COLTS TRAVEL TO NEW ENGLAND AS TEAMS CLASH FOR NINTH CONSECUTIVE YEAR

The Indianapolis Colts will battle the New England Patriots at Gillette Stadium in a Week 13 contest. The meeting will mark the 11th game between the two teams (including playoffs) dating back to 2003. The Patriots hold a 43-28 regular season series advantage, which includes a 23-12 record in games played in Foxborough. Indianapolis has faired well recently in the series as the Colts have won four of the last six regular season contests. Last year in Foxborough, Indianapolis mounted a second half charge against New England, but could not complete the comeback as the Patriots claimed a 31-28 victory.

The Colts fell to Carolina, 27-19, in a Week 12 match-up at Lucas Oil Stadium. Reggie Wayne posted his highest receiving total of the season with 122 yards and one touchdown while Donald Brown led the ground attack with 80 yards and one touchdown on 14 carries. The Patriots defeated the Philadelphia Eagles, 38-20, at Lincoln Financial Field. Quarterback Tom Brady completed 24-of-34 passes for 361 yards and three touchdowns in the victory.

In Week 14, Indianapolis will travel to Baltimore to face the Ravens at M&T Bank Stadium. The Colts then return to Lucas Oil Stadium for the last two home games of the year.

His total is the fourth-highest among all quarterbacks in franchise history and the most since Bert Jones rushed for 92 yards against the New York Jets on October 20, 1974. Painter has currently totaled 107 rushing yards this season, which is the most by a quarterback since 2002 when Peyton Manning accumulated 148 yards in 16 games.

BROWN DELIVERS

This season, running back Donald Brown has totaled 76 rushes for 356 yards (4.7 avg.) and three touchdowns. He has already tied his career-high of three touchdowns, which he set during his rookie season in 2009 and is 142 rushing yards shy of setting a new career-high (497 yards in 2010).

Indianapolis is on a pace for its highest team rushing total in terms of yardage since 2007. Along with that mark, the team's rushing average is on pace to finish as the eighth highest for a single season in franchise history and the most since 2001 when the Colts logged a 4.5 yards per carry average. As it stands, Donald Brown leads the team with a 4.7 yards per carry average, which would be the best total since 2006 when Joseph Addai compiled a 4.8 yards per carry average.

Wide receiver Reggie Wayne totaled five receptions for 122 yards and one touchdown against Carolina in Week 12. He scored his second touchdown of the season on a 56-yard pass from quarterback Curtis Painter in the fourth quarter, which was his longest reception of the season. Wayne's yardage total also marked the second 100-yard receiving performance this season. His first came in the season opener against Houston (106 yards).

With 122 receiving yards against Carolina, Wayne (11,400) surpassed Keenan McCardell (11,373) and Rod Smith (11,389) for 22nd place on the NFL's all-time receiving yards list. Wayne remains 39 yards shy of jumping Muhsin Muhammad for the 21st spot and is 505 yards from passing Michael Irvin for 20th place on the list.

Reggie Wayne has been one of the team's most reliable receivers since his NFL debut in 2001. Over his 11 seasons, the veteran has totaled 834 receptions for 11,400 yards and 71 touchdowns. With three catches against the Jacksonville Jaguars in Week 10, Wayne surpassed Larry Centers (827) for 19th place on the NFL's all-time receptions list. Wayne enters Sunday's game against the Patriots 16 receptions shy of passing Rod Smith for 18th place on the list.

CATCH OF THE MONTH

Wide receiver Pierre Garcon totaled 25 receptions for 420 yards and four touchdowns in the month of October and he currently leads the Indianapolis Colts in receiving with 655 yards on 46 receptions. Garcon's four receiving touchdowns in the month ranked first among all AFC receivers and second in the NFL behind Calvin Johnson's five. Over the course of October (10/3 at T.B. – 10/30 at Ten.) Garcon improved 21 spots among all AFC receivers (ranked tied for 24th after Week 3 and finished ranked third) and 40 spots among all NFL receivers (tied for 49th after Week 3 and finished ranked ninth) in receiving yards. Below are his totals by game in the month of October.

GETTING ANGRY

Linebacker Pat Angerer leads the Colts with 111 tackles (53 solo) and has participated at both strongside linebacker and middle linebacker in Indianapolis' first 11 regular season games. In a Sunday Night Football contest against the Pittsburgh Steelers (Week 3), Angerer established a career-high 20 tackles (11 solo), which also led the team. It was the second time this season the second-year veteran recorded a career-high, the first coming in the regular season opener at Houston with 13 tackles (nine solo).

In 11 games, Angerer has also totaled one sack, one forced fumble and one fumble recovery. His recovery against the Texans was the first of his career, which came in the fourth quarter and led to Indianapolis' lone touchdown of the contest. Angerer's forced fumble against the Browns (the second of his career) was recovered by Cleveland, but helped prevent a potential scoring drive.

TACKLING TO THE TOP

STAYING UPRIGHT

This season, the Indianapolis Colts have experienced injuries along the offensive line and have witnessed six different starting combinations in 11 games thus far. In a Week 8 contest at Tennessee, Seth Olsen (left guard) and Mike Tepper (right guard) each made their first career NFL starts. Considering the different combinations along the offensive front, the unit ranks eighth in the AFC and 15th in the NFL in sacks allowed with 23.

A WINNING COMBINATION

Jeff Saturday and Ryan Diem have started in 139 games together on the offensive line dating back to 2001 (Diem's first year). When the two are starting, the Colts have compiled a collective 98-41 record. On two occasions (2002 and 2010) both Saturday and Diem started all 16 contests in the season.

CLOSING ON 100

Defensive end Dwight Freeney recorded sack number 99.5 in a Week 12 meeting against the Carolina Panthers and is now a half sack shy of becoming the 26th player in NFL history to reach 100.0 for his career. The 10-year veteran is the franchise's all-time sack leader, ranks third in the NFL among active players and is currently 26th in league history. Freeney has now totaled quarterback takedowns in 74 of 145 career games and 65 of 125 starts. He owns 24 career multiple-sack games, has produced sacks against 48 different quarterbacks and has sacks against 26 of 31 NFL teams. Below is a look at Freeney's career sacks breakdown. BLOCK PARTY

In a Week 12 meeting against Carolina, the Panthers lined up for a field goal at the end of the first half, which was blocked by defensive end Jamaal Anderson. The play marked the first field goal block for the Colts since December 19, 2004 when Indianapolis blocked a Matt Stover attempt. The block is also the second of Anderson's career. His first came in 2008 in a road contest against the San Diego Chargers when Anderson was a member of the Atlanta Falcons.

STARTING POSITION

Colts punter Pat McAfee has had a good run in the 2011 campaign as he has totaled a 47.3 gross punting average on 64 kicks which ranks sixth in the AFC and ninth in the NFL. McAfee has dropped 15 punts inside the 20 yard-line assisting his net average of 39.3 yards. In a Week 5 meeting against Kansas City he registered five punts for a 55.4 average and a net average of 47.6 yards. His long punt of 64 yards in the third quarter is the second longest kick of his career.

FORCING THE ISSUE

The Colts have put forth an effort in trying to create turnovers through 11 games this season. During their Week 2 contest against the Browns, the defensive unit forced four fumbles. Including another forced fumble in the season opener at Houston, two against the Steelers in Week, one against Kansas City in Week 5 and one vs. Carolina in Week 12, Indianapolis has totaled nine this year, which ranks tied for fifth with two other teams in the AFC.

THE POINT OF NO RETURN

U

The 2011 campaign marks the first season the NFL moved kickoffs from the 30 to the 35-yard line. Through 12 weeks this season, all 32 teams have combined for 786 touchbacks, which has already topped last year's total of 416. Punter Pat McAfee, who also handles kickoff duty, ranks second in the league with a 71.8 touchback percentage. McAfee's season-high of five touchbacks have come on two occasions (vs. Kansas City and Pittsburgh).

CONSISTENCY IS KEY

U

Along with their run of nine consecutive postseason berths, the Colts are tied for the best regular season record from 1999-2011, 138-65, echoing the success of the team over the past decade. Indianapolis also has the third-best home winning percentage (.731) and ranks second in road winning percentage (.675) from 2002-11. Consistency and longevity have allowed Indianapolis to reach 10-plus victories for nine consecutive seasons (2002-10), trailing only the San Francisco 49ers' streak of 16 seasons.

CURRENT COLTS' STREAKS

- 91 Consecutive regular season games in which wide receiver Reggie Wayne has caught at least one pass.

MATHIS EARNS ED BLOCK COURAGE AWARD

Indianapolis Colts defensive end Robert Mathis has been selected by his teammates as the recipient of the 2011 Ed Block Courage Award. The award is an annual recognition for courageous play by an individual and Mathis is one of 32 National Football League players who earned the accolade. The players of each member club nominate an individual annually and those chosen are honored at a banquet in Baltimore, Maryland each March.

"Robert competes with dedication and inspiration on the gridiron and it's no surprise to me that his teammates have selected him as this year's recipient," said Colts Head Coach Jim Caldwell. "I am amazed at the level of intensity Robert plays with each week and he is a true professional in every way."

In seven games this season, Mathis has totaled 14 tackles (nine solo) and ranks second on the team with 3.5 sacks. Mathis has also contributed with one forced fumble, one fumble recovery and one pass defensed.

The award is named after Ed Block who was the head athletic trainer for the Baltimore Colts from 1954-1977. He served as trainer emeritus with the club until he passed away in 1983.

COLTS MEDIA SITE

The Indianapolis Colts have launched the team's new media website, media.colts.com. Media outlets can access up-to-date Colts information, including press releases, transcripts, daily notes, game releases and media schedules/availabilities. The site also offers access to the 2011 media guide as well as the ability to request season and game-by-game credentials.

The media site includes a link to Colts.com where additional material can be found such as updated rosters, feature stories, video and other content surrounding the team. Media.colts.com also allows access to Indianapolis' social media sites (Facebook and Twitter).

Upon arrival to the site, media members will be required to register to set up a username and password. Material from the 2011 season as well as achieved information will be readily accessible.

HOME IS WHERE THE HEART IS

The Indianapolis Colts have a welcomed sight in terms of the team's travel this season. With the total air distance that all teams have to travel during the regular season totaling 506,054 miles, the Colts rank second to last in the most amount of miles a team in the league has to travel for road contests (9,554) this season. Only the Tennessee has a shorter total route with 7,060 miles. Teams in the NFC West have the highest combined mileage for all divisions (95,346) as the San Francisco 49ers and Seattle Seahawks rank first and second on the list.

IT'S ALWAYS A CHALLENGE

U

The AFC and AFC South Division always present challenging match-ups for not only the Colts, but all teams across the league. This season is no different as the Colts hold the third hardest schedule. Last season, Indy's opponents compiled a 133-123 record for a .520 winning percentage. They play against nine teams who were .500 or better last year and six teams that reached the 2010 playoffs. Below is a look at the top teams in terms of strength of schedule.

QUARTERBACK CURTIS PAINTER

OFF TO A STRONG START

In his first career NFL start in a Week 4 contest at Tampa Bay, quarterback Curtis Painter set career highs in passing yards (281), touchdowns (two), and quarterback rating (99.4, now second best). His 281 passing yards marked the highest total for an Indianapolis quarterback this season, at the time, besting Kerry Collins' total of 197 at Houston (Week 1). In the second quarter, Painter found wide receiver Pierre Garcon for an 87-yard touchdown pass to give the Colts a 10-0 lead. The pass was the fifth longest in franchise history and the longest since Peyton Manning completed an 86-yard touchdown strike on November 18, 2001 against New Orleans. The touchdown also marked the longest scoring drive of the season totaling three plays for 98 yards. The drive started on the Indianapolis two-yard line.

PAINTER IN A HALF

In nine games this season (eight starts), quarterback Curtis Painter has completed 132-of-243 passes for 1,541 yards, six touchdowns and nine interceptions for a 66.6 quarterback rating. Against Kansas City (Week 5) in his second start of the season Painter finished the contest having completed a then-career-high 15 passes for 277 yards, two touchdowns and no interceptions for a 115.8 quarterback rating. His first half passing total of 237 yards against the Chiefs was the 11th-highest total for a Colts quarterback in a first half in franchise history. The 237 passing vards in the first half was also the ninth-highest gross passing yardage total in team annals. Painter led the Colts on a 12-play, 80yard drive on the team's first possession of the game. The series was capped by a Pierre Garcon six-yard touchdown reception. The drive marked the first occasion this season Indianapolis scored a touchdown on its opening offensive series. Painter led two other scoring drives in the first half, which included a 67-yard strike to Garcon in the second quarter and an 80-yard drive en route to a Delone Carter touchdown in the second quarter.

Quarterback Curtis Painter threw for 277 yards in his second start of the season against Kansas City.

TEAMING UP

Quarterback Curtis Painter teamed with wide receiver Pierre Garcon on 87 and 59-yard scoring passes against Tampa Bay in Week 4 and became the fifth Colts quarterback to have two 50-plus-yard scoring passes in the same game, and the first since Peyton Manning in 2004. Painter was the first quarterback since Cincinnati's Jeff Blake (1994) to have two from the 50-plus distance in a first career start, and his 87-yarder was the third-longest first career touchdown pass by an NFL quarterback (98, Charlie Batch; 89, Neil O'Donnell).

SUCCESS THROUGH THE AIR

U

Curtis Painter passed for 281 and 277 yards in his first two starts (at Tampa Bay in Week 4; vs. Kansas City in Week 5), which marked the only time in the club's Indianapolis era a quarterback has topped 250 passing yards in each of his first two career starts.

PURDUE PRESENCE

With his first career NFL start in Week 4, Curtis Painter became the third quarterback from Purdue University to start a game in the NFL this season. Painter joined Drew Brees of New Orleans and Kyle Orton of Denver in the category. The school has an impressive lineage of quarterbacks considering those who have left their mark in the NFL record books. Others include Jim Everett (34,837 passing yards and 203 TDs), Bob Griese (18,919 passing yards and 146 TDs), Gary Danielson (13,764 passing yards and 81 TDs), Mike Phipps (10,506 passing yards and 55 TDs) and Len Dawson (9,812 passing yards and 57 TDs). Purdue is located in West Lafayette, Indiana, about 65 miles northwest of Indianapolis.

CAREER MARKS

Wide receiver Reggie Wayne caught three passes for 24 yards against the Steelers in Week 3. On his second reception in the second quarter, Wayne recorded his 800th career catch and became the 24th receiver in NFL history to reach the milestone. The following week against Tampa Bay, Wayne totaled 59 yards and became the 24th player in league history to surpass 11,000plus career receiving yards.

CHASING MARVIN

Wide receiver Reggie Wayne is one of eight different Colt receivers to have posted at least one 1,000-yard receiving season in franchise history. With his seventh consecutive 1,000-yard campaign in 2010, Wayne ranks second only to Marvin Harrison (eight) in 1,000-yard seasons and can tie the team record by reaching the plateau this year. WHAT A CATCH

Reggie Wayne has tallied over 100 catches against AFC South Division rivals Houston and Jacksonville and remains 13 catches shy of topping 100 receptions against the Tennessee Titans. When Wayne accomplishes the feat, he will be one of eight NFL receivers who have totaled 100-plus career catches against three or more different opponents. Those who have reached the plateau include: Tim Brown (four), Chris Carter (four), Andre Reed (four), Art Monk (three), Jerry Rice (three), Rod Smith (three) and Hines Ward (three).

WIDE RECEIVER REGGIE WAYNE

PRODUCTION EQUALS WINS

Reggie Wayne has been one of the most productive wide receivers in franchise history. Since his rookie campaign in 2001, the Colts have reaped the benefits of Wayne's high level of play and the results have shown in the win/loss column. Below are Indianapolis' record totals when Wayne reaches a certain milestone in single games.

When Wayne Records 100-Plus Receiving Yards On 37 occasions, the Colts are 26-11

When Wayne Records Eight-Plus Receptions On 26 occasions, the Colts are 17-9

Wide receiver Reggie Wayne caught three touchdowns in a 34-31 victory at Denver in 2006.

TWO FOR '10

Reggie Wayne set two career bests in 2010, one of which also served as a franchise record. In a Week 13 game against Dallas, he set a new career-high with 200 receiving yards, which was only the fourth 200-plus yard contest by a Colts receiver. Wayne also set a personal best and team record with 15 receptions in a Week 4 meeting at Jacksonville. Nine weeks later, Wayne fell one catch shy of matching his season and career-high, totaling 14 against Dallas. Only two other receivers in Colts history have reached 14 catches in a single game (Marvin Harrison -12/26/99 & 11/17/02 and Dallas Clark - 11/8/09).

RUNNING IN STYLE

Running back Joseph Addai wasted no time showing Colts fans he was an asset in the backfield. The Houston native competed in all 16 games during his rookie season (2006) and accumulated 1,081 yards while adding seven touchdowns. The following season, Addai again topped the 1,000-yard mark (1,072) while posting a career-high 12 TDs. With back-to-back 1,000-yard campaigns in his first two years as a pro, Addai joins only Edgerrin James and Marshall Faulk as the only two Colts running backs to secure back-to-back 1,000-yard seasons as a pro.

DEFENSIVE END DWIGHT FREENEY

SACKING THE TOP

Colts defensive end Dwight Freeney, now in his 10th season, is the team's all-time leader in sacks with 99.5. He is the only player in franchise history with seven double-digit sack seasons (2002-05, 08-10), which includes the 10.0 he notched last year. Freeney is 0.5 sacks shy of 100.0 for his career as he looks to improve on his total of 24 multiple-sack games. In 2004, he posted 16 sacks to become the first Colts player to lead the NFL in the category. Freeney earned a Pro Bowl berth for his performance in '04 and has nabbed the honor on five other occasions ('03, '05, '08, '09, '10).

INDY TO HOST SUPER BOWL

For the first time in NFL history, America's biggest game will be hosted in Indianapolis. Super Bowl XLVI wil be showcased at Lucas Oil Stadium on Feb. 5, 2012.

The city was awarded the bid in May of 2008 and it will be tacked on to a long list of premier events the city has hosted in the past such as the 1982 National Sports Festival, the 1987 Pan Am Games, the Indianapolis 500, the Brickyard 400 and numerous NCAA Final Fours.

Indianapolis has invested more than $3 billion in three years in its hospitality industry, including a new stadium, an expanded convention center, a new airport, a 1,600-room hotel complex and major investments to existing downtown hotels.

The 2012 Indianapolis Super Bowl Host Committee was able to quickly secure 8,000 volunteers to help execute the Super Bowl surroundings, including the Super Bowl village. The village will transform downtown Indy into a 10-day, three-block interactive festival of football.

PANTHERS 27 COLTS 19

Sunday, November 27, 2011 Lucas Oil Stadium

The Indianapolis Colts lost their match-up with the Carolina Panthers at Lucas Oil Stadium by a 27-19 margin. The Colts fought back from an early 10-0 deficit with strong performances from wide receiver Reggie Wayne and running back Donald Brown. Brown totaled his highest rushing total of the season, carrying the ball 14 times for 80 yards and one touchdown while Wayne turned in a season-high in receiving yards (122) on five catches, including a 56-yard touchdown grab from quarterback Curtis Painter in the fourth quarter. Indianapolis was able to keep the score tied at 10 at halftime after defensive end Jamaal Anderson blocked a 45yard Olindo Mare field goal attempt on the last play of the second quarter. DeAngelo Williams found the end zone twice for Carolina in the second half. With the Colts driving late in the fourth quarter in an attempt to tie the game, a Painter pass was tipped an intercepted in the end zone which sealed the Panthers' win.

INDIANAPOLIS COLTS FEATURE CLIPS

McAfee's effort stands out on special teams By Phil Richards, Indy Star November 21, 2011 (two pages)

As a three-year NFL veteran, Pat McAfee knows something about the importance of hang time. Aiming high is standard procedure for the Indianapolis Colts punter.

"Ray Guy was before his time, but he's nowhere near the greatest of all time," McAfee said. "Shane Lechler is the best of all time, and if you want to be the greatest, you've got to beat him.

"That's what I'm trying to do."

Guy was punting's gold standard while playing for the Oakland/Los Angeles Raiders from 1973-86, but Lechler, also a Raider, is the man today. His 47.5-yard career average is 5 yards better than Guy's. It's the best in league history.

McAfee's 47.4-yard season average is a glimmer of light in a dismal Colts season but well short of Lechler's league-best 51.7. No matter. McAfee is launching more than punts. He has launched a mission: Be the best.

With the NFL idled by the owners lockout and no organized team activities last summer, he went to work with his kicking coach, Jamie Kohl. They shortened his approach, adjusted his release point and refined his drop. They worked on hanging the football, driving it and punting into the wind, with the wind and directionally.

They worked to harness the immense energy McAfee generates with his hips.

"He's very explosive and very coordinated. He has a 35-inch vertical jump," said Kohl, who operates punting/kicking camps around the country. "He's as talented a guy as there is walking.

"He can be as good as a guy like Lechler in years to come. Obviously he's got to prove that on game day . . . but Pat is as talented as anybody."

At West Virginia University, McAfee was a rollout, rugby-style punter. He kicked on the run, so he's still mastering a new technique, working to make it repeatable, consistent and efficient.

In the meantime, he is, to borrow Colts coach Jim Caldwell's term, "deadly."

In addition to ranking 10th in the NFL in punting average, McAfee is among the league's top kickoff specialists. He's also the Colts' sure-handed holder on field goals and points after touchdowns.

Of McAfee's 34 kickoffs, 25 have resulted in touchbacks. That's a 73.5-percent rate that ranks No. 4 in the NFL, and it's crucial for a team with coverage issues. The Colts have yielded a league-worst 32.7-yard average on the nine kicks opponents have returned.

"He's kicking the (air) out of the ball and he's probably our greatest weapon on special teams right now," Colts special teams captain Adam Vinatieri said.

McAfee also is the last line of defense and an able and eager tackler. His five special-teams tackles are exceeded by a single teammate; Philip Wheeler has six.

Colts middle linebacker Pat Angerer's 105 defensive tackles are 13 more than the NFL's second-best total. They qualify him as an expert.

"A lot of times on tape, you see the kickers just sit back and watch the play," Angerer said. "Pat goes down there and tackles the guy."

Angerer paused a moment. "I bet (McAfee) weighs more than me," he mused.

Sure enough. McAfee is listed at 220 pounds, but claims 235. Angerer is listed at 235 pounds but claims 225.

"At 235, I'm not afraid of anybody 'trucking' me," McAfee said. "And if you don't want to let your team down bad enough to let somebody score on a play they're not supposed to, you find yourself making plays you never thought you could."

Part of that is athleticism. McAfee is the Colts' emergency quarterback. He can run, throw, kick and hit.

Part of it is competitiveness. Kohl convened something of a punters convention on the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater campus a week before training camp. McAfee and four other Kohl pupils, New Orleans' Thomas Morstead, Green Bay's Tim Mashtay, the New York Jets' T.J. Conley and Houston's Brett Hartmann, worked together.

McAfee, Kohl said, refused to be beat. It's a quality with which Caldwell is completely familiar.

"He's one of those guys that oftentimes you might have to protect from himself," the coach said. "He'll punt all day if you let him."

Against All Odds By Phil Richards, Indy Star November 11, 2011 (three pages)

Robert Mathis is the Pro Bowl story you never should have heard, his 771/2 sacks the assault on NFL quarterbacks that never should have been launched.

His guidance counselor at McNair High School in Atlanta knew that.

"What are your plans?" he asked Mathis.

"I'm going to play in the NFL," replied Mathis, now a ninth-year veteran with the Indianapolis Colts.

"What's your Plan B?" the counselor probed, his concern genuine.

"Don't have one," Mathis retorted, irritation rising. "I'm going to play in the NFL."

Mathis was the runt of the family, the sixth of six. As a senior, he was 5-10, 195 pounds, "with sandbags in my pockets." He played guard and defensive end for the 3-7 Mustangs.

No one noticed. No college called. None sent a letter.

Ron Cooper, coach at tiny Alabama A&M, was watching video. He was looking at another McNair player when an opposing cornerback sliced in, intercepted a pass and took off for the end zone. Forty yards downfield, a smallish guard ran him down. Cooper reran the tape. And again.

Hmmm, he thought. The coach had one scholarship left to give. He gave it to Robert Mathis.

Huntsville, Ala., is neither Hollywood nor New York City. Still, it was an adventure for Mathis. He had never been outside I-285, Atlanta's outer belt. His world was his ZIP code.

Mathis adjusted. Cooper, now the secondary coach at LSU, put him at defensive end. Mathis set an NCAA Division I-AA record with 20 sacks in 12 games as a senior in 2002. He forced 10 fumbles and had 30 tackles for loss.

Again, almost no one noticed. Mathis assembled his own "bootleg" video. It was patchwork, camcorder highlights, game film, fuzzy, hazy, bumpy. He sent it to NFL teams. His agent, Hadley Engelhard, called scouts, called in favors, pleaded. Representatives of a dozen NFL teams showed up for a private workout at A&M.

On the second day of the draft, 2003, family and friends gathered at the Mathis apartment in College Park, Ga. Meat was on the grill. The plan was set: Watch the draft, then wait for a phone call. Mathis hoped to get a shot as an undrafted free agent.

His phone rang during the fifth round. Colts coach Tony Dungy was on the line.

"We about put a hole in the floor from everybody in the house jumping up and down," Mathis recalled.

From 2003-05, Mathis was the best special teams player the Colts had. He started a single game over those three seasons. He accumulated sacks in his spare time: 31/2 in 2003, 101/2 in '04 and 111/2 in '05.

Mostly he did what stamps him, distinguishes him, makes him. He did what he does on Wednesday and Sunday, preseason, regular season and postseason, 9-0 or 0-9. He worked. That's why Cooper still pulls out his highlight tape of Mathis at A&M.

"If you want to know what effort is," he tells players, "here's effort."

Dwight Freeney, the Colts' other Pro Bowl end and Mathis' teammate of nine seasons, knows the deal.

"It doesn't matter what situation you put him in or what you ask him to do," Freeney said, "he's going to do it 150 percent harder than anyone else.

"His effort is unbelievable."

It's unbelievable unless you know its roots.

Emma Lou Mathis was a single mom. Her husband, Robert's father, left the family when Robert was a toddler, died when Robert was at A&M. Emma worked as a domestic; she cleaned other people's houses.

"She raised six kids and she did it by herself," Mathis said. "I still ask her to this day: 'How on earth did you do that? How did you do it without getting any welfare?'

"She would get up early in the morning to pray. She would get up at, like, 4, get us up at 7, get us ready, send us off to school and go to work. She would work till 6 or 7. Next day, start all over again."

Do it. Do it right.

That's what he learned. That's why, in May 2010, he was back at Alabama A&M for graduation. Seven years after he left for the NFL, he had completed requirements for his bachelor's degree in physical education.

"I like to finish what I start," he explained.

Last Sunday, Mathis lined up across from 6-6, 329-pound Tyson Clabo, Atlanta's right tackle. This Sunday, Mathis, 6-0, 240 ("on a good day") will face Jacksonville's 6-5, 302-pound Guy Whimper.

No matter. All in a day's work, Emma might say.

Mathis was a choir boy at Holy Temple, his Baptist church back home in Atlanta. He believes the voice that "called him" to play in the NFL was not his own. He believes the hand that ran back the video in Cooper's office all those years ago was guided by another. He believes his summoning to Indianapolis was an act of providence.

"Coming from where I came from, you don't think stuff like this happens to people like me," he said. "I always wanted to be an NFL player. I wanted to buy my mom a house and a car and all the good stuff that a son is supposed to do, but there was always that doubt because nothing positive was happening to people around me.

"God blessed me."

Mathis believes he has five or six more good NFL seasons in him. He wants to spend them with the Colts but doesn't know. He is in the final year of a contract with which he is dissatisfied. He has chosen not to fuss publicly. He refuses to be "a cancer in the system."

Besides, there are other priorities. Mathis' fiancee, Brandi, is pregnant. Twin boys are due in February.

The names have been chosen. The grin spilled across Robert Nathan Mathis' face.

His sons will be Robert Nathan and Nathan Robert.

Mathis is on a mission now that involves far more than getting to the quarterback. He intends to be the father he never had, a good one.

"Listening to guys on the team, they know things like how to fix a car," he said. "Those are things you should have known as a boy and (I'm) still learning.

"There are things that are necessary and essential to life. A boy needs a man in his life to show him how to be a man. That's just the bottom line. That's very important to me."

Robert Nathan and Nathan Robert will be taught at least two things as they grow up: to dream and to work. Plan Bs are optional.

Colts' Carter works with football constantly By Phil Richards, Indy Star October 29, 2011 (two pages)

Delone Carter's preoccupation with football doesn't end with practice. Sitting around at home, he fiddles with a football. Watching TV, he flips a football. Wake up in the morning, start again.

He doesn't have far to reach.

"Sometimes I'll just be playing with it before I go to bed and it'll be right there in the morning," he said Thursday. "Happened today; I rolled over and it's right there."

The Indianapolis Colts pay Carter to run with the football, not sleep with it, but whatever works. They knew they were adding a viable short-yardage option when they took Carter in the fourth round of the April draft, but he is proving himself a complete running back.

His pass protection, a priority in the Colts system, is on the come.

"Sometimes those things aren't necessarily quantifiable by the naked eye, but those of us who know what he's supposed to be doing understand thoroughly," Colts coach Jim Caldwell said. "He's getting better."

Carter ripped and slammed for 89 yards and a touchdown on 10 carries at New Orleans. If Joseph Addai's hamstring injury keeps him out of Sunday's game at Tennessee, Carter will make his second start.

He got loose off tackle for 23 yards on one run against the Saints, then ran through a couple of tacklers, got to the sideline and burst 42 yards on another. The latter set up the Colts' lone touchdown, Carter's 2-yard run.

Carter isn't a blazer, but he ran a 4.54-second 40-yard dash at the NFL Scouting Combine and a 4.46 at a Syracuse University "pro day." He has, as he puts it, "a little bit of wiggle," but he's primarily a 5-9, 225-pound power back.

His purpose is to punish.

"Definitely, because I feel like that part of the game is what you need to wear down defenses, and that makes for more runs down the line," he said. "That's my style of football."

What isn't Carter's style of football is fumbling. He carried 231 times as a Syracuse senior and had zero fumbles.

His first as a professional came in the first quarter at New Orleans. Saints defensive tackle Tom Johnson hit him from behind and knocked out the ball. Carter didn't see him coming.

"No excuse," he said. "I should never let that thing go."

With 259 yards, Carter is the Colts' leading rusher seven games into his first NFL season, but he isn't satisfied.

"A coach is never going to say, 'OK, you're perfect,' " he said. "He's going to get on you every day to make you better. I feel like I need to do that to myself."

Carter will be running behind a patchwork line Sunday. No matter. Cut and go, pound and punish. That's his approach. Take it to the house, then take it to bed.

40 years of Irsays By Phil Richards, IndyStar October 21, 2011 (five pages)

Jim Irsay is the guitar-strumming, song-writing, free-thinking owner of the Indianapolis Colts. He wears suits loud enough to break the sound barrier. He's offbeat, even goofy at times. He's a serial, whimsical tweeter. He's easy to underestimate.

He's more.

"He understands how we get things done in the NFL," Commissioner Roger Goodell said. "I think he's incredibly well-respected by the ownership in the league. He's created a tremendous success with this franchise, both on and off the field.

"I think the vote to have the Super Bowl in Indianapolis is the best indication of the respect he has among the membership."

Irsay's journey began as a 12-year-old ball boy in 1972. That's when his tempestuous father, Robert, bought the Los Angeles Rams and swapped the franchise, lock, stock and jocks, with Carroll Rosenbloom for the Colts.

Over the years since, Jim has been almost continuously immersed in the personalities, operations, culture and traditions of the Colts and the NFL. He knew the late George Halas, Art Rooney Sr., Wellington Mara and Jack Kent Cooke, league pillars all, as a teenager. Irsay has toiled in every Colts department -- accounting, ticket sales, equipment, marketing and scouting -- worn every hat, and this season celebrates a family ownership anniversary.

"It's nice," he said, "to be in your 40th season and be 52."

Started at the bottom

Irsay's first training camp was in Golden, Colo., in 1972.

On game days, he greased the jerseys of offensive linemen like George Kunz and Elmer Collett with Vaseline to prevent defensive linemen from getting a grasp, then picked up sodden towels and jock straps after the final gun. On weekdays, he reported at 5:30 a.m. to launder them all.

He earned $5 a week for his efforts, at least until an older ball boy convinced him and his colleagues to strike for a $10 pay raise. He was fired, for the first of "1,000 times," but reinstated soon enough. There was no pay raise.

One day that late summer, as Irsay picked at the food on his tray at the training table, he felt a tap on his shoulder and heard the admonishment: "Son, move your a--."

Irsay turned. Hall of Fame quarterback John Unitas shot him a look, then sat down beside him.

By 1975, training camp had moved to Goucher College in Baltimore. Irsay lived in the dorm with the players. He was with them daylight to dark and beyond. He regularly sat late into the night in the room shared by wide receiver Glenn Doughty and Pro Bowl running back Lydell Mitchell. He listened to their banter. He learned about football. He learned about life.

The owner's kid had 50 big big brothers.

Volatile 25 years

It wasn't all idolatry and good times.

Robert Irsay had a violent temper and a crippling drinking problem. In his earlier, more clearheaded, days, he had built a fortune in construction and ventilation. He was a brilliant and ruthless businessman, but he knew nothing of running a football team.

He owned the Colts for 25 years. He had 14 head or interim head coaches.

Robert was a Chicago guy, and in 1986, nothing mattered more than the preseason game at Chicago's Soldier Field.

"All his cronies were there," Jim recalled. "It was a preseason game, but for him it was like the Super Bowl."

The vodka flowed. The Bears scored. The vodka flowed some more. The Bears scored some more. Robert heaved himself to his feet at halftime. He headed for the locker room in full fury.

Jim and assistant general manager Bob Terpening tried to stop him. They begged, cajoled, reasoned. Robert charged. A security guard stopped him at the locker room door. The owner put him up against the wall and barged into the locker room.

Jim waited outside, fearful, fretting, until his father burst back out the door and blew past him. Jim entered quietly. He approached coach Rod Dowhower timidly.

"Rod, my God, what happened?" he asked. "Did he fire you?"

The coach smiled.

"You know, it was a very interesting conversation," Dowhower said. "He told me he loved me like a son and he started crying a little and he left."

Son unlike the father

What Jim did in the early years was attempt to forestall, or clean up, his father's messes. Not all Robert's tantrums ended in such tranquility.

The Colts went 2-12 in 1974. Robert fired Howard Schnellenberger and hired Ted Marchibroda, who transformed the franchise. The Colts went 10-4 in 1975. Marchibroda was named the NFL's Coach of the Year.

That didn't save him after a 1976 preseason loss at Detroit. Robert stormed into the locker room and fired his coach. The players erupted. They fired threats, curses and chairs. They cleaned up and filed onto two buses, still smoldering.

Jim climbed onto each bus, in turn, in tears. He apologized for his father. He begged for the players' understanding.

"When he walked off those buses, there wasn't a guy on our team who didn't have tremendous respect for Jimmy," defensive tackle Joe Ehrmann said. "Here was a 17-year-old kid who had the moral courage to risk rejection and speak from his own conviction, his own truth."

Robert sobered up and Marchibroda returned to his job, but being Irsay's son meant always having a Plan B and C.

When the Colts drafted linebacker Cornelius Bennett in the first round of the 1987 draft, the elder Irsay wouldn't pay him, couldn't sign him. Jim found a way out. He swung a trade involving three teams, four players and six draft choices. The Buffalo Bills got Bennett. The Colts got Hall of Fame running back Eric Dickerson.

"When he wants something, he goes after it," said Pete Ward, who started full time with the Colts the same year Jim did, 1982, and has become the team's chief operating officer and the owner's right hand.

"He learned from his dad's mistakes."

He also made a few of his own.

Leaving Baltimore behind

Robert enraged Baltimore and greater Maryland when he moved the Colts to Indianapolis in 1984. He also anointed his son the team's 24-year-old general manager.

One of Jim's first acts, at the insistence of coach Frank Kush, was to sever ties with Baltimore, to "unretire" the jerseys of legendary players like Unitas, Gino Marchetti and Lenny Moore.

A conflagration of criticism was unleashed back on the East Coast. The heat was felt in the commissioner's office in New York. The phone rang in Jim's office, the former library of the team's makeshift Indianapolis headquarters, Fall Creek Elementary School.

"Pete Rozelle's on the phone," Jim's secretary announced.

"He must be calling my dad," Jim responded.

"No. He wants to talk to you."

Rozelle was a giant, an institution, a legend to Jim.

"Me?" he asked. "Really?"

Jim picked up the phone.

"Jimmy," the commissioner began, "I started as commissioner at 33 and you're 24 and your future is bright and I want to commend you on the great job you're doing and you're going to do.

"And I want to tell you I think it's such a smart decision to re-retire those jerseys because of the firestorm it's caused."

Irsay gulped.

"Yeah, you're right, commissioner," he agreed. "That is a good decision. We're going to re-retire them. It's definitely the way to go."

Irsay hung up.

"He played me like putty," he says today.

Learned from the best

Through it all, Jim watched and listened. He asked questions incessantly and of everyone. He pestered general manager Joe Thomas. He watched film with Marchibroda. He studied Rooney and Mara and Cooke and their management models and styles with the Super Bowl champion Pittsburgh Steelers, New York Giants and Washington Redskins, respectively.

"I knew the day would come when I would be the owner and I could do it my way," Irsay said.

That day came in 1997, when Robert died and Jim took over. By then, said Tony Dungy, Colts coach from 2002-08, Jim Irsay had evolved into a quirky but old-fashioned owner in the Rooney and Mara mold.

As a Pittsburgh rookie in 1977, Dungy recalls Rooney telling newcomers they were Steelers now, that they owed the team, its fans and its community their best effort and behavior.

"When we talked about me coming to the Colts in 2002, Jim talked at length about building community with the fans and the feeling that we were an Indianapolis team," recalled Dungy, who spent 10 years as player and coach with Rooney's Steelers and a training camp with Mara's Giants.

"We didn't have the history of the Steelers or Giants, the two or three generations of fans. We had to connect, and that was very important to him. I think he's very much a throwback to those guys."

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue recognized that commitment and developing potential as early as 1992. He appointed Irsay to the four-man committee that conceived the league's salary cap, a structure that has produced an era of unprecedented popularity and prosperity.

Irsay implemented Rooney's and Mara's management model. He hired Bill Polian as club president after the 1997 season and gave him relative autonomy.

The Colts went 3-13 in Jim's first year as owner and repeated with Polian aboard in 1998. Then began a 12-year run that produced the NFL's best regular-season record, 138-54, an unprecedented seven consecutive 12-victory seasons, 11 playoff appearances, two Super Bowls and the 2006 championship.

"He took the Colts from the bottom to the top," Ward said, "and in a very short time span."

Bump in the road

The string broke this season. Franchise quarterback Peyton Manning is out indefinitely after Sept. 8 neck surgery. The Colts are 0-6 and struggling. Irsay is undismayed.

"The way I look at it, everything is based around us having a chance to win it again, so you look forward to getting that first win, but at the same time, the future is bright," he said. "It's a real possibility to see Peyton come back and have three or four more great years like John Elway (who won Super Bowls the final two years of his career with the Denver Broncos).

"We just have to keep surrounding Peyton with the right type of players."

Irsay has fought his own demons, including a prescription pain medication addiction he said is well behind him.

He chairs the NFL's legislative committee and sits on its finance and Super Bowl advisory committees. Unlike his father, he invests heavily in the team; the Colts' player payroll has ranked among the NFL's top 10 every year since 1998 despite the team's small-market status.

Still, Irsay has no illusions. Billionaire owners with $720 million stadiums built almost exclusively with public money are eyed with skepticism regardless of how they operate or how much they win.

"It's like Art Rooney Sr.," he reasoned. "He was despised because he didn't win for so long. By the end of his life, he was the chief and he was beloved in that town.

"As an owner, you get booed sometimes by instinct. It's a tradition. You take it in stride."

Irsay gets tradition. He has spent the past 40 years working to build one.

McAfee not haunted by drink-and-swim incident By Bob Kravitz, Indy Star October 21, 2011 (three pages)

It is early Tuesday night, two days short of a year since Pat McAfee's early morning Canal swim and Nick Nolte-esque mug shot turned the Indianapolis Colts punter into a punch line around town and around the nation.

So where does the Colts' free spirit spend that inglorious semi-anniversary?

Right here at the Broad Ripple Tavern, the last bar he visited (he thinks) before he went for his swim and then got arrested for public intoxication after attempting to flag down a passing car. He wanted to call a cab, but . . . "At that point, my phone had some water damage," he said with a smile.

There's a reason McAfee is here, slowly nursing two beers in an hour and a half, talking about the worst moment of his life: It's because he won't hide. He won't cower. He won't stay at home every night and watch "CSI" until his eyeballs bleed.

He won't let one goofball moment -- the kind of silly moment a lot of 20-somethings experience without ending up on a police blotter and the evening news -- define him or diminish him.

One year later, he's able to laugh at himself, make fun of his little aquatic adventure and even produce T-shirts that read, "I Swam With Pat McAfee," the proceeds going to different charities every month.

One year later, he remains a fan favorite, an approachable, chatty guy without inhibition who engages people with his Twitter account, his online summer radio show and his good works in the community.

"I still go out once in a while," he said as people at the bar craned their necks and wondered, "Is that Pat McAfee?" "But now I'm smart about it. That's the difference."

He was asked what he learned from the whole bizarre experience. Besides, like, don't drink and swim.

"Look, I was nationally humiliated, I became the butt of jokes and yes, I put myself in that situation," he said. "But you know, there were people making fun of me who've done far worse things. I just reached a point where I stopped giving a damn what people who don't know me think of me.

"It was kind of the best thing that ever happened, because once you reach that point where you know you don't have to be anybody but yourself, and stop caring what people who don't know you think about you, you start figuring out life a little bit. I mean, the way my story was being covered, you would have thought I was some kind of murderer. I was a 23-year-old kid who drank too much."

If that sounds a little bit angry, that's because it is. He's still bitter about the way his story was covered in the local and national media. He still gets upset whenever The Indianapolis Star's website rolls out that old mug shot. But that's the double-edged sword of celebrity, a price that's paid in a world of instant information.

Here was the bottom line then, and now: He didn't get behind the wheel of a car drunk. He didn't engage in violent behavior. He didn't hurt a soul.

It was dumb. It was embarrassing. It was regrettable.

Live and learn. Or swim and learn. Whatever.

About that night:

There was drinking. Man, there was drinking. All up and down Broad Ripple Avenue, different bars, finally landing at the Broad Ripple Tavern. The bye week was at hand -- McAfee was supposed to go to the team's practice facility the next day, but didn't have to do much of anything -- and he hadn't gone out the entire season. Time to have some fun with the boys on a weeknight. Beers, shots, more shots . . .

Then it became a blur. To this day, McAfee doesn't remember a lot of it, doesn't remember how or why he ended up going for a dip in the Central Canal.

But he remembers the flashing police lights when they came upon him at 4:45 a.m. at the corner of Broad Ripple Avenue and North College.

"The first thing I thought was, 'Well, this is going to end up in the newspaper,' " McAfee said. "Then I thought, 'Well, I'm not doing anything too horribly wrong right now, so maybe they'll just let me go home.' Then they told me that public intoxication is punishable by going to jail. That's when I thought, this is no bueno."

No. No good at all.

After spending the rest of the night/morning at the Arrestee Processing Center, he was told he could make a phone call.

He called home to his parents in Plum, Pa., outside Pittsburgh.

"Dad, I messed up."

His father, Tim, responded grimly, "Yes, we know."

Life in an instant-information world.

"People in Oakland, California, already knew the whole story by that point," McAfee said.

After less than 20 seconds, the call was cut short. McAfee thought his father was so upset, he hung up on him. He later learned the call was cut off at the processing center, and his father was still on the line, yelling for access to his son.

At which point, Tim McAfee jumped in the car and started driving to Indianapolis.

McAfee later called his mother, Sally.

"I felt so bad for my mom, to go to the grocery story back home and have people say, 'What's wrong with your kid?' " he said. "But she didn't want to kill me. Neither of them did. They just wanted to make sure I was all right. That's when I knew it would be OK."

When he was released later that morning, he found a phalanx of reporters and cameramen waiting outside. He quickly made his way into the waiting car of his lawyer, Jim Voyles.

Shortly thereafter, he made the tough trip to the Colts' practice facility. By the time he arrived, practice was half over.

"My eyes were so puffy from crying all morning," he said. "There was nothing I could say. They knew. Everybody understood. All anybody worried about was making sure I was OK. Those guys are my brothers. I embarrassed them, I embarrassed the city, but they supported me."

He wasn't done paying a price, though. He was quickly pulled into Bill Polian's office and told he would be suspended for one game without pay. McAfee was angry, and let Polian know it.

"I respect him and appreciate what he's done for me, but I let him know I didn't appreciate the fine and the suspension when nobody else got in trouble for their issues," McAfee said, referring to the fact the Colts had three previous alcohol-related arrests that season. "We had some drunken driving stuff that got washed away; I got in trouble on a Tuesday during a bye week and I was suspended for a Monday night game. I let him know I wasn't happy."

He paused.

"Looking back now, though, I understand it. I do. I heard people say, 'Well, the Colts told the players the next guy who gets in trouble is going to pay the price.' That was never, ever said. But I guess it was kind of understood. I was the straw that broke the camel's back. I wasn't happy about it at the time, but I get that now."

For the next week, he stayed home, tried to avoid television and radio. He was angry with himself, angry with some of the coverage his story was generating. "Although I liked your video with the snorkel," he said. "That was classic."

Then, on the following Wednesday of game week, McAfee faced the public -- well, the media as a conduit to the public -- and handled it about as well as any athlete could hope to handle a tough moment. He apologized. Not one of those ridiculous, scripted apologies, like the Tiger Woods dog-and-pony show. He brought the media to his locker and spoke from the heart.

The hurt and regret were palpable.

"Nobody from the Colts put my speech together," McAfee said. "You look at some guys, they come in with this prepared speech, but I told our (public relations) guy, 'I want to do this. I want to take care of this.' I was actually excited for the chance."

He then entered the NFL's substance-abuse program as a first-time offender.

That has meant getting tested randomly for drugs and alcohol nine times a month. (He said he's allowed to drink moderately.) And he's seeing an adviser once a week, a 63-year-old local pastor he once resented, only to see him now as a confidant and friend.

He was asked if he thinks he had, or has, a problem with alcohol.

"You know, I thought at the time I was your average 23-year-old kid who just liked to have a good time," he said. "Looking back at some of the mistakes I made, and that situation (the night he was arrested), I must have had some kind of problem. I just knew something had to change. Now, I can have a beer or two and just stop."

So he goes out and lives his life. Sometimes that means having some bar idiot getting in his ear and saying, "Hey, Pat, where are we swimming tonight?" But he's gotten his good name back, his good reputation.

A year ago at this time, he embarrassed himself and was humiliated on a public stage. Today, he's having a Pro Bowl-quality season, slowly nursing a cold beer on a rainy Tuesday in Broad Ripple, not really caring what anybody makes of his presence near the jukebox.

More than a spin cycle Mike Chappell, Indy Star October 14, 2011 (three pages)

So many are a blur in Dwight Freeney's mind. One sack after another after another.

They're like their creator. He can be a vapor trail at the snap of the football, empty air to an offensive tackle left to deal with the Indianapolis Colts' whirling dervish of a defensive end bearing down on the next quarterback.

Ask Freeney about the first of his 981/2 career sacks and his eyes widen as he flips through the Rolodex in his mind.

Wasn't it against the Tennessee Titans and Steve McNair, he wondered? Nope. Houston Texans and David Carr.

How about the first sack after returning from Lisfranc surgery on his left foot that forced him to miss the final six games of 2007? Easy. Season opener, '08.

"Another Jacksonville moment," Freeney said confidently. "(David) Garrard was the quarterback. Got him by the waist and slammed him on his head."

Uh, nope. Yes, the '08 season opener. But it was the Chicago Bears, and Kyle Orton.

Freeney doesn't sack and take names. He and Reggie Wayne are cut from the same cloth. The Colts' fivetime Pro Bowl receiver has 809 career receptions.

Wayne's first?

"Couldn't tell you," he said.

Freeney just sacks quarterbacks, generically and recurrently. Over the past decade, no player has more sacks or forced fumbles (43). The latter is a byproduct of Freeney patterning the sack-strip part of his game after his boyhood hero, New York Giants Hall of Fame linebacker Lawrence Taylor.

Already the Colts' career sack leader and third in the NFL among active players, Freeney is closing in on an elite fraternity. He's poised to become just the 26th player in league history with 100, a step he could take Sunday when the Colts visit the Cincinnati Bengals.

"It means a lot to me because it's someplace where a lot of guys haven't been and it's a pretty number," Freeney said. "It's a three-digit (number) and 100 anything is good, almost, other than 100 strikeouts or 100 missed tackles.

"Five hundred home runs for baseball, you've got 20-something guys that are on that list. That is kind of comparable with the sacks."

More than a "spinner"

Mention Freeney's name and you'll often elicit the same reaction: "Sure, the guy with the unearthly spin move."

Yes, but there's so much more.

"I've got bull rush, I've got spin move, I've got fake-bulls, I've got fake-bull-spin, I've got fake-spin," Freeney said. "I've got chops, I've got chop-hoops."

Chops?

"Speed rush from the outside," he explained. "Trying to chop (the blocker's) hands down as you come around."

Freeney's mind settled on one of his personal favorites, which naturally lacked some specifics. It also lacked the desired results.

"One year versus Jacksonville it was second or third down," he said. "(Byron) Leftwich was quarterback. (Khalif) Barnes or (Ephraim) Salaam was the left tackle. I hit him with a real good bull rush. Next time I came, I faked the bull and went to the spin.

"Basically he was lying on his face. Made him completely miss and (I) hit the quarterback. It wasn't a sack; the ball was gone. Usually my best moves are nonsacks, unfortunately."

The key to Freeney maximizing his varied arsenal is making it difficult for an offensive tackle to know what's coming.

"It's kind of like how Marvin Harrison used to run every route the same," he said. "You didn't know if he was breaking out, breaking in or going to run past you. It all looked the same.

"I try to get it to where you don't know whether I'm going inside, you don't know if I'm going outside."

Coach Jim Caldwell began working closely with quarterback Peyton Manning and former offensive coordinator Tom Moore in 2002. There is comfort in knowing the Colts' offensive plan hasn't had to incorporate ways to fend off Freeney and Robert Mathis, his bookend pass-rush threat.

Freeney, Caldwell said, "because of the fact (he) blends power, speed, finesse and tenacity all in one package, he presents some interesting problems for you."

Those problems are a fingertip away for Marvin Lewis. The Bengals coach has a video cut-up featuring Freeney and Mathis. It's alternately entertaining, instructional and distressing.

"I have hundreds of those (highlights)," Lewis said, laughing. "So when I have nothing to do, I will sit and just go through their defense and cut clips of them rushing the passer and chasing the ball down the field to show our young ends.

"I have Freeney-Mathis tapes everywhere. I have (John) Teerlinck (defensive line coach) tapes."

But, oh, those spins

Caldwell admittedly is biased. He's a Freeney guy.

"He's an elite player -- plays very, very hard," Caldwell said. "People, I think, really don't give him enough credit in the running game, how he chases plays down from behind.

"He's not that big, long 6-foot-5 guy, but Dwight Freeney has that explosiveness in his lower body and hips, and he just uses it and uses it well."

But for all of Freeney's power, strength and tenacity, discussion invariably returns to his spin move. More pass rushers have added Freeney's signature move to their own repertoire -- "Robert has his own unique style; he's pretty good at it," Freeney said -- and they might be surprised to learn he isn't certain of its origin.

"Started back in the day," he said. "Maybe it started from a baseline move on the basketball court. You know, you go into the post and you spin on a guy.

"I think it probably came from that. For the most part, I figured I start at Point A and I've got to get to Point B. Doesn't matter how I get there."

Only how often.

Colts CB Kevin Thomas restarts his career Mike Chappell, Indy Star August 18, 2011 (two pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. -- Kevin Thomas was one of the new kids on the block but figured he had everything figured out.

He was a wiry, athletic cornerback who developed into a stellar player at USC, primarily because of his God-given talents.

"I was just blessed and a good football player and pretty much just skated my way through competition and always excelled," Thomas said during a recent break from training camp at Anderson University.

Then, a week after the Indianapolis Colts selected him in the third round of the 2010 draft, Thomas was introduced to the dark side of the business.

Painfully so.

With about 35 minutes remaining in the team's final rookie minicamp session, Thomas, bouncing around as rookies tend to do, tore the anterior cruciate ligament in his right knee. His first NFL season was over.

"I knew it was serious," Thomas said. "I had never had that feeling in my leg before."

Months of strenuous rehabilitation have brought Thomas back to where he believes he belongs and where the Colts envisioned when they drafted him. He's in the cornerback mix, working as Jacob Lacey's backup on the left side.

"I don't look at it that a spot's going to be given to me," Thomas said. "I'm just trying to fit into that role and be the type of player they want me to be."

The early reviews are encouraging. Thomas played extensively in last Saturday's preseason opener at St. Louis and was credited with five tackles.

Starting cornerback Jerraud Powers has noticed Thomas' quick progression through his first NFL training camp.

"If you saw him from day one of camp to right now, it's been great progress," Powers said. "First day, his eyes were wide open, like, 'Wow, we're moving so fast.'

"Then you see him (at St. Louis) and even though he made some mistakes out there, he was flying around and hitting. You could see his potential."

Powers paused, then continued his critique.

"He's going to be a phenomenal player," he said. "He's 6-1, a tall cornerback with great feet, great hips and great cover skills."

Thomas caught the eye of coach Jim Caldwell early.

"The first day he was out there, we noticed he was moving extremely well," he said.

"He's got speed and he's athletic, a rangy guy. We want to see how he develops, but he certainly has skill."

Thomas spent the past 15 months recovering from the injury. Not only did he work tirelessly with the medical staff during the 2010 season, he was in the locker room, around teammates.

There's no overstating the value of a young player just being around.

"I think it's very important just in terms of the overall culture," Caldwell said.

"It's not always what you do, but how you do them. I know he watched and listened."

Added Powers: "He saw the drift. Now he's going through it for the first time as a rookie. He's still a rookie."

Spending so much time around the team opened Thomas' eyes to what it takes to play at the highest level. He watched as Powers, Lacey, ex-Colt Kelvin Hayden and others prepared.

Last year, Thomas said, "humbled me as far as how I should prepare and live my life according to the NFL. You (don't) have a clue once you first get here.

"I saw how they operated and I pretty much saw how our star players' bodies were built. I could see what muscles they focused on -- the glutes, the quads, the calves, the back muscles, the neck muscles, pretty much all the lower body."

Thomas is confident he has done the necessary preparation.

"I feel like my game's coming together," he said. "I have things to work on, but I feel good."

Colts lineman 'Air Joe' remains level-headed By Phillip B. Wilson, Indy Star August 17, 2011 (two pages)

Just before Joe Reitz came home to join the Indianapolis Colts last season, the former Hamilton Southeastern High School two-sport star showed why football became his profession instead of basketball.

The offensive lineman was playing for Baltimore in a preseason game. Handed the football to celebrate a touchdown, the 6-7, 320-pound blocker rose up with his left hand to "dunk" it, only to get rejected by the goal-post crossbar.

It made ESPN's "Not Top 10" list and fans found the unflattering footage on the Internet. When the Colts claimed Reitz off waivers in early September a year ago, one of the first questions he faced in the offensive-line meeting room pertained to his dunk attempt.

"(Center) Jeff Saturday came up with the nickname 'Air Joe,' " Reitz said after a recent training-camp practice at Anderson University. "A lot of the older guys haven't let me forget I'm 'Air Joe.' "

This preseason, Reitz's family is walking on air as he competes for a starting position at left guard. He started Saturday's preseason opener at St. Louis and is alternating on the first team with second-year pro Jacques McClendon.

"You don't want to get too high or too low," said his father, Dave Reitz, 52, Fishers. "Joe has used that analogy. He's staying very focused.

"But the opportunity to be in your home city with your hometown team and getting a chance to play, it's been surreal."

His mother, Jane, as well as two sisters and one brother, share the joy with many friends who have followed his career.

"We're so excited he's been able to move back home," said Jane Reitz, 52.

It's beyond what Joe Reitz envisioned for himself. An all-state football player and Indianapolis Star Indiana All-Star in basketball at HSE, he chose basketball and didn't play football at Western Michigan. He departed from Kalamazoo, Mich., as the Broncos' third-leading career scorer and rebounder.

But he also knew his future wasn't the NBA.

"There's not a big market for 6-7 centers who can't jump very high, as people . . . saw from my goal-post incident," Reitz said. "The whole ride I've had, from being able to start four years in college basketball to now, to have a chance to be in the NFL, it's been beyond my wildest dream."

Undrafted out of college, Reitz joined the Ravens, who thought he could be a tight end but switched him to the offensive line and started bulking him up from his 250-pound college weight. After two seasons on Baltimore's practice squad -- the second cut short by injury -- he was let go at the outset of 2010, signed with Miami, then was cut three days later and claimed by the Colts.

Reitz, 24, spent almost all of last season on the Colts' practice squad and was inactive for his only game on the roster. But he was liked from day one.

"He's a great, great guy," said Saturday, a five-time Pro Bowl center in his 13th season. "His wife, Jill, is a super lady. They're just good people. When you get teammates like that, you appreciate them. I've been around the game a long time and he's a class act all the way around.

"He can laugh about the whole 'Air Joe' thing; he doesn't take himself too seriously. When he's on the field, he gives his best and he's got a bright future."

Coach Jim Caldwell makes it sound like there's a place for Reitz on the active roster.

"He's coming along very well," Caldwell said. "He's caught on quickly. He's a big, strong, athletic guy. Every single day you see him do something a little bit better."

He will have a large cheering section for Friday's preseason game against Washington at Lucas Oil Stadium. His parents and three siblings will be joined by a couple of friends traveling long distances. Then there are former high school friends and coaches.

"We're loving it," Jane Reitz said, "and keeping our fingers crossed."

Added Dave Reitz, "Everybody wants 'Air Joe' to succeed."

This Polian isn't a mere carbon copy By Bob Kravitz, Indy Star August 17, 2011 (two pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. If Chris Polian runs the Indianapolis Colts as well as his father has all these years, we won't really notice there has been a changing of the guard atop the team's organizational chart.

If Polian the Younger follows the blueprint established by Bill Polian, if he sticks by the same core philosophies and beliefs, Chris' Colts will look and play a whole lot like Bill's Colts.

Which is what the new man in charge, Chris Polian, largely plans to do. He may not be his father, but he's his father's son. And his father merely ranks as the greatest front-office football architect who ever lived.

"I think you've got to be yourself," Chris Polian, the Colts' general manager, said after the Tuesday morning practice. "You can't be somebody you aren't. You always try to learn and grow from your own mistakes and watching things. One of the things (team owner) Mr. (Jim) Irsay told me was, 'Do it how you want to do it, but learn the good and the bad from what you've been around.'

"But the system and the process is always going to be rooted in the same foundation. It'll be tweaked on a year-to-year basis, but we'll always understand the wheel is round and we're not going to re-invent the wheel."

Doesn't that make sense? Smart people know when change is needed, but more, they know when it's not needed. Chris Polian is not in any rush to put his unique imprint on this organization, at least not in the near term.

He has made some subtle adjustments, done some front-office and coaching-staff tweaking, and that will continue as circumstances change from year to year. He hasn't made any loud or audacious changes, not at this early juncture.

They're the same old Colts -- and that's a good thing.

Still maintaining the same draft structure and philosophy that has served them so well this past decade.

Still signing and keeping their own free agents.

Still resisting the temptation to take the plunge into big-dollar free agency. (Jamaal Anderson, Tommie Harris and Ernie Sims are all low-risk, low-budget pick-ups.)

Still doing all the things that produced two Super Bowl appearances, one Super Bowl title, seven straight 12-plus win seasons and an injury-marred 10-win season last year.

I asked him Tuesday what he has taken from his father, who is now the team's vice chairman.

He talked about believing in the process -- a general team-building process -- that worked so well for his father in Buffalo, then Carolina, then here.

"The one thing you want out of the process is to lend you perspective and patience -- which this business doesn't lend itself to necessarily," he said. "Being process-oriented also helps you remove the emotion sometimes, which is vitally important. Then if you build into that process the right checks and balances, different opinions, people playing devil's advocate, that should help you make the right decisions."

I also asked him if, and how, he will be different than his father.

He had no interest in answering that one.

Already, though, there is a sense this will be a somewhat kinder, gentler franchise under Chris Polian -although it's still early, and I haven't written anything yet to enrage him. It's no secret, Bill Polian had absolutely no use for the media, and especially the local media. But with Chris so far, the team has been more media-friendly and less contentious.

That's not a reflection of Craig Kelley, the longtime media relations man who was reassigned this year; he was simply doing what he was told by a demanding and often difficult boss. It's just to say that the new media-relations staff, which has been very accommodating, has been blessed to work for a Polian who seems to have a more enlightened and modern view of the media's role.

What does that mean for fans who care only about wins and losses?

Absolutely nothing.

But it rates as an early sign that as much as it will be business as usual with the Colts, there will be some changes.

In many ways, the Bill-to-Chris transition is not very different than the Tony Dungy-to-Jim Caldwell change. The third-year coach is more similar to Dungy than he is different, and he's more than happy to embrace those similarities.

"Chris is his own man," Caldwell said. "He has his own personality, the way he deals with issues. Obviously there are lots of similarities (to Bill), but it's akin to what happened with Tony and I. We have the same system, the same core beliefs in what we do, but there are little things that are different."

Chris Polian is coming along at a particularly challenging moment in the franchise's history. The window of opportunity truly is closing on this team. Quarterback Peyton Manning just signed a contract for what figures to be his final five years, and mainstays Jeff Saturday, Ryan Diem, Reggie Wayne and Robert Mathis are all in the final year of their deals.

He needs to build for now, to get this team to another Super Bowl. He needs to build a team that will be somewhat less reliant on Manning as he enters his late 30s, a team that can win with a running game and defense. And -- gasp -- he eventually needs to find Manning's successor when the dreaded day finally comes.

He also is taking over at the back end of a lockout, which will slow rookie development and impede everyone's efforts to build depth with younger players.

For now, though, he is largely sticking to the script. This team is still built around Manning and nine other highly-paid stars who account for the vast majority of the payroll.

"For now, in terms of seeing a dramatic philosophical change, the train is too far down the tracks," he said.

This quiet changing-of-the-guard has been in the works for years. Bill Polian has incrementally increased Chris' workload and responsibilities. This year, Bill has stepped away some, hanging around simply to help with the transition, work with the organization through the post-lockout period, and to provide his son and his staff with a sounding board.

What will Polian the Elder's role be?

"Whatever he wants to do," Chris said with a smile. "Whenever he wants to do it." The kid has learned from the best. And he's smart enough to know, the wheel is still round.

Colts' Saturday stood up for health of fellow players By Tom Pedulla, USA TODAY August 15, 2011 (two pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. — For Indianapolis Colts center Jeff Saturday, who was portrayed by both sides as playing a key role in reaching a collective bargaining agreement, it was never about the money.

He traveled the country and immersed himself in day after day of painstaking negotiations because he was determined to do his part to protect the bodies and minds of current and future NFL players.

"I want players to walk away healthy from this game," he says. "I don't want them to be crippled. I don't want them to have brain issues. I want them to be productive in society once they leave."

According to Saturday, his recent service on the executive committee of the NFL Players Association made him keenly aware of the devastating toll the game was taking.

"I have had many men say, 'Look at me. This is a serious issue. This is what I'm going through. This is what my family is going through," he says. "Those were very important factors we did not miss.

"We have young men who play this game who cannot foresee the future, so we need these men to tell us what it's like. At the end of the day, we have to protect the players' long-term health of their bodies and minds, and money doesn't protect them from that.

"Money can help fix some issues, but it can't fix them all."

Given that the sport generated more than $9billion in revenue last season and projections for future growth are excellent, it was always clear there would be enough revenue to satisfy both parties. The matter of shielding those who have no assurance they will walk off the field on any given day was far more complex.

"Nobody leaves this game uninjured. It's impossible," Saturday says. "Everybody is leaving with something."

The issue was how to keep that to a minimum. A sore ankle or knee is one thing. Dementia is another.

In providing critical input to NFLPA executive director DeMaurice Smith, Saturday reflected on the years he spent in Indianapolis. He graduated from the University of North Carolina with a business degree and joined the Colts as an undrafted rookie in 1999. He soon became a mainstay on the offensive line.

With superb quarterback Peyton Manning directing the offense, Tony Dungy produced a 92-33 record from 2002 to 2008 punctuated by a Super Bowl triumph to close the 2006 season. Dungy was known for limiting the physical demands on players during training camp with an eye toward the long haul.

His successor, Jim Caldwell, is achieving strong results with the same philosophy. Caldwell took Indianapolis to the Super Bowl in his first season. He guided the Colts to the playoffs again last year. The AFC South champions fashioned a 10-6 mark before they were eliminated by the visiting New York Jets 17-16 in the divisional playoffs. Caldwell says of the less-is-more approach, "That is being prudent because this game is so physical. You have to take that into account."

As key elements of the new 10-year labor agreement, offseason workouts were reduced. Grueling two-aday practices during training camp are history. Teams are limited to 14 padded practices during the regular season.

Although successful counterparts such as Bill Belichick relied heavily on two-a-day practices during camp as part of his formula for success with the New England Patriots, Caldwell thinks they are not essential to developing hard-nosed, physical players.

"If you look at the teams Tony coached over the years, they were the toughest teams going," says Caldwell, a former top assistant to Dungy. "They were very physical and very capable teams. In November and December, when you had to make a move and you had to be playing well, his teams were always playing well."

Patriots owner Robert Kraft credits Saturday with the heavily debated elimination of two-a-days, noting how adamant he was on that issue.

"It's hard to like the center for Peyton Manning," Kraft says with a nod to one of the AFC's most contentious rivalries. "I mean, I really like the guy."

After disappointing rookie year, DE Hughes ready for fresh start After rough rookie season, defensive end driven by 2nd chance and that elusive 1st sack Phillip B. Wilson, Indy Star August 10, 2011 (two pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. – Jerry Hughes always has had a burst. His NFL rookie year, though, couldn't end fast enough.

Hughes managed just six tackles in a dozen games. The Indianapolis Colts made the 2010 first-round pick a healthy scratch for four games. And his best chance at a sack, with two hands on Cincinnati's Carson Palmer, ended with the passer somehow wriggling free.

Fans grumbled about a high draft pick failing to contribute immediately. Hughes said all the right things, about how he had so much to learn and that the NFL was a process. But, eventually, the situation ate at the defensive end.

"That kind of caught up to me," Hughes said after a recent training-camp practice at Anderson University. "You can't really think about where I was picked. You can't let people tell you what you're supposed to do. You know what you need to do and you know how to get there."

Colts coach Jim Caldwell has alluded to how Saturday night's preseason opener at St. Louis will be an opportunity for younger players to get some serious playing time. That definitely includes Hughes.

Not that a few camp practices and drills are anything more than modestly encouraging, but Hughes has looked faster so far. He had Curtis Painter for a sack in the first night practice -- it likely would have been if defenders were allowed to tackle. Hughes has won his share of one-on-one battles in the pass-rush/pass-block drill.

Question is, can he combine enough moves with the physicality needed to withstand a blocker's shoves? One moment in a drill, Hughes is speeding around the end to get to where the passer would be. The next, he is gobbled up on an attempted bull rush.

Saturday should offer a barometer on where Hughes is.

"Jerry Hughes is really coming along," Caldwell said. "He's been performing extremely well thus far. He's more comfortable with what we do, and his effort's been great."

The old adage is a player progresses the most from his first season to the second.

"They get a lot more familiar with the system, so therefore they don't have to think about it as much," Caldwell said. "They can let themselves go. They don't have to worry about necessarily every little step that they take."

Caldwell then snapped his fingers and said, "It just clicks."

The Colts' Pro Bowl pass-rushing tandem of Dwight Freeney and Robert Mathis has worked with Hughes from the beginning. They have been on him about learning the spin move.

"This is life in the NFL. You'll have your ups and downs," Freeney said. "For some guys, maybe it's a week. Some guys, it's a month."

For Hughes, he hopes it was but a year.

"You've just got to keep grinding," Freeney said.

Nobody was more frustrated by the Palmer miss than Hughes. But Freeney, the Colts' all-time sack leader with 94 in nine years, doesn't recall whom he sacked the first time.

"I think it was against Tennessee. It might have been against (Steve) McNair," he said.

Actually, it was at Houston against David Carr in Freeney's third career game. McNair wasn't a bad guess, though. Freeney sacked Carr and McNair the most at seven times apiece.

Mathis said he sees a change in what has been a more-excited Hughes.

"In the end, this is the NFL and we're all pros," Mathis said. "Everybody was that guy in college. Despite draft placement, you've got to come in and show what you've got. You just can't get by on the past. He's doing that now."

Freeney and Mathis continually remind Hughes to work a move and always go full speed.

Hughes eagerly awaits his next chance to get that first sack. If or when it happens, he rationalizes it will be long overdue.

"No celebration needed," he said. "Take it, and keep on moving to the next one."

Spectators no more, Addai, other vets happy to return to fray By Mike Chappell - Indy Star August 6, 2011 (two pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. -- Who could blame Joseph Addai for sporting a grin as he considered pulling on the pads and hitting the practice field with more than a dozen veterans for the first time Friday afternoon? It beat the alternative. His contract had expired at the end of the 2010 season.

"Yeah, I've been looking forward to this day for a long time," the Indianapolis Colts veteran running back said, smiling broadly. "Remember, three weeks ago I was unemployed. I'm kind of blessed to be back here and employed."

Addai had plenty of company.

While the Colts have been on the Anderson University practice fields since Monday, several players have been forced to wait and watch. Veterans who signed new or restricted contracts were prohibited from practicing until the new collective bargaining agreement was ratified. That occurred Thursday afternoon. Now, the gang's all here, except for injured quarterback Peyton Manning (neck) and wide receiver Blair White (back). Each remains on the physically unable to perform list.

Among returnees finally getting to work out Friday were safety Melvin Bullitt, offensive tackle Ryan Diem, guard Kyle DeVan, kicker Adam Vinatieri and defensive linemen Eric Foster and Antonio Johnson. The three recently signed veterans -- defensive tackle Tommie Harris, linebacker Ernie Sims and defensive end Jamaal Anderson -- also had their first camp exposure Friday.

Bullitt said the spectator's role he had been forced to endure was testing his patience.

"When they told us we couldn't practice until Friday, at first I got a little smile," he said. "Then after the first 20 minutes, you're like, 'Man, this is boring just being out here watching.' "

Added Diem: "Missing all summer, we didn't have a chance to get out there and do work. This is our time now and we've got to take advantage of it. We're hoping Peyton can get out there soon, but in the meantime, we'll get tuned up."

Addai was one of the bigger question marks -- would he be re-signed? -- as the lockout persisted and the offseason unfolded. The Colts' 2006 first-round draft pick spent most of the offseason in Baton Rouge, La. He divided his time between working out and fretting.

"I always think the worst, no matter what," Addai said.

Manning made it clear re-signing Addai was one of his priorities when he agreed to accept less than the Colts were offering. Although he has battled injuries during his five-year career, Addai is the total package: runner, receiver, blocker in pass protection. He led the team in rushing in each of his first four seasons before falling two yards shy of Donald Brown's team-high 497 yards last season. Addai's 4,020 career yards rank No. 8 in club history.

"He's a superb competitor and one that I think without question has an impact on our team because he knows his craft to a 'T,' " coach Jim Caldwell said. "He is an expert at it. He is a difference maker."

However, the Colts do not have a history of signing their feature running backs to a second contract. Marshall Faulk, who will be inducted into the Pro Football Hall of Fame today, didn't get one. Neither did Edgerrin James. After James' six-year rookie contract expired in 2004, the team retained him with the one-year franchise tag. "I thought about that my rookie year: 'When my contract is up, I probably won't be here,' " Addai said. "But it worked out for me."

Shortly after Manning signed his five-year, $90 million contract, Addai re-upped with a three-year, $14 million deal.

It had appeared the Colts were moving away from Addai when they used the 27th overall pick in the 2009 draft on Brown. But Brown, an inconsistent pass protector, has not established himself as a reliable feature back. As a result, Addai's return was a necessity.

He kept in contact with Manning throughout the offseason.

"I was waiting to see what they were going to do with me," Addai said. "Me and Peyton were talking and he was telling what he was thinking. It worked out for both of us.

Colts' Saturday was integral in preserving NFL Sundays By Don Banks - Sports Illustrated August 4, 2011 (three pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. -- August has arrived, the NFL's back in the business of playing football, and all's well in the world again. Here in the Indianapolis Colts training camp, it's worth noting that Jeff Saturday might have had as much to do with that happy development as anyone involved in the whole months-long CBA ordeal.

I can't help but think no matter what the veteran Colts center accomplishes in this 2011 season, his 13th in the NFL, Saturday likely has already done his best and most important work of the year. On this Thursday, of all days, with the NFL's new collective bargaining agreement finally slated to be buttoned up and put to bed for the next 10 years (praise be!), Saturday's pivotal role in ensuring football labor peace is a story that's well-timed and needs telling.

Simply put, Saturday, the Colts' well-respected player rep, was consistently viewed as one of the foremost voices of reason in the long and often contentious labor negotiations. While fiercely and passionately representing the cause and concerns of the players, he also earned and held the respect of the owners and league executives on the other side of the table, who often reached out to him to help steady things when the talks reached one of its many various boiling points or impasses. He was that rare actor in this fight who could speak to both sides and help calm the situation and bridge their differences, rather than divide and inflame.

"During the whole process, [NFL commissioner] Roger [Goodell] told me several times, he said if it wasn't for Jeff, sometimes I don't know where we'd be," Colts owner Jim Irsay said Wednesday night, following his team's first padded practice of the preseason. "Roger had a great relationship with Jeff, and he really did play a huge role in getting this thing done."

League sources in the NFL office told me Thursday that Saturday was instrumental in finding common ground between two sides that often couldn't agree on the most basic of realities. "The universal impression of Jeff was that he was the glue who helped keep things together, and he really brought people together throughout the course of the negotiations," one league source said. "Roger [Goodell] trusts him implicitly, and while he was a very strong advocate for the players, his personality and nature is to help people come together."

As one of the two team player reps who stuck with the long and arduous negotiations from acrimonious start to frantic finish -- Ravens cornerback Dominique Foxworth was the other -- Saturday gained credibility and respect for his commitment level and his grasp of the nitty-gritty details of the complicated deal. We've all seen so much TV footage in recent months of Saturday filing out of another labor negotiation session that I almost didn't recognize him Wednesday when I saw him in a football setting once again, sporting his familiar No. 63 jersey.

I had to ask him if he really knew what he was signing up for when he first agreed to take part in the negotiations, an open-ended commitment that wound up stretching into weeks and months?

"Oh, absolutely not. No chance," Saturday said, with a laugh. "Fox [Foxworth] made fun of me all the time, because I was sporting the same jacket time and time again. I was down in Florida with my wife and kids, and I don't have any jackets or suits in Florida. So I got that jacket, a couple of button-up shirts and some jeans, and that was my wardrobe the whole time. People made fun of me, but that's all I had. I wasn't going back to Indy to get clothes. I went with what I had. Fox told me I should retire that jacket when an agreement got signed, so it's put up in the closet for good."

Sartorial limitations aside, Saturday grew into such a role of leadership within the negotiations that he virtually couldn't have excused himself from the talks, even if he wanted to at times. Dallas Cowboys owner Jerry Jones grew to trust Saturday so much that he not once, but twice let Saturday use his corporate jet to fly home to Amelia Island, Fla., during breaks from negotiations. Jones and Saturday actually rode together on the plane coming from a negotiation session in Minnesota in June, with Jones headed for a vacation home in Destin, Fla. And during the final stage of the CBA talks in July, Jones insisted that Saturday use his jet to fly alone from New York City to Amelia Island to spend the weekend with his family.

"I truly felt so sensitive to the fact that he was taking so much of his offseason time away from home, with hours and hours and weeks and weeks invested in the negotiation process," Jones told me Thursday morning on the phone. "It's one thing when you've done these types of meetings for years, but something else when you've got young children and you're away for that long."

"On that first trip, he got to listen to me tell those old war stories for two or three hours, and just as his temperament was throughout the negotiations, he listened and was very interested the whole time. But it was just a great chance to get to know him better, and to talk about the issues. And then later, there we were standing in Times Square, and I just couldn't stand it that he was miles and miles away from that family of his, so I had to do it. He took the plane and got home for the weekend."

As generous as he has been known to be, Jones quickly added that he's not in the habit of lending out his plane. But Saturday came to be seen as the key individual among the players' leadership, and he was one of the few people in the negotiations, maybe the only one, that everyone on both sides seemed to trust. At the risk of overstatement, his calming and uniting presence was nearly indispensable.

On the day before talks broke down between the players and owners back in early March, resulting in the beginning of the lockout, it was Saturday who Goodell called in an effort to make some progress, meeting with him privately for about an hour in the lobby of Saturday's Washington D.C. hotel. And a year ago this month, when Goodell visited Colts training camp here in Anderson to address the players and talk about the looming labor stand off, it was Saturday who had to quickly diffuse a tense and heated situation between the commissioner and several players who were growing angrier by the second at Goodell's talking points.

"That was a rather intense meeting," Saturday recalled. "You're talking about men's livelihoods, and men who are very protective of their families and the careers they have laid before them. So it did get heated. I just jumped up and said, 'Hey, we're not going to get anywhere doing this. He's heard what our opinion is, he knows where you guys stand. There's no reason to keep going. We're not gaining anything by doing this. Just stop.' "

Saturday admits there were many fruitless negotiation sessions during which he thought an answer to the league's labor stalemate would never come. He likened the process to endlessly turning the sides of a Rubik's Cube, waiting for the puzzle to finally solve itself.

"There were days when I didn't think we were going to get it done," he said. "I'd walk away and it seemed like the gap between us was too wide, and there was no way we were going to get there. But it really is about spending time and seeing how you can solve problems, and watching how many different owners or players stepped up on a specific issue to say, 'Let's look at it this way, or what if we did this instead of that?"

Saturday also provided what I think many considered a signature moment of closure for the messy labor battle between the players and owners. Ten years from now, one of the few things we'll all remember about the NFL lockout of 2011 is the sight of the 6-2, 295-pound Saturday wrapping New England owner Robert Kraft in a hug -- a Colt and a Patriot, no less! He did so to salute Kraft's sacrifice and commitment throughout the process at the joint player-league news conference in Manhattan that announced the agreement. Kraft had three days earlier attended the funeral of his beloved wife, Myra, who had died of cancer the previous week, and Saturday's act of humanity struck just the right conciliatory tone between the rival sides that were now once again business partners.

"So many people gave so much of their time and energy, players and owners alike," Saturday said. "It was important to all of us. But the thing that separated Mr. Kraft for me in that moment was what he was going through with the loss of Myra. And that she had encouraged him to go to these meetings, that was the most impressive part to me.

"Here's this lady who knows where she is, and she's fighting a good fight. But the reality is, she was fighting an uphill battle. Despite that, she would still encourage him to come work this deal, because she knew it was for the betterment of our game and our country. It was super impressive to me, and I know if I was in his place, I would have appreciated the gesture. It was heartfelt, and I meant it."

Saturday's role in the CBA negotiations was largely a selfless one in many respects as well. As a 36-yearold veteran in the final year of his contract with the Colts, the only team he has ever played for, he wasn't likely to benefit much from a new labor deal. He was working on behalf of the NFL players to come, and the NFL players who had come before him. He could have easily said, as many league veterans in essence did, "Call me when this thing's over, I've already got my money. I'm set." But talk to anyone who knows Saturday, and they'll tell you that's not who he is, or what he's about.

"I told my team when we started this thing, this really has no effect on me," Saturday said. "I'll play a year or two under this thing, but my contracts were well before it. I'm doing this to leave the game better than I found it. That was always a goal I had. I really felt strongly that the position of leadership I was in, and the career I had gave me some credibility. Not only to the players, but to the owners as well. And when you get in that position, I feel like you should be able to use it to help.

"Going into the process, I realized really quickly how important this thing is, not only to players and owners, but to people outside of our game. My city in particular, with the Super Bowl coming up, there would have been consequences if we hadn't gotten a deal. When you just look at everything around our game and how good it is, and the impact people in the NFL make on their communities, to stop it, unless it absolutely had to be stopped, made no sense. I never saw a reason why we couldn't get something done that was fair for both players and owners."

Peyton Manning's name might have been one of the most prominent on the lawsuit filed against the NFL by its players, but the reality is, it was Saturday, Manning's longtime friend and dependable center, whose fingers were all over this new labor deal. Not to mention the sweat equity and attention to detail he's known for. For a guy who owns a Super Bowl ring, has played in that game twice and been to more than his share of Pro Bowls, Saturday's most lasting contribution and legacy in the game might wind up being how he spent his long 2011 offseason.

"I'm obviously very proud of where we are, and for the majority of men in this game, getting this deal done is even more impactful to players that I'll never meet compared to me winning a Super Bowl," Saturday said. "Don't ever underestimate the Super Bowl. That's why you play the game.

"But I'm very proud of the deal that we put in place and I really do feel like our players will be better in the future for it, health wise, which is most important to me, and financially. These guys are going to make lots of money and be good football players for a lot longer than they have in the past because of the rules we have now. The game is going to be better because of this."

Colts center takes break after labor negotiations By Michael Marot (AP) August 2, 2011 (two pages)

ANDERSON, Ind. - Jeff Saturday spent the offseason working his second job.

He flew from city to city, hotel to hotel, spending laborious days in nondescript meeting rooms, negotiating with team owners.

For a 13-year veteran with three children at home, it wasn't an ideal summer. Still, Saturday felt compelled to do the heavy lifting for all those guys he represented, and he wound up making a difference -- a big difference.

"Man, I think about the sacrifices he made," Colts defensive captain Gary Brackett said Tuesday. "You know, hearing him speak the day the agreement was signed about the responsibility Mr. Kraft had in getting this deal done, I think you really could really say that Jeff Saturday saved football, too."

Saturday never missed a bargaining session, and now things may never be the same for the 36-year-old Pro Bowl.

After spending most his professional career toiling in the long shadows cast by Peyton Manning, Dwight Freeney, Marvin Harrison, Edgerrin James, Bob Sanders and Reggie Wayne, Saturday has carved out his own niche on a team full of leaders. By thanking and hugging Robert Kraft, owner of the Colts' archrival Patriots, Saturday will forever be remembered as the face of the settlement.,

But for Saturday, it was never about fame.

"There were a lot of things I went through during the negotiations and one of the main things is that when you advocate for other people, you really think about what you're fighting for," he said three days after players approved the new labor pact. "I think we got a fair deal."

Colts players never doubted Saturday would know a fair deal when he saw one.

Unlike many of today's best players, Saturday did not come into the league with a highly touted reputation. Baltimore signed him as an undrafted rookie in 1998, then cut him before training camp even started. Over the next seven months, Saturday managed an electrical store in North Carolina, hoping for a second chance.

Indy signed the free agent in January 1999, and within a year, Saturday became the starting center. He's been an immovable object since, combining with Manning for a league record 172 career starts.

What other players may not understand were the sacrifices Saturday made.

He made sure there were workout rooms in the hotels or near them so he could stay in shape. He called his wife and children every day. He communicated regularly with Manning, his closest friend, and Brackett, the Colts' alternate player rep. He helped coordinate workouts for younger players and kept his teammates and those on other teams informed about the discussions.

Those obligations left little time for Saturday to relax.

"It had to be horrible. His whole offseason and summer were taken away and he's the main guy for the whole league," safety Melvin Bullitt said. "With Jeff, you really can't say anything but `Thank you."

Saturday insists the process really wasn't that bad.

"I would do it again," he said. "One thing I need to say is that my wife was awesome during this whole time. I have three kids at home and they can be a little rambunctious during summer vacation, so for her to run the house the way she did was phenomenal. It really allowed me to concentrate on what I was doing."

No team is more grateful for Saturday's efforts than Indy.

On Sunday, when the Colts held their first team training camp meeting at Anderson University, team officials a moment to thank Saturday publicly for his efforts.

Not surprisingly, Indy's players responded with a loud, protracted round of applause, a moment Saturday described as endearing.

"Jeff's not a rah-rah type guy, so just kind of gave us a nod," Brackett said. "But he did, as we said all along, for the past, present and future guys in this league. He was fighting for players he doesn't even know."

While Saturday insists he did carve out time for his family and that he did have find ways to relax, he acknowledges, grudgingly, that it was mentally draining.

That's one reason Colts fans have yet to see No. 63 wearing a helmet at camp. Coach Jim Caldwell believes players need to be fresh mentally and physically, and even though Saturday said he's in good shape, Caldwell wants to give him a little down time to make sure he's OK when the season starts.

"We are going to kind of ramp him up just a little bit, give him time and put him in a position where he feels good about what kind of shape he's in," Caldwell said. "Because of the fact he has been so involved in the negotiations over the last month and a half, two months, we have talked to him about that, and I think you will see that as the week goes on."

Caldwell hasn't said when Saturday will get back on the field, and teammates aren't worried about his absence. After all, aside from Manning, nobody knows the Colts playbook better than Saturday.

And nobody is more eager to reap the benefits of the new labor pact than the guy who helped make it happen.

"This is why you play," Saturday said. "I went to all of those meetings so I could come to these. This is what I wanted to do. I don't want to be in those meetings. I can tell you I would much rather be out on the field playing ball."

Colts center Jeff Saturday, leadership 'is in his DNA' By Mike Chappell - Indy Star July 31, 2011 (two pages)

As the executive committees for NFL owners and players hop-scotched the country this summer trying to resolve what became a 41/2-month lockout, one figure seemed omnipresent.

In one photo after another, one video clip after another, there was Jeff Saturday. The Indianapolis Colts' veteran center looked the part of arbiter, wearing a sport coat and toting a leather bag.

Former teammate Ryan Lilja chuckled when it was mentioned the Colts' five-time Pro Bowler looked out of place in anything other than his No. 63 jersey.

"We used to get on him and talk about political aspirations," Lilja said. "My hope is Jeff can springboard from his NFL career and his player representative career and succeed Mitch (Daniels) as (Indiana) governor."

Casual talk in the offensive linemen's meeting occasionally turned to Gov. Saturday taking care of those closest to him.

"Yeah, we used to joke with him about that," Lilja said. "Every so often he'd come back and say, 'OK, you're going to be the secretary of this and you'll be in charge of that.'

"But all kidding aside, he's a guy who if you take a straw poll of guys in the league who know him and have been around him, he'd be good at leading just about anything."

Part of the solution

The owners' lockout of players threatened to disrupt the preseason, even the regular season. It had football fans across the country riled up.

Labor peace was restored July 25 when the NFLPA's executive committee, of which Saturday is a member, and the player representatives from the 32 teams voted unanimously to endorse the new collective bargaining agreement. Owners had done likewise the previous week.

As commissioner Roger Goodell and NFLPA executive director DeMaurice Smith held a joint news conference to discuss the resolution, Saturday stood in the background. At one point, he and New England Patriots owner Robert Kraft shared an emotional hug.

The end had come, and the influence of Saturday, Baltimore Ravens cornerback Domonique Foxworth and others was undeniable.

"(Jeff) and Domonique were instrumental in that they were the two who were in every meeting," NFLPA president Kevin Mawae said. "I can't say enough about how they played a major part in all of it."

Saturday insisted it was a shared venture.

"I'm awfully proud of how hard everybody worked to get this done," he said. "It gives you a sense of relief and excitement that we get back to the business of football."

Saturday has deep ties to the players' union. He was the Colts' longtime player rep before moving up to the executive committee. He was certain he wanted to commit himself and his offseason to helping the NFL attain labor peace but also knew the decision wasn't his alone.

His wife, Karen, would have to be on board. At home, there were the couple's three children to consider: Jeffrey, 10; Savannah, 8; and Joshua, 4.

"They can be rambunctious," Saturday said. "My wife and I talked about it before this process began. She's been more than gracious, believe me. She really sacrificed and allowed me to be gone, sometimes two and three days a week.

"She believed in what we were doing and honestly supported me wholeheartedly. . . . This was really a sacrifice for her."

Always in the lead

Saturday, who turned 36 last month as the labor talks began to pick up steam, always has displayed leadership qualities. He was vice president of his class in high school and captain of North Carolina's football team.

It has been more of the same since 1999, when he signed with the Colts as a free agent. Saturday is a presence in the locker room and meeting rooms, and works in unison with quarterback Peyton Manning in making the proper pre-snap adjustments during games.

"You lead by example," Saturday said, insisting that trait has been enhanced by playing under Jim Mora, Tony Dungy and current coach Jim Caldwell.

It hasn't gone unnoticed.

Owner Jim Irsay wasn't surprised that Saturday played such an integral role in the labor talks.

"Jeff is as fine a person and player as I've met in 40 years," Irsay said. "He's a special guy, as special as it gets."

Added Colts cornerback Jerraud Powers: "Everything you could desire as a leader, Jeff has it. Since the first day I stepped into the Colts facility, he's been one of those guys to stick his hand out and let the younger guys know if there was anything we need or he could do to help the transition, he was there."

So, might Saturday's post-NFL career include politics?

"I don't know, man," he said, laughing. "I really hadn't considered it."

Well, consider it, Lilja said.

Leadership, he said, "is in his DNA. That's his nature. He's a born leader.

"Anything Jeff touches, he's going to do his best at it and he's going to leave a mark on it. To represent the players, you couldn't ask for a better guy."

Rucker happy to be around Colts' Manning By Mike McLain - Tribune Chronicle July 12, 2011 (two pages)

YOUNGSTOWN - The last thing that Chris Rucker wants to see is a disabled Peyton Manning when the Indianapolis Colts open training camp.

As a rookie cornerback with the Colts, the Warren G. Harding graduate would like nothing better than to get a chance to line up against Manning and intercept one of his passes. Manning recently revealed that he's still bothered by a neck injury that required offseason surgery.

"It's amazing to be around him," said Rucker, who was drafted in the sixth round out of Michigan State University. "Now to be on his team is amazing. I can't wait to be around him and see him in practice every day."

In most years Rucker would be planning to join his new teammates for the start of training camp near the end of the month. This isn't a normal year. The lockout of NFL players by the owners has put the clamps on all offseason activity, with the exception of work done by the players on their time.

It's not an easy situation for a rookie anxious to establish himself. Like every other player in the NFL, Rucker can't wait for the lockout to end so he can sign a contract and start the business of playing pro football.

"I've been waiting to start," said Rucker at this year's Ursuline Football Camp, which concludes today. "It's been a long time since we actually got to play football. Maybe the next week or so things will be settled, and we'll get back to playing football."

Rucker recently finished a stellar four-year career with the Spartans. Last season he was fifth on the team in tackles with 64 and was named All-Big Ten second team by "Rivals.com."

Rucker didn't waste much time in making his presence known in East Lansing. He started four games and appeared in eight as a freshman in 2007. He was honorable mention All-Big Ten the next two seasons, when he was firmly established as a starter.

What has to excite Colts' coaches is his 6-foot-2, 200-pound frame. Big corners with speed are in high demand on any level of play.

"I'm more of a physical corner," he said. "I like to go against the bigger receivers. My size matches up with their size. I feel that will be a big advantage for me."

Playing against the quality receivers in the Big Ten was a great proving ground. There weren't many weeks when Rucker could take it easy.

"Week in and week out you played against a good team," he said. "A team with good receivers and good running backs. I think it really got me ready to take this next step."

Rucker hasn't had a chance to have much contact with his new teammates, and he's had no opportunity to get acclimated to life in Indianapolis. That doesn't matter to him at this time. He thinks he's found a good place to call home on the next step in his career.

"I was up there working out with one of my new teammates, Blair White, two weeks ago," Rucker said. "It was a good workout, and it felt good to be around the guys. I just wanted to go somewhere where I could fit in and help the team. I feel like this is a good situation for me. It's not too far away from home, and it's a good organization to be a part of because they have great leadership."

Now if the powers that be can only settle the labor dispute.

"The closer it gets to crunch time the more everyone wants to get things done," Rucker said. "No one doesn't want to have football."
