KEEP POUNDING DRUMMER, PRESENTED BY ATRIUM HEALTH

ERICIA TURNER

As part of the Carolina Panthers NFL Play Football Month celebration, the team is pleased to welcome Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools athletic director Ericia Turner as tonight's Keep Pounding drummer. Under Ericia's leadership, CMS has partnered with the Panthers to create the region's first High School Girls Flag Football League, which provides opportunity and access for girls to compete in the fast-growing sport of flag football. As a former high school principal who has even served as an assistant high school football coach during her career in education, Ericia's Keep Pounding spirit serves our region with vision, integrity, and innovation.

5 THINGS TO WATCH

by Augusta Stone

CHARLOTTE – Between training camp in Spartanburg and back-to-back preseason games at Washington and New England, the Panthers spent nearly a month on the road. This week, they get a chance to close out the preseason in familiar territory.

Carolina will face Buffalo in its preseason finale at Bank of America Stadium on Friday in a 7 p.m. kickoff.

Head coach Matt Rhule said to expect to see the Panthers' starters for at least a full quarter against the Bills. And with the cutdown to 53 looming next Tuesday, the last preseason game offers one more chance to flash before the roster is trimmed ahead of the regular season.

Here's a look at five things we'll be watching when Buffalo visits the Panthers.

BAKER MAYFIELD TAKES THE REIGNS

Carolina concluded its quarterback competition this week, and Baker Mayfield will take the field as the Panthers' definite first-team quarterback for the first time since the No. 1 overall pick from the 2018 draft was traded from the Browns just weeks before training camp.

He'll have an opportunity to show how quickly he picked up on Ben McAdoo's offense when he gets at least a full quarter of live game action, and all eyes will be locked on the chemistry Mayfield is building with his receivers and starting center Pat Elflein.

Since he was named QB1 over last year's starter Sam Darnold, Mayfield has connected on multiple passes in practice with DJ Moore, one of his most consistent targets in Carolina. He also has former Browns teammate Rashard Higgins and early chemistry with Shi Smith.

Mayfield is still building a rapport with Elflein, and he took ownership of a couple of fumbled snaps early in practice on Monday.

Overall, Mayfield's early command of the Panthers' offense has drawn praise from coaches and teammates alike. But the game against Buffalo will be his last chance to take snaps against another team before he faces the group he used to lead, as Cleveland comes to town in Week 1.

IKEM EKWONU'S DEVELOPMENT

Ikem Ekwonu earned his spot as the Panthers' starting left tackle ahead of last week's preseason game at New England, where the rookie saw good moments and some teachable ones too.

Carolina selected the NC State product with its first-round pick this year for a reason, and Ekwonu will have more time to make up for a couple of sacks he'd like to get back from New England.

He's still building chemistry on the left side of the line beside Brady Christensen, who took reps at left tackle before sliding over to guard in the Panthers' starting lineup. Ekwonu said he's learning from Christensen, who has a year of league experience, and the two will look to solidify that side against Buffalo.

Ekwonu will also get to roll out for at least a quarter with the rest of the starting line against the Bills. It'll be different from the Patriots' game, as Elflein, right guard Austin Corbett, and right tackle Taylor Moton were all inactive while Carolina elected to rest most of its starters at New England.

SHI SMITH'S LARGER ROLE (SPECIFICALLY ON PUNT RETURN)

Smith's performance throughout camp has caught the attention of coaches and teammates, and Rhule said Tuesday that the second-year wideout could be competing for a starting role in this year's offense.

The South Carolina product has been showing up from the slot and in kick returns. Rhule said Smith has been getting more opportunities on punt returns too, and live-game action is one of the best times for coaches to evaluate Smith's development in that phase.

He returned one punt for 15 yards against New England and another for 7 yards at Washington, and he set up a game-winning drive with a 41-yard kick return against the Commanders.

For Smith, who also has been showing early chemistry with Mayfield, the Bills' game is another chance to prove his worth across multiple situations.

WIDE RECEIVER DEPTH

Opportunities could be easier to come by for many of the Panthers' receivers against Buffalo, while a host of wideouts continued to nurse injuries throughout the week before the last preseason game.

Robbie Anderson, Andre Roberts, and Brandon Zylstra were all out tending to various injuries in the first two practices last week. Terrace Marshall Jr. has yet to play in a preseason game and is making a slow return from a hamstring injury suffered in camp.

CJ Saunders was added to the mix again this week after returning from a quad strain sustained in Spartanburg that could've sidelined him through the preseason. He practiced with a limited number of reps Monday and Tuesday.

Keith Kirkwood played the most snaps of any receiver against New England, and Higgins had the second-most in the last preseason game. Undrafted free agents Derek Wright, Ra'Shaun Henry, and Charleston Rambo will also look to make the most of opportunities before the roster is trimmed next week.

A LOOK AT THE CORNERS

Second-year cornerback Jaycee Horn has seen his number of practice snaps continue to rise after he reported to training camp with soreness in the foot he had repaired after his season-ending injury early last year – and he's proceeded to show why he was drafted in the first round of last year's draft.

Horn picked off Mayfield in Monday's practice before it was called back due to a penalty, and he's been a lock for at least one interception in each week of practice that he's consistently participated in since he's built up more playing time.

He didn't play in either of the Panthers' first two preseason games, but with Rhule announcing he'll go with starters for at least a quarter of the Bills' matchup, Friday may be the Panthers' first opportunity to see him back on the field before Week 1.

Even if Horn doesn't take the field, Carolina has plenty to assess from that group before the 53-man roster is solidified.

Rhule has been impressed with Stantley Thomas-Oliver, who also makes an impact on the special teams unit and wrapped up New England's Myles Bryant on a punt return in last week's preseason matchup.

Former USFL champion Tae Hayes also impressed against the Patriots, bringing an interception back for a touchdown, and he has plenty of support from his teammates. Rookie Kalon Barnes will also be looking to make a splash after he was drafted in the seventh round this year.

HOME AGAIN

by Darin Gantt

CHARLOTTE — The Panthers found themselves in an unusual place this week.

At home.

The week came at a time when everyone could use it, though it came at the end of a hectic month that saw them bounce for Spartanburg to Washington to a week in Boston, a month-long road show that they won't be able to replicate during the regular season. But also a time they won't soon forget.

"Definitely," defensive end Brian Burns said after Friday's game against the Patriots. "These are memories you can't make up. You take all these experiences into deep thought, because there's only a certain amount of time that you can be in this environment and be a part of a team."

Burns and others talked about the closeness they developed over the course of training camp — where he earned high marks as the "entertainment director," according to head coach Matt Rhule — but that extended to a week spent in a Boston hotel, busing back and forth to joint practices, and a memorable team dinner that gave them a chance to get to know each other at a different level.

Veteran long snapper JJ Jansen, the team's oldest and longest-serving player, said that he had extended conversations with teammates in Boston he had never met, a chance to cross-pollenate between position groups that only happens when a team is sequestered. He and veteran punter Johnny Hekker (new here but one of just five players on the roster in his 30s) gave up their first-class seats on the team plane for some injured younger players — a small gesture for sure, but also not a given considering how road-weary everyone was by the time they boarded that plane.

Likewise, veteran linebacker Shaq Thompson talked about the importance of the small moments — in addition to the ones everyone saw on the field during what was at times a contentious couple of days of practices with New England.

"We're way closer this year," Thompson said. "A lot of guys are playing for each other. We're more of a culture team, and we're coming together as a unit and as a family.

"It's just us having each other's back. One big family. We're going to stay like that. The practice, the team dinner, these are memories you build forever. When you're done with football, you think about the games, but you also think about the memories."

The having each other's back was evident in the way players reacted when the practices got heated with New England. There's a certain line you don't want to cross, but cornerback Donte Jackson liked the way they responded as a team, pushing through the emotions and continuing to practice.

"It's just football," Jackson said as he packed his bag in Boston. "This is a football city, so they're passionate about their ball, from the players to the fans. So we just tried to come up here and match the intensity. . . .

"I feel like we left with our head going in the right direction."

This week, they'll transition into something more closely resembling a regular-season routine, partially because they're back in Bank of America Stadium in familiar surroundings. But also because they're shifting gears toward the long year ahead, with one more preseason game and final cuts to determine the 53-man roster they'll work with this year.

"This was unbelievable," Rhule said after Friday's game. "This was great for us, going to dinner together, hanging out together, practicing together. If I were you, I would ask the JJs and the Shaqs, you know, how close this team is. I think at the end of the day, we worked really hard this week. This is a really good team, right, and we practiced against them."

There were moments along the way Rhule might not always celebrate, such as players not actually in the game getting unsportsmanlike conduct penalties — as they did following reserve cornerback Tae Hayes' pick-six Friday night. But at that moment, at the end of a long week and month together, there was a greater point he held onto.

"Even the way our vets are on the sideline," Rhule said. "They're watching the game the entire game. They're locked in. They celebrated. I told them if they got a pick six to have a little fun. It's the guys that don't have the jerseys on that got the penalties. If you have a jersey on, you're fine. So it was all the other guys; they all kind of walked by me. But we have a fun team and a good group. This was a really great time for us."

TOP CATS

JORDAN

Year: 4

Hometown: Goldsboro, NC

After training in classical ballet from age 3-18, and making her ballet production debut as a turtle, Jordan joined the nationally ranked East Carolina University Dance team, and this year, she steps out onto the field for her 4th season as a TopCat. During her time in Greenville, she received her bachelor's degree in health and wellness with a minor in psychology and currently works with a focus on insurance in healthcare.

"Wearing the TopCat uniform feels surreal. To wear the same uniform as those who shaped this program gives me a great sense of pride. I get to continue to add to the legend they created." Jordan strives to make a mark of her own and be a strong and dependable resource and the teammate you can come to in a time of need. Game number one of the year is always her favorite as it "feels the most special to me, it is when all of your hard work truly pays off. You finally get to live the dream you've had for your whole life."

MCKENNA

Year: 4

Hometown: Salem, VA

The longer you are a TopCat, the more your why changes and reforms, for fourth year veteran, McKenna, that's being the helping hand. "It's so important to reach back and help others find their success- especially when you have the knowledge and resources to make a difference. While the thought of retiring from this role someday makes me sad, I at least know I'll be able to help TopCats in the future. I'm here because alumni reached back and supported me. It's a family I am blessed to be a part of."

When she isn't performing on the field or working in admin for an investment management firm in Charlotte, NC, she serves on the board for The Ability Project—a charity that hits close to home as her brother-in-law is directly impacted. "Its purpose is to help children with mental and physical disabilities have access to movement and athletics. Whether your child lives with autism, amputation, hearing loss, or any other diagnosis, TAP will help you get introduced to athletics or help you find your way back into it."

Year: 1

Hometown: Spartanburg, NC

Since she was young, Rockii has dreamed of being a TopCat—in 2021 she didn't get the answer she was hoping for but didn't let that stop her from achieving her dream. "The obstacles within you are often more important than any external obstacles. If you can overcome your inner obstacles, you can accomplish truly amazing things." And because she never gave up, she steps onto the field at Bank of America for the first time this season.

When she isn't directing the Spirit Squad at her alma mater, Winthrop University, you can find her supporting her community in every way possible. Be it via school functions, her favorite foundation—Make A Wish, or through the Panthers organization, giving back is a high priority for her. "My favorite memory with the TopCats so far is being able to participate in the Keep Pounding Day. We went to Spartanburg, which is where I am from, and spent the day with the students from the McCarthy Teszler School. Being able to see them happy and being able to touch many lives and be a great role model for the community is a few of many reasons why I wanted to be a TopCat."
