RAIDERS BY THE NUMBERS

With his two touchdowns in Week 9, WR Davante Adams notched his second game this season with multiple receiving touchdowns, tied for the most in the NFL. He is one of only three receivers with more than one game with 2+ touchdowns in 2022. He now owns 18 games with mulitple receiving touchdowns since entering the league in 2014, the most in the NFL over that span.

41

K Daniel Carlson has now made each of his last 41 field goal attempts, dating back to Week 8 of the 2021 season. His streak of 41 consecutive makes is currently the longest active streak in the NFL, the longest streak in franchise history and the third longest streak in NFL history. His streak is the longest in the NFL since Adam Vinatieri set the NFL record from 2015-16 (44).

46.1%

The Raiders have excelled at making the most of their offensive opportunities in 2022, scoring on 35-of-76 drives on offense (46.1%). Their 46.1 scoring percentage is the second best mark in the NFL this season and is the second best scoring percentage recorded by the Raiders through the first eight games of a season since at least 2001.

47

DE Maxx Crosby is off to his best career start in 2022, totaling 47 tackles, the second most in the NFL among defensive linemen. His 47 tackles through eight games are a career best and are the most in franchise history by a defensive lineman through their first eight games of the season. Among all defensive linemen in the NFL, his 47 tackles are tied for the fifth most through eight games by a defensive lineman in the NFL since 1987 - the most since 2006 (Justin Smith, 49).

80

With his two touchdowns in Week 9, WR Davante Adams eclipsed 80 career receiving touchdowns, becoming one of only four players in NFL history to reach 700+ receptions and 80+ receiving touchdowns in their first nine NFL seasons. Adams joins three Hall of Fame receivers as the only players to accomplish the feat.

700

With his 11 tackles in Week 9, LB Blake Martinez reached 700 career tackles in his 84th career game. Since 1987, Martinez is one of only eight players in the NFL to reach 700 total tackles in 84 career games or less. His 700 tackles since entering the league in 2016 also rank fifth in the NFL over that span.

UNDRAFTED GEMS

Every preseason, hundreds of undrafted free agents around the NFL battle to make a 53-man roster. This season, four UDFAs made the Raiders final 53-man roster, tied for the most over the last 10 seasons by the Raiders and the most since 2019.

WHAT TO WATCH FOR vs. COLTS

ADAMS 17

- With one touchdown, Adams ties Lance Alworth and Art Powell (81) for the sixth most touchdowns in a player's first nine seasons.
- Needs seven touchdowns over the next six games to surpass Rob Gronkowski (86) for the fifth most touchdowns in a player's first 130 career games. He would be fifth behind four Hall of Famers.
- With 100+ receiving yards, Adams will own 36 career 100-yard games, the fourth most in the NFL since he entered the league in 2014. His 36 games would rank tied for 11th in NFL history among a player in their first 125 career games.
- With one catch, Adams extends his streak to 106 straight games with a catch, the seventh-longest active streak in the league.
- With 10+ receptions Sunday, Adams would own 22 career games with 10+ receptions, tying Andre Johnson (22) for the second most games with 10+ receptions in NFL history.
- One touchdown in Sunday's game would give Adams his 61st game with at least one touchdown since entering the league in 2014, the most in the NFL over that span.
- One red zone touchdown would give Adams his 60th red zone touchdown since entering the league in 2014 - the most in the NFL over that span.
- With 2+ touchdowns, Adams will have 19 career games with multiple receiving touchdowns, the most of such games since 2014. It would also tie Larry Fitzgerald, Tim Brown, Antonio Brown and Andre Rison for the 10th most games in NFL history.

CARR 4

- With one passing touchdown and zero interceptions, Derek Carr will reach 57 career games with a passing touchdown and no interceptions, the sixth most of such games in the NFL since 2014.
- With 300+ passing yards against the Colts, Carr will record his 33rd 300-yard passing performance. His 33 games would rank t-23rd in NFL history and 10th since 2014.
- With 2+ passing touchdowns against the Colts, Carr will own 65 career games with multiple passing touchdowns, the eighth most in the NFL since 2014.
- With four passing touchdowns, Carr will tie Daryle Lamonica for the most games with 4+ passing touchdowns in Raiders history (seven games).
- With one completion of 50+ yards, Carr will own 35 50-yard passes since 2014, the fifth most in the NFL over that span.
- Needs 604 passing yards to surpass Tony Romo (34,183) for 37th on the NFL's all-time passing list.

CROSBY 98

- With 3.5 sacks, Crosby will tie Tony Cline (34.5) for the seventh most sacks by a Raider in their first four seasons and the most since 2017 (Khalil Mack, 40.5).
- With 2.0 sacks or more, Crosby will notch his eighth career game with 2.0 sacks, tied for the third most two-sack games in the NFL since 2019 and tied for the sixth most two-sack games in franchise history (Bill Pickel, 8).
- 2.0 sacks would give him his third game with 2.0 sacks this season, tying a single-season career high for Crosby and tied for the sixth most two-sack games in a single season by a Raider.
- With 10+ tackles, Crosby will notch his second-career game with double digit tackles and just the 19th game of 10+ tackles by a defensive linemen since 2019. He would be the first defensive lineman since 2012 (Anthony Spencer) to notch two 10+ tackle games in a single season.
- With one quarterback hit on Sunday, Crosby would reach 70 career quarterback hits in his 58th career game, only the second Raider to accomplish the feat in 58 career games or less since 2006 (Khalil Mack, 74) - and the 24th player in the NFL since 2006 to accomplish the feat.
- With five tackles on Sunday, Crosby would have 52 through eight games, the most through nine games in Raiders history by a defensive lineman. His 52 tackles would also be tied for the fourth most through eight games by a defensive lineman in the NFL since 1987 and the most since 2010 (Dwan Edwards, 53).

JONES 55

- Jones needs 1.5 sacks to bring his career total to 109.5, tying Greg Townsend for the 26th most sacks in NFL history (since sacks became official in 1982).
- With one tackle for loss on Sunday, Jones could become just the 15th player in league history to reach 120 career tackles for loss (Since 2001).
- With one forced fumble, Jones would own 34 career forced fumbles, tying Simeon Rice for 11th on the all-time list. His 34 forced fumbles would also lead the NFL since 2012
- With 1.5 sacks or more against the Colts, Jones will register his 27th career game with multiple sacks, tying Dwight Freeney and Derrick Thomas for the most games with multiple sacks in NFL history (since 1982).

JACOBS 28

- With one rushing touchdown, Jacobs would become only the 15th running back in NFL history to record 7+ rushing touchdowns in each of their first four seasons. 10 of the 15 running backs to accomplish the feat are in the Pro Football Hall of Fame.
- With 100+ yards rushing, Jacobs would notch his 13th career 100-yard performance, which would tied Darren McFadden for the fourth most games in franchise history. 13 games with 100+ yards would also be the fifth most in the NFL since 2019.
- 100 rushing yards would give him his fourth 100-yard rushing performance of the season, tied for the sixth most games in a single season in franchise history. It would be only the 11th time in franchise history a player has recorded four or more 100-yard rushing games in a season.
- With 69 rushing yards, Jacobs will establish a career-high through the first nine games (811). With 104 yards, Jacobs will surpass Bo Jackson (846) for the second most rushing yards through nine games in franchise history and the most since 1997 (Napoleon Kaufman, 912).
- With nine more rushes of 10+ yards in 2022, Jacobs would notch a single-season career-high 32 rushes of 10+ yards, the second most in a single season by a Raider since 1994 and the most since 1997 (Napoleon Kaufman).
- With one touchdown, Jacobs will tie Marcus Allen and LaMont Jordan for the fourth most rushing touchdowns in the first eight games of a season in franchise history, and the most since 2016 (Latavius Murray, 8).

WALLER 83

- With 100 receiving yards against the Colts, Waller will notch his 13th career game with 100 receiving yards, tied for the 12th most in NFL history among tight ends (George Kittle) and the second most in the NFL since 2019 among tight ends.
- With a performance of 10+ receptions, Waller would notch his fifth career 10-catch game, tied for the eighth most among tight ends in NFL history and the most since 2019. His five games with 10-plus receptions would also be the most in franchise history among tight ends.
- One catch of 20+ yards would give Waller his 46th 20-yard catch since 2019, the third most in the NFL over that span among tight ends and the most in franchise history.
- Needs 39 receiving yards to move into second all-time in franchise history for most career receiving yards by a tight end, surpassing Dave Casper (3,294) and trailing only Todd Christensen (5,872).

JOSH McDANIELS

Josh McDaniels was named head coach of the Las Vegas Raiders on Jan. 31, 2022.

McDaniels enters his 22nd season in the NFL, having spent 18 years with the New England Patriots, including 13 seasons as the team's offensive coordinator. He also served as the Denver Broncos' head coach from 2009-10 and the St. Louis Rams' offensive coordinator in 2011.

In his 13 seasons as the Patriots offensive coordinator, McDaniels guided an offense to top-10 finishes eight times, including the NFL's No. 1 ranked offense in 2007, 2012 and 2017. He has also coached the team to 12 seasons with 10-or-more wins, while the offense has scored 400-plus points in 11 seasons. Overall, McDaniels was a part of six Super Bowl championships, 14 division titles and eight conference crowns with New England.

Regarded as one of the league's top quarterback coaches, McDaniels tutored quarterback Tom Brady to 10 Pro Bowl selections, two NFL Most Valuable Player awards and nine 4,000-yard passing seasons. Brady also led the league in touchdown passes two times (2007 and 2015) and passing yards three times (2005, 2007 and 2015) with McDaniels serving as his position coach.

In 2019, McDaniels helped lead the Patriots to a 12-4 record and claim their 11th consecutive division title. Brady threw for 4,000-plus passing yards for the 11th time in his career and became the all-time leader in NFL history with his 17th season of at least 20 passing touchdowns.

In 2017, McDaniels helped the Patriots reach their second consecutive Super Bowl by leading a unit that finished No. 1 in the NFL in total offense (394.2 yards per game). McDaniels helped guide the No. 2 passing offense (276.1 yards per game) and the No. 2 scoring offense (28.6 points per game).

In 2014, McDaniels helped the Patriots earn the fourth Super Bowl championship in franchise history. New England finished with the top-ranked red-zone offense, leading the league with 338 points scored (39 TDs, 22 FG) in 67 trips to the red zone.

McDaniels guided the offense to a top-10 finish in total offense in 2012 and 2013. Additionally, Brady was selected to the Pro Bowl in both seasons.

In 2011, McDaniels served as offensive coordinator of the St. Louis Rams. Under his guidance, Rams running back Steven Jackson eclipsed the 1,000-yard mark for the seventh consecutive season.

McDaniels served as head coach of the Denver Broncos from 2009-10, becoming the fifth-youngest head coach in NFL history at the time (32 years, 8 months).

In his five seasons (2004-08) handling positional coaching responsibilities, McDaniels guided six different players to a total of nine Pro Bowl selections.

McDaniels began his coaching career as a graduate assistant at Michigan State University in 1999, working under head coach Nick Saban and helping the Spartans to a 10-2 record and a Citrus Bowl victory.

A native of Canton, Ohio, McDaniels attended John Carroll University, where he played quarterback and wide receiver from 1995-98. McDaniels was a college teammate of Raiders General Manager Dave Ziegler. Josh and his wife, Laura, have four children.

GENERAL MANAGER DAVE ZIEGLER

Dave Ziegler was named the General Manager of the Las Vegas Raiders by Owner Mark Davis on Jan. 31, 2022, becoming just the fourth General Manager in team history.

Ziegler joins the Silver and Black after nine seasons in the New England Patriots' scouting department, serving as the director of player personnel in 2021.

In their first offseason in Las Vegas, Ziegler and Head Coach Josh McDaniels worked to lay a successful foundation for the organization both on and off the field. The growth of the Raiders' roster was highlighted by strategic additions through signings, free agency and trades, and a commitment to building an evolving group that will strive for excellence and consistently compete for championships.

Under Ziegler's direction, the Raiders were able to extend the contracts of both quarterback Derek Carr and defensive end Maxx Crosby, securing foundational players for the future. The Raiders then made a splash in the early free agency period, signing coveted free agent defensive end Chandler Jones and acquiring All-Pro wide receiver Davante Adams via trade from the Green Bay Packers.

Ziegler's first draft at the helm was highlighted by the execution of four "draft day" trades and the addition of six exciting young prospects, each of whom bring competition and versatility to the current roster.

Prior to joining the Raiders, Ziegler spent nine seasons with the Patriots scouting department and was promoted to director of player personnel after spending the 2020 season as assistant director of player personnel. For four seasons he was the director of pro personnel and he served three years as the assistant director of pro scouting. Ziegler joined the Patriots after three seasons with the Denver Broncos, serving in a variety of roles for the club in their scouting department.

Before embarking on his NFL journey in Denver, Ziegler was the special teams coordinator at Chapparal High School in Scottsdale, Ariz., where he also coached the running backs and tight ends. Previously, Ziegler coached the wide receivers and special teams at Iona College in New Rochelle, N.Y. and at John Carroll University in University Heights, Ohio.

A three-time all-conference honoree as a wide receiver/punt returner/kick returner at John Carroll, Ziegler holds several Blue Streak records, including career return yards, return average and touchdowns. He was inducted into the John Carroll Hall of Fame in 2010. Ziegler was a college teammate of McDaniels, Houston Texans General Manager Nick Caserio and Raiders senior offensive assistant Jerry Schuplinski.

Ziegler was born Sept. 7, 1977, in Tallmadge, Ohio, and currently resides in Henderson, Nev. He and his wife, Carissa, have two sons, Asher and Camden and a daughter, Georgina.

COMMITMENT TO EXCELLENCE

The Raiders - who began play in the American Football League in 1960 – are in their 63rd year of professional football competition, including the last 51 as a member of the National Football League. In seven memorable decades - the 1960s, '70s, '80s, '90s, 2000s, 2010s and 2020s - the Raiders have been dominant in professional football since Al Davis first pledged in 1963 to build the finest organization in pro sports.

During these decades of dominance, the Raiders have won an AFL championship, four American Football Conference championships, and three World Championships of Professional Football, participated in five Super Bowls, played in 14 championship games, won or tied for 17 division championships, had 23 playoff seasons, finished 38 seasons at .500 or better and played in 45 postseason games.

Pro football's dynamic organization placed first in the AFC West in 2000, 2001 and 2002 despite playing among the toughest schedules in the NFL in each of those seasons. With their appearance in Super Bowl XXXVII, the Raiders became the first NFL team to have had a season end in the Super Bowl in four different decades.

The Raiders are the only team to have been in Super Bowls in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s and the 2000s. The Silver and Black are the only AFC team - and one of just two NFL teams - to have a season that advanced to the conference championship game in the '60s, the '70s, the '80s, the '90s and the 2000s.

The Raiders are one of only three original AFL teams to have captured three World Championships of Professional Football with Super Bowl victories. The Raiders are one of only five AFC teams to have won more than one Super Bowl since 1980. In their five Super Bowl appearances, the Raiders have been led by four head coaches and started four quarterbacks.

Since 1963, when Al Davis first took over the failing Oakland franchise that had struggled to win only nine of 42 league games in the initial three seasons of the new AFL and pledged to build the finest organization in sports, the Raiders have dominated professional football in terms of consistent victory. During the memorable 62 years in Oakland, Los Angeles and now Las Vegas, the Raiders won 491 league games, tied 11 and lost 447. "Commitment to Excellence" has never been an idle phrase to those who have proudly represented the Raiders organization as shown by their domination of pro football.

Twenty-eight of the great players who proudly wore the Silver and Black, as well as Owner-Leader Al Davis and legendary Head Coach John Madden, have been enshrined in the Pro Football Hall of Fame. The Raiders have also produced six Coaches of the Year. In addition, 78 Pro Bowl players have earned 210 Pro Bowl selections representing the Silver and Black.

Another innovation came to professional football in 1970 - Monday Night Football. The Raiders' domination of this prime-time television series has seen the Silver and Black build a 42-30-1 record in Monday night play. The Raiders won 12 games at home to begin this series and are 19-9-0 at home in the 51 years of Monday Night Football.

Through the seven decades of pro football competition, the Raiders have had the greatest players, the greatest coaches, the greatest plays and participated in the greatest games in the annals of professional sports. Challengers to Raider domination of professional football will arise as they have in the '60s, '70s, '80s, '90s and the new millennium. The Raider organization will continue to meet these challenges.

In addition, the Raiders are proud to contribute to community engagement, youth initiatives, multicultural awareness, and global outreach. The Raiders played in Oakland from their inception through 1982, relocated to Los Angeles in 1983, moved back to Oakland in 1995, and made Las Vegas home in 2020.

The Raiders base training and business operations in Henderson, Nevada at Intermountain Healthcare Performance Center and play home games at Allegiant Stadium, a fully enclosed, state-of-the-art facility located adjacent to the world-famous Las Vegas Strip. The Raiders maintain an international presence and communicate with the worldwide Raider Nation through the team's official website and social media channels.

Gordon: Raiders can kiss this season goodbye after latest debacle

By Sam Gordon
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Derek Carr wanted to say more.

"But I don't need to say it here," the dejected Raiders quarterback said Sunday from the bowels of TIAA Bank Field — inside a tiny room adjacent to the visiting locker room, where his teammates silently showered off the stink of their 27-20 loss to the woeful Jaguars before departing the scene of their latest embarrassment.

"After 30 minutes of football, we have to learn that the game is not over," Carr added. "I feel like I've been in this situation a lot where … new coaches and you have to teach the new guys 'this is how we do it. This is the mentality.' That gets tiring. But at the same time, it's my job.

"So I'll say that right now."

And I'll say this right now: The season is all but over for the Raiders.

If they haven't learned how to protect a 17-point lead or play four quarters by November, then there's no reason to think they'll figure it out and qualify for the NFL's postseason. They had blown five such leads from 1960 when their storied franchise was founded through 2021 when former interim coach Rich Bisaccia helped them reach the postseason for the second time since 2002.

They've blown three this season under first-year coach Josh McDaniels, who fell to 7-23 as the leading man following his fluky 6-0 start in Denver. Sunday's lead was against a feeble franchise fastened to the bottom of the AFC South — with a 1-116 record when facing deficits of 17 points or more.

"We've got to learn how to play a full four-quarter game," said McDaniels, who, it would seem, needs to learn how to coach a full four-quarter game.

Any adjustments?

Unlike last week in New Orleans — where he seemingly didn't coach a single quarter during a 24-0 shellacking against the Saints — McDaniels had an effective game plan against Jacksonville that managed to serve the Raiders well in the first half.

He designed and called plays that freed one of the NFL's best receivers.

Carr responded accordingly, feeding Davante Adams the football nine times for 146 yards and two touchdowns in the first half en route to a 17-0 advantage and 20-10 halftime lead.

Adams would catch one pass for no gain the rest of the way. Carr would complete 5 of 15 for 36 yards in the second half.

"Give them credit," McDaniels said. "They did a better job, certainly, of making some adjustments."

Adjustments apparently so precise that the Raiders couldn't muster a point in the second half.

Either McDaniels didn't adjust, or his adjustments were as ineffective as 25 plays for 65 yards would suggest. Carr didn't do his coach any favors, missing an open receiver here and another one there in the continuance of his worst statistical season since 2017.

"The way we were attacking in the first half, it was working to a certain extent," said a befuddled Adams, who experienced six regular-season losses in his previous two seasons combined. "I wouldn't say there was any magic thing that was done. We could have continued doing what we were doing in the first half."

So much for practice

Instead they continued to do what they've done in the first half of the season: squander sizable leads and the victories that should accompany them.

Carr said he felt confident amid his preparation, noting the Raiders "had a really good week" of practice in nearby Sarasota.

"Like we always say, having a really good week doesn't give you a week on Sunday. It gives you a chance," Carr said. "We've shown spurts of being a good football team. But showing spurts of being a good football team gets you two wins. You have to do it all the time. The good teams do it all the time. And we have not done that."

Better luck next season.

They said it: Raiders, Jaguars discuss Sunday's game
By Vincent Bonsignore
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — The Raiders fell to 2-6 after a 27-20 loss to the Jaguars on Sunday at TIAA Bank Field. Here's what was heard from both locker rooms afterward:

Q: We are about halfway through the season. Do you feel like you're closer to putting a full game together now than at the beginning of the season?

Raiders coach Josh McDaniels: "Certainly, it doesn't feel like that. Like I said, I think you earn the right to do that. We have to do it. It doesn't matter what I stand up here and talk about or what somebody else talks about, it's just about actions. The National Football League is unforgiving when you let up and don't finish games. The other team plays as hard as they possibly can, too … and they earned the right to win, and we didn't."

Q: Second half, what was the difference? What happened with the offense relative to Davante Adams?

Raiders quarterback Derek Carr: We were calling certain things for him, and they doubled him on some plays, too, and so we thought we saw what they were doing the first half, saw what they were doing the second half. We felt comfortable in playing, and it was just a couple times where he would have had big plays. I had to run out of the pocket and try to throw it to him, and we didn't hit him."

Q: What made you think when you were down 17-0 that you were going to win because that doesn't happen often?

Jaguars quarterback Trevor Lawrence: The whole energy this past week, we kind of knew we had to go get this one. You don't try to put more pressure on yourselves than you need to, but everybody knows where we're at in our season. We felt that and just had a lot of confidence in our prep. We didn't score the first three possessions, but it wasn't anything they did that stopped us. We just kind of shot ourselves in the foot. We knew offensively once we could eliminate some of those errors early and keep a drive going, we were going to be fine."

Q: How impressed were you in how your defense shut down Raiders wide receiver Davante Adams in the second half — one catch for zero yards — after he caught nine passes for 146 yards in the first half?

Jaguars coach Doug Pederson: "We just regrouped at halftime. I don't think there were a ton of changes. The guys were in position in the second half … they got a great pass rush. We had our chances at some interceptions … just a really good defensive performance in the second half."

Raiders fail to execute with late in game again
By Vincent Bonsignore
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — Twice the Raiders got the ball back late in the game with a chance to beat or force a tie with the Jaguars.

And each time they took the field convinced they would get the job done.

"I was very confident," quarterback Derek Carr said.

But just like last-minute losses to the Chargers, Cardinals, Chiefs and Titans, the Raiders could not get the job done in a 27-20 loss at TIAA Bank Field.

Both drives were easily turned away by the Jaguars in eight plays to lead to the Raiders' sixth loss in eight games this season.

"In that situation, no timeouts, you got to make some chunks," coach Josh McDaniels said. "I felt like we had a couple of opportunities but obviously didn't capitalize on them."

The lack of execution — in which the Raiders blew a lead of 17 or more points for the third time — was gnawing at them afterward.

"We've got to make plays," wide receiver Hunter Renfrow. "We're just not doing that."

It's been becoming a broken record.

"It's a matter of execution," tight end Foster Moreau said.

Carlson still streaking

Raiders kicker Daniel Carlson has made 41 consecutive field goals dating to Week 8 of the 2021 season after making two Sunday.

It's the longest current streak in the NFL and the third-longest in NFL history. His streak is the longest since Adam Vinatieri set the NFL record of 44 from 2015 to 2016.

Still no Waller

A lingering hamstring injury sidelined tight end Darren Waller for the third straight game.

Waller has missed all but eight plays in the past four games after injuring the hamstring Oct. 10 against the Chiefs. His status was determined after he went through a workout a few hours before kickoff.

Crosby playing well

Edge rusher Maxx Crosby has 13 tackles for loss this season, tied for the most in the NFL. His 56 tackles for loss since entering the NFL in 2019 is the third most in the league, trailing T.J. Watt (61) and Aaron Donald (60).

Crosby has 47 total tackles, second-most among defensive linemen in the league.

Cornerback help on the way

The Raiders are expected to sign former Seahawks cornerback Sidney Jones.

A six-year veteran, Jones started six games and played in all 16 with Seattle last season and had 66 tackles. He has four career interceptions.

Injury report

Linebacker Divine Deablo left the game in the first half with a forearm injury. He returned to the sideline in street clothes and wearing a cast on his right arm.

'Time's up,' Raiders player says after another abominable loss
By Vincent Bonsignore
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — For weeks now, the Raiders have been pointing to the remaining balance of the schedule as proof that there is enough time to get their season on track.

But their 27-20 loss to the Jaguars on Sunday at TIAA Bank Field pretty much removes that element from the equation.

"Time's up," tight end Foster Moreau said after the Raiders fell to 2-6.

Nine games remain. And it doesn't take a mathematician to figure out what needs to happen if the Raiders have any hope of salvaging one of their most disappointing seasons in years.

"We have to win football games. That's the bottom line," Moreau said. "We don't have to sugarcoat it or say anything."

No one is above responsibility, Moreau said.

"That's on us," he said. "It's everyone. It's on the guys in the box. It's on the guys with the headsets. It's everyone."

It will require that the Raiders do something they have not been able to do on a consistent level, as their three blown leads of 17 or more points attest.

"Finishing," safety Duron Harmon said. "Plain and simple, finishing. That's what it comes down to. Had a lead in the Arizona game, didn't finish. Had a lead in the Chiefs game, didn't finish. Had a lead against Jacksonville and didn't finish."

Said coach Josh McDaniels: “This league is about playing the second half just as well as you played the first half and trying to win the game. So sometimes lessons are learned the hard way, and obviously we’ve had to swallow some difficult ones this year … but I have a lot of confidence and faith in the way that these guys will respond. They always do.”

It sounds so easy, but as the Raiders have learned far too often, finding the right recipe has been elusive. Even after countless conversations — talks that wide receiver Davante Adams and quarterback Derek Carr say will continue — the Raiders are still searching for answers.

“After 30 minutes of football, we have to learn that the game is not over,” Carr said. “I feel like I’ve been in this situation a lot where there’s new coaches, and you have to teach the new guys that this is how we do it and this is the mentality. That gets tiring, but at the same time, it’s my job.

”But there are things in-house that we’ll talk about man to man, and all that kind of stuff that could be addressed.”

So they will keep going back to the basics.

“We just gotta keep doing our job,” Moreau said. “Everyone’s got a shoulder to burden, and it’s not going to be easy. It shouldn’t be easy. If you play it like that, maybe it’ll become easy. But until then, we’re not there.”

Raiders report card: Josh McDaniels gets ‘F’ in loss to Jaguars
By Sam Gordon
November 6, 2022

Here’s how the Raiders performed in a 27-20 loss to the Jacksonville Jaguars on Sunday at TIAA Bank Field:

Offense: C-

They finally featured Davante Adams again, leading to nine catches for 143 yards and two touchdowns in the first half for the superstar wideout. The problem: Adams caught one pass for 3 yards during a second half in which the Raiders were held scoreless.

Quarterback Derek Carr completed 21 of 36 passes for 259 yards and the two scores.

His second-half statistics: 5 of 15 for 36 yards.

So much for those first 30 minutes.

Defense: C+

An errant pitch by Jaguars quarterback Trevor Lawrence on his first series yielded the fifth takeaway of the season for the Raiders, who are last forcing turnovers among the NFL’s 32 teams.

Lawrence proceeded — without pressure from a hapless pass rush — to complete 25 of 31 passes for 235 yards and a touchdown while adding 53 rushing yards, mostly on key scrambles that extended drives. Running back Travis Etienne ran 28 times for 109 yards and two scores, helping the Jaguars convert 9 of 15 third downs.

That said, the Raiders secured successive stops amid a four-point deficit in the fourth quarter — only for a three-and-out and turnover on downs to follow.

Special Teams: B-

Except for a 52-yard kickoff return by the Jaguars' Jamal Agnew to begin the second half, the Raiders were steady as ever on special teams. Kicker Daniel Carlson made two field goals to extend his streak to 41 straight, three shy of Adam Vinatieri's league record.

Punter A.J. Cole pinned the Jaguars inside their 20-yard line on three of his four punts.

Coaching: F

Since the franchise was founded in 1960 through 2021, the Raiders had squandered five 17-point leads.

They've blown three this season under first-year coach Josh McDaniels, who deviated from running back Josh Jacobs again in another crucial situation — bypassing runs on second-and-2 and third-and-2 for passes to Adams downfield while trailing 24-20 with 2:40 to play.

3 takeaways from Raiders' loss: Another blown double-digit lead
By Adam Hill
November 6, 2022

Three takeaways from the Raiders' 27-20 loss to the Jaguars on Sunday at TIAA Bank Field in Jacksonville, Florida:

1. Another meltdown

The Raiders lost for the third time when leading by at least 17 points.

Only two other teams in NFL history have lost three games in which they led by at least 17 points. The 2020 Chargers and 2003 Falcons were the others.

The Raiders had done so only five times from 1960 to 2021.

They fell to 0-5 in one-score games, and there was plenty of blame to go around.

After an explosive first half, Derek Carr and Davante Adams were shut down the rest of the game.

The offense again had the ball with a chance to take the lead late, but Carr's pass to Hunter Renfrow sailed high and out of his reach with 2:30 to play. Then, a late desperation drive in the final minute after a Jaguars' field goal never got going.

Defensively, the Raiders couldn't generate pressure or find a way to get off the field consistently on third down in the second half and allowed Jacksonville quarterback Trevor Lawrence to get into a rhythm.

It all added up to a defeat against a team that had lost five straight games and was coming off a game in London with no bye week in between.

The Raiders lost their first five road games for the first time since 2014 and fifth time in franchise history and are tied with the Steelers for the second-worst record in the AFC at 2-6, ahead of only the Texans. They return home after a disastrous two-game trip for a matchup with the Colts on Sunday at Allegiant Stadium with no more margin for error in the final nine games.

2. Run game and pass rush stay home

The Raiders' rushing attack was bottled up for the second straight game after running back Josh Jacobs had been on the best stretch of his career.

The defense also failed to record a sack in either of the two games on the trip.

Jacobs eclipsed 140 yards in three straight games, which included wins over the Texans and Broncos sandwiched around a one-point loss in Kansas City before the team hit the road.

But after he was held to 43 yards in a negative game script last week, Jacobs was limited to 67 yards on 17 carries Sunday in a game the Raiders led for much of the way.

It was the second time this season he was held to fewer than 4 yards per carry. Zamir White was the only other Raiders player to attempt a rush, which went for a loss of 1 yard.

The pass rush was equally silenced on the road after entering the two-game trip with at least one sack in five straight games.

Lawrence was rarely pressured, a major factor in him completing 25 of 31 passes. He took advantage of that level of comfort in the pocket to convert 9 of 15 third-down opportunities.

3. Adams is still good

There was little question the superstar wide receiver was going to bounce back after one of the worst games of his illustrious career last week.

But what he did in the first half Sunday was special, as Adams torched the Jaguars' secondary early and often.

After catching one pass for 3 yards in a loss at New Orleans, Adams had six catches for 88 yards and a touchdown on the second drive of the game alone.

He finished the first half with nine receptions for 146 yards and two touchdowns, but was shut down after halftime.

Adams' lone catch of the second half went for zero yards, and he did not have a reception after the 8:03 mark of the third quarter.

Carr completed his first 10 attempts intended for Adams, but missed on all seven throws in his direction in the fourth quarter.

It was the first time in his career that he has had more than 100 yards and at least two touchdowns in a half and marked the fifth-best mark in any half for a receiver in franchise history.

Adams is third in NFL history with 21 games of at least 10 receptions, behind Antonio Brown and Andre Johnson.

Raiders blow early lead, fall to Jaguars

November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla — The Raiders blew a 17-point lead for the third time this season and suffered a 27-20 loss to the Jaguars on Sunday at TIAA Bank Stadium.

Derek Carr threw for 259 yards and two touchdowns. Davante Adams caught 10 passes for 146 yards and two touchdowns.

Darren Waller out for Raiders' third straight game
By Vincent Bonsignore
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla — A lingering hamstring injury will sideline tight end Darren Waller for the third straight game when the Raiders play the Jaguars on Sunday.

Waller has missed all but eight plays over the Raiders' last four games after injuring the hamstring on Oct. 10 against the Chiefs. Waller's game status was officially determined after he went through a workout at TIAA Bank Stadium a few hours before kickoff.

The Raiders' inactives for Sunday are linebacker Jayon Brown, tackle Jackson Barton, running back Brittain Brown, defensive tackle Kendal Vickers and defensive end Tashawn Bower.

Raiders melt down again, lose in Jacksonville
By Case Keefer
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, FLA – It might not have been as embarrassing as last week's shutout loss at New Orleans, but the Raiders' performance today at TIAA Bank Field was demoralizing all the same.

Las Vegas lost to Jacksonville 27-20, falling to 2-6 on the season including 0-5 on the road. The defeat included the Raiders' third blown 17-0 lead of the season as they got off to a hot start that they couldn't maintain.

Star receiver Davante Adams caught two long touchdown passes in the first half, finishing with 10 catches for 146 yards, but had only one catch for three yards in the second half. The Jaguars, meanwhile, took off with four straight scoring drives from the middle of the second quarter to the start of the fourth quarter.

Jacksonville second-year running back Travis Etienne paced their attack, scoring two touchdowns and gaining 109 yards on 28 carries. Second-year quarterback Trevor Lawrence also caught fire after struggling early, completing 25 of 31 passes for 235 yards.

Scoring slowed down in the fourth quarter with the Raiders forcing a punt midway through and then benefitting from a missed field goal before the two-minute warning. Las Vegas quarterback Derek Carr had more than enough time to take his team down the field with 2:25 remaining but couldn't earn as much as a first down.

After a completion to Hunter Renfrow on first down, Carr threw three consecutive incompletions. The Raiders' offense then got a reprieve when the Jaguars settled for a 48-yard field goal to make the score 27-20 with just over a minute remaining.

Carr tried to force another pair of passes to Adams, but one was nearly intercepted and the second bounced off his fingertips. He was then sacked by Dawune Smoot on third down to bring up a 4th-and-long the Raiders didn't come close to converting.

Like the Raiders, Carr and Adams got off to a strong start but couldn't sustain it as the game went on.

THE ATHLETIC

Tafur: Raiders' long trip ends with another loss, plenty of unpleasant questions

By Vic Tafur
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — The Raiders should have stayed at the Motel 6 last week.

The Ritz-Carlton in Sarasota, where the Raiders spent the past week in between two road games, is a beautiful property, but owner Mark Davis has to be thinking it was way too nice for a team that now sits at 2-6 after a 27-20 loss to the Jaguars on Sunday.

It was the third time this season that the Raiders have blown a 17-point lead.

"We have to coach better, and we have to avoid feeling like the situation is OK,"' coach Josh McDaniels said.

Things are definitely not OK. Davis has to be wondering if he was sold a bill of goods with this new regime that he plucked from New England in the offseason.

General manager Dave Ziegler said Tuesday that he was "really impressed" with coach Josh McDaniels, but Sunday's loss to the Jaguars (3-6) effectively ends the Raiders' chances of returning to the playoffs. They were 0-2 on this 10-day trip to New Orleans, Sarasota and Jacksonville and are tied with the Steelers for the second-worst record in the AFC, with nine teams in the conference having at least five wins.

"Execution," receiver Davante Adams said. "That's what it comes down to, especially in critical situations. … I've never been in a position where I've had to answer the same exact type of questions, week in and week out, and, I mean, that's the questions that are out there. You gotta ask that. But I don't have the answer."

Players are not making plays late in games — or the entire second half Sunday — but they're also not getting a lot of help from the coaching staff.

Adams wondered why Josh McDaniels tried to establish the run Sunday when the passing game was going so well. The Raiders were shut out after scoring 20 points in the first half.

And the Raiders not only didn't get any pressure on Jaguars quarterback Trevor Lawrence, but defensive coordinator Patrick Graham also had defensive ends Maxx Crosby and Chandler Jones drop back in coverage more than they had all season. Blitzes often didn't get home, leaving receivers open or giving Lawrence a big running lane.

"From the opening kickoff of the third quarter, it seems like they were just a little bit ahead of us," McDaniels said. "Guys fought, but we have to learn to play full four-quarter games."

Remember, this is a veteran team. What makes Sunday's loss even more frustrating for Adams and Derek Carr is that the offense was cooking in the first half.

Adams is so good that it shouldn't matter how defenses are covering him, and McDaniels had Carr throw to him nine times in the first half. He caught all of them for 146 yards and two touchdowns in the first half, and the Raiders jumped out to an early 17-0 lead. Not only was that a career high for him in the first half, but it was also more than he had caught in a game all season for the Raiders.

Guess how many yards he had in the second half?

Zero.

He caught one pass on eight targets for zero yards.

Did the Jaguars make adjustments? Obviously. They split a safety over him and mixed in double coverages.

Should it matter? No.

Carr and Adams had a long talk by Carr's locker after the game, and they agreed there is no excuse for 1-for-8 for zero yards.

"We were just talking about all of it," Carr said. "We saw what they were doing in the first half, and we saw what they were doing in the second half, and we felt comfortable. There were just a couple times where we would have had big plays but I had to run out of the pocket and tried to throw it to him and we didn't hit him."

The Raiders led 20-10 at the half, and the defense quickly gave up a touchdown. Then, on the Raiders' first possession of the third quarter, they ran the ball on the first three plays — picking up a first down on a 15-yard Josh Jacobs run — before punting two plays later. The defense gave up another touchdown and it was 24-20, Jaguars. And the Raiders ran the ball five of the next eight plays before punting again.

"You just have to continue doing whatever put you in that position," Adams said. "I feel like we've gotten away from that too many times. … The way that we were attacking in the first half was working, and we started playing the game a little different."

Adams said he loves the coaching staff and that there is open dialogue both ways. McDaniels might point out that there were eight targets for Adams in the second half, compared with nine in the first half.

"We had chances, let's not try and say we didn't have chances," McDaniels said. "We moved (Adams) around and certainly had chances in the second half to complete balls to him and everybody else. I didn't feel like we were as efficient in the second half."

Carr definitely missed some passes even when he wasn't under duress. One of the big plays of the game came at the end of the first half, with the Raiders up 17-7 and driving. On third-and-3, running back Ameer Abdullah beat linebacker Chad Muma badly on a 20-yard route to the end zone, but Carr was woefully short with the lob pass. The Raiders settled for a field goal, which the defense gave right back in the final 45 seconds.

Defensively, the Raiders would have given up more points if not for a fumbled pitch from Lawrence to JaMycal Hasty in the first quarter. They don't get any pressure on the quarterback as it is, then they dropped their pass rushers in coverage often Sunday to help out the linebackers.

"They were creating some opportunities for themselves with getting guys underneath and we wanted to get in the passing lanes a little bit," McDaniels said. "Some of the balls were coming out quicker."

Lawrence was very efficient (25-for-31), and he was only hit four times and not sacked. McDaniels conceded that the Raiders had nothing for him.

"We played zone and we played man and he was able to move the ball regardless," McDaniels said.

Blowing a 17-point lead for the third time in two months is definitely a team effort.

The Raiders, since 2000, are now 53-5 when leading by 17 or more points in a game, according to TruMedia. Three of those losses have come this season.

It gets worse.

Only three teams in NFL history have now lost three games in a season that they led by 17 or more points. The other two were the 2020 Chargers and the 2003 Falcons, and both of those coaches (Anthony Lynn and Dan Reeves) were fired after that season.

McDaniels was just handed a four-year contract, and his good friend Ziegler is the new general manager. It's hard to imagine that McDaniels will get fired after one year. Ziegler told Davis that they were trying to win this season while looking to the future, so Davis won't be happy if the losses keep piling up.

The Packers, according to a person with knowledge of the discussions, tried to deal a second-round pick for tight end Darren Waller at the trade deadline last week, and the Raiders passed. Waller hasn't played in a month. Why would a 2-5 team (then) that is admittedly half-looking to the future not make that trade?

Maybe because the new regime now thinks it needs to win some games this season to secure the coach a second season.

There is clearly a disconnect somewhere when a team comes out flat for games like the Raiders did in New Orleans, or keeps blowing big leads. One wonders how the players will keep responding to longer meetings and practices under the new staff when they are not getting results.

When I asked him, Carr didn't want to share his thoughts on the similar feeling he has had in the come-from-ahead losses this season.

"There is a lot I want to say," Carr said. "But I don't need to say it here, you know. There are things that need to be said and things that need to be addressed. The urgency part of it … after 30 minutes of football, we have to learn that the game is not over.

"There are things in-house that we will talk about man to man."

Are those things that Carr felt had been addressed in Sarasota?

"I am not going to lie, I thought they were," he said. "We had a really good week of practice, but having a really good week doesn't give you a win on Sunday."

The Sarasota Ritz-Carlton is now dead to the Raiders, who return home only hoping they have finally hit bottom.

Reed: The Raiders are done this season after another humiliating collapse
By Tashan Reed
November 6, 2022

Another collapse.

At first, everything was going right for the Raiders in Jacksonville on Sunday. The defense forced three consecutive stops, the Derek Carr to Davante Adams connection looked unstoppable and Las Vegas jumped out to a commanding 17-0 lead over the Jaguars early in the second quarter. Coming off a shutout stinker against the Saints, coach Josh McDaniels couldn't have asked for a better response. Jacksonville was showing no signs of putting up much of a fight, and the Raiders looked well on their way to potentially turning things around. What could possibly go wrong?

Well, the Jaguars outscored the Raiders by 24 points the rest of Sunday afternoon on their way to a 27-20 comeback win. For the Raiders (2-6), it's a backbreaking meltdown that effectively ends their season.

"We've shown spurts of being a good football team, but showing spurts of being a good football team gives you two wins," Carr said. "You have to do it all the time. The good teams do it all the time, and we have not done that."

This isn't an anomaly. This is who the Raiders are. The Raiders have lost only eight games when leading by 17 points in franchise history, according to CBS; three of those losses have come this season, with Sunday's loss joining the Week 2 loss to Arizona and Week 5 loss to Kansas City.

"There's a lot I want to say," Carr said after a lengthy pause when asked to explain why the Raiders can't hold onto leads. "But, if I'm honest, I don't need to say it here."

There's only one explanation: This is a bad football team.

In Week 2, the Raiders built a 20-0 halftime lead over the Cardinals only to watch it slowly crumble into an overtime loss. In Week 5, the Raiders shocked the Chiefs with a 17-0 second-quarter advantage, but they'd lost it by the end of the third quarter. And this week, the Raiders allowed the Jaguars to slowly walk them down in the final 2 1/2 quarters.

The only form of consistency for the Raiders across their three blown leads is that none of them were fluky. In each, they methodically felt apart.

"It's not good enough," McDaniels said. "I know that. We gotta coach better in those situations. We gotta avoid feeling like the situation is OK. I don't sense that our team relaxes when we have that situation, but obviously that might be the wrong thing."

The Raiders had no shortage of opportunities to stop the bleeding against the Jaguars. On the ensuing possession after they went up 17-0, the Jaguars faced a third-and-8 in Raiders territory. Amik Robertson was sent on a nickel blitz and was lined up to sack Trevor Lawrence. Not only did the quarterback avoid him, but he scrambled 16 yards for a first down. Four plays later, the Jaguars had their first points of the game.

Initially, it didn't look like it would be a big deal. After driving to the Jaguars' 20-yard line, the Raiders offense had a prime opportunity to extend the lead back to three scores. On third-and-3, they dialed up a pass to Ameer Abdullah on a wheel route concept. Abdullah was open for what would've been a touchdown, but Carr underthrew him and they settled for a field goal. Inexplicably, the defense managed to give those three points right back in 45 seconds before halftime as the Jaguars raced down for their own field goal as the half expired.

With the Jaguars set to get the ball to start the third quarter, the Raiders' lead was clearly already on shaky footing. Once the Jaguars punched the Raiders in the mouth with a 54-yard kickoff return, took advantage of the short field to score another touchdown and forced a punt, the writing was on the wall. From there, the Jaguars offense converted its seventh consecutive third down in the form of a Travis Etienne Jr. touchdown run, and the Raiders found themselves trailing 24-20.

"From the opening kickoff, I thought, in the third quarter, they seemed like they were just a little bit ahead of us," McDaniels said. "Guys fought, but we gotta learn how to play a full, four-quarter game. We've played stretches in each game mostly where we play good football, but that's not enough to win in this league."

Even with their defense getting abused, the Raiders had every chance to avoid this. And, for a moment, the offense looked like it might capitalize on the opportunity. They gained three first downs and pushed into Jaguars territory, but then they faltered. After back-to-back Josh Jacobs runs for no gain, Carr was forced to escape the pocket due to pressure on third down and wasn't able to connect on a pass intended for Adams.

It felt like the hits were only going to keep coming for the Raiders, but a defense that had looked hopeless for four straight drives actually managed to force a stop. While they should have never been in that position, the offense had plenty of time — 7:28 remaining in the fourth quarter — to go take the game. In response, they went three-and-out.

The Jaguars could've sounded the death knell there. They gained two first downs, advanced to the Raiders' 23-yard line and forced them to burn all three timeouts. When faced with a fourth-and-1, though, they opted to settle for a field goal rather than trying to ice the game and run the clock out. They missed, which once again put the Raiders in a spot where they had plenty of time — 3:03 remaining — to go take the game. The Jaguars were practically begging them to. Surely, the Raiders wouldn't squander their third opening in a row to do so.

Yet after an 8-yard completion to Hunter Renfrow on the first play of the drive, the Raiders offense malfunctioned. They had only 2 yards to gain but dialed up two straight deep shots to Adams that fell incomplete. Adams is their best player and set a season high with 146 receiving yards in the first half alone, so targeting him obviously isn't a bad idea, but he'd been held to just one catch for 0 yards in the second half and the Jaguars had clearly keyed in on him.

Plus, they needed only 2 yards. With the amount of time left on the clock, they didn't need to go into pass-only mode, especially not passes targeting the deep areas of the field. Considering that Jacobs was averaging 5.0 yards per carry in the second half, it was strange that he didn't get at least one attempt. It was a puzzling sequence of play calling for McDaniels.

"We did," McDaniels said when asked if he considered running the ball. "You can run it there, for sure."

With all that being said, McDaniels' fourth-and-2 play call left Renfrow open for first down yardage. Carr just missed him. The Raiders got the ball back with 63 seconds left after a Jaguars field goal, but they'd clearly shown they weren't capable of avoiding their fate by then. It was a humiliating ending that encapsulates this lost season for the Raiders.

"We have to do it," McDaniels said when asked if the team is close to avoiding such outcomes. "It doesn't matter what I stand up here and talk about or what somebody else talks about; it's about actions."

No matter what the Raiders say in the days ahead, there's no coming back from this. They're done.

Adams: No way Raiders should be losing like this
By Paul Gutierrez
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE -- The shock in the Las Vegas Raiders locker room was palpable after their latest record-setting come-from-ahead loss, 27-20, at the Jacksonville Jaguars on Sunday.

And while defensive end Maxx Crosby had "no idea" if there was a silver lining in the defeat, slot receiver Hunter Renfrow said the goal was to "not walk around like it's a funeral" and stay positive, and quarterback Derek Carr preferred to keep his most private thoughts to himself, receiver Davante Adams spoke freely.

"There's no reason why we should be losing games like this and it's frustrating," Adams said at his locker, after a lengthy talk with Carr. "If we played for a s---ty team, then it's one thing. But that's not what it is."

What it was, though, was Las Vegas losing its third game of the season after holding at least a 17-point lead -- 20-0 against Arizona, 17-0 at Kansas City and 17-0 in Jacksonville -- to fall to 2-6 under new coach Josh McDaniels. This after being 10-7 and a playoff team last year under interim coach Rich Bisaccia, who took over in Week 6 after Jon Gruden resigned.

The Raiders' three losses after leading by at least 17 points this season ties the mark for most such losses by any team in NFL history, and it's only been done two other times, by the 2020 Los Angeles Chargers and the 2003 Atlanta Falcons, according to ESPN Stats & Information research. The Raiders had never had two such losses before this season.

Over the last two weeks, the Raiders have been shut out by the New Orleans Saints and then blown the 17-point lead, marking the eighth time in league history a team has been blanked and blown such a lead in consecutive games, regardless of order, the first time it's happened since the Cleveland Browns did it in 2009. The Raiders, who also accomplished the ignominious mark in 1997, are the only team to do it multiple times now.

Entering this season, the Raiders had won 52 of their last 54 games, dating to 2000, when leading by at least 17 points.

Perhaps most galling for the Raiders in general, Adams in particular, was how fast they had started by throwing the ball to Adams. In building a 17-0 lead, Adams had nine catches, on nine targets, for a season-high 146 yards and two touchdowns. It was the first time in his nine-year career Adams had at least 100 yards receiving and multiple receiving TDs in a half.

The rest of the game, though, Adams had one catch, for no yards, on eight targets.

"The way we were attacking in the first half was working, to a certain extent," Adams said. "I feel like we got away from that and started playing the game a little different and that's not the way we've got to do it."

Still, Adams would also say he was not taking a shot at his coaches or McDaniels' scheme.

"But at the end of the day, if I'm rolling in certain situations like that, or if the pass game is something that's helping us move the ball and win games, then, obviously, that's the idea," Adams said. "You want to stick with what's working."

Even, as Adams said, the Raiders want to have a balanced offense, with one of the top running backs in the league in Josh Jacobs.

"So, I understand that part of it," he said, "but I also understand the part that if it ain't broke, don't fix it. That's kind of the way I think ... so at the end of the day, we don't need to make it any spicier than it needs to be, but I think y'all feel me on that.

"We did a decent enough job to still put ourselves in a decent position moving into the second half and then, we just, basically fell apart. I don't even know how else to even characterize it. But it's frustrating. Ain't no way we should be losing games at the rate we are, let alone the way that we are, and over the middle at the end of the game, I've got to make a play on that ball."

Carr, meanwhile, kept a relatively tight lip when asked about the Raiders blowing their third 17-plus point lead.

"There is a lot I want to say, you know, but if I'm honest, I don't need to say it here," he said. "There are things that will be said [internally] ... things in-house that we'll talk about man-to-man and all that kind of stuff that could be addressed."

McDaniels, who is 7-23 as a head coach after a 6-0 start with the Denver Broncos in 2009, said most of Adams' success in the first half came against single-coverage.

And a week after apologizing for the showing in the 24-0 loss in New Orleans, he said the latest collapse was a result of not playing well for 60 minutes. The Raiders also spent the week practicing at the IMG Academy in Bradenton, Florida.

"I don't sense that our team relaxes when we have that situation, but obviously that might be the wrong thing, you know what I mean?" McDaniels said. "And so, we've played, like I said, some stretches of football that are good. Good enough to get ahead and produce a lead, but that's not what this league is about."

Jaguars rally from 17-0 deficit to beat Raiders 27-20
By Mark Long
November 6, 2022

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. -- Jacksonville's Tyson Campbell believes he can cover anyone in the league. His confidence had to be wavering at least a little at halftime against Davante Adams.

Adams had nine catches for 146 yards and two touchdowns through two quarters Sunday, looking unstoppable while Campbell mostly shadowed him all over the field.

“When you’re going against great receivers, they’re going to make their plays," Campbell said. “But you got to throw your punches, too.”

Campbell delivered all the blows in the second half as the Jaguars rallied from a 17-point deficit to beat Adams and the Las Vegas Raiders 27-20. The victory ended a five-game skid for the Jaguars (3-6).

“We were the hungrier team in the second half, and that got us the win,” Campbell said.

Travis Etienne ran for 109 yards and two touchdowns. Trevor Lawrence played one of the best games of his career, throwing for 235 yards and a score. And Jacksonville finally won a close game.

It was the second-biggest comeback in franchise history for the Jaguars, who climbed out of a 21-point hole to beat the New York Giants in 2014.

No one saw this one coming.

The Raiders (2-6), who were shut out last week at New Orleans and spent the week regrouping in Bradenton, Florida, dominated early. They led 17-0 after 20 minutes, scored on four of their first five possessions and were up 20-7 just before halftime.

Adams was the key, getting open often from several different spots. But Campbell eventually stiffened against the five-time Pro Bowler, who had one reception for no yards after the break.

“We certainly had chances in the second half to complete balls to him and anybody else,” Raiders coach Josh McDaniels said. “It wasn’t like we didn’t have opportunities there. They didn’t double him to the point where we couldn’t throw the ball to him.”

Jacksonville's Riley Patterson hit the right upright with 3:03 remaining, giving the Raiders a chance late. But Derek Carr threw high over the middle to Hunter Renfrow on fourth down. Patterson made a 48-yarder with a minute left, and the Raiders failed to mount much of a challenge with their final possession.

Las Vegas' final five drives ended with three punts, a turnover on downs and a fumble.

“We've got to learn how to play full four quarters,” said McDaniels, whose team has now lost three games in which it led by at least 17 points.

The Raiders were up 20-0 at home to Arizona in Week 2 and ended up losing 29-23 in overtime and led 17-0 at Kansas City in Week 5 before falling 30-29.

“You just got to continue doing whatever it was that put you in a position,” Adams said. “I feel like we’ve gotten away from it too many times.”

The victory was huge for Jacksonville, which had been 0-6 in one-score games before Sunday. Coach Doug Pederson’s team was tied or held a lead in five of those six losses.

“You don't want to put too much emphasis on wins and losses, but this is a step in the right direction,” Pederson said. “We've been really close. It's great to see our team finish.”

Etienne finished with his third consecutive 100-yard game. Lawrence completed 25 of 31 passes. He also scrambled for 53 yards and was charged with a fumble. Christian Kirk caught eight passes for 76 yards and a score.

Carr completed 22 of 37 passes for 266 yards, with both TD passes to Adams, who finished with 10 catches for 146 yards. Adams was targeted eight times in the second half and caught one.

“If I want to be the best in this league, I’ve got to step up and make plays," Campbell said. "I took pride in that. I feel like the team was counting on me. I was all for it.”

AGNEW RETURNS

Jaguars kick returner Jamal Agnew made a difference in his first game since missing two with a knee injury. He had a season-long 52-yard kickoff return to start the second half, setting up Lawrence’s 7-yard touchdown pass to Kirk that seized the momentum.

KEY INJURIES

Raiders LB Divine Deablo injured his right forearm on the team’s second defensive play. He was carted to the locker room and quickly ruled out. ... Fellow Raiders LB Denzel Perryman left the field in the third quarter to get his ribs taped but he only missed a few plays. ... Jaguars TE Evan Engram missed part of the third-quarter series with a back injury but returned to start the final 15 minutes. ... Jaguars S Rayshawn Jenkins left in the fourth to be evaluated for a concussion and did not return.

'A tale of two halves': Raiders stung again by lack of second-half production
By Levi Edwards
November 6, 2022

"A tale of two halves" can describe what happened in Jacksonville, Fla., according to Head Coach Josh McDaniels.

The Raiders, after suffering a shutout defeat to the New Orleans Saints, came out firing on all cylinders to start Sunday's game against the Jaguars. A fumble recovery from Maxx Crosby and two Davante Adams touchdown catches put the Silver and Black up 17-0 in the first half. Tack on Daniel Carlson's 40th straight made field goal, and they ran back into the visiting room with a 20-10 lead at halftime.

But the Raiders were shutout in the second half, and allowed the opposition to score 17 unanswered points.

On the offensive side of the ball, everything seemed to be going Derek Carr and Adams' way in the first half. The same can't be said for the last two quarters. The All-Pro receiver caught just one pass for no gain after connecting with Carr nine times for 146 yards earlier in the game.

"After 30 minutes of football, we have to learn that the game is not over," Carr said following the loss. "I feel like I've been in this situation a lot where new coaches are 'this or that' and you have to teach the new guys 'this is how we do it' or 'this is the mentality.' And that gets tiring, but it's my job."

"I think the way we were attacking in the first half, it was working to a certain extent. We could've been better, but it was working, and I feel like we got away from that and started playing the game a little different," Adams said in agreement with the quarterback. "That's not the way we've got to do it. We've got to take the field, be ready to make plays and convert on whatever is called."

With the Raiders now 2-6, it's the third blown lead of at least 17 points this season.

"We've played some stretches of football that are good, good enough to get ahead and produce a lead, but that's not what this league is about," said McDaniels, taking accountability for his team. "This league is about playing the second half just as well as you played the first half and trying to win a game.

"Sometimes, lessons are learned the hard way, and obviously, we've had to swallow some difficult ones this year. But I have a lot of confidence and faith in the way that these guys will respond. They always do."

Quick Snap: Raiders can't halt Jaguars' comeback bid on the road
By Levi Edwards
November 6, 2022

The deciding down
Third down was arguably the most crucial factor of the game that determined the outcome in the Raiders' 27-20 loss.

The Jaguars found success in third down situations, converting 9 of 14 throughout the game. As for the Raiders, they converted on three of their 11 third downs. The Jaguars offense also had the ball five more minutes than the Silver and Black.

Special teams matters
After losing Hall of Fame Punter Ray Guy on Thursday, AJ Cole did him justice Sunday. The Pro Bowl punter had success in his limited opportunities, setting up the defense well with an average 49 yards per punt.

Daniel Carlson turned in another solid performance with two made field goals and two extra points. He's now made 41 straight field goals spanning over two seasons.

The ground game
Travis Etienne Jr. was a problem for a Raiders defense, especially in the second half.

The Jaguars heavily featured the running back in their gameplan to much success, as he finished with 109 rushing yards on 28 carries plus two touchdowns. It was his third straight game this season with at least 100 rushing yards and a touchdown.

On the other side of the ball, Josh Jacobs finished with 67 rushing yards on 17 carries.

Raiders to sign Sidney Jones
By Myles Simmons
November 6, 2022

Some help is on the way for Las Vegas' secondary.

The Raiders are signing Sidney Jones, according to ESPN's Adam Schefter.

Jones was waived by the Seahawks after they did not find a trade partner for him on Tuesday. Jones had played limited snaps in three appearances for the Seahawks this season, recording five total tackles. Seattle had acquired him from Jacksonville last year via trade. He appeared in 16 games with 11 starts, recording 10 passes defensed.

Jones started his career as an Eagles second-round pick in 2017. He has appeared in 50 career games with 25 starts, recording four interceptions and 29 passes defensed.

The 2-6 Raiders will host the 3-5-1 Colts next weekend.

Davante Adams: You want to stick with what's working
By Josh Alper
November 6, 2022

The Raiders have not done much well this season, but they've proven adept at blowing 17-point leads.

They did it for the third time this year in Sunday's game against the Jaguars and dropped to 2-5 when the Jags finished off the 27-20 win. The Raiders built their lead on the back of the passing offense as Derek Carr threw for 223 yards and Davante Adams caught a pair of touchdowns before halftime.

Adams had just one catch after the break, however, and the Raiders were shut out after the break. After the game, Adams told reporters that "there's no reason why we should be losing games like this and it's frustrating." He was particularly frustrated by the downturn in the passing game and said he thinks "if it ain't broke, don't fix it" is the right approach offensively.

"It's not a shot at my coaches," Adams said, via Paul Gutierrez of ESPN.com. "I love my coaches. I love them to death, and I think that I've had an incredible time, aside from losing these games, just growing with them and finding ways to try to continue to do this and I wouldn't trade them at all. But at the end of the day, if I'm rolling in certain situations like that, or if the pass game is something that's helping us move the ball and win games, then, obviously, that's the idea. You want to stick with what's working."

Very little's been working for the Raiders thus far, so Adams is probably right about sticking with something that is successful but it's getting late for things to fall into place inVegas.

Jaguars erase 17-0 deficit to beat Raiders 27-20
By Myles Simmons
November 6, 2022

The Jaguars were down 17-0 after Davante Adams' second touchdown reception of the game.

The Raiders were rolling. Adams had six catches for 88 yards with a TD after just the first quarter alone.

But you don't win a game just because you're ahead with 10:51 left in the second quarter.

And so, the Jaguars outscored the Raiders 27-3 for the rest of the game and beat Las Vegas 27-20.

Jacksonville got on the board with running back Travis Etienne's 1-yard touchdown run with 4:50 left in the second quarter. And the club narrowed the deficit with Riley Patterson's 44-yard field goal as time expired in the second period.

Then head coach Doug Pederson's squad dominated the second half. Receiver Christian Kirk caught a 7-yard touchdown with 10:15 left in the third quarter to make the score 20-17. And Etienne posted the go-ahead touchdown with a 5-yard run early in the fourth quarter.

The Raiders had a couple of late chances. But on fourth-and-2 from the Las Vegas 39 with 2:30 left, quarterback Derek Carr's pass went off Hunter Renfrow's hands for a turnover on downs.

Patterson made it 27-20 with a 48-yard field goal with 1:08 left. But the Raiders didn't do anything with their last chance, a 7-yard sack on third-and-10 taking away any realistic shot of a fourth down conversion.

Adams had nine catches on nine targets for 146 yards with two touchdowns in the first half. He finished the game with 10 catches on 17 targets with 146 yards and two touchdowns.

Carr ended the game 21-of-36 passing for 259 yards with two TDs.

Per Josh Dubow of the Associated Press, in 628 regular-season and postseason games before head coach Josh McDaniels arrived this year, the club had lost just three times when leading a game by at least 17 points. In 2022, the Raiders have now lost three games when leading by at least 17 points.

For the Jaguars, quarterback Trevor Lawrence was 25-of-31 for 235 yards with a touchdown. Etienne had another strong game with 109 yards rushing and a pair of rushing touchdowns. He also had two catches for 17 yards.

At 3-6, the Jaguars will head to Kansas City to play the Chiefs next weekend.

The 2-6 Raiders will host the 3-5-1 Colts in Week 10.

Josh McDaniels Explains All the Lessons He's Learned
By Albert Breer
June 3, 2022

It's 11 a.m. local time on the third Monday in May, and new Raiders coach Josh McDaniels is pointing to his left—over a shelf full of photos with family, Lombardi Trophies, and old coworkers like Robert Kraft and Tom Brady in them—and out the window of his corner office into the parking lot, with the Spring Mountains in the backdrop.

"One of the easy things that we've tried to keep in mind is we'll get the best out of everyone here if they love coming to work every day because they love who they're working for," said McDaniels, sitting behind his desk. "That sounds so ridiculously simple. Seriously. But it's the truth. If the players enjoy being coached by us the way we're coaching them, if the coaches enjoy being treated the way they're being treated, if the scouts and the personnel department enjoy the way that [GM] Dave [Ziegler] runs the meetings and gives everybody a voice, then when they drive in here in the morning? You should see this."

The gated blacktop lot, adjacent to a set of three practice fields, is filled with cars, a long jump shot away from a desk full of binders and orderly stacks of paper.

"You drive in here at 6 a.m.? I'm not s---ting you when I tell you more than half these cars are already here," McDaniels continued. "If I come in at 6, I'm like the 75th person in the building. If I come in at 5, I'm probably the 15th person. And that's what I'm saying. We wanted that to be the case."

The 46-year-old isn't patting himself on the back, and he's not doing that for Ziegler, who left a job leading New England's personnel department to come with him, either.

Instead, on this spring afternoon, he's trying to bring to life the vision he and Ziegler have set out, to reinvigorate one of the NFL's most iconic brands after a year of nonstop tumult inside the franchise. And once you dig into it, you'll see that what McDaniels is doing in pointing to that lot is actually the opposite of chest-thumping. Because this vision of his, and theirs, is really a result of being humbled, being reflective and trying to be better.

At the end of the desk, with his back to all those cars, is Ziegler—the Raiders' 44-year-old GM who was brought into the NFL by McDaniels 12 years ago, who's known McDaniels since he was a college recruit and has known of McDaniels for even longer.

The temptation for so many has been to brand the Raiders' beautiful, still relatively new facility as Patriots West, since McDaniels and Ziegler got here and quickly imported a slew of lieutenants and ex–New England players. The truth, though, is that's not what this is, and it's apparent from the minute you step into the building. It's not the Patriot Way, either. It's, in their words, "Our Way," and by "our," they're referencing way more than two people.

"I think Our Way is the foundation of everything being built on relationships, and being inclusive and being open-minded," Ziegler said. "And at the same time still being convicted on the things we believe in."

"But also giving people an opportunity," McDaniels added. "Bill [Belichick] gave us the opportunity to be ourselves, and to be independent thinkers and to have our own opinion, and he didn't micromanage that. And that's one of the best things that I've paid attention to the last decade of my life, watching him do it and then feeling like, That's how you have to do it. … Our Way is Let's try to do it the best way, and it might not be what we know."

It took a long time for McDaniels to get here—it's been more than 11 years since he was fired by the Broncos, and more than four years since he stepped away from the Colts' job to stay in New England. But now that he's arrived, he's bringing all that he's learned with him. And, fair warning, it looks significantly different than you might expect.

Las Vegas's new assistant GM, Champ Kelly, chose to be where he is now, in an office wedged between Ziegler and holdover exec DuJuan Daniels (himself a former Patriot scout), and it might sound funny that he did so, at least in part, because of the experience of working with McDaniels in Denver in 2009 and '10.

But it's the truth in why when Ziegler came calling, and Kelly considered his options, the decision to reunite with a guy he saw fired a decade ago was easy.

"First of all, out of respect to the football mind, it's rare," said Kelly, smiling broadly. "But the person, I didn't feel like everybody got a chance to know and uncover who the person was. … Not that he wasn't himself before, but maybe not as many people got the chance to see that."

There was a very specific reason for that.

McDaniels was 32 when he got to Denver. And the workload he foisted upon himself when he arrived was maybe the biggest way in which he showed his naivete. He had trouble getting the assistants he wanted out of their contracts with other teams. He committed—once Broncos owner Pat Bowlen fired the Goodman father-and-son tandem (Jim and Jeff) that had run Denver's personnel department—to installing the Patriots' scouting system with first-year GM Brian Xanders. He didn't hire an offensive coordinator.

He worked and worked and worked.

“It was me and Xanders together trying to implement the scouting system—the only one I knew, that was it—and prepare for a draft, and put in an offensive system, and teach them how I wanted to coach the quarterback, and help the defense do certain things, and it was just so many things,” McDaniels said. “It was impossible. It was so cumbersome to try to attack everything and be a part of everything; it was impossible to be good at any of it. And that’s my fault. It wasn’t anybody else’s fault.”

Worse, for McDaniels, is what he let slip, which is where it swings back to what Kelly was saying. The reason few got to really know McDaniels in Denver was largely because by spreading himself too thin, he’d made himself scarce to much of the team.

He’d dictate what he wanted from up high, and the message would filter down through others to save him time. And that meant if there was bad news to be given, there might not be a relationship built on the front end to soften the blow, nor would McDaniels always be delivering that bad news on the back end. Instead, he’d be grinding away on the draft board, or third down prep or anything else he chose not to delegate.

Perception has long held that McDaniels’s failures in Denver came because people thought he was trying to be someone else (namely Belichick). What may be closer to the truth is that too many people in the building didn’t know who McDaniels was at all, and eventually that became a big problem.

“I didn’t understand the significance and the value that goes with everybody in the building feeling credibly satisfied with how they’re being valued by the organization,” McDaniels continued. “I didn’t have a great perspective on it. I knew I was valued in New England to a degree. But I don’t think I was aware of somebody needing to say to the video guys, Hey, you guys did a great job with that. Or the equipment guys, or the trainers, I just wasn’t doing that in New England [from 2001 to ’08]. I didn’t have to do it.

“And I think once I got pulled in too many directions, where I wasn’t capable of handling all that, [relationships] suffered because of it. And I’d say now, if I was gonna choose between two things, I would choose the other stuff. The relationship part of it, I would say, would be more important to me than some meeting with X’s and O’s.”

Ziegler got to Denver in May 2010 as a scouting assistant. Kelly, Xanders and current Raiders director of scout development Keith Kidd, interviewed, then hired him on McDaniels’s recommendation. And since the two were on opposite ends of the spectrum, they didn’t interact much.

But Ziegler saw enough to see what his friend was doing to himself.

“We didn’t interact a ton, because he was going in a million different directions,” Ziegler said. “You could tell there was a lot more pressure on him than the guy I was around before. And comparing where he’s at now to then? He’s so much more relaxed, I’d say. … It’s night-and-day in terms of just his day-to-day personality.”

He had a decade to confront reality. How the Raiders are being built shows he's doing just that.

The first time Ziegler saw McDaniels with his own eyes was in the fall of 1994. The former was a junior receiver at Tallmadge High, a mid-sized suburban school near Akron not known for its football. The latter was the son of a legendary coach and senior quarterback at powerhouse Canton McKinley. McKinley played the 100th installment of its rivalry with neighboring Massillon that November, and the rematch was set for the playoffs two weeks later.

"Massillon had a quarterback that went to Akron," Ziegler said. "Willie …"

"Spencer," McDaniels cut in.

"Willie Spencer," Ziegler said. "And I'm a sports fanatic, so I still remember there was that article with you and Willie."

"Akron Beacon Journal," McDaniels said.

Ziegler then described the cover of that day's paper—with the two QBs mean-mugging each other—and told the story of how, with his season over, he went to see McDaniels and McKinley at the Akron Rubber Bowl that Friday night. So for Ziegler, it was pretty exciting the next fall when he went on a recruiting visit to John Carroll, and was hosted by a particular Carroll freshman. "When I first met him, I thought that was cool," Ziegler said. "He played in the Big 33 game. No one from Tallmadge had even played Division I football."

Ziegler enrolled at Carroll in 1996, and the two became what McDaniels refers to as "linemates" in the receiver rotation, with their future New England coworker (and now Texans GM) Nick Caserio at quarterback. "They'd send us in there; it was like the two hoodlums," McDaniels said. "The guys that were gonna get underneath the guy's facemask and have the officials breaking us up when we're blocking." They bonded over that similarity and also some differences.

One contrast was in how Ziegler played, with a borderline-reckless aggressiveness that showed in his game as a return man. "He wasn't going to fair catch," McDaniels said. "He was right, though, because he was really good at it." Another difference came with how, as housemates during McDaniels's senior and Ziegler's junior year, Ziegler was away a lot, doing his studying at the library, while McDaniels would do it at the house.

"So when it comes to all the roles he's had, it's the same thing," McDaniels said. "And that's been one of the best things about him forever; he's not gonna worry about trying to tell you what he thinks you want him to say. And in our profession, especially when you're a young guy and you're trying to come up, it's, Man, what does Josh want me to say? Or, What does Bill want me to say? And that's not Dave. Dave is, I'll do the work, I'll have my own educated opinion and that's what I'll believe in; and I'm gonna tell you the truth."

That dynamic between the two of them became the template for how they'd fill out their staffs in Vegas. And it sustained their relationship over time, even if they weren't talking all that regularly, with each having his own group of college friends, and a smaller crew (that included Caserio) connecting them.

So when McDaniels went to cut his teeth under legends-to-be Nick Saban at Michigan State in 1999 and Belichick in New England in 2001, Ziegler took the scenic route. After college, he landed a job as a ninth-grade social studies teacher and freshman football coach at Kenston High in Bainbridge, Ohio. He went to Arizona to coach and teach. He wanted to see whether he could take it to the next level after that, sending letters out to 30 colleges looking for a graduate assistant spot. Only John Carroll responded. So he got a counseling master's there.

Then, he was a limited-earnings coach at Division I-AA Iona (making $7,000/year), before returning to Arizona to work as a guidance counselor and coach at prep power Chaparral, which is where McDaniels found him in 2010. As it turned out, all that experience would pay off in time, as Ziegler took his shot at scouting—first in Denver, where he was held over by John Elway, then in coming to Foxborough, on the good word of both Caserio and McDaniels.

Neither had any hesitation in advancing Ziegler's name to Belichick in 2014.

"I probably would have done that no matter what I was doing," McDaniels said. "Like if I was in sales, and he happened to be a salesman, I would've called. … It's almost like this unwritten rule [with JCU football alums]—if we stick our neck out for you, you're not letting us down."

Ziegler wouldn't. In Foxborough, he rose from pro scout, to pro director, to a role Belichick created for him, assistant director of player personnel, to replacing Caserio last year as the team's new director of player personnel.

Again, what McDaniels and Ziegler were looking for as they built their staff in Vegas mirrored what they saw in each other—football smarts, mental agility, emotional intelligence and the ability to bring differences to the table and challenge each other.

In a very natural way, they were able to inject the sort of alignment into the Raiders that McDaniels couldn't get with the Broncos: with three offensive assistants coming from New England with him; ex-Patriots assistant Pat Graham leaving a job as Giants defensive coordinator to take the same job in Vegas; and former Patriots assistant Jerry Schuplinski, who had left New England but stayed in Belichick's tree with the Giants and Dolphins, joining as senior offensive assistant. Likewise, Kelly jumped at the chance to reunite with Ziegler on the scouting side, and Patriots national scout Brandon Yeargan jumped aboard as Ziegler's new college scouting director after the draft.

That so many wanted to come was indicative of the rep both Ziegler and McDaniels carried.

For Graham, coaching in the AFC West—and the challenge of defending Patrick Mahomes, Russell Wilson and Justin Herbert—was a draw, as was the fact that the program in Vegas would, naturally, be familiar, with familiar values and principles. But it was McDaniels himself, too.

“One, he’s really smart. Two, he works hard. And there’s an extreme attention to detail,” Graham said. “[When] I was working on the opposite side of the ball in New England, you could see that. When you see him from afar, when I was at Green Bay and had to play against him, when I was at Miami and had to play against him, you could see that. … I would argue he’s the best play-caller in the league.”

And similarly, for Mick Lombardi, his personal relationship with McDaniels, and connection to the program were factors.

“My respect for him as a football person, it probably can’t get any higher,” the Raiders’ offensive coordinator said. “Him as a play-caller and him as a game-planner, it’s in my opinion at an elite level. And it’s something that I’ve been able to grow from. I’ve grown more over the last three, four years with him, as one of his position coaches, than I did my other seven years in the NFL. … So when he had this opportunity, and then presented me with an opportunity, it was, This is a no-brainer.”

But for every Lombardi or Graham or Kelly, or Carmen Bricillo, Jerry Schuplinski, Rob Ryan or Bo Hardegree, there was an Edgar Bennett or Cam Clemmons, holdovers from the previous Raiders staff. Or a Tom Delaney running contracts, or Chris Cortez running the training room, or Bobby Romanski running equipment—all Raiders employees going back decades. Or a Jon Gruden hire such as strength coach A.J. Neibel.

And that was where McDaniels and Ziegler wanted to strike a balance, bringing in enough people they trusted to delegate to already, while engendering trust by giving everyone in the building a shot to stay with the team after the new guys were ushered in.

This, they say, was never going to be a down-to-the-studs rebuild.

“If we had an opportunity to do something like this, whether it was together or separate, we were gonna go in there with the understanding—always assume the best of people, always assume that you’re talking to a really genuine, good human being that has a role and a job in this organization,” McDaniels said. “And let’s figure out what’s the best thing for the team and the organization going forward. But let’s give everyone the benefit of the doubt.

“And when you go in with that mindset, it’s a different feeling for them, and it’s a different feeling for you, because you’re not saying, Let’s go scorched earth, and get rid of this person and that person. We don’t need to do that. There were a ton of good people here.”

“We recognized there were some talented players on the team, too,” Ziegler added. “They had a core group of players that were good players. … So I came in with the mindset, too, I think we both did, Let’s see who these people are, let’s see what they know, let’s see what they’re about and let’s also take it as an opportunity to learn from them. There are some processes they have in place that I want to learn about—are they better than the processes I have?

“And in some cases, there are some things where it’s like, Yeah, I want to do that.”

On another level, it meant rewarding those people for what they’d done before.

McDaniels barely finished shaking hands with his new boss, owner Mark Davis, to accept the job in January before sitting down with Ziegler and a list of players to call. One by one, each guy would get to hear from his coach and GM. Maxx Crosby and Hunter Renfrow were on that ledger. Denzel Perryman, too. But there was never a doubt who’d get the first call.

“If that’s the guy you’re gonna try to win with at that position,” McDaniels says, “then that person deserves to hear from you right away.”

Truth be told, Derek Carr was already excited about playing for McDaniels from a football standpoint, just off eight years of institutional, inside-the-league knowledge of his offense, and what he’s capable of bringing out in a quarterback. But he didn’t have any idea what to expect from a personal standpoint. And while he knew the story of McDaniels and Jay Cutler from Denver, he planned to go into the new relationship open-minded.

That first phone call was just the first way in which McDaniels would exceed expectations.

“I’ve been through so many coaching changes. I’ve been through so many GM changes. And you know with every change, they may want to do things a new way,” Carr said. “And for them to make their first call me, one, it showed me who they are. They told me that they were committed to me. And the cool thing, too, is, in public, they’ve been committed to me. Usually when you get a new coach, GM, they kind of slow-play it like, Oh, we’ll see …

“I’ve been through that. My future is always up in the air, it seems like. But these guys just made it clear, No, we believe in you, and you’re our guy, and we believe we can win with you. And we’re going to prove that to you, too. We’re gonna sign you to an extension.”

They got into specifics in what they liked about him, too—his arm talent, his maturity, his competitiveness—and followed through on their word with a three-year, $121.5 million extension. And while not everyone made that sort of bank, those who remained, such as Crosby (and he got a four-year, $95 million extension), from the old staff were given the same sort of respect as the new brass seeded relationships.

The calls were especially impactful in light of what the guys had been through—two team president firings (one after McDaniels arrived), a midseason coach resignation amid controversy, a GM firing and the in-season imprisonment of a teammate, Henry Ruggs III, who was charged with DUI resulting in death after a fiery crash that killed a 23-year-old woman and her dog last November.

Crosby got his call five minutes after seeing the news on Twitter. He was with his agent, who said, “I bet you Coach calls right away.” Minutes later, the phone rang. It was McDaniels. And Crosby had a good idea, then and there, that good things would follow.

“We won 10 games in the National Football League. That’s not easy,” Crosby said. “We had a lot of distractions, a lot of things going on, and we still found a way to win. So there was no need to rebuild. It was just more about revamping what we already have. … And obviously they wanted to show their commitment to not only myself but DC. They want everybody on the same page. There’s no secrets. They’re very up-front and very honest about everything. And, for me, that’s all I want.”

Turns out, he got that, he got the money and he got more. In fact, as his deal was getting done in March, Crosby was solicited for information on free agents by Ziegler, and he was among the first to know when guys were added. He was in Ryan’s office, asking for Chandler Jones cutups (wanting to study technique), when McDaniels popped his head in to tell Crosby that Jones (another former Patriot) was about to become his teammate.

In a real way, in that moment, Crosby felt the skin he had in the game. And because the team was invested in him, it now goes the other way, too.

“[Maxx] Crosby’s contract extension, [Derek] Carr’s contract extension, for me?” McDaniels said. “Those were big deals, because you’re rewarding someone who’s earned it. And, yeah, they haven’t played for us yet. But we’ve already built up a trust and a relationship with the people. To me, it was everything we’re talking about.”

Those things are now prioritized, which is showing up in all sorts of ways. Here’s another: As McDaniels spoke from behind that desk, Carr was battling a cold, and soon thereafter the coach more or less forced the quarterback to go home, knowing that the illness was going around Carr’s family.

“Usually, football coaches are like, Do everything, and then if you can’t do it, whatever, we’ll figure it out,” Carr said. “He’s like, No, I care about you as a person, and I want to make sure you’re O.K., and the football part, I’m not worried about. You’ve proven you’ll take care of that. He has definitely shown the personal side, to the 100th degree, to me.”

A week later, McDaniels and Ziegler would work out free agent Colin Kaepernick, part of Ziegler’s commitment to pulling every lever in personnel. That might be awkward for some starting quarterbacks. For Carr, because the relationship was there, it wasn’t an issue.

On this Monday morning, McDaniels asks for a few minutes before we get started—Renfrow, whom guys here joke leads the building in questions, has one he needs answered, and new quarterback Jarrett Stidham (another ex-Patriot) wants a couple of minutes of his coach's time.

Neither needs to wait long to get his attention.

"One of the things I remember about my experience in Denver, there was always such a deadline for the next thing that I had to be a part of," McDaniels said. "And right now, I'm going on many less deadlines. Like, right now, Hunter had a question, and then Stidham had something he needed for me. O.K., I'm here. I'm not in a meeting, I'm not up on the third floor where someone can't find me, I'm not in the offensive staff room. There's none of that. …

"In New England [the second time around], I had one role. I wasn't spread too thin. So did I have a great relationship with the video guys? Hundred percent. The people in the equipment room, do I love those guys? Absolutely. One-hundred percent. Did I just text [Patriot PR chiefs] Stacey [James] and Aaron [Salkin] the other day because they won the Pete Rozelle Award? Yeah, because I have a great relationship with those people."

There are dozens of other examples of McDaniels practicing what he's preaching on the importance of those relationships. Once Matt Feeney was brought aboard as defensive quality control coach before the combine to complete the staff, McDaniels brought the group to the rooftop of The M Resort, the team's hotel, for dinner. Ziegler did the same for his scouts on a balcony at The M during Super Bowl week.

McDaniels has, on his desk, index cards with players' birthdays (Clelin Ferrell's card was atop it when I was there, with his birthday coming the next day), to remind him to write each guy a note when the day comes. That was an idea he actually got from Ziegler, who last year sent Patriots scouts handwritten letters before Christmas, personalized to tell each guy how and why he valued them.

And with so many coaches' and scouts' families still back in places such as New England, New York or Chicago, finishing out the school year while the days in Vegas have been long, McDaniels has worked to make up for what they're losing. Schuplinski's family was in for Easter week and, when they pulled up to the building, McDaniels hurried to the lobby to meet them ("He must've seen them from his office," Schuplinski said) and led them on a tour of the building himself.

Graham mentioned how McDaniels has given them some Fridays off, with plenty of notice to plan travel, and half days on Thursdays so they could get back home. And Lombardi had a story similar to Schuplinski's from April—he'd asked McDaniels whether he could go pick up his wife at the airport since she was landing in the middle of the workday.

"He was like, Absolutely, are you bringing them here?" Lombardi said. "I was like, Yeah, if it's O.K. And he was like, You bring them to my office first; I want to say hello. Stuff like that goes a long way."

McDaniels himself brought up the story of his chief of staff, Tom Jones, wanting to go see his son play in a Little League championship game during the team's rookie minicamp.

"Those are little things," he said. "But if he didn't feel comfortable enough with me, he wouldn't have come and asked. He'd have said, Honey, I can't be there; it's rookie minicamp, there's no way. I'm not asking. And they won the championship. That's cool. I don't want him to feel like you can't ask me that, because I'm gonna tell you, 100 out of 100, go. Go."

And these stories go back to what the Raiders are trying to build.

"That's the thing," Ziegler said. "The general vibe being in the building, there not being eggshells. … You can have the standard high, you can still give critical feedback, you can still hold people accountable, you can still do all those things, but have a vibe where people can be themselves, and people feel appreciated."

The results, just four months in, have been noticeable.

"It's unbelievable," Davis added. "There's a lot of good energy. They brought good people in. But they also gave the people that worked there an opportunity to keep their jobs, to earn their job, and a lot of them did. He gave everybody a chance, and that gave everyone a good feeling."

The idea is that cuddly, warm part of all this will allow people to be tough on one another, to hold each other accountable.

"I'd say for me that's from being a guidance counselor, being a teacher, those experiences," Ziegler said. "The relationship was really what you had to solidify first to make any progress, whether you're a classroom teacher or a guidance counselor, and you're trying to help someone through a problem."

"They won't trust you if you don't," McDaniels said.

"As a guidance counselor, you have to create it on the front end so if there is a problem down the road, you've already created the relationship, so you can help someone that's having a mental health issue, or going through something else," Ziegler continued. "The relationship has to come first."

May's rookie minicamp, for the coaches, allowed for proof of concept on that.

Day 1, to be frank, wasn't great. McDaniels was tough on the players. He was tough on the coaches. Some guys were out of shape. Other things weren't smooth. He let his staff hear it and gave the coaches a list of things to work through, that he thought just needed to be better. On the next day, Saturday, they were. And that's where Sunday morning's staff meeting began.

“He said, It was obvious that the stuff I said was poor; you guys put in the time, the effort, to challenge the players. I challenged you guys, and some of the stuff improved in a short period of time,” Graham said. “And he said, That’s a reflection on you guys, and he said thank you. He said, That’s what we’re looking for. And to me, he doesn’t have to say that. We all know that’s our job. But he’s reinforcing and taking the time to start the meeting off on Sunday saying that, that he recognizes it and he acknowledged it.”

More than just that, he empowered the coaches to make a difference, and Ziegler’s done the same with scouts, which has two benefits.

The first is the trust and faith that it generates.

After the draft ended, Ziegler put Kelly in command to captain the effort to sign college free agents, with Daniels, Shaun Herock and Andy Dengler also in leading roles. And before that, in the fifth round, there was a deadlock in the war room that led Ziegler and McDaniels to pull some coaches into a discussion, to break a tie on the pick of Tennessee DL Matt Butler.

“We liked Butler, too,” McDaniels said. “I’m just saying it was kind of close here, so we went down and said, Hey, give us your two cents on this again. Boom, boom, boom, Butler, done.”

On the coaching side, McDaniels will often give his coordinators the reins to change things. And while it might happen more naturally on defense, since McDaniels is still the offensive play-caller, and Graham an experienced coordinator, it happens on offense, too.

“His willingness to change things and do something different, let me do things like script practice or run certain drills I wanna run out there—that makes me feel valued,” Lombardi said. “I don’t feel like, Oh, man, I’m just a slavedriver doing what he wants. That’s not the case. Jerry and I are making the red zone tape for tomorrow. He trusts us to do it. We’re gonna do it, and we’re gonna present it to the offense tomorrow. That’s something where we feel like we’re part of something, big-time.”

Which is where the second benefit, for McDaniels, comes.

“You compare [Denver] with now, I know what my role is,” he said. “So I can be the head coach. I will be the play-caller, but I don’t have to be the general manager, I don’t have to be the director of pro personnel, I don’t have to be the quarterback coach, I don’t have to be the offensive coordinator, I don’t have to be the special teams coach.

“That lesson that I learned, and it was the biggest one I learned, is the one thing I’d say we’re doing the best job of right now. No question. I’m not pulled 100 different directions. And, again, in Denver, it wasn’t anybody’s fault but mine.”

It’s also why, in so many ways, this situation feels right.

As McDaniels is quick to point out, he and Ziegler could've gone separate ways. While structure and staffing were part of why McDaniels stepped away from Indy in 2018 (and he and Colts GM Chris Ballard are on good terms now, for the record), that was never about control. It hasn't been for either guy—McDaniels and Ziegler came close to getting jobs separately, in Philadelphia and Denver, last year.

"We never had some big, scripted-out plan," McDaniels said. "We were just two guys trying to continue to grow and aiming for something that might be out there for either one of us in the future individually. And if it happened to be together, it happened together. But I don't think we were ever like, Hey, let's hook arms. Because obviously in Philly, it wouldn't have been Dave [as GM]. And Dave interviewed in Denver, and that wouldn't have been me [as coach]."

But now that this is how it worked out, the two appreciate how it came together.

The one hang-up? The coach jokes that his friends said they never thought it'd be with the Raiders. And as he says that, he swivels his screen to show the black-and-silver helmet.

"My friends were the opposite," Ziegler says, getting a laugh from McDaniels. "You're totally a Raider! That's him. That's him."

Schuplinski has known McDaniels for 27 years—the two arrived together in Carroll's 1995 recruiting class. McDaniels recommended him to Belichick in '13, the two worked together for six years there and now are together again in Vegas. And just as he knows how much McDaniels has grown since Denver, he's actually seen as much growth more recently.

"His patience has really, really improved from when I was with him before," Schuplinski said. "I know, we all know, he looked back on his notes from the last time he had an opportunity to be a head coach. He's told all of us these stories—here's where I screwed up. I can see him making a real concerted effort from the moment I spoke with him about coming here to when I walked in the building through everything else; his patience has been unbelievable.

"Now that doesn't mean he's like, Yeah, do whatever you want. But his patience has been awesome."

McDaniels and Ziegler also know there are bigger tests ahead.

But there's belief here, that when the first losing streak happens, or when the first rash of injuries hits, the trust being built now will carry over. And that McDaniels is now just as likely to be with the defense as the offense on the practice field, or just as sure to help a player work out a personal issue as he is to drill him on his hand placement, or that Ziegler and McDaniels and their staffs take time to sit and eat lunch with players, or that they pop into people's offices, is no small part of it.

In fact, as they see it, it may be the biggest piece of the whole thing. They plan to set a high bar for everyone. They know it'll take investment on both ends to clear it.

“You can make it as complicated as you want it to be,” McDaniels said. “But the simplistic version of it, Dave and I would probably say about the same thing—there’s a championship way to do everything. We don’t have to have a meeting to describe that. It just is what it is. If you’re a scout, your report should be freaking detailed and on point. And if you’re a player, you should bust your ass in that period and do everything that you can to do the technique the way we’re asking you to do it.

“If you’re a coach, you should make sure you’re well prepared and that your message is simple and that players can understand what you’re saying and your communication is the way it should be. … If it’s the equipment room, guys’ stuff is in their locker in the morning when they come in. And you don’t have to micromanage that if you just say, Listen, we want to try to do things at a championship level. And to me we’re not just going to win a championship if 10 people are performing at that level. It really has to be everybody.”

Ziegler then looks at his old college teammate and adds, “And then when you see the things that are not there, you identify them.” And that, McDaniels points out, can come from anyone going to anyone else. That’s where, he says, everyone has skin in the game, and it truly becomes Our Way.

“The way we’re trying to do it is our way,” McDaniels continued. “It’s not kumbaya, but it’s also no eggshells. They know we love them. So when you pull them aside and correct them, it’s being received the way you want it to be received.”

“Because my group,” Ziegler said, “they know I’m gonna challenge them, too.”

“Everybody does,” McDaniels said. “We’re gonna challenge them. That’s how you win.”

And based on the look of that full parking lot, everyone here is ready to take on that challenge.

THE ATHLETIC

How Josh McDaniels' and Dave Ziegler's past could pay off for Raiders
By Jeff Howe
August 4, 2022

HENDERSON, Nev. — There's no room for subtlety in Las Vegas.

And for an organization like the Raiders, who established prominence during Al Davis' "Just win, baby" years, there's no excuse for a lack of urgency within their drive to contend.

As such, general manager Dave Ziegler and head coach Josh McDaniels have quickly made their mark in their first year together in the desert. They inherited a team that reached the playoffs last season, they made a pair of high-profile additions to the roster and they declared their intentions to compete immediately.

"Let's go try to be as good as we can right now, try to compete right now," Ziegler told The Athletic from his office that overlooks a beautiful indoor practice facility at the Intermountain Healthcare Performance Center. "For me, it's just like, why wait? Let's try to be great now. Let's try to be as good as we can now, build the best football team that we can now. And in doing so, you're going to have to make some aggressive choices to do that."

Ziegler and McDaniels played together at John Carroll University in the late 1990s and began working together in 2010 with the Broncos. They rejoined forces for nine seasons with the Patriots — McDaniels as offensive coordinator and Ziegler climbing his way to director of player personnel — and have long shared similar football philosophies.

So they were fully aligned when they signed edge rusher Chandler Jones to a three-year, $51 million contract a day before acquiring wide receiver Davante Adams from the Packers for a first- and second-round pick and giving him a historic five-year, $140 million deal. The Raiders also extended quarterback Derek Carr, receiver Hunter Renfrow and edge rusher Maxx Crosby to big-money deals despite each having term left on their contracts.

There'd be no rebuild in Vegas.

"I think you have to (take some swings), in my mind," Ziegler said. "The reality in this league is you have to win games. Obviously, if you're going to tear something completely down to the ground, there's a level of patience and discipline that comes with that, from the top of your organization all the way down. And everybody has to be on the same page with that. Ultimately, we didn't feel like that's where this team was, so we were going to take some aggressive swings. Let's build on what they had done last year and find some spots where we felt we could improve the team, and let's go do it."

Coming from the Patriots, who have a reputation for being financially conservative operators, Ziegler and McDaniels surely caused some heads to turn this offseason. But to understand how they got here, it's important to know where they've come from and how those experiences shaped them for potential success in their new roles with the Raiders.

'A person of conviction'

Ziegler has always acted with conviction. Because of that, his former colleagues in New England complimented his approach as aggressive by nature.

He was so diligent with his film study and preparation, so if Ziegler had to compile a scouting report or deliver a presentation in front of Bill Belichick, he was as thorough as possible. Ziegler wasn't timid about challenging others' ideas, whether it was Belichick or anyone else, so long as he felt his opinions were backed by substance, which was often the case.

Ziegler was comfortable taking chances long before his career in the NFL. After graduating from John Carroll in 2001, he taught history at Kenston (Ohio) High for a year while coaching wide receivers and defensive backs for the freshman team.

Ziegler later quit and moved to Arizona with enough money to get by until he found his next stop, a job at Arcadia High in Scottsdale.

He returned to John Carroll in 2004 as a graduate assistant before taking over as the receivers coach at Iona in 2006, when he also finished his master's degree in school counseling.

When the college coaching route didn't progress as quickly as Ziegler hoped — he also got rejected for a job on Dirk Koetter's staff at Arizona State — he again went back to Arizona, this time to work for a prominent Chaparral High program in Scottsdale to coach running backs, tight ends and special teams while also serving as a guidance counselor.

"There was a long time there when I was just trying to find my way in football," Ziegler said.

McDaniels eventually changed the scope of Ziegler's trajectory. In 2010, McDaniels, who took over as the Broncos head coach in 2009, called up his college friend to see if he'd be interested in becoming a scouting assistant.

Ziegler didn't know anything about scouting, but he did know the coaching avenue wasn't going as planned. Ziegler established a new career goal shortly after taking the job in Denver — he wanted to become a general manager.

"Those experiences gave me the confidence — like, 'Hey, you're going to figure it out,'" Ziegler said. "'You can take some risks. Ultimately, if you put in the work and treat people the right way, (if) you're diligent and intentional about being really good, it's going to work out.' I keep that same mindset now. I've always been a person of conviction.

"I've never been worried about getting fired. I'm not scared of that. I'll figure it out. Five years from now, whether I'm going to be a school counselor or a teacher and coaching high school football, then that's what I'll do, and I'll do the best job at that. Because of my life experiences, I don't operate with a lot of fear of failure. If I fail and that's how it is, then I'm going to keep moving forward. That's just how I am."

Ziegler joined the Patriots in 2013 and climbed the ladder by quickly impressing many in the organization. He was promoted in 2020 to Nick Caserio's assistant director of player personnel before taking over the top job a year later when Caserio left for the Texans.

Those last two years wound up being vital to Ziegler's personal development. The 44-year-old has always been so task-driven that he would write a daily list of everything he needed to accomplish, and he became proficient at getting through it all in meticulous order.

But while overseeing the personnel department, Ziegler learned that no two days will ever be the same. He had to be flexible and learn to overcome certain levels of stress when a day went off the rails — maybe because of a contract situation, an injury, a trade negotiation or any number of things that could routinely pop up.

"At first, there was a lot of stress and strain and frustration that came along with not being able to execute my plan for that day," Ziegler said. "It was a really great learning experience to challenge some areas where I was weak."

Ziegler still keeps his lists. And he pointed to a sign behind his desk with the acronym "WIN," or "what's important now."

"The last couple years — really last year — prepared me from a mental toughness standpoint," Ziegler said. "I don't think I was as mentally tough when I first started those jobs because I would get overwhelmed by some of those things. Those last couple years in New England really helped me sharpen some of the areas where I was weak. I'm now much more comfortable. I understand that I may not get all of those things done. I'm much more focused and intentional."

Ziegler was grateful for those experiences in New England. Real-time opportunities for self-reflection and evaluation became critical to his growth.

The same was true for a somewhat unconventional career path as a 20-something. He bounced between stops to learn about himself and how to advance as a professional. The path might not have been linear, but he knew he'd get there by being true to his values, treating people the right way and working with purpose.

"How is a guy who was a guidance counselor so many years ago now a GM?" Ziegler rhetorically asked, smiling. "Looking back, the path that I took is odd, but I wouldn't change it because I think it's benefited me a lot in a lot of different ways. It just ended up being one of those things where I got this opportunity, and I wanted to be great at it."

'I'm at peace'

McDaniels knows the results in Denver were a failure. That's why he spent a decade working to make sure the experience wasn't.

"The best part about my career," McDaniels told The Athletic, "was I was able to go through that and learn from it."

Consider that sentiment. After a 6-0 start, the Broncos lost 17 of McDaniels' final 22 games before he was fired. He traded quarterback Jay Cutler and wide receiver Brandon Marshall and drafted Tim Tebow in the first round.

And McDaniels, 46, has gained the perspective to refer to that learning experience as the best part of his career.

There's been a perception that McDaniels tried to be too much like Belichick during his first coaching tour, and there's a dose of truth to that. There's also a logical explanation behind it.

McDaniels joined the Patriots as a 23-year-old in 2001 and took over the Broncos at 32. He grew up as a coach under Belichick and only saw one way to do it.

"I think you do what you know," McDaniels said. "I wasn't trying to do that when I was there (in Denver). I probably resorted to the answers that I was familiar with when things came up. Sometimes that fits me, and sometimes it doesn't.

"For me, it was humbling to learn that you don't go and do it that exact same way. Because you can't. I'm not (Belichick). I haven't won six Super Bowls. I'm just trying to figure out how to get our team to practice well, improve now, be myself, communicate and be honest with them. I think that's the right way to do it. Whether we win or we lose at the end of the day, or how successful we are, we'll find that out as we go. Doing it the way that fits me the best, I'm at peace."

McDaniels' points of emphasis are working.

One key, he has believed, is relaying the why behind every decision. Time to practice outside under the vicious desert sun? OK, here's why. Or in the rain? Again, express why. Setting up a new focus in practice or meetings? Explain why.

"I don't think I've earned the right to tell them to do it without that. It's a really important piece of information that I've gathered for myself," McDaniels said. "Once you explain why, everybody is on the same page and understands it. If you just say, 'We're going to do this; just shut up and do it,' I don't have that. I can't do that.

"(The Patriots) didn't do it either when they started. I was there in 2001. There was a lot of, 'Here, we're going to do this, and here's why we're going to do it.' We're not 20 years in. We're 20 days in. I need to keep doing that. I need to continue to drip water on the rock, and at some point, something is going to sprout. It may take a little while, but that's OK. That's OK."

McDaniels has also become a vastly improved delegator, and that's partly because of his staff. The Broncos had a good coaching staff, but McDaniels didn't have as much experience with each coach, so he tried to handle too much on his own, which led to issues.

McDaniels has a flurry of former Patriots assistants in Las Vegas, and he's comfortable giving them more responsibilities. And by proxy, McDaniels has established good relationships with everyone in the building.

"When I was younger, I was so intent on trying to fix everything," McDaniels said. "If I didn't know the answer or it hadn't been fixed quick enough, I just tried harder. In some cases, that's not necessarily the right way to do it. Sometimes you've just got to pull back a little bit and maybe make a different decision or let other people work on it, and they'll figure out how to solve it, too, because we've got a lot of people who are capable of doing it.

“I’ve learned a whole lot from that experience. And then going back and seeing Bill after I had the opportunity to do it myself and really being able to compare what I was learning on a day-to-day basis in New England and then what I would probably need to do different. No two of us are the same. Just be yourself. Be honest and true to yourself every day, and give that to the players, the coaches, the staff and you have a great peace about that, which is where I’m at.”

Ziegler has a unique perspective of McDaniels’ growth. They’ve known each other for a quarter century and worked together on each end of McDaniels’ coaching spectrum.

Ziegler was there for the final season in Denver, the years of reflection in New England and the opening months in Vegas.

“He’s been able to have people in a lot of different positions here who he has confidence in and feels good about, and he lets those people do their jobs,” Ziegler said. “By doing that, it’s allowed him to take a lot of weight off his shoulders and concentrate more on the things that he needs to concentrate on as a head coach. He doesn’t need to concentrate on running the special teams or the scouting department. When you have less pressure, you fall back to being more yourself.

“Josh has always been Josh. He’s always been a good person. He’s always been very smart. He’s always been a hard worker. Now I think he’s just more comfortable with the people around him, so he doesn’t feel that internal pressure. He’s realized over time that there’s more of a relationship component that is important to running an organization, that’s important for buy-in. When you’re investing in people’s growth and more focused on the personal element, there are some good residual effects of that. People feel valued. People feel invested in. That returns a good work product and an environment where people feel like they can be themselves and feel like they can challenge ideas and be creative.

“He did a lot of self-reflection after that job of different areas that he could have improved, and one was the personal side, the relationship side. From 32 to 46, we’re all a lot more comfortable in our skin, hopefully. He’s more comfortable in his coaching skin. He’s more comfortable in what works for him and what his style is. We’re seeing that here day to day, and he’s just been outstanding. He’s been outstanding in being a really good presence day to day here. If you talk to people, they talk about the positive vibe in the building. That’s because Josh has created that. His coaches have then carried that message and created that. That’s been a big difference from Denver to here.”

‘Just be ourselves’

This offseason felt different, and maybe it was.

So often when there’s a regime overhaul, a roster rebuild follows. It’s certainly the exception when a new GM-coach combo trades away its first two draft picks for a wide receiver — let alone one who has widely been viewed as the best in the league — and secures three franchise pillars to long-term extensions.

But by taking over a team that made the playoffs and had a healthy salary-cap situation, Ziegler said they were mostly taking advantage of the opportunity. Similarly, he noted, the Patriots were loaded with cap space during the 2021 offseason and spent historic amounts of money.

The parallel between the two wasn’t the money spent or the aggressive strategy — it was about seeing an opportunity and pouncing.

"That's our approach for Josh and ourselves," Ziegler said. "There's going to be an aggressiveness to the way we do things when we feel like it's the right opportunity to make a good football decision. I think that's the key in being aggressive and making good football decisions.

"When there's an opportunity to make a decision that we think was really good for the football team at key positions, why not? Let's go do it. That was really the approach. The aggressiveness was built off what was here and what we felt we could do with the team."

Ziegler and McDaniels are now unabashedly themselves. In many ways, that's always been the case, but those characteristics — and their personal growth — led them to this moment together with the Raiders.

They learned a lot about football in New England, but they're also their own men.

So far, they've been operating like it.

"We've tried really hard to just be ourselves," McDaniels said. "I don't know that anybody knows that any decision is right or wrong right away. You make the best decision you can with the information you have and then try to work like hell to make it right. That's what we're going to try to do."

Lessons learned: New Raiders coach Josh McDaniels looked inward to get ready for another chance
By Vic Tafur
March 1, 2022

Josh McDaniels knew exactly what he wanted at the age of 4.

"I am not sure that he could read, but he had to have a practice plan," his father, Thom McDaniels, said in a phone interview Wednesday.

That was a pretty good early indication that McDaniels wanted to be a football coach like his dad, and while things would much later go off script for the newest coach of the Las Vegas Raiders, he is prepared now for a second stint as an NFL head coach.

The excitement McDaniels had at age 4 is still there.

McDaniels will answer plenty of football questions this week at the NFL Scouting Combine in Indianapolis when he takes to the podium Wednesday. Raiders fans want to hear more on the status of quarterback Derek Carr, and whether Alex Leatherwood returns to right tackle from guard is a really big deal.

But McDaniels, now 45, took time, as did members of his family, to discuss how he got to the NFL in the first place. And then after six Super Bowl rings as an assistant with the Patriots and an all-too-brief run as the head coach of the Broncos, why he's ready for his second shot wearing the big whistle — 41 years after wearing one so he could look like his dad.

Thom McDaniels enjoyed a 40-year career coaching at several Ohio high schools and was named the national coach of the year by USA Today in 1997. He is a member of the Ohio High School Football Coaches Association Hall of Fame. His middle son, Josh, wasted no time trying to learn the family trade.

“I always asked for the practice plan,” Josh McDaniels said in a phone interview Thursday. “So he always made a second copy of it, and the same thing for game day. He would always produce a second call sheet for me and handed it to me when I got there at the stadium.

“So I could follow along what the game plan was and what they were doing.”

Thom McDaniels said Josh “never strayed any farther than two or three feet away from me, whether it was individual, group or team (drills).”

“I was dressed exactly like my dad,” Josh said, “walking around wherever he was and interested in whatever he was doing. I knew that was what I wanted to be around at a very young age, and that I was probably going to want to do this one day.”

Sometimes things in life don’t work out according to plan, and the year after a failed head coaching opportunity that lasted 28 games (and 17 losses) with the Broncos, McDaniels was holding a different type of list.

How to be a better coach.

And how to be a better people person.

Not necessarily in that order.

After being fired by the Broncos 12 games into his second season in 2010, McDaniels joined the St. Louis Rams as offensive coordinator for one year in 2011. His wife, Laura, and the kids didn’t move to St. Louis until the summer, so McDaniels moved into the Residence Inn for five months. That’s a lot of turns of the do-it-yourself waffle machine.

“It was literally across the street from the Rams facility,” McDaniels said. “There was a four-lane road that I crossed over every day. I walked, I didn’t even take my car to St. Louis.”

Rams head coach Steve Spagnuolo needed a new offensive coordinator when Pat Shurmur left to become the Browns head coach. McDaniels was the new face on a returning staff, wasn’t rushing home for family dinners and said it was a very different experience than his first month as the Raiders head coach has been.

“Unlike what we’re doing now, where all of us are kind of out here on our own and we’re staying until 7, 8, 9 doing football, everybody was out of the office at 4:30 or 5 o’clock,” he said. “Except for me. And so I spent a lot of time reflecting on my experiences in Denver and going back through things that I felt I needed to do better. I sought counsel with some different people that were very helpful.

“And then when I finished up at 10:30 at night, I just walked across the street to the Residence Inn and slept.”

He would fly home to Denver on Friday nights and spend the weekends with his family.

All the while working on that list — a new practice plan for his career.

“I urged him to identify everything that he would do the same and everything that he would do differently, given a second opportunity,” Thom McDaniels said. “He looked inwardly and really critiqued himself. There was a big chunk of time where he was alone. And he took full advantage of that — when he wasn’t doing whatever he was doing for St. Louis, he was reexamining and evaluating his experience in Denver. So that if he had a second opportunity, he would be better at the second opportunity. He was very introspective.”

McDaniels typed up the “lessons learned” list on his computer and still looks at it twice a week now. It covers everything from meeting lengths to how to deal with his staff, players and the media and he uses it as an outline and a reminder of how he should approach his job.

“It was important to me to do that,” McDaniels said. “There were some things we did right in Denver and there were definitely some things we did wrong. Just trying to learn from my mistakes and trying to be better as a coach and as a person, and then try to implement those things going forward.

“Obviously, having a second opportunity to do this is really a special thing to me, and I am cherishing every day. Because I know that it’s a difficult job and there are a lot of things you have to do right.”

McDaniels admits he didn’t handle people as well as the Xs and Os in Denver. He said it was humbling to look back on the relationships that he built or failed to build there, and the cases where he may have acted emotionally rather than with patience.

“I knew a little football,” McDaniels said. “I don’t think I was an expert at how to get a group of people to become this successful entity and protect the culture. I feel like I understand how much more important that is now than I did when I left (New England the first time).

“There are a lot of teams that can catch fire for one year, but if you look at the teams that have sustained success, it’s really about the people and the culture you develop. The day-to-day value that each person in the building feels relative to the role that they are performing. I knew that we had done some of those things before I had gone to Denver, I just didn’t know how to cultivate it, encourage it or protect it.”

He reached out to several coaches for advice during that time and credits former Colts and Buccaneers head coach Tony Dungy, among others, with sharing their experiences with him and offering advice.

Thom McDaniels had attended a lot of Broncos practices — he may have even been given a copy of the practice plan — but he wasn’t in team meetings to see where things really went off the rails. Some people point to trading Jay Cutler before his first season or that the Broncos gave a 33-year-old prodigy too much power, but more likely it was a culmination of smaller things and a disconnect with players and other members of the organization.

“There may have been things that he talked to me about, maybe handling certain situations,” Thom McDaniels said. “But those were infrequent and nothing on a major, grand scale.”

The elder McDaniels is “convinced” the Raiders are a much better fit for his son than the Broncos were.

“As an NFL observer, I think a lot of NFL first-time coaches may not want to be desperate to get their first opportunity, but sometimes they are,” he said. “I think that Josh was. There was zero desperation about the second opportunity, and he’s had interviews and been part of the process more than once.”

If McDaniels rushed into the Broncos’ job, as his dad thinks, he definitely slammed the brakes on the Colts after they had announced he had agreed to be their new coach in 2018. He essentially left them at the altar, changing his mind at the last minute to the horror of his agent, league executives and unforgiving media.

The Patriots reportedly sweetened the pot for him to stay as well.

“There are a lot of things that go into these opportunities and chances to advance,” McDaniels said. “At the end of the day, the best thing for me at that time was to stay. And it took me a little longer than I wish that it had to realize that, but once I realized that that was the right decision, I felt like I had to do that even though it was going to be unpopular.”

The decision was made tougher because of the grief that McDaniels knew was going to come his way.

“I never intended to do that to anybody,” he said. “I have a tremendous amount of respect for (general manager) Chris Ballard, (Colts owner) Mr. (Jim) Irsay and their whole organization. They were great. I think they ended up with the person they should have ended with (Frank Reich) and I ended up where I was supposed to be.”

McDaniels was a finalist for the Eagles head-coaching job in 2021 that went to Nick Sirianni, and then everything clicked in Las Vegas like the brake mechanisms for three reels on a slot machine.

“From everything that I know, Vegas checked all of his boxes, and he apparently checked theirs,” Thom McDaniels said. “It was a great fit for him in many ways and that is why he is there.”

Part of the reason Las Vegas was a great fit is that McDaniels is coming in with new general manager Dave Ziegler, a longtime friend and a teammate at John Carroll University who got his NFL start as a personnel assistant under McDaniels in Denver and later came up through the ranks with the Patriots.

“If I was an owner, I might want that model — to have two guys that work together, that have history together, to come in in those two capacities,” Thom McDaniels said. “Because there is a mutual understanding about every part of the game that you already have with the other most important guy on the football side of the business. And there is very little they have to learn about each other. If anything.

“They know what they want and what it should look like. Two people and one mind. And they’re such good friends that they can disagree and take opposite views and reach a consensus. There is no worry about having a disagreement. I am so thrilled that they are there together.”

Josh McDaniels said he and Ziegler have indeed hit the ground running.

“We don’t have to teach one another the language, the scouting system, the things we’re looking for in a player, the qualities and traits that we covet,” he said. “We already understand those.”

“Our relationship has always been built on honesty and respect,” Ziegler added. “We can be each other’s biggest teammate and each other’s critic, too, and always come back to a place of respect and a place where we’re on the same page.”

McDaniels has six Super Bowl rings from his two stints with the Patriots — after that one season with the Rams, he returned to New England in 2012 and was the offensive coordinator there the past 10 seasons — and the Patriots had the No. 1-ranked offense in 2007, 2012 and 2017. They were in the top 10 in the league eight times in his 13 years as offensive coordinator and 11th two other times.

Yeah, the Patriots had Tom Brady, but they also won 11 games in 2008 when Brady tore his ACL and Matt Cassel was forced into action. And when Brady was suspended for four games in 2016, McDaniels’ offense got the job done with Jimmy Garoppolo and then Jacoby Brissett stepped in and the Patriots went 3-1.

After taking the Raiders job, McDaniels took out a full-page ad in the Boston Globe this month to thank the Patriots and their fans for their support:

“I will miss you, all of you Patriots fans. There is a reason they call Boston the best sports city in the world. … You took a naive kid from the Midwest and made him a wicked savvy New Englanduh.”

The farewell capped off a climb from personnel assistant in 2001 to general coaching assistant to quarterbacks coach to coordinator.

Head coach Bill Belichick gave McDaniels his flowers early, praising him to reporters last year for his work with rookie quarterback Mac Jones.

“I don’t think he really has any weaknesses as a coach,” Belichick said. “He has a great vision for how to utilize the skills of the players on his side of the ball and how to try to attack the weaknesses, whether it be personnel weaknesses or schematic weaknesses, or how to try to force the opponent into a situation that he’s able to take advantage of.”

Belichick was pretty hands-off when it came to the offense once the games started.

“Josh is an excellent play-caller,” Belichick said. “Timing. Setting up sequences of plays. Josh is creative, a very forward thinker. He’s got great poise during the game, never gets rattled, never loses track of the situation. I can’t even tell you how many times I’ve gone to Josh and said, ‘What do you think about this?’ or ‘Should we think about that?’ And he’ll say, ‘Yeah, we just talked about that.’

“I’d say I have tremendous confidence in all the things that he does.”

Ben McDaniels is the wide receivers coach and passing game coordinator for the Houston Texans. Four years younger than his brother Josh, Ben can’t really tell you when he started talking Xs and Os with his family.

“I don’t know a time that we didn’t talk Xs and Os,” he said in a phone interview. “We had those tiny football helmets that you got from the grocery store on boards as kids, moving them around, so you could say this has been in the works all our lives.”

The McDaniels family pours itself into football, and that’s not a faucet that can just be turned off.

“There are people who think you are not supposed to take that home with you,” Thom McDaniels said. “Well, we didn’t believe that. Of course, we were going to take football home with us and talk about it. My wife would have been disappointed if we hadn’t.

“But we didn’t take angry conversations home with us. If we had a terrible practice, or things didn’t go well that day, I could be grumpy but I tried not to take it home. Our conversations would be about what we did and how we did it, how we could do it better and the upcoming opponent.

“And they both had some suggestions about what might work at early ages.”

Thom and his wife, Chris, used attending practices as leverage for the kids to do their chores and eat their vegetables.

“He never pushed us into going,” Ben said. “He wanted us around if we wanted to be around. We were never made to go to practice, and it just became second nature to us.”

Chris often gets lost when people talk about the McDaniels’ coaching legacy, but …

“She loves football just as much as any of us,” Ben said.

Reno Saccoccia, a long-time high school coach in the upper Ohio Valley, saw this right away.

“He tells me frequently that I am the fifth-best coach in my family,” Thom McDaniels said. “(Chris) knows what Cover 2 looks like. If we’re playing a Cover 4 team, she’ll bug me later and ask me why it took me to the second quarter before I threw the Cover 4 beater, for crying out loud.”

(McDaniels’ oldest son, Jason, works for the county auditor in Canton, Ohio.)

Josh laughed when he heard Saccoccia’s rankings.

“My mother is definitely high up on the totem pole,” Josh said. “She is a special coach’s wife and a special coaching mother. She was interested in everything my dad did and lived it and died it just like he did when he was coaching.

“She was just an incredible source of support for him and for us, still to this day. She talks to my brothers and I every day and lives vicariously through us just as much as my father does.”

Josh and Ben both played quarterback for their father at Canton McKinley High School, with Ben setting school records. While Ben started thinking about coaching after his playing days were over, Josh had a different perspective.

“Benjamin was a little bit different, in that he loved playing and obviously liked the concept of coaching, but I was the one that was going on the scouting trips to Pennsylvania,” Josh said. “I was doing a lot more of the grunt work, relative to enjoying the coaching profession.

“We always talked Xs and Os but he was four years younger than me so there was a little bit of a gap there.”

Ben, after a playing career at Kent State, coached high school football under his dad and had a stint as a graduate assistant at Minnesota. He got his NFL start on Josh's staff with the Broncos, where he was an offensive assistant in 2009 and then served as quarterbacks coach in 2010. He says he never envisioned Josh being anything other than a coach when they were growing up.

That's because Josh always loved being around the players.

"Even when they come into the facility now to work out and you get to see them, there is such a youthful experience about them," he said. "There is such an optimism about them. There is so much that you can pour into them and help them grow and learn. And then when you see them have success, to realize that with them has always been the greatest part of coaching."

Six Super Bowl rings are also pretty cool, but winning isn't everything. The process is also why coaches coach.

"The game is so rewarding if you do the right things," Josh said, "and to be able to realize those things together — to celebrate the successes and to also handle and learn from the things that don't go so well. That's part of this game, and it will never not be a part of any season that you're a part of."

Josh McDaniels learned that at an early age. From his dad.

"I loved the game and I loved every part of it," Thom McDaniels said. "I loved scouting, I loved game-planning, I loved the weight room, I loved monitoring grades — there wasn't one thing about coaching football that I didn't love.

"We have a saying within the family that we believe in and that is, 'If you love the game, the game will love you back.' And the game really did love us back."

General Manager Dave Ziegler

THE ATHLETIC

Raiders general manager Dave Ziegler 'took the stairs, not the elevator' to find NFL success
By Tashan Reed
June 3, 2022

INDIANAPOLIS — Dave Ziegler hasn't had much time for rest. For the past month and change, he's spent almost all of his time at Raiders headquarters and the room he's living in at the M Resort hotel down the street. Alongside coach Josh McDaniels, the first-time general manager has been working incessantly to put together the personnel and coaching staffs, evaluate the roster and plan for the offseason. He has some new scenery this week — he and McDaniels are in Indianapolis for the NFL Scouting Combine — but the grind hasn't slowed.

"Not a lot of sleep, that's for sure," Ziegler said with a smile while sitting in front of a group of reporters at the Indiana Convention Center on Wednesday.

He's not complaining. This is what it takes to implement the culture Ziegler plans to instill in Las Vegas. He wants the Raiders to be an organization that harps on the details and overlooks nothing. He intends to hire team-oriented individuals and invest in their growth in the same way they do players. Through every department, he wants clear, thorough and frequent communication. The environment will be demanding, but he doesn't want it to become abrasive and uncomfortable.

"The fabric of our culture will be to evaluate and evolve consistently and constantly our processes and our people to make sure that we are always operating at a championship level," Ziegler said in his introductory news conference in January. "Being committed to the standard of excellence is going to occur from the top down, and it's what it will take to build this organization into an organization that consistently competes for championships."

Those words have to be met with action, but Ziegler hasn't gotten here by making empty statements. From a Division III college football player to an NFL executive, he's backed them up.

"Dave took the stairs, not the elevator," McDaniels said Wednesday. "Every task he was given, Dave embraced it and then excelled at it. I think that's the only thing you can ask of a young man when he comes in at a young age and he has a bunch of low-level responsibilities: Do them the best you can. And if you do them well, then you're going to get some more responsibility added to your plate.

"Dave has always done that. Dave will continue to do that. Dave has no ego. Dave's a guy that if he has to drive his own car through the car wash every day, he's going to go do that. If he has to pour his coffee, he's going to do that. He's not going to ask somebody else to do all those things. That's not Dave Ziegler."

Ziegler's football journey has been unusual. He's played, coached and been an executive. He's worked at high schools and colleges and for professional teams. He's now had eight titles in 11 years in the NFL. Now, he's the man the Raiders hope will take them to the next level.

The foundation of Ziegler was forged through sports growing up in Tallmadge, Ohio. The Akron suburb of about 20,000 people had an obsession with athletics, and he happily adopted it. Playing football, basketball and baseball wasn't just something he did for fun; it was part of who he was.

"That's what your identity was about," Ziegler said. "And that's where I really learned to compete."

Ziegler was a standout at Tallmadge High, but an average-sized receiver from a small town in Ohio didn't draw a ton of recruiting attention. He landed at Division III John Carroll, just 30 miles north of his hometown. He shined on the field — he was a three-time first-team All-Ohio Athletic Conference selection as a return specialist — but he also made a lasting impression on those around him off the field.

"He really was a leader on our team," Chargers assistant Tom Arth, who was John Carroll's quarterback during Ziegler's final season in 1999, said last month. "He was a guy that I really had incredible respect for and somebody who I really trusted and somebody that I knew cared so much about our team. He would always have all of our best interests at heart. We struck up a pretty good relationship pretty early on. … If there were ever any kind of issues that I was having, whether it was just difficulty being away from home for the first time or struggling just to make your way as a new college student-athlete, Dave was always the guy that I really relied on and trusted in to be able to go to."

People gravitated toward Ziegler, and he had a way of bringing out the best in them. He had a laid-back demeanor, but his presence was felt.

"Boy, just competitive," Arth said. "And I look at him the same way now in what he's accomplished in the NFL and certainly in this role as a GM. You just know he's going to be amazing. He's going to do an incredible job. He's just got that killer instinct. He's so smart, he's so hardworking and he's so competitive. You just know that anything that he does he's going to put his full heart into it and he's going to find a way to be the best he can be at whatever he's doing."

Before he was an executive, though, he was a teacher. He graduated with an education degree in 2000 and started working at a local high school, but he wasn't happy. Football was his passion, so he moved to Arizona and worked as a substitute teacher while volunteering to try to get his coaching career started, which he viewed as his best chance at staying connected to the game.

"I grew up in Northeast Ohio," Ziegler said. "I knew about football. I'd been around football coaches my whole life. And that was really the scope of my knowledge about the bigger picture. To remain in football, I knew I had to coach."

Ziegler landed back at John Carroll as a graduate assistant in 2004 before going to Iona College, where for a three-month stretch he dabbled in acting on the side. His highlight was a small role in an episode of "Law & Order."

"It wasn't very serious," Ziegler said of the brief acting career, "once I actually got out there and did it and saw how hard those people have to work. And those aren't big paydays, either. Being on a set for 16 hours and then seeing what those paychecks are … those people were committed to acting.

"I was committed to try and make a little money on the side and do something different. It was a short-lived vision."

Ziegler returned to Arizona to coach at Scottsdale's Chaparral High after Iona, a former FCS program, stopped sponsoring football. In addition to coaching, he worked as a teacher and guidance counselor.

"(I learned) how to deal with different people, how to relate to different people, how to communicate at a high level, how to show empathy, how to problem-solve," Ziegler said. "A lot of those lessons outside of football that have been really valuable to me."

Although Ziegler had a passion for coaching and enjoyed what he did, he soon had to start thinking more practically. Finances were an issue. He and his wife, Carissa, wanted to have a family — they now have three children — and he needed a career capable of supporting them long-term. He soon found out that playing and coaching weren't the only ways to stay in the game: McDaniels offered him an opportunity to become a Broncos scouting assistant in 2010.

"To be honest with you, I didn't even know scouting existed at that time," Ziegler said. "When Josh gave me the opportunity to come up and interview for a scouting assistantship, that's really the first time. I mean, you hear scouting, but I really didn't know what it was and what it entailed. I had some opportunities to go back into coaching when I started my career in scouting, but I just really fell in love with it. I started to have success in it. I started to get more responsibility and learn more about what it entailed and the whole team-building process. I fell in love with that process, and that allowed me to separate from the coaching world."

McDaniels was fired the same year Ziegler was hired in Denver. Ziegler stuck around and worked as a pro and college scout, but after the Broncos fired then-GM Brian Xanders after the 2012 season, Ziegler was left without a job. It was a failure from a football standpoint, but Ziegler's time in Denver proved to be the launching pad for his career.

In his first season with the Broncos, he had menial tasks such as picking up people from the airport and putting cards on the draft board, but he didn't view them as beneath him. He kept the same attitude and approach. That stuck with McDaniels, who returned to the Patriots as their offensive coordinator in 2012. McDaniels and then-Patriots director of player personnel Nick Caserio — who was teammates with McDaniels and Ziegler at John Carroll — connected Ziegler with Bill Belichick and vouched for him before he was ultimately brought on as the assistant director of pro scouting in 2013.

"Dave is very smart," Caserio, whom Ziegler reported to from 2013 to 2020, said Wednesday. "He's got a very wide-ranging background and a lot of diversity in terms of his experience. … His ability to kind of connect with people and see things through a different lens is something that's unique to Dave."

Ziegler was promoted to director of pro personnel in 2016 and assistant director of player personnel in 2020. Over the years, he learned the ins and outs of the Patriots' scouting philosophies from Caserio. And when Caserio left to become the Texans GM in 2021, Ziegler was promoted to fill his role as the director of player personnel. Beyond the fact that he'd been with the franchise for nearly a decade, his willingness to wear a number of hats and the way he excelled in several roles were key to his becoming the Patriots' most influential front-office staffer under Belichick.

“I just think the more exposure you have in any line of work, the more knowledge you have, and the more knowledge that you have, the better that you can perform your job,” Ziegler said. “All of those experiences have allowed me, I would say, to feel confident in my ability to run the scouting department. And I’ll still have things to learn, and I’ll learn things from the people that are here in this organization and ideas that they have and processes that they have that maybe are better than some of the ideas that I have myself. … I think it’s been a unique ride for me to get to this point, but I think it all kind of came together to allow me to have some of the success that I’ve had.”

Ziegler had an extensive scouting history, but last year was his first time working hands-on when it came to negotiating contracts and managing the salary cap. He already had a close relationship with Belichick, but their bond strengthened as they worked more directly on a daily basis. He learned how to go about the process of planning for years to come, came to understand how his decisions could influence the big picture and gained a greater appreciation for the details.

“Bill is really dedicated to evaluating every single thing that we do at every point of the year and looking at it critically and then evolving and trying to figure out how we are going to get these things better,” Ziegler said. “I think that’s critical to not staying stagnant and to always making sure you’re moving forward with the best ideas and the best processes.”

With Belichick being the Patriots’ de facto GM, there was always going to be a limit to how high Ziegler could climb within the Patriots organization as long as he was there. The same went for McDaniels, who some speculated could eventually become Belichick’s successor. When the Raiders’ head coach and GM jobs came open and Ziegler and McDaniels emerged as candidates, the prospect of taking the next step of their careers together emerged. It didn’t work out in Denver, but they didn’t hesitate to take it.

“We’ve grown up together in a lot of ways and grown together,” Ziegler said. “It’s invaluable to have had some tough times and bumps in the road. That’s how you learn and get better.”

Ziegler and McDaniels have been friends for over 26 years and coworkers for more than a decade. They’re starting off with a level of familiarity that’s rare for any head coach and GM tandem, let alone one in their first season working together in that capacity. Naturally, they’ll be like-minded on many things and share philosophies for how the organization should be run.

“Any time you start a new program from the ground up, when you have two people that kind of speak the same language, I think it’s going to be beneficial to everybody involved,” Caserio said. “And I’m happy that both of them have the opportunity. They’ve earned it, and they deserve it.”

That doesn’t mean there won’t be any tension in their relationship. Ziegler has the final say on draft picks, free-agency signings and other roster transactions. There will inevitably be times when they disagree, but they believe that’ll be a positive toward making their tenure a success.

“Dave and I can challenge one another,” McDaniels said. “We can disagree with one another, but that never affects our loyalty to one another and our ability to try to do what’s best. And I think that’s the best part about our relationship is that we don’t always have to see everything eye to eye, but eventually we’re going to get to an agreement on what’s best for the Raiders.

“I couldn’t ask for a better partner.”

Some call it blazing trails; Raiders president calls it being qualified
By Bryan Horwath

Sandra Douglass Morgan is one of us.

Her dad was stationed at Nellis Air Force Base, and her mom was keno runner at some of the city's most beloved properties, the old Showboat and Imperial Palace.

Now she's one of the guiding forces of the Las Vegas Raiders, after being hired this summer as the team's president.

It's been a fast-moving two months on the job for Douglass Morgan, who is no stranger to being in the public eye in her hometown.

The Eldorado High School graduate is a former member of the Nevada Gaming Commission, chairwoman of the Nevada Gaming Control Board, board of directors member for Caesars Entertainment and commissioner for the Nevada Athletic Commission.

"My mother worked swing shift and worked holidays," Morgan said last month at a diversity town hall at Wynn Las Vegas. "We'd celebrate Christmas, but usually before Christmas. As the daughter of someone who was a keno runner at casinos, being appointed to the (Gaming Commission) was something that was a huge source of pride for my mother."

Douglass Morgan touched on a variety of issues in her comments at the town hall, including being the first Black woman to serve as an NFL franchise president. Here are some highlights:

Doing what's best for the Raiders

Morgan doesn't spend much time ruminating about how she's a trailblazer in the league — though she's constantly asked about it.

And it's not the initial time she's broken barriers.

She was also the first Black city attorney in Nevada history when in 2013 North Las Vegas hired her for that position. And at Caesars, she was one of just a handful of Blacks serving on the board of directors of a major Strip casino company.

"You don't want to be seen as this is the position you're getting because of your race, gender, religion or orientation," said Morgan, a graduate of UNR and the Boyd School of Law at UNLV. "You're getting the position because you're qualified; you just happen to maybe look a little different or come from a nontraditional sect, but that doesn't take away from your value with the position."

With that said, Morgan was aware of what she might represent for many.

"I don't listen to it," Morgan said. "I just move forward and do a good job and do what's best for the Raiders. My work will speak for itself, but I also encourage people to be inclusive and be a good ally for people."

Raiders history of inclusion

Decades ago, former Raiders owner Al Davis, the late father of current owner Mark Davis, referred to a "Commitment to Excellence" that he expected people in the organization to have.

Morgan said the history of the team also included instances where the elder Davis and others publicly worked toward diversity and inclusion.

Morgan didn't realize until after she accepted the job that Al Davis had supported a boycott of the 1965 American Football League all-star game in New Orleans after players arrived in the city because of racist acts they encountered.. The game was moved to Houston after the players and Davis, then coach and general manager of the Raiders, spoke out about the injustices.

Davis also tapped Tom Flores as the team's starting quarterback in 1960, the AFL's inaugural year, making him the first Latino to start at quarterback in a professional football league. Flores later went on to become a Hall of Fame coach for the Raiders.

In 1989, Davis hired the modern NFL's first Black head coach, Art Shell, for what was then the Los Angeles Raiders.

"The Raiders have a rich history on diversity and inclusion," Morgan said. "For Al Davis to make that move in 1965, that was incredibly bold. Even though I never had a chance to meet him, I think part of his legacy and that 'Raider Way' is also about giving people opportunities and maybe finding those non-traditional candidates."

Don't worry about checking the boxes

Morgan said she prides herself on taking positions that place her out of her comfort zone.

She said she noticed that women sometimes didn't take the time to pursue a certain job unless they "check every box" of a job requirements listing.

"I tell people to go ahead and try it because they'll learn from that experience," she said. "I had to challenge myself to try this job. I think we have to go into situations optimistic believing that it will work. There are studies that show women are less likely to apply for a position if they don't hit all those boxes. I want to say don't worry about hitting those boxes."

Raising value

In her role, Morgan doesn't make player personnel decisions, but rather is responsible for other aspects of the franchise's business.

One of her main tasks in the role, she said, is to help increase the franchise's value. According to this year's annual Forbes report that lists the most valuable NFL franchises, the Raiders are worth about $5.1 billion — the ninth most valuable franchise in the 32-team NFL.

It's not likely the Raiders will catch the most valuable NFL franchise anytime soon — the Dallas Cowboys are valued at over $8 billion, according to Forbes — but moving to Las Vegas in 2020 has raised the team's profile on the balance sheet.

"We want to make sure we're retaining fans in Oakland and Los Angeles and everywhere else, but we also want people growing up in Las Vegas to know we're here," Morgan said. "Of course, I want to help increase the value of the team and increase revenue from events at the stadium. Personally, I also want to make sure everyone in our organization and doing business with the Raiders knows that they're partnering with an organization that believes in them and believes in Las Vegas."

As for results on the field, Morgan said the goal is clear.

"Hopefully, we'll be playing in the Super Bowl after this season in Arizona and in the 2024 Super Bowl in Las Vegas," she said..

THE ATHLETIC

New Raiders president Sandra Douglass Morgan has deep roots in Las Vegas

Raiders training camp is underway, and silver bleachers line the north end zone at the practice field outside their Henderson headquarters. They are reserved the first Saturday of camp for family members and friends of Raiders players and coaches, or other organizational dignitaries — like the first Black female team president in NFL history.

Except Sandra Douglass Morgan chose not to sit there. She didn't care for the isolation, preferring bleachers on the sideline among the staffers and their families, the people she's grateful to lead.

"She knows she holds this prestigious position, but she's still Sandra Douglass Morgan from the east side of Las Vegas," said her husband, Don, four years a safety for the Minnesota Vikings and Arizona Cardinals.

"It didn't change her. People expected it to change. But it didn't, and that's why people gravitate toward Sandra."

And why the Raiders hired her.

Douglass Morgan was chosen last month to stabilize the Silver and Black, colors as synonymous with dysfunction as they used to be with Super Bowls. The franchise's second season in Las Vegas was the most tumultuous in its 63-year history, fraught with turnover in leadership that marred a 10-7 record and its second playoff berth since 2002.

Former president Marc Badain resigned last year in July, ending a six-year term amid what owner Mark Davis called “accounting irregularities.” Former coach Jon Gruden resigned in October upon the revealing of racist, misogynistic and homophobic emails he wrote from 2011 to 2018. Interim president Dan Ventrelle was fired in May, claiming his dismissal was retaliatory after he alerted the NFL about concerns of a hostile working environment.

Indeed, the organization has faced scrutiny from other former employees, who also alleged that a toxic workplace subjected women to forced demotions, unequal treatment and retaliation if they voiced concerns.
But Douglass Morgan has a track record of quelling chaos, steeled by nearly two decades as a lawyer working for some of the most influential entities in the city.

Her resume alone though cannot quantify the way her infectious, disarming smile and wry sense of humor ease interpersonal connection. Or how her youthful enthusiasm and pragmatic, analytical nature can spark or steady a group chat, household or — perhaps — an NFL franchise.

As team president, she’s oversees everything besides football, leaving that to first-year head coach Josh McDaniels and general manager Dave Ziegler, who were hired by Davis in January to begin the Raiders’ reset. She heads business operations that envelop the game-day experience at Allegiant Stadium and community initiatives across the Las Vegas Valley.

“When people think of Las Vegas, they think of the Strip. Which is fine. Great,” said Douglass Morgan, 44 and also proudly of Korean descent. “When people think of Las Vegas, I want them to think of the Raiders.”

Finding home

For now, Douglass Morgan equates Las Vegas with opportunity. “Endless opportunity,” she says, pausing after pondering its personal significance. It’s where her father Gilbert, a retired Air Force master sergeant, met her mother Kilcha, a former keno runner at Binion’s Horseshoe, Landmark and Imperial Palace.

A fortuitous meeting at the Hilton became a family on the city’s east side near Nellis Air Force Base, complete with Douglass Morgan and older sister Sonya, now a graduate professor in the Ivy League at Columbia.

Douglass Morgan was actually born on a base in Missouri, but her family moved to Las Vegas when she was a toddler.

Her dad worked traditional hours at a post office and her mom worked swing shifts in the casinos. One of the two would usually be home with the girls to encourage their curiosity and sense of identity.

“They’ve been a stable and consistent force in her life,” said lifelong friend Tanya Fowler, who too grew up near Nellis and spent plenty of blistering afternoons with Douglass Morgan at the base’s swimming pool.

Her parents would share stories of their encounters with customers — both the good and the bad — subtly weaving respect, empathy and patience into the fabric of their daughter’s character.

“You don’t realize it when you’re a parent, but children listen to a lot of things,” said Douglass Morgan, mother to son Dylan, 15, and daughter, Dana, 11.

Among the other things Douglass Morgan listened to: music by A Tribe Called Quest, Janet Jackson, Bobby Brown, Wu-Tang Clan, the Beastie Boys and steady parental encouragement to fill her time with extracurricular activities.

Those artists provided a soundtrack to a childhood filled with schooling in Clark County’s Academically Talented Youth Programs, stints in student government, ballet, track and field and afternoons at the old Wet-N-Wild on Las Vegas Boulevard.

Her precocious ambition only intensified upon enrollment at Eldorado High School, where she was cheer captain and class president. She held leadership roles within the school’s Human Relations Club, in which students discussed topics like Black history and racial equality. And the National Honors Society, befitting for one of the top 20 graduates in the school’s class of 1996 and the recipient of a prestigious Presidential Scholarship to UNR.
The suits she now sports were once Timberland boots, jeans, throwback jerseys and Starter jackets, affirming that style and straight A’s aren’t and won’t ever be mutually exclusive. She was voted to the homecoming court as one of Eldorado’s most popular and approachable students — bridging the cliques to which she never was confined.

“Everybody just loved her,” Fowler said. “For her, it’s like it doesn’t matter where you go. They remember her. She remembers them. She was able to just get along with everybody.”

That sentiment extended beyond the walls of Eldorado and throughout a Las Vegas Valley she would roam in her two-passenger 1974 Nissan 260Z. Her first job at Champs Sports inside the Meadows Mall helped her fill the gas tank and finance the socializing she’d sandwich around her scholastic schedule.

Be it an R&B concert at Stardust or Dunes, an evening at the mall, picnic at Lorenzi Park or prom at Green Valley, Douglass Morgan sought to strengthen connections between her network of friends throughout the city.

“She really could do it all, and that’s the best part of our friendship,” said Amanda Okundaye, a Clark alumnus and friend whom Douglass Morgan met while working at Champs.

“We could definitely be straight-A students, yet be cultural and enjoy ourselves.”

Leaving home

That said, Okundaye wasn’t surprised when she ventured from her Florida State campus to visit Douglass Morgan at UNR, where she’d organize and establish the chapter for Alpha Kappa Alpha — a historically Black sorority with which she remains involved. While attending UNR as an undergraduate, Douglass Morgan coordinated a series of trips with her closest friends to ensure she’d visit their colleges and they would visit hers.

They insist she’s still the proverbial glue that unites their inner circle. She wanted to see their schools and immerse herself in their college experiences.

So Okundaye immersed herself in Douglass Morgan's and noticed that "everybody loved her at Reno that you'd run into. From the dorms to on campus. Heck, we went to little hole-in-the-wall food places and it's just like 'Sandra!' like it's Cheers."

Or seemingly anywhere now in Las Vegas.

Nobody would love her in Reno more though than Morgan, then a safety at UNR whom she met inside Ross Hall where the English classes were housed. She prioritizes punctuality, but was running late for a change and collided with him while turning a corner after sprinting up a flight of stairs.

That accidental introduction fostered 20 years of marriage, but their relationship would begin only when Morgan sharpened his academic focus.

"She was the one who put education in the forefront for me. Almost a dating requirement," he recalled with a chuckle.

Education remained the dominant focus for Douglass Morgan, who graduated in three years from UNR with degrees in political science and communications. A constitutional law class triggered her interest in jurisprudence amid former President Bill Clinton's impeachment trial.

Intriguing talking points included the concept of legal precedent. Seminal Supreme Court cases like Roe v. Wade and Brown v. Board of Education were fodder for her desire to "dig a little bit deeper into the law."

Timing, she says, was great because UNLV's William S. Boyd School of Law opened in 1998 as she neared the conclusion of her undergraduate education. Its former dean, Frank Durand, helped convince her to apply after meeting her while visiting UNR's campus.

"I honestly did think I was going to leave Nevada," she said. "Most people did at that point."

Staying home

But Douglass Morgan wouldn't have been part of UNLV's third law class had she left. Wouldn't have been Nevada's first Black city attorney or appointed by Gov. Steve Sisolak as its first Black Gaming Control Board chairperson, either.

She probably wouldn't have met Davis, who spent 10 months quietly recruiting her before gleefully announcing her hiring July 7 with a press conference at Allegiant Stadium.

"The best person for the job. No question about that," Davis said.

She'd definitely be blazing trails somewhere else, though, because "if she wasn't, I don't know what she'd be doing," per friend Asha Jones, who met Douglass Morgan in 2000 while interning for former congresswoman Shelley Berkley.

"I don't believe there's any ceiling in her future," said esteemed Las Vegas lawyer Theodore Parker III, her first boss upon graduation from UNLV. "I think she can do pretty much what she wants."

Right now, she wants to live in Las Vegas. She wants to watch her son play basketball and her daughter dance. To model for them the integrity her parents modeled for her. She wants to plan pool parties for her friends and their families. She wants to celebrate their successes the way they celebrate hers.

She wants to advocate for those historically marginalized and disenfranchised.

She also wants to work for the Raiders.

After the introductory press conference concluded and the reporters dispersed, Douglass Morgan joined family members and friends inside one of the stadium's suites for food, beverage and a private celebration they realized would be rather brief.

"It's a work day. ... I really need to talk with staff. I need to talk with employees," she said, politely excusing herself to begin her presidential term.

Leaving everybody there in awe, yet again. "She handles it so gracefully. ... It's her. It's Sandra," Fowler said. "If it was going to be one of us, you knew it would be her. You kind of expect it to happen because that's who she's always been."

Director of Equipment Operations Bobby Romanski

A Family Legacy of Excellence: The Raiders and the Romanskis
By Rachel Gossen
September 13, 2022

What started as a summer job working training camps with his dad Richard has turned into a lifelong career for Bob Romanski, who was recently honored for his work as the Silver and Black's director of equipment operations with the 2022 NFL Equipment Manager of the Year award, the highest of honors within his field.

In fact, the Raiders have only ever had two equipment managers in franchise history – father and son.

"You can't separate the two. When you start talking about the Raiders, you've got to start talking about the Romanskis because they've been here forever," former Raiders linebacker Matt Millen said.

The Romanskis were woven into the fabric of the Silver and Black through a longtime friendship with late owner Al Davis.

Richard played quarterback under Davis on the Army Football Team in Fort Belvoir, Virginia, in 1953, later serving as an assistant coach on Davis' staff. When Davis was tabbed as head coach of the Oakland Raiders in January of 1963, he hired Richard as equipment manager.

"[Bob] and his dad built the shield, helped Mr. Davis and Mark build the shield," assistant equipment manager Danny Molina said. "I think he is just a great man for the organization to learn from; someone that's been here since he was a kid and represents the Raiders to the highest capacity."

The duties of an equipment team are endless.

They're the ones players and coaches know can deliver whatever they need – from fixing a ripped jersey or a broken helmet to grabbing anything forgotten in the locker room. The game can't be played without the work of EQ staffs keeping everything organized and in top shape.

Romanski grew up on the sidelines, watching and learning as his dad brought innovation and a strong work ethic to the team.

Today, he is a pillar of the Raiders' day-to-day football operations, serving as head equipment manager since he took over the position from his father in 1995.

"[Richard] was kind of getting to a point where he was really delegating most of the work to Bobby. I didn't know that at the time, and Bobby didn't talk about that," former Raiders linebacker Greg Biekert said. "But you could see Bobby was doing the majority of the things that needed to get done, taking care of the players when they needed something out on the field."

Romanski is entering his 51st season with the Raiders – 42nd as a full-time employee – and has established himself as a vital piece of the organization, a man who is constantly on the move.

"To this day, I don't think I've ever seen Bob sit down," Derek Carr said with a laugh. "I've been here nine years and for almost a decade, that man is a nonstop worker. ... If it needs to get done, he just does it. It's like, 'Man, you've got so much help Bob, you've earned the right to let other people do things,' and he still does all the work.

"He does not slow down. Since I've known him, all he does is work and try to do what's best for the Raiders all the time."

Romanski's talents extend outside of tape and towels. He has a knack for the artistic side of things, which he shows off every year during the annual "My Cause My Cleats" campaign. With a small airbrush in hand, Romanski spends hours painting cleats for each player's chosen charity.

He also enjoys architectural design work – a subject he considered studying before joining the Raiders – and with the move to Las Vegas a couple years ago, Romanski got the chance to create the perfect workspace for his staff, as well as the players.

He assisted in designing the locker room and equipment sections of Intermountain Healthcare Performance Center, as well as the locker rooms inside of Allegiant Stadium.

"He's got a wealth of knowledge about this organization," Millen said. "If the league had more Bobby Romanskis, it'd be an awesome place."

What truly sets Romanski apart to players, coaches and staff members is his humble heart. Many have described him as someone who goes above and beyond in both his professional and personal life, and with his experience treating the equipment room as a family unit, he extends that feeling to everyone.

"His legacy is the standard that is the Raiders – his commitment to excellence day-in and day-out for 40-plus years," said Adam Johnson, assistant equipment manager.

"I think Bob would tell you this: We would put our crew against anybody in the league in terms of efficiency, and a lot of it comes from the way that he treats us. He treats us like family."

For Romanski, the NFL Equipment Manager of the Year award is sure to be an honor, but it's unlikely to change much for him as he gears up for another season with the team to which he has dedicated his professional life.

"He's put his heart, sweat, tears, all into this organization for 50 years," Biekert said. "He's definitely a Raider, if anybody is."

Davante Adams finds his bliss en route to the Las Vegas Raiders
By Tim Keown
September 6, 2022

ON A FINE spring Saturday about a decade ago, Derek Carr asked his friend and Fresno State teammate Davante Adams if he wanted to go whitewater rafting. Adams shrugged. Sure, why not? Boating, he thought. Sounds fun. Adams's life experience to this point, it should be noted, had better prepared him for a trip to the moon than whitewater rafting. At least he'd seen the moon.

This adventure -- with a four-person crew of guide Ryan Soares, Adams, Carr, and Carr's girlfriend/now-wife Heather -- took place on the notoriously turbulent Upper Kings River in the southern Sierra Nevada. It started with Carr and Adams, a record-setting quarterback-receiver combination with obscenely lucrative careers ahead of them, standing on the shore, struggling to sausage themselves into too-tight wetsuits. They looked at the raft and the relatively calm waters at their feet and listened as Soares laid out the dangers that lie ahead.

Soares kept repeating one rule, over and over:

Whatever you do, don't stop paddling.

It started easy enough -- "a lazy river," Adams says -- before everything changed about a quarter-mile into the run. The sound of Banzai Hole came first, the roar of angry water Dopplering toward them, louder and louder, an enveloping sound of pending doom. "That's when their eyes got big," Soares says.

We won't bore you with all the technical talk of cubic feet per second, but one CFS is colloquially described as the water equivalent to one basketball rolling down a hill. Banzai Hole is a Class III rapid that can ascend to a Class IV when it's flowing like it does in the prime of late-spring snowmelt, at roughly 6,000 downhill basketballs per second. The water is just part of the problem with Banzai Hole, though; the 75-foot rock face on the other end of it is another. "If you fall out and end up having to swim, you're not going to die," Soares says, before rethinking it. "Well, technically you could."

Just before they entered the rapid, the biggest on the Upper Kings, Soares screamed over the roar of the water, "Hold on and don't stop paddling! If you stop, you'll flip the boat."

Adams grew up in East Palo Alto, California, a city of roughly 30,000 with a 2020 per capita income of $32,000, a stark contrast to its Silicon Valley neighbors. (Menlo Park, right next door, had a per capita income of more than $88,000.) He was 14 when he looked out the front window of his grandparents' house and watched a car creep along the street and stop in front of the house next door. As the windows were rolled down and someone began firing a gun at the house, Davante sprinted out the door and pulled his younger twin sisters back into his grandparents' house and to safety. Adams spits out a brittle laugh and says, "We don't whitewater raft in East Palo Alto."

But on that river with Carr all those years ago, with Banzai Hole thundering ahead, he caught the urgency in Soares's voice, though, and thought, Hold on? Hold on for what? What's about to happen? "So what do I do?" Adams says. "I stop paddling as soon as we get through there because -- literally -- we were going down."

Carr stopped paddling, too, which left it to Soares and Heather, whose outdoor -- and listening -- skills far exceeded the men's. "I had these two ripped, strong guys," Soares says, "and the moment I needed their power the most, they weren't there."

Adams was the first one to fall completely out of the raft, followed by Derek and Heather. Adams contends Soares stayed in the boat -- "He had the only seatbelt," he jokes -- but Soares says no. "The boat was cleared that day," he says, using rafting-guide talk for the unfortunate and unintended dispersal of all humans. "I can count on my hands the number of times I've cleared a boat on the Kings, and that was one."

So there they were, in nature's washing machine, bobbing in the churning froth, all those liquid basketballs pummeling them without mercy, their heads surfacing just long enough to steal a breath before being dragged under all over again.

Well, I guess this is where I die, Adams thought.

Soares estimates there's about a 10-second window for rafters-turned-swimmers to reach the shore before being forced to contend with the 75-foot rock face. They struggled, but they struggled in the direction of safety, and as they stood on the shore taking inventory while their hearts raced like hummingbirds, Soares relayed the news that at this point, with no way to leave the canyon, there was no choice but to finish the run.

Soares stops here and laughs before making an admission: He had a text exchange with Carr last month to make sure it was OK to discuss any of this. Carr replied, "Make us look like heroes," so Soares tells me, "After we cleared the boat, we had a talk on the shore, one more time, about how important it is to never stop paddling. From that point on, they were the best paddlers I ever had."

Adams relays the story as a testament to the unique bond he and Carr have developed over the years. ("We almost died together," he says. "People don't know that.") They set records in two seasons at Fresno State, worked out together every offseason and now -- after a vigorous recruiting campaign by Carr that led to the seismic trade of Adams from the Packers -- they'll attempt to navigate the roiling waters of the Las Vegas Raiders, where a capsized boat is traditionally a precursor to an encounter with a 75-foot rock wall.

Along with a new head coach (Josh McDaniels and all the attendant Patriot business that comes with it), Adams gives them hope for something more, something better and more meaningful than earning a mere playoff spot, a feat the Raiders achieved last year for just the second time in 20 years. He gives Carr, a quarterback who has amassed massive but often hollow statistics, something he has never had: a superstar receiver.

"I'm not here to be Superman," Adams says, but the first time Carr walked to the line at training camp and looked over to see his old friend in a Raider uniform, Carr says, "It was surreal. Like, 'Oh, my gosh, I can't believe we're doing this again.' Then the first touchdown I throw him, I'm like, 'Here we go. This is just the start.'"

The Raiders' playoff run last year, ending with a loss to the Bengals in the AFC wild-card round, was unlikely for many reasons. Among them: losing their head coach, Jon Gruden, after the release of a series of sordid emails; losing former first-round wide receiver Henry Ruggs III after he got drunk and killed a woman while driving 156 mph in the small hours of the morning; losing cornerback Damon Arnette, another first-round pick, when he was released after brandishing guns on social media.

"I mean, we had loss of life last year," Carr says. "We had a young player lose his career with a life-altering decision. We had our coach's situation. We had a first-round pick waving guns around. ... In my nine years with the Raiders, I've had to answer questions that I don't think anyone should ever have to answer, especially at 20-something years old. But now that Davante's come, and the coaches have made it just all about ball, it's been refreshing for me because I'm not answering questions about this controversy or that. I'm literally just answering questions about football."

The rapids, the Raiders -- the message never changes:

Whatever you do, don't stop paddling.

Sometimes the metaphors write themselves.

THE HOUSE LOOKS like a warehouse from the future: more than 10,000 square feet of glass and steel, a six-screen game room with one screen constantly beaming the Golf Channel, a kitchen so big Adams rides his electric bike around it -- circling the island, veering past a refrigerator the size of an SUV -- with his two-year-old daughter Daija in his lap. The lights of Vegas are down the hill, just far enough away. There's a championship golf course visible from the backyard, so close you can smell the sand trap baking in the sun.

You know you've made it when you live in a house that requires you to pass through two gates, and key in two separate gate codes, to reach it. Adams is sitting in the game room of this house -- his house -- draped across a massive sofa like a throw rug. He had just excused himself to put Daija to bed -- "Daddy's the only one that can do it," he says, beaming, as he heads upstairs -- and he's trying to convey how gratitude and disbelief collide in his brain every time he stops and remembers that this is where he lives.

"I came from the complete opposite of this," he says. "I'd never even seen anything like this until it was time to make it a reality for me and my family."

Adams, his wife Devanne, Daija and infant daughter Dezi got here after a series of events that felt chaotic and rushed but in reality were put into motion years ago. The March trade that ended his eight-year tenure with the Packers and sent him to the Raiders for two draft picks can trace its roots to the on-field chemistry and off-field friendship between Adams and Carr that began as soon as Adams showed up on the Fresno State campus.

"When he showed up, I was like, 'This guy's different,'" says Carr, who was in his second year at Fresno. Adams was a redshirt freshman, and over the course of Adams' two seasons in Fresno they combined for 38 touchdowns and more than 3,000 yards. As professionals, after both were drafted in the second round of the 2014 draft, Adams and Carr lived near each other in the San Francisco Bay Area during the offseason and worked out together.

"He had this Raiders shirt he would wear when we would go hoop," Carr says. "I never made a big deal of it because I was just hoping he was speaking it into existence. And here we are."

Team executives and coaches are not allowed to contact opposing players, but there's no such thing as player-to-player tampering. "Oh, man," Carr says, "I was egregious." After the Raiders lost in the playoffs, Carr called his friend. "As soon as I saw his name pop up, I knew what it was about," Adams says, laughing. On the phone, Carr told him, "Hey, whenever you're ready, I'm ready. Let's figure this thing out." The Packers were preparing to play the 49ers in an NFC divisional-round game, and Carr wished him luck, doing his best -- but probably failing -- to give his friend the space he needed to focus on the moment. But that Sunday, after the Packers unexpectedly lost at home, Carr asked himself the existential question: How many days of mourning should a friend give another friend before hitting him with the full-court press?

"I'm not going to lie," Carr says. "I texted him the next day. I couldn't help myself."

As he walked off the field at Lambeau for what he knew might be the final time, Adams looked around and felt the emotion of the first eight years of his NFL career climb the back of his throat. On the day he and Devanne flew back to California, it was -13 degrees. "That was my last taste of Green Bay," he says. "It's kind of cool now that I think about it. It definitely sent me out on my way with a memory."

It's easy to picture Carr, more than halfway across the country, sitting at home, drumming his fingers and wondering how egregious was too egregious. They'd talked about this before, especially in 2017 before Adams signed on to stay in Green Bay, but this time felt different. The bond they forged in college through shared goals and personality traits -- devotion to family, ultracompetitiveness -- was nothing if not durable, lasting through eight NFL seasons.

"The time came where I had to think about my overall life and happiness," Adams says about his amicable split with his team of eight years. "Where do I want my kids to grow up? I love Green Bay but I'm a West Coast dude." Gizelle Hernandez for ESPN

Carr's recruitment efforts continued through the next two months, over golf -- a relatively recent outlet for Adams's ultracompetitiveness -- and throwing sessions. The Packers placed the franchise tag on Adams, which would have paid him roughly $20 million with no security beyond this season. (Adams, who refused to play under the tag, calls it "a horrible thing for the players.") He had discussions with Aaron Rodgers, and even though sources indicate it was occasionally difficult for the two to connect during the offseason, the Packers quarterback, who had signed a new three-year contract, suggested his time in Green Bay was nearing an end and that Adams should make the decision that was best for him and his family. Adams ultimately asked the Packers for a trade even though they offered him what he admits was a bigger contract than the five-year, $141.25 million deal he signed with the Raiders. Adams says, "It's not like I orchestrated this; nothing like that," but it was obvious from the beginning that Las Vegas was his preferred destination, and the Packers -- in deference to his contributions to the franchise, and probably to move him out of the NFC -- made it happen. And so the fourth-leading receiver in Green Bay history, a first-team All-Pro in each of the past two seasons, a 29-year-old, still-in-his-prime superstar with 47 touchdowns in his last 57 games became the biggest star to change teams this past offseason.

"The time came where I had to think about my overall life and happiness," Adams says. "Where do I want my kids to grow up? I love Green Bay but I'm a West Coast dude and a lot of family -- especially my grandparents -- haven't been able to see me play in close to a decade of playing pro ball. It's all the same people that's coming -- and it's not a whole lot. It's hard to get into Green Bay, and it's expensive, too -- I'm like, why the hell is it expensive to get into Green Bay?

"I had to leave every single weekend of OTAs to come back to California. Literally every single weekend I was flying back and forth, two flights each way on commercial flights. Four flights each week just to see my family. I wanted to be able to do OTAs and be with my team but not have to leave my wife and kids. That's huge for me. I'm a family man, and that was hella unnecessary travel."

He found out about the trade the old-fashioned way: through Twitter. Bears offensive coordinator Luke Getsy, a former assistant with the Packers, texted Adams a screenshot of a tweet breaking the news of the trade just as Heather Carr texted Devanne Adams the same news. "There were probably 100,000 people out there who knew I was on the Raiders before I did," Davante says. Derek Carr's recruitment campaign, a comprehensive strategy that began years before, had finally worked.

"The coolest part wasn't the football part; it was that I got my friend back," Carr says. "I think that's the coolest part."

IT'S HARD TO tell whether Davante Adams has an incredible memory or a penchant for grudges, but he can recite the name and draft position of every wide receiver that was chosen before him in the 2014 draft. ("They can't judge what a true dog is like on the field," he says.) He can probably come pretty close to giving you their statistics, too, and how they compare to his, which in most cases is poorly, some horrendously.

It's worth the rundown: Sammy Watkins at pick No. 4; Mike Evans at No. 7; Odell Beckham Jr. at 12; Brandin Cooks at 20; Kelvin Benjamin at 28; Marqise Lee at 39; Jordan Matthews at 42; Paul Richardson at 45; Adams at 53, the 21st pick of the second round. When he wasn't chosen on the first night of the draft, he instructed everyone at his East Palo Alto draft party -- there was an ESPN camera there, adding to the frustration -- to wear black on the second night. "That was the funeral right there," Adams says. "We were going to make sure everyone felt the wrath for not picking Davante Adams sooner."

He's not the biggest (6-1, 215) or the fastest, but a combination of obsessiveness and unrelenting competitiveness has made him one of the two or three best receivers in the NFL. There are times when the game gets so far inside him he literally detaches from reality -- in a good way, of course. Nick Robinson, Adams' best friend from high school and now a business associate, was having a conversation with Adams in Green Bay a few days before a 2020 Week 14 game against the Lions when he noticed his friend had checked out.

His eyes remained fixed on Robinson, his face went into rictus and sweat beaded on his forehead. Adams was gone, retreating into the crawl space of his mind.

"Bro," Robinson said, "you all right?"

As if responding to a hypnotist's finger-snap, Adams came back.

"Oh, sorry," he said. "I was just thinking about what I'm going to do to the Lions."

What he was going to do, he told Robinson, was score on a long pass play early in the game. "Fifty or 60 yards," he said, "after a short pass."

On the Packers' first possession, with a little more than eight minutes left in the first quarter, Adams released from the line with a stutter-step fake to the outside, then hit cornerback Amani Oruwariye with three quick strides to the sideline to gain a remarkable amount of separation in a remarkably short amount of time. Adams caught a Rodgers pass in stride and ran 43 of 56 yards unimpeded into the end zone. By the time he reached the end zone, there was no player, Lion or Packer, anywhere near him. He dropped the ball in the end zone and jogged back toward the sideline with all the exuberance of a detective rolling up on a crime scene.

"He goes into this trancelike state -- only a few people have seen it," Robinson says. "I don't think he even knows he's doing it. It's just so weird when it happens." Maybe that's why Adams is rarely enthused when he makes a big catch or scores. It's hard to act surprised when you know what's coming.

THE MOST INTERESTING stuff happens on the margins, away from the eyes of the world, in a place like North Gym at Fresno State. There's an entire Bible's worth of parables to be found in the pickup games on North Gym's basketball courts.

Adams was a sophomore at Fresno State and regularly the best player on the court at North Gym when he found himself matched up against a guy we'll call The Mouth (not his real name). The Mouth was good, too, and he may or may not have been a member of the Fresno State track team, but the particulars are lost to the mists of time. This guy was the stereotypical antagonist writ large, strutting around, proclaiming his greatness in that unique way peculiar to good basketball players in casual settings.

Most of the talk was directed at Adams. "This guy could hang with Tae," says Wyatt Mitchell, a classmate and, that day, a teammate of Adams. "It was very rare to find someone who could do that." Adams let the talk go, pretending he didn't hear it or that it didn't matter. But then something changed. The Mouth said something only Adams heard but everyone else felt. Adams stayed silent, but the molecules in the atmosphere had shifted.

"You could just see the look in Tae's eyes change," Mitchell says. "I thought, Here we go."

A little background: Adams was a star point guard on Palo Alto High's basketball team, and his mother, Pamela Brown, says, "We all thought he was going to the NBA." He missed his first two seasons of high school football after breaking the same arm three times, and he had decided to concentrate solely on basketball when his cousin Eric Washington, told him, "You should really get out there and play wideout."

Adams, who had been a quarterback in youth football, said, "Really? You know I'm a hooper; that's what it's about."

But Cousin Eric, dispenser of wisdom, said, "Man, you're 6-1 -- it's 6-8 point guards these days. You could go from being a small guard to a big wide receiver."

Adams teamed up with quarterback Christoph Bono, son of former NFL quarterback Steve Bono, to help propel Palo Alto to a state championship in 2010, and the exposure provided by that stage attracted college recruiters. Fresno State's scholarship offer came before any basketball offers, and he accepted it to ensure his mom didn't have to pay for his education. He went to Fresno State intending to play both, but the time commitment to academics and football ended that dream. He told his mom, "I don't want to get hurt playing basketball and lose my football scholarship." Football paid the bills.

Anyway, back to the North Gym:

Adams called for the ball on the post, about five feet from the hoop on the left side. What followed is something Mitchell, now a college advisor at Montana State, says he'll remember for the rest of his life: "It was an athletic feat only a handful of people in the world could pull off." With The Mouth behind him, Adams spun and leaped into the air. The Mouth went up with him as Adams -- now facing the basket -- kept rising until he slammed the ball through the hoop with both hands. Along the way, he managed to wrap his legs around the defender's chest, so he was holding The Mouth in the air by his armpits. It was from this position that Adams did a chin-up on the rim, lifting not only his own weight but The Mouth's as well. ("I know, I know," Mitchell says, "but I swear this happened.") As he started to let go of the rim, he released his legs and left The Mouth sprawling on the floor.

Quietly, almost under his breath, Adams said just four words:

You can't guard me.

After a slight pause to reflect on what they'd just witnessed, everyone in the gym erupted at once. The Mouth scrambled to his feet, threw his arms in the air, collected his stuff and left the gym without saying a word.

ADAMS IS TALKING about how he became what he jokingly refers to as the Release King, and he has decided that words only go so far. He bounds off the couch and stands in front of the bank of big screens, his head covering the middle third of the Golf Channel. He's going to show me what he does when the ball is snapped, how he makes decisions based on split-second observations and frees himself in microseconds. He does this better than anybody, maybe anybody ever, and this private showing feels like an invitation to watch van Gogh demonstrate brush strokes.

He starts with what he calls The Hop, his most admired move, where he rises up like a kid about to get measured against a wall and then immediately drives past the corner -- inside, out or straight ahead, doesn't matter -- faster than thought. No move is preplanned; he never knows what he's going to do until the defensive back's reaction tells him. Each move is a variation of a basketball move, and it's why his mom says she doesn't miss watching him play basketball because "he plays basketball every Sunday." The Hop, Davante says, "is literally the same as a basketball crossover. In front of the screens, with the couch as the designated sideline, he does it once to the right, showing how he reads the defender's shoulders and subtly directs them away from where he's headed, and then repeats it to the left. ("I've obsessed over this," he says, unnecessarily.) Every move is intended to create indecision in the mind of the defender and eliminate the need to use physical contact to break free. It's fine to be known as a physical receiver, which he is, but another to be someone who needs to waste valuable seconds engaging in line-of-scrimmage jujitsu.

He sits down and says, "I've got to see how [a DB] moves naturally, and then from there I can almost design you. It's almost like a meal plan. If you're allergic to peanuts, you're not going to have peanut chicken, right? That's what I do, I give 'em peanut chicken off the line."

The obsession has led him to watch film not just for tendencies but emotions. He looks across the line and into the eyes of the defensive back and searches for one thing: fear. He knows it's in there -- some bury it deeper below the surface than others -- and he knows he doesn't have to say a word to let it be known that he has detected its presence. He's unnerving, this man with the ice-cold temperament in a world of aggrieved, hot-blooded loudmouths who power their engines on slights both real and perceived. Attuned to false bravado, they're uncomfortable with quiet confidence.

"Nobody expects this, but the fear factor is really big in the NFL," Adams says. "The fear factor takes people out of their game before you even start the snap. It has a lot to do with how I'm able to win at such a high rate. People already have it in their minds that they can't stick with me, and it's hard for them to overcome that. Now they're just trying to soften the blow. They're not trying to dominate."

Once he senses the softening, Adams wins before the ball is snapped. His reputation for releasing off the line precedes him, allowing him to look across the line and decide if it's necessary to break out one of his better moves. Often, the mere threat of a good move negates its necessity.

"You need people like me to tell these types of things because it gives a better in-depth look at what the league looks like from the inside," he says. "It's human beings, not superheroes. This isn't a movie; these are people with real emotions, and fear is one of those emotions. I'm not one of the dudes you know much about. I don't put a lot out there. With me, they have to go strictly off the film. They know I'm not some joker out here doing a bunch of s--- just for the attention. It's like a mystery man who is completely dominating everybody. That's the mindset."

Maybe he's stumbled upon the ultimate definition of athletic excellence: being so good you don't always have to prove it.

THE KIDS ARE in bed, the sun has dipped behind the mountains, and Adams and his friend Robinson have taken to the streets. They bombed out of the house on the electric bicycles, and now they're swerving up and down the sloping street in front of the house. The fierce glare of a Vegas summer afternoon has yielded to a slight golden-hour reprieve. The bikes head down the hill and back up, the sound of laughter from two grown men signaling their direction.

"I've never seen him this happy," says Brown, Davante's mom. "Never. He's relaxed. He's starting to show people who he is, and there's a light in his eyes that tells me he's finally content."

He spent eight years being intentionally strategic about how much he doled out to the public -- "I wanted to make it before I put myself out there," he says -- but now he's giving the world a few selective peeks behind the curtain. A national Taco Bell campaign that depicts a roll call of Vegas clichés -- a magician, an Elvis impersonator, showgirls and Raiders fans -- ringing his doorbell to welcome him to town.

On occasion, his mom will remind him of his promise to return to college and complete his degree -- "Look at Steph Curry," she tells him -- but Davante sweeps his hand in front of him, drawing her attention to his wife and his two little girls and this gigantic house as if to say, "How could it be better?"

Mom can't argue. Devanne calls her husband "the best girl dad," and says, "Whenever it was time to leave for Green Bay, there was always a lot of anxiety. He's much more relaxed now." Nobody appears to begrudge him this happiness. He left tracks on the high road when he left Green Bay. There was no anonymous bad-mouthing as he headed out the door. His bosses thanked him for his work and wished him well. Adams has returned the favor, praising his time with Rodgers, saying, "People have called him a bad teammate. I would never say that about Aaron. He's a great teammate, and he's a winner. ... If he treated me poorly or I saw him treat somebody else poorly, I would just say no comment."

Rodgers is still in Green Bay, cosplaying Nicolas Cage and complaining about the play of his young receivers. A Wisconsin fall is nice, but it has a wicked habit of being followed by winter. Out here in the desert, Adams' golf/throwing/rafting buddy is, once again, his quarterback. His improving golf game can now find its rightful place as a year-round obsession. Those lights down below remain just another feature of the landscape, there to entice the gullible.

There's work to do. Don't stop paddling. The games will start, and he will line up and fix his clinical gaze across the line, searching for fear. He'll remain the quiet one amid the roar, perhaps the only one who truly understands that silence is a sound all its own.

Defensive End Maxx Crosby

THE ATHLETIC

Raiders DE Crosby bracing for fatherhood ahead of season
By W.G. Ramirez
September 2, 2022

HENDERSON, Nev. (AP) — Maxx Crosby's nickname is "Mad Maxx," an apt description given his play since the defensive end was selected by the Raiders in the fourth round of the 2019 draft.

His 25 sacks and 57 quarterback hits are both tied for 17th in the NFL since he entered the league.

If there is one word no one would dare associate with the sturdy 6-foot-5 edge rusher, it's soft.

Well, almost no one.

Fiancée Rachel Washburn is expecting their baby girl on Oct. 3, and the "girl dad" in one of the NFL's most feared pass rushers started glowing long before Nike began sending newborn outfits that Crosby has been proudly texting to friends.

"I would say 'soft' is a perfect word, especially with having a baby girl; it like pulls (on) their heartstrings even more," Washburn said. "But it's like the cutest thing ever watching him be so excited to be a father."

The 25-year-old Crosby recently displayed his excitement at the Las Vegas facility while talking about what may be the most important day of his life, just one month away.

During training camp, Crosby received frequent updates and videos from Washburn via text that kept him balanced and encouraged.

"I'm just super excited," Crosby said. "Seeing a baby kick around in her stomach is like the craziest thing. But it's incredible, it just gives me an extra bit of motivation having a daughter on the way. We've been talking about it for so long and finally, it's about to really happen. I can't wait until she gets here. We're going to have a blast, it's going to be great."

Washburn's due date is one day after the Raiders host quarterback Russell Wilson and the Denver Broncos.

So what if Washburn goes into labor one day sooner, or any given Sunday, for that matter?

"I've already talked to (coach Josh McDaniels) as far as planning for that," Crosby said. "We have an emergency team who is going to call me there if she goes into labor and everything like that. We're already ahead of the curve, I feel like it's just going to happen the way it's supposed to happen. I'm not stressing about it."

Nor should he, not after all he has endured. And overcome.

In 2019, after his rookie season, Crosby checked himself into rehab for alcoholism. He was in search of clarity and needed help in getting clean, so he could refocus his efforts on the field. After a ho-hum second season, Crosby turned in a banner third year for the Raiders, establishing career highs of 56 tackles and 30 quarterback hits.

"After rehab, I think something just clicked in his head," Washburn said. "I mean, he's always loved football and always been passionate, but something clicked and then he changed his regimen and he gets up at the same time, does literally every single thing at the same time every single day."

It's the type of regimen that has transformed Crosby from a fourth-round hopeful into a key leader for Las Vegas.

"The energy he brings every single day, and leadership he's been bringing, it's unmatched. I love playing with him, it makes my job easier," Raiders defensive tackle Kendal Vickers said.

It's something McDaniels appreciates as the coach heads into his first year with Las Vegas.

"He does everything every day that you could ask a player to do to help himself get better and help our team get better. There's no greater compliment that I could give him than that," McDaniels said. "He brings a lot of his teammates with him. He sets the standard for our work ethic, the way we practice, how we go about our jobs, how he is in the meetings. Everything that you would want from a player that's trying to ascend, he's doing it."

It's the same type of vibe Washburn knows he'll bring to parenthood for their daughter, along with matching Nike Air Force 1s, his favorite shoe.

Just don't call him soft on the field.

Wide Receiver Mack Hollins

THE ATHLETIC

Mack Hollins' Special start to his Raiders career, and why he's excited about the offense
By Vic Tafur
June 21, 2022

Mack Hollins just wanted to get close to the star athletes.

The new Raiders receiver attended the Special Olympics USA Games in Orlando two weeks ago and went to dinner with several athletes who won medals.

It might have been an even bigger deal to Hollins than it was to the athletes. Hollins has been volunteering with the Special Olympics for five years and has worked his way up to being a champion ambassador for the organization.

“I get more access to the athletes,” Hollins said last week in a telephone interview. “The athletes are what has always drawn me to it. Just the way that they really attack anything in life and how genuine they are. They have no ulterior motive, they are just there playing sports that they love, and they are going to treat you like you treat them.

“They don’t need anything out of me. They think it’s cool that I play for the Raiders, but they could care less, at the end of the day. They’re just happy to have another supporter watching them.”

Hollins reached the NFL despite not having any Division I offers coming out of high school, but the obstacles he overcame pale in comparison to those of many of his lifelong friends.

“People put them down, people tell them they can’t do something — and they still persevere and they continue to be able to be great — that is so great for me to see as an athlete,” Hollins said. “I realized that I had a pretty easy road. Nobody told me I couldn’t do it the way that these athletes were told their whole lives, and yet, here they are competing for Olympic gold.”

Terrence Thornton, the executive director of Special Olympics Nevada, said Hollins’ involvement is “really important” to the athletes.

“We focus on inclusion, and we work really hard to get peers that love sports that want to engage with our athletes,” Thornton said. “Pro athletes like Mack participating in sports with them fosters that spirit of inclusion, and helps them be at their greatest. They’re inspired to work hard and have discipline to meet their personal goals when it comes to their sport. It’s very special to them.”

Hollins and Raiders punter AJ Cole also participated in a send-off at Caesars Palace for Nevada athletes before the USA Games, and the Raiders are one of the signature sponsors for the Special Olympics’ fall flag football season.

As a champion ambassador, Hollins not only gives his time and serves as a role model, but helps promote awareness of the Special Olympics and their inclusion programs.

“These are people with intellectual disabilities, but when it comes to sports, they definitely have ability, and professional athletes like Mack help spread that message of inclusion,” Thornton said.

Hollins, 28, grew up in Rockville, Md., and first learned about the Special Olympics because he had a neighbor who competed.

“And then I got to college, and one of my close teammates had a brother who competed who had intellectual disabilities, so I got a little bit closer and started doing a little bit more,” Hollins said.

Hollins was drafted by the Eagles in the fourth round in 2017, and won a Super Bowl ring as a special teams player as a rookie before sustaining a groin injury in 2018 and being waived in December 2019. He was claimed by the Dolphins, and that's when his career and his involvement with the Special Olympics really took off.

"I started speaking for Special Olympics at radio row at the Super Bowl," Hollins said. "Then I became an ambassador, and this past year I became a champion ambassador. We had a Zoom call over COVID on Capitol Hill to try and raise funds, went to schools and different things like that. My role has grown, but my passion has always been there."

Hollins is also very excited for a new start with the Raiders. After having a combined 30 catches for 399 yards and five touchdowns with the Dolphins the last two years, the 6-foot-4, 221 pounder may match those numbers. It seems there is a good chance he will be the Raiders' No. 4 target behind receivers Davante Adams and Hunter Renfrow and tight end Darren Waller.

"Yeah, I'm super excited," Hollins said when he signed. "Going into my sixth year, it's always exciting to be able to play football, but it's a little different coming here because I think I can really get an opportunity to excel here."

Raiders fans will remember Hollins from a loss to the Dolphins in Week 16 of 2020 that cost them a possible playoff spot. Miami quarterback Ryan Fitzpatrick, while having his facemask grabbed and ripped back by Arden Key, completed a 34-yard, no-look pass to Hollins with 12 seconds remaining. The completion and 15-yard penalty set up a last-second score and 26-25 win for the Dolphins.

"I figure it's only right I come back and try to do a few more of those plays in Silver and Black," Hollins said.

Hollins is confident that Raiders coach Josh McDaniels will bring out the best in him, and he loves how players move around in this offense.

"You see (Hunter) Renfrow out wide, you see him in the slot. It's not really one dimensional," Hollins said after he signed. "And I think that's big for me because I think I can be more than an outside guy. I think in the NFL, a lot of times you get put in the box. If you're over 6-3, then you're an outside guy. If you're under 6-2, then you're an inside guy, and if you're in the gap in between, you're just kind of, I don't know, are you fast enough to run by guys or not?"

Hollins feels he will be able to earn a bigger role than he has had in the past. Where on the field that will be should be determined in training camp next month.

"That's encouraging to go out there and play your heart out and they'll make the puzzle pieces fit," he said.
Hollins led the nation in yards per catch (24.8) as a junior at North Carolina. He said he has worked hard so that his route running is on par with his ability to stretch the field.

"I can go in the slot, and I can beat defenders one-on-one," he said.

He has always been a hard worker with a serious approach to the game, dating back to his senior year at Wootton High School. Hollins came to school wearing a suit and tie and carrying a briefcase that year.

“You dress for the job you want,” Hollins told Capital News Service back then, “not the job you have.”

He spent a year at Fork Union Military Academy before walking on at North Carolina.

“Never getting comfortable with where you are, never thinking you’ve arrived,” Hollins said. “And that’s the message of the NFL — once you think you’ve arrived, that’s when they ship you out. So, just continuing to put in work, continuing to act like it’s 2017 and I’m a rookie coming out of North Carolina. And that’s how I’ll continue to elevate my game and continue to make plays when called upon.”

Just like the Special Olympics athletes who Hollins cheers on.

“Being able to play sports with them is always a blast,” Hollins said. “People discredit the abilities of people who are intellectually disabled. They just think that they can’t do half the stuff that people say normal people can do, but they do everything — maybe a little bit slower or in a different way, but they got sass and they got jokes and they can do everything.

“Everybody has a little niche that they are great at … The Special Olympics has helped me take away the excuses. These athletes are performing at an extremely high level, and here I am at practice, ready to make an excuse as to why I can’t do something, and I remember that there are people pushing through way harder things — with way more people doubting them.”

Fullback Jakob Johnson

THE ATHLETIC

Raiders’ Jakob Johnson’s journey from Germany to become a ‘self-made’ NFL fullback
By Vic Tafur
July 7, 2022

Of all the Patriots who have joined the Raiders this offseason, it's easy to forget about Jakob Johnson. The fullback is from Stuttgart, Germany, and is one of just two German-born players to ever score a touchdown in the NFL. (The other, if you're ever at trivia night at a Biergarten, was Giants defensive tackle Markus Kuhn eight years ago.)

For the first year that Johnson played football at 13, he said his knowledge of the sport consisted of "run a route, catch the ball and run as far as you can."

But Johnson, whose first name is pronounced YAH-kobb, has come a long way. He found his way to the U.S. — and then back again after a detour home — and is an important piece to the puzzle that new general manager Dave Ziegler and coach Josh McDaniels are putting together in Las Vegas.

The new regime brought over several coaches and former players from the Patriots, including pass rusher Chandler Jones (he played for New England from 2012 to 2015), safety Duron Harmon (2013-19), tight end Jacob Hollister (2017-18), quarterback Jarrett Stidham and running Brandon Bolden. But one of their first moves was cutting team captain and very effective fullback Alec Ingold and bringing in Johnson.

And it wasn't because of the 13 catches and zero rushing attempts Johnson had in 37 starts the last three seasons for New England.

"He's a grinder, man," McDaniels said. "He's a self-made football player. He comes to work every day, takes great care of his body. He's really a tough player, good teammate, unselfish, willing to do anything you ask him to do.

"He'll block, he'll line up outside of the backfield. He'll play in a punt team. He does a lot of stuff for your football team, and he adds a lot of value and toughness to it."

To really appreciate what the 6-foot-3, 255-pound bruiser brings to a team, one has to know Johnson's story. He was a kid who was too big and physical for soccer and discovered American football watching the Super Bowl on television. He played in Stuttgart for the Scorpions in the German Football League (GFL) and then went to Florida, to Tennessee, back to Stuttgart, to London and back to Florida before getting what essentially was a one-year internship with the Patriots.

(That was through the NFL's International Player Pathway Program. Starting in 2017, a handful of players can train with a selected team for a year while being paid around $120,000. A different division participates each season, and 2019 was the AFC East's turn, with Johnson delegated to the Patriots.)

Johnson had a locker next to the "exit" door in the Patriots locker room and as coach Bill Belichick said then, he was No. 91 on the 90-man roster.

"It is crazy how it was all able to come together," Johnson said in a phone interview last week.

Besides helping bring McDaniels' message to Raiders players, he is raising awareness and funds for the sport in Germany and in the U.S. Johnson, 27, held his first football camp in Germany in April, and this Saturday he is holding a free camp for kids in Jacksonville.

The camp is at Ribault High, which Johnson attended for six months in 2013 after he had emailed every college football coach in the U.S. and asked for a chance to play.

“I didn’t want to leave any stone unturned and have any regrets later on,” Johnson said.

Three college coaches got back to him. Colorado, Hawaii and UTEP said they might be interested if he came to the U.S. and played at a prep school first. That was enough for Johnson to pack up and leave — he had an aunt and other family members in Jacksonville who he had visited in the past. Even though he had graduated from high school in Germany, he wasn’t 19 years old yet and was still eligible to play high school football in Florida.

Johnson, who had taken English classes growing up, took the ACT test the morning of a Stuttgart game to help convince the high school he could make the transition. But still, it wasn’t easy.

“It was a much bigger culture shock than I ever thought,” Johnson said. “If you live in Europe, you think you are very familiar with American culture through the music, movies and pop culture. But it’s a lot different.”

When the season started, the linebacker made some plays on the field and some new friends came along with that. Teammates who had looked quizzically at the kid who jogged from his aunt’s house to school started joining in.

“I came into town this naive German meathead and I got all the guys to start staying after practice and doing extra weight-room work,” he said. “I was doing it because I wanted a college scholarship, and some of the guys had given up on that idea because the school had always been under-recruited and underfunded.

“But the guys bought into my dream as well — ‘If this German kid can do it, so can I’ — and some also went to college.”

Idaho was the first college to recruit Johnson, but the buzz escalated quickly. Rutgers, Tulane, Syracuse and Central Florida had interest and then the hard-hitting linebacker had an interception in a game that Tennessee defensive backs coach Willie Martinez was attending,

Johnson made his official recruiting visit to Knoxville in December.

“I had the famous steamed roast beef sandwich at Gus’s Good Times Deli, and the next day they took me to a game and then to the coach’s house to see all the championship rings,” Johnson said. “I was like, ‘Where do I sign?’ I was ready to sign when I cleaned off the plate at Gus’s.”

Johnson never really hit his stride at Tennessee as the coaches didn’t know where to use him — he played at linebacker and defensive end before making the switch to tight end. He played all of 13 games — mostly on special teams — in four years there.

“I went back to Stuttgart thinking football was over for me,” Johnson said. “I was going to go to med school and get re-oriented with life.”

His old friends on the Scorpions had other ideas, urging him to come out and have some fun like the old days. He said he started playing with them again as a favor.

“Growing up, playing for the Scorpions, we did everything together every day,” Johnson said. “We worked out together, practiced, ate together and then played Madden to learn more about football.

And all the meatheads that I grew up with were playing for the adult team, and when they heard I was hanging my cleats up, they called me and they called the team president.

“They were the reason I kept playing, that summer. They were playing for the love of the game and I was able to find that again too.”

Johnson moved back in with his mom and got a job as a bartender while playing for the Scorpions. He had 43 catches for 474 yards in 12 games. NFL representatives watched one of his games and invited him to a tryout in London for a spot in their Pathway Program.

Johnson put all the tips together from his bartending job and hired a personal trainer. His girlfriend handled his nutritional plans and diet and he was more than ready for the tryout in October. Johnson thought it went well, but didn’t hear back from the league for two months.

Finally, he got the call. The league was going to bring him and six other international players to Bradenton, Fla., to train as part of the program. And, he was a fullback now.

“They thought I could make a roster at fullback, and Earnest Byner was the running backs coach there who really helped me,” Johnson said.

Johnson said he was so nervous that he was two hours early for his first meeting with Belichick. And after that, he and Belichick often arrived at the facility at the same time, around 5 a.m. He made a good enough impression that the Patriots did not designate him as an international player and put him on their 10-man practice squad that 2019 season. When starting fullback James Develin went down with a neck injury, Johnson was ready to step in. (Had he been designated as an international player, he would not have been eligible to be added to the 53-man roster that season.)

“He puts literally every ounce of energy he has into this job and into our team and he’s totally earned everybody’s respect for that,” Belichick told reporters last year. “He is one of the top five players I have ever coached in terms of year-to-year growth.”

Last season, Johnson was honored by the league and Patriots owner Robert Kraft for becoming the third player from the Pathway Program to play 1,000 snaps in the league.

“A couple of years ago,” Kraft said, “I remember a couple of coaches here talking about Jakob and saying he’s not very good, and look where he is today. … He’s worked hard, he’s really gotten the respect of everyone, he’s had such progress.”

Johnson, though, was allowed to hit free agency this spring and the Raiders pounced, signing him to a one-year, $1.5 million deal. (There was a report that had Johnson saying the Patriots told him they were phasing out the fullback position, but he said that was a bad translation from a German interview he did.)
There is no denying that Johnson is excited to be back with McDaniels.

“He will always be the offensive coordinator that gave some unknown, unproven German guy an opportunity to play and carve out a role in his offense,” Johnson said. “When someone extends that trust to you, that puts responsibility on you to make good and earn that trust.”

That unknown player returned to Germany in April to hold that football camp, and found that he is unable to walk around town without kids running up for autographs. “It must be the dreads,” he said, laughing.

Two hundred kids showed up for the camp in Ludwigsburg, with fans also attending to cheer them on and catch a glimpse of Johnson, former NFL players like Björn Werner and potential future players like defensive back Marcel Dabo, a member of this year’s Pathway Program who signed with the Colts.

“It was a big football fest for the German community,” Johnson said. “Everyone is excited about the first NFL game that is coming.”

That will be Nov. 13, when the Buccaneers and Seahawks play in Munich at Allianz Arena, home of FC Bayern Munich.

“Long overdue if you ask me,” Johnson said. “When it comes to football in Europe, Germany has always been leading the charge. The German Football League was always the best football being played on that continent. The NFL going to England first makes sense because the language barrier is less, but the true football fans are in Germany and you will see that this fall.”

The game’s fans are younger and younger and the message they received from Johnson at his camp was simple.

“If you do commit to this football journey, you can go somewhere now,” he said. “In the past, a lot of the better athletes ended up transitioning to other sports or dropping out of sports completely.”

This weekend’s camp, meanwhile, is more generated toward helping kids in the Jacksonville area.

“My football journey started there,” Johnson said. “If it wouldn’t have been for my family there taking me in and letting me go to high school there, I would have never ended up at Tennessee or in the NFL. It’s been on my mind since the beginning — if I do get a chance to go somewhere with football, I want to give back to that area and that school.”

After that, it will be time for another camp, as veterans report to Raiders training camp on July 20. The bruising blocker will help an offense that added explosive receiver Davante Adams still be effective running the ball, as all of the former Patriots try to help the Raiders and their new staff return to the playoffs for a second straight season.

“Jakob embraces his role every day and he’s an unselfish teammate,” McDaniels said. “I just really enjoy being around him. A lot of what Jakob does rubs off on a lot of people, and I think there’s a lot of value in that.”
