surgeon, Dr. James Andrews, told him he couldn't dare miss a single rehab session, and Harris did not. He received clearance from Andrews to resume practicing in early August after a grueling workout at Andrews' clinic in Pensacola, Fla.

"He attacked that workout like it was a game," Harris' agent, Fredrick Lyles told USA TODAY Sports Thursday night. "He was determined he'd be able to step back on the field and be able to play with the same intensity and beat the injuries. It was his Super Bowl, believe it or not."

The Broncos offered Harris a second-round restricted free agent tender in March, which came with a substantial pay raise to $2.1 million after he played his first two years on a minimum salary after signing with the Broncos as an undrafted rookie out of Kansas in 2011.

Now Harris is set to become an unrestricted free agent after this season, along with a host of other Broncos starters, including receiver Demaryius Thomas, tight end Julius Thomas and safety Rahim Moore.

"I saw him when he was 18 years old, and he pulled up and started as a freshman, and I knew he had it. I didn't know I was going to the NFL, but I knew he was a competitor, had talent. I knew he was a good player. Everybody got their own route that's his," said fellow cornerback Aqib Talib, a teammate of Harris' at Kansas. "But after this year, everyone is going to know who he is. He's going to get a nice check. He'll get a real nice check."

Chris Harris has his own corner in NFL version of study hall

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post October 12, 2014

Four big-screen TVs showed recent New York Jets games on a continuous loop in the Broncos' locker room at Dove Valley last week. Players peeked up between bites of lunch and text messages. For Chris Harris, the videos are reruns.

When looking for reasons Harris has gone from undrafted to being one of the NFL's best cornerbacks, the film never lies. Harris studies his opponent on his iPad during meetings, between meals and for two hours after he leaves Broncos headquarters.

Video makes him a gamer as he melds mental snapshots with underappreciated athleticism.

"I look at a lot of film. That's what really puts me over the edge," Harris said.
"When I get to the game, the offense might try to hide a play, but I can see it.
Having four years experience now, the game has slowed down."

Football becomes easier when it makes sense. Hope is not a strategy when playing cornerback. Harris wastes no energy, no movement, a shark in his pursuit of perfection. Slightly undersized at a generously listed 5-foot-10, Harris trusts his speed but believes the quickest way to best an opponent remains with his brain. He's the guy you would want on "Jeopardy."

"He's wired in; it's very important to him. He's ultra-competitive in everything he does, and part of that is preparation," said Denver defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio. "He really understands what's coming, formations and splits, receiver locations, what they do with different guys — he's all over it."

Just eight months removed from ACL surgery on his left knee, Harris has graded out as the NFL's second-best cornerback this season, according to Pro Football Focus. He ranks behind San Diego's Brandon Flowers and well ahead of shutdown aces Richard Sherman of Seattle and Darrelle Revis of New England.

"Chris feels like they should be talking about him. He sees all these guys getting new contracts, and he's going to get his soon, and their numbers aren't even close to his," said Denver linebacker Von Miller. "He wears that like a sleeve. He's in attack mode. It doesn't matter who he's facing, he will man up and never back down."

But Harris doesn't star in commercials, doesn't scream in microphones and doesn't have an island named for him. He remains a secret star, the mom-and-pop restaurant the rest of the country doesn't know about.

"People might not notice, but you all here watching the last four years can tell I have been doing my job," Harris said.

No wonder he's looking forward to playing against the New York Jets on Sunday. It's a big stage made more delicious by the opportunity to go against former teammate Eric Decker after missing the Super Bowl at MetLife Stadium because of a knee injury.

"I know the team might have some flashbacks, but I love playing in New York," Harris said. "I know (Decker) is going to be more amped. They might try to feed him the ball more. There are going to be some plays out there to be made."

Harris approached his knee rehab with ferocity, procuring advice from Miller at each step. Miller realized early in Harris' recovery that he would be fine. He was early to sessions and late leaving.

Harris dropped 8 pounds, down to 191, during the offseason. That left him faster. He plans to remain lighter. He played his best game last week against Arizona when he shadowed all-pro wide receiver Larry Fitzgerald — "He has that swag about him, that confidence, man," said Denver cornerback Aqib Talib — but insists it won't be his best game this season.

"It's still early from surgery. I am not playing free yet," Harris said. "The knee is something that I still think about. It's still in the back of my head. It fuels me. I want to prove I am the best. Since I have been here, nobody has given me anything. I have had to work for everything. Now, people don't think that I am the same coming off my ACL (injury). So I have to show them every week."

Statistics provide a compelling argument of Harris' talent. After easing into the season against the Colts, Harris has been dominant the past two games. Groomed as a slot corner, he recognizes routes quickly and reads the quarterback's slightest nuance. His teammates' testimonials are more convincing than his numbers. Ask the new Broncos whose talent surprises them, and they mention Harris.

Over and over.

"He's amazing. He's mentally strong," said wideout Emmanuel Sanders. "He has that dog in him."

Safety T.J. Ward identifies with Harris' story. Ward was a walk-on in college ball and was forced to silence doubters at every step of his career.

"Chris is tough, physical, athletic, all the things you look for," Ward said.

A snapshot early in Harris' pro career, a 2012 game at Cincinnati, foreshadowed his stardom. Warm-ups over, Harris and Rahim Moore stood in the locker room in full uniform watching video a few minutes before kickoff.

The first 15 plays matched those on their iPads. They could barely hide their grins.

"Chris likes to study just like me. He likes to find an advantage," Moore said. "Of course it pays off. And the best film to watch is the one you star in on Sunday and they show on Monday before practice."

[&]quot;Sometimes you stay under the radar no matter what you do. We know how good he is."

Ronnie Hillman making strong case to be Broncos' top RB

By Matt Caulkins The Denver Post October 23, 2014

Ronnie Hillman is making things hard for the Broncos.

A few weeks ago, Denver knew full well who its feature running back was.

Montee Ball was coming off a solid 2013, was productive through the first three games of the season, and gave his team little reason to search for a replacement.

Then he suffered a groin injury, which at the time, seemed like a tough break for the Broncos.

In reality, it was a big break for Hillman.

Heading into this season, Hillman hadn't made much of a dent in the NFL. The San Diego State product was known more for his fumbling than his ability to move the chains.

But based on what he's done over the past four games — most notably his 109 yards on 20 carries Thursday — Denver coach John Fox may be hard-pressed to put Ball back in the starting lineup. Not only has Hillman been able to hang onto the football, he may just hang onto his job.

"You can see he's getting comfortable," Fox said. "The more you do it, the better you're going to get at it. And I think the more reps we give him and keep him on the field and kind of do the plays to his advantage which we're trying to do — he'll keep having success."

Aside from Marshall Faulk, Hillman may very well be the best running back to come out of SDSU. In his sophomore season, he ran for 1,478 yards and 15 touchdowns — and his 134.36 rushing yards per game was the fourth-best average in the FBS.

The Broncos liked him, and eventually selected him with the 67th overall pick in the 2011 draft. Until recently, however, they didn't use him much.

Hillman averaged just six carries during his rookie season and racked up 327 yards. He had just 55 carries over 10 games last year, tallying 218 yards while fumbling twice.

He didn't play at all in Denver's first two games, but after Ball went down, the ball is constantly in his hands.

He had 64 yards on 15 carries against the Cardinals, three weeks ago, 100 yards on 24 carries a week later against the Jets, then scored two touchdowns while running for 74 yards on 14 carries against the 49ers last Sunday.

Thursday was his best game yet, and had he not stepped out of bounds at the 3 in the third quarter, he could have added a touchdown.

"If the line keeps blocking how we're blocking and we play like we're playing, nothing is impossible," Hillman said. "That's the plan, to carry it over every week to get better every week."

For the first time in his career Thursday, Hillman ran out the Broncos' tunnel - a tradition reserved for the team's starters. Based on what he's been doing, we may see a lot more of that of that to come.

Nate Irving growing in role as middle linebacker for Denver Broncos

By Irv Moss The Denver Post September 13, 2014

Broncos middle linebacker Nate Irving isn't about to compare himself to teammate Von Miller, though he filled in for Miller at outside linebacker when Miller was suspended six games by the NFL last season.

"There's a way bigger difference," Irving said. "Von is a gifted pass rusher. He makes it look easy. I can't play like Von Miller. We bring different things to the table."

Irving may not have Miller's ability to rush the passer, but the Denver coaches showed enough trust in him during the offseason to slide him into the starting job at middle linebacker. In the season opener against the Indianapolis Colts, Irving contributed a sack, four tackles and an assist to the Broncos' 31-24 victory.

Perhaps more important, the fourth-year pro from North Carolina State looked comfortable at his new position.

"I'm settling into the system," Irving said. "I value learning a lot of different positions. Being the next player up can prepare you for a lot of different situations. ... If I don't have confidence in myself, my coaches and teammates won't have confidence in me."

Richard Smith, the Denver linebackers coach, credits Irving for what he did last year in helping offset the loss of Miller and what he's doing this season as a starter inside.

"Nate contributed and made some big plays for us last year," Smith said. "He has done a great job and played dual positions. He's much more mature as a player and understands our system much better this year. He has a lot more confidence in himself and seems to be able to anticipate what opponents are going to do."

Smith noted that Irving is showing the ability to stay on the field no matter the down, which is something the coaching staff values. He can defend the run or the pass.

"He may come out once in a while if we need an extra defensive back," Smith said.

Irving doesn't like to come off the field. "You have to show the coaches you can handle whatever and execute what you have to execute," he said. "A player never wants to come off the field."

Irving, a third-round pick in the 2011 NFL draft, doesn't think he has arrived yet.

"I'm a long way from being there," he said. "I have a lot of things to do to get my game better. Each player is different. Some players come into the league and they're ready to start right away. Players develop differently."

Irving thinks he can hold the starting assignment all season, but a lot will depend on how he handles the grind of a long season.

He is receiving the best instruction he could get by facing quarterback Peyton Manning every day in practice.

"You have to practice like a pro," Irving said. "Peyton's the best, and I play against him every day."

Player Q&A with Malik Jackson

By David DeChant denverbroncos.com October 20, 2014

The 2012 fifth-round pick broke out last year with six sacks and continues to hound quarterbacks from all over the formation. The third-year pro chatted with us about growing up as an identical twin, his versatility and playing on a talented and tight-knit defensive line.

You grew up a twin, right? What was that like?

"It was cool, you know, having somebody that looks just like you. It gets old a little bit, because you kind of want to create your own person and stuff like that. But it was cool growing up. That's all I know, so I loved it."

So you guys are identical?

"Yeah, I look way better though. Make sure you put that in there."

And you're the younger of the two?

"Yeah, but he's only like seven minutes older than me, so that really doesn't count."

He played end in college and was pretty successful. What's he doing right now?

"He did play in the Arena League. He's trying to move up and kind of work his way (to the NFL). Last year he did play in the Arena League in Portland for a few games. I'm just happy to see he's doing what he wants, just living the dream, and hopefully I can help him out in any ways I can."

So you guys grew up competing with each other in high school football – what was that like?

"It was awesome, especially when you have somebody who's like you who you can compete against. He had a lot of sacks in high school, so you could see who had more, and if you didn't have more, that person would be upset. It was one of those things where it was competition, but it was good competition that made everybody better. You've got to have that."

When you entered the draft, many analysts knocked you for being a "tweener" without a true position. How have you turned that negative label into the positive of versatility?

"Well you know I heard that throughout my college career, or at least when I was at Tennessee, that 'tweener' thing, and I was just like, 'I'm not like that.' I was blessed to get drafted here so I kind of wanted to take it by the horns and show them anything they want me to do, I can do."

Last year it felt like you really blossomed, getting quality production from a lot of positions. How did it compare to your expectations and where do you see yourself compared to last year?

"Right now I see myself getting better. I see myself as a better player than last year, just kind of going out there, feeling comfortable, knowing what I'm doing and so those things feel comfortable. I'm just trying to meet those stats, as far as what I did last year, and kind of better myself on those. It's a long season and it's a work in progress, but as soon as I get those stats up to past where they were last year, I'll have a good year."

Having to prepare to play multiple positions and fight for reps on the Dline, do you have to put in extra preparation?

"I don't think so, because we're here the whole year in Denver. I think every day, just drilling it, drilling it, you see Sly (Sylvester Williams) or you see T-Knight (Terrance Knighton) doing it, so you kind of get the gist. I just try to go out there, just be that guy – "the more you can do, the more you get to do" kind of thing. That's just my mind. I'm just trying to go out there and prepare and if somebody goes down, I can go in there and fill in and act like nothing happened."Broncos-49es

Both of the defensive captains, in Terrance Knighton and DeMarcus Wareare on the defensive line, and you sometimes play right between them. What have you learned from those guys?

"Literally just how to work. Those guys are workaholics. They do have some down time and stuff, but you see D-Ware always on his iPad, you know, T-Knight's always just talking football, and it's one of those things where it just never turns off. That's what I've learned is when you're at the grocery store, you can be thinking about it, if you're at home, you can be watching something, and when you're here, you can always be doing something. So I think they've just taught me how to work and be on my job, and if you want to be great, you've really just got to show up and be prepared to go every day and give it your all."

Have you learned specific techniques from them, since you play each of their positions at times?

"Yeah but, you know, there are some things that T-Knight does and you're like, 'No way I can do that.' There are some things D-Ware does like that. But I do try to go out there and take a few things – like T-Knight's slow-down-and-hit-the-hands-and-go-around-slow move. There's a few things I'm trying to take and tweak a little bit, but there's no way I'm doing what either of those guys are doing (laughing)."

It seems like the defensive line might be the tightest knit group on the team. Does it feel that way?

"I think so. I think we're a very tight group. We always hang out, we chill and stuff.

But I just think the defense period, with the safeties and the corners and the linebackers, we're all just hanging out in the locker room, vibing, joking, even off-the-field type things. So I think as a defense, we're getting closer and closer, at least every year I've been here with Coach Del Rio. And it's been awesome to see and grow with."

By Kalyn Kahler Colorado Springs Gazette July 9, 2014

As Seattle Seahawks defensive end Greg Scruggs spoke to a group of kids at the Pro Football Camp about the importance of perseverance, Denver Broncos linebacker Steven Johnson crept up behind him and jokingly gave the young crowd a big thumbs-down.

"So then I made them bring my Super Bowl ring up front," Scruggs laughed. "Just so I could remind him I got the ultimate thumbs-up."

Scruggs and Johnson have both volunteered as coaches for the past three years at the camp held at UCCS Mountain Lions Stadium and Scruggs said the two Super Bowl XLVIII rivals have been enjoying a little playful trash talk this week.

"When we are on the field we are competitors but when we are off, we are buddies, so it's good to talk about it and joke around," Scruggs said. "They booed me and I told them I was a big fan of the Broncos, because I am."

For Johnson, a regular special teams player, who contributed as a depth player on defense, the Super Bowl loss is a serious motivator as he prepares for his third NFL season.

"We've got that nasty feeling in our mouth," he said. "It is almost worse than the Baltimore loss the year before. We've taken a step farther each year I've been here and this year we are trying to complete that."

Johnson wears No. 53 as a reminder of his difficult path to the NFL, a symbol of his fight to make the 53-man roster. As a high school player, Johnson did not receive a single D-I scholarship offer, walked on to Kansas, and went undrafted in 2012.

Since making the Broncos' final roster in 2012, Johnson has progressed each year. He played 11 games his first season and emerged as a reliable special teams player last season, appearing in all 16 games. Johnson made a name for himself as a playmaker when he blocked a punt against the Eagles in Week 4 and returned it for a touchdown.

"(The number) described my perseverance and my resiliency," Johnson said. "Just to be able to go out there and prove people wrong and not listen to people when they tell you that you can't do something."

Johnson faces a tough battle ahead of him vying for a starting linebacker role when training camp begins. He'll be competing with a strong linebacker corps including Von Miller, Nate Irving and Danny Trevathan. When he got the opportunity last year, Johnson showed his value. Against the Chiefs in Week 11, Johnson subbed in for the injured Trevathan and forced a field goal when he stopped Chiefs running back Jamaal Charles on third-and-goal at the 1.

"I don't want to be known as a guy who just contributes on special teams, but a guy who contributes a great deal on defense," Johnson said. "I know I can do that, if I was to just get a shot I know I can be one of the best in this whole league."

Knighton's pregame ritual comes from the heart

By Ben Swanson denverbroncos.com October 25, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — You've probably heard of professional athletes' rituals or superstitions. Some are more famous—or perhaps more notorious, I should say. Some say more about their dedication, and some are borderline outlandish.

Terrance Knighton has one, too. But his is a bit more down to earth, grounded in a bit of his own history.

Before every game, Knighton partakes in the pregame stretching and drills like everyone else, but once those conclude and the players have free reign to do whatever they need to do to get ready for the game, Knighton heads over to the sideline. With a football in one hand, he gazes across the crowd before finding a young fan add into his warmup process.

Sometimes it's a bit more difficult finding a Broncos fan, like when he's on the road, but he always seems to find someone somehow.

And then they just play catch for a little while. It's really that simple. It always ends with Knighton giving the ball to the child, as a little extra souvenir to make for an experience they'll never forget.

It all started when Knighton was with the Jaguars. It was more of an impromptu decision than anything. After they played catch, the boy asked Knighton if he could have the ball. The defensive tackle didn't see anything wrong with that.

"I was like 'Yeah,' and he had the biggest smile on his face," he said. "I think I had a really good game that game. So after that, I just decided I would do that every week and whether it's home or away, I look for a Broncos fan or a kid."

Though it's a small gesture, Knighton knows that taking a short moment out of a busy day for him could make something more longlasting and impactful for young kids. Maybe it could even be something formative in their life.

"You just don't know sometimes the effect that has on a kid," Knighton said. "That kid I was playing catch with could be the next Peyton Manning just because of that moment."

Even if they don't become the next Peyton Manning or Terrance Knighton, he knows outreach from athletes can mean a lot in other ways, from the big gifts to the small.

"As a child, I didn't have that," Knighton said. "I didn't have the means to be at an NFL game or be around professional athletes where I grew up at. I just know it would have meant a lot to me as a child to see that, and it probably would have kept me out of trouble. I just want to pass that on to other kids that have the opportunity and don't have that opportunity."

At a time when Knighton's moved into an influential role as a captain as part of the foundation of the league-leading rushing defense, he's showed leadership on the field and off it.

"Whenever I get a chance, I talk to a lot of young kids," he added. "I still even go back to Jacksonville and I'm still active in that community, so once I build relationships with people, especially kids that don't have people to look up to and don't have the means to experience things, I try to be as much of a blessing as I can."

So the next time you come to see a Broncos game at Sports Authority Field at Mile High, you can keep an eye out for Knighton making a young kid's day usually along the home sideline.

"You always want to focus just on football, but you've also got to see the impact that you can have on people's lives, doing what we do."

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post October 12, 2014

Cody Latimer continues to wait for his first professional reception. His work, however, shows up every week on the stat sheet. The second-round draft pick from Indiana stars on the Broncos' scout team. He already has played the role of T.Y. Hilton, Dwayne Bowe and Percy Harvin — and this past week, he played the role of the man Broncos fans hope he can become, Eric Decker.

"I am doing what I can to help team win. I want my work to translate for the defense on game day," Latimer said. "In my predicament now, I don't really worry about whether I will play or not. I know my time will come."

The transition to the NFL has been jarring. Latimer had always been a star, excelling in basketball before picking up football during his junior year of high school. Watching from the Denver sideline — a healthy scratch in three consecutive games — has been humbling but educational. Latimer's practices serve as graduate school.

"It's crazy. I will be talking to our defense on the sideline, and I will tell them, 'This is about to be a touchdown.' They are like, 'You were right,' " said Latimer, who dropped only one pass in his senior season at Indiana and caught the Broncos' attention with his blocking. "I see the formations, picture what will happen and picture myself out there. It's helping me. My football knowledge is growing every day."

His role will grow too, whether it's this season or next year. Before the Broncos headed to the Meadowlands to play the New York Jets on Sunday, Latimer talked about his hoop dreams, movies and the challenge of learning the Denver playbook.

Q: As a former college star, how have you dealt with not playing?

A: It's tough. I have been getting a lot of support. I didn't know a lot of the offense when I got here. I would get down on myself. My teammates helped me build my confidence. Now each day I smile, practice hard and make plays. I know I can do this. I am confident. It's just whenever the time comes, be ready. You don't want to be one of those players that when somebody goes down, you are unprepared.

Q: Denver's playbook isn't easy to master. What makes it difficult for a wide receiver?

A: It's totally different than college. We had audibles, but we looked to the sideline for signals. A couple of routes converted. Here, all of the routes convert. Here, you don't play a certain position. You could play either slot, outside, or maybe even the tight end position. You have to learn everything. In college, I might know two outside roles. Here, I know all of the roles, routes and the blitzes. And each position has something different. It has helped a lot. I am learning so much, soaking it in.

Q: In arguably the deepest wide receiver draft ever — 33 were selected, including 12 in the first two rounds — you went 56th overall. Were you worried you might be overlooked because you played at Indiana, which isn't a power program?

A: I wasn't worried about that. I was just trying to do my job. My first couple of years there, I wasn't even thinking about playing in the NFL. I was just trying to help turn around the program because everybody knows it's a basketball school. We were trying to get to a bowl game.

Q: You excelled at hoops, winning a high school state title for Jefferson Township in Dayton, Ohio, with former Michigan State star Adreian Payne. Who is your favorite basketball player?

A: I am a Kobe Bryant fan. I love the way he plays, how hard he works, the way he wins. You can't go wrong with that. I was going to try to play basketball at Indiana my freshman year, but I tore my groin. I had to sit the second half of my freshman year in football, so my hoops dreams ended.

Q: Dealing with a broken bone in your right foot, you ran 4.38 in the 40 at your pro day before the draft. How did you pull that off?

A: It was just about pain tolerance, knowing you have to go if you want to make it to the pros. I had a goal to reach. I had put in the work to do it, so it was now or never. I was ready to get out there. As long as I could run, I was doing it.

Q: What do you like most about pro football, and how are you spending your downtime?

A: The fans knowing who we are is the coolest part. And having great teammates. Everybody wants to win, has the same goal. I like to relax by going to movies, whatever is new. I like Denzel Washington. You have to say Denzel wins when talking about movies. Yes, I have seen "Remember the Titans." Hasn't everybody seen it?

Peyton again proves he's a step ahead of everyone as he sets TD record

By Joan Niesen SI.com October 20, 2014

DENVER -- In the end, it was Peyton Manning who pranked us.

That cute game of keep-away, so perfectly pandering to the cameras, supposedly a stunt – that was on the script by Friday, inserted right before the credits would roll. Touchdown, touchdown, touchdown, 507, 508, 509, keep-away. It was right there, blocked out like a Broadway musical, and when Demaryius Thomas caught Manning's 8-yard pass in the second quarter of Sunday's 42-17 romp over the 49ers, he knew what to do.

So that was why Manning looked to be dancing at practice on Friday as the Broncos began stretching. He was clued in all along. That was why he stopped almost immediately when he noticed reporters and cameras. Of course he was one step ahead. He has been his entire career.

Only Manning would stage his own spontaneity, could pull it off. The quarterback first conceived of the idea last week, Thomas said, and Friday was the dress rehearsal. It's unclear how many Broncos knew. Tight endJacob Tamme admits he did not, that if he'd caught No. 509, the scene might have been flubbed. But Manning's four leading receivers were in on the trick, even if they weren't completely sure they'd pull it off. Once the ball landed in Thomas' hands, though, Emmanuel Sanders knew it was a go.

"We were definitely rehearsing it," Sanders said, "but I didn't think we were going to do it." Except that the moment seemed right, and so he ran over to his fellow receivers, and you saw the rest. Eventually, Manning got the ball, and in turn, the Hall of Fame claimed it, bagged it, prepared it to ship off to Canton.

"I can't believe they actually did it," Manning said, and it was believable, at least for a moment. Up until then, no receiver had been willing to concede whose brainchild the show had been – at least until Thomas took the podium and admitted it was his quarterback's plan. So, well, Manning probably can believe it, at least a little bit. His receivers, they tend to follow his plans. (In fact, the bizarre formation that yielded touchdown No. 508 was actually a Friday afternoon brainchild of Manning and offensive coordinator Adam Gase.)

"We sort of joked about it during the week," Manning continued, playing up his innocence. "I'm a little bit hurt by the fact that they could do that, that they're kind of picking on me. I've lost my vertical leap. It's not there anymore. My side-to-side agility is not quite as quick."

But the best part, the best moment as the layers of the prank were peeled away, came later. It was just after Thomas had busted his quarterback, revealed him as the chief conspirator. His allegations were repeated back at him, plain as could be: So Peyton planned the prank on himself? And Thomas glanced down a bit, and looked a little sheepish. "Kind of," he said, and he laughed, as if he was just fully realizing the extent to which Manning pulls the strings.

There are so many ways to parse Sunday's theatrics, when Manning finished the night with 510 career touchdowns, pushing past Brett Favre's record of 508. There was the Broncos throttling of the 49ers, which on a day when Seattle, Cincinnati and San Diego all lost made the Broncos look all that more like the best team in the NFL. There is the comeback from injury, the idea, too easily forgotten these days, that Manning three years ago might have been finished. There is the renaissance in Denver, where he's averaging 2.92 touchdowns per game, compared with 1.91 in Indianapolis.

There is the history, too, the quarterbacks Manning has gradually passed over 17 seasons. He's more than willing to expound on that subject, and it's a genuine appreciation he has for his predecessors. Favre, Dan Marino, John Elway, Johnny Unitas, Fran Tarkenton – on Sunday, Manning traced back over the great names, the names that lend some perspective to his accomplishment, the notion that he might be the best ever. It's getting harder and harder to argue that, even here on Elway's turf.

Last year, Manning had his 55 regular-season touchdowns. That was his record du jour, the number looming. This fall, it was first touchdown No. 500, then No. 509. Record, set, which should apply some kind of finality – except it doesn't. We just keep counting: 510, 520, 600. How high will he go? At 38, Manning gives the illusion that he just might play until he's 50. He already jokes that he's old, so what are a few more years? He's already reached the point where rookies are too young to remember the year he was drafted, and yet he still looks at the game like he has a dozen years in front of him and 10 playbooks to learn.

"He comes in, still writing notes like he's a rookie," Broncos rookie return manIsaiah Burse said. "That just shows you how he's so successful. Every day, he practices like he's an undrafted rookie."

Burse understands the opportunity he's been given, to play with the best, to learn from the best. He understands, but he doesn't. As he stood by his locker Sunday night, Burse, 22, recalled watching Manning when he was a child, wondering what it would like to play with him. And then, after all that, he was there for no. 509. He was just yards from history, but watching Manning, it felt like so much farther.

"I don't know how he feels," Burse said. "It must be crazy being in his shoes."

And really, none of us know. We are all Isaiah Burses, trying to parse a moment that we will never really grasp. We sit back, and we laugh about Manning's control, his script, which has become the hallmark of his career. We think we know him, think it's just so typical that he'd orchestrate the keep-away.

Except, of course, that it's not. On Sunday, Thomas admitted that the game was the first time in his more than two seasons with Manning that he's ever made time for a diversion on the field. Jokes, surprises, those are for after, once the win has been sealed. Only then.

"[Planning the prank] isn't his style, in my opinion," Tamme said. "Five seconds later, he was talking about how we needed to put the pedal to the metal and finish the game, really finish strong and keep going. So for him to take a little 10-second break from that and have some fun with a really special moment, I thought it was cool."

The planning, that was Manning, through and through. But the moment itself, the goofy dance of keep-away as it unfolded, Peyton and his pack of receivers, that was different. It was a rare admission that this – the winning, the records, the greatness – is simple. It is a playground game, a goofy sideshow.

It is fun.

'Humbled' Peyton Manning breaks NFL career TD passes record

By Lindsay H. Jones USAToday.com October 20, 2014

DENVER — Peyton Manning now stands alone as the NFL's all-time touchdown king.

The Denver Broncos' 38-year-old quarterback threw touchdown No. 509 of his career Sunday night against the San Francisco 49ers to break Brett Favre's career record.

The record-breaker went to receiver Demaryius Thomas, at 7:42 p.m. Mountain Standard Time, with three minutes and nine seconds remaining in the second quarter, to give the Broncos a 21-3 lead in a game Denver would go on to win 42-17.

Thomas, Wes Welker, Emmanuel Sanders and tight end Julius Thomas — Manning's stellar stable of pass catchers — played a pre-planned game of keep-away with the record-setting ball before finally letting Manning get his hands on that ball one more time before it heads to the Pro Football Hall of Fame.Manning and his receivers admitted to practicing the game of keep-away during practice late last week. Indeed, the foursome joked about such a scenario during the stretching period of Friday's practice that was open to the media.

"I can't believe they actually did it," Manning said.

Told a few minutes later of Manning's analysis of what at first appeared to be a prank on the NFL's ultimate prankster, Demaryius Thomas called Manning out.

"He actually planned it himself," Thomas said.

Back on the sideline, Manning was then mobbed, wrapped into a bear hug by Broncos head coach John Fox as Sports Authority Field at Mile High public address announcer Alan Roach alerted the crowd to the milestone.

"Broncos fans, you have just witnessed history," Roach said, introducing a pretaped video tribute that featured messages from Favre, Broncos general manager John Elway and several Broncos teammates.

But the fans at Sports Authority Field at Mile High didn't need the reminder.

As the Broncos marched toward the south end zone, flash bulbs from cell phone cameras popped at every snap. They recorded an incomplete pass to Julius Thomas in the end zone, and a sack, before the milestone pass to Demaryius Thomas.

"I've always been a fan of quarterbacks, and I'm very honored and humbled to join a unique club," Manning said.

Manning entered Sunday night's game needing two touchdowns to tie Favre, and three to break the record. Touchdown No. 507 went to Sanders on the Broncos' opening drive of the first quarter, and Manning tied the record with his 39-yard pass to Welker later in the first quarter. The celebration for the record-tying score was delayed as officials reviewed whether Welker had indeed touched the ball to the pylon.

Demaryius Thomas also caught Manning career touchdown No. 510 early in the third quarter on a 40-yard bomb one play after Denver cornerback Aqib Talib intercepted San Francisco quarterback Colin Kaepernick. That touchdown was the 30th between Manning and Thomas, the most of any Bronco, and the fifth-most of any of Manning's teammates.32PHOTOS

Manning's longtime Indianapolis Colts teammate Marvin Harrison caught 112 of Manning's touchdowns, followed by Reggie Wayne, with 67.

But so many of those touchdowns with the Colts feel like distant history now, part of the first chapter of Manning's career.

That Manning has reached Favre's record so quickly, in his 246th game - 56 fewer games than it took Favre - is a testament to the career rejuvenation he experienced in Denver.

"Certainly I didn't even think this could be a possibility a few years ago," Manning said.

When he was cut by the Indianapolis Colts in March 2012, after four surgeries on his neck, including a spinal fusion surgery that forced him to miss the entire NFL season, it was fair to wonder if his Hall of Fame career would end with 399 touchdowns.

But since arriving in Denver, where he signed a five-year contract that runs through 2016, Manning has somehow been a better version of himself as he adjusted to his new body. He threw 37 touchdowns his first season with the Broncos, while spending more time in the training room and with his doctors than in the weight room as he worked to regain strength in his right triceps and waited for his nerve damage to improve.

That didn't fully happen until last year, and Manning tied an NFL record with seven touchdowns in the season opener against Baltimore. By the time the season was over, Manning owned the single-season touchdown record (55), the single-season passing yardage record (5,477) and had earned his fifth MVP award.

"There were definitely those moments in the rehab process, but he just worked so hard to get better, so that's another part that made it so special," tight end Jacob Tamme, a teammate of Manning in Indianapolis and Denver, told USA TODAY Sporte. "I mean, it really is incredible."

While in New Jersey in the week before the Super Bowl, Manning summarily dismissed nearly a week's worth of questions about if he would retire if the Broncos were to win. They didn't, and of course, he didn't — and Manning, now 38 years old, seems intent on playing out his contract with the Broncos, provided he doesn't hit a physical or mental wall before his 40th birthday.

If Manning continues throwing touchdowns at the pace he set when he arrived in Denver, with 2.9 touchdowns per game, Manning will pass 600 touchdowns in 2016, and conceivably throw for more than 630 touchdowns.

When Manning threw touchdown No. 500 two weeks ago, he said he expected several other of the league's current top quarterbacks to reach that mark as well. But to throw more than 600? It's hard to imagine the likes of Tom Brady and Drew Brees getting there. Brady, only one year younger than Manning, has 372 touchdowns. Brees, 35, has 374.

The most intriguing young quarterback who could perhaps one day chase Manning's record is the one who is following him in Indianapolis — the Colts' third-year quarterback Andrew Luck. Luck has 65 touchdowns in his first 39 games; Manning had 64.

For now, and for the indefinite future, the record is Manning's alone.

By the third quarter of the Broncos' Sunday night blowout of the Niners, Manning's record-breaking touchdown ball was in possession of Joe Horrigan, the vice president of communications and exhibits at the Pro Football Hall of Fame.

Horrigan placed the ball — which was marked with a silver "B" by a member of the Broncos' equipment staff — into a blue canvas bag. Horrigan will carry it through Denver International Airport on Monday morning (he wouldn't dare risk it getting lost in checked luggage, Horrigan told USA TODAY Sports) and it will be on display in Canton by Monday afternoon.

It will join a host of other career mementos from Manning dating back to his rookie season, through his single-season record-breaking ball from 2013 and a Broncos uniform from last season when he earned his fifth MVP award.

Peyton Manning's biggest gift: Making everyone around him better

By Frank Schwab YahooSports.com October 20, 2014

DENVER – They speak of Peyton Manning with reverence in the Denver Broncos locker room –talk to any of his teammates long enough and "greatest" will be uttered – and rightfully so.

Think about it. Many of them are fantastic players in their own right, but it's hard to deny they've all benefited from playing with the man who has thrown the most touchdown passes in NFL history.

Take Demaryius Thomas. He was a first-round pick, and he was obviously a special talent even with Tim Tebow and Kyle Orton throwing him the ball. But now he's perhaps the best receiver in the NFL. He had 834 yards in 21 games before Manning arrived, and after his 171-yard outburst on Sunday, he has 3,526 yards in 38 games with Manning. Some of that is just typical development, but it's crazy to think Manning hasn't had a huge impact on his career.

Thomas will be a free agent after the year. Calvin Johnson and Larry Fitzgerald have contracts worth more than $100 million. It's very possible Thomas, after two-plus stellar seasons with Manning elevating him to an elite level, will join them or at least come close.

"He's the best to ever play the game," Thomas said of Manning. "He made me a better player."

Thomas said when Manning arrived before the 2012 season he changed how the receivers ran certain routes. He gave them tips on how to watch film. He said he has learned just by watching how Manning studies film. Thomas talked about what he was thinking as he lined up for the play that became Manning's 509th touchdown, breaking Brett Favre's all-time record. He said he saw how the cornerback lined up and knew how to attack the play ("I came out of the huddle and I was thinking, he's playing outside, so I have to get on his leverage and beat him"), and it surely seemed like Manning had rubbed off on him.

Emmanuel Sanders says he is better off for playing with Manning too. He caught some heat earlier this year for saying Manning was a better leader than Ben Roethlisberger, his old quarterback in Pittsburgh, but that was blown out of proportion. He has since clarified that he meant no disrespect toward Roethlisberger, but he thinks nobody beats Manning when it comes to leadership. Listen to Sanders talk about his mindset since joining the Broncos this year, and it's clear Manning has meant a lot to his career too.

"You don't want to mess up," Sanders said. "So every night I go home and I study my butt off, just so I don't disappoint '18.' Everyone knows that he doesn't have too many more years left in his career, and he wants to go out a Super Bowl champion again, and I don't want to be the one holding this group back."

In Sanders' first season with the Broncos, he has 38 receptions for 514 yards in six games. He never had more than 67 catches or 740 yards with the Steelers.

There are other examples everywhere. Tight end Julius Thomas was a basketball player who played one year of college football. He now leads the NFL with nine touchdown passes and like Demaryius Thomas, is on the verge of signing an enormous contract with the Broncos or someone else as a free agent next spring. Eric Decker knows all about that. He signed a five-year, $36 million deal with the New York Jets this past offseason after catching 24 touchdown passes in two seasons with Manning. He has 12 touchdowns in his two-plus seasons without Manning.

Running backs benefit from Manning expertly changing the plays at the line. Receivers not only follow Manning's example but they also benefit from Manning always finding them in the right place – ask Demaryius Thomas, whose second touchdown was a 40-yarder that could not have been handed to him in a better place. Or Wes Welker, who found himself wide open for Manning's 508th career touchdown off his quarterback's great pump fake.

Coaches owe Manning, too. San Diego coach Mike McCoy, who will face the Broncos on Thursday night, got the Chargers' job after a great 2012 season as Manning's offensive coordinator. Broncos coach John Fox had a .507 winning percentage in nine seasons with the Panthers. His winning percentage with Denver is .722, and that's after going 8-8 in his first Broncos season, which was without Manning.

The list is endless. These coaches and teammates are talented in their own right. But Manning has made everyone around him better. The Broncos celebrated him on Sunday night as he broke one of the NFL's biggest records. They all owe him a debt of gratitude.

"There is no doubt we feel blessed – the Broncos organization, myself personally, I think our coaching staff – he's a tremendous player," Fox said. "I've competed against him for a lot of years, and it's way better having him on our side."

How Peyton Manning is different

ESPN.com October 20, 2014

Working with and coaching Peyton Manning, the NFL's new record holder for most career touchdown passes, is an interesting experience.

Manning may know everything you know. And, he may know more than that, too. If you have too much of an ego, it might be an issue because Manning will remember everything he's seen and everything you've done.

And it's one of the most intriguing things about one of the most interesting characters the NFL has seen.

"It is very difficult to describe him unless you've worked with him," said Detroit Lions coach Jim Caldwell, Manning's former quarterbacks coach and head coach with Indianapolis. "You call those guys out in Denver, and I guarantee you, start talking to those guys that have worked with him.

"It's different."

How different? Those who have spent the most time with Manning try to explain exactly what makes Manning operate.

Jim Mora

Manning connection: Former Colts head coach

Mora knew he was looking at something special when the gangly, unassuming teenager with the legendary last name stepped into a huddle with the New Orleans Saints on a sweltering spring day in 1992. At the time, Mora was the Saints' head coach and Manning, then a junior at the city's Isidore Newman School, was just a youngster oozing with potential. Manning occasionally stopped by to watch the Saints practice in the offseason, standing on the sideline, absorbing every last morsel of information. It was an obvious perk of being the second oldest son of Archie Manning, the former Saints quarterback who worked as a broadcaster for the team and had asked Mora to let Peyton attend those sessions.

Mora figured it was best to not just let Manning learn while watching. So one day, Mora told him to jump in and run a play with NFL veterans. Even at that early stage of what would become a record-shattering career, Manning had the look of a can't-miss superstar. He jogged into the huddle casually, barked out the play the coaches had given him and fired a perfect spiral to a wide receiver, who had to be wondering why the kid was receiving such preferential treatment. "Even though he was still in high school, you knew he was going to be pretty good," Mora said.

It took Mora six years before he had the opportunity to actually benefit from the early exposure to Manning. By that point, Manning had attended enough practices with the Saints -- in high school and during his All-American college career at Tennessee -- that Mora had an invaluable feel for Manning's intangibles. That's one key reason why Mora said it wasn't even close when he became the Colts' head coach in 1998 and the team was deciding between Manning and Ryan Leaf for the first overall pick in the draft. From everything Mora knew about Manning, it was impossible to imagine a scenario where he would become an epic bust.

The Colts went 3-13 during Manning's rookie season, but his leadership sustained the Indianapolis franchise for the next 13 years before he was released and joined the Denver Broncos in 2012. "In practice, you typically rotate your focus between offense and defense, but Peyton never let anybody waste time," said Mora, who coached Manning in Indianapolis for four seasons. "When we were working on the defense, he would grab the running backs and wide receivers and throw balls to them on the side. He could never take it easy. He was always looking for some kind of edge that would help him improve."

Mora had never been around a quarterback so dogged in his pursuit of excellence -- he hadn't even seen veteran signal-callers practice as diligently as Manning did in their first season together -- and Manning hasn't disappointed since. His accomplishments include 13 Pro Bowl selections, five league Most Valuable Player awards, one Super Bowl win and the most touchdown passes in NFL history. Mora admits that he couldn't have forecast a career as prolific as Manning has produced when he was still in high school. But the former coach does know that it isn't surprising to see Manning take his game to such towering heights.

"We didn't hold him back from the first day he got to Indianapolis," Mora said. "He learned fast, and we treated him like a veteran. You can't do that if you have the wrong kind of guy. But if you have the right kind of guy, you can throw them in and never look back. Peyton was that kind of guy."

Tom Moore

Manning connection: Former Colts offensive coordinator

Peyton Manning developed into the play-caller he is today in a very Peyton Manning way: Surely and pragmatically, but in a hurry.

There wasn't one play that marked the beginning of Manning's theatrics at the line of scrimmage -- the "Omaha! Omaha!," gesturing and flailing arms. It was the product of his first three years in Indianapolis, learning under two offensive gurus.

Tom Moore, who was the Indianapolis Colts offensive coordinator when they drafted Manning No. 1 in 1998, was the brains of the offense. But Bruce Arians, Manning's quarterback coach from 1998-2000 and now the Cardinals head coach, was the one who gave it the spark of electricity to make it work.

As a trio, they developed the scheme Manning has run throughout his 17-year career. But the offense was never stagnant. There were always layers and wrinkles being added.

"The whole thing evolved," said Moore, now 75 and the Cardinals assistant head coach. "We got into it the more [Manning] did it, the more comfortable he felt, and one of the things was we had the same system for 12 years."

As Moore continued to build up the offensive system, Manning would devour every addition. Moore said Manning studied tape of himself during the offseason and corrected issues he saw during OTAs and minicamp.

"The big thing is, sometimes, people mistake time spent for work done and that's never the case with Peyton," Moore said. "When he works, it's quality work. He's truly focused and he gets a lot done."

Moore knew Manning was going to be a special player because of his football pedigree, college coach David Cutcliffe and intangibles that complemented his talent.

At first, Moore gave Manning two or three plays to choose from at the line of scrimmage. The evolution? Moore started giving Manning ideas.

"You could see the progress he made in making the right decisions," Moore said.
"The big thing with the quarterback position, I always put it in three phases: Your recall, your processing and then your application. Those three are big, and you get about one second for all of that to happen.

"He was phenomenal."

Those ideas eventually turned into concepts.

When Moore would radio a play, an idea or a concept into Manning's helmet, he tried to leave him with 30 seconds on the play clock. That was enough time for Manning to be Manning.

But it also gave Manning enough time to patiently wait out defenses and check out of plays at the last second.

"He lets that [play] clock go down right to the nth second to read body language," Moore said. "He kinda has a sixth sense about things."

Moore showed Manning how to run certain plays, taught him how to make good decisions and helped him produce 54,828 yards, 399 touchdowns, five MVPs and a Super Bowl win.

But Manning's other-worldly ability at the line of scrimmage, well, that wasn't something that came from Moore.

"I think," Moore said, "the Lord taught him that."

Jim Caldwell

Manning connection: Former Colts QB coach and head coach

Jim Caldwell walked into the meeting in the Colts' offensive staff room with two sheets of paper. It was an Excel spreadsheet of more than half of the 81 interceptions Peyton Manning threw in his first four seasons with the Indianapolis Colts.

Caldwell, now the Lions coach, and Tony Dungy were hired by the Colts before the 2002 season, and the quarterbacks coach wanted to test his pupil in one of their first meetings. On the spreadsheet detailed the time of the game, the down-and-distance -- everything but the actual plays.

Caldwell wanted to see Manning's recall while working through which interceptions were avoidable and which were not.

Then Manning grabbed the paper.

"He starts right from number one," Caldwell said. "Tom [Moore] was there, he was with him the entire time, so he's going down the list and he says, 'OK, yeah, yeah, I remember that one. That one, I threw a little bit late to the flat on that one. Yeah. Hey Tom, that was so and so,' and he'd recall the play number.

"Then he'd go to the next one, 'Yeah, I got double-dipped on that one, remember that one time he was going in and I threw the ball.' He went right down and there were three of them he said, 'Ehh, I'm not sure what happened but I think it was,' and he recounted it."

Caldwell took notes during the entire meeting alongside Manning, Dungy and Moore. He wrote down everything Manning said so he could see where his quarterback was spot on and where he erred.

Then they put on the tape.

"All three of those, when he said he thinks what happened, it happened," Caldwell said. "OK. That's without him having an idea what we were covering that day and yet just kind of shows you what kind of mind that he has."

Caldwell used the Manning recall often in their decade together. When the staff had a question about when they ran a play in the past, the refrain would be "Call Peyton." The staff did, and he would know.

He always knew.

"Tony Dungy has an impeccable memory as well. Mine's not too bad, right," Caldwell said. "But he is absolutely phenomenal. So we'd call and talk. Or he'd start thinking of a play, like, 'Hey, we ran this play at such-and-such a time,' or something he did back at Tennessee or something he saw in college.

"Just an unbelievable recall that's just extremely extraordinary. That's what sets him apart."

The recall came to meetings, too, and it taught Caldwell to leave ego behind. In meetings, Manning would test the coach during film sessions.

While Caldwell was showing one play, Manning would ask about the next one coming up, how the Colts would handle a look, and he waited for the answer to see if his opinion and Caldwell's matched.

"He'd wait for you to get a response to him," Caldwell said. "Then he would have gone through and analyzed that knowing number one, this is what you could do, this is the number one option, here's the number two option and here's the number three option.

"And he's got them all cataloged in his mind."

So were there any times Caldwell surprised his quarterback?

"I can't think of any," Caldwell said.

Elway, formerly the Broncos' quarterback and currently their chief football decision-maker, points to what sets Manning apart inside the 20-yard line.

"To me, thing is that's impressive about him is that in the red zone, you have to throw the ball with a lot more touch, because really a lot of times you're throwing over people rather than in-between people," Elway said. "It's like that two-point play to Demaryius Thomas [to tie the game in Seattle with 18 seconds remaining in regulation in Week 3 this season]. That ball is in the one place where Demaryius can get it and nobody else can, and it's still in a place where Demaryius can make a play.

"People should understand just how difficult that throw was. From what you're seeing, the situation, the coverage and just the number of people that are in the end zone because you're down so close."

If there is anyone who can appreciate what it is for a quarterback to throw more than 500 touchdown passes, it's Elway.

Because No. 7 is still No. 7 on the league's all-time list with 300 touchdown passes in his Hall of Fame career. As the guy who believed Manning would have a postneck surgery career, Elway looks at Manning's climb past the 500 barrier and beyond with some football reverence.

"You know, he may double me," Elway said. "In this job, I hope he gets six hundred."

Elway has worked behind center, thrown scoring passes, called audibles and worked in the tight spaces required to turn a play into a touchdown play. And when he watches Manning, he see what everyone else sees, the "Beautiful Mind" stuff, when Manning can recite plays from the 1998 season as if he just ran them.

"He gets in the red zone and he gets touchdowns because he's got great anticipation and the ability to go over the top of people, drop the ball in, into small spaces with the highest accuracy, rather than having to try to drive the ball in between defenders," Elway said.

"I didn't have the ability to go over the top like that, at least not very much. That was not my strength. I had to, and would have much rather, try to push the ball in between people, you know what I mean? That was instead of coming in over the defender. It opens up more things, but it takes a tremendously accurate throw with unbelievable touch."

Elway sees the preparation, the study, the fruits of Manning's experiences against almost any defense devised, but he also sees why Manning simply has turned opportunity into touchdowns more than anyone else.

"It's just so difficult to throw the ball down there, period," Elway said.

"And to do consistently, do it at game speed, with that kind of touch, over and over again, is so rare. He's so good at it, we just assume that's how easy it is, but I'm here to tell you it's difficult, it's rare and it's why he has so many touchdowns when so many other people would be kicking field goals."

Adam Gase

Manning connection: Broncos offensive coordinator

Asked to pick one touchdown pass for the Broncos that best exemplifies what Manning does, Gase says: "I can't pick one, there's so many, they're all examples of what he does and how he does it."

But ask again, and Gase won't point to a pass, progression or read. He will point to a handoff, or fake handoff. He will point to, in Manning's 17th season of what will be a remember-when career, a recent practice when Manning went through the footwork of a play-action dropback with the Broncos' other quarterbacks.

Step by step, time after time, with Brock Osweiler, in his third year, and Zac Dysert, a practice-squad passer in his second year, grinding through the drumbeat repetition of something Manning has done thousands of times.

"We were just working on how we were doing some different aspects of it, some footwork, handling the ball, and it's just enjoyable to coach him on a position coach level," Gase said. "It is fun just to watch how precise he is with the littlest things, the speed, the tempo, the focus. It's awesome. I say he's just a perfectionist, man.

"I always think of a quote from Bart Starr when he would quote [Vince] Lombardi, that when you're trying to achieve perfection, you'll catch excellence along the way. I feel like that's what he's really trying to do. He's trying to do everything so perfect that greatness, he gets it on the way there."

Gase has worked with some of the best in the game since he started as a student assistant at Michigan State. But working with Manning has been a new experience all together.

"I've said it from the get-go, there's been different stages of my career. Nick Saban was the first chapter of it, Mike Martz really brought me into the coaching realm, and this guy basically changed my career," Gase said. "He really did.

"The way that he's made me think about the game, I don't think I'd be able to learn from anybody else. That's weird for people to hear. Everything, every conversation we have -- run game, protections, routes, the way we practice, the constant communication -- is about how to get better."

Manning has called Gase, "Innovative, creative and aggressive, a guy who just works all the time to put us in position to succeed." But Manning, 38, has a different relationship with Gase, 36, than he has had with other offensive coordinators. Since they are chronological peers, Gase, with his trademark sarcasm in tow, gets in the quarterback's wheelhouse to give the him the business.

"I constantly remind him I'm two years younger," Gase said with a smile. "I'll let guys know in the room, hey our quarterback is 50, let's make sure he's not getting hit."

Broncos linebacker Brandon Marshall forging his own NFL identity

By Mike Garafolo Fox Sports October 23, 2014

At the end of his 2012 rookie season, after bouncing back and forth between the practice squad and active roster, Jacksonville Jaguars linebacker Brandon Marshall had a conversation with position coach Mark Duffner that would stick with him.

"He said, 'You have to get your stuff together because I don't know if you're going to make it, if this is for you,'" Marshall recalled in a conversation with FOX Sports the other day. "I got upset. I got mad. I didn't want to yell or say something I shouldn't say, so I just kept it in internally and used that for motivation. That was fuel to the fire. "I'll never forget he said that. To this day I still think about it."

That was a 2-14 Jaguars team -- tied for worst in the NFL -- and here was one of the coaches of the team telling a fifth-round draft pick he might not be cut out to play in the league. Aside from being out of the NFL completely, it doesn't get any lower than that. Yet within about 20 months, Marshall has proven this league is for him.

Due to a recurring knee injury to Denver Broncos weakside linebacker Danny Trevathan, Marshall has gone from a near-castoff on one of the NFL's worst teams to a starter on one of its best. He's leading a much-improved Broncos defense in tackles and is calling the signals in the huddle on game days and heading up meetings during the week. During Thursday night's AFC West showdown with the San Diego Chargers, he will stare into the eyes of proven veterans such as DeMarcus Ware, Von Miller, Aqib Talib and T.J. Ward and command them to follow him.

Marshall's tale is one of the under-told stories of this NFL season. It's a testament to professional dedication, a story of personal perseverance in overcoming a rough upbringing in a home where domestic violence was a constant threat. And a story of mistaken identity ("I do not play for the Bears," reads his Twitter profile, in reference to wide receiver Brandon Marshall, who played for the Broncos and Miami Dolphins before heading to Chicago.)

And it's still being written.

"When he got cut by Jacksonville, he was at a crossroads in his life when he was kind of doubting himself," said Broncos defensive tackle Terrance Knighton, a teammate of Marshall's with the Jaguars as well. "He had an opportunity to come here, and I told him to just keep working, keep get better. He's taking advantage of everything and he's not looking back.

"He prepares well, he practices well, his body is changing physically. He's treating it like a true professional."

Marshall didn't step right into a prominent role with the Broncos when he arrived last September. In fact, he spent nearly the entire season on the practice squad. But like Knighton said, Marshall handled his job like a true pro.

By all accounts from teammates and staff members, Marshall gave the starting offense fits in practice. He covered tight end Julius Thomasbetter than most opposing linebackers did on Sundays, he stopped the run and he even flustered Peyton Manning. During a late-season practice, Marshall recognized what play the offense was about to run based on the formation, so he yelled out, "Sprintout left!"

"You should've seen how he looked at me. He was in shock," a laughing Marshall said of Manning. "He snapped the ball, and it was a sprintout. I was like, 'I knew it!' That was one of my favorite moments."

The Broncos hand out a scout-team player of the week award. Marshall estimated he won it 10 or 11 times last year.

This year, when Trevathan suffered a cracked bone in his leg in training camp, the Broncos were confident Marshall could step in at the weakside spot for a few weeks. In his first three games, Marshall had a combined 30 tackles, two passes defensed, one sack and a forced fumble. Trevathan returned in Week 5, but one game later, he suffered another crack in the same bone and the team placed him on injured reserve with a designation to return, which means Marshall knew he had another eight-week stint as a starter coming his way.

This time around, he had built up credibility with the veterans because of his play early in the season. In Sunday's blowout victory over the San Francisco 49ers, Marshall led the team with eight tackles and added a pass defensed.

The stat that couldn't be measured was the confidence with which he led the defense during the week of preparation for that game.

"We want our linebackers to run their portion of it, make the calls and be strong with it so that the communication is taking place in the meeting that we want on the field," defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio said. "So he gets plenty of reps doing it and he's getting better at it. I think he's getting more comfortable."

It takes a strong will for a player with little experience to step up in front of the kind of veterans the Broncos have on their defense and speak in a confident voice the way Marshall has. Ask him where and how he developed that side of his personality and he will point you to his childhood.

Marshall was 9 years old when his father burst into the house where Brandon, his mother Barbara, his older brother Marcus and two younger cousins were staying. Brandon's father had been in and out of his life for some time and was struggling with a separation from Barbara, so the family immediately recognized the threat of the unannounced visit.

Brandon recalls picking up his little cousin and running. He says his father chased another cousin into a bedroom, where he then knocked a phone out of the cousin's hands as the cousin was trying to call the police.

"He and my mom were in the bathroom scuffling for a minute," Brandon recalls now in a hushed tone. "When he walked out, he gave me this look. I'll never forget it. He just wasn't himself. He's a different man now, but ..."

After the incident, the family moved into a shelter, where they knew they'd be safe until Brandon's father turned himself in to the police. They remained there for 26 days, according to Barbara. Brandon's father served about three years in prison following the incident.

"During that time (in the shelter), it helped us grow closer and we saw there were other people who had worse stories than ours," said Barbara, who now lives in Virginia but travels to Denver about once per month to see her son. "That just helped my children see that, even through adversity, you can grow. I tried to keep them going and motivated." Brandon and his father now speak occasionally. Though their relationship hasn't completely healed, Brandon remains in touch with his father and visited him last year when he was sick.

It's Barbara whom Brandon credits with serving as his inspiration. She cared for the family for years and remained hopeful even when they were living in a mobile home during Brandon's early years. One year on her birthday, Barbara was asked by her father what she wanted for a gift.

"She said, 'I just want a tank of gas to get to work," Brandon said, recalling the story his grandfather told him. "It was just things like that and my mom's resiliency, with us not having the best situation and my dad being in and out. When that big incident finally happened, when we had to run from him because he was being abusive, me, my mom and brother jelled, we became tight-knit. It was just us. We knew we had to hold each other down."

The recent run of domestic-violence incidents involving NFL players brought back some harsh memories for Marshall.

"That's tough. No man should put his hands on a woman," he said. "I saw what my mom had to go through. I would never do it. Just having that experience and seeing what it does to a woman, it's not right at all."

All of the adversity Marshall experienced in his early years and even at the start of his NFL career has only made the recent good times that much sweeter. He knows life is good when one of his biggest problems is being confused for his name doppelgänger.

When the Broncos' Marshall tweeted a Bible verse, a fan retweeted him and added, "And the Lord urges thee to get some freaking fantasy points bro." A Bears fan quickly informed the young man the divine intervention was misdirected.

But Marshall's favorite story about mistaken identity came when he went to his hometown of Las Vegas on Memorial Day weekend and was told by a friend that a club wanted him to host an event. Knowing he'd get VIP treatment and a nice payday, Marshall said sure. When he arrived and was escorted inside the club, he could tell the people running the party were expecting a different Brandon Marshall.

"I heard somebody say, 'That ain't him. Get him out of here,'" Marshall recalled. "They tell me they want to see my NFL card, so I give them that, they Google me and they're like, 'Is this you?' 'No, I play linebacker for the Broncos.' 'Ohhhhhhh!'

"They're mad at me, like I'm the impostor, but I'm mad because I'm the right one, they just think I'm the other one."

Marshall just realizes he has to make a name for himself. It was that way for him even when he was in Jacksonville and was struggling to gain the trust of the coaches. On the way to practice one day, a young linebacker namedGreg Jones, who was also a late-round pick struggling to hang on to his NFL career, sensed he needed a pep talk.

"I've seen you play and I don't know why they treat you like this," said Jones, who had a brief stint as a starter with the New York Giants but is now out of the league.

"Those simple words were so profound. He didn't have to say anything else," Marshall said. "Just him saying that let me know I am good enough, I can play in this league, I am a good talent. He probably doesn't know until this day, but that little speech propelled me. When I was on practice squad, I was like, 'I can do it.' It lifted my spirits and I just kept working.

"And now, look where I am."

Smith, McCray earn second chances

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com August 10, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – They were a part of the Denver Broncos' rookie class last season, but Quanterus Smith and Lerentee McCray didn't get to run in the offense, as Montee Ball did, or start on defense, as Sylvester Williams did. Smith and McCray were relegated to interested bystander status as the team went about the business of a Super Bowl trip, spending the season on injured reserve.

But the Broncos believed time would heal the two, and in a defensive makeover where Smith and McCray aren't often listed as two of the "new" faces, they have each shown they'll make some impact in the defense as the Broncos try to add a little production on that side of the ball.

"You hope so," McCray said. "I just know it feels great to be out there, try to show what I can do."

Smith tore an ACL in the 11th game of his senior season at Western Kentucky. He was leading the nation in sacks at the time with 12.5, including three sacks against an Alabama offensive line that was stocked with NFL draft picks.

The Broncos saw enough to take him with the first of their fifth-round picks in the 2013 draft, and even as Smith kept saying he would "be full go" by the time the 2013 regular season rolled around, the Broncos weren't convinced. After watching Smith work through training camp and the preseason last year, the place him on injured reserve when they cut the roster to 53 players.

"He just needed more time," said Broncos executive vice president of football operations/general manager John Elway. "You could kind of see that as he went through camp and as we've gone through offseason, you can see it helped him."

For his part McCray, who had been signed as an undrafted rookie following the 2013 draft, was on track to make the roster and keep a decade-long streak of at least one undrafted rookie advancing past the final cut. Then he suffered a season-ending ankle injury in the preseason finale against the Arizona Cardinals.

"Not being out there last year, it just hurt me," McCray said. "So I bring that energy and that attitude and that emotion out there to the field when I go play."

And while Elway's high-profile maneuvers to repair the team's defense – signing DeMarcus Ware, Aqib Talib and T.J. Ward in free agency – have led most any discussion about the team's makeover on that side of the ball. The Broncos also want, and need, some of the other "additions" to work out as well.

Those include the five starters who finished the season on injured reserve in 2013, players such as cornerback Chris Harris Jr., defensive end Derek Wolfe and linebacker Von Miller, as well as fit-and-play players such as Smith and McCray.

Smith, who has spent training camp as Ware's backup, played 31 plays against the Seahawks on Thursday and consistently forced the issue in the pass rush. McCray, who has played with the starting defense at strong-side linebacker as Miller continues to work back from ACL surgery, finished out with 32 plays in the preseason opener.

McCray had a tackle for loss against the Seahawks.

"It felt good to be out there," Smith said. " ... I just want to keep building on it, learn from DeMarcus and produce whenever they put me out there."

McCray has similar motivation.

"I've just grown as a better player, just a better football player overall — special teams to defense, anything I'm asked to do," McCray said. "I have an understanding of what I have to do to get my job done and all I have to do is go out there and get it done. Not being out last year, it just hurt me. So I bring that energy and that attitude and that emotion out there to the field when I go play."

Miller hosts charity night for Von's Vision

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com October 14, 2014

DENVER —You need not look further back than Sunday to see how difficult it is for Von Miller to function without his vision. During the game, he missed a chunk of time after losing a contact, being passed through precautionary concussion protocol and then having to get help putting in a new contact to restore his eyesight. Miller is truly only at full strength when he has clear vision.

The man is often clad in stylish frames when he's out and about, and he rarely goes more than five minutes without his glasses, he said. Without his eyewear, he can't even drive. He's just not himself without them.

And the same goes for everyone who needs them, he said before his Celebrity Steak Out event to raise money for Von's Vision, Miller's foundation to give eyewear or contacts to children in low-income situations.

Miller and more than 30 of his Broncos teammates put on a different uniform Monday night, donning white aprons and hoisting hors d'oeuvres on trays to offer to guests in attendance at Ocean Prime in downtown Denver.

"It's an amazing setup we've got here," Miller said, gesturing toward the tables equipped with autographed Broncos gear up for auction and other items to be bid on to help Von's Vision. "We're trying to help 5,000 kids tonight. Every $20 will get one kid a pair of glasses."

Miller said Von's Vision aims at an issue that flies a bit under the radar in helping kids grow their confidence and their grades with better ability to perform in class.

"I mean, I've been wearing glasses all my life. I was wearing glasses when it wasn't cool and when I didn't have the opportunity or the funds to get a cool pair of frames, so my whole purpose is to give back to the community and create that cool opportunity for kids to show them that it's cool to wear glasses," he said. "Do what you've got to do to get good grades in class. You'd be amazed at how many kids just need glasses or contacts just to excel in class."

Miller enlisted the help of his friends and teammates in giving fans the opportunity to donate to a good cause that flies a bit under the radar, and the opportunity to be served shrimp with cocktail sauce or sliders by NFL players. Following an initial reception that gave guests the chance to interact players they see on the field on Sundays, the restaurant sat the dining guests and the players served them a three-course dinner. Patrons also were able to participate in silent and live auctions on Broncos memorabilia and other gifts to help raise money for Von's Vision.

Though it was a fun event, Miller was more excited about the impact it would have on the kids who would receive better sight as a result. He could identify with the feeling they would have, because he knew that feeling well when he was younger, and he knew the feeling when he finally got his first pair.

"I would fall asleep in them and bend them up and my mom would straighten them back up. They wouldn't be perfectly straight, they would just have to work. And my whole goal is now to give those kids who have the same struggle a new pair of glasses, a new frame, a new outlook," Miller said.

"If you aren't able to see, it's life-changing when you get a pair of glasses or contacts, especially if you get a pair of glasses that you love wearing," he added. "If you can give that to a 6- or 7- or 8-year-old, 10-year-old, any young kid with a pair of cool frames, it totally changes their whole image, especially at school. [...] Your self-esteem—that's my whole goal, to show all those kids it's cool to wear glasses, it's cool to be you."

Life-changing experience bonds Moore, Goulding

By Lauren Giudice DenverBroncos.com September 28, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – Their scars are eerily similar. Both nearly a foot long, permanently marking their calves.

Rahim Moore's scar is clearly more healed than Tyson Goulding's. The skin is now soft and, though the scar is clearly visible, it's faded a bit. Goudling's remains a bit red.

Their scars serve as permanent reminders of the traumatic experience they each went through. Their marks are almost like a symbol of their bond. While the scars are permanent, so is their connection.

On Sunday, June 1, Goudling participated in a 10K run. An athlete his whole life, the physical exertion wasn't anything extraordinary. He completed the race and his right calf began aching.

His symptoms became worse and his wife, Heather, took him to urgent care. The doctor informed him that he would need emergency surgery immediately in order to avoid amputation. He was diagnosed with acute compartment syndrome.

While rare, Goulding knew all about it.

Acute compartment syndrome is caused when there is increased pressure in a muscle compartment. It can often lead to nerve damage and issues with blood flow.

A dedicated Broncos fan, he had followed Moore's story and experience with the same condition. During the Broncos' game against the Chiefs in November, Moore started experiencing similar pain in his left calf. He couldn't shake it and was unable to make the plays he knew he was capable of.

He didn't finish the game and when the pain didn't subside, he called Broncos head trainer Steve Antonopulos. He went to the hospital in the middle of the night where he was diagnosed. He, like Goulding, required emergency surgery. Both men were hours away from amputation.

Goulding underwent surgery on Monday following the diagnosis and then a second on Wednesday. He would end up having four surgeries in ten days.

The night after that Wednesday surgery was the lowest and most discouraged Goulding felt throughout his recovery process. Knowing how closely Goulding followed the Broncos and recalling Moore's similar struggle, a relative reached out to the Broncos to see if a call or a text from Moore would be possible to lift Goulding's spirit.

About 30 minutes later, Moore stood in his Goulding's hospital room.

When Heather informed Goulding that Moore was on his way to visit him, he didn't believe her.

"It was late at night and I had gone home for the night and it was the Broncos saying Rahim wanted to come by and I said 'Well, Tyson's probably going to be in the hospital for the next couple of weeks so come on by whenever' and he said, 'No, we want to come tonight' so I got in the car and came back to the hospital and he [Tyson] said 'What are you doing here?" Heather said. "And I said 'Rahim Moore is coming to visit you' and he's like 'Stop playing.""

But Moore did come. Moore, then approximately seven months removed from his surgeries, served as an inspiration for Goulding. By that time, Moore had regained much of his strength in his leg and was walking and running.

He offered support for Goulding and reminded him to stay strong. Moore told him what the recovery was going to be like for him and he didn't sugarcoat it. He informed him that it wouldn't be easy, but that he knew he could do it. Before Moore left the hospital that night, they prayed together.

"He was my example that you can get back," Goulding said.

"It's been really tough," Heather said. "In the beginning we didn't know if he'd be able to walk again. We didn't know what his new normal would be. So it's been really hard but it's been wonderful to see how fast he's recovered and he had great medical care, which made a huge impact."

Fast forward to September 7, 2014. Rahim Moore is back at Sports Authority Field for his first regular season game since his diagnosis. A pass from Andrew Luck intended for Colts tight end Dwayne Allen was deflected by Aqib Talib and intercepted by Moore just inches above falling incomplete. Later in the game, the ball bounced off Coby Fleener's hands and Moore dove to catch it and give the Broncos possession.

Goulding watched the game on television as his new friend made his NFL comeback.

"It's awesome," Goulding said regarding Moore's first game back. "He said that he was going to have a great year. It's inspiring. It's really cool." Goudling still isn't 100 percent and can't run again yet. He's still working to build his strength back.

"I'm almost three months into this so it's just a process of trying to get stronger," Goulding said. "I've been an athlete my whole life. I understand the work of working out and building muscle so I know it doesn't happen overnight. I'm still working on it."

The two friends, bonded by unfortunate circumstances, were reunited as the Gouldings were invited to the Broncos' practice preceding their Week 3 game in Seattle. It looked like they had known each other for a long time as they embraced.

Moore gave Goulding and Heather his gloves and sent them home with the cleats he was wearing during practice, which also happened to be the cleats he wore during that fateful Chiefs game a year ago. He signed them, "To Tyson, From your friend Rahim. Luv ya!"

They shared exercises that they have been using to gain mobility back and Rahim said he will send tickets their way for a Broncos game later this season. They compared their analogous scars. As they both continue their long process of recovery, it appeared that they found relief in each other.

"He looked good," Moore said about their reunion. "He looked like he's overcome a lot and I'm proud of him. He has a fantastic wife. His wife has done a fantastic job. She's so joyous and giddy and has kept a positive attitude."

"I look forward to seeing her and Tyson in the future. It's not going to be a camera thing or an interview thing. We're going to hang out, I'll invite them to the games. We're going to have dinner and we're going to hang out. Someday we'll laugh about these times."

It was a nice reunion on a beautiful Thursday afternoon. Even Head Coach John Fox came to see the Gouldings to wish them well.

Moore and Goulding lead very different lives, but they will remain friends as they both share an experience that very few have to go through.

"Tyson's very laid back and he's very quiet but right now he's in a stage where he's so thankful and so blessed. I will always be there for Tyson," Moore said. "That's a great friendship and bond to have. I want him to have joy and triumph from watching me play football and him rooting me on because at the end of the day I'm rooting him on."

Rahim Moore's studious approach to playing football began long before he joined Broncos

By Mike Klis The Denver Post September 14, 2014

Rahim Moore can sit and watch film of the Kansas City Chiefs' offense on his iPad, and talk with a reporter to his right, all at the same time. Try chewing on that while walking away. "Sorry, but I've got to multitask," Moore says. "You're cutting into my film time."

This may be difficult to believe, but Moore, a fourth-year NFL safety who made two interceptions in the Broncos' season-opening win a week ago, may be just as life-possessed with football as Peyton Manning.

Yes, Manning was all but born into the NFL. Moore started running around a football field when he was a 4-year-old water boy for his older brother Shaft's Pop Warner team. The younger brother started putting on his own pads in his South Central Los Angeles Pop Warner League when he was 7.

He didn't just play the game. The hyperactive kid studied it.

"When Rahim was a little boy, 7 or 8 years old, he would sit with his coach and watch film for hours," said Moore's mom, Nowana.

In a hallway at Broncos headquarters, Moore is watching film now.

"You want to see this play right here? This is a play they're good at," he says. "Alex Smith is always making plays. You can never count him out."

Smith, who quarterbacks the Chiefs, is executing one of coach Andy Reid's patented plays: the misdirection, play-action bootleg pass.

Know what film study does? It helps a safety break a half second quicker on a ball tipped in the air. When the Indianapolis Colts' Andrew Luck forced a pass to tight end Dwayne Allen down the seam last Sunday, it wasn't the first time Moore saw that play.

When cornerback Aqib Talib deflected the ball, Moore caught it just inches off the ground.

Later, when a Luck pass clanked high off Coby Fleener's hands as the tight end was running a crossing route, Moore was in position — and had the athletic, change-of-direction quickness to shift from coming up on the tackle to making a lateral dive for the interception.

"If you're in the right position and you're going hard, then good things happen," said Broncos defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio. "That's really what it was. In both cases he was where he was supposed to be. He was breaking the way he was supposed to be breaking and aggressively going after the ball.

Being benched "was like retiring"

On occasion, Moore has looked wistfully at the city he's played for going on four seasons. It's not like Denver is exempt from gang problems, but it's nothing like the dangerous neighborhood surrounding his Dorsey High School.

Moore was never close to joining a gang, but he did have close friends who did.

"If it got to the point where they were going to do something they weren't supposed to do, I was going to the grass," he said.

The gangs were street. Going to the grass was a metaphor for not hanging on the street. Going to the grass meant working out, doing homework, practicing, watching game film.

Going to the grass.

"If I had a choice, I would love for my mom and my dad to both be married and live in Lone Tree, or Highlands Ranch, or live in Cherry Creek," Moore said. "I would love that. But that's not the plan God had for me."

South Central Los Angeles was what Nowana and her three children made of it. A single mother who worked 25 years in the banking business, Nowana would get up at 6 a.m., drop off Rasheed (Shaft), now 31; Rahim, 24; and DuRaisha (NaeNae), 19, who is in her second year at Arizona State; at school and then head to the bank.

"It was tough sometimes," Nowana said. "It was also rewarding. They had birthday parties every year. We did family functions. I loved on them. I took them to school, we went to church, I whipped their butts, I raised them, I loved them. And you do it until they get of age and take the baton and move on to be productive in their own lives."

in the first round. Instead he wasn't selected until the second day, in the second round.

"I was disappointed," he said. "But looking back, I'm happy I went in the second round. I was disappointed because I felt like I did everything I could to be drafted at that level. But who cares? In the NFL, you either make plays or you don't. It doesn't matter what round you are drafted or how much money you're making. Are you're making plays and are you helping your team win?"

He started his first five games as a rookie, but the Broncos' coaching staff determined he wasn't ready and benched him, pretty much for the rest of the season.

"It was like retiring," Moore said. "They took the game away from me. Looking back, it was good for me. I disagreed with it. But at the same time, Coach (John) Fox said it would better me. It did."

It helped to have a sideline view of veterans Brian Dawkins and Champ Bailey. Moore also saw that the NFL game wasn't as difficult as he was making it out to be.

Don't think, just play.

"Lord, let me wake up from this"

He played well in his second season of 2012 until the Flacco Fling in a second-round playoff gamepointed the index finger of blame directly at Moore. The Ravens tied the score in the final seconds of regulation, then won the game in overtime.

Funny thing happened after that Jacoby Jones touchdown catch for Baltimore, though. Before the angry mob could gather, Moore disarmed it by standing in front of his locker and taking full responsibility.

"He was so remarkable," Nowana said. "I know he set a tone and an example to many. He said, 'Hey, it's right there in front of everybody.' Why say something different? He said it, he owned up to it. He moved on. Of course he carried it for a while. But once he let it go, it was a brand new day.'"

The next day, Moore headed off to Florida to begin his offseason training. He doesn't smoke, doesn't drink. In 2013, he was playing every snap at free safety for the Broncos when, in a home game against Kansas City — "November 17," Mom said reflexively — Moore's leg was inexplicably going numb.

Fox, who was watching at home as he recuperated from heart surgery, may have been the first to realize something was amiss.

"There was a run that broke out to the boundary," Fox said. "And he ran after it, and I mean he had no juice. I was thinking, 'Something's wrong with him.'

Early the next morning, Moore underwent a life-threatening surgery to correct a circulation condition in his lower left leg called lateral compartment syndrome.

"I don't think I told anybody else this, but when they gave me anesthesia, right before they gave that to me, I said, 'Lord, let me wake up from this,' " Moore said. "Because they told me I could have passed, lost my leg. And as I was fading out, I was blinking, and I thought to myself, I hope this isn't the last time I have eyes open."

He woke up happy to be alive. But eventually came renewed disappointment: His season was finished. No playing in AFC championship victory. No playing in Super Bowl defeat.

The 2014 season opener last Sunday marked the Denver debuts of Talib, DeMarcus Ware, Emmanuel Sanders and T.J. Ward, reaffirmed the greatness of Manning and the unique talent of Julius Thomas.

And two interceptions for Moore in his first game back.

Now it's on to the second game. Moore is in a hallway, watching a safety's view shot of the Chiefs' Alex Smith faking the handoff left, rolling right and hitting a wide-open running back in the flat. Smith must have completed 50 such passes last year.

"He's good. I like him," Moore says. "He's a good quarterback."

Nelson an unlikely star in Denver's defense

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press October 17, 2014

Nelson won't blame anybody for asking, "Corey who?"

He didn't expect to hear his name called on draft day, much less over and over on the public address system at MetLife Stadium with his seven-tackle performance.

His senior season at Oklahoma ended with a torn left pectoral muscle in the Sooners' fifth game, and he was denied a medical hardship by the NCAA for another year of eligibility.

So, he earned his degree in communications and started thinking maybe he could make a living talking about football instead of playing it.

"I didn't even know if I was going to play NFL ball or even if this was a future for me," Nelson said. "Just the way the season ended how I didn't play (much). And I didn't get that much burn my junior season just because a whole new (defensive coordinator) came in. I didn't really play that much my college career. And I just thought nobody knew about me."

When other players were crisscrossing the country on visits to NFL teams, Nelson was doing crisscross puzzles.

"I didn't go on any visits," he said.

The Broncos, who take a 4-1 record into Sunday night's showdown with San Francisco (4-2), selected Nelson with the 242nd overall draft pick, 14 spots away from "Mr. Irrelevant."

Getting drafted was one thing. Making a team that had been hyperactive in free agency and which had few holes following a Super Bowl appearance was yet another hurdle facing Nelson.

He spent much of August wondering if he had what it took to make the 53-man roster. That answer finally came in his final audition in the Broncos' fourth preseason game, at Dallas.

"That's when I realized I can really do this," he said.

Like many late-round rookies, Nelson made his mark on fourth down at first.

"Corey's earned his way, really, on special teams," defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio said. "That is the main way he made this team, it's the main way gotten on the field. We're finding ways to do things with him in practice, and he does it well in practice. Then it just adds to the confidence, so when you get to games, you're not afraid to put him in."

Nelson is a big beneficiary of Del Rio's philosophy of keeping backups engaged by using them in sub packages on Sundays. "And if they do well, we build that role," Del Rio said. "So we had that in mind with him and it happened to coincide with Danny going down, so it worked out pretty well."

Brandon Marshall, who started the first three games while Trevathan was out with his first leg injury, slid over and Nelson joined Marshall in the nickel package.

"It was kind of nerve-wracking at first," Nelson said. "But once you play a couple of snaps and get those jitters out, then it's just ball."

Nelson's workload last week included 36 snaps from scrimmage to go with 26 on special teams.

"Man, Corey was huge this game," cornerback Chris Harris Jr. said. "He stepped up and played a great game. Nobody knew we were going to have to use him this much this year or in that game."

Nelson is that rare pro football player who wasn't a big fan of the NFL as a kid. He was into music and academics and was even class president back in high school.

"I didn't really watch football or basketball that much," Nelson said. "I was just into other stuff."

He's still a bit star struck in Denver.

"You meet guys like DeMarcus Ware, Peyton Manning, Wes Welker, Danny Trevathan. Those guys are great players in the NFL and to be taken under their wing is a wonderful experience," Nelson said. "It's something that you have to take advantage of and that you have to cherish."

Notes: LB Lamin Barrow was fined $8,268 for throwing a punch against the Jets. ... OL Paul Cornick has played 31 snaps over the last two games as a second tight end. It's the same role RT Chris Clark played before cracking the starting five. Cornick appears primed to make a similar jump if the Broncos decide to make a change in their O-line in light of all the troubles they've had running the ball and sustaining drives.

Bradley Roby finding groove as effective rookie

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com October 16, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Bradley Roby wasn't very fond of the early bye week in Week 4. Though he had a good start—he was nominated for the NFL's Rookie of the Week award after a Week 1 performance in which he had seven tackles and three passes defensed, including a clutch play to stop the Colts on their final drive—Roby didn't want to interrupt his learning process.

"I'm still getting my footing, getting used to the NFL and stuff like that, just getting in stride with everything," he said at the time. "I think for me it's not messing up my progression, but I just got to continue to work, mentally, through the bye week and let my body heal a little bit."

Fast-forward to Week 6: Roby is back up for consideration in the polls for Rookie of the Week. He had three tackles and two passes defensed, as well as a sack. It was just another solid outing for a rookie cornerback who's looked like he has more experience in the NFL than the 'R' in his bio.

It certainly seems like the bye week hasn't slowed him down in the slightest. In fact, he hasn't looked slow whatsoever. He certainly didn't look slow to Geno Smith, who was sacked by Roby flying in from the edge on a blitz.

In comparison to his status at the season's start, Roby says he's more comfortable in the defense. His turntable needle has found the groove in the vinyl of his developmental path. "I'm kind of in a rhythm on how to prepare each week, how to prepare for different receivers and things like that," he said. "I think I'm a lot better. I think I have a ways to go. I'm still working on it. From the first game, though, I'm way ahead where I was. Each week I just try to get better."

Roby's play as a rookie has been outstanding given his short time in the NFL so far, and it's drawn attention from the Rookie of the Week award nominations to his coaches and teammates.

"He's a very talented guy, but what usually separates guys is how they prepare, the exactness in this league that you have to play at in pass defense, especially the corner position," Head Coach John Fox said. "I think he's really stood out there. [Secondary Coach] Cory [Undlin] and [Assistant Secondary/Safeties Coach] Sam [Garnes] have done a good job with him. He's very willing, he's a sponge to learn and he's a smart guy, football-wise. He understands concepts, and he's not afraid to work. So I think you'll continue to see that."

As the third cornerback, Roby often comes in during nickel situations to cover the slot receiver, and has shown a pretty complete, savvy game. His coverage has been a valuable addition in the slot and has taken on challenging receivers. He's also been a pretty solid tackler, wrapping up opponents without making many mistakes.

"At the end of the day, if you want it more than him, you'll come out on top. If you run at him harder than he's running at you, you're going to win. Who's going to back down?" Roby said. "I just want to do my job. If a guy comes in my area, I want to get him down. I'm not going to take pride in missing tackles, I don't want to be known for that. I just like to play football, so it comes with it."

It's not hard to see why his play has earned the respect of his colleagues in the secondary. T.J. Ward called him a "young, hungry guy."

"I think he's doing a great job in there," Chris Harris Jr. said. "It's definitely a complex position and he's doing well. He's kind of learning on the fly and to play that position you've got to learn a lot. You've got a lot of responsibility and he's doing a great job. He's improving each week so that's something that you want and that's all you can ask for from any rookie is to get better each week."

"I definitely feel a tie with the other guys, communication-wise," Roby said. "I think we're kind of slowly getting all on the same page. Take it week to week to get better."

With 23 total tackles, six passes defensed and a sack, Roby's showing his impact in a limited role in the secondary's depth, as well as weekly improvement that comes with added experience. And on top of that, his future is looking brighter and brighter with a well-rounded defensive skill set and level of preparation that could pay off for years to come.

"Gym rat" Emmanuel Sanders impresses his QB

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post October 24, 2014

The three touchdowns on the stat sheet weren't necessary. The explanation for the best day of Emmanuel Sanders' career began in April, a routine he carried through this week.

As a free agent he sought the Broncos. The Kansas City Chiefs thought they had him signed, but when Sanders made it known he didn't need to match Eric Decker's contract with the Jets, Denver's ears perked up.

They moved quickly, securing the former Pittsburgh Steelers weapon. The Broncos figured they were getting a legitimate deep threat. They didn't realize they landed a football honors student. He stayed after practice daily, improving his timing with Peyton Manning.

"He's a gym rat," Manning said. "He really loves football."

On a sweltering day in July, Sanders stood at the goal line for 30 minutes, going over hand signals and audibles. It was football's version of wax-on, wax-off.

"You can never stop working," Sanders said, "or learning."

Which brings us to Wednesday. In a quiet moment after a battery of media interviews, he reached into his locker and grabbed his iPad. He watched San Diego coverages repeatedly, believing he could enjoy a big game. Manning targeted him nine times. Sanders caught every one for 120 yards.

"Eighteen (Manning) was just looking at me," Sanders said, "and it felt good."

Sanders provided an educated guess that the Chargers would focus on containing Julius Thomas, who leads the league with nine receiving touchdowns. It would create gaps in coverage. Those became chasms with San Diego missing top cornerback Brandon Flowers, who was sidelined with a concussion.

Sanders began the scoring on a play that reflected the Broncos' creativity. The Chargers braced for Thomas at the goal line. He stepped back as a blocker to seal off the back side. Manning rolled right, staring in that direction. The trick worked. He paused and fired a strike to Sanders, who wandered slyly across the end zone on a drag route.

The play wasn't new. The result was.

"We usually don't get to that option," offensive coordinator Adam Gase said.

The second touchdown amplified Flowers' absence and Sanders' athleticism. While Decker starred in the red zone, he couldn't stretch a defense like Sanders, who considers Denver "wide receiver heaven," admitting it reminded him of his run-and-shoot days at Southern Methodist University.

Sanders raced past the Chargers' Richard Marshall on a go route — "he's a hard guy to overthrow," Manning said — leaving vapors in his wake.

Sanders struggled with injuries in Pittsburgh, and his slight build doesn't lend itself to the meat grinder that is the slot receiver's routes.

But since a calf injury in preseason, his health has been impeccable. His ability has never been questioned.

"He's so fast and can jump," said rookie receiver Cody Latimer, who has learned from Sanders. "And he's tough."

Sanders' final touchdown, while short, blended together the elements that have helped Sanders post four 100-yard games this season.

The Chargers chose the right defense on the goal line. They doubled across the middle with Wes Welker. They bracketed Sanders, but his comfort level with Manning paid off. Sanders looked covered, the only open window requiring a jump. Manning trusted Sanders' leap, and he skied on a slant route, shielding the defender for the final score.

"I can just tell I am enjoying playing with him. He has a great work ethic. He really loves football. He brings that energy everyday," Manning said. "And I know he's wanted to get into the end zone."

Ramsey: Emmanuel Sanders travels from Texas poverty to Colorado riches

By David Ramsey Colorado Springs Gazette September 2, 2014

Emmanuel Sanders, in slight trouble while sitting in a stiff office chair, did not yet know he was special.

Huey Chancellor knew. The football coach at Bellville High School saw a blindingly bright future for this skinny freshman.

Sanders had been sent to Chancellor's office to discuss a minor infraction. Chancellor can't remember exactly what had gone wrong.

Both men remember the long, life-changing conversation that followed. Chancellor calmly confronted Sanders, asked him if he wanted to travel from good to dominating.

Sanders answered yes.

The conversation transported Sanders from poverty in Bellville, Texas, population 3,794, to a packed stadium on the edge of downtown Denver and a $15 million contract. His role with the Broncos grew more crucial Wednesday after the suspension of Wes Welker.

I realize this poor-to-rich saga is an ancient tale in American sports. Babe Ruth wandered through his young life as an impoverished orphan in Baltimore. His life changed when he met Brother Matthias Boutlier, who taught The Babe to read and write and, more importantly, to throw and hit a baseball.

Floyd Paterson rampaged along as a young thief who struggled, and failed, to find reason to like himself. His life changed when he met Cus D'Amato, who turned a sad-eyed young man into the world's heavyweight champion in 1956.

Sanders met Chancellor, and his life changed, too. An old story, yes, but one that never gets old.

"I can't promise you anything," Chancellor told Sanders. "But if you take it seriously on the football field and if you work in that classroom, you're going to be somebody special and your dreams will come true."

Sanders remembered his talk with Chancellor as he sat on a stool in the Broncos spacious locker room on a happy Saturday night. He had caught two touchdowns in an exhibition game against the Texans.

He stared into his locker as he traveled back to Bellville.

"I didn't know that I was good," Sanders said. "And Coach kind of opened my eyes to doing the right things and to start thinking about the future in terms of making a living for my family."

Life in Bellville was not easy. He lived with a multitude of relatives in a tiny house on Fifth Street. His grandmother worked two jobs, and Sanders admires her deeply.

Still, Sanders knew he needed to be seated at the dinner table the minute food was served. Nothing was left for the tardy.

"If you don't get there when the food is out, good luck to you," Sanders said.
"Some nights I cried myself to sleep because of starvation but I don't like to talk about that story because it makes it seem like bad parenting and my grandma was the best parent in the entire world. She busted her butt."

He took his hunger to the football field. Chancellor asked Sanders to give him everything, but even the coach was surprised by his star's fervor. Sander was blessed with speed and quickness. He was not blessed with a bulky frame.

Didn't matter. Chancellor watched enemy defenders flying through the air after savage Sanders blocks. He admired his star's extreme versatility. Sanders played slotback and defensive back. He returned punts and kickoffs. He almost never left the field.

He never complained.

Sanders pushed past what he thought were his limits, and he did this each day.

"It's about hard work and, of course, dedication," Sanders said. "People forget about dedication. Because I can get out here and work hard one time doesn't mean I'm going be successful. Dedication is when you do it over and over and over. Every day you're dedicated to coming out and working hard."

His labor was not in vain. He earned a scholarship to Southern Methodist and became a star. He rose from Steelers third-round pick to featured receiver. He caught the attention of John Elway, who pays him $5 million per season to catch passes from Peyton Manning.

His climb was unlikely, and he knows it.

"I came from nowhere," he said, "and now I'm out here and there are people screaming and wanting my autograph."

In July, a few days before he reported for his first Broncos training camp, Sanders returned to Bellville to speak to the current Brahmas. They listened intently, as Sanders once did in that stiff office chair.

Brandon Swearingen plays receiver and safety for Bellville. He was surprised when he saw this normal-sized man talking about hard work.

"He looks a lot bigger when he's catching touchdowns," Swearingen said.

Sanders delivered a simple yet profound message. You can push yourself to destinations that will surprise you and everyone else.

The Brahmas listened, with good reason.

"He's an example of how dedication can get you somewhere," Swearingen said. "And he comes from the same town where I come from."

The man who helped place Sanders in the NFL has departed Bellville. Chancellor seeks to build a winner in Edna, Texas.

On a recent evening, he laughed as he remembered the skinny freshman who became the NFL starter.

"He did not grow up with a silver spoon his mouth, but he was a class kid," Chancellor said.

Chancellor looked around his office walls, where he's placed framed photos of the finest players from his 22-season coaching career.

He realized, to his surprise, he saw no framed photo of the best player he ever coached.

"Tell Emmanuel," Chancellor said, "to send me one."

Smith, McCray earn second chances

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com August 10, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. – They were a part of the Denver Broncos' rookie class last season, but Quanterus Smith and Lerentee McCray didn't get to run in the offense, as Montee Ball did, or start on defense, as Sylvester Williams did. Smith and McCray were relegated to interested bystander status as the team went about the business of a Super Bowl trip, spending the season on injured reserve.

But the Broncos believed time would heal the two, and in a defensive makeover where Smith and McCray aren't often listed as two of the "new" faces, they have each shown they'll make some impact in the defense as the Broncos try to add a little production on that side of the ball.

"You hope so," McCray said. "I just know it feels great to be out there, try to show what I can do."

Smith tore an ACL in the 11th game of his senior season at Western Kentucky. He was leading the nation in sacks at the time with 12.5, including three sacks against an Alabama offensive line that was stocked with NFL draft picks.

The Broncos saw enough to take him with the first of their fifth-round picks in the 2013 draft, and even as Smith kept saying he would "be full go" by the time the 2013 regular season rolled around, the Broncos weren't convinced. After watching Smith work through training camp and the preseason last year, the place him on injured reserve when they cut the roster to 53 players.

"He just needed more time," said Broncos executive vice president of football operations/general manager John Elway. "You could kind of see that as he went through camp and as we've gone through offseason, you can see it helped him."

For his part McCray, who had been signed as an undrafted rookie following the 2013 draft, was on track to make the roster and keep a decade-long streak of at least one undrafted rookie advancing past the final cut. Then he suffered a seasonending ankle injury in the preseason finale against the Arizona Cardinals.

"Not being out there last year, it just hurt me," McCray said. "So I bring that energy and that attitude and that emotion out there to the field when I go play."

And while Elway's high-profile maneuvers to repair the team's defense – signing DeMarcus Ware, Aqib Talib and T.J. Ward in free agency – have led most any discussion about the team's makeover on that side of the ball. The Broncos also want, and need, some of the other "additions" to work out as well.

Those include the five starters who finished the season on injured reserve in 2013, players such as cornerback Chris Harris Jr., defensive end Derek Wolfe and linebacker Von Miller, as well as fit-and-play players such as Smith and McCray.

Smith, who has spent training camp as Ware's backup, played 31 plays against the Seahawks on Thursday and consistently forced the issue in the pass rush. McCray, who has played with the starting defense at strong-side linebacker as Miller continues to work back from ACL surgery, finished out with 32 plays in the preseason opener.

McCray had a tackle for loss against the Seahawks.

"It felt good to be out there," Smith said. " ... I just want to keep building on it, learn from DeMarcus and produce whenever they put me out there."

McCray has similar motivation.

"I've just grown as a better player, just a better football player overall — special teams to defense, anything I'm asked to do," McCray said. "I have an understanding of what I have to do to get my job done and all I have to do is go out there and get it done. Not being out last year, it just hurt me. So I bring that energy and that attitude and that emotion out there to the field when I go play."

Aqib Talib has something to prove

By Jeffri Chadiha ESPN.com October 3, 2014

DENVER -- Denver Broncos cornerback Aqib Talib craned his neck, patiently scanned the options and trusted his instincts when pondering the choices before him. He didn't have much time for lunch on this spring afternoon, so Noodles & Co. would have to do for a man who had recently signed a six-year, $57 million free-agent deal. As Talib stepped slowly toward the cash register, he continued contemplating the various pasta selections when an unassuming gentleman tapped his right shoulder from behind. "Don't worry about this one," the man said. "I'll take care of your lunch today."

Talib couldn't help but smile at the gesture. The last time somebody bought him a meal, he was standing in line at a Dunkin' Donuts outside Boston last fall, waiting for 25 breakfast sandwiches that a New England Patriots fan was eager to purchase on his behalf. The difference then was that Talib was already deep into his first full season with the Patriots after being traded from the Tampa Bay Buccaneers. This time, before even lining up in a game for the Broncos, Talib was feeling instant love from the Mile High City.

The takeaway for 28-year-old Talib was that new beginnings can trump old baggage. For a man who has been suspended or involved in a legal run-in at every level of his career, Talib is out to prove something critical in his first year in Denver: that the Broncos made a sound investment.

"When you've been around the NFL long enough, you hear about the A-1 franchises," Talib said. "I was lucky to be with one in New England, and now I'm with one here. You're talking about being around people like Peyton Manning, John Fox and John Elway every day. It doesn't get much better than that."

Sitting in a folding chair outside the Broncos' locker room after an August practice, Talib talked passionately about his new team. He fidgeted with a pair of cellphones while answering questions, and he joked with teammates who walked by. In many ways, Talib appeared to be a man eager to put his best foot forward. At his best, he's funny, personable and candid.

But Talib didn't pretend he didn't know what was coming in that interview -- especially at a time when player conduct is under the microscope. If his story really is one of redemption, it won't just revolve around all the abilities and skills that earned him his first Pro Bowl selection last season. It also has to be about the issues that left many observers questioning Talib's decision-making and his future.

The fights with teammates. The arrest for slugging a cab driver. The ugly tussle with his sister's live-in boyfriend three years ago that led to an indictment for aggravated assault with a deadly weapon -- although charges were later dropped because of insufficient evidence. Talib drew so much negative press in his first five NFL seasons that the Broncos must have been holding their breath in June when Dallas police erroneously named Talib as someone who had been arrested when, in fact, older brother Yaqub Talib had been picked up for public intoxication.

But as the NFL struggles with an assortment of criminal issues that have made people question the state of the league, Talib feels as if his ability to avoid trouble since being traded out of Tampa Bay midway through the 2012 season indicates that he's on the right track.

"I feel like I have grown a lot," Talib said. "When you're young, you start off wanting to go to the NFL. Then you want to be a first-round pick. After that, you want to be a starter, and then a Pro Bowler and then a guy who plays in playoff games. I'm at the stage now where I want to be recognized among the best at my position."

As for most players with baggage, Talib's story is complicated. He spent the first 11 years of his life in rugged East Cleveland, an area, where Talib said, "You saw gangs, drugs, shootings, people getting jumped and girls fighting each other." Talib became so used to his rough surroundings that he was hardly fazed when his mother, Okolo Talib, spent eight months in prison after being indicted for felony assault for attacking another woman with a knife in 1996. He and Yaqub spent that time with their father, Theodore Henry, who lived in Trenton, New Jersey, after he and Talib's mother divorced.

As bleak as Talib's environment was, there was no questioning his athletic ability. When neighbors dumped old mattresses on the street corners for garbage pickup, a young Talib performed cartwheels and backflips on them, leaving his mother wondering how an 8-year-old could be so nimble. When she moved her family to the Dallas area before Talib started sixth grade, that athleticism became even more obvious when he started playing organized football. He became a standout at Berkner High School in Richardson, Texas, and an All-American at Kansas after that.

But Talib also had red flags hovering all around him. The Tampa Bay Times reported that Talib received two years' probation toward the end of his senior year at Berkner for breaking into a house. He also garnered multiple suspensions in his first two years at Kansas and admitted to testing positive three times for marijuana during his college career.

The Buccaneers, nevertheless, selected Talib at No. 20 in the 2008 draft. In 2010, he received a one-game suspension for punching a cab driver in St. Petersburg, Florida, the year before. Later, he was indicted in Garland, Texas, for the 2011 incident in which police alleged that Talib had assaulted his sister's live-in boyfriend after the man hit Talib's sister. The case was dismissed before going to trial.

Despite Talib's having intercepted 17 passes in his first four seasons with the Bucs, most people knew him because of his behavior off the field.

"I was putting myself in bad situations," he said. "I wasn't thinking about the consequences. I would know I wasn't supposed to be in a place, and I decided to go anyways."

Added former Bucs general manager and current ESPN analyst Mark Dominik: "If you look at everything that's happened to Aqib, he's had a lot of incidents where there wasn't sufficient evidence to have charges [stick]. He found trouble sometimes, and sometimes trouble found him. But I do know he was a great teammate. The guys he played with loved him."

Some of Talib's issues in the NFL might have been influenced by personal problems. Talib moved his father to the Tampa area after being drafted, but Henry developed serious health issues within a couple of years of relocating. Doctors worried about Theodore's high blood pressure and a lung disease known as sarcoidosis. He grew so ill that he couldn't walk 20 feet without grimacing and gasping for air.

"Aqib and his father were very close, but there were times when we would go two days without ever seeing him because he couldn't leave his room," said Talib's wife, Gypsy Benitez. "I would get concerned about Aqib because it would affect his job at times. His anger would boil over. I think his father being ill was very hard for him to deal with."

Things didn't get any easier for Talib when the NFL suspended him four games for violating the league's banned substance policy in the 2012 season. Talib thought he was getting off to a good start with his new coach, Greg Schiano, at the time of the suspension. But on Nov. 1, 2012, as Talib talked to his wife about a home they were looking to purchase in Dallas, Schiano called to say the Bucs had traded Talib and a seventh-round pick to New England for a fourth-round selection in the 2013 draft.

"Aqib was surprised when we told him [about the trade], but he also knew that was the last straw," Dominik said. "Even when we told him the news, he had that cornerback mentality. He wasn't going to show you how much it hurt him."

Said Talib: "When a team trades you, they're basically saying they don't need you anymore. It definitely made me want to never be in that situation again."

The people who've spent time around Talib argue that, even with his issues, there is ample reason to believe in his maturation.

"With some of the things that have happened off the field, Aqib is more worried about his reputation," Benitez said. "He's always loved football, but he's so dedicated to it now. When he's home, we hardly get any downtime with him because he's always studying or watching film. ... He really wants people to know he's a good guy."

Seattle Seahawks defensive end Michael Bennett played 3½ seasons with Talib in Tampa Bay and said, "I don't know anybody who's still talking about his off-the-field issues. I think he's really grown as a man." Added Broncos cornerback Chris Harris, who played with Talib at Kansas: "He was wild when he was young, but he's totally different now. A lot of guys go through some things and never learn. I feel like he's learned."

Talib didn't waste much time making an impact for the Broncos in their 31-24 season-opening win over Indianapolis. When Colts quarterback Andrew Luck fired a pass deep up the seam late in the first quarter, Talib darted in front of tight end Dwayne Allen and deflected the ball into the hands of Broncos safety Rahim Moore for an interception. After the Broncos secured the victory on the Colts' final drive, Talib jogged off the field with admiring fans cheering his name near the tunnel. Unlike his teammates -- some of whom stopped to toss wristbands and gloves into the stands -- Talib kept running right into the tunnel with a focus in his eyes that suggested this was just the start of bigger things in Denver.

At 6-foot-1 and 205 pounds, Talib is exactly the kind of rangy, athletic cornerback who can be a cornerstone for a Broncos team looking to return to the Super Bowl. Colts wide receiver T.Y. Hilton said Talib "is long and he can run with you and he's physical." Miami Dolphins wide receiverMike Wallace added that Talib is so intense that "he takes it really hard when he loses a rep, let alone a game."

The question, however, isn't whether Talib has the talent to be a difference-maker. It's whether he can avoid the situations that have resulted in his past problems, many of which come down to anger management. Aside from a four-game suspension for violating the league's policy on banned substances in 2012, all of Talib's issues in the NFL revolved around anger and violence. Dominik said that "if somebody confronts Aqib, he's not backing down an inch." Talib is even more direct about his aggressiveness. "Growing up the way I did, you get tested all the time," he said. "That's why I don't get nervous when they ask me to cover somebody like [Dallas Cowboys Pro Bowl wide receiver] Dez Bryant all game. I don't get scared of anything."

There is a common refrain that emerges when people talk about Talib after spending a significant time around him, an observation that comes down to one basic sentiment: He's really not a bad person. Even though Talib fought with teammates on two occasions in Tampa -- he scuffled with former running back Cory Byrd at the 2008 rookie symposium and swung a helmet at former left tackle Donald Penn during a fight in practice a year later -- Dominik spoke highly of Talib's work habits, saying few players practiced as hard or competed with as much passion.

A former college teammate said Talib routinely was kicked out of practice for fighting at Kansas, but Talib's former head coach, current Iowa State offensive coordinator Mark Mangino, remembered a player who motivated his teammates and raised the performances of a couple of underachieving teammates on a Jayhawks team that finished 12-1 in 2007.

Talib was such a rare mix of personality and unpredictability that when a KU assistant once ripped him for being suspended, the same coach went to Mangino later and said, "There's something about that guy that makes you root for him." Added Mangino: "I tell people the same thing all the time. The people who hear something about the issues Aqib had may rush to judgment about him. The people who really know him end up liking him."

Talib maintained that attitude when he arrived in New England. The new environment helped -- "I knew [Patriots coach] Bill Belichick doesn't put up with anything," Talib said -- but so did Talib's life experiences. He and Benitez already were raising two children (his 7-year-old daughter, Kiara, came from a previous relationship, and her 7-year-old son, Fabian, has a different father), and they were expecting the birth of their son Jabril (who is now 1). Talib also had more motivation than ever.

Using study habits he learned from former Bucs cornerback Ronde Barber, Talib quickly became a critical presence in the New England secondary. He settled down off the field, as well. When New Year's Eve arrived in his first season with the Patriots, he turned down a party invitation and instead celebrated with his family at home. They threw confetti at midnight, danced in their pajamas and reveled in the potential of their new life in the Northeast.

Although most people didn't realize it at the time, Talib proved how much stronger his resolve had grown in a Thursday night game against the New York Jets on Sept. 12, 2013. Talib's mother had called him earlier that morning to say she'd been unable to reach Henry on the phone. A couple of hours later, Talib heard the news: His father had died in bed that morning. Refusing Belichick's offer to sit out, Talib wound up with two interceptions, two pass deflections and a forced fumble in a 13-10 win. "I kept thinking about him all game," Talib said. "I felt like I had so much energy that day. I really believe he was with me."

Henry's death is still an extremely painful reality for Talib to face -- "He hasn't been to his father's grave since the funeral," Benitez said -- but he doesn't deny the impact his dad had on his life. "He showed me how to take care of a family," Talib said. "We had four kids in our family, and he took care of us and our mother whenever we needed something. He showed me what it means to be a man."

Talib sees the value in those lessons as he contemplates his new life in Denver and the success he enjoyed with the Patriots. "Going to New England was important for him because they told him, 'You're good, and we need you,'" Okolo Talib said. "But he'd just had another son. His father was getting sicker. He had to deal with life now. He had to grow up."

This partly explains why Talib was in such a hurry to leave the locker room and join his family after Denver's season-opening win. He laughed about a couple of plays while dressing next to his fellow defensive backs, then quickly recognized his opportunity to depart as a throng of reporters focused their attention on Harris. Talib had done exactly what was expected of him after Denver signed him this offseason. His plan is to keep putting more space between the man he once was and the one he's ultimately trying to become.

"Some guys would just be happy with the money," Talib said. "I saw guys do that when they got paid in Tampa. I take the opposite approach here. When I'm done, I want people to know exactly why they brought me in. I want to make sure I earn all this money."

Jacob Tamme ready for call of duty for Broncos

By Irv Moss The Denver Post September 20, 2014

For Broncos tight end Jacob Tamme, it's life as usual this week.

Give him his assignment and he'll be ready to execute it Sunday, when the Broncos play at Seattle and attempt to erase the demons remaining from the 43-8 thumping the Seahawks handed them in the Super Bowl.

At week's end, Tamme wasn't sure of his assignment Sunday, but he'll be ready for whatever duty he's assigned.

"We have a lot of different personnel groups and we try to prepare for all those," he said. "I've been doing the same thing the past couple of weeks."

There's a difference this week because slot receiver Wes Welker might play in the aftermath of a concussion and a shortened suspension for violating the NFL's antidrug policy. Tamme has played some in Welker's place, in addition to his usual assignment as a backup tight end and a special-teams player. His work on special teams moved to the forefront last year. His receptions dropped from 52 in 2012, his first year with the Broncos, to 20 last season, but he led the special-teams units in tackles with 10 a season ago.

"Special teams is something I take a lot of pride in," Tamme said. "I love to tackle. It's fun. I know how the play on special teams can impact a game."

Offensive coordinator Adam Gase said Tamme gives the team versatility.

"He brings that element of playing that slot/tight end role, so we're able to move him around a lot and it's good to have that flexibility with him," Gase said.

Tamme isn't losing any sleep wondering what the expected return of Welker will mean to his role.

"I'm happy to have Wes back. He makes our team better. Whether it makes my role smaller I don't know. Whatever they ask me to do I'm good with it. That always has been my thought process. Whatever my role is on any given week, I'm prepared to do it."

Is Tamme the ultimate team player? Receiver Demaryius Thomas might have the answer.

"He was here when I arrived, and I watched the way he did things," Thomas said.
"We all looked up to him. He'll do anything to be on the team. Players like that are valuable to a team."

Tamme, 29, is reaching an age when he is considered one of the team's elders.

"I'm at the point where I'm starting to feel like a veteran. Both my body and my mind feel great. I'm in the best shape of my life, and that excites me," he said. "I feel like I can do a lot of good things out there. But I also know we have a bunch of good players so it's not easy to get on the field and get a bunch of catches."

Demaryius Thomas: Can't hold him down

By Lauren Giudice denverbroncos.com October 20, 2014

The beginning of the 2014 season was one of the toughest of Demaryius Thomas' career. His grandmother, the woman who raised him, died just before training camp began and he couldn't make his usual impact on the field during the first three games of the regular season. But bouncing back from hardship is nothing new for him.

During the Broncos' Week 5 win over the Cardinals, Demaryius Thomas finally had a reason to leap with joy.

On second-and-11 at the Arizona 31-yard line, he beat Antonio Cromartie off the line, caught a slant, stiff-armed Larry Foote and then weaved through defenders for a touchdown. He ran straight through the end zone towards a woman wearing a No. 88 jersey and leapt up to sit on the wall that separates fans from the field.

While Thomas and the fans surrounding him were showered with beer that was elevated above them, he was beaming.

That was his first score of a record-breaking game where Thomas racked up the most receiving yards in franchise history with 226. It was also the most by any receiver in the NFL this season. In setting that new mark for the Broncos, he surpassed one of his role models, Shannon Sharpe. He had scoring catches of 31 and 86 yards, the latter of which is the fourth-longest reception in Broncos history.

Week 5, he could not be denied.

Reading the stat lines from against the Cardinals, Jets and 49ers, it's hard to imagine that in the weeks leading up to the game, Thomas' health, future and confidence were questioned.

He had just one touchdown to go along with just 13 catches for 141 yards during the Broncos' first three games. He exceeded that yardage and had two touchdowns in the season opener last season. Peyton Manning's go-to target of the past two seasons didn't look like himself and, perhaps the most concerning aspect of Thomas' first three games were his four drops. He had five drops all of last season.

When asked after the game what the biggest difference was between the first three games of the season and his record-breaking day, he had a simple answer: "Catching the ball. That's basically what it is."

The Tuesday after the Broncos' loss to Seattle in Week 3, Thomas came in to practice early and caught 250 balls. He was tired of his inconsistent play. Manning, Head Coach John Fox and Emmanuel Sanders all noticed the extra work he put in the week leading up to the Cardinals game and how well he did during practice. Manning said he caught the ball better and was on top of his assignments. While Thomas was hard on himself for his early-season struggles, his teammates stood by him.

"Basically they stayed behind me, they pushed me," Thomas said. "They told me I'm better than what I'm doing right now. I took it like a man because they were telling the truth. Before those games, I never had games where I dropped the ball like that and wasn't performing like I expected to."

While he'd never had three consecutive games with so little output before, he doesn't consider the beginning of this season a "slump." With fellow wide receiver Wes Welker out for the Broncos' first two games due to suspension, Thomas played in the slot, which he wasn't accustomed to.

Emmanuel Sanders, who is in his first season as Thomas' teammate, said he is glad to be on the same team as Thomas this season because when the Broncos and Steelers faced off in previous seasons, Sanders said, "he killed us." He says there is no limit to Thomas' potential and his speed and versatility make him a great weapon.

"He always goes off," Sanders said after the Broncos' 41-20 win over the Cardinals. "All the media has been criticizing him in terms of his production and things of that sort. I went on NFL Network and told them, 'Demaryius can go off at any moment and have a 200-yard game.' He proved that today. He's a big-time player that makes big-time plays in big-time moments, and he proved that today."

At first, Thomas' confidence was affected by the dropped balls. But the two-time Pro Bowler is accustomed to being tested, both on the field and off.

When he was 11 years old, his mother was arrested right in front of him and sentenced to 20 years in prison while her mom, his grandmother, was sentenced for life on drug-related charges. That experience helped make him the resilient, tough person he is today.

"Growing up it was tough and I think that made me a man quicker," Thomas said. "The things with my mom and all the other stuff, it made me a man quicker. To get out here and do this, once you drop a ball or have a bad play you can go on to the next and I think that helped me growing up."

The experience of losing pieces of his family forced him to grow up and learn to bounce back. He said with football, it's all about moving forward, learning from your mistakes and moving on to the next play.

"I think just growing up as a kid, I went through a lot," Thomas said. "I grew up in the church. I worked in the yard a lot and I just remember my uncle always telling me hard work pays off so I just go out and put it all out there mainly because I won't be able to do this the rest of my life. It just comes from how I was raised."

Coming back from a rough start wasn't even Thomas' first dose of hardship for the 2014 season.

Right before training camp, his paternal grandmother who helped raise him, Gladys, died. Before he started living with his aunt, Gladys took him in.

He missed the first five days of camp to help plan and attend her funeral back home in Georgia. With the difficult start to the regular season and the death of his beloved grandmother, this has been one of the toughest beginnings to a football season he's experienced.

Throughout his life, Thomas has been forced to overcome struggles. He returned to camp after her funeral. While he was gone, he watched film. That's the kind of player he is, always working to improve and be a step ahead.

"That's the thing about Demaryius: he doesn't change. No matter what you guys say about him, he's not going to change," Sanders said. 'He's going to come to work every single day. He's quiet. He works extremely quiet. He's going to come in, he's going to bust his butt, and he knows that those plays are going to come all season long."

While this was one of Thomas' toughest starts to a season, it was also unique in another way. He now wears a "C" on his jersey.

Before the season began, he, along with Manning, was voted one of the Broncos' offensive captains. As Sanders noted, Thomas isn't the loudest guy.

When it comes to football, that doesn't matter. He has garnered the respect of his teammates.

"When I got elected captain, I told them I'm not going to be the vocal guy," Thomas said. "I'm not going to speak very much. I'm just going to go out there and work hard and play hard and you all just follow me. That's my main thing- doing the right thing. If you go out there and put in the hard work it's going to pay off."

In back-to-back seasons, he has produced at least 90 catches, 1,400 receiving yards and 10 receiving touchdowns. While it took a little time, it appears that

Thomas is back in stride to do the same in 2014. His resilience and work ethic were instilled in him when he was young and it certainly appears that these characteristics will continue to take him to new heights in the NFL.

Thomas acknowledges that he and Manning have vastly different leadership styles. But, there is something he wants to have in common with his quarterback.

"I'm not outspoken like Peyton," Thomas said. "He'll get up and talk in front of the crowd before I will. Day in and day out, he's doing the right thing and trying to make himself the best."

"Whenever I get older, I want the younger guys to say that about me."

Demaryius Thomas sets Broncos' record in win over Cardinals

By Mike Klis The Denver Post October 5, 2014

Demaryius Thomas first started busting his slump during the bye week.

It was the Monday after the Broncos' loss at Seattle, where Thomas again inexplicably struggled with two more drops. All the players had to endure the postgame cleanse, or conditioning that sweats out the bumps and bruises, on Monday.

Thomas showed up at Dove Valley before most of the others and caught ball after ball off the Jugs machine.

"I had to do something," Thomas said. "I was dropping them."

Droppin' Demaryius is gone. Demaryius the Destroyer of cornerbacks is back.

"All that talk is done now, right?" said Emmanuel Sanders, who went from the NFL's leading pass catcher after the Broncos' third game, to the Broncos' "other" receiver after Game 4.

"We weren't worried," said Broncos slot receiver Wes Welker. "When he's on, he's uncoverable."

Doesn't Antonio Cromartie know it. Thomas entered play Sunday against Arizona with a disappointing 13 catches for 141 yards and one touchdown through the Broncos' first three games.

Against the Cards, Thomas had the most productive receiving day in Broncos history. Thomas made eight catches for a team-record 226 yards, including touchdowns of 31 and 86 yards that were heavy on his specialty — yards after the catch.

"There were opportunities when I fell," said Cromartie, who was charged with trying to cover Thomas one-on-one most of the day. "Playing against a receiver like him, you can't get into situations where you fall. He's going to make a play. He got the best of me today, and that's all I can really say.

"When you give up 238-damn yards to any damn receiver, that's not your best day."

Cromartie was either exaggerating Thomas' performance, or understating it, depending on the stat sheet or his memory. Just because a chop-block penalty took away a 77-yard touchdown catch by Thomas in the third quarter doesn't mean that play wasn't branded in Cromartie's conscience.

With 6:40 left and the Broncos up 34-20, Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning completed a 20-yard pass to Thomas. At that point, Thomas had seven catches for 213 yards.

The Broncos' single-game team record was 214 yards, set by tight end Shannon Sharpe in a 2002 overtime game at Kansas City.

When the Broncos got the ball back with 3:28 left, the right people were made aware Thomas was 2 yards away from breaking Sharpe's record. Manning started the series with a 13-yard completion to Thomas. That gave him 226 receiving yards and the record. And to think about that 77-yard touchdown play in the third quarter that didn't count.

"I don't know about getting Demaryius going — he got himself going," Manning said as he finished dressing at his locker. "He challenged himself. It wasn't anything the coaches had to say. A great player like Demaryius, he knew."

There were a couple reasons Thomas suddenly developed a bad case of the drops through his first three games. Replacing the then-suspended Welker in the slot for the season opener against Indianapolis threw Thomas off his rhythm. While he was worried about his new position, he dropped one. Then he started worrying about the one he dropped.

PHOTOS: Arizona Cardinals vs. Denver Broncos

"I knew if it was like third-and-5, Peyton always went to Welker and I knew if I'm not open, he's going to be on me," Thomas said. "The first one I dropped, I let it get in my head, "I'm letting down Peyton, I'm letting down my team.' "

Back on the outside, Thomas' touchdown catches of 31 and 86 yards were plays that not even the great Calvin Johnson makes. On the first for 31 yards, Thomas beat Cromartie off the ball, made a catch down the seam, then stiff-armed linebacker Larry Foote before zigging and zagging through defenders until he reached the end zone.

On the second, Thomas again beat Cromartie, caught a perfectly thrown go-route from Manning down the left sideline, then outraced a safety who had the angle.

"The first meeting we had about the Cardinals, our offensive coordinator (Adam Gase) said the receivers have got to beat man-to-man and press coverage,"

Thomas said. "Because we knew they'd blitz a lot. That is all we did (in practice) and we told (our) defense to press us."

Thomas making it look easy thanks to Gonzalez

By Arnie Stapleton Associated Press October 16, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. (AP) — Julius Thomas says he was misquoted — by Julius Thomas.

After scoring his second TD against the Jets last weekend, Denver's star tight end screamed, "It's so easy!"

Although his nine TD receptions are tied with Calvin Johnson (2011) for the most in NFL history thorough five games, Thomas backed down from his bravado this week.

"Contrary to my own statements, it's not very easy," Thomas relented.

He's making it look effortless, though, thanks to some offseason tips from Tony Gonzalez and a dogged determination to prove his breakout 2013 season was just an appetizer.

"I wasn't going to rest on what I did last year," Thomas said. "I was really determined to come in and keep working and try to find every way I could to get better. Fortunately for me, it's been able to show in production. I'm still going to continue to keep working. Everything I've done now inspires me to work harder, so I'll stay after it."

Thomas' position coach, Clancy Barone, called Gonzalez, the 14-time Pro Bowler who had just retired, and asked if he could tutor his fellow power forward-turned tight end.

Gonzalez, now an NFL analyst for CBS Sports, told The Associated Press on Thursday that he invited Thomas to his home in Southern California. They went out and played some hoops and talked tons of football.

Not about technique or run-blocking, but "about the mental side of it," Gonzalez said.

"It doesn't matter how good you get, you have to keep looking for ways to improve. You're always eating right. You're always looking for the latest way to get your body quicker, stronger, faster," Gonzalez said. "And then you look at the film, how do I come out of the break faster? How do I get guys to bite on a slant/fade faster? You've got to be obsessed with your routine."

He calls it the "routine of greatness," and one component of that philosophy was catching 100 passes every day.

"When your defense is doing 7-on-7, go get your work in when everybody else is taking a knee," Gonzalez said. "And then after practice when everybody is going in, go get your catches. And then get more.

"It's like a jump shot."

Shoot several thousand and they become second nature.

"It's the same with catching the ball," Gonzalez said. "And a lot of young receivers or tight ends, they don't get that. They think they can go out there and have three, four, five catches at practice and think their hands are going to be ready for the game."

Thomas proved a star pupil.

"When probably the greatest tight end that's ever played tells you something, you usually have your ears pretty wide," he said.

Thomas' tutoring sessions have paid off: he leads the NFL with 21 TD catches over the last two seasons, two more than Saints tight end Jimmy Graham, whose four-year, $40 million contract last summer made him the league's highest-paid tight end.

Maybe not for much longer.

Thomas is making $645,000 in the final year of his rookie deal. He declined the Broncos' offer of a contract extension during training camp and his stock has only soared since putting Gonzalez's words of wisdom to work.

"I know he really wanted to improve his route running, both at the tight end position and outside," Peyton Manning said. "And so I know that Jimmy Graham ruling has already been ruled on, but he's doing pretty good out wide at receiver."

An arbitrator ruled Graham could only be considered a tight end for the purposes of his franchise tag designation. Graham, who often lines up outside the numbers like Thomas does in Denver, wanted to be considered a wide receiver. Franchise tags were set at $7 million for tight ends and $12.3 million for receivers.

Of Thomas' nine TDs this season, only two have come from the traditional tight end spot alongside the tackle, two have come from the slot and five from out wide.

Manning was among the first to notice Thomas had improved upon a season in which he broke Hall of Famer Shannon Sharpe's franchise record for TDs by a tight end.

"I have to admit, when I saw him at Duke this year in early April for the first time he looked faster to me than he did from last year," Manning said. "It just kind of jumped out at me."

This is only the beginning, Gonzalez said.

"You can't just like football or want to be good at it. You have to be willing to sacrifice," Gonzalez said. "And it's not easy. It's not an easy life at all. It's staying after practice when other guys are going home. But those guys will all be out of the league in a couple of years. Or those guys had a couple of good years and then they were average. Or well, whatever happened to that guy?

"Julius doesn't want to be that guy."

'Nothing Easy About It'

By Peter King MMQB/SI.com October 14, 2014

In Denver's 31-17 victory over the Jets on Sunday, Broncos tight end Julius Thomas got to the end zone with his second touchdown catch of the day and screamed something the sideline microphones could pick up.

"It's so easy!"

Thomas was sheepish when asked about it later. "Sometimes," he said, "you get a little over-expressive out there. You get a little too excited and in the heat of the moment you say things. But I can tell you now there's nothing easy about it. You think there's anything easy about playing with Peyton Manning ... There's nothing easy about it. It's hard work day after day, or he's going to throw it to somebody else."

Not much chance of that now. Since the start of the 2013 season, Thomas and Peyton Manning have been a perfect match. Thomas has 21 touchdown catches over the past 13 months, more than any Denver target of Manning's. (DeMaryius Thomas is next with 18.) Julius Thomas' nine in the first five games this year is on pace to break Randy Moss' single-season record for touchdown catches in a year—23.

And, of course, Manning is three TD throws away from breaking Brett Favre's record of 508 touchdown passes in his career. That could come Sunday night against the Niners. Interestingly, the Niners' touchdown stats have much in common with Thomas' this morning: San Francisco has allowed nine touchdown passes in five games. Manning will have a tough go breaking the record soon, with San Francisco and then San Diego (on a short week) coming up the following Thursday.

Lots of talk about records, which blows away Thomas, the former basketball player from Portland State.

"It absolutely amazes me," he said of his early-season performance. "I never expected it to happen. Nine touchdowns after five games? That is amazing. I am so blessed."

Thomas fits the profile Manning likes to work with. Thomas is smart in the Dallas Clark mold, very athletic, and slithery. It's hard to keep him blocked. On the touchdown that caused him to scream how easy it was, it truly was easy. Thomas lined up outside the formation to the right, against Jets rookie safety Calvin Pryor, and ran a simple post. Manning found him the split second Thomas turned upfield to the goalpost. Pryor seemed either marginally interested in covering Thomas, or he fully realized he'd have had to interfere with Thomas to have any chance to make a play on the ball. Either way, this was how Thomas got his ninth touchdown of the young season.

Thomas has some Antonio Gates/power forward in him too. At Portland State, Thomas was a 6-5, 251-pound four-year starter on the basketball team. He played only one year of college football before the Broncos drafted him in the fourth round in 2011. He spent all of 2011 learning the NFL game, and was simply in the right place at the right time when Manning signed his free-agent deal with Denver in March of 2012. Manning needed practice mates to throw to, and when he wasn't hurt, Thomas was one of those guys. By the time 2013 rolled around, Manning had thrown to him as much as any tight end on the roster. Thomas was instinctive and he became the kind of receiver Manning could trust to be in a certain spot at an exact time.

Thomas already was the man to catch Manning's 500th touchdown, against Arizona.

"You must have thought about catching the record-breaker, right?" he was asked this week.

"If I could be the one," he said, "I would love it, obviously. But it's not about the stats with [Manning], so it's not about that with us either. I am really happy for him, because of how hard he works at this. I feel like he's in his 37th season with how much he knows; nothing surprises him, and he's got an answer for everything."

Thomas has been a constant with Manning over the past couple of years. He averaged 5.6 targets per game in 2013, and that's remained steady in 2013 at 6.0 while Emmanuel Sanders has worked his way into Manning's power group, replacing Eric Decker. Sanders has more quickness than Decker, though, and it's doubtful any other receiving group in the league has more quickness and ability to get open than Denver's.

Denver's offensive line will be tested in the next two games by two defensive fronts that pressure the quarterback and force quick throws. The meaning of that? Don't be surprised to see number 509 for Manning be a quick post or curl to Sanders or Julius Thomas. My money's on Thomas. Maybe it's just a coincidence, but Sanders has zero touchdown catches in 35 receptions, and Thomas has nine scoring plays among 24 catches.

Broncos RB Juwan Thompson brings heady, physical approach to game

By Patrick Saunders The Denver Post October 27, 2014

Juwan Thompson was different from the other little kids. He wasn't tall, but he was stocky, with big arms and shoulders much too wide for a 5-year-old.

"His babysitter called him 'Little Hulk,' " recalled Thompson's mom, Ramona Griggie. "So ever since Juwan was little, we've called him our 'Incredible Little Hulk.' "

The Hulk's not so little anymore.

The Broncos' rookie running back is a 5-foot-11, 225-pound block of granite. The Duke graduate's combination of physical power, maturity and intelligence has made him one of the surprise contributors on a talented Broncos team now considered the favorite in the AFC to return to the Super Bowl.

Though Thompson's carries have been limited, he has been an effective special-teams player and has produced when called upon after No. 1 running back Montee Ball suffered a strained groin during Denver's Week 5 victory over Arizona. Thompson, used primarily as a short-yardage back in the Broncos' victory against San Diego on Thursday, had 24 yards on seven carries, including two touchdown runs.

"Juwan's special. I'm not at all surprised he's made it with the Broncos," Duke coach David Cutcliffe said. "Of all of the running backs I've coached, I'd say he was the most intelligent. He was so aware of everything we did on offense. He was so prepared, so mature."

Which, of course, made him a perfect fit to be part of quarterback Peyton Manning's backfield. Cutcliffe, who was Manning's offensive coordinator at Tennessee and remains one of the quarterback's closest confidents in football, urged the Broncos to sign Thompson after he was passed over in the draft.

"I talked to (offensive coordinator) Adam Gase, (general manager) John Elway and Peyton," Cut cliffe said. "I told them that Juwan would be a good fit. He's smart, he's tough and he's great in pass protection."

An honors student at Woodward Academy (a prestigious prep school in Atlanta), Thompson graduated from Duke with a major in sociology and a minor in education. He had already been accepted to graduate school at Duke and was planning to become a coaching assistant after being bypassed in the NFL draft. Then the Broncos called. He made the team after an impressive training camp.

"It was an easy decision," Elway said.

Thompson's forte is his versatility. In Cutcliffe's wide-open, share-the-wealth offense, Thompson was one of six players to have at least 60 carries last season. None of those Blue Devils had more than 113 carries.

In a game against Virginia Tech, Duke used Thompson as a linebacker to shadow quarterback Logan Thomas. Thompson made three tackles in six plays.

"We had seen what he could do on special teams, we knew he could tackle, so we gave him a shot," Cutcliffe said.

Thompson was born in the U.S. Virgin Islands. His mom moved him to the Atlanta area when he was not quite a year old. His grandmother, Mary Thompson, still lives in the Virgin Islands and follows every Broncos game anyway she can.

"Juwan is huge in the Virgin Islands — the biggest thing since Tim Duncan," Griggie said with a laugh, referring to the San Antonio Spurs' star power forward who was born and raised on the island of St. Croix.

Thompson's mom gushes with enthusiasm when she talks about her son.

"He hated missing school. He always wanted perfect attendance," she said. "He was a cool kid, but a smart cool kid. And always polite and respectful."

Cutcliffe echoed those sentiments, but added a caveat.

"Juwan never fell into trash talking on the field," he said. "But he would hear what was said. He paid attention. On special teams, I could seem him change directions to take on a certain guy. He knew how to send a message."

In other words, for all his gentlemanly ways, you don't want to make the Little Hulk angry.

Thompson snapshot

- Born in U.S. Virgin Islands
- Loved playing basketball growing up. Could dunk by the eighth grade and was a 200-pound, 3-point shooter by his sophomore year at Woodward Academy in Atlanta.

- Began focusing on football as a junior. Ran for 1,622 yards and 22 touchdowns as a senior, earning honorable mention all-state honors.
- Was courted by 25 colleges, including Stanford, but chose Duke.
- Finished his four-year college career with 24 starts, 1,244 yards rushing and 56 receptions.
- Signed with the Broncos as an undrafted free agent and made the team with a strong preseason (29 rushes, 143 yards) and as a force on special teams.

Danny Trevathan's return a big boost for defense

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post October 8, 2014

Danny Trevathan did not start in his season debut Sunday. It was all he didn't do.

For 53 days he had waited for this moment, waited as his teammates missed his presence, waited as the Broncos lost their Super Bowl rematch in Seattle. For 53 days, he waited for the fractured left medial tibial in his left leg to heal, to allow him to junk his crutches, to free him to practice.

On the second play against the Arizona Cardinals, Trevathan jogged onto the field, assuming his weakside linebacker position. On the third play, he made his first tackle, stopping running back Andre Ellington after a 4-yard gain.

In a season defined by inconsistency, the Broncos delivered their best defensive performance. Trevathan finished with a team-high seven combined tackles. Coincidence?

"It was great having him back. His leadership at times when you really needed it, the stuff that he says, it is perfect timing for everything," linebacker Von Miller said. "I really appreciate having Danny back."

Trevathan approached his return with humility, spare thoughts saved for scant Twitter posts. Behind his media silence last week, there was a jumble of emotions: pride, attitude and desire. The Broncos accessorized their defense with a thumping safety in T.J. Ward, a plaster cornerback in Aqib Talib and a relentless pass rusher in DeMarcus Ware. The parts suddenly fit better with the motor — Trevathan — back under the hood.

"I was just trying to play. I was a little rusty, but I got in the groove of things and my defense helped me," Trevathan said. "I'm not going to lie, I need a little bit of work. But that's nothing. Especially when you feel like you can get there. When you've got guys that are right with you, it helps. The type of guy that I am, I'm going to be ready to play for my team because I'm going to have their backs just like they're going to have my back."

So much for the idea of a gradual transition for Trevathan. He played 56-of-59 plays. He led the team with five first-half tackles. He made a few mistakes, a result of time missed more than anything else. The boost provided was obvious.

"First of all, I'll tell you we're very, very happy to have him back," coach John Fox said. "I think any time you don't play football in two months, especially at this level, you're going to have some rust. But it was good having him out there, and I thought he played well."

The Broncos provided a glimpse of the options Trevathan creates for defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio. Brandon Marshall, who started in Trevathan's absence, appeared on 38 snaps, a weapon in nickel coverage as middle linebacker Nate Irving's snaps shrank to 21.

The plan remains fluid based on the opponent, but Trevathan remains the rare three-down linebacker and works well with Marshall, who shared a similar longshot journey to the NFL.

"We've been cool from the get-go," Trevathan said. "He came in with the right mind-set. We both started from the bottom. A lot of people say that, but we really did and B-Marsh's got the right mind-set. He came in hustling. You've got no choice but to respect that.

"The person I am, I like to be out there and play with those guys who know how to play football and have passion."

As many strides as the defense made — the Broncos held the Cardinals to 3-for-16 on third down and 215 net yards — work remains. Trevathan knows the grind required.

The wait to reach defensive goals likely won't approach 53 days.

"We can be great. I believe we've reached some peaks; second half we reached a whole bunch of our peaks, but at the same time we have to put together four quarters," Trevathan said. "We played our ball, and I'm glad with it. I'm going to take the 'W' and keep moving forward."

Broncos guard Louis Vasquez finally able to see fame join fortune

By Mike Klis The Denver Post Tuesday, June 3, 2014

Follow the list of NFL awards and one would think Broncos guard Louis Vasquez was an overnight sensation.

A starter in each of his first four NFL seasons with the San Diego Chargers, Vasquez never received a Pro Bowl berth. Even when so many guards bowed out and former Bronco Zane Beadles was chosen as a sixth alternate, Vasquez never got a mention.

Know why? Because crossing guards get more attention than right guards.

"I thought my last two years in San Diego were the best two years I had there," Vasquez said Monday after the Broncos' organized team activity practice and weight-lifting session. "For me to say I deserved it, that's not my place. I did have a few coaches or players acknowledge there should have been something, but all I can do is worry about my play."

Vasquez became a free agent in March 2013 and the Broncos signed him to a four-year contract that paid him $7 million last season. He will collect $6 million this season.

Suddenly, people paid attention. A guard who gets that kind of money must be good. Then Vasquez anchored an offensive line that helped quarterback Peyton Manning and the Broncos set an NFL season scoring record with 606 points.

Vasquez not only made his first Pro Bowl team, he and Manning were the only Denver players who were first-team all-pro selections.

"I think Louis is the best offensive guard in the league," said Broncos defensive tackle Derek Wolfe.

In 2012, his last year with the Chargers, Vasquez was called for zero penalties. In 2013, his first with the Broncos, Vasquez allowed zero sacks.

"His sensor — he doesn't really give you a direction to take," Wolfe said. "You have to take what you want. He doesn't give you anything. You have to take it from him."

Good luck there. Vasquez is 6-foot-5 and 335 pounds. Imagine a guy that imposing on a dog sled or snowmobile, which is where the Texas-raised Vasquez could be found during a spring break family vacation to Breckenridge.

"First time my parents got to experience the mountains," he said. "First time I got to experience it."

The new and unusual continued during the Broncos' offseason as Vasquez's right-side blocking partner, Orlando Franklin, was shifted from tackle to left guard. Chris Clark was the right tackle last week, while Winston Justice is getting reps there this week.

"Right tackle is the offensive center position of a year ago," said coach John Fox. "We like our options. They will all get opportunities and we will see what our best configuration is."

Whoever wins the starting job at right tackle will have the benefit of playing next to an all-pro. Guards are people too, and life has been good for Vasquez now that he has received some recognition. There have been speaking engagements, charity work, a paid appearance or two.

"Nothing crazy, but there's definitely been more opportunities off the field," he said. "Things that weren't available to me before."

T.J. Ward's permanent tribute

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com August 22, 2014

T.J. Ward's most powerful tattoo has 10 years of scar tissue.

The kneeling angel beneath the words "Tee Kay" in black ink memorializes Ward's close friend and high school football teammate Terrance Kelly, whose life was tragically cut short in a shooting in 2004.

T.K. and T.J. played football for De La Salle High School, notable at the time for its prestige as a football powerhouse holding the national record for consecutive wins, which ended after 151 straight victories.

A highly recruited linebacker, Kelly had committed to play football at the University of Oregon, joining a group of teammates who wanted to stick together.

Like tumbling dominoes, they decided to attend Oregon, unwilling to split up after four great years together. "After one guy committed, then two guys committed, and the final two — It was something that doesn't happen too often [...] and we took advantage of that," Ward said. "I didn't get a scholarship, but still wanted to be with the guys I spent the last four years together."

Kelly was one of Ward's best friends. "We spent a lot of time off the field together, me spending time with his family, him spending time with my family," Ward said. "He was just one of those types of guys that everybody clinged to."

They had planned one last workout together in their hometown of Richmond, Calif., but Kelly wasn't there. He was waiting in his car outside a friend's house to say goodbye two days before he was to leave for Oregon's fall training camp when he was shot and killed.

"It was devastating. I didn't believe it at first," Ward said. "My mom told me. She broke the news to me, and I kind of just froze."

Ward would walk on at Oregon and have a successful collegiate career, but niether him nor his friends could shake the feeling that Kelly should have been there, too. In his absence, they did what they could to honor him. Ward and Cameron Colvin got tattoos in his memory, and together they all tried to live their lives in the way Kelly would have. "We try to do things for him and his family, and just progress the way he would have wanted us to progress and the way we know he would have," said Ward, who is confident his path to the NFL would have followed Kelly's.

Ward still talks to Kelly's father, Landrin, as well as his close friends who had played with him in high school and college.

Their stories, including Kelly's death, are depicted in the new film When The Game Stands Tall. Based on the book by the same name, the movie details the pressures and drama surrounding the renowned football team during its record-breaking winning streak.

Ward hasn't seen it yet, but he hopes it has an impact outside of just the emotions it instills in viewers.

"I hope it sheds a lot of light on who Terrance was and that it helps the foundation a lot," Ward said, referring to the Terrance Kelly Youth Foundation, a community outreach foundation founded by Terrance's father, Landrin.

Based in Richmond, the foundation aims to help children in impoverished communities achieve their potential to find a "positive future", as Ward put it. "It's about helping them, letting them know that there's goals ahead of them and there's things that can be done.

"You just have to work at it and focus like Terrance did, because he got out, and unfortunately someone took that from him."

T.J. Ward brings thump, attitude to Broncos defense

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post July 25, 2014

The defense was to the Broncos last season what Ringo Starr was to the Beatles: overshadowed, overlooked, underwhelming.

John Elway was John, Peyton Manning was Paul, and the guys on the other side of the ball were acoustic. The Broncos believe their defense will rock this season, faith that begins with a man who looks like he could crack granite with his fist.

If pass rusher DeMarcus Ware raises expectations, safety T.J. Ward lowers the boom. He represents the identity the Broncos seek. And the transformation began on the first day of training camp.

"If we have a complete team and help each other, where one isn't better than the other, we can be a championship team," said Ward, who signed as a free agent after playing his first four seasons with the Cleveland Browns. "That's our goal. It has already started. Guys are hungry, eager, excited and it shows. We are communicating well. You can tell the vibe right now is very strong."

Ward brings to the Broncos a safety thumper, their first since Brian Dawkins in 2011. It's hard to find a successful Denver team that didn't have a force at the back line, beginning with Dennis Smith and running through Steve Atwater and John Lynch.

The Broncos want their defense to assume a new persona, preferably one with swag in the walk and froth on the mouth. Elway admitted as much Wednesday when he said the Broncos can't rely on Manning alone. It's unfair, if not unwise. The change has been jarring — counting the nickel back position, the Broncos could have eight different starters in their top 12 that faced the Seahawks in the Super Bowl.

"We want to have an attitude," defensive tackle Terrance Knighton said. "We want to be enforcers."

The Broncos proved they can outscore teams during the regular season. The NFL playoffs, just like the NBA in June, slow down, rewarding teams that can defend and force offenses into empty possessions.

Ward represents the prototype, a fierce hitter who can double as a linebacker in subpackages, something he "loves to do." The Broncos will always be Peyton Manning's team as long as he's under center. But they might not be a championship team without better defenders.

"We can definitely set the tone in the preseason," Ward said. "There's no such thing as half speed once we get into the games."

Denver Broncos' pass rush gets boost from DeMarcus Ware

By Lindsay H. Jones USAToday.com October 22, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. -- The conversation began innocently enough in the Denver Broncos locker room on Tuesday. Several defensive players were asked when did you start watching DeMarcus Ware play in the NFL?

Was it when you were in college? High school?

Ware's pass rushing partner grew up in a Dallas suburb, and he had an idea of his earliest memories of Ware.

"When did you come into the league? 2006?" Von Miller asked.

"2005," Ware replied.

"I was a sophomore in high school!" Miller cackled as he laid back down on the black leather couch in the Broncos' locker room.

Ware shrugged off the joke about his age – he turned 32 in July – and how could he not as he enjoys a career renaissance in his first season with the Broncos. With seven sacks in the Broncos' first six games, Ware has already surpassed his sack total from his final, injury-plagued season with the Dallas Cowboys a year ago.

And with a nifty half spin move on San Francisco 49ers left tackle Joe Staley that led to one his three sacks on Colin Kaepernick on Sunday, the rest of the NFL has noticed just how well Denver's bet on Ware has paid off.

"When you sit down and you watch it, you watch it in slow motion, it's really incredible. It was a great move. There's no way you can go out and try to practice something like that. It's just DeMarcus Ware, big-time pass rusher," Miller said.

The Cowboys cut Ware, their franchise sack leader, in March in largely a money-saving move. But there were football reasons, too, after Ware recorded a career-low six sacks in 2013 while missing three games and being limited in several others.

But as soon as Ware hit the free agent market, the Broncos pounced, making a three-year, $30 million gamble that Ware had more double-digit sack seasons ahead of him. At his current pace of 1.1 sacks per game, Ware would hit 18 sacks by the end of his first year in Denver. That would be the third-highest total of his career.

"I never put a ceiling on anything. I just tell myself, 'Where am I at in the 10th game?' I say this is where I am in the pack and I sort of try to distinguish myself in the final six games in how productive I can be," Ware said.

Perhaps more important than the individual numbers, though, is the collective total for the Broncos' defense. Denver ranks third in the NFL with 21 sacks, despite playing only six games. Ware and Miller are responsible for 15 of those sacks -- more sacks between the two of them than 14 other teams have as a whole.

It's exactly the type of scenario the Broncos envisioned in March.

"I just remember thinking, 'What the hell can you do with Von and DeMarcus?'" defensive tackle Terrance Knighton said.

Opponents have yet to figure out it. The Broncos line Ware up at right defensive end in their base scheme, but he rarely stays there. In a game against the Arizona Cardinals two weeks ago, defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio moved Ware to the left side of the defense, lined up beside Miller, both prepared to rush at the quarterback. Cardinals backup Drew Stanton, clearly flustered at the formation, quickly called a time out.

Next up to try to solve the Ware-Miller problem is San Diego Chargers quarterback Philip Rivers. Miller, now looking back to full speed after spending his offseason recovering from ACL surgery, has sacked Rivers seven times in six games since 2011. Ware, who played the Chargers only three times in nine seasons with the Cowboys, has never sacked Rivers.

"They're two impressive guys, obviously they can change a game," Rivers said Tuesday.

Ware said he owes plenty of his career rejuvenation here to Miller, who he first met when Miller was preparing for the NFL draft in 2011. They stayed in touch during Miller's first three years in the NFL, and now that they are teammates, Ware has been able to fill the role of big brother and mentor for Miller, while Miller has taken much of the pressure off Ware on the field. Used to facing consistent double teams throughout his career in Dallas, Ware said he's found that most opponents are trying to block both Miller and Ware one-on-one.

"It's still two one on ones, even if you get a tight end chip or a running back chip, it's still the same. We're used to that. As long as you can't chip both of us, as long as one of us are being effective that's what it's about," Ware said.

Back to School with DeMarcus Ware

Robert Klemko SI.com April 4, 2014

NOTRE DAME, Ind. — After nine seasons, seven Pro Bowls, and 117 sacks, the Dallas Cowboys cut ties with DeMarcus Ware, in part, to save $16 million. Choosing to look forward to his new role in Denver, the defensive end has glossed over one inevitable question following his release. Here it comes again:

Did it hurt?

His answer is quiet, like Ware himself, and sincere. Not really, he says, but if it happened four years ago, it would have floored him.

"If I wasn't in a business state of mind and I was thinking about my ego, I would ask, 'Why?' " he says. "Before 2009 I would've been devastated, like, 'What is going on? Why do they not want me here? What did I not do last season?'

"But in 2009 I had my career almost ended by a neck injury. I started thinking seriously about life after football. Now it's like, I've had a fulfilled career, I know what I want, and it's business. You have to move on knowing you created a lot of relationships you still have, and now this is another hurdle. Just jump and keep running as long as you can."

That 'business state of mind' is what brought Ware to Notre Dame's rain-soaked campus on a Thursday in April. The NFL's Player Engagement program now offers a handful of entrepreneurial seminars on college campuses across the country each offseason for current and former players to conference with business professors and corporate mentors, all expenses paid. The goal is to avoid the kind of financial difficulty many find themselves in after their playing days are over. (In 2009 SI found that within two years of retirement, 78 percent of former NFL players are either under financial stress or have gone bankrupt.)

Ten of the players at the conference were asked to provide brief "elevator pitches" for their business ideas. For Ware, who has earned $52 million in nine years, cramming a career's worth of ideas into a two-minute presentation proved impossible.

"I want to make a shirt that would correct posture, and I want to change the dynamics of how shoulder pads are made," Ware began.

It's all very inside baseball, but the gist is this: Shoulder pads come in sizes without much modification, beyond bulkier sets for the big guys and lightweight stuff for little guys. With the help of Douglass, an athletics manufacturer, Ware has for the past four seasons customized his pads and passed his designs on to fellow Cowboys, which he says reduces stingers for himself each season. He'll spend the rest of the week at Notre Dame working with business experts to figure out what to do with his big idea.

Not that such an offseason program guarantees smooth sailing. As former NFL player Deke Cooper, a panelist on the entrepreneurial seminar, said, "I can tell you my pitfalls and my strategies, but I can't say that they will necessarily work for you. It's not like you're on a ride at Disney World and there are bumpers telling you where to go. It's more like you're in the ocean, and you have a compass."

Still, Ware was impressed. "It's a great program, and it's free, so why wouldn't you do it? When it's in the offseason, a lot of guys feel it's going to take away from their time off. It's about your priorities and what type of person you are. You can go on vacation, but this right here is a vacation to me. You learn a lot and you're stimulating your mind instead of staying stagnant."

Broncos Q&A: Kayvon Webster learns from mentor Champ Bailey

By Troy Renck The Denver Post October 19, 2014

Kayvon Webster's rookie season could be summed up thusly: Wake up. Pinch self.

Webster began playing football at age 6. By middle school, his interest increased, and he adopted Champ Bailey as his favorite player. Last year, he broke into the NFL with Bailey as his mentor.

"When I really started taking football seriously as a kid, Champ Bailey was my guy. It was a dream come true having him as a teammate, me playing the position where he's going to the Hall of Fame. He helped me a lot," said Webster, a third-round selection (90th overall) from the University of South Florida. "I even got a chance to go to his wedding. That was big. I feel like I gained a brother."

After a slow start this season, Webster continues to gain momentum, playing more each week. He participated in a season-high 20 snaps against the New York Jets last weekend and excelled in nickel coverage. Webster talked with The Denver Post last week about his path to the Broncos, music and overcoming a preseason health scare.

Q: You started slowly this season after suffering from dehydration during the exhibition game vs. the Dallas Cowboys that left you hospitalized. How much did that set you back?

A: I didn't feel like it affected my preparation. It was more of a physical thing. My body was messed up. I am thankful every day and try to stay positive. It was hard not to be out there with the fellas. During the offseason, I put in so much work to be better than last year. I can't let one setback define my whole season. I pushed that aside. It was minor. I just had to put my head down and make plays.

Q: You were thrown into the fire last season because of injuries. How much did facing top receivers help accelerate your development?

A: I wouldn't say going against the twos or ones from other teams built my confidence. I had my confidence built from practice every day. It was a blessing to be out there going against our guys in practice. It helped make me more comfortable, and be more aware of what's going on.

Q: How does playing nickel coverage compare to your assignments in a regular base defense?

A: Nickel is more physical. I am more involved in the run game than at straight corner. At corner, you are reading primarily pass, then if the running back breaks you are involved in it. At nickel, you have certain fits as far as the run goes. My mind-set is pretty much the same: try to win every rep.

Q: You play a key role on special teams. Some players do it because they have to. What's your view?

A: I just love football. They throw me out there, and I am giving my full effort every chance I get. I don't take anything for granted. Would I rather have a big hit or a big block? Well, I am all for the one that helps us win the game.

Q: You mentioned that Bailey was your favorite player. What advice from him still sticks today?

A: I learned from him to stay focused, to always give full effort and when my number is called make a play. Cornerback is one of the toughest positions to play. You have to work hard to keep up with these receivers. He gave me guidance.

Q: What other sports did you play at Monsignor Pace High in Opa-Locka, Fla.?

A: I was highly recruited in football and track. I ran the 100, 200 and 4-by-100. Football was my first sport. I started excelling in track, which was pretty fun. I ran track at University of South Florida and had a chance to participate in the indoor championships and two outdoor championships. My fastest time was 10.5 in the 100 meters. But on my team, I wasn't known as the guy shot out of the rocket. I just had that strong speed.

Q: How do you unwind when you're away from football?

A: I like to get massages in my free time. Or I'll watch movies, listen to music, just relaxing things. Music is a big part of football for me. I have a playlist of guys I know from my neighborhood, like Rick Ross. I also listen to Gucci Mane, Drake.

Kayvon Webster file

- --Played season-high 20 snaps vs. Jets, grading out well in nickel coverage.
- --Started slowly first two games after suffering dehydration in preseason finale.
- --Saw action in 49 of 50 games at the University of South Florida, earning all-Big East honors as senior.

- --Clocked 4.34 40-yard dash before draft. Ran 10.5 100-meter dash as member of USF track team.
- --Broncos drafted him in the third round in 2013, and Webster played in 14 games with two starts $\frac{1}{2}$
- --Graduated from South Florida with health science degree after starring at Opa-Locka (Fla.) High.

Peyton Manning appreciates Wes Welker's timing

By Jeff Legwold ESPN.com October 24, 2014

DENVER -- It's all in the details for Denver Broncos quarterback Peyton Manning.

For most of Thursday night's 35-21 victory over the San Diego Chargers the ball was not going wide receiver Wes Welker's way. He did not have a catch until there was just 9:31 left in the game, and that one went for no gain.

With 3:29 to play, the Broncos were trying to grind out the clock with a 14-point lead and facing a third-and-4 from their own 10-yard line. A punt there and the Broncos would have handed the ball back to the Chargers in quality field position for an opportunity to make it a one-score game.

Then Manning hit Welker for a 5-yard gain that allowed the Broncos to effectively run out all but 18 seconds of the time that was left in the seven plays that followed.

"And I thought Welker's third-down catch might have been the biggest play of the game," Manning said.

Two weeks ago, Welker had just one catch in the Broncos' win over the New York Jets, but it was an 8-yarder on a third-and-6 that helped run out most of the closing minutes in that win as well. It is a different type of role for a player who had five 100-catch seasons in his time with the New England Patriots.

Since he returned from a concussion and a four-game suspension to open the season for a violation of the league's policy on performance-enhancing drugs that was later reduced to two games, Welker has 19 receptions in five games to go with one touchdown. He has not had a 100-yard receiving game since he signed with the Broncos.

But Manning said it's Welker's ability to find space to work when it's needed that continues to make him a key part of things.

"He's more than a security blanket," Manning said. "I feel like he is a great threat out there and I'm sure defenses would tell you that. He's had a great attitude. I'm not speaking for him but I'm sure he wants more catches and to be more involved, but it's just the way the ball works sometimes. It could be his day next Sunday against New England. But give credit to him: On that third down, he ran a great route. It was a great adjustment. Third-and-1, it was kind of planned for an out route. Wes snapped it inside. I believe they were looking to have some type of double coverage, but he was so quick with his adjustment and I was able to bang it in there and got that third-down conversion. So I give credit to him for staying in the game and not feel like, 'Hey it's not coming to me.'"

Broncos' Wes Welker humbly passes Rod Smith for "undrafted" record

By Mike Klis, Troy E. Renck and Irv Moss The Denver Post October 6, 2014

Broncos slot receiver Wes Welker knows the record isn't for everyone, just for a proud, determined fraternity.

Demaryius Thomas, for instance, can't set the NFL record for most catches by an undrafted player. He was drafted by the Broncos, and a first-round pick at that.

But to be tops among all the undrafted players?

"There's still a lot of work involved," Welker said.

His seven catches Sunday against Arizona gave Welker 854 in his career, breaking the former undrafted reception record of 849 that had been held by Rod Smith, who still holds all the Broncos' significant career receiving records.

"Anytime you can break a record held by Rod Smith — I followed him growing up," Welker said. "I didn't know he was undrafted until I came up. He was so good, you wouldn't have thought."

Welker, either. He not only set receiving records at pass-happy Texas Tech, Welker broke NCAA punt-return records.

How was he not drafted in 2004?

"Look at me," Welker said, smiling about his 5-foot-9, 185-pound frame. "I wouldn't have drafted me either."

His quarterback begs to differ.

"It's kind of a ha-ha moment for scouting for not drafting him," said Peyton Manning. "So whoever was a general manager during (2004), those guys ought to send him an apology letter."

The Broncos were prepared for the moment. Welker broke Smith's record in the first half, and at halftime, the Broncos showed a video tribute for Welker that included comments from Manning, receiver Emmanuel Sanders and Smith. Manning isn't the only Bronco employee who is well-prepared.

"I saw that when I came out for halftime," Welker said. "It was really nice. I wasn't expecting that."

Field of dreams. Bye weeks benefit more than players. The maligned turf at Sports Authority Field at Mile High turned green in the Broncos' absence. Multiple factors contributed to the poor appearance early in the season, the Broncos said. The team began the preseason at home for the first time since the new stadium was opened. The facility also hosted an exhibition soccer game, a Colorado-Colorado State football contest and three Broncos practices.

PHOTOS: Arizona Cardinals vs. Denver Broncos

Regardless, it didn't meet the team's standards. The promise was that it would improve as the season progressed. The turf met expectations Sunday.

No timetable. Arizona coach Bruce Arians couldn't predict when his quarterback position might stabilize. He was down to rookie Logan Thomas from Virginia Tech when Sunday's game against the Broncos ended.

As for starter Carson Palmer, who didn't play because of a nerve problem in his right shoulder, Arians didn't provide a timetable for his return.

"I have no idea," Arians said. "He tossed the ball today, and he'll have another treatment. We'll just have to see how it goes."

Drew Stanton, an eight-year pro, started for the Cardinals, but left in the third quarter with a concussion.

Numbers that count. The Broncos did a number on Arizona's touted defense.

Denver had the edge in first downs 24-9, total net yards 568-215, third-down efficiency 7-for-16 to 3-for-16 and in possession time 35:17 to 24:43.

Footnotes. Marvin Austin changed the name on his jersey. After the death of his father, the back of Austin's jersey reads: Austin Jr. ... Demaryius Thomas wore gold shoes to his news conference. They were sent to him. He believes they brought good luck, so they could become a Sunday wardrobe staple. ... Receiver Andre Caldwell walked through the locker room after the game, providing a hint that his left knee injury was not serious.

Broncos' Sylvester Williams sacked long odds in journey to NFL stardom

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post September 5, 2014

It is impossible to think about Sylvester Williams as anything but a defensive tackle. His hands double as bear paws. He moves with a low center of gravity. His body is a tugboat with arms.

At 6-foot-2, 310 pounds, he is a defensive tackle straight out of central casting. There is irony in this because his journey to the Broncos' starting lineup Sunday night reads like a Hollywood script.

Williams never dreamed of playing college football. Surviving occupied his thoughts. He grew up poor in Jefferson City, Mo. The family patched together a house. It burned down. They fixed up a car, and not long after, it was stolen.

Williams needed money, and had to make a living. He took a job at Modine Manufacturing after high school, piecing together radiators for diesels. It paid $400 a week, an honest wage for a kid who admittedly wasn't a good student or a dedicated athlete in high school.

One game changed his life. His former high school teacher, Andre Solomon, whom he still talks to daily, took Williams to see Kansas play Texas Tech. Williams gazed onto the field and, for the first time, wondered why he was watching rather than playing.

"It opened my eyes to a whole new world," Williams said Thursday.

Williams quit his job. He enrolled at Coffeyville (Kan.) Community College. After playing just one season in high school, Williams, then weighing 360 pounds, walked onto the football team. He dropped weight and sank quarterbacks. A kid who months before spent eight-hour shifts on his feet lining up parts had college coaches standing at attention. He saved his first recruiting letter and offer from Oklahoma State. Dozens more poured in over his two-year junior college career before he finally chose North Carolina.

"When he came in on his recruiting visit I got a chance to know him. We are cut from the same cloth," said the Broncos' Marvin Austin. "It's a great story. To have a testimony, you have to have a test."

Denver grabbed Williams with its first pick in the 2013 draft. He was everything the Broncos expected but also unrefined. Williams spent the bulk of last season as a sponge soaking up advice from Terrance Knighton and Kevin Vickerson.

"The game is real fast as a rookie. There were things I struggled with, like not knowing how to watch film. Not really knowing what the offense was doing against me," said Williams, who contributed late last season and into the playoffs. "You have to have technique."

He could no longer bully opponents at the point of the attack. Knighton watched Williams' growth. Lining up beside Williams now, Knighton predicts a breakout season.

"With Sly, it had nothing to do with his athleticism or physical tools. It was all mental. Now he's playing the game fast," Knighton said. "He will be dominant this year, you watch. Nobody is talking about him because of the season I had last year and the signing of DeMarcus (Ware). Sly is going to be disruptive. "

Defensive tackle is an odd position. It has been compared to fighting in a phone booth. Quick burst is required to get to the backfield, but size must accompany the speed to stop running backs. Williams believes the Broncos "can be one of, if not the best defensive line in football." He did his part, dropping to 310 pounds from 320 last year to be more agile.

"You're looking at a guy now that understands a little better what we're asking him to do, the techniques he'll need to master, the fact that maybe some of those 'I'm just better than the guy across from me' moments that you had in college are few and far between in the NFL," defensive coordinator Jack Del Rio said. "He was mature. And he always worked hard, worked the right way."

Just as he did assembling radiators. He chose another path, rolling up his sleeves and changing his life.

Tackling the odds

Sylvester Williams will start his first season opener Sunday night against the Indianapolis Colts, part of a remarkable journey to the NFL that included several highlights:

- Played one year of high school football in Jefferson City, Mo.
- Worked at Modine Manufacturing, building radiators.

- Dropped nearly 50 pounds and walked onto Coffeyville Community College team.
- Earned All-American honors at North Carolina, where he graduated with a degree in communications.
- 28th pick in 2013 draft, played 13 games, netting 19 tackles and two sacks.

Broncos' Derek Wolfe battles back from depression, scary injury

By Lindsay H. Jones USA TODAY Sports August 6, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — As the weeks of the 2013 season rolled by, Derek Wolfe's hulking body shriveled away — and with it, his mental health.

The muscle definition was gone from his chest and shoulders. His waist narrowed as he lost the girth around his midsection. When his weight dipped to its lowest point in nearly a decade, all the way down to 258 pounds, it felt like he was looking at a human bobblehead in the mirror.

"My head looked real big. I just looked weird. Extremely weird," Wolfe said.

Wolfe was equally unrecognizable when he flipped on video of himself in practice and games. He saw a man wearing the No. 95 jersey, but that guy lacked the strength, power an on-field fire that made the Broncos draft him with their top selection in the 2012 draft.

"I see film from last year, and I'm like, 'Who is that guy?' " Wolfe said.

But to look at Wolfe now, all 295 well-built pounds of him, reveals only part of his remarkable comeback from a lost season that included scary incidents that, over a three-month span, twice landed him in ambulances and hospitals and even in a medically induced coma.

To see Wolfe rib his teammates again, relax while sitting in a chair off to the side of the Broncos practice field and genuinely smile shows how he has been able to reclaim his life after emerging from a deep depression.

"Mentally, physically, emotionally — I feel like I'm right where I need to be," Wolfe told USA TODAY Sports this week, just after completing a set of 40-yard gassers after practice.

His physical and emotional spiral began last August during a preseason game against the Seattle Seahawks, whom the Broncos play Thursday night in their preseason opener. Wolfe was being blocked by two Seahawks — one low at his legs, another, fullback Michael Robinson, near his shoulders and neck. Upon colliding with Robinson, Wolfe fell limp to the turf, unable to feel anything in his extremities as he was loaded onto a stretcher and driven off the field in the ambulance.

The paralysis was only temporary and after being diagnosed with a contusion on his spinal cord, Wolfe was released from the hospital in time to fly home with his teammates to Denver. Three weeks later, Wolfe was cleared by team doctors to play in the regular season opener. Physically, he might have looked OK to trainers and coaches, but it was a lie.

"That's the thing about my injury — it was more of a condition. My mental state was so out of whack, the depression, everything I went through, and I didn't know why I was going through it," Wolfe said. "When you start messing around with your spinal cord, that starts messing with your head."

Wolfe, who started every game as a rookie in 2012, started each of the Broncos' first 11 games last season and even recorded a sack in three consecutive consecutive outings from Oct. 27 through Nov. 17. Onlookers might not have noticed much was wrong, but those close to Wolfe did.

The weight loss was the most obvious red flag. No matter what Wolfe ate or how much he worked out, his weight continued to drop. He was irritable and he lashed out at people who were trying to help him. Already a self-described loner, Wolfe isolated himself further as the depression set in.

The Broncos were in the midst of their most fun regular season in years, racking up wins as Peyton Manning piled up touchdowns.

Wolfe could not enjoy any of it.

"Honestly, I was miserable every day," he said. "I was in pain, I wasn't happy about anything. I didn't feel like myself."

But he continued to get by, playing in a body that didn't feel like his own, and living with emotions he couldn't understand. But on Nov. 29, it all became too much.

Wolfe boarded a team bus bound for Denver International Airport. Just as the bus turned onto a service road, teammates noticed that Wolfe looked woozy and was sweating profusely.

"It was like someone dumped an entire bottle over his head," former Broncos safety Mike Adams, now with the Indianapolis Colts, told USA TODAY Sports recently while recalling his former teammate's seizure-like episode.

Teammates screamed for the driver to pull over. Coaches riding in another bus were alerted, and trainers called for an ambulance. Once again, Wolfe was on a stretcher, being driven away. More than a day later, he awoke in the intensive care unit at the University of Colorado Hospital in Aurora.

"When he first got there, he ripped all the (medical wires) off. He tore the bed apart. He's a big dude. They had him strapped in, but they couldn't hold him. I said, 'Why'd you do that?' And he said, 'Foxy, I have to be in a game. I'm playing a game today,' Broncos head coach John Fox told USA TODAY Sports.

"When he went out, he was on a bus to go to Kansas City. When he woke up, he was in the hospital. That would be a scary proposition. He couldn't remember a thing, so he obviously freaked out, and that freaked the hospital people out."

While the rest of the Broncos were playing the Kansas City Chiefs, Fox, who had returned to Denver earlier that week after recovering from emergency heart surgery in North Carolina, spent the day with Wolfe at the hospital. Wolfe was subjected to a battery of tests as doctors tried to figure out what was going on.

Fox recalled telling Wolfe to be honest with the physicians about how he had been feeling, both physically and emotionally. Wolfe's nervous system was overtaxed, and his mind overstressed. It was all connected.

"I felt bad for him, because they couldn't figure it out. Was it his heart? Was it respiratory? Really, what it came down to, it was really mental anxiety. He's been through a lot," Fox said.

The coach knew then that Wolfe's season was over, though the Broncos waited until January to officially place him on injured reserve. Wolfe tried to return to practice once, in late December, but was nowhere close to being physically or mentally ready to handle it.

Wolfe's road back to himself

Thus began the process of rebuilding Derek Wolfe. Even after two hospitalizations, he said he never considered that he might not play again.

"It was always, 'How quick can I get back?' That was really the issue," Wolfe said. "And the crazy thing was, the quickest way to get back to football was for me to just forget about football and worry about my life, get my life together. In doing that, it made me love the game even more than I did before."

Barred by doctors from doing any strenuous physical activity, but desperately needing to regain more than 20 pounds he had lost, Wolfe spent much of his time at home eating. He would cook pounds of ground bison and eat it by the bowlful, topped with avocado and ketchup. Needing some sort of physical outlet, Wolfe started doing yoga several times a week. That exercise has physical benefits and proved to be an emotional stabilizer as well.

"That really helped get my mind and body back on the same page," Wolfe said. "I was doing that while I was gaining weight, so it helped me keep my body control."

Wolfe chose to stay in Denver for most of the offseason, living in the house he recently bought, in order to work with the team's strength coaches once he was allowed to start lifting weights in March. He also wanted to be near his doctors.

Along the way, Wolfe forced himself to be less of an introvert and spent more time in public, launching a charity and holding a benefit beach volleyball tournament. He vacationed in Florida and has a steady girlfriend. These things had as much to do with Wolfe's comeback as anything related to football.

"It was my life. I had to get my life together," Wolfe said. "Going through that - I hate to say that I'm glad I went through it - but it was something that I really needed for me to see what is really important in my life."

Wolfe was physically cleared for full participation in the offseason program that began in April. He reported to training camp last month weighing 295 pounds, almost 10 pounds more than his playing weight as a rookie, when he had six sacks as a hybrid end-tackle in coordinator Jack Del Rio's defense.

When Del Rio looks at Wolfe now, he sees the player the Broncos drafted — and then some. Del Rio plans to use Wolfe as the starting left end in the base defense, which requires four linemen, but shift him inside to tackle in passing situations.

"First of all, it's great to see him out there, because he had a tough stretch. And he's come through it, and he's back doing the things he loves. And then for us, we're a stronger team with a healthy Derek Wolfe," Del Rio told USA TODAY Sports.

With the return of Wolfe and defensive tackle Kevin Vickerson (who suffered a dislocated hip in November), the addition of Marvin Austin and emergence last year of Malik Jackson and 2013 first-round pick Sylvester Williams, the Broncos believe they have their strongest and deepest defensive line in years.

"I'm expecting a great season out of myself," Wolfe said. "I just want our defense to be the best in the league. I don't care about my stats, I just want to be part of that type of defense."

Teammates have noticed the change, and not just the physical transformation. Since training camp began, they've watched Wolfe push around offensive teammates in practice and run his mouth during drills — signs that Wolfe has his football mindset back.

But it wasn't until the Broncos' scrimmage last week that Wolfe really felt normal on the field again. But Wolfe said he won't let himself make any "emotional decisions" upon his return to live game action. He'll just appreciate his health and second chance he's built for himself.

"I'm having fun now. I wasn't having fun last year, because of the pain I was going through and the issues I was dealing with," Wolfe said.

"But now I'm healthy, I'm strong, I'm mentally stable."

Running game getting into rhythm

By Ben Swanson denverbroncos.com October 24, 2014

DENVER —Juwan Thompson says he wouldn't want to play defense. And after watching the punishment he laid on would-be tacklers trying to put him on the grass in short-yardage run plays, and the looks of defenders trying to corral Ronnie Hillman, I don't blame him.

The Broncos' 35-21 win over the Chargers was just the latest example of a burgeoning run game maintaining a progressive path as the two combined for 162 total yards with two touchdowns.

Coming into Thursday night, control of the ground game was due to be a hardfought battle likely to have implications on the outcome.

In last year's Thursday night game, the Chargers won by getting what they wanted to the tune of 177 rushing yards, which helped them hold on to the ball. And by keeping the ball in their possession for much of the game, they kept an incendiary Broncos offense from touching the ball enough to get back into the game. And on the other side, the Broncos got little success on the ground, with only 18 yards on 11 carries.

Now fast forward to this season, past the two teams' playoff matchup last postseason. In a battle between two rivals trying to establish an advantage in the race for the division, the run game would again be an important factor, both on offense and defense.

The Broncos' run offense came out on top Thursday night, as did the Broncos defense. Denver outgained San Diego 139 to 61 yards on the ground, though 23 of the Chargers' rushing yards came on the last play of the game at a time when the game had already been decided

With that total, the Broncos have run for an average of 121 yards in each of their last four games, which is a marked improvement over their 75.3 yard rushing average over the first three games.

"Over the last three weeks I think you've seen improvement in the run game," Head Coach John Fox said. "Regardless of who the backs are, I think it starts up front with your blocking element, whether it's tight ends or the O-line. Again, the running backs—it's a team effort, a group effort. We've just gotten better. It's something that we stress and work at very hard. The staff has done an excellent job and the players have responded."

In that same time in which the Broncos had to make a switch in their lineup to move Ronnie Hillman and Juwan Thompson up a spot due to Montee Ball's injury, they've gotten comprehensive efforts across the board to improve their rushing offense. Over those past four weeks, they've increased their per-rush average from 3.3 to 4.6 yards.

"I think it is a combination of things," Peyton Manning said. "Ronnie has really played well. He has a burst; he catches the ball out of the backfield. I'm so disappointed I missed him on that one throw late and we had to punt. Getting him the ball in space when he had a chance for a big play. He has played pretty well. I do think our guys up front have played better for whatever reason the past few weeks and provided some opportunities. It's been a nice combination there. Ronnie, I think getting the reps—knowing he's the starting tailback, getting the reps in practice—I think any young player will tell you that makes a difference. It's hard if you're not getting all the reps. I've always felt that as a quarterback. He's taking advantage of his opportunity and he's played really well."

Hillman shouldered most of the carries for his second career 100-yard rushing game. His quick cutbacks in the trenches and outside them gave the Broncos a versatile weapon on the ground and through the air with 138 total yards, including a 37-yard scamper. A big part of that is the confidence the Broncos have put in their running game and helping Hillman get into a rhythm.

"It's just getting in the rhythm. Running backs need rhythm," Hillman said. "I'm starting to get in a rhythm and hopefully we can continue this to the next week, make it ongoing. Juwan, he gets going and C.J. gets going, just get this run game going a lot more than what it is now because, like I said, we could make improvements."

Though Hillman did just about everything—good inside and outside running, playing in the passing game, solid pass-blocking—except for getting into the end zone.

Instead, the Broncos turned to Juwan Thompson in the short yardage situations, where he busted through the line for two touchdowns.

For those wondering why Juwan Thompson got those carries, his run on third-and-1 to end the third quarter showed exactly why. Thompson plowed his way up the middle, knocking back a linebacker and defensive back for a first down.

"That's just my style of running: get downhill," Thompson said. "I just like to deliver the first blow because it's tough to regain yourself after someone gets you or catches you slipping. So I try to go ahead and deliver that first blow so that they know that I'm coming to play and when I do get in, that I'm coming downhill. It's just I'm trying to make you come tackle me. I'm trying to get that first down, new set of downs, or take it to the house if I can."

For him, too, confidence from the coaching staff is letting him get the carries he needs to excel, as Manning discussed after the game.

"I think it tells you the confidence that we have in him," Manning said. [Offensive Coordinator] Adam [Gase] and [running back] Coach [Eric] Studesville are more than happy to put him in there in critical situations. End of the game, trying to get a first down, around the goal line, had a couple of goal line plays to him. So that's a nice little addition to our offense. He's been great running the ball and he catches the ball well out of the backfield as well."

Thompson also saw the continued running game improvement as something much bigger than just their position. "It's just we're being very decisive and those guys up front there, they're doing a better job each week in getting everything done and blocking everything correctly and just communicating with each other. That's what football is," he said. "It's a bond over time. You're not going to be great the first game. So over time, everyone's going to get better and get well-equipped with everyone else so everyone else is on the same page."

Roommates Nelson and Thompson adapting to bigger roles

By Ben Swanson DenverBroncos.com October 26, 2014

ENGLEWOOD, Colo. — Juwan Thompson and Corey Nelson push each other every day on the practice field, and then the two roommates get in Thompson's car and pick up where the left off when they get home.

That must be a fun place to be right now with the rookies growing into bigger roles that the coaching staff has grown more comfortable in giving them. Inside their apartment, they've created a supportive atmosphere for one another in which they drive each other to get better.

"We constantly remind each other whenever we're home to study a little bit before we get to our regular activities that we want to do," Nelson said. "We just make sure that we tell each other to study a little bit and that's what's helping us to adjust perfectly. We kind of have each other's back as far as watching who comes in and who comes out of our plays."

As the two undergo the adjustment process to NFL life immediately after college, living together has helped them immensely in understanding their plays. "Even though it's offense and defense, two totally different sides of the ball, it's still a lot to take in on both sides of the ball," Nelson said.

With that kind of environment powering one another to get better and learn more, you can begin to see why those two have begun making bigger impacts for the Broncos. Thompson burst onto the scene as of late, making substantial contributions on the ground when he relieves Ronnie Hillman, and Nelson has recently gotten some good time on the field in nickel defensive lineups.

Thompson's initial breakthrough came against the Cardinals in Week 5 as he barreled into the end zone for an 8-yard score. After a promising preseason in which he rushed for an average of 4.9 yards a carry and a total of 143 yards on the ground but no touchdowns, Thompson finally found the end zone when it mattered in the regular season.

He beamed as he walked through the tunnel after the final whistle, sharing the moment with Nelson.

"It was a lot of joy that day," Thompson said. "I was walking off the field with my roommate, Corey Nelson. We both got a lot of burn in the game that day. So we made some big plays and we were just happy for each other."

"I just try to be supportive for him, just kind of let him know he's not alone and whatever he does, just do it to the best of his ability and I'll do the same," Nelson said.

And then Thompson got the chance to return the favor when Nelson had his big game against the Jets in Week 6. Nelson saw plenty of time on the field in the Broncos' nickel defense for 36 snaps and he ended up leading the Broncos in tackles that game with seven.

"We were both hype," Thompson said. "I saw his first play on defense: He was just shedding off those blockers and made the tackle, made it look easy like he's a veteran. I was excited and happy for him. I saw the stats at the end of the day: seven tackles. I was like, 'Man, did you know you had seven tackles?' He was like 'Nah, I didn't know! Almost double-digits in the first game.' It was a proud moment to see it."

Their friendship had all started when the 53-man roster had been set. The two were looking for apartments, and it just made sense to be roommates.

"We work maybe 11 hours a day, it seems like: sun up to sun down, just about," Thompson said. "So you're barely home, so it's like there's no reason to spend all that money. We might as well save some of that money for this first year."

Now that they've gotten situated, the added company has been an added benefit as they get to know each other more, and as they grow on the team.

"I mean, you don't want to go home [to an] empty home by yourself, can't even talk to anyone," he added. "Sometimes we sit down in the living room and just chat it up, or we might both be in there studying, just watching something. And then Isaiah [Burse] lives right down the street, so he'll come over. We'll just all bond together. We're all rookies trying to have a good time so when we have downtime, we all try to come together and it's good to have someone on your team right there around the corner if you've got questions."

We've seen their dedication turn into blooming and increasing roles as the coaching staff sees their potential coming to fruition on the field. And it's not just from the coaches, but their teammates have noticed, too.

"Corey, he stepped up and played a big game," Chris Harris Jr. said after the Jets game. "And our defense is complex, too, so for him to come in and play on the road like that and kind of just get thrown in, I got to tip my hat to him."

A couple weeks later, Thompson rumbled through the line for two touchdowns against the Chargers, and Peyton Manning took a moment to recognize the running back's efforts on Thursday night.

"I think it tells you the confidence that we have in him," Manning said. "[Offensive Coordinator] Adam [Gase] and [running back] Coach [Eric] Studesville are more than happy to put him in there in critical situations. End of the game, trying to get a first down, around the goal line, had a couple of goal line plays to him. So that's a nice little addition to our offense. He's been great running the ball and he catches the ball well out of the backfield as well."

To see themselves relentlessly push one another to improve and then watch as they get called on in bigger roles has been a rewarding feeling for the young running back and linebacker.

"We're both supporting each other," Thompson said. "We've both got to eat. At the end of the day, they're going to feed you the ball—go out there and get it done. When he comes off to the sideline, I'm supporting him. When I come off, he's supporting me. It's a good feeling. It's kind of like having a brother right there on the field with you at all times."

With Ware rejuvenated, defense is no longer an afterthought in Denver

By Don Banks SI.com October 23, 2014

So far in 2014, all of DeMarcus Ware's moves are working. In a related development, you could make the same case for the first-place Denver Broncos.

Ware, the centerpiece of Denver's aggressive defensive upgrade this offseason, stole whatever sliver was left over from the spotlight Peyton Manningcommanded last Sunday night at home against San Francisco, dropping that ridiculous fake spin-move on 49ers Pro Bowl offensive tackle Joe Staley to record an instant-classic sack of Colin Kaepernick.

For the record, Ware, the formerCowboys' pass-rushing star, hasn't named or trademarked his gone-viral half-spin, spin-back maneuver. But it has quickly spawned imitators, with fellow Broncos sack specialist Von Miller trying it this week in practice. Ware's take? Like almost everything else having to do with Denver's new-look defense this season, it's a great addition.

"Von started doing it the other day, that was funny," Ware said Tuesday, by phone. "I said, 'Oh, no. Now somebody's really in trouble.""

You get the feeling the league concurs. Led by Ware's three-sack night against San Francisco, the Broncos defense had itself a coming-out party in the 42-17 blowout of the visiting 49ers, sacking Kaepernick six times and limiting San Francisco to just 10 points over the course of the three quarters played by Denver's starters. Manning's record-breaking 509th touchdown pass got the well-deserved headlines and the adulation, but make no mistake, the Broncos defense is no longer an afterthought in Denver.

Don't go pinning the "Dream Team" label on these 5-1 Broncos, but when was the last time a big free agency spending spree worked as seamlessly and as early as it has in Denver? The Broncos targeted and spent on name players like Ware, cornerback Aqib Talib and strong safety T.J. Ward to dramatically boost their defensive playmaking, and it's all going as planned through six games. And with the vitally important Miller and cornerback Chris Harris Jr. returning to health, the revamped Broncos have limited four of their six opponents to 20 points or fewer (it's five if you count Seattle scoring 20 of its eventual 26 points in regulation, before winning in overtime), and only four teams in the NFL have allowed fewer than their 121 points. Super Bowl-bound Denver had just six games where it allowed 20 points or fewer for the entire 2013 regular season.

For a team that got gouged for 43 points in its embarrassing Super Bowl meltdown against Seattle eight-plus months ago, the difference on defense this season in Denver is both substantial and obvious. And it starts with the pass rush provided by Ware and Miller, who have generated a combined 15 sacks in just six games, outproducing 14 NFL teams all by themselves.

Ware has seven sacks, tying for second in the league, and already topping the career-low six sacks he recorded in his injury-plagued final season in Dallas last year. Miller leads the NFL with eight sacks -- including two against the 49ers -- despite coming off last December's torn ACL. Miller has at least one sack in five consecutive games, being shut out only in the Broncos' opener against the Colts, while Ware has four sacks in his past two games, going sack-less only against Kansas City in Week 2.

"The pieces are in place here, and when I got here I saw how hard Von works and how he has gotten back to where he needs to be physically," said Ware, who played in just 13 games last season in Dallas, the first time in his nine-year career he had failed to play in every game. "Then with me, I feel like my body being whole again, being able to play all out and not being hurt and injured, has been the key. It's like, 'OK, now we have what people think they have with both of us.' You don't have a beat-up DeMarcus, or a Von coming back and still not being right from his injury.

"It was great just knowing we're in the catbird seat here, and you know what, we're ready for action and we're going to prove everybody wrong."

Ware, who turned 32 in July, informed Miller in the Broncos' OTAs that the duo was setting a goal of combining for 32 sacks this season, and they're almost halfway there, with 10 games remaining. According to the New York Times, Ware and Miller are just the third pair of teammates to post at least seven sacks each in their team's first six games. Asked if they had set their sights too low, given that their current pace of 2.5 sacks per game projects to 40, Ware referenced the Minnesota pass-rush pairing of defensive linemen Chris Doleman and Keith Millard, whose 39 combined sacks in 1989 is the record since the sack became an official NFL statistic in '82.

"The sky's the limit for us," Ware said. "I'm not even going to throw that number [32] out there again. From now on I'm going to say when you talk about Chris Doleman and Keith Millard, that tandem they had in Minnesota, that's what you want. That's what you're going after, to be the best tandem ever in the league."

Is Peyton Manning the best quarterback ever?

On Monday's SI Now, Sports Illustrated NFL writer Doug Farrar discusses Peyton Manning's recent record-breaking performance and who he thinks is the greatest quarterback of all time.

Ware's rejuvenation as a sack artist was on big-stage display with his unique double-spin move against Staley, one of the league's most reliable pass blockers. Working Staley with an inside spin move toward the guard, he abruptly changed and spun in the opposite direction, toward the outside, finding nothing but an unimpeded path to Kaepernick for the sack. Staley was left blocking air, yards away from the action. It was one part instinct and two parts improvisation for Ware.

"It's just a feeling thing for me, and it really doesn't have a name just yet," Ware said of his move. "I did it twice this season, once in the Kansas City game and again against San Francisco. It's just a matter of setting guys up and seeing if the spin move works, and if it's not there, you just spin back the other way. Some guys don't do it, but I don't understand why not. If the spin move isn't working, I just spin back and hopefully the tackle's not there, and he wasn't there that time.

"Staley is a great tackle, a Pro Bowl guy, so it seems like stuff like that doesn't happen to him. But I feel like he just had the wrong read at the time, and it just looked worse than it really was."

Ware's inspiration for the move? He pauses to give it thought, but no names come to mind. He is quite possibly the inventor.

"I haven't seen anybody ever make that move before, just a half-spin," he said. "Usually guys will get stuck in the spin move because if they start to spin back, the tackle will grab your shoulders so where you can't spin back. But I'm going to spin back and keep rolling. Now I know it's in my repertoire, and if it works, it works, and if it doesn't, it doesn't. But I'll keep trying it and eventually it will work."

There's no time to celebrate his latest work because the task Ware and Denver's defense face in the immediate future is daunting. The 5-2 Chargers visit Sports Authority Field on Thursday night, for a nationally televised battle for sole possession of first place in the AFC West. San Diego has been a pesky adversary since ex-Broncos offensive coordinator Mike McCoy took over as head coach in 2013, with the Chargers being the only opponent to win in Denver last season, a feat they nearly duplicated in the AFC divisional playoffs, before falling 24-17.

San Diego quarterback Philip Rivershas an impressive 10-6 career record against the Broncos as a starter and has generated early season MVP chatter, even though the Chargers' five-game winning streak was snapped last week at home against Kansas City. Rivers is adept at climbing the pocket and getting rid of the ball quickly, thereby negating some of Denver's newfound pass rush.

"When you have guys that have played each other for so long and they know each other so well, and know what each other is going to do, it always come down to who wants it most," said Ware, who'll be getting his first taste of the Broncos-Chargers rivalry. "And especially with this short week, that's what it's going to come down to."

After Rivers, the Broncos must gear up for another challenge, a trip to Foxboro and a Week 9 date with Tom Brady and a Patriots offense that is starting to click. Rivers and Brady back-to-back will be the measuring stick that tells us if this Denver pass rush can be special, with both veterans capable of exploiting an overaggressive front seven.

"With really smart quarterbacks like those guys, you've got to consistently keep them off their mark, and make plays when you get the chance to hit them," Ware said. "That's the only way to slow down guys who can get rid of the ball like they do."

In Denver this season, Ware is almost giddy about being on the same team as Manning, the quarterback who carved up the Cowboys defense in that memorable 51-48 shootout win in early October of last year. Ware likes the view better this time around, and found himself admiring No. 18's historic work Sunday night against the 49ers.

"That was phenomenal, just to see a guy who has been consistently great throughout his whole career, and here he is in his 17th year still playing at that high a level," Ware said. "It's so much better being on his side, with an offense that can score points like that. It makes the other offense really one-dimensional and that's when me and Von really woke up and were able to rush the passer and get pressure on the quarterback."

In Dallas, the Cowboys' running game-led offense is making life easier for a surprising defense that is dramatically better than expected and thriving without the likes of Ware, defensive lineman Jason Hatcher and injured middle linebackerSean Lee. The Cowboys' run-first formula has worked to near perfection withDeMarco Murray in the lead role, but Ware said he's finding it much easier to play defense this year now that he's surrounded by playmakers, minus the burden of being the player opponents gameplan for on his side of the ball.

"It's a lot better," he said. "That's what it boils down to. Here you take all these names and reputations and you stick them all in one barrel and what you get is guys who want to play for each other and play as a team. As you see with some other teams around the league, here it's not just one star player that gets it done. It's how guys come together and play, and get it done as one unit."

By any measurement, it has come together for Ware and the Broncos' remodeled defense this season about as smoothly and quickly as anyone could have hoped or anticipated. In Denver so far, the improvement is readily apparent, and every move seems to be working.

Broncos' greats Terrell Davis, Rod Smith praise Broncos

By Troy E. Renck The Denver Post October 23, 2014

Nearing the season's halfway point, the Broncos represent the AFC favorite to reach the Super Bowl. During a Thursday luncheon for corporate sponsors, former Broncos greats Terrell Davis and Rod Smith provided a peek behind the curtain, explaining the Broncos' excellence.

The relentless pursuit of victories begins with owner Pat Bowlen, they agreed.

"After I woke up from ACL surgery in 1999, the first call I got was from Pat Bowlen. I will always remember that," said Davis at the Seawell Grand Ballroom at the Denver Center for the Performing Arts.

"He did so many little things to help us. We didn't have roommates on the road. Not every team does that. ... One time, I had a personal issue and called him for help, and he immediately took care of it. I would run through a wall for him."

Smith, a Broncos Ring of Fame member with Davis, appreciated Bowlen's dedication. An undrafted free agent, Smith took nothing for granted, earning a roster spot with versatility before finishing his career as the team's all-time receptions leader.

"Guys would talk about cars in the parking lot. Because you had money, and could buy them. I told a few players, you got it wrong," Smith said. "I don't want to be the guy with the nicest car. I want to be the guy who bought all these cars. ... Mr. Bowlen is a role model for me."

Davis and Smith starred on the most celebrated Broncos teams in history, the back-to-back Super Bowl champions in the 1997 and 1998 seasons. They believe Denver has a chance to add another ring, pointing directly to record-thrashing, ageless quarterback Peyton Manning.

"It's amazing. There's no dip in his game. He's not declining," Davis said. "When you step in their building, you can feel the greatness that he brings. It was the same way when I played with John Elway."

Because of Smith's rolled-up sleeves journey to the NFL, the Broncos often invite him to talk to the team. During one speech, Smith stopped, catching players off guard.

"You all don't get it. (Manning) has all the accolades, all the records, and he's sitting over here taking notes," Smith said. "Watch and learn from him. How he does anything is how he does everything."

Hall of Famer Michael Irvin, who won three Super Bowl rings with the Dallas Cowboys, joined Smith and Davis on the panel. His view from the outside differed little from the one Manning provides inside the walls at Dove Valley.

"He's masterful at finding weak spots in a defense. And it all happens at the line of scrimmage," Irvin said. "The way he sees the game from shoulders up is incredible."

The three legends believe the Broncos' defense represents the biggest difference this season. Denver lured free agents safety T.J. Ward, cornerback Aqib Talib and defensive end DeMarcus Ware.

"They brought in playmakers," Davis said. "They don't want to be a team that's just known for its offense. They are starting to gel. They are playing with attitude. You can see it."

Broncos 'putting it all together' to reassert dominance

By Lindsay H. Jones USAToday.com October 20, 2014

DENVER — Peyton Manning's historic night would have meant little had Manning set the all-time passing record with three touchdowns in a loss to San Francisco.

But the rest of his teammates, from a retooled offensive line, to running back Ronnie Hillman, to a defense that held San Francisco's starters to just 10 points, assured that Manning made history on a night in which the Broncos reinforced their status as the AFC's best team.

"It was a special night, I think, certainly more special because of the way our team played, because we got the win with such a team effort," Manning said.

The Broncos are the only one-loss team remaining in the AFC, yet they had hardly been convincing they were deserving of title talk in recent weeks, including a loss at Seattle in September, and after narrow escapes to beat Indianapolis, Kansas City and the New York Jets. The Broncos weren't playing clean — a maddening number of penalties were killing drives on offense — and they were struggling to close out games.

But Sunday against the 49ers, in a game that was billed as a potential Super Bowl preview, the Broncos showed they are becoming the well-rounded team that they hoped to become in the wake of last year's Super Bowl heartbreak.

"We're finally putting it all together. That's all it is," defensive tackle Terrance Knighton told USA TODAY Sports.

And no place more so than on defense.

Defensive end DeMarcus Ware, one of the three big-name free agents signed in March, had his best game as a Bronco on Sunday night, with three sacks of San Francisco quarterback Colin Kaepernick. Outside linebacker Von Miller, appearing nearly fully recovered from his offseason ACL surgery, added two more.

Cornerback Aqib Talib had an interception for the second consecutive game — his pick last week sealed Denver's win against the Jets, and his interception of Kaepernick on Sunday night led to Manning's 510th career touchdown one play later, a pass to Demaryius Thomas that gave the Broncos a 28-10 lead.

"We're getting off the field, we're getting our offense on the field. We have the best secondary in the league, so if (a quarterback) goes through his progression, he'll have to worry about DeMarcus and Von. Or vise versa. If you throw a dumb pass, we have corners that are going to pick you off," Knighton said.

That was Thomas' second touchdown of the night, but it seemed equally as important to Manning that receivers other than Thomas and tight end Julius Thomas were a major factor in the Broncos' passing game. Emmanuel Sanders, who was leading the team in catches heading into Sunday's game, finally got his first touchdown since signing with the Broncos in March, while slot receiver Wes Welker, who missed the Broncos' first two games while serving a suspension, also caught his first touchdown.

Hillman, meanwhile, continues to make a case that he should be the Broncos' starting running back even when Montee Ball returns from a groin injury. Hillman, who had a 100-yard game last week in his first career start, ripped off a 37-yard touchdown run on Sunday, and Manning credited Hillman's work early in the game in establishing the run to helping the Broncos strike off by using the play-action game that had been missing earlier this season.

"Such a team effort," Manning said. "It's definitely one I'll remember."

But the Broncos also understand that such a big night will mean little if they can't stage a repeat performance in five days against San Diego. The Broncos lost at home on a Thursday night to Philip Rivers and the Chargers last season — a loss that didn't derail their AFC West title bid, but one that established a blueprint of how to beat the Broncos: Keep the ball away from Manning and the Broncos' offense.

"We played our best team game to date. If we keep getting better from here, we will have a shot," tight end Jacob Tamme said.
